Presented to

The Library

of the University of Toronto

by

Professor W. J. Alexander
BIBLIOTHECA CLASSICA.

EDITED BY

GEORGE LONG, M.A.
FORMERLY FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE,

AND THE

REV. A. J. MACLEAN, M.A.
TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

VOL. II.

QUINTI HORATII FLACCI

OPERA OMNIA.

WITH A

COMMENTARY BY THE REV. A. J. MACLEAN, M.A.

LONDON:
WHITTAKER AND CO. AVE MARIA LANE;
GEORGE BELL, FLEET STREET.
1853.
LONDON:
GILBERT AND RIVINGTON, PRINTERS,
ST. JOHN'S SQUARE.
PREFACE.

This commentary is longer than I intended, but it might have been much longer than it is if I had filled the notes with quotations as some editors have done, or with exclamations as others. I have had but one object in view, that of helping students and general readers, of whom no Latin writer has more than Horace, to understand his poems in their letter and spirit, so far as I understand them myself. The author is much mixed up with his poetry, to comprehend which therefore it is necessary to enter into the character of the man. It is this, in fact, that makes Horace so many admirers, the continual presence, or supposed presence of the author in every page. I have tried to show the limitations with which this opinion must be received by pointing out the purely artistic, artificial character of much that he has written, and in which his own feelings have by many been supposed to be drawn. I shall probably be thought deficient in warmth and taste by some who, having only a general and dreamy acquaintance with Horace, the reflection in many instances of slovenly teaching in boyhood, have been accustomed to find beauties where I have seemed to find defects, and have invested some of his poems with charms which a closer inspection dispels. I can only say that I have tried to look at every poem and every word dispassionately, and to realize as far as possible the author's mind while he was writing it, and I believe...
no editor discharges his duty who does not take that course. The result I have given, in each case, in the notes or introduction, or both; and in order to help the reader to form his own judgment, I have added, in such cases as admitted of it, the substance of each poem in the form of an Argument. This serves the purpose of giving a conspective view of the poem and its scope, and the connexion of the different parts, and often supplies a word or sentence which it otherwise might be necessary to translate in a note. The Arguments and Introductions will be found to relieve the notes considerably.

I have done my best to determine the merits of the various readings, and to choose in every disputed case the best, according to my judgment. I have given in a note the amount of authority for each disputed reading that I have adopted, and there is not a word in the text which has not good MS. authority. "Lectiones ex conjectura profectas tanquam pestem a contextu procul me removisse dico." To those who are accustomed to look upon Bentley as a benefactor to the text of Horace, this statement will not be acceptable. I have in no single instance adopted a conjecture of Bentley's or any body else's, nor have I proposed any myself. The antiquity, genuineness, and number of the MSS. of Horace that have been collated by scholars of great respectability, as well as the authority of the Scholiasts and quotations in early writers, all combine to supply materials for a more perfect text of Horace than we can get of almost any other writer. Opinions will always differ as to the choice of readings, but to desert the MSS. and resort to conjecture in the case of this author I hold to be inexusable. I have not seen the smallest excuse for it in any single instance, and with this opinion I can only look upon the numerous conjectural readings of Bentley (nearly all of which I have referred to in the notes) as so many instances of false taste.

1 H. Stephens, Diatr. ii. p. 46.
and perverted ingenuity. Orelli, who was not wanting in respect for Bentley, says, "conjecturae summi Critici, etsi semper sagaces et acutae, admodum raro a circumspecto Critico probari nunc possunt." Nor do I think he is much more happy, in most instances (especially in the Odes), in his choice of readings than in his conjectures. He was always liable to be misled by want of ear and poetical taste, as well as by the excess of a prurient sagacity and an unbounded egotism. The text in this edition will be found to differ less from Orelli's than from any other. Where it does so the reason is, I think, always given in the notes. He collated some excellent MSS., especially three in the library at Berne, of which the oldest he places at the end of the eighth century or the beginning of the ninth, and the other two in the tenth. His other MSS. were one of St. Gallen nearly complete, and another of Zürich containing the Odes, Epodes, and Ars Poetica, both of which he says are of the tenth century. Other MSS. referred to in these notes are the Vatican and other Roman MSS. collated by Fea (1811); twenty-three MSS. in the Royal Library at Paris collated by Pottier (1823), varying in age from the tenth to the thirteenth century; and sundry others quoted with or without name by Lambinus (1577), Cruquius (1611), Torrentius (1608), and Bentley (1711). Of the last the most important are four collated by Cruquius, and known as the Blandinian MSS. belonging to the monks of a Benedictine monastery in Flanders, and which were very soon afterwards destroyed with the monastery by fire. The oldest of these, which is appealed to as a great authority, but which was certainly more often wrong than right in the instances in which Cruquius quotes it, was said to be earlier than the ninth century. On the margin of this MS. Cruquius found some old notes, which, as he says, with infinite pains he deciphered, and he

3 "Vide quo provectus sit prurigine corrigendi" (Bentley on Dan. Heinsius: note upon, S. ii. 4. 16).

4 These are not the earliest editions, but those that I have used.
has added them to his own commentary in a separate form. These scholia are referred to under the abbreviated title of Comm. Cruq. They are chiefly made up of the commentaries of Acron and Porphyrian, with some additions apparently from other old authorities. The readings of these three Scholiasts help out the MSS., though sometimes they are not supported by any that are known now.

The editions that I have consulted I will not tire the reader by enumerating. No classical author has been edited and commented upon so often as Horace. The editions I have always referred to when a difficulty of interpretation occurred are those of Ascensius (1519), with the scholia of Acron and Porphyrian, Lambinus, Cruquius (for his commentator), Torrentius, Gesner, Doering, Dillenburger, and Orelli. From these I have got real help, especially from Torrentius, whose commentary is in general clear, learned, and judicious. I have often referred to the French editors Sanadon and Dacier, but their judgment is not to be trusted. The old edition of Landini, published at Florence in 1482, and reprinted at Venice the next year, is in my possession, and will be found frequently referred to for various readings as "Ven. 1483," or simply "Ven." Fea has a good many sensible notes, but I have found him most useful for inscriptions, of which he gives several. Jani and Mitscherlich have edited the Odes, but are so redundant in quotation and admiring exclamation, that their commentaries are disagreeable. The Satires are much indebted to the learning and diligence of Heindorf, whose copious notes and judicious prefaces must be of use to any one who consults them, though his text I do not think is always well chosen. His notes on law-terms are valuable, but in such matters I have been chiefly indebted to the judgment of my friend and coadjutor Mr. Long, whose advice I have likewise followed in many other particulars.

I have not entered at any length upon the chronology of Horace's poems. I have referred to the subject in the Introduction, and have done my best to determine the date of each poem so far as there are reasonable grounds to argue upon. The principal authorities on this subject now relied upon and referred to in this book are Franke (Fasti Horatiani, Berlin, 1839) and Kirchner (Quaestiones Horatianae, Leipzic, 1834). These two writers differ materially from one another, and both of them from Bentley, who in his Preface has laid down a scheme determining the dates of the several books, without stating the grounds on which he founds it. It will be seen that I prefer Franke's opinion on this subject to Kirchner's, but that there are many instances in which his zeal appears to outstrip his judgment in determining the date of particular poems.

Of the other books that I have used I have been most indebted to Estrœ's Prosopographeia Horatiana (Amsterdam, 1846), a most favourable specimen of industry and judgment.

I have studied with much pleasure the fragments of the Greek Lyric poets, with whose entire works Horace must have been familiar. The little that is left may make us mourn for what is lost. So much beauty has perished as the world will never see again. There is more power of tenderness and passionate feeling in some of Sappho's small fragments than in all that Horace ever wrote. Such passages of these poets as he appears to have imitated, intentionally or otherwise, I have given, so far as they can be gathered from the fragments now remaining, the edition of which by Bergk (Leipzic, 1843) is that which I have used. Most of them had been quoted before.

This leads me to say that I have not loaded the notes with nearly so many quotations as most who have gone before me. I have tried to confine myself to such passages as throw light upon the text, or appear to have been imitated by or copied from Horace. When I have met with a quotation in any of the late commentators that appeared to have originated from himself, I have given his name. Where on the other hand, as is the case very often, the quotation is only one of the common stock that has accumulated from the Scholiasts downwards, I have given credit for it to no one, but do not on that account wish to have the credit of it myself. If any have been suggested by my own memory or reading, I have not inquired whether others had thought of them before, and shall hope that I may not appear to have defrauded any one. I have been careful as far as possible to let Horace illustrate himself, without however distracting the reader by referring him backwards and forwards to passages that will throw no light upon the text.

The MSS. generally and most of the editions have inscriptions or headings to the different poems. That these were not given them by Horace himself is clear, but they appear in the earliest MSS., and are supposed by some to have been invented by the grammarians almost contemporary with the author. They vary very much in the different MSS., and as they are quite arbitrary modern editors have seen the propriety of abandoning them. At the same time, as Kirchner says justly enough (Qu. Hor. p. 20), they have their value as showing the opinion of very early grammarians as to the scope of the different poems, and I have accordingly referred to them where they could be of any use in settling disputed points.

I had supposed before I began that much that now appears in the notes might be omitted by merely referring the reader to the Dictionaries of Antiquities and Biography edited by Dr. Smith. But valuable as those works are, I found that the articles were not and could not be so drawn up as to save the necessity, in many instances, of independent notes in such a commentary and for such an author as this. I have often referred to them, and if I ought to have done so oftener the omission has been unintentional.
I meant at first to give an Index of the principal words to form a Concordance at the end of the Volume; but I found there was no room for it, and I hope that, as I have made the Index to the notes pretty copious, and have given a full Index of Proper Names expressed or referred to in the text, the want of the other Index will not be much felt.

I had hoped it would be possible to give engravings of a few coins, medals, vases, &c., to illustrate various allusions; but the Publishers are anxious to keep the price of the work as moderate as they can, and the engravings have therefore been omitted.

ARTHUR MACLEAN.

Brighton,
March, 1853.
INTRODUCTION.

The materials for Horace's life are derived almost entirely from his own works. A few additional facts are got from a short memoir attributed to Suetonius.

He was born on the 8th December, A.U.C. 689 (B.C. 65), at or near Venusia¹ (Venosa), in the Apennines, on the borders of Lucania and Apulia. His father was a freedman, having, as his name proves, been the slave of some person of the Horatia gens. As Horace implies that he himself was ingenuus², his father must have obtained his freedom before his birth. He afterwards followed the calling of a coactor, a collector of money in some way or other, it is not known in what. He made in this capacity enough to purchase an estate, probably a small one, near the above town where the poet was born. We hear nothing of his mother, except that Horace speaks of both his parents with affection³. His father, probably seeing signs of talent in him as a child, was not content to have him educated at a provincial school, but took him (at what age he does not say, but probably about twelve) to Rome, where he became a pupil of Orbilius Pupillus⁴, who had a school of much note, attended by boys of good family, and whom Horace remembered all his life as an irritable teacher, given unnecessarily to the use of the rod. With him he learnt grammar, the earlier Latin authors, and Homer. He attended other masters (of rhetoric, poetry, and music perhaps) as Roman boys were wont, and had the advantage (to which he afterwards looked back with gratitude) of his father's care and moral training during this part of his education. It was usual for young men of birth and ability to be sent to Athens to finish their education by the study of Greek literature and philosophy under native teachers; and Horace went there too, at what age is not known, but probably when

¹ C. iii. 4. 9; C. iv. 3. 2; S. ii. 1. 34.
² S. i. 6. 46. 47.
³ S. i. 6. 8.
⁴ S. i. 6. 86.
⁵ S. i. 6. 96.
⁶ Epp. ii. 1. 71; ibid. 2. 41.
he was about twenty. Whether his father was alive at that time or dead is uncertain. If he went to Athens at twenty, it was in A.U.C. 709, the year before Julius Caesar was assassinated. After that event Brutus and Cassius left Rome and went to Greece. Foreseeing the struggle that was before them, they got round them many of the young men at that time studying at Athens, and Horace was appointed tribune in Brutus' army, a high command for which he was not qualified. He went with Brutus into Asia Minor, and finally shared his defeat at Philippi, A.U.C. 712. He makes humorous allusion to this defeat in his Ode to Pompeius Varus (ii. 7). After the battle he came to Italy, having obtained permission to do so, like many others who were willing to give up a desperate cause and settle quietly at home. His patri-mony, however, was forfeited, and he seems to have had no means of subsistence, which induced him to employ himself in writing verses, with the view perhaps of bringing himself into notice rather than for the purpose of making money by their sale. It is not impossible, however, that some of his earliest compositions were severe personal satires and lampoons, written at the instigation of those who were able to pay him for them. That the book of Epodes which we possess does not contain all that he wrote in Archilochus' vein, I think is pretty certain; and the same I believe may be said of the books of Satires. Probably his earliest efforts were more severe and licentious than those which his judgment allowed him afterwards to publish, though some of these are bad enough. With Archilochus and Lucilius before him as models, and without the experience he afterwards gained, his earliest productions may without difficulty be supposed to have been such as in later life he would condemn. By some means he managed to get a place as scriba in the Quaestor's office, whether by purchase or interest does not appear. In either case we must suppose he contrived soon to make friends, though he could not do so by the course he pursued without also making many enemies. His Satires are full of allusions to the enmity his verses had raised up for him on all hands. He became acquainted, among other literary persons, with Virgil and Varius, who about three years after his return (A.U.C. 715) introduced him to Maecenas, who was careful of receiving into his circle Brutus' tribune, and one whose writings were of a kind that was new and unpopular. He accordingly saw nothing of Horace for nine months after his introduction to him. He then sent for him (A.U.C. 716), and from 7 S. ii. 6. 48.

8 Epp. ii. 2. 50.
9 Kirchner (Qu. Hor. p. 15, n. 4) and Franke (Fast. Hor. p. 20) reject this notion, supposing Horace to mean in the passage on which it is founded (Epp. ii. 2. 51) that poverty made him desperate and careless of consequences, but that when he became comparatively rich he lost that stimulus.
1 Suet. Vit. S. ii. 6. 36.
INTRODUCTION.

that time continued to be his patron and friend. There is nothing more genuine in Horace's writings than his expressions of affection for his father and for Maecenas. His gratitude to the latter never takes the form of servility, his affection never savours of affectation, and his familiarity never approaches to impertinence. He sees in Maecenas' gifts to himself only the generous disposition of the giver, of which he has no thought of taking undue advantage; his patronage he neither exaggerates nor undervalues; for his health he feels tenderly; his danger he tries to share; and his anxieties he does his best to soothe. It is evident that Maecenas valued his society and understood his character.

At his house, probably, Horace became intimate with Pollio and the many persons of consideration whose friendship he appears to have enjoyed. Through Maecenas also it is probable Horace was introduced to Augustus, but when that happened is uncertain. In a.u.c. 717 Maecenas was deputed by Augustus to meet M. Antonius at Brundisium, and he took Horace with him on that journey, of which a detailed account is given in the fifth Satire of the first book. Horace appears to have parted from the rest of the company at Brundisium, and perhaps returned to Rome by Tarentum and Venusia. (See S. i. 5, Int.). Between this journey and a.u.c. 722 Horace received from his friend the present of a small estate in the valley of the Digentia (Licenza), situated about thirty-four miles from Rome, and fourteen from Tibur, in the Sabine country. Of this property he gives a description in his Epistle to Quintius (i. 16), and he appears to have lived there a part of every year, and to have been fond of the place, which was very quiet and retired, being four miles from the nearest town, Varia (Vico Varo), a municipium perhaps, but not a place of any importance. During this interval he continued to write Satires and Epodes, but also, it appears to me probable, some of the Odes, which some years later he published, and others which he did not publish. These compositions I have no doubt were seen by his friends, and were pretty well known before any of them were collected for publication. It will be seen from the separate Introductions to the several Satires of the first book that there is not one which might not have been written by the year a.u.c. 719, and in that year Franke supposes the first book was published. It may have been so, but Franke's arguments are not conclusive. In a.u.c. 723 the battle of Actium was fought, and in the prospect of Maecenas having a command on that occasion, Horace wrote him a touching poem, which stands first in the book of Epodes. The ninth Epode was written immediately after the victory, and there is no poem in the book of Epodes which need be placed later. I agree therefore with Franke in thinking that book, of which one or two poems are among Horace's earliest compositions, may have been published in A.V.C. 724. In that year was written, as it would seem, the sixth Satire of the second book, which book therefore was not probably published till the end of 724 or the beginning of the next year, when Horace was about thirty-five years old.

When Augustus returned from Asia, in A.V.C. 725, and closed the gates of Janus, being the acknowledged head of the republic, Horace appeared amongst his most hearty adherents. He wrote on this occasion one of his best Odes (i. 2), and employed his pen in forwarding those reforms which it was the first object of Augustus to effect. (See Introduction to C. ii. 15.) His most striking Odes appear for the most part to have been written after the establishment of peace. Some may have been written before, and probably were. But for some reason it would seem that he gave himself more to lyric poetry after his thirty-fifth year than he had done before. He had most likely studied the Greek poets while he was at Athens, and some of his imitations may have been written early. If so, they were most probably improved and polished from time to time (for he must have had them by him, known perhaps only to a few friends, for many years) till they became the graceful specimens of artificial composition that they are. Horace continued to employ himself in this kind of writing (on a variety of subjects, convivial, amatory, political, moral; some original, many no doubt suggested by Greek poems) till A.V.C. 730, when I am inclined to think the three first books of the Odes were published. I cannot here discuss the subject, but I have considered and stated in the case of each Ode the evidences, if any, that it contains of its date, and I can find none which may not be placed in that year or before it. Bentley's theory, which limits Horace to one species of composition at a time, and supposes each of the three first books of Odes to have been published separately, I have no faith in; and he overlooks the fact that the twenty-fourth Ode of the first book was certainly written four years after that in which he places the publication of that book. Clinton, who supports Bentley (Fast. Hell. B.C. 38), can only do so by supposing that in the present copies some pieces may have been transposed, which is begging the question. Franke has arrived, as far as I can judge, at the right conclusion upon this subject. During this period Horace appears to have passed his time at Rome among the most distinguished men of the day, or at his house in the country, paying occasional visits to Tibur, Praeneste, and Baiae, with indifferent health, which required change of air. About the year A.V.C. 728 he was nearly killed by the falling of a tree, on his own estate, which accident he has recorded in one of his Odes (ii. 13), and occasionally refers to; once in the same stanza with a storm in which he was nearly lost off Cape Palinurus, on the western coast of Italy. When this happened nobody knows. After the publication of the three books of Odes, Horace seems to have ceased from that style of writing, or nearly so; and the only other compositions we know of his having produced in the next few years are metrical Epistles to different friends, of which he published a volume probably in A.U.C. 734 or 735. He seems to have taken up the study of the Greek philosophical writers, and to have got a good deal interested in them, and also to have become a little tired of the world and disgusted with the jealousies his reputation created. His health did not improve as he got older, and he put himself under the care of Antonius Musa, the emperor's new physician. By his advice he gave up, for a time at least, his favourite Baiae. But he found it necessary to be a good deal away from Rome, especially in the autumn and winter.

In A.U.C. 737 Augustus celebrated the Ludi Seculares, and Horace was required to write an Ode for the occasion, which he did, and it has been preserved. This circumstance, and the credit it brought him, may have given his mind another leaning to Ode-writing, and have helped him to produce the fourth book, a few pieces in which may have been written at any time. It is said that Augustus particularly desired Horace to publish another book of Odes, in order that those he wrote upon the victories of Drusus and Tiberius (4 and 14) might appear in it. The latter of these Odes was not written, I believe, till A.U.C. 741, when Augustus returned from Gaul. If so, the book was probably published in that year, when Horace was fifty-two. The Odes of the fourth book show no diminution of power, but the reverse. There are none in the three first books that surpass or perhaps equal the Ode in honour of Drusus, and few superior to that which is addressed to Lollius. The success of the three first books, and the honour of being chosen to compose the Ode at the Ludi Seculares, seem to have given him encouragement. There are no incidents in his life during the above period recorded or alluded to in his poems. He lived five years after the publication of the fourth book of Odes, if the above date be correct, and during that time I think it probable he wrote the Epistles to Augustus and Florus which form the second book; and having conceived the intention of writing a poem on the art and progress of poetry, he wrote as much of it as appears in the Epistle to the Pisones which has been preserved among his works. The fragments of which that poem appears to be composed, and which some have vainly tried to reduce to a consistent whole, may have been written earlier than I have supposed;

2 C. iii. 4. 28. 3 Epp. i. 15. 4 Epp. i. 7. 1—13.
INTRODUCTION.

but there is so much affinity between the Ars Poetica and the Epistle to Augustus that I believe they were written at no great interval of time. It seems from the Epistle to Florus that Horace at this time had to resist the urgency of friends begging him to write, one in this style and another in that, and that he had no desire to gratify them and to sacrifice his own ease to a pursuit in which it is plain he never took any great delight. He was likely to bring to it less energy, as his life was drawing prematurely to a close through infirmities either contracted or aggravated during his irrational campaigning with Brutus, his inaptitude for which he appears afterwards to have been perfectly aware of. He continued to apply himself to the study of moral philosophy till his death, which took place, according to Eusebius, on the 27th November, A.U.C. 746, in the fifty-seventh year of his age, and within a few days of its completion. Maecenas died the same year, also towards the close of it; a coincidence that has led some to the notion that Horace hastened his own death that he might not have the pain of surviving his patron. According to Suetonius his death (which he places after his fifty-ninth year) was so sudden that he had not time to execute his will, which is opposed to the notion of suicide. The two friends were buried near one another "in extremis Esquilii," in the farthest part of the Esquiliae, that is probably without the city walls, on the ground drained and laid out in gardens by Maecenas.

The plan adopted in this Edition, of commenting on each poem in a separate Introduction, renders it unnecessary to say much in this place upon Horace's style and character. The particular style in which his principal strength lay will be always matter of opinion. My own is that he is nowhere so great as in the Odes, and that of these his genius is best shown in the Odes that relate to public affairs or men, while in some of the small occasional pieces, as the Ode to the Fountain of Bandusia, that on the death of Quintilius, and others, much grace and feeling are shown. I cannot at all agree with those who think that amatory verse-writing was Horace's strong point. With rare exceptions his compositions of this kind, however elegant they may be, appear frigid and passionless, bearing the stamp of imitation, with unequivocal signs of art, and none of nature. The crowd of mistresses that have been gathered for him out of his poems is beyond belief; and the laborious folly that has tried to classify his amours, and to follow chronologically the shifting of his affections, I have had occasion to notice. It proceeds upon an interpretation of the Odes which is foreign to their true character. Horace was neither more nor less licentious probably than most of his contemporaries, though his biographer charges him with gross sensuality; but, however this may be, that the women of his Odes are in nearly every instance fictitious I have no doubt whatever. Cinara⁵ seems to represent a real person; and with Canidia some real intrigue and jealousy no doubt are connected, whatever her name may have been.
INTRODUCTION. xix

The same remark applies in some measure to other Odes addressed nominally to friends, but which might as easily be addressed to one friend as to another. The difference is that the names are in most instances known to be those of real persons, which has led many commentators into inferences respecting the characters and circumstances of those persons which I believe to be in most instances imaginary.

I have expressed my opinion of Horace as a Satirical writer in various places. On this point the reader may refer to the remarks in the Introduction to the ninth Satire of the first book. Of common sense and a perception of the ridiculous; of that knowledge of mankind which is gathered by mixing with the world; of dramatic skill; of good nature and good breeding, Horace has shown sufficient proofs, both in the Satires and the Epistles. As a critic he is certainly defective. Homer he does not appear to have understood. Plautus and Terence he could not appreciate, and the merits of Lucilius (and he must have had merits) would probably never have been acknowledged or discovered by Horace but for the feeling his criticism of that writer raised against himself. He was of an indolent habit, of which the unfinished state of some of his poems is one of the effects. "Amphora coepit Instituto; currente rota cur urceus exit?" is a question that might be applied, I think, to more than one of his Satires and Epistles. There is more inequality in these than in the Odes; more also that is common-place in thought and diction. The Odes will bear better than the Satires and Epistles the close inspection that an editor is obliged to give them. Any one who undertakes that office for Horace will find that one of his principal difficulties consists in the examination, first separately and then collectively, of so many small pictures as the Odes present. The tendency of commentators to far-fetched conjectures as to their scope, allusions, date, &c., is very great, and the above difficulty partly accounts for it. Their beauties and merits appear to me to be of a quiet kind, and the happy selection of words is one of them. Horace's selection of epithets is judicious and forcible. "Mirus ac paene divinus Horatius est in epithetis inveniendis." The terseness and good sense of the sayings which concern human life and character are as striking as the manner in which they are introduced, being always in their place and never brought in clumsily, as such sentences with less art might easily appear. Herein, more than in any other respect, Horace succeed in his attempt to imitate the Greek Lyric poets. Their fire, passion, sublimity, his language was incapable of expressing, even if his mind could have conceived them. Their metres have lost their strength in his hands, and have passed into a smooth monotony, which none but an emasculated taste can admire when compared with the Greek originals. Some may doubt whether the defect does not lie in the language, and perhaps in some degree it does; but the later Sapphic Odes are more like the Greek in point of rhythm, and are so far an improvement upon the earlier ones. Some of the more difficult long metres have been as successfully imitated as the language allowed, but many have not been attempted.

⁵ C. iv. 1. 4, 13. 22; Epp. i. 14. 33. ⁶ Lambinus.

Horace’s religious opinions have been a good deal discussed. But he does not appear at any time to have been very decided in his opinions. He was upwards of forty when he declared of himself that he was like a ship driven by a tempest, going this way or that, according as the wind happened to set. He was now a rigid moralist, now a materialist, now a Stoic, now an Epicurean, now a Cyrenaic. To judge him by his own writings, he seems to have thought that the enjoyment of the present hour was the end of man’s life. He nowhere puts forward the happiness of another world as the compensation for the inequalities of this, nor does he make any allusion to another state of existence at all, except in the ordinary fabulous way. The certainty of death and the uncertainty of life are only arguments with him for making the most of the pleasures we possess, but all in the way of moderation, which is a common-place much dwelt upon by Horace, as also is the possession and use of riches. Once, if we are to take him at his word, he was startled by a storm, and induced from an idler to become serious; that is, to put away the doctrines of Epicurus, for what length of time we do not know. But of systems he appears to have known little. He ridicules them all in their turn.

After Maecenas had given him his farm, he lived there a good deal and improved it at much expense. He had a liking for the country, and has some beautiful descriptions of it. But when in the country he no doubt felt lonely, and missed the tables and society of his city friends. He dined a good deal with rich people, but his own fare at home was of the simplest kind. He describes his daily life in the city, when he happened to be disengaged, in the sixth Satire of the first book. His health was indifferent, as before observed. His eyes in particular troubled him. He speaks of himself as grey before his time. Suetonius says he was short and fat, and he describes himself good humouredly as a fit sample of a hog from Epicurus’ sty. Augustus rallies him on his stature, in a letter of which part is given in Suetonius’ life of Horace.
INTRODUCTION.

The life of Horace was written by Porphyrian, the Scholiast frequently referred to in these notes. He mentions that memoir himself: "Patre libertino natum esse Horatium et in narratione quam de vita ipsius habui ostendi" (on S. i. 6. 41). This same Scholiast refers more than once to books that had been written on the persons mentioned by Horace. A reference to Estré's work spoken of in the Preface will show that a catalogue of these persons embraces nearly all the distinguished men of the day, with most of whom Horace was on friendly terms.

The Metres adopted by Horace from the Greek are thirteen in number in the Odes and six in the Epodes. I purpose saying only a few words on each.

C. i. 1.—The metre of this Ode is one of three, called after Asclepiades, a lyric poet of uncertain date. It consists of single lines divided thus:

_∞ | − − − | − − − | − − − |

The caesura usually falls at the end of the second foot. There are two exceptions only in Horace, ii. 12. 25, and iv. 8. 17. The Greeks did not follow this rule, and their lines were less monotonous in consequence. The division of this metre by choriambics is against the obvious rhythm. C. iii. 30, iv. 8, belong to the same.

C. i. 2.—This metre takes its name from Sappho. It consists of stanzas of four verses each. The three first are alike, and consist of four trochees, with a dactyl in the third place. Horace always substitutes a spondee for the second trochee, with one uncertain exception, C. S. 70. The fourth verse consists of a dactyl and spondee.

This is one of the commonest metres. It differs in Horace's hands from the Greek usage by the less frequent introduction of the trochee in the second place, and from the caesurausually falling after the fifth syllable. This arrangement takes away a good deal from the vigour of the metre, a defect which Horace seems to have perceived when he wrote the Carmen Seculare and the Sapphic Odes of the fourth book.¹

¹ I subjoin some remarks from the "Journal of Education" 1832 (vol. iv. p. 356), on Dr. Carey's "Latin Prosody made Easy." The author observes: "It greatly conduces to the harmony of the Sapphic verse to make the caesura at the fifth semisyllable, as 'Dive, quem proles Niobeae magnae; 'not as 'Haec Jovem sentire Deosque cunctos,' "—a very common opinion. To which the reviewer replies: "To our ears the latter is at least as melodious as the former, consisting of a dactyl interposed between two accentual ditrochees, as in the lines quoted by Dr. Carey from Catullus and Sappho:

'ποικιλοθείριν ἀθάνατ' Ἀφοβίτα.
'Paeca nuntiate meae puellae;"
INTRODUCTION.

C. i. 3.—This is another of the Asclepiadean metres, consisting of two verses alternating thus:

\[
- \, \, - - \, \, -\, \, -\, \, - -\, \, -\, \, - - -\, \, - - - - -
\]

The first of these verses is called after Glycon, a poet whose age and birthplace are unknown. The second verse is the same as C. i. 1. To this metre also belong C. i. 13. 19. 36; iii. 9. 15. 19. 24. 25. 28; iv. i. 3.

C. i. 4.—This metre has its name from Archilochus of Paros. It consists of alternate verses, of which the first is one of those that the grammarians call \( \delta \nu \iota \delta \pi \varepsilon \tau \rho \eta \omicron \omicron \), because they consist of different measures which do not blend together. The first four feet are those of an hexameter verse, after which follow three trochees, the first part being always distinct from the second. The second is a catalectic iambic trimeter, that is, it has one syllable wanting in the last foot. There is no other Ode in this metre.

C. i. 5.—This is also reckoned with the Asclepiadean metres, though only the two first lines have their name from Asclepiades, being the same as C. 1. The third is called after Phorcrates, the comic poet of Athens. It consists of a dactyl between two spondees, if my ear does not deceive me; but it is usual to mark it with a spondee, choriambus, and long syllable. The fourth is the Glyconeian verse, which occurs in C. 3. To this metre belong C. i. 14, 21, 23; iii. 7, 13; iv. 13.

and perhaps in the line of Horace:

'Quindecim Diana preces virorum.'

If Horace has generally avoided this form of the verse, the dislike seems to have been diminished as his ear improved; so that while there is but one instance of such a cæsur in the second book of the Carmina, and not one in the third, there are no less than twenty-two in the fourth, and in the Carm. Sec. one on an average in every stanza. Nay, even in such lines as 'Doctus et Phoebi chorus et Dianæ' we prefer the double trochee accent at the commencement to that which Dr. Carey considers so sweet, who virtually makes 'chorus' a trochee, and would, we suppose, give the sound of a dactyl to Romulæ in 'Romulæ genti dato remque prolem | que Et decus omne.' If any one will read over the C. S. with the accent we contend for, he will readily perceive the beauty of the metre, and cease to wonder that Sappho and Catullus hesitated not to make the fourth syllable short. In particular much beauty will be added to the line 'Jam Fides et Pax et Honos Pudor.' According to Dr. Carey's notion of a metrical accent, 'Pax' will lose all emphasis.'

8 \( \pi \rho \omicron \omicron \omicron \doto \iota \sigma \nu \iota \rho \tau \rho \tau \rho \omicron \omicron \omicron \) 'Αρχιλοχος έκχαρται (Hephaestion, p. 48, ap. Bentley on Epod. ii.). The Scholiast on Hephaestion, p. 52, says there were no less than sixty-four metres of this sort used by the Greeks.
C. i. 6.—This metre consists of three Asclepiadean verses, such as C. 1, and a Glyconean, as in C. 3. In C. i. 15, 24 and 36 a trochee occurs in the first foot (see note). The other Odes are i. 24, 33; ii. 12; iii. 10, 16; iv. 5, 12.

C. i. 7.—This measure takes its name from Alcman, the lyric poet of Sparta. It consists of two verses, of which the first is a complete hexameter, and the second is made up of the four last feet of an hexameter. To this belong C. i. 28, and Epod. xii.

C. i. 8.—There is no other Ode in this metre, which also consists of two verses. The first consists of a dactyl and two trochees, or a trochee and spondee, - 0 0 | 0 0 | - 0 0 . This takes its name from Aristophanes. The second is a dimeter verse, of which the first half consists of two trochees and a dactyl, with a long syllable added, and the second half is the first reversed, thus:

- 0 0 | - 0 0 | - 0 0 | - 0 0 | - 0 0 | - 0 0

Horace always has a spondee in the second place.

C. i. 9.—This is the ordinary Alcaic metre, in which each stanza consists of four verses. The two first are divided thus:

0 0 0 0 | 0 0 0 0 | 0 0 0 0 | 0 0 0 0

though Horace usually substitutes a spondee for the second trochee, the only exception being iii. 5. 17. The caesura usually falls after the fifth syllable, to which rule exceptions will be found in C. i. 16, 21, 37, 5, 14; ii. 17, 21; iv. 14, 17. This caesura the Greeks did not observe. The syllable which forms the basis, as it is called, of the verse, is more commonly long than short. It is usual to look upon the first part of the verse as iambic. I have no doubt it is trochaic. The third verse is also trochaic, consisting of a syllable (usually long) followed by four trochees, a spondee being substituted by Horace for the second trochee. The fourth verse consists of two dactyls and two trochees.

C. i. 11.—This is an Asclepiadean metre, rather peculiar. The division to which we are guided by the ear seems to separate each verse into three parts, as follows:

0 0 0 0 | 0 0 0 0 | 0 0 0 0 | 0 0 0 0 | 0 0 0 0

This classes it with the ευθρατήριον. Those who resort to the division by choriambics destroy the natural rhythm. To this belong i. 18; iv. 10.
xxiv

INTRODUCTION.

C. ii. 18.—This Ode stands alone. The metre has its name from Hipponax of Ephesus. The first verse consists of three trochees, followed by a single syllable, long or short:

\[ \text{— — —} \]

The second of five trochees preceded by such a syllable:

\[ \text{— — — — —} \]

C. iii. 12.—This Ode is also unlike any other. It is usual to divide it into feet called Ionic (\(\text{— — — — —} \)), of which the two first verses contain four each, and the third two. Respecting this metre see Bentley’s note. It would seem that Horace, imitating the subject of an Ode of Alcaeus (see Introduction), tried the metre also. The Greek, as usual, has a much finer effect than the imitation.

C. iv. 7.—This metre takes its name from Archilochus, and consists of an hexameter verse and the latter half of a pentameter. There are no other Odes in this measure.

Epod. i.—x.—The first ten Epodes are in the same metre, consisting of alternate trimeter and dimeter iambic verses. They admit spoudae only in the uneven places. An anapaest is once introduced in ii. 35.

Epod. xi.—This is one of the variations of the iambic introduced by Archilochus. The first verse is a trimeter iambic. The second is \(\text{αωυ-άρης} \), consisting of the last half of a pentameter followed by a dimeter iambic. This accounts for the short syllable in the middle of vv. 6, 10, 26, and the hiatus in vv. 14, 24. Bentley has a note on this metre which may be consulted.

Epod. xiii.—This metre consists of an hexameter verse, with one made up, as Epod. xi., of a dimeter iambic and half a pentameter, the difference being that these parts are here reversed.

Epod. xiv., xv.—These are composed of an hexameter followed by a dimeter iambic.

Epod. xvi.—This consists of an hexameter verse, followed by a pure iambic verse.

Epod. xvii.—This consists entirely of trimeter iambic verses, being the only Ode that does so.

The rule laid down by Meinecke, and adopted by many editors, which affirms that the Odes that consist of single lines, or lines in alternate measure, are to be divided into stanzas of four verses, appears to me too doubtful to be adopted.
Q. HORATII FLACCI

CARMINUM

LIBER PRIMUS.

CARMEN I.

A.U.C. 730.

Whether this ode is an introduction to one book or three is a question that has been discussed and must be matter of opinion. I think it probable that the three first books were published together, with this as a preface; and if the chronological arrangement I have adopted (see Introduction) be correct it was written A.U.C. 730; but there is no internal evidence to lead to that conclusion. Bentley was of opinion that each book was produced separately. It is a graceful dedication to Maecenas of a work, the composition of which had occupied and amused the poet at intervals for some years. It was probably at his patron's instigation that he arranged his fugitive pieces and put them forth in this collected form. There is a mixture of real affection with the usual dedicatory flattery in this ode, the leading idea of which, as in most cases, Horace probably borrowed from the Greek. There is a fragment of Pindar (201 Bergk), preserved in Sextus Empiricus, which with others Horace may have had in mind, and it will account for the somewhat incongruous allusion to the Olympic games in the beginning of this ode. It is the only way of explaining the allusion to an almost obsolete practice, to bear in mind that this was the chief theme of Pindar's poetry. The fragment runs thus:

άλλοτράδων μία τιν' εὐφραίνονσιν ἵππων
τίμια καὶ στέφανοι τοῖς ὄπισθών πολυχρώσωις θεάμας βιοτάς:
τίρπεται ἑκατετῶν ἔτει ὕπ' οἴδας ἄλιον ναῖς θεός σως διασπείδων . . . .

A fragment of Archilochus (33 Bergk), from Clemens Alexandrinus, runs:

ἄλλ' ἄλλος ἄλλω καρδίνιν ἴαίνεται.

But the sentiment is common enough, and with the exception of the first illustration Horace has put the subject in his own way and given it a Latin dress. It will be observed, that while the leading sentiment is the common-place "different men have different tastes," Horace selects only the pursuits of worldly or mechanical minds to contrast (not without some contempt) with his own higher ambition. He had, no doubt, in his memory Virgil's lines (Georg. ii. 503, sqq.): "Sollicitant alii remis freta caeca," &c.

ARGUMENT.

Maecenas, my protector, my pride, in whom I delight, various are the aims of men. The Greek seeks glory from the race; the lords of the world are supremely happy, one in the honours of the state, the other in his well-filled barns. The farmer will not plough the sea; the merchant is restless on land. One man loves his ease and his wine; another the camp and the din of war; while the huntsman braves all weathers for his sport. My glory is in the ivy crown, my delight to retire to the groves with the nymphs and the satyrs, where my muse breathes the flute or strikes the lyre. Placed by thee among the lyric choir I shall lift my head to the skies.

Maecenas atavis edite regibus
O et praesidium et dulce decus meum,
Sunt quos curriculo pulverem Olympicum
Collegisse juvat metaque fervidis
Evitata rotis palmaque nobilis.
Terrarum dominos evehit ad Deos,

1. atavis] A noun substantive, signifying properly an ancestor in the fifth degree, thus: 'pater,' 'avus,' 'proavus,' 'abavus,' 'atavus,' compounded of 'ad' and 'avus,' and corresponding to 'adnepos' in the descending scale. Maecenas belonged to the family of Cilnii, formerly Lucumones or princes of Etruria, and up to a late period possessed of influence in the Etrurian town of Areum, whence they were expelled by their own citizens b.c. 300. See Liv. x. 3. Compare Propert. iii. 9. 1: "Maecenas, eques Etrusco desidue regum, Intra fortunam qui cupis esse tuam."

Martial, xii. 4. 2: "Maecenas atavis regibus ortus eques." See also C. iii. 29. 1. S. i. 6. 1. sqq. Virgil (G. ii. 40) addresses Maecenas in the same affectionate terms;

"O decus, o famae merito pars maxima Maecenas!"

and Propertius, ii. 1. 73:

"Maecenas nostrae pars invidiosa juventae, Et vitae et morti Gloria justa meae."

3. Sunt quos] οτιν ους, which Greek construction has been more closely followed by Propertius, iii. 7. 17: "Est quibus Elea concurrit palma quadrigeae." The indicative is used with 'sunt,' or 'est qui,' when particular persons are alluded to, as here the Greeks in opposition to the Romans. See Epp. ii. 2. 182: "Argentum—sunt qui non habent, est qui non curat habere," where by the latter is distinctly indicated the wise man. This distinction may be observed, more or less evidently, in every passage of Horace, where the words occur (see Index, 'qui'), unless 'est qui' below (v. 19) be an exception. It is not impossible, that there he may mean an allusion to some particular person in a good-humoured way.

3. curriculo] This may mean either the chariot (formed from 'curro,' as 'vehiculum' from 'veho') or the course, and the commentators are divided on the subject. I see no way of deciding the controversy, since either sense will suit the passage, and both were in common use (see Forcell.). Because the Olympic games had not yet ceased to be celebrated after a fashion, Orelli thinks Horace may be writing from his own recollection, having been a spectator. But he is more likely, as suggested above, to have had Findar in his mind, than his own recollection of the faded horse-races.

4. Collegisse] Young verse-writers are sometimes misled in their use of the perfect for the present tense. It can only be so used to express a complete action, or an action frequently repeated, not a continuing course of action; according to the force of the Greek aorist. Orelli's note, I think, is calculated to mislead. The best illustration of what follows is in the Iliad (xxii. 393, sqq.), where Nestor thus instructs his son Pylus:

ἐν νύσσῃ δὲ τοι ἵππος ἀριστερὸς ἐγ-χρισῳθήτω,

ως ἀν τοι πλήμνῃ γε δοῦσαιται ἄκρον

ίκεσαι κύκλῳ ποιητοῦ λιθοῦ ε' ἀλέσαται ἐπαυ-ρεῖν.

See also Ov. Am. iii. 2. 11. sq.:

"Et modo lora dabo, modo verbere torga notabo,

Et stringam metas interiore rota."

6. Terrarum dominos] I understand this to signify the Romans, with a tinge of irony. Mart. xiv. 123, calls them "Romanos rerum dominos," as Virgil had done before (Aen. i. 282). Plutarch also (Thb. Grac. ix.) makes Gracchus say of the Roman Plebs, ὑπὲρ ἀλλοτρίας τροφῆς καὶ πλούτου πολε-μονακαὶ ἀποθνήσκοντες, κύριοι τῆς οἰκου-μείνης εἰναι λεγόμενοι, μιᾶν δὲ βασιλεύν ιδον οἶκ ξύνοντες. Martial (viii. 2) calls Domitian

"Terrarum dominus desusque rerum," Hunc si mobilium turba Quiritium
Certat tergeminis tollere honoribus;
Illum si proprio condidit horreo

and Rome herself (xii. 8. 1):

"Terrarum dea gentiumque."

The punctuation and construction of this passage have been a subject of much discussion, as is well known. After much consideration I have adopted the solution of the difficulty first suggested, I believe, by Rutgersius, and have put a full stop after 'nobilis.' Graevius took the same view. For his strictures therefore upon this reading Bentley has an account to settle with his friend, whose opinion he probably did not know, for he does not mention him. His objections are that 'palma' cannot be separated from 'evehit' without violence to the construction, which is only begging the question; and that 'palmaque nobilis,' standing by itself, is 'jejenum, et aridum, et omni venere spoliatum,' which is a matter of taste likely to be prejudiced by the habit of joining the two verses, with which the ear of most readers is familiar. His third objection is that 'evehit' cannot be used impersonally, which I deny; it may be so used just as well as in our own language we may say: "It exalts a man to the gods—one if his ambition is gratified, another if his avarice." Bentley's last objection is the worst of all: "How can a man be said to be exalted to Heaven by having his barns full? I was not aware the road was so easy." If Bentley had written his notes in English, the greater part of them would only have raised a smile. This argument is a fair specimen of his criticism. He settles the question by changing 'evehit' into 'evehere,' which he makes dependent on 'nobilis;' whereby he thinks to get rid of the difficulty of making 'hunc' and 'illum' to depend on 'juvat.' But even with this unauthorized correction (which Orelli describes sufficiently when he says "nemo receptit"), that construction is very harsh, as any body will see who tries to construe the passage upon this hypothesis. But it is the one generally received now, though 'evehit' is retained. Mr. Tate strongly urges the construction of 'hunc' and 'illum' with 'dimoveas,' which he says is as old at least as Glarceanus (a contemporary of Fabricius and the Stephenses), but which, in fact, was the construction adopted by Acron and Cruquins' Scho- liast, who calls it "zeugma ab inferiori." But it is a sufficient answer to this, that there could be no reason why the man who had risen to the highest honors and wealth should be induced to seek his fortunes at sea. Those who suppose 'Terrarum dominos' to be in apposition with 'Deos,' quote Ovid, Ep. ex Ponto i. 9. 35, sq.:

"Nam tua non alio coluit penetralia ritu terrarum dominos quam colis ipse Deos."

Others apply these words to the competitors, because they were usually kings or nobles: others render 'exalts them to the gods as lords of the world,' i.e. 'as if they were.' I believe I have stated all the opinions of any weight upon this passage. The reader will judge whether the reading I have followed does not give the simplest solution of the difficulty. Bentley is very ably refuted by Cunningham, Animadv. c. 15.

8. tergeminis. This refers to the three curule magistrates, those of the aedile, praetor, and consul. Though the quaestorship was usually the first step in the line of promotion, it is not included, because it was not a curule office. Not seeing that 'tergeminus' here signifies no more than 'triplex,' some have supposed the quaestorship, the tribuneship, and censorship to be included. But 'geminus' is used in this combination with cardinal numbers frequently. So Virgil (Aen. vi. 287) calls Briareus 'centumgeminus,' and Catullus (xi. 7) the Nile 'septemgeminus,' and Lucret. (v. 28) speaks of 'tripectora tergeminis—Geryonai,' and the most unequivocal instance of this use of the word occurs in Paulus (Dig. 50. 16. 137): "Ter enixa videtur etiam quae trigeminos pepererit," which passage has been pointed out to me by Mr. Long. "Toller honoribus" is not, as some take it, "tollere ad honores"; 'honoribus' is the ablative case, as (C. i. 21): "Vos Tempe to-tidem tollite laudibus." Sall. Jug. 49: "ut quemque—pecunia aut honore extulerat." Tac. Ann. i. 13: "Claudium Marcellum pontificat et curuli aedilicet—M. Agrippam geminatiss consulatibus exultit."

Certat—tollerere. The poets, following the Greek idiom, use for convenience and conciseness this construction of the infinitive with verbs which in prose would require 'ut' with the subjunctive, or a supine, or 'ad' with a gerund, or some other construction. In the next ode we have "egit visere;" in the 12th, "sumis celebrare;" in the 26th, "tradam portare;" and so on. Dillenbr. has given a list of the principal verbs so Quidquid de Libycis verritatur areis.
Gaudentem patrios findere sarculo
Agros Attalicis conditionibus
Nunquam dimoveas, ut trabe Cypria
Myrtoum pavidus nauta secat mare.
Luctantem Icariis fluctibus Africum
Mercator metuens otium et oppidi
Laudat rura sui; mox reficit rates
Quassas indocilis pauperiem pati.

used. Verbs of all kinds signifying desire and the reverse are frequently used with the infinitive, as in this ode: "demere spernit," "refugit tendere;" C. 9. 13; "fuge quaerere," &c. The student can now observe this usage for himself.

10. de Libycis verritatur areis.] See C. iii. 16. 26, 31. S. ii. 3. 87; and Cic in Verr. Act. ii. Lib. 3. c. 14, Long’s note. The ‘area’ was a raised floor on which the corn was threshed; and after the wind had winnowed it the floor was swept, and the corn was thus collected.

11. findere sarculo] There is something of contempt in these words, where we should have expected ‘arare.’ The soil must be poor that was worked by a hoe, and the owner ‘macro pauper agello.’ Fia refers to Apuleius’ description of Samos, where ‘ruratio omnis in sarculo et surculo—ager frumento piger, aratro irritus’ (Florid. ii.). ‘Scindere’ is the proper word for the plough; ‘findere’ for the hoe or lesser instruments.—‘Attalicis conditionibus’ signifies, ‘the most extravagant terms.’ There were three kings of Pergamus of this name, which was proverbial for wealth. Of the second it is recorded, that he gave large sums for paintings and other works of art, as much as 100 talents for a single picture, (Plin. N. H. vii. 39). The third left his great wealth to the Romans (n. c. 134). Some suppose the peculiar habit of the former to be alluded to. But it is enough that the name had passed into a proverb, and chiefly in connexion with the latter of these kings. See C. ii. 18. 5. Compare for ‘conditionibus’ Cic. ad Qu. Fr. 1. 2. 8: ‘Nulla conditio pecuniae te ab summa integritate deduxerit.”

13. dimoveas,] Orelli says the difference between ‘dimoveo’ and ‘demoveo,’ which some editions have, is that the former is used when a diversion into a new channel is intended, the latter when no such meaning is to be expressed. Dillenbr. reverses this statement and reads ‘demoveas.’ The meaning of the words must be derived from themselves, not from their use; for in the conflict of MSS., not only here but in every place where they occur, it is impossible to derive it from the context. From the meaning of ‘de,’ ‘down from,’ I should be inclined to say that ‘demoveo’ is more properly used when the place from which the removal takes place is expressed, and ‘dimoveo’ when the sentence is absolute, as here. For instance, ‘demovet’ I imagine to be the proper reading in C. iv. 5. 14: ‘Curvo nec faciem littore demovet,” where the MSS. have in many instances ‘dimovet.’ Other examples will be found by which the reader may judge for himself.

The same remark applies to ‘diripio’ and ‘deripio.’ (C. iii. 5. 21 n.)—‘Cypria,’ ‘Myrtoum,’ ‘Icariis,’ ‘Africum,’ are all particular names for general, as ‘Bithynia carina’ (C. i. 35. 7). This need hardly have been mentioned if reasons had not been discovered for the use of ‘Cypria,’ in which this common practice of Horace is overlooked. Turnebus, for instance, explains ‘Cypria’ by the fertility of Cyprus, which was so productive that it could furnish all the materials for a ship from its keel to its top-gallant sails.—Horace’s epithets for Africus, which was the w. w. wind, and corresponded to the Greek λυφ, are ‘preccepis,’ ‘estilenis,’ ‘protervus.’ He uses the phrase ‘Africæ procellæ’ (C. iii. 23. 5) to signify the storms for which this wind was proverbial.—‘Luctari,’ ‘certare,’ ‘decertare,’ ‘contendere,’ are used by the poets with the dative case, instead of the ablative with ‘cum,’ after the manner of the Greek μαχασθαι των.

16. otium et oppidi laudat rura suis;] He commends the peaceful fields about his native town; for ‘otium et rura’ may be taken as one subject. Bentley prefers ‘tuta,’ a conjectural reading of Valens Acdalius (Com. on Vell. Patrec. ii. 110), to ‘rura,’ and says he never met with an expression like “rura oppidi.” Orelli quotes

18. indolilia—pali. Examples of this Greek construction for 'ad patiendum,' are very numerous. Bentley, as we have seen, tries to apply it to v. 6, reading 'nobilis evhever.' To go no further than this book, we have 'audax perverti,' 'blan dum dicere,' 'nobilem superare,' 'impotens sperare,' 'callidum condere,' 'doctus tendere,' 'praesens tollere,' 'ferre dolosi.'—'Pauperies,' 'paupertas,' 'pauper,' are never by Horace taken to signify 'privatio,' or any thing beyond a humble estate, as among many other instances "meo sum pauper agello" (Epp. ii. 2. 12). "Probamque pauperiem sine dote quaero" (C. iii. 29. 56). Aristophanes describes shortly the difference between 'egens' (πωχὸς) and 'pauper' (πενής), and his description will generally explain Horace's meaning when he uses the latter word:—

πωχός μὲν γὰρ βίος ὅν σὺ λίγης ζην ἐστιν μηθὲν ίνουν, τοῦ δὲ πίνυτος ζῆν φειδομένον καὶ τοῖς ἀργοῖς προσιχόντα, πειράγγειας δ' αὐτῶν μηθέν, μὴ μὲν τοῖς μήδ' ἠπείπατον.—Plut. 552, sqq.

"Paupertas," 'inopia,' 'egetas,' is the climax given by Seneca (de Tranq. Animi, 8).

20. solido demere de die. That is, to interrupt the hours of business. So (C. ii. 7. 6) "morantem sape miem fiergi." 'Solidus' signifies that which has no vacant part or space; and hence 'solidus dies' comes to signify the business hours, or occupied part of the day. Juvenal says (xii. 204, 5):

— "Jam nunc in balnea salva Frone licet vadas, quamquam solida hora superbit Ad sextam."

Senec. Ep. 84, "Hodiernus dies solidus est: nemo ex illo quicquam mihi eripuit."

Stat. Sylv. iv. 36,—

"At nunc, quae solidum diem terebat, Horarum via facta vix duarum."

The 'solidus dies' ended at the hour of dinner, which with industrious persons was the ninth in summer, and tenth in winter. The luxurious dined earlier (as "Exc. ab octava Marius bibit," Juv. v. 61), the busy sometimes later. See Becker's Gallus, Exc. i. se. 9, on the meals of the Romans. The commencement of the day varied with the habits of different people.

22. Caput] This is used for the mouth, as well as the spring of a river. V. Georg. iv. 319. "Tristis ad extremi sacrum caput astiti amnis." Caes. (B. G. iv. 10) says of the Rhine, "multat capitolibus in Oceanum infuit." Here it is the spring. Shrines were usually built at the fountain-head of streams, dedicated to the nymphs that protected them, which explains 'sacrae.'

23. lituo tubae. The 'litus' was curved in shape and sharp in tone, and used by the cavalry: 'tuba,' as its name indicates, was straight and of deep tone, and used by the infantry. "Non tuba directi, non aeris cornu flexi" (Ov. Met. 1. 98). Lapis de Mil. Rom. says the 'litius' was in shape a mean between the 'tuba' and the 'cornu;' not so straight as the one, nor so twisted as the other. Aulus Gallius (N. A. i. 11) makes a distinction between the three, but does not explain what it is. See C. ii. 1. 17.

24. Bellaque matribus Deestata] 'Deestatus' is no where else used passively, except by the law-writers, who use it for an evidence: 'modulatus' (C. i. 32. 5), 'metatus' (ii. 15. 15), are likewise used passively.

25. sub Jove] Epod. xiii. 2: "Nivesque dedunct Jovem." The Latin writers represented the atmosphere by Jupiter, the Greeks by Hera (Serv. ad Aen. i. 51).
Me doctarum hederae praemia frontium
Dis miscent superis; me gelidum nemus 30
Nympharumque leves cum Satyris chori
Secernunt populo, si neque tibias
Enterpe cohibet nee Polyhymnia
Lesboum refugit tendere barbiton.
Quod si me lyricis vatibus inseris,
Sublimi feriam sidera vertice.

23. teretes] This word Festus describes to mean 'long and round as a pole,' which definition will not always be found to help us to its meaning. It has always more or less closely the meaning of roundness or smoothness, or both as here. It contains the same root as 'tero,' 'torus,' τηριως, and its cognate words, and its meaning is got from the notion of rubbing and polishing.
Horace applies it to a woman's ancles, a smooth-faced boy, the cords of a net, and a faultless man (see Index). It is applied by Ovid (Fast. ii. 320) to a girdle, and by Virgil (Aen. xi. 579) to the thong of a sling; where, as here, it represents the exact twisting of a cord. 'Slender' will not do; for 'plagae' were nets of thick cord with which the woods were surrounded, to catch the larger beasts as they were driven out by dogs and beaters. The professed translators, as usual, give no assistance. Smart renders the words, 'circling toils;' Francis, 'spreading toils;' Dacier omits 'teretes' altogether.
Marsus for Marsius, as Colchus for Colchicus, Medus for Medicus, and many others, is the only form Horace uses.

29. Me doctarum hederae praemia frontinum]—'Te' has been proposed for 'me;' and Mr. Tate has declared, that this 'true reading, on necessity arising from internal evidence against 'me' and the MSS., after the assent of scholars generally given, may now take its place as it were by acclamation.' Orelli says, in opposition to Mr. Tate, 'conjecturam—jam ab omnibus explosam esse arbitror.' It was originally conjectured by Hare, and the only editors as far as I know, who had adopted it when Mr. Tate wrote, are Jones and Sanadon. Other critics have defended it, but very lamely;
and more recently Fea has adopted this reading, but on grounds very different from his predecessors. 'Thou, Maecenas,' he says, 'art ever occupied in crowning poets with the ivy, and they in return exalt thee to the gods in their songs.' I need not protract this note with quotations to prove that the ivy, which was sacred to Bacchus, made a fit and usual garland for a lyric poet. 'Doctarum frontium,' which Mr.
Tate defends, as applied to Maecenas, is the proper description of poets, who, by the Greeks were called σῳδις. Σοί δέ σῳδαραι (Pind. Isth. ii. 36).

34. Lesboum—barbiton.] The lyre of Sappho and Alcaeus.

35. Quod si] A reference to the Index will show that 'quod si' does not occur, as Orelli says it does, but rarely in the poets.
The MSS. vary between 'inseris' and 'in-seres.' The present seems to be more in keeping with what goes before, and Horace had no occasion to express a doubt as to whether Maecenas ranked him among lyric poets. Although the personal pronoun 'tu' is emphatic in this sentence, it is omitted, as the poets often do, where no opposition of persons is intended. Orelli and Dillenbr.
have quoted a fragment of Sappho (15 Bergk), from which it might appear that the last line was imitated: but the reading is so doubtful that nothing certain can be made out of it. The idea will be found frequently in Ovid.—'Lyrics' is less common than 'melies,' to describe the lyric poets of Greece.
This ode was probably written on the return of Augustus to Rome, after the taking of Alexandria, when the civil wars were brought to a close and the temple of Janus was shut, A.U.C. 725. Horace here expresses the opinion which Tacitus (Ann. i. 9) states was held by reflecting men of all parties, “non aliud discordantis patriae remedium fuisse quam ut ab uno regeretur,” that the only remedy left for the troubles of the state was an absolute government in the hands of one person. He has been charged with deserting his republican principles, and even urging the destruction of those whose party he had once belonged to, and with whom he had fought at Philippi. But Horace urges reform, not bloodshed; and he had lived long enough to see that reform was not to be expected at the hands of republican leaders, or from any but him whose genius was now in the ascendant. It is not therefore in any mean spirit that he urges upon Augustus to take upon himself the task of reducing to order the elements of the state, which so many years of civil war had thrown into confusion.—None of Horace’s odes are more justly celebrated than this for the imagery it contains, for its genuine feeling, and for the delicacy with which it flatters Augustus, investing him with divine attributes, but inviting him to exercise them as a father correcting and defending his children, and thus to avenge in the noblest manner his great-uncle’s murder. The way in which he introduces the name of Caesar unexpectedly at the end has always appeared to me an instance of consummate art.

The prodigies described at the beginning of this ode are those which were said to have followed the death of Julius Caesar. They are related also by Virgil, Georg. i. 460—489, which passage, and the verses that follow it to the end of the book, should be read in connexion with this ode. It will appear to any reader of both very probable that Horace had this description in his mind when he wrote. It has been thought that Horace could not have referred to prodigies which had occurred so long before (A.U.C. 710, fifteen years before this ode was written), when he was at Athens, and therefore could not have witnessed them. Other prodigies therefore have been assumed as the subject of these opening stanzas. But the only other occasions, about this time, when the Tiber is recorded to have overflowed its banks, were A.U.C. 727 and 732, the earliest of which years would be too late for this ode, in which the allusions to the state of Rome and the triumphs of Augustus (v. 49), and the proposal that he should assume supreme authority, would in that case have been out of date and unnecessary. One of the chief purposes professed by Augustus was the avenging of his adoptive father’s death: see Suet. Octav. x. : “Nihil convenientius duxit quam necem avunculi vindicare tuerique acta.” Tacitus also speaks of him (Ann. i. 9) as “piei et arane parentem—ad arma civilia actum;” which his enemies turned against him, saying, “Cassii et Brutorum exitus paternis inimicitiis datos, quorum fas sit privata odio in publicis utilitatis remittere.” According to Dion Cassius (liii. 4) his declared purpose was δυνατος τε τε πατρι δεινος σφαγινι τιμωρησαι και την την πολιν εκ μεγαλων και επαλληλουν κακων έξελισσαι. Ovid (Fast. v. 569, sqq.) introduces him as uttering this prayer to Mars:

“Si mihi bellandi pater est Vestaeque sacerdos
Auctor, et ulisci numem utrumque paro;
Mars, ades et satia scelerato sanguine ferrum;
Stetque favor causa pro meliore tuus.
Templa feres et me victore vocaberis ultor.”

This being the case, Horace could not judiciously have passed over the death of Julius Caesar, in an ode which hailed the return of Augustus; nor could he have alluded to it better than in connexion with those prodigies which seemed to speak the wrath of Heaven against civil discord. Other poets wrote of these prodigies which were very notorious. See Tibull. ii. i. 71, sqq.; Ovid, Met. xv. 782, sqq.; and one phenomenon poetically described by Horace is recorded by Dion. (xlv. 17): καὶ ἵχθυς ἐκ τῆς θαλάσσης ἀμύθριοι κατὰ τάς Τιθέραδος ἵκβολάς ἐς τὴν ἡμείρον ἔζέπεσον.

If this ode is read with C. ii. 15, and the others mentioned in the Introduction to that ode, the feeling with which Horace entered into the mission of Augustus as the reformer will be better understood.

ARGUMENT.

Portents enough hath Jove sent upon the earth, making it afraid lest a new deluge were coming, as the Tiber rolled back from its mouth threatening destruction to the city, the unauthorized avenger of Ili! Our sons shall hear that citizens have whetted for each other the steel that should have smitten the enemy.

What god shall we invoke to help us? What prayers shall move Vesta to pity? To whom shall Jove assign the task of wiping out our guilt? Come thou, Apollo; or thou, smiling Venus, with mirth and love thy companions; or thou, Mars, our founder, who hast too long sported with war; or do thou, son of Maia, put on the form of a man and let us call thee the avenger of Caesar; nor let our sins drive thee too soon away; here take thy triumphs; be thou our father and our prince, and suffer not the Mede to go unpunished whilst thou art our chief, O Caesar.

Jam satis terris nivis atque dirae
Grandinis misit Pater, et rubente
Dextera sacras jaculatus arces
Terruit Urbem,
Terruit gentes, grave ne rediretur
Seculum Pyrrhae nova monstra questae,
Omne cum Proteus pocus egit altos Visere montes,

1. Jam satis—] See Introduction.

diraear] It is very common in Horace (though not peculiar to him) to find an epithet which is attached to the latter of two substantives, but belongs to both, as here, and "f idem mutatoque Deos" (C. i. 5. 6); "poplitibus timidoque tergo" (C. iii. 2. 16), and many other places which the student will observe for himself. Horace uses this construction so frequently that it may be looked upon as a feature in his style; and he often uses it with effect.

2. rubene] Virgil has (G. i. 328) "Coruscus dextera," where, however, it may be doubted whether "coruscus" belongs to "fulmina" or to "dextera." Some MSS. have "rubenti." But Bentley (on C. i. 25. 17) quotes Verrius Flaccus, a grammarian of the Augustan age, who lays down the rule that in Horace all nouns ending in "ns" have the termination of the ablative in "e," not "i." This is not true in respect to some words, which though they have the force of adjectives are in fact participles. For instance, "Ab insolenti temperatam lactititia" (C. ii. 3. 3). Bentley, therefore, attributes too much perhaps to the authority of his grammanian in adopting this as an invariable rule in respect to the participle. No doubt Horace would have used the long vowel if ever it had been convenient.

3. arcas] The sacred buildings on the Capitoline hill. They were called collectively Capitolium or Arx (from their position), Arx Capitolii, and sometimes by hendiadys, "Arx et Capitolium." (Livy, v. 30, &c.) They embraced the three temples of Jup. Opt. Max., Juno, and Minerva, of Jupiter Feretrius, and of Terminus.

10. columnis.] The proper name for a wood-pigeon is "palumbus," or "—ha," or "—bes;" and therefore some have proposed,
Piscium et summa genus haesit ulmo
Nota que sedes fuerat columbis,
Et superjecto pavidae natarunt Aequore dame.
Vidimus flavum Tiberim retortis
Littore Etrusco violenter undis
Ire dejectum monumenta regis Templaque Vestae;
Iiiae dum se nimium querenti
Jactat ultorem, vagus et sinistra Labit tur ripa Jove non probante uxorius amnis.
Audiet eaves acuise ferrum
Quo graves Persae melius perirent;
Audiet pugnas vitio parentum Rara juventus.

Quem vocet divum populus ruentis
Imperi rebus? preece qua fatigent
Virgines sanctae minus audientem
Carmina Vestam?

Cui dabit partes seelus expiandi
Juppiter? Tandem venias precamur
Nube candentes humeros amictus Augur Apollo;

beautiful passage). Silius (xii. 543) makes Ilia hide herself in the bosom of her spouse as Hannibal approaches the Anio. That there were two legends therefore, in this as in most cases, must be admitted. Cruxquis' commentator gets rid of the difficulty in true Scholast fashion by saying that Ilia was buried by the banks of the Anio, which carried her remains away and washed them into the Tiber; and hence she was said to have been married to the Tiber. Servius (on Aen. i. 277) remarks on Horace's version, which he says is supported by other writers.
Claudian is one. Speaking of the Tiber he says,

"Palla graves humeros velat quam neverat
uxor
Ilia, percurrens vitreas sub gurgite telas."
(In Prob. et Olyb. Cons. 224.) Jove may be supposed to have disapproved the prosumption of the river-god, because he had reserved the task of expiation for other hands and happier means.

21. cives acuise ferrum] 'inter se' or
' in semetipos' is readily understood.
Mitscherlich and others make 'audiet acu-isse' a prophecy, ' shall hear them sharpen,' whereas it should be rendered ' shall hear of their having sharpened.' Horace is not predicting what is to be, but lamenting what has been.

Persians, Medes, and Parthians are names freely interchanged by Horace. The growth of the Parthian power from the condition of an insignificant dependency to the absorption of nearly the whole of the vast empire of the Selencidae, is a question of history which need not be entered upon here. It will be borne in mind however with reference to the above confusion of names that the Parthian empire, at the time Horace wrote, extended nearly from the Indus to the Roman province of Syria;
and that the Parthians were in the habit of making incursions into that province, which fact is referred to in the last stanza of this ode. Although the name of Augustus, assisted by their own disputes, did something towards keeping them in check, they were held by the Romans to be their most formidable enemies, as the readers of Horace will easily perceive. Augustus meditated but never carried out war with the Parthians, and the Romans never till the reign of Trajan gained any successes against them.
Their empire was broken up and succeeded by the Persian kingdom of the Sassanidai during the reign of Alexander Severus, A.D.
226.—' Periexent' would in prose be ' perturi forest.'—The opening of Lucan's first book may be compared with this ode.

24. Rara juventus. It took years of peace and the enactment of stringent mar-rriage-laws to restore the population of Rome, which was thinned not only by bloodshed but by indifference to marriage and laxity of morals. (See Article Julia Lex Papia et Poppea in Smith's Dict. Ant.)

25. Quem vocet divum] The passionate appeal of the chorus in Aesch. S. c. 'Theb., beginning v. 92: της ἄρα ἡμείς του μένου, της ἄρα ιποτικίας θεών η θήνων; may be compared with this. Vesta the tutelary goddess of Rome (Virg. G. i. 499, sqq.

"Dii patrii Indigetes, et Romule, Vestaque mater,
Quae Tuscan Tyberim et Romana palatia servas,"

is represented as turning a deaf ear to the prayers of her virgins, because Caesar as Pontifex Maximus had particular charge of her temple and rites. So in Ovid she ex-claims:

— "meus fuit ille sacerdos;
Sacris leges me petiere manus.
At quicunque nefas ausi, prohibente deorum
Numine, polluerant pontificale caput,
CARMINUM I. 2.

Sive tu mavis, Erycina ridens,
Quam Jocus circum volat et Cupido;
Sive neglectum genus et nepotes
Respiciis auctor,
Heu nimis longo satiata ludo,
Quem juvat clamor galeaeque leves
Acer et Mauri peditis cruentum
Vulnus in hostem;

Morte jacent merita. —
Hoc opus, haec pietas, haec prima elementa fuerunt Caesaris ulcisci justa per arma patrem." (Fast. iii. 689, sqq.) And when Augustus was made Pontifex Maximus Ovid writes, (iii. 421):

"Ignibus aeternis aeterni numina presunt
Ortus ab Aenea tangit cognata saceros
Numina; cognatum Vesta tucre caput.
Quos sancta solet ille manu, bene vivitis ignes.
Vivite inextincti flammaque duxque precor."

Aeneas was said to have preserved the fire of Vesta and brought her to Rome. 'Carmina' is opposed to 'prece' as a set formula to other prayers. 'Carmen' has that meaning in respect to legal or any other formal documenta. Liv. i. 26: "Lex horrendi carminis." Epp. ii. 1. 138: "Carmine Di superi placantur carmine Manes."

31. Nube candentes humeros amictus] So Homer describes him, τιμίνος ὄμοιον νέφοθην (II. xv. 308). Virg. (Aen. viii. 720): "candentis lumine Phoebi." 'Candenti' is the reading of the Scholiasts and one or two old editions. Fea adopts it, and supposes the 'nubes' to be a 'nimbus' or 'glory' round about his head. But, as he goes out of his way to explain the appearance at the Transfiguration in the same manner, we need not attend to his suggestion. Graevius' notion that "nube candentes humeros amictus" has reference to the eclipse reckoned among the prodigies at Caesar's death is not worthy of him. But the fault is Bothe's, who edited Graevius' notes from marginal readings in his copy of Cruxius' edition not intended for publication.

33. Sive] See i. 3. 12. n. 'Erycina ridens' corresponds to φ λομυθής Ἀρροθήν. Îμαρες and 'Ερες were the two sons of Venus. 'Jocus' is an invention of Horace's. The reasons for appealing to Apollo as the stedfast friend of Troy, and, according to his flatterers, the father of Augustus (not because he was Φοίβος καθάρσιοι as Duentzer says), Venus as the mother of Aeneas and of the Julian family, and Mars as the father of Romulus, are sufficiently obvious. Mercury is selected as the representative of Augustus, because he is the messenger of peace (Ovid Fast. v. 665):

"Pacis et armorum superis imisque deorum Arbiter."

36. Respiciis] Cic. (de Leg. ii. 11) proposes the title 'Fortuna respiciens,' which he explains by 'ad opem ferendam,' for a temple of Fortune.

ludo see C. i. 26. 17: "Dant alios Furiae torvo spectacula Marti."

39. Mauri peditis] As the African troops were chiefly cavalry, and according to some writers distinguished rather for cowardice than bravery, Marsi has been substituted for Mauri by some editors, on the conjecture of Tanaquil Faber and against all the MSS. But other writers speak more highly of the Mauritanians; and the force of 'peditis,' which would have no force at all with Marsi, here appears to be that the rider has had his horse killed under him, or has dismounted to attack his enemy hand to hand, or in consequence of a wound. See S. i. 1. 13: "Aut labentis equo describit vulnera Parthi." On foot the Roman cavalry routed the Hermicas (Liv. vii. 8), and Statorius had no difficulty in forming a very fine body of infantry out of the Numidian soldiers of Syphax (Liv. xxiv. 40). Why Horace should have selected a warrior of this race for his illustration may not be so easy to say. It has been conjectured that he took the idea from a painting. Bentley has caught up 'Marsi' as "certissima emendatio." Dacier, the inventor's son-in-law, supports the reading with the assertion that he had seen it in some of the oldest editions. Bentley wishes he had access to these very rare editions, and is afraid this is only a dream that has come to the Frenchman 'per portam eburneum.'

41. juvenem] So Augustus is called
Sive mutata juvenem figura
Ales in terris imitarius, alme
Filius Maiae, patiens vocari Caesaris ультor:
Serus in caelum reades diuque
Laetus intersis populo Quirini;
Neve te nostris vitis iniquum
Ocio aura
Tollat: hic magnos potius triumphos,
Hic ames dici pater atque princeps,
Neu sinas Medos equitare inultos Te duce, Caesar.

though he was forty years old at this time.
So Virg. (G. i. 500):— “Hunc saltem versus juvenem succurrere saeelo
Ne prohibete.”

‘Juvenis ’ and ‘adolescens’ were used for any age between ‘pueritia’ and ‘senectus.’ Cicero speaks of himself as ‘adolescens’ at the time he put down Catiline’s conspiracy, when he was forty-four years old, and as ‘senex’ when he delivered his 2nd Philippic, at which time he was sixty-two. “Defendi Rempublicam adolescents non deseram senex” (Phil. ii. 46). But the reader will find many examples in Forcellini, under the articles ‘adolescens’ and ‘juvenis.’ 43. patiens vocari] A Graecism. “Patiar-que vel inconsultus haberi,” Epp. i. 5. 15, “Cum pateris sapiens emendatusque vocari”
(Epp. i. 16. 30).
44. Caesaris ультor:] Estré, a very diligent scholar and candid man, declares himself perfectly unable to account for this language of Horace. It confounds and disturbs he says all his notions of Horace’s character (Prósop. p. 277). See Introduction to this ode. ‘Alter’ has been stupidly proposed to meet these objections.
45. Serus in caelum reades] Ovid, Met.
xv. 866, sq. :
“Tarda sit illa dies et nostro serior aeo Qua caput Augustum quem temperat orbe relieto Accedat caelo.”
See also Trist. v. 2. 47. The adjective for the adverb is common in respect of time.
The instances in Horace are very numerous.
46. populo Quirini:] Some MSS. have Quirino. But the genitive is the general reading, and corresponds more closely to the regular form ‘populus Romanus Quiri-tium.’

49. triumphos] Augustus had just celebrated, or was just about to celebrate, three triumphs on three successive days, for his victories (1) over the Pannonians and Dalmatians, (2) at Actium, and (3) at Alexandria. ‘Triumphos’ is governed by ‘ames,’ as ‘pocula’ is governed by ‘spernit’ (i. 1. 19); in both which cases we have an accusative case and an infinitive mood governed by the same verb.
50. pater] The title of ‘pater patriae’ was not assumed by Augustus till A.U.C. 762. Ovid addresses him by that title, (Fast. ii. 127):

“Sanete pater patriae, tibi plebs, tibi curia
nomen
Hoc dedit; hoc dedimus nos tibi nomen
eques.
Res tamen ante dedit. Sero quoque vera tulisti
Nomina: jampridem tu pater orbis eras.
Hoc tu per terras quod in aethere Jupiter alto
Nomen habes; dominum tu pater, ille Deum.”

It was the highest title of honour that could be conferred on a citizen, and was first given by the Senate to Cicero (the army had formerly bestowed it on Camillus), on the occasion of his suppressing Catiline’s conspiracy. Juv. viii. 243:

“Roma parentem—Roma patrem patriae Ciceronem libera dixit,” where ‘libera’ seems to mean that the senate were no longer free agents when Augustus took the name. See C. iii. 24.
27, n.

princeps] Tac. Ann. i. 1, “Cuncta discordis civilibus fessa principis sub impe-rium accepta.”

51. equitare inultos] See above, v. 21, n.
CARMEN III.

The date of this ode has been much discussed. It is the chronologists' stumbling-block. If it was written on the occasion of that voyage to Athens from which Virgil only returned to die, the date must be A.U.C. 735. How that interferes with the reckoning of Franke and others may be seen by referring to the introductory remarks to this edition. Franke however denies that this ode has reference to that voyage. He even thinks it doubtful whether it is addressed to Virgil the poet; and though he is in general very acute and judicious, his zeal for the theory he advocates ran away with his judgment when he led him to think that Quintilius, whose death is lamented in C. 24 of this book, is the person here addressed, and that perhaps he was drowned on the voyage, since it is clear, says he, from that ode that he met with an untimely and violent death. Coming from most other people this theory would not be worth mentioning. That it is the resort of an advocate in difficulty is clear on the face of it. He thinks these two odes are closely connected, though the link has been lost to us from the obscurity of the allusions, but he finds a trace of it in the words "Navis quae tibi creditum Debes" (v. 6 of this ode); and 24. 11, "Tu frustra pius tibi! non ita creditum." There is no weight in this argument at all; nevertheless there is no certainty that the ode was written on the occasion supposed. Virgil may have made or contemplated a voyage before his last, and there is so much difficulty attending the date A.U.C. 735 that I am inclined to think such must have been the case. This leaves the date of the ode in uncertainty. Franke's best argument is that if the publication of these odes took place after Virgil's death, it must have been immediately or very soon after, even according to the chronology of Kirchmer and others who are opposed to him; and that it would have been in the worst taste and feeling to have inserted this ode at such a time. There can be little doubt I think but he would have suppressed it, or accompanied it with one expressing his own and the universal sorrow. I cannot imagine a greater mockery than the insertion of an ode addressed to Virgil on the death of his friend, and an ode praying for his safe voyage, at a time when all Virgil's friends must have been bewailing his death, to which no allusion is made in any part of Horace's writings. This last fact would be accounted for if we supposed Virgil to have died during the time when Horace had almost if not entirely suspended this kind of writing. Franke's attempt to show that there was not that mutual affection between Virgil and Horace which would warrant the expressions in this ode is very weak. But others have affirmed the same because Virgil nowhere mentions Horace, and because he did not leave him his literary executor, but chose Varrius and Tucca rather than Horace. But Virgil left his Aeneid not to be published but destroyed, and there is no reason why he should have chosen Horace for such a purpose. A man may have more friends than executors, and does not always give that office to those he loves best. As for the other argument, if the nature of Virgil's poems be considered, it is not worth noticing.

Compare with this ode Statius' 'Propempticon' to Metius Celer, 'a most noble and pleasant youth,' whom as he could not accompany he sent upon his way with a beautiful address, suggested partly it would seem by this of Horace (Sylv. iii. 2).

ARGUMENT.

We commit to thee Virgil, O thou ship; deliver him safe on the shores of Attica, and preserve him whom I love as my life; and may the skies and winds prosper thee. Hard and rush was the man who first tempted the sea and defied the winds. In what shape should he fear the approach of death who unmoved could look on the monsters of the deep and the swelling waves and dangerous rocks? In vain did God separate lands if man is to leap over the forbidden waters. So doth he ever rush into sin. Prometheus brought fire into the world, and with that theft came all manner of diseases; Daedalus soared on wings, and Hercules burst into Hell. Def erred by nothing we would climb Heaven itself, and our guilt suffers not Jove to lay aside his bolts.

Sic te diva potens Cypri,
Sic fratres Helenae lucida sidera,
Ventorumque regat pater, Obstrictis aliis praeter Iapyga:
Navis, quae tibi creditum
Debes Virgillium finibus Atticis

1. Sic] The use of this word in this place is by no means easily explained. It is usual to explain it as expressing a wish dependent on the accomplishment of a condition. It would thus be ‘so may the winds favour you as you discharge the debt you owe.’ But in order that the ship should discharge her debt the winds must be favourable, and to wish her a favourable wind and pleasant voyage after she had delivered her freight, while without that condition she could not deliver it at all, is nonsense. Horace seems to mean this— I pray thee, O ship, deliver up thy trust in safety, and to that end may the stars and winds prosper thee. In Virgil (Ec. ix. 30) we have Lycidas urging Moeris to recite him some verses, and he says—

"Sic tua Cyreneas fugiunt examina taxos;
Sic cytiso pastae distendant ubera vaccae;
Incipe, si quid habes."

Here ‘síc’ expresses an earnest and affectionate prayer for the person addressed, followed by an entreaty to him; but it cannot be called a condition so much as a strong expression of feeling, and such I presume it to mean in the present instance, where it amounts to no more than ‘utinam’ in a strong form, as ως does in Greek; the object of the wish being a means by which a desired end may be accomplished. There are other passages where ‘sic’ follows the prayer on which it depends, as C. i. 23.

---

"Ne parce malignus arenae—particulam dare:
Sic quodque munabitur Eurus—
and Tibullus (i. 5, 121):

"Adnue; sic tibi sint intinsi, Phoebe, capilli."

In these places the condition and its consequence are clearly marked, and an opposite wish is implied if the condition be not fulfilled.

Potens, like its kindred word πόντα, is used with a genitive after it. Venus from her supposed origin was imagined to have power over the sea; hence Horace calls her ‘marina’ (C. iii. 26. 5; iv. 11. 15). She had the titles εὐπλοια, λυμενια; had temples built for her in harbours, and is represented on coins with a rudder, shell, and dolphin. Ovid (Heroid. xvi. 23) makes Paris say of her:—

"Ilia dedit faciles sonnos ventosque secundos;
In mare nimium jus habet orta mari;"

and Lucret. (i. 8):—

"Tibi rident aequora ponti, Placatunque nitet diffuso lumine caelum."

Castor and Pollux had among other titles that of άρωγόντας. The appellation ‘lucida sidera’ is supposed to be derived from certain meteoric appearances after storms, which the ancients supposed to indicate the presence of Castor and Pollux. Similar phenomena are still called by the Italian sailors the fire of St. Elmo, a corruption it is believed from Helena. Compare Eurip. Helen. 1403, seqq.:—

"μολοιει ποτί ἐπίπειον ἅρμα
οὐ αἴθερος ἵμενοι
παιδεις Τυννάρδας
λαμπρῶν ἀστρων ὑπ’ αἴλλαισιν
οί ναυετ ὀφράνοι."

"ναυταίς ἐναίς ἀνίμων πημοντες Δῆθην πνεὼς."

See also Plin. N. H. ii. 37, and C. iv. 8. 31. Aeolus is steward of the winds in Homer. (Odys. x. 21), king in Virgil, and father here. The Iapygian or N.W. wind, so called from Iapygia in Apulia whence it blows down the Adriatic, and the usual name of which was favonius, was favourable for a voyage from Brundusium, where Virgil would embark for Greece. It was called by the Greeks, ἀργίστης: Arist. de Mundo, c. 4: *ἀργίστης ὁ ἀπό της βερηνής ὑπαίς ὡν τις καλούσιν Ὀλυμπιάν οἱ ἐς Ἰάνγα.
Reddas incolorem precor,
Et serves animae dimidium meae.
IlIi robur et a~e tripex
Circa pectus erat qui fragilem truci
Commisit pelagis ratem
Primus, nec timuit praecipitem Africam
Decertantem Aquilonibus
Nec tristes Hyadas, nec rabiem Noti Quo non arbiter Hadiae
Major tollere seu ponere volt freta.
Quem Mortis timuit gradum
Qui siccis oculis monstra natantia, Qui vidit mare turgidum et Infames scopulos Aceroceraunia?
Nec quicquam deus abscidit
Prudens Oceanò dissociabili
Terras si tamen impiae
Non tangenda rates transiliunt vada.
Audax omnia perpeti
Gens humana ruat per vetitum nefas.
Audax Iapeti genus
Ignem fraude mala gentibus intulit.
Post ignem aetheria domo
Subductum macies et nova febrium
Terris incubuit cohors,
Semotique prius tarda necessitas

It was enough to make them weep to think that their bodies would not meet with burial.
'Seci oculi' are fitting accompaniments of a heart so hard as this venturous discoverer is said to have had.
The MSS. vary between 'turgidum' and 'turbidum' in v. 19. Bentley adopts the latter, as "fortius epitheton quod majorem terrorem incutit." I do not know what force there is in 'turbidum' which does not exist more strongly in 'turgidum.' The former may represent the muddy appearance of the sea after a storm, the other speaks of its swelling waves.

22. dissociabili Used actively, as 'Penetrabile telum' (Aen. x. 48), "Genitabili aura Favoni" (Lucret. i. 11), and in Horace 'Amabilem' (C. i. 5. 10), 'Illacrumabilem' (ii. 14. 6), which is used passively C. iv. 9. 26. Gesner gives a long list of similar words with an active signification. Bentley reads 'dissociabiles,' assuming the common reading to be a corruption of 'dissociabili' and that to be put for his word, by which he understands 'lands not meant to be united.' The active sense he says has no authority, but it has abundant support, as we see from analogy. Tacitus uses it passively (Agr. 3) "re olim dissociabiles miscuerit principatum et libertatem."
The common reading agrees with Lucret. (v. 204), "Et mare quod late terrarum distinct orbeum." 'Prudens' is 'providens,' foreseeing the evil to come.

25. Audax omnia perpeti Compare with this Soph. Antig. 332, sqq.:

26. fraude mala 'Mala' merely means miscellaneous or fatal theft, referring to its consequences. The epithet is not here redundant, perhaps less than in Soph. Oed. Col. 1026, τά γάρ ἐδόλῳ τῷ μη ἐκαίνιον κτήματι οὐχι σωζέται. The old commentators refer to the distinction between 'dolus malus' a fraud with bad intent, and 'dolus bonus' with good intent, a pious fraud. Ulpian (Dig. iv. 3. 1), referring to the praetor's words, "Quae dolo malo facta esse dicentur . . . judicium dabò," says "non fuit autem contentus praetor dolum dicere, sed adjecit malum quoniam veteres dolum etiam bonum dicebant et pro solertia hoc nomen accipiebant, maxime si adversus hostem latrienemque quis machinaretur."

30. Subductum 'Sub' in composition has sometimes that force of ὑπό which sig-
CARMINUM I. 4.

Leti corripuit gradum.
Expertus vacuum Daedalus aëra
Pennis non hominì datis;
Perrupit Acheronta Herceules labor.
Nil mortalibus arduì est;
Caclum ipsum petimus stultitia neque
Per nostrum patimur scelus Iracunda Jovem ponere fulmina.

nifies 'suppression' and so 'deception' in every form. But it does not always convey a bad meaning.

31. incudit] This word does not always take a dative case after it. Lucret. vi. 1141:—

—— "Mortifer aetus—Incubuit tandem populum Pandonis omnem."
In what follows 'prius' belongs to 'semoti,' and 'tarda necessitas leti' are one subject.

It might be translated thus, 'the power, once slow, of death remote before hastened its step.' So that 'prius' also affects 'tarda' διὰ κοινῶν, as the grammarians say.

36. Herceules labor.] So Odys. xi. 600, βίην Ἠρακλεῖον for Hercules. "Catonis virtus" (O. iii. 21. 11): 'virtus Scipiaeqae et mitis sapientia Lael' (S. ii. 1. 72), may be taken in the same way.

CARMEN IV.

Lucius Sestius served with Horace under Brutus, and they were no doubt on terms of intimacy (see Dict. Biog. Sestius 6). But this ode has probably as little to do with L. Sestius as with any of Horace's other friends. The poet borrowed his name to give point to an ode written at the beginning of spring and moralizing on the uncertainty of life and the duty of enjoying it. The same remark, with a change in the names, will apply to C. iv. 7. Traces of imitation from the Greek are observed by some commentators, and some Sicilian poem containing references to Mount Aetna is fixed upon as the source of this ode. Also it has been conjectured, that it may have been written at Baiae or Velia in sight of the Liparæan volcanic islands, which may or may not have been the case. We do not want both explanations it is plain; perhaps neither. Beyond the word 'urit,' which seems to be a translation of φλιγη, I am not aware that there are as many traces of the Greek as might be found in most of Horace's odes.

The time must be quite the commencement of the spring. The whole description, in which the present tense is used throughout, indicates the beginning of those things that are described; and though Ovid, referring to the month of April (Fast. iv. 129), speaks of the launching of the ships,—

"Vere monet curvas maternæ per aequora puppes Icre, nec hyberonas jam timuisse nives,"—

Horace's words clearly refer to an earlier month. Rutgersius contends very strongly that April is the month to which the descriptions of this ode belong, especially vv. 11, 12, which, he says, refer to the Palilia, the festival of Rome's birthday, which was the 21st April. But that is much too late. See note on v. 11. Rutgersius contradicts himself by saying that the allusion in v. 9 refers to the practice of Roman matrons bathing with their heads crowned with myrtle, which took place on the calends of April. Ov. Fast. iv. 130. Plut. Num, c. 19: τὸν Ἀπρίλλιον ἐπέφυγεν ὡντα τῆς Ἀφροδίτες ἐν ψήφωναί τε
The winter is thawing; the spring is returning; the ships are being launched; the herds quit their stalls and the ploughman his fireside, and the meadows are no longer white with frost. Venus and the Graces are leading the dance, and the Cyclops' forge is burning. Let us bind the head with myrtle or the earth's first flowers, and sacrifice a lamb or kid to Pan. Death calls on rich and poor alike. Life is short, O Sestius! and our hopes we must contract. The grave awaits thee, and when there no more shalt thou preside at feast or sigh for the fair young Lycidas.

Solvitur acris hiemi grata vice veris et Favoni, Trahuntque siccas machinae carinas,
Ac neque jam stabulis gaudet pecus aut arator igni;
Nee prata canis albicant prunis.
Jam Cytherea choros ducit Venus imminente Luna, Junctaeque Nymphis Gratiae decentes
Alterno terram quantiunt pede, dum graves Cyclopum.
Voleanus ardens urit officinas.

2. Machinae] The machines here mentioned are called by Caesar (B. C. ii. 10) 'phalangae.' Vessels were drawn up on shore from the Ides of November to the Ides of March, during which time 'Defendens pisces hiemat mare' (S. ii. 2. 17).
3. neque—aut—nec] The two first of these form one branch of the sentence and the last the other. 'Neque (pecus aut arator) gaudet nec prata albicant.' See O. ii. 3, at the beginning.
5. Jam Cytherea choros ducit Venus] Tibull. ii. 3, 3: 'Ipsa Venus laetos jam nunc migravit in agros.' 'Imminente Luna' is no more than with the moon overhead. But Heinsius renders it 'at the new moon:' 'ισταμύνη σελήνη.' 'Cytherea Venus' is άπαξ λεγόμενον. But it is analagous to Φοῖβος Λπόλλων. Cunning proposes 'levis' for 'Venus.'
7. graves] This epithet may have a variety of meanings, and each editor gives his own version. Perhaps Horace meant 'laborious.' The eruptions of Αέτνα, where the thunderbolts of Jove were supposed to be forged, taking place chiefly in the summer and early autumn, the Cyclops are fitly represented as preparing these bolts in spring. See Cic. de Divin. ii. 19: 'Non enim te puto esse eum qui Jovi fulmen fabricatos esse Cyclopas in Αέτνα putes.'

dum] One of the old commentators quaintly observes, that while his wife is dancing Vulcan is sweating.
8. urit] This seems to be an adaptation of φλιγήν, 'lights up,' and is an unusual sense for 'uro.' Rutgerius therefore preferred the reading 'visit,' which occurs in some MSS. of high character. He quotes Apollon. Rhod. iii. 41:

\[\text{αλλ' ο μιν (Ἡφαιστος) εἰς χαλκέων κοι ἄκμανων ἤρι Βιθήκε}
\text{νήσῳ πλαγκτής εὐδυν μυχών, ἦ ἐν πάντα}
\text{δαίαλα χαλκέων ριπὺ πυρὸς ἤ ὲ (Ἀφοδίτη) ἁρα μαυὴn}
\text{ὕπτανε ἐορμ ἐνωτόν ἀναθρόνων ἀντά θυράων,}
\]

where there is certainly a resemblance to this passage of Horace, but not strong enough to make it probable he had it in his memory when he wrote this ode. By a rather remarkable coincidence Bentley appears to have hit upon these lines of Apollonius, and to have made them a part of his argument for 'visit,' without knowing that Rutgersius, with whose notes he was familiar, had done the same before him. Scaliger proposed 'urget,' which is farther from the true reading than 'visit,' between which and 'urit' the preponderance of evidence Nunc decret aut viridi nitidum caput impedire myrto
Aut flore terrae quem serunt solutae.
Nunc et in umbrosis Fauno decet immolare lucis,
Seu poscat agnam sive malit haedum.
Pallida Mors aqueo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas Regumque turres. O beate Sesti,
Vitae summa brevis spem nos vetat inchoare longam.
Jam te premet nox fabulaeque Manes and probability is greatly in favour of the latter. Why should the copyists have changed 'visit' into 'urit?' The reverse would be intelligible. That it is said of Venus (O. iii. 28. 15), "Paphon junctis visit oloribus," is no argument at all. Ovid (Fast. iv. 473) has "Antraque Cyclopum, positis exusta caminis," which was possibly imitated from this.

9. nitidum] i.e. with oil. There is no necessity to suppose, with Rutgersius, that this refers to the practice of matrons bathing with myrtle crowns on the 1st of April. See Introduction.

11. Fauno decet immolare] The Faunalia took place on the Ides of December. But a lesser festival was observed on the Ides of February, at the advent of Faunus (Pan, the two being, as is well known, identified by the later Romans. See Dict. Myth.) See O. iii. 18. Ovid, Fast. ii. 193: "Idibus agestis fumant altaria Fauni." At that time the flocks and herds went out to graze, and the god was invoked for their protection. 'Immolare' admits of two constructions: with an ablative, as (Livy xli. 14) "immolantibus Jovi singulibus bubus," and with an accusative, as (Verg. Aen. x. 619) "inferas quas immolet umbris." Horace himself has the latter construction elsewhere (S. ii. 3. 164): "Immoleo aequis hic porcum Laribus." So Virgil (Ecl. iii. 77), "facias vitula." Servius quotes this passage as having the ablative case of the victim. But it appears (according to Orelli, who however has 'agnam' and 'haedo') that in the tables of the Fratres Arvalves the accusative is used with 'immolare,' and the ablative with 'facere,' and the reason is obvious; the latter is an elliptical expression in which 'sacrum' is understood, as Fea remarks. The MSS. vary. If the accusative be the true reading, as I believe it is, the ablative may have got into the MSS. without any remarkable oversight; 'agnam' would be written 'agnā,' and 'haedum' (for 'haedum') would be written 'haedo.' These marks were frequently omitted through haste or carelessness, and I am inclined to think such was the case in this instance.

Ven. has 'agnam' and 'aedes,' where it seems probable the MSS. followed by Landinus had the mark 'ā' in the first word but omitted it in the second, and that the editor added the 's' to 'haedo;' or that this had been done by the copyist of the MS. he followed. Most of the modern editors have adopted the reading with the ablative.

Lambinus has the accusative, which is approved by Rutgersius.

13. pulsat] Ovid, Heroïd. xxi. 46, "Per sephone nostras pulsat acerba forens." 14. Regre] This word is commonly applied to the rich by Horace, and by Terence too, as Phormio (ii. 2. 20): "Oh! regem me esse opportunit." Sestius was a favourite of Fortune, as a reference to his life will show. "Beatus dictur qui multa habens sine malo aliquo degit" is Cicero's definition.

16. premet] From this word which belongs more properly to 'nox,' we must understand appropriate words for 'Manes' and 'domus.' Orelli supplies 'circumvolvitabunt' and 'teget.'

fabulaeque Manes.] This is explained by Juv. S. ii. 149:

"Esses aliquid (or aliquos) Manes Nee pueri credunt nisi qui nondum aere lavantur."

Horace may have had in mind the following epigram of Callimachus:

\[
\omega \chiαριδα, \tauι \tauα \tauερθε; \ \piολυ \σεκοτος\ \alphaι \delta' \\alphaνυδοι τι; \\
\\phiευδος\ \delta\ \epsilonι \ Πλαυτων, \ \muδος\ \\alphaπωλομεθα.
\]

Persius has imitated Horace, S. v. 152: "cinis et Manes et fabula fies." 'Fabulæ' therefore signifies 'unreal.' Propert. on the contrary says (iv. 7. 1), "Sunt aliquid Manes; letum non omnia finit."—'Exilis' is variously interpreted, either as 'bare,' as it is in Epp. i. 6. 45: "Exilis domus est qua non et multa supersunt," or 'shadowy,' or 'narrow,' meaning the grave, which is called 'Leti domus,' 'Ditis aeterna domus' in an ancient epitaph given at length by Rutgersius in his Lect. Venus. He under-
Et domus exilis Plutonia: quo simul mearis,
Nec regna vini sortiere talis
Nec tenerum Lycidan mirabere, quo calet juventus Nunc omnis et mox virgines tepebunt.

stands it in the last sense, and so does Crucius; Bentley and others in the first; Orelli in either of the two first. I prefer the first. Heinsius reads 'Exilii,' which is an invention of his own. For other instances of 'simul' for 'simul ac' see Index.—'Mirabere,' as expressing affection savour of the Greek θαυμάζων. It occurs again Epod. iii. 10.

18. talis] 'Such wine as this!' is the interpretation which marvellously pleasing (mirifice placet) Baxter and Gesner. No man, say they, can have a true taste for wine or poetry, who does not adopt it. Its juxtaposition with 'sortiere' should have corrected such an error.

CARMEN V.

Of this ode Scaliger pronounces that it is "pure nectar." Its beauty all admit. That it expresses any but a poetical jealousy on the part of Horace I do not believe. That Pyrrha was a freedwoman of exquisite beauty but loose character, and one of Horace's early loves, is all imagination, and we have no clue to the origin of the poem, which expresses a lover's jealousy under the pretence of being glad of escape from the toils of an inconstant mistress. Milton's translation of the ode is well known.

ARGUMENT.

What pretty boy art thou toying with now, Pyrrha? He thinks, poor credulous youth, it will always be thus with thee, and will timidly wonder when the tempest ariseth. I pity those who have no experience of thee; for my part I have escaped out of the storm as the walls of the Sea-god show, whereon my dripping garments and the picture of my wreck are hung.

Quis multa gracilis te puer in rosa Perfusus liquidis urget odoribus
Grato, Pyrrha, sub antro?
Cui flavam religas comam
Simplex munditiis? Heu quoties fidem Mutatosque deos flebit et aspera
Nigris aequora ventis
Emirabitur insolens

1. multa — in rosa] "Et caput in verna semper habere rosa," Prop. iii. 5. 22.
It is equivalent to στεφάνοις πυκνασθις,
Eur. Alc. 796, which is expressed like this of Horace by the same author (Herc. Fur.
676), μη ζηφυρι μετ' ἄμουσιας, αἰτὶ θ' ἐν στεφάνοισιν ἀθν. So Cicero de Fin. ii. 20:
"potatem in rosa." Tusc. Dis. v. 26:
"An tu me in viola putabas aut in rosa dicere?"

2. liquidis — odoribus] Pliny thus draws the distinction between 'siccì' and 'liquidi odores.' "Siccis odoribus constant qui dissipassata vocantur. Sunt vero odores sici medicamenta in pulverem trita: liquidi
e contra uguentum diffuentia" (N. H. xiii. 2).

5. Simplex munditiis?] 'Munditia, in the singular and plural, signifies elegance of dress without pretension. Ovid, A. A. iii.
133: "munditiis capimur, ne sint sine lego capilli."

8. Emirabitur] This word is not found
CARMINUM I. 6.

Qui nunc te fruitur credulus aurea;
Qui semper vacuum, semper amabilem
Sperat nescius aurea
Fallacis. Miseri quibus
Intentata nites! Me tabula sacer
Votiva paries indicat uvida Suspendisse potenti Vestimenta maris deo.

in other good authors. It is a stronger form of 'miror,' which is a common effect of 'e' and 'de' in composition, as among many other instances, 'decertantem' in the third ode. 'Demiror' is a word used by Cicero and others, and adopted here by some editors; but there is nothing to object to in 'emirabitur,' which is the reading of all the MSS. Bentley conjectures 'ut mirabitur;' but he does not insert it in the text, nor does any one else.—'Insolens' is either used absolutely or with a genitive (see Forcell.).

9. aurea:] 'All gold' is Milton's translation, and none other that I know of will do. The reader's own tact must fill up the idea, which is a complex one. It is not merely "illa mei oculis aurea semper erit," as Ovid says, nor only "auro contra cara est," as Plautus. It implies perfection, just as 'aurea mediocritas' signifies that perfect state which transgresses neither to the right nor to the left.

10. vacuum:] "Elige de vacuis quam non sibi vindict alter," Ov. Herod. xx. 149. See also C. i. 6. 19: "Cantamus vaccis sive quid urimur."—'Amabilem' Gesner understands actively. It may be either, or both. See C. i. 3. 22.

12. tabula] This practice of persons escaped from shipwreck hanging up in the temple of Neptune or other sea-god a picture representing their wreck and the clothes they escaped in, is mentioned twice again by Horace, S. ii. 1. 33; A. P. 20. Also among many others by Virgil, Aen. xii. 768:

"Servati ex undis ubi figere dona solebant Laurenti divo, et votas suspendere vestes."

The temples of Isis in particular were thus adorned, after the introduction of her worship into Rome, which was not till quite the latter years of the Republic. She was worshipped in Greece as Ἡλεϕρανια, and the Romans placed themselves under her protection at sea. Tibullus says to her (i. 3. 27):—

"Nunc, dea, nunc succurre mihi; nam posse mederi
Picta docet templis multa tabella tuis."

And Juvenal asks (S. xii. 28): "'Picture quis nescit ab Iside pasci?"

15. potenti—maris] Milton translates "the stern god of sea," not observing that 'potens' governs 'maris' as 'potens Cypri,' C. i. 3. 1.

CARMEN VI.

A.U.C. 725 (?).

Notwithstanding Agrippa's close connexion with Augustus, it is very probable that between that stern man and Horace there was but little sympathy or intercourse, and without personal affection his muse did not rise to its highest flights in the way of personal eulogy. And during the time that he was writing the odes which compose the three first books, judging by their character we may believe that he really felt unequal or indisposed for singing the praises of a military hero, and that he considered such subjects unsuited to him. Twice he checks himself when he gets upon heroic themes (C. ii. i. 37; iii. 3. 69), but not till he has shown how competent he was, had he pleased, to have handled them, as he showed when he resumed this style of composition in later years, and wrote that noble ode in praise of Drusus (iv. 4).
It has been conjectured with probability that this ode was written soon after the battle of Actium, when Agrippa's glory was at its height. It would seem that the general had asked Horace to write an ode in his honour; but he had the good sense to decline a task which he might not have executed satisfactorily to the great man or himself: at the same time he declined in the most graceful way by intimating that Agrippa deserved an Epic rather than an ode, and the pen of Varus rather than of Horace.

ARGUMENT.

Varus shall sing in Homeric strain of thy victories by sea and land. My humble muse dares not sing of these, of the wrath of Achilles, or the wanderings of Ulysses, or the fate of Pelops' house, nor will she disparage thy glories and Caesar's. Who can fitly sing of Mars mail-clad, of Meriones black with the dust of Troy, of Diomed a match for gods? I sing but of feasts and of the battles of boys and girls.

Scriberis Vario fortis et hostium Victor Maeonii carminis alite, Quam rem cineque ferox navibus aut equis Miles te duce gesserit: Nos, Agrippa, neque haec dicere nec gravem 5 Pelidae stomachum cedere nescei Nec cursus duplicis per mare Ulixei Nec saevam Pelopis domum

2. carminis alite,] 'Alite' is in apposition with Vario. Because in prose the ablative of the agent without a preposition is not admissible, 'alite,' which is the reading of all the MSS., has been altered to 'aliti.' But Horace has the same construction Bpp. i. 1. 94: "Curatur inaequali tonsore." S. ii. 1. 94: "Laudatus Caesare." C. iii. 5. 24: "Martae populare nostro." Orelli's note about the ablative absolute would not explain one in ten of the instances in which this poetical construction occurs. It is most frequently found in Ovid. The Scholiasts Acron and Comm. Cruq. finding 'alite,' and not connecting it with 'Vario,' rendered it as if it were 'under the auspices of Homeric verse,' and they have found some followers; but it is unnecessary to reply to them.

3. Quam rem cineque. The construction is by attraction. The full expression would be 'scriberis et scribatur omnis res quam cineque.' Muretus' reading is 'qua rem cineque' for 'wherever,' which Bentley adopts in his text with a great deal of his own sort of argument, which brings no conviction to plain minds. The MSS. do not vary. Bentley calls to his assistance, as 'vir eruditus,' one whose cumbrous pedantry he would have been the first to discover, had he not found occasion to agree with him, Walter Chabot, whose ponderous commentary I have attempted to make use of in vain. Agrippa's great successes up to this time had been in the Persian war (in which he had the principal command under Augustus) in Gaul and Germany, by land; and against Sex. Pompey and at Actium, by sea.—"Te duce" is used advisedly, as the "auspicium" belonged only to Augustus.

5. neque haec—nec gravem] This is as if he had said: 'I should not think of singing of these victories any more than I should of the wrath of Achilles.' Compare C. iii. 5. 27—30:

"— neque amisso desolos
Lana refert medicata fuco,
Nec vera virtus cum semel excitat
Curat reponi deterioribus."

'As the stained wool does not recover its lost colour, so true virtue once lost will not be replaced by the baser sort.' 'Gravem stomachum' is plainly a translation of μῆνιν ὀδηγήμαν, and 'cedere nesciis' is explained by 'inecorabili,' A. P. 121. This construction with 'nesciss' is not uncommon. Aen. xii. 527: "Rumpuntur nescia Vinci pectora." Ovid, Ep. ex Pont. ii. 9. 45: "Marte ferox et Vinci nescius armis."

7. duplicis οὐκοῦς. This quality of Ulysses is vehemently described by Hecuba Conamur tenues grandia, dum pudor
Imbellisque lyrae Musa potens vetat
Laudes egregii Caesaris et tuas Culpa deterere ingeni.
Quis Martem tunica tectum adamantina
Digne seripserit aut pulvere Troico
Nigrum Merionen aut ope Palladis Tydiden superis parem?
Nos convivia, nos proelia virginum
Sectis in juvenes uugibus acrium
Cantamus vacui, sive quid urimur
Non praeter solitum leves.

in Euripides’ play of the Trojan Women
(v. 285) :—

δὲ πάντα τάξιθεν ἐνθάδ’
ἀντίπαλ’ αὖθις μείσο διπτέχυχ γλώσσα φίλα τ’α πρότερ’ ἀφίλα τιθέμενος πάντων.

The straightforward Hector says of himself (Rhesus, 304) :—

φιλῶ λέγειν
τάληθεν δει εσθ’ εικλούς πέψει αὐὴρ.

Several MSS. have ‘duplices,’ which those editors who adopt it explain of the voyage to and from Troy; but they do not explain what there was in the first to make the subject of a poem. ‘Duplices’ is plainly a mistake, though it appears in the oldest Blandinian MS., and is so quoted by Priscian. ap. Bentley, who proposes ‘re-ducis.’

8. saevam Pelopis domum] Alluding to Varius’ tragedy Thyestes, of which Quintilian (x. 1. 96) says, “Varii Thyestes cullitbat Graecorum comparari potest.” It is probable however the comparison would not have been fatal to the Grecian muse.
A conspective view of the atrocities of this unfortunate house, as they are so often referred to, may not be out of place here, or without its moral. Its founder, Tantalus, served up his own son Pelops at a feast of the gods. Pelops restored to life murdered Oenomaus his father-in-law and his own son Chrysippus (Thucyd. i. 9).

Atreus, the son of Pelops, murdered and placed before their father as a meal the children of Thyestes his brother, who had previously seduced the wife of Atreus.
Atreus was killed by Aegisthus his nephew and supposed son, who also seduced the wife of his cousin, Agamemnon (the son of Atreus), who was murdered by the said wife Clytemnestra, and she by her son Orestes, who was pursued to madness by the Erinyes of his mother: all which events furnished themes for the Greek tragedians, and were by them varied in their features as suited their purpose, or according to the different legends they followed.

11. laudes] If, as the Scholiasts (on Epp.
i. 16. 27) affirm, Varius wrote a panegyric on Augustus (Porphyryion calls it ‘notissimum panegyricum’), it is possible Horace means indirectly to refer to it here.

13. Sectis] Bentley having proposed with much confidence ‘strictis,’ and adopted it in his text, afterwards gave way to the general opinion of scholars and withdrew his emendation. See Museum Criticum, 1814. i. p. 194. ‘Strictis’ has a barbarous air about it. In ‘sectis’ there is an agreeable irony.

19. sive quid urimur] For ‘quid’ Lam-binus has ‘quod’ on the authority of many of his MSS. ‘quod’ signifying ‘because.’
‘Quid’ is more elegant. The construction has been noticed before (3. 15).
CARMEN VII.

Munatius Plancus, who followed Julius Caesar both in Gaul and in his war with Pompey, after Caesar’s death attached himself to the republican party, but very soon afterwards joined Augustus; then followed Antony to the east, and A.D.C. 722, the year before Actium, joined Augustus again. It is supposed that about this time, perhaps at the suggestion of Augustus, who was anxious to secure Plancus and to keep him from leaving Italy, Horace wrote him this ode while his mind was perplexed and he was perhaps meditating retirement from Rome to Greece.

I think all this is very doubtful, and with Estré (p. 308) I cannot but think it uncertain whether this Plancus is intended at all. It may have been his son, who is probably the Munatius referred to in Epp. i. 3. 31, or some other Plancus. But even if the father be the man, I cannot see any such serious purpose in the ode as the above theory implies, nor do I believe Augustus attached any such value to the renegade’s assistance. He appears to have been a contemptible person. That the temple of Janus was not closed at the time is true (v. 20); but that does not fix the date before the battle of Actium. I think the name of Plancus is again used more as a convenience than any thing else, though there is perhaps a little more individuality given to this ode than the fourth. The story of Teucer has all the appearance of a Greek origin.

Munatius Plancus, above referred to, was consul in A.D.C. 712. See C. iii. 14. 27, "Non ego hoc ferrem, calidus juventa, Consule Plancio."

ARGUMENT.

Let others sing of the noble cities of Greece, and dedicate their lives to the celebration of Athens and all its glories. For my part I care not for Lacedaemon and Larissa, as for Albunea’s cave, the banks of Anio, and the woods and orchards of Tiber. The sky is not always dark, Plancus—drown care in wine, whether in the camp or in the shades of Tiber. As Teucer, though driven from his father’s home, bound poplar on his head and cheered his companions, saying, “Let us follow fortune, my friends, kinder than a father: despair not while Teucer is your chief; Apollo has promised us another Salamis: drown care in wine, for to-morrow we will seek the deep once more.”

Laudabunt alii claram Rhodon aut Mytilenae
Aut Ephesos bimarisve Corinthi
Moenia vel Baceho Thebas vel Apolline Delphos Insignes aut Thessala Tempe.
Sunt quibus unum opus est intactae Palladis urbem .

1. Laudabunt[. This future is like ‘ scriberis’ in the last ode (v. 1), ‘ others shall if they please.’ ‘ Claram’ perhaps the Schol. Acron is correct in rendering ‘bright’ with reference to its cloudless skies, like those of Syracuse, where Cicero says one might on some part of every day get a sight of the sun (Verr. v. 10). ‘ Mytilene’ is written ‘Mitylenae’ or ‘Mytilene’ in the MSS. of Cicero, who thus describes it (de Log. Agr. ii. 16), “Quid Mytileneae? urbs et natura et situ et descriptione aedificorum et pulchritudine inprimis nobilis: agri jacundae et fertiles.” The coins have very regularly ΜΥΤΙΑ. I am not aware of any others but Horace and Ovid, who imitated many of his expressions, using the word ‘bimaris,’ which is equivalent to ἀμφιδικασσων as Xenophon calls Athens (Vect. i. 7).

5. Sunt quibus] ‘There are those who Carmine perpetuo celebrare et Undique decrptam fronti praeponere olivam.
Plurimus in Junonis honorem
Auptum dict equis Argos ditesque Mycenas.
Me nec tam patiens Lacedaemon
Nec tam Larissae percussit campus opimae, Quam domus Albuneae resonantis make it the single business of their lives to tell of chaste Minerva's city in unbroken song, and to gather from every olive to eatwine their brow.' A 'perpetuum carmen' is a continuous poem such as an Epic; and 'a branch from every olive,' or more literally 'an olive-branch from every quarter,' can only mean that the various themes connected with the glory of Athens are as olive-trees, from each of which a branch is plucked to bind the poet's brow.

The figure is appropriate to the locality (see Herod. v. 82. Soph. Oed. Col. 694, sqq.). We do not know of any poem or poems to which Horace may have alluded, but Athens furnished subjects for the inferior poets of the day. On the conjecture of Erasmus, Lambinus and many of the earlier editors, including Dacier, preferred reading 'undique deceptae frondi praeponere olivam' 'to prefer the olive to boughs gathered from all other trees.' But as Bentley shows, there is no necessity for altering the reading of all the MSS. which is that of the text. 'Indeque' (omitting 'et') would not be a bad emendation if emendation were wanted. It is adopted by Mitsch.
It is perhaps a little prosaic. 'Arces' is the reading of some MSS. for 'urbem,' and Bentley adopts it on the usual ground, that it is the less likely word of the two to have been coined, but the great majority of MSS.
and all the best have 'urbem.'
8. Plurimus' for 'plurimi' standing alone occurs no where else; with a substantive it is not uncommon as 'Oleaster plurimus,' Georg. ii. 182. 'Plurimus seger,' Juv. iii. 292. 'In honorem,' for the ablative, is an unusual construction. But Propertius (iv. 6. 13) says, "Caesaria in nomen ducuntur carminis," which is an analogous case. See Hom. II. iv. 51:

η τοι ἢ ἢ μέν τις μὲν πολύ φιλάται εἰς τολίκης;
"Αργος τε Σπαρτή τε καὶ θυράνινα Μυκήνην;

'Dites Mycenae' is later: Μυκήνας τὰς πολυχρύσους (Soph. Elect. 9). 'Opimae Larissae' is Homeric; Λάρισσα ἵππωλαξ (II. ii. 841). 'Patiens' is the Spartan's historical character, but also that of Horace's age, and he may have been at Lacedae-mon and Larissa too in his campaigning.
Cicero (Tusc. v. 27) says, "Pueri Spartiiatae non ingemiscunt verberum dolore laniati. Adolesciendum grexeg Lacedaemon vidimus ipse, incredibili contentione certantes puginis, calcibus, unguibus, morsus deniique, ut examinantur prius quam se victos faterentur." 'Percussit' is generally used with the ablative of the instrument or cause. Standing alone in, this way and in the aoristic perfect it savours very much of ἵππωλαξ, and the ode has traces of the Greek in nearly every part.
12. Albuneae resonantis] One of the Sibyls worshipped at Tibur gave her name to a grove and fountain. See Virg. (Aen.
vii. 81. sqq.):

"At rex—oracula Fannu
Fatidici genitoria adit, lucosque sub alta Consulti Albunea: nemorum quaen maxima sacro Fonte sonat, saevamque exhalat opaca mephitim."

13. Tiburni lucus] Tiburnus (or -tus) Catillus and Coras were the mythical founders of Tibur. Aen. vii. 671:

"Fratri Tiburti dictam cognomine gentem Catilusque acerque Coras, Argiva juventus."
The brothers had a 'cultus' there and a grove. Tiburnus was the tutelar deity of Tibur, as Tiberinus was of the river Tiber, Aniensus of the Anio, &c. They are in fact adjectives. Tibur was famous for its orchards. See Prop. iv. 7. 81: "Pomosis Anio qua spumifer incubat arvis;" and Ovid, Am. iii. 6. 46: "Tiburis Argei pomifera arva rigas" (if Bentley's correction be right, as it may be, reading 'pomifera' for 'spumifer').
14. As early as the Schol. Porphyron there were those who divided the ode at Et praeceps Anio ac Tiburni lucus et uda Mobilibus pomaria rivis.
Albus ut obscure deterget nubila caelo Saepe Notus neque parturit imbrses
Perpetuo, sic tu sapiens finire memento
Tristitiam vitaeaque labores
Molli, Plance, mero, seu te fulgentia signis
Castra tenent seu densa tenebit
Tiburis umbra tui. Teucer Salamina patremque Cum fugeret tamen uda Lyaeo
Tempora populea fertur vinxisse corona,
Sic tristes affatus amicos:
Quo nos cunque feret melior fortuna parente
Ibimus, o socii comitesque.
Nil desperandum Teucro duce et auspice Teucro;
Certus enim promisit Apollo
Ambiguam tellure nova Salamina futuram.
O fortus pejoraque passi
Mecum saepe viri, nunc vino pellite curas;
Cras ingens iterabimus aequor.

this place into two; and in some MSS. this division is found and a fresh inscription for the latter half. "Hanc Oden quidam putant aliam esse, sed eadem est." Porph.
15. Albus Notus] This is the λευκόνοtος of the Greeks. We have also 'candidi Favonii' (C. iii. 7. 1) and 'albus Iapx'
(C. iii. 27. 19). In the latter place it represents a treacherous wind. Horace prefers the older forms in 'eo,' as 'deterget,' 'ter-gere' (S. ii. 2. 24), 'densentur' (C. i. 28.
19).
19. fulgentia signis] The standards in front of the praetorium were decorated with plates of burnished gold or silver. Torren-tius infers from this allusion that Piancus was consul at this time; but it will not bear such an inference. Bothe thinks that 'molli' is the imperative mood of 'mollio.'
It is an adjective.
In 'tenebit' the commentators find support for their opinion that this ode was written to induce Piancus to settle quietly;
as if the future implied 'whether you mean (as I hope you do) to take possession of your villa at Tibur.' 21. Teucer] Where Horace got this story from we do not know. 'Cum fugeret tamen' is an imitation of the Greek και φιεμών ὅμως. But this use of 'tamen' is not uncommon in Cicero, as "Quod quum ita sit nihil fingam tamen' (Verr. Act. ii.
l. 2. c. 73, where Mr. Long has given other instances). Teucer selected Hercules as his protector, and so wore a crown of his poplar.
27. duce et auspice] Horace puts technical distinctions into Teucer's lips of which he could know nothing; nevertheless there is no necessity for Bentley's alteration,
'auspice Phoebus.' 'Certus' is equivalent to σαφῆς in ei Ζέες ἔτοι Ζής χρῶ Δλός Φοίβος σαφῆς (Oed. Col. 629).
29. Ambiguam] Of doubtful name, i. e. liable to be confounded with the old Salamis.
CARMINUM I. 8.

CARMEN VIII.

The principle of identification has led to strange confusion and inventions respecting the name assumed in this ode. I find from Estré that one scholar has affirmed, that by Lydia Horace meant Julia and by Sybaris Marcellus. The reader has only to compare the odes in which this name occurs and he will form his own opinion. Here there is no sign of jealousy, but anxiety for the reputation of Sybaris; in C. i. 13 there is violent jealousy of Telephus; in iii. 9 there is a lover's coquettimg and reconciliation; while in i. 25 Lydia is a worn-out prostitute looking for lovers who will not come. If we had more of Anacreon's poetry to guide us, we should probably see such traces of the origin of all these odes as would put the matter in its right light. The name of Sybaris is obviously intended to represent the character into which the youth has fallen.

ARGUMENT.

Lydia, why art thou spoiling Sybaris thus, so that he shuns all manly exercises? He who was once so active, why does he no longer ride, and swim, and wrestle, and throw the quoit and javelin in the Campus Martius? Why does he hide himself with thee, like Achilles, in woman's apparel?

LYDIA, dic, per omnes
Te deos oro, Sybarin cur properas amando
Perdere; cur apricum
Oderit campum patiens pulveris atque solis?
Cur neque militaris
Inter aequales equitat, Gallica nec lupatis
Temperat ora frenis?
Cur timet flavum Tiberim tangere?
Cur olivum Sanguine viperino
Cautius vitat, neque jam livida gestat armis
Brachia saepe disco,
Saepe trans finem jaculo nobilis expedito?
Quid latet, ut marinae
Filium dicunt Thetidis sub lacrimosa Troiae
Funera ne virilis
Cultus in caedem et Lycias proriperet catervas?

2. properas] The reading of the MSS. is 'properes;' but the Scholiasts had 'properas,' and Bentley has said, I think truly, that the other reading probably arose out of 'oderit.' But that word has an indicative sense, and I think the direct form is better throughout. The modern editors, including Bentley, nearly all have 'properes,' and some good MSS. have 'equitet,' 'temperet,' which are adopted by Lambinus, Cruquius, and others. They were stopped by 'timet,' or they would probably have changed 'vitat' and 'gestat' into the subjunctive.
CARmEN IX.

This is a drinking-song for the winter imitated from an ode of Alcaeus, of which the following fragment has been preserved in Athenaeus (34 Bergk):

\[ \text{\textquotedblleft uti m\ae \; \delta \; Zet\ve, \; \iota \; \delta \; \theta\rho\alpha\iota\omega \; \mu\gamma\alpha\varsigma \chi\iota\mu\omega\nu, \; \tau\iota\nu\gamma\alpha\sigma\iota\nu \; \delta \; \theta\delta\alpha\tau\omicron\nu \; \beta\omicron\iota\iota\.\textquotedblright} \]

Though the obvious fact that this ode is a close imitation of a Greek writer, might well lead us to believe that it is a mere work of art, some of the chroniclers have found it a date each according to his own views. Dillenburger thinks it was written soon after the battle of Philippi, when Horace's friends were apt to dwell on unpleasant topics and required to have their spirits kept up. Jani supposes it was written at the country-house of one Thaliarchus, not far from Mount Soracte. Buttmann too thinks this is a proper name, (though of course fictitious,) in which I see no reason to agree with him.

ARGUMENT.

See Soracte stands out with snow, the woods are bending with their burthen, and the sharp frost hath frozen the streams. Heap logs on the fire and draw your best Sabine wine, feast-master, and leave the rest to the gods, at whose bidding the fierce winds are still and the woods have rest. Ask not what is to come; enjoy the present day: let the dance be ours while we are young, the Campus Martius, the promenade, the nightly assignation, and the coy girl that loves to be caught.

Vides ut alta stet nive candidum
Soracte, nec jam sustineant onus
Silvae laborantes geluque Flumina constiterint acuto.

Dissolve frigus ligna super foco
Large repogens, atque benignius
Deprome quadrimum Sabina,
O thaliarche, merum diota.

1. stet] This signifies a fixed and prominent appearance which perhaps is best expressed by the words I have used in the Argument. 'Stant lumina flamma' (Aen. vi. 300) might perhaps be rendered in the same way, and "Stant et juniperi et castaneae hirsutae" (Virg. Ecl. vii. 53), "Jam pulvere caelum staro vident" (Aen.xii.407), have something of the same meaning. Soracte was one of the Faliscan range of hills about 2200 feet high and 24 miles from Rome. It is now called Monte Tresco, a corruption from 'San Oreste.' There is a village of that name at the s.e. end of the range (Westphal, Die Römische Kampagne). It is seen very clearly from the northern point of the city. Apollo had a temple there: "Summe deum sancti custos Soracitis Apollo," Aen. xi. 785.

4. constiterint] See Ov. Tr. v. 10. 1: "Ut sumus in Ponto ter frigore constitit Ister." 'Acuto,' as applied to cold, corresponds to the διεισ διων of Pindar, and 'penetrabile frigus' of Virgil. But Horace also applies it to heat (Epp.i.10.17): "Cum semel accipit solem furtundus acutum."

7. Deprome quadrimum Sabina,—diota.] The first of these words may signify either taking down the jar from the 'apotheca' or Permitte divis cetera, qui simul
Stravere ventos aequore servido
Deproeliantes nec cupressi
Nec veteres agitantur orni.
Quid sit futurum cras fuge quaerere, et Quem Fors dierum cumque dabit lucro
Appone, nec dulces amores
Sperne puer neque tu choreas,
Donec virenti canities abest
Morosa. Nunc et campus et areae
Lenesque sub noctem susurri Composita repetantur hora;

drawing the wine from the 'diota' (which is the same as the 'amphora,' 'testa,' or 'cadus') into the crater or bowl in which it was mixed with water. Here it means the latter. The name of the wine is applied to the vessel containing it here, as in 'Graeca testa' (i. 20. 2); 'Laestrygonia amphora' (iii. 16. 34). Sabine wine was not among the best, nor was it of the worst sort. It was a sweet wine, and probably after four years' keeping was in its prime. Horace calls it elsewhere (C. i. 20. 1) "vile Sabinum," but that was as compared with Maecenas' more expensive sorts. Of the other Italian wines that Horace mentions the best was from the Caecubus ager in the south of Latium, at the head of the bay of Amycla; the second in rank was the Falernian, of which there were several varieties, in connexion with which he mentions an inferior sort from Surrentum (also in Campania), which was improved by mixing with Falernian dregs (S. ii. 4. 53). On a par with Falernian he seems to place the wine of the Alban hills (S. ii. 8. 16). The wine of the Massic range was apparently of delicate flavour (S. ii. 4. 54). Among the costly wines of the rich he mentions the Calenian from Cales, now Calvi, in Campania, and that of the Formian hills (C. i. 20. 9, 11). The worst wine he speaks of (S. ii. 3. 143) was from the neighbourhood of Veii, a red wine (Mart. i. 104. 9, "Veientani bibitur faex crassa rubelli"). There were other wines of different qualities grown in Italy, which Horace does not happen to mention, the best of which, and placed by Augustus above Caecuban, was the Setinian from Setia in the Volscin territory, now Sezza (Westphal says a good wine is still grown there). The Romans had also imported wines from the Aegean and Asia Minor, of which Horace mentions those from the islands of Cos, Lesbos, and Chios. Of these the first was a white wine, the second seems to have been the least powerful, the third was most highly valued. He speaks of Marcotic wine from the neighbourhood of Alexandria (C. i. 37, 16), the vine producing which Virgil mentions (Georg. ii. 91). But it does not appear that that was drunk at Rome. Further details will be found in Smith's Dict. Ant. article 'Vinum,' and the authors there referred to. Horace's classification does not agree altogether with Pliny's. But there is no article of commerce that undergoes more variations in the course of a few years than wine.

14. Fors] 'Chance,' Cic. (de Leg. ii. 11) distinguishes 'Fors' from 'Fortuna' thus: "Fortuna valet in omnes dies; Fors in quo incerti casus significatur magis." 'Fors' and 'Sors' differ as cause and effect:

"Qui fit, Maecenas, ut nemo quam sibi sortem Seu ratio dederit sen Fors objecerit,"
(S. i. 1. 1). Nevertheless the Scholiasts Acron and Porph. appear to have read 'Sors,' and several editors since. Bentley reads 'Fors.'

lucro appone,] Cic. Div. 9. 17; "de lucro prope jam quadriennium novimus," i.e. of good luck and contrary to expectation. Liv. (xi. 8) has the same expression:

"De lucro vivere me scito." 'Lucari' is said of things gained without our own effort, according to Forcellini's explanation.

17. virenti] Epod. 13. 4: "dumque virent genus." Ποιητικα τι ετι ας γινων χλω-ρων, Theoc. xvi. 70. Propert. iv. 5. 57: "Dum vernat sanguis dum rugis integer annus." The same expression is also applied to old age, and by ourselves more so than
HORATII FLACCI

Nunc et latentis proditor intimo
Gratus puellae risus ab angulo,
Pignusque dereptum lacertis
Aut digito male pertinaci.

'to youth. Tac. Agr. 29: "cruda ac viridis senectus."'

18. areae] Courts and open places about the temples and in different parts of the town, used as promenades and for games.

23. dereptum] There is the usual variation in the MSS. here, some reading 'dupertum.' See C. i. 1. 13, n.; iii. 5. 21, n.

CARMEN X.

This ode is said by the Scholiast Porphyrian to be taken from Alcaeus, and according to him is a mere translation, for he commences his commentary by calling it "Hymnus in Mercurium ab Alceo lyrico poeta." He says the story of Apollo's cows was invented by Alcaeus, and his assertion is confirmed by Pausanias (vii. 20. 2): Βουσι γὰρ χαῖρειν μάλιστα Ἀπόλλωνα Ἀλκαῖός τε ἑδήλωσεν καὶ ἥμιν τῷ εἰς Ἑρμήν, γράψας ὁ Ἐρμῆς βοῦς ψέλλοντο τοῦ Ἀπόλλωνος. The first line of a Sapphic ode of Alcaeus has been preserved, which seems to have been that which Horace imitated: Χαίρε κυλάνας ὅ μίδες, σι γάρ μοι (3 Bergk). The attributes and legends belonging to Hermes, the Greek divinity, are transferred to Mercurius the Latin, who was originally a different conception from Hermes. Compare the two in Smith's Dict. Myth., which will explain all the allusions in this ode. Ovid (Fast. v. 663. sqq.) gives much the same account of Mercurius in his happy manner. He also mentions the story of the cows. His description begins with the same apostrophe as this, 'Clare nepos Atlantis.'

ARGUMENT.

Mercury, thou who in their infancy didst tame the human race by the gifts of speech and the palaestra, of thee will I sing, thou messenger of the gods, thou master of the lyre and prince of thieves. Why, while Apollo was threatening thee for stealing his cows he turned and laughed to find his quiver was gone. By thee Priam passed through the Grecian camp (II. xxiv. 334). Thou conductest souls to their last home, thou favourite of gods above and gods below!

MERCBRI facunde nepos Atlantis,
Qui feros cultus hominum recentum
Voce formasti catus et decorae
More palaestrae,
Te canam magni Jovis et deorum
Nuntium curvaeque lyrae parentem,
Callidum quidquid placuit jocos Condere furto.
CARMINUM I. 11.

Te boves olim nisi reddidisses
Per dolum amotas puerum minacī
Voce dum terret, viduus pharetra Risit Apollo.
Quin et Atridas duce te superbos
Ilio dives Priamus relictō
Thessalosque ignes et iniqua Troiae Castra fefellīt.
Tu pias laetis animas reponis
Sedibus virgaque levam coērces
Aurea turbam, superis deorum Gratus et imis.

CARMEN XI.

The swarms of impostors from the East, that pretended to tell fortunes and cast nativities at Rome in the time of the empire, became a public nuisance, and they were expelled and laws passed against them, but without the effect of putting them down. Tacitus (Hist. i. 22) describes them as "Genus hominum infidum, sperantibus fallax, quod in civitate nostra et vetabitur semper et retinebitur." They were becoming numerous in Cicero’s time. He says (Div. i. 19), "Contemnamus etiam Babylonios et eos qui e Cau- caso caeli signa servantes numeris stellarum cursus et motus persequuntur.” As might be supposed they were most successful in engaging the attention of women (Juv. vi. 569, sqq.), and Horace here addresses himself to one of that sex, whom he calls Leuconōē, whether in compliment or otherwise may be doubted. Pindar expresses folly by λευκαί φόλινες (Pyth. iv. 109).

ARGUMENT.

Look not into the book of fate, Leuconoē, nor consult the astrologers. How much better to be satisfied, whether we have yet many winters to see or this be the last! Be wise, strain the wine, think of the shortness of life, and cut your expectations short too. Even as we speak time flies—live to-day, trust not to-morrow.

Tu ne quaeśieris, scire nefas, quem mihi, quem tibi
Finem di dederint, Leuconoē, nec Babylonios Tentarīs numerōs. Ut melius quidquid erit patī, Seu plures hīmes seu tribuit Iuppiter ultīmam,
Quae nunc oppositus debilitat pumicibus mare
Tyrρhēnēnum. Sapias, vīna liqueś, et spatio brevi Spem longam reseces. Dum loquimur fugerit invida Aetas: carpe diem quam minimum credula postero.
Marcellus married Julia, the daughter of Augustus, A.U.C. 729, and died 731. The allusion in v. 45 of this ode makes it quite certain that it was written before the death of Marcellus, and after he had attained an age in which he could give promise of sustaining the distinction of his name. The meaning of that stanza is plainly this: "The fame of the house of Marcellus, taking its birth from the great Claudius the victor of Syracuse, is growing up through successive generations like the insensible growth of a tree, and promises to come to maturity in Octavia's son." Franke thinks the ode was written before Augustus went against the Cantabrians in 729, and about the time of Marcellus' marriage, when he was only in his eighteenth year. Others place it after Augustus' return from Spain in A.U.C. 730, and the closing of the temple of Janus. I think with Franke some allusion to this event would have been made had the ode been written then. Torrentius thinks it was one of those hymns which by order of the Senate (according to Dion Cass.) were addressed to Augustus as a god, after the battle of Actium. At that time Marcellus was but in his fourteenth year, but even then Augustus was very fond of him and had great hopes of him. The poem has much of the appearance of an ode for music, but a hymn composed on the occasion Torrentius supposes could hardly have failed to allude to the successes it was intended to celebrate. I prefer Franke's opinion to the others; but there is no possibility in my judgment of fixing the date precisely. A.U.C. 729 appears to be the latest year to which it can be properly assigned, and 725 the earliest.

The opening is taken from the second Olympic ode of Pindar, which begins—

\[\text{αναξιφόρμηγες ήμοι, τίνα θεών, τίν' ἡρωα, τίνα ὀ ἀνδρα κτλαθήσομεν;}\]

But the rest of the ode seems to be original. Pindar asks whom he shall sing, and immediately sings of Theron. Horace, though he make Augustus the climax of his song, goes through the praises of Jove and his children, and then of twelve of Rome's principal worthies before he comes to Augustus. The common inscriptions therefore "AD AUGUSTUM" or "DE AUGUSTO," do not seem to express the scope of this ode, which is rather to celebrate the popular divinities and heroes of Rome than Augustus exclusively; though this design is so worked out as to draw the chief attention to him.

ARGUMENT.

Whom wilt thou sing among gods or men, Clio? Whose name shall the echoes of Helicon or Pindus repeat, or of Haemus whose woods followed the sweet music of Orpheus? Whom before the almighty Father, who knows no equal or second? After him cometh Pallas and then brave Liber, and the huntress Diana, and Phoebus the archer, and Hercules and Leda's sons, the horseman and the fighter, before whose star the tempests fly. Then shall it be Romulus, or the peaceful Numa, or proud Tarquin, or Cato that nobly died? Regulus, and the Scouris, and Paulus, who gave up his great soul to the Carthaginian gratefully I will sing, and Fabricius, and Curius, and Camillus, all trained for war in poverty's school. The fame of Marcellus is growing up insensibly like a tree, and the star of Julius is brighter than all stars. To thee, great Father, is given the care of Caesar; share with him thy kingdom. Putting Parthians to flight and subduing the nations of the East, he shall rule the world as thy vicegerent with a righteous sway, while thou dost shake Olympus and hurl thy bolts upon the haunts of impiety.
CARMINUM I. 12.

QUEM virum aut heroa lyra vel acri
Tibia sumis celebrare, Clio,
Quem deum? Cujus recint jocos
Nomen imago
Aut in umbrosis Heliconis oris
Aut super Pindo, gelidove in Haemo
Unde vocalem temere inseuta
Orphea silvae
Arte materna rapidos morantem
Fluminum lapsus celeresque ventos,
Blandum et auritas fidibus canoris Ducere quercus?
Quid prius dicam solitis parentis
Laudibus, qui res hominum ac deorum,
Qui mare ac terras variisque mundum
Temperat horis?
Unde nil majus generatur ipso,
Nee viget quidquam simile aut secundum:
Proximos illi tamen occupavit Pallas honores.
Proelii audax neque te silebo
Liber et saevis inimica Virgo

2. sumis celebrare.] See C. i. 1. 8, n. Horace invokes the Muses without much discrimination; but Clio is not improperly invoked here as the muse of history, to which the names of the worthies recounted belong. Calliope the Epic muse is invoked C. iii. 4. 2; Melpomene the tragic is asked for a dirge i. 24. 3; Euterpe and Polymnia the proper lyric muses occur i. 1. 33. ‘Imago’ is used absolutely for the echo (for which the Romans had no corresponding term) by Cicero, Tusc. iii. 2: “ea (laus honorum) virtuti resonat tanquam imago.” Virgil gives the full expression Georg. iv. 50: “Vocisque ofensa resultat imago.” See C. i. 20. 8.

15. variisque mundum] ‘Mundum’ here signifies the sky as in Georg. i. 240:—

“Mundus ut ad Scythiam Rhipaeasque arduus arces
Consurgit, premitur Libyae devexus in Austros.”

And Lucret. v. 1436:—

“At vigiles mundi magnum versatili tem plum
Sol et luna suo lustrantes lumine circum.”

17. unde nil majus] ‘Unde’ occurs several times in Horace as referring to persons (see Index). See also among others Cicero de Senect. 4. 12: “fore unde disserem neminem.” Terent. Eun. i. 2. 35: “E praedonibus unde emerat se audisse dicebat.”

19. Proximos] This signifying the next in order without reference to distance does not contradict what goes before. ‘Secundum’ means close proximity. This will appear more plainly from Cicero (Brutus, 47): “Duobus igitur summis C. Crasso et Anton. L. Philippus proxime accedebat, sed longo intervallo tamen proximus. Itaque eum eti nos antecedebat qui se illi anteferret neque secundum tamen neque tertium dixerim. Me enim in quadrigis eum secundum numeraverim, aut tertium, qui vix e carceribus exierit cum palmam jam primus acceptat; nec in oratoribus, qui tantum absit a primo vix ut in eodem curriculo esse videat.” Pallas is said to hold the next place to Jupiter, not absolutely but among those qui generantur ipso, and only these are mentioned.
Belinis nec te, metuende certa
Phoebe sagitta.

Diam et Alciden puerosque Lēdae,
Hunc equis, illum superare pugnis
Nobilem; quorum simul alba nautis
Stella refulsit
Defuit saxis agitatus humor,
Concidunt venti fugiuntque nubes,
Et minax, quod sic volueré, ponto
Unda recumbit.

Romulum post hos prius an quietum
Pompili regnum memorem an superbos
Tarquini fasces dubito, an Catonis Nobile letum.

Regulum et Scauros animaeque magna Prodigum Panillum superante Poeno
Gratus insigni referam Camena Fabriciumque.

Hunc et incompitis Curium capillis
Utilem bello tulit et Camillum

21. Proelis audax] It will be readily seen that Horace confounds the Latin divinity Liber with the Greek Dionysus or Bacchus, whose Indian wars and contest with the giants (ii. 19, 21) are here alluded to. Bentley puts a stop after these words and applies them to Pallas.

29. Defuit saxis agitatus humor.] The waters that in their fury covered the rocks flow back to their bed. Torrens comparing Epp. i. 2. 42, "Rusticus expectat dum defuntamnis," renders 'defuit,' 'ceases to flow down the rocks.' Theocritus' description of a calm produced by the influence of the Twins should be compared with this (xxii. 19).

34. superbos Tarquinii fasces] It has been much disputed whether this refers to Tarquinius Priscus or Superbus. But for the epithet applied to 'fasces' there could be no doubt. The Scholiasts suppose Priscus to be the person alluded to, and more editors hold that opinion than the other. Those who contend for Superbus quote Cicero, Phil. iii. 4, where comparing this king with M. Antonius he makes him out to be better than history draws him. But Cicero spoke for a purpose, and his statements are chiefly negative. On another occasion he wrote differently, saying, "Quis est qui—Tarquinium Superbum — non oderit?"

(De Am. 8). It may be admitted however that the propriety of all the names in this catalogue of worthies is not obvious. Why for instance among so small a number the Scaus should appear, of whom the best, M. Aemilius, who was consul A. u. c. 633, and who had good qualities mixed up with many that were bad (see his Life in Smith's Dict. Biog.), was not worthy of so great a distinction, nobody has attempted to explain. It is certainly only necessary to suppose M. Aemilius Scaurus alluded to here as in Juvenal, xi. 90, where he is introduced in similar company, and in the plural number, on which point see S. i. 7, 8, n.:

"Cum trementer autem Fabios, durumque Catonem, Et Scauros, et Fabricios, postram severos
Censoris mores etiam collega timerit."

The place in which Cato's name is mentioned is also an offence to some, and Bentley wishes to sweep him out altogether, and substitute Curtius, reading 'anne Curti' for 'an Catonis.' But as he has made no converts, and does not adopt his own conjecture, it is not necessary to meddle with his argument. We must be content to take the names Horace has given us, and as to Tarquin the reader must judge for himself.
Saeva paupertas et avitus apto
Cum lare fundus.
Crescit occulto velut arbor aevo
Fama Marcelli; micat inter omnes
Julium sidus velut inter ignes
Luna minores.
Gentis humanae pater atque custos
Orte Saturno, tibi eura magni
Caesaris fatis data: tu secundo Caesare regnes.
Ille, seu Parthos Latio imminentes
Egerit justo domitos triumpho
Sive subjectos Orientis orae Seras et Indos,
Te minor latum reget aquos orbem;
Tu gravi curru quaties Olympum,
Tu parum castis inimica mittes Fulmina lucis.

He will not be inclined to agree with those who understand Horace to mean the 'fasces' of Tarquin the Proud, transferred to Brutus who expelled him.

43. saeva paupertas] 'Saeva' and 'apto' Bentley would like to change into 'Sancta' and 'arto,' but he is stopped by the unani-mity of the MSS. Nevertheless he says no one can approve of 'saeva.' I think it very appropriate. A reference to Forcellini will shew that the word does not necessarily bear a bad sense, nor is it so used in C. iii. 16. 16.

45. Crescit occulto velut arbor aevo] Horace may have remembered the words of Pindar (Nem. viii. 40): αὐξέσα ᾧ ἀνεῖρα χλωραίς ἱπραίς ὃς ὀτρ ἕκνερον ἄσας. 'Occulto aevo' means by an imperceptible growth, as Ovid, Met. x. 519: 'Labitur occulte fallitique volatilis aetas.' As the name of Marcellus (whom I understand with Orelli to be the Marcellus who took Syracuse) stands for all his family, and particularly the young Marcellus (see Introduction), so the star of Julius Caesar and the lesser lights of that family are meant by what follows. Those who suppose Marcellus to be the 'Julium Sidus,' relying upon Ovid (Tr. ii. 167) calling Drusus and Germanicus 'Sidus juvenile,' and Fabius 'Fabiae sidus gentis' (ex Ponto, iii. 3. 2), forget that he never was adopted into the Julian family. By it is meant Caesar himself, at whose death as is well known a comet is reported to have appeared, which was supposed to be his spirit translated to the skies. (See Suet. J. C. 88; Ovid, Met. xv. sub fin.) Addison (Dialogues on Medals, 2) mentions a medal struck in honour of Augustus in the reign of Tiberius, in which he is represented with Caesar's star resting on his head according to that description of Virgil (Aen. viii. 680):

—— "geminas cui temporas flammas
Laeta vomunt patriumque aperitum vertice
sidus."

56. Seras et Indos,] See notes on C. iii. 29. 27; iv. 15. 23.
HORATII FLACCI

CARMEN XIII.

The same remark applies to this ode as to many others, that those who believe it to have reference to real persons, and the jealousy to be any thing but a poetical jealousy, have mistaken the character of Horace's writings. It would be difficult to imagine the man who wrote these verses really jealous while he was writing them, or much acquainted with that passion. The ode is too slight for us to judge whether it was taken from a Greek original; but the expression in v. 16 shows that Greek ideas were running in the writer's head, which may be said, I feel satisfied, of almost every one of his amatory compositions.

ARGUMENT.

Lydia, while thou art praising Telephus' neck, Telephus' arms, oh! my heart is ready to burst. My mind tosses about, my colour comes and goes; and the tear stealing down my cheek tells of the slow fire that burns within. It galls me when his rough hands hurt thy shoulders, or his teeth leave their mark on thy lips: think not he will be constant who could hurt that nectared mouth. How happy they whom love binds fast to the day of their death!

Cum tu, Lydia, Telephi
Cervicem roseam, cerea Telephi
Laudas brachia vae meum
Fervens difficii bile tumet jeur.

5
Tum nec mens mihi nec color
Certa sede manet, humor et in genas
Furtim labitur, arguens
Quam lentis penitus macerer ignibus.

Urur, seu tibi candidos
Turparunt humeros immodicae mero Rixae sive puer fures
Impressit memorem dente labris notam.

Non, si me satis audias,
Speres perpetuum dulcia barbare

2. cerea Telephi] For 'cerea,' Bentley on the authority of Flavius Caper, one of the older grammarians who misquotes this passage, substitutes 'lactea' for 'cerea.' He is very well answered by Cunningham. That reading however shows the sense in which Caper quoting from memory understood 'cereum,' 'white as wax,' not as many take it, 'soft,' 'pliant,' &c.

6. manet.] The MSS. vary between this and 'manent.' Ven., 1483, has 'manet.' So also has the oldest Berne MS. of Orelli, and many others. Cruquius' Blandinian MSS. has all 'manent.' There is more probability of 'manent' having been substituted on account of the metre for 'manet,' than 'manet' for 'manent'; but the lengthening of a short syllable in such positions is not uncommon. So ii. 13. 16: "Caece timet aliunde fata." Bentley lays down the rule, and Zumpt approves it, that two substantives in the singular number coupled by 'nec' and 'nec' have the verb in the singular, which he says usage and reason demand. I do not see the reason in the case of disjunctive any more than of conjunctive particles, and to assume the usage is to beg the question. But that the singular verb is admissible no one will deny, and I have admitted it on the authority of good MSS.

13. Non. — Speres] This more emphatic negative (Key's L. G. 1402) is used not uncommonly in prohibitive sentences, CARMEN XIV.

Before A. u. C. 724.

αὐνάθημι τῶν ἀνίμων στάσιν
τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἐνθεν κύμα κυλινδέσθαι τὸ δὲ ἐνθεν ἁμέρος δ' ὄν τὸ μίσον ναὶ φορήθαι σὺν μελαίνα χεμώνιοι μοχόθεντες μεγάθοι μάλα περ μὲν γὰρ ἀντός ἠτόπιδες ἔχει, λαῖφος ἐδὶ πάν ζάδηλον ἦδη
καὶ λακτίης μεγάλαι κατ' αὐτό.
χόλαισι δ' ἀγκυραι.

This fragment (18 Bergk) of one of Alcaeus' odes (the first verse of which is manifestly imperfect) is thus introduced by Heracleides, the Alexandrian grammarian: ἐν ἱκανοῖς ἐν καὶ τῶν Μυστηριαίων μελοποιῶν εἰρήσομεν ἄλληγορώς. τὰς γὰρ τυραννικὰς ἡξωσίας χιμερίων προσεικαζὴν καταστήματι βαλασάς ἄυναθημι καὶ τῶν ἀνίμων στάσιν. — Τὰς ὀκανὲ ἐνθέλε διὰ τῆς προτεχούσας περί τοὺς πόλτα καὶ κοιτασίας ἀνόμως πλωτζόμοις χαλάτων εἶναι νομίσεις φόβοι: ἀλλ' ὀκανέ ὄμοι ἔχει Μύρισιλος γὰρ ὁ δηλούμενος ἤτα καὶ τυραννικὴ κατὰ Μυστηριαίων ἐγιμορμὴν σύστασις. There can be no doubt that this ode of Alcaeus was in Horace's mind when he wrote: that the former is an allegorical description of the political troubles of Mitylene is certain: it is therefore surprising to find Graevius supporting Muretus' opinion, that no political allegory is meant by Horace, but only an address to the ship which had brought him from Philippi, and was returning with his friends on board, whom he wished to persuade to remain at Rome. That Bentley and Dacier were of that opinion, I confess is less surprising to me. Quintilian (Orat. viii. 6. 44) illustrates the term 'allegory' by the figures employed in this ode, saying "Navem pro republica, fluctuum tempestates pro bellis civilibus, portum pro pace atque concordia dicit." It is not easy to determine what was the particular period when the aspect of public affairs drew forth this ode. The Scholiasts are at variance. Porphyrian, whom Lambinus follows, supposes Horace is addressing himself to the fears of Brutus, and dissuading him from renewing the battle at Philippi, after the death of Cassius—a strange time for writing verses after the manner of Alcaeus, and an unusual way for a military tribute to offer counsel to his commander-in-chief. Acron supposes Horace to be alluding to the designs of the republican party, under Sextus Pompeius. This opinion is supported at some length by Battmann, Mythol. i. 343, sq., who argues that the ship does not signify the commonwealth, for that Horace speaks as if he were separated from the subject of the allegory: that to advise the citizens to abstain from civil wars (represented by the sea) because they were in a crippled condition, would be to imply that they might engage in them if they were not in that condition; also that there would be no propriety in representing the state as a dismasted ship in the time of Augustus. He therefore considers that all this refers to the efforts of the broken but restless party to which Horace had been lately attached to repair their fortunes under the leading of Sext. Pompey. ‘Nudum remigio latus,’ he says, refers to the number of their best men cut off at and since Philippi (he might have added the desertion of Menas). The ‘desiderium,’ spoken of in v. 18 means the lingering affection and anxiety Horace had for the party he had first cast in his fortunes with, and ‘taedium’ the vexation he had suffered in common with Brutus and all his best officers at the state of the republican forces at Philippi. ‘Pontica pinus,’ he considers a very masterly allusion to Pompey the Great, as the conqueror of Mithridates, which is Acron’s opinion. I give this theory in deference to the author, who has few equals in critical sagacity, and who in the essay in which these views are put forward has done good service to the interpretation of Horace on the principles of common sense. I should mention however that the theory has but few supporters, of whom Gesner certainly is one, and his was no mean judgment. Passow is another. Franke cannot sufficiently express his astonishment at Buttmann’s strange doctrine. Having made up his mind that none of the odes in these three books were written before Actium, a.u.c. 723, he adopts the opinion of Torrentius, Masson, Sanadon, and others, that Horace wrote this ode at the time when Augustus was thinking of retiring from the head of affairs (a.u.c. 725), and when he was dissuaded by Maecenas in a speech in which he likened the state to a vessel tossed upon the waters without a pilot (Dion Cass. 52. 16).

It does not seem to have occurred to Franke, that supposing the historian to have related the actual words of Maecenas, which is somewhat improbable, it is as likely he got his image from Horace as Horace from him. But the image was common enough and always will be, and it is as plain as possible that Horace got his notion not from Maecenas but from Alcaeus. Besides the cautions contained in this ode are plainly addressed not to Augustus but to the citizens, and so far from requiring such cautions they were important in requesting him to remain as he was.

Kirchner, who speaks of Buttmann’s opinion as ‘infelicitissima,’ has no hesitation in referring the ode, with Epod. vii., to the year before the battle of Actium, when the flames of war were kindling again between Augustus and Antony. Jani, Mitsch., Doering are of the same opinion, and Dillenbr. rather prefers it. Orelli is silent.

Having now stated all the opinions that I have seen upon this much-disputed ode, I must leave the reader to judge for himself. That there was many an hour when Horace sighed for peace between the day he found himself established in his scribe’s office to that which brought Augustus home in triumph is certain, and that he felt as a man of weak nerves might feel in a storm during the troubles of that long period may well be supposed. I think it is very hard to say at what precise juncture in those stirring times the notion entered his head of sitting down to write an ode in close imitation of Alcaeus, though we may safely affirm, that the idea would only be natural while Rome was disturbed, and therefore that the ode was written before the death of M. Antonius in a.u.c. 724. Of the theories above given I prefer Acron’s.
CARMINUM I. 14.

A few of the inscriptions that appear in the MSS. will shew the diversity of opinion that has always existed as to the application of this ode. I give them exactly as I find them.

Per allegoriam, i.e. inversionem M. Brutum alloquitur.

Contra Navem. Allegoricos (i.e. ἄλληγορικῶς).

Ad rempublicam.

Ad rempublicam bellum civile reparatorum.

In M. Brutum bellum civile praeparatam.

Ad Brutum amicum. Ad Navim Brutum reparanti bellum. (Bruti reparantis.)

Ad Bruti Naviem. In S. Pompeium civile bellum renovatam.

ARGUMENT.

Thou art drifting to sea again, thou ship; oh! haste and make for the harbour; oars lost, mast split, yards crippled, and rigging gone, how canst thou weather the wide waves? Thy sails are torn, thy gods are gone, and noble hull though thou be there is no strength in thy beauty. If thou be not fated to destruction avoid the rocks, thou who wert but late my grief and art now my anxious care.

O N AVIS, referent in mare te novi

Fluctus! O quid agis? Fortiter occupa

Portum. Nono vides ut

Nudum remigio latus

Et malus celeri saucius Africo

Antennaeque gemant ac sine funibus

Vix durare carinae

Possint imperiosius

Aequor? Non tibi sunt integra linte,

Non di, quos iterum pressa voces malo.

Quamvis Pontica pinus,

Silvae filia nobilis,

Jactes et genus et nomen inutile;

Nil pictis timidus navita puppibus

Fidit. Tu, nisi ventis

Debes ludibrium, cave.

6. sine funibus] I have rendered this "deprived of her rigging." Some understand it to mean "without girding ropes," referring to St. Luke's description of their undergirding the ship in which St. Paul was being conveyed to Rome: μᾶλις ἵσχυσαμεν περικρατεὶς γενίθαι τῆς σκάφος ἦν ἄραντες βοληίαις ἐχόμενο ὑποζωλωμένης τὸ πλοῦτον (Acts xxvii. 16). This process is not unknown in modern times, and is called 'frapping' a ship, by the French 'ceintre un vaisseau.' Captain Back, in the account of his return from the Arctic regions in 1837, thus describes the undergirding of his ship: "A length of the stream chain-cable was passed under the bottom of the ship four feet before the mizen-mast, hove tight by the capstan, and finally immovably fixed to six ring-bolts on the quarter-deck. The effect was at once manifested by a great diminution in the working of the parts already mentioned, and in a less agreeable way by impeding her rate of sailing." (See Smith's excellent Dissertation on the Voyage and Shipwreck of St. Paul, p. 66.) I doubt, however, whether Horace meant any allusion to this practice. Orelli thinks he did.

10. Non di,] "Accipit et pictos puppis adunca deos" (Ov. Heroid. xvi. 112). "Ja-cet ipse in litore, et una Ingentes de puppe dei" (Pers. vi. 29). There was usually a niche in the stern of a ship where the image of the tutelary god was kept.

11. Pontica pinus,] The best ship timber was got from Pontus. For the Scholiasts' and Battmann's opinion on these words see Introduction.

16. nisi—Debes ludibrium,] Orelli takes 'nisi debes' as if it were 'ne debes,' and Nuper sollicitum quae mihi taedium,
Nunc desiderium curaque non levis,
Interfusa nitentes
Vites aequora Cycladas.

'debes laudibium' for the Greek ὁμιλισάνεις γέλωτα. I do not see how 'nisi debes' can stand for 'ne debes,' and agree rather with Dillenbr. See Argument.

17. Nuper sollicitum] This is the most obscurc part of the ode. It would be very intelligible as spoken by Alcaeus, who having gone through the long and anxious struggle between the democratical party and the nobles, and seen the triumph of the former,
and the settlement of a tyranny which he abhorred in his native city, may be sup-poused to have felt for her the anxious affection these words imply. I cannot help thinking Horace found something of this sort in Alcaeus' ode. How the words are reconciled with Buttmann's theory will be seen by referring to the Introduction. Taking the ode as an address to the state we can only understand Horace to mean, that while he was attached to Brutus, or before he had secured his pardon, he had no other feelings than fear for his own safety and disgust with the state of the country, but now under Augustus he watches its fate with the affection and anxiety of a friend.

19. nitentes] This is like 'fulgentes' (C.
iii. 28. 14), shining as cliffs will do in the sun. The Cyclades abounded in white marble.

CARMEN XV.

This is probably an early composition of Horace made up of materials from the Greek, and written merely to exercise his pen. The Scholiasts found a political allusion in the ode: Paris being M. Antonius, and Helen Cleopatra; and Baxter, ὥσπερ Ἀλκαίοι has seized upon the notion, which others also have adopted. The judicious reader will see that there is no probability of such being the drift of the ode. Nereus is made to speak because the sea-gods were endowed with the gift of prophecy. Porphyrius on this ode says it is an imitation of Bacchylides, who makes Cassandra foretell the destruction of Troy as Horace does Nereus. There is a fragment (29 Bergk) which is supposed to belong to the poem referred to by this Scholiast, but it bears no resemblance to Horace's ode.

ARGUMENT.

Paris is carrying off Helen, when Nereus causes a calm and thus prophesies their fate.
With dark omen art thou carrying home her whom Greece hath sworn to recover.
Alas! for the sweating of horse and rider, and the deaths thou art bringing upon Troy.
Pallas prepareth her arms and her fury. Under Venus' shelter comb thy locks and strike thy lyre, and hide thyself in thy chamber: but it shall not avail thee. 'Seest thou not Laertes' son, Nestor of Pylos, Teucer of Salamis, and Theneus the fighter and bold charioteer? Merion too and the son of Tydeus, from whom thou shalt flee panting as the stag fleeth from the wolf, thou who didst boast better things to thy fair one.
Achilles' wrath may put off the evil day, but the fire of the Greek shall consume the homes of Troy.

Pastor cum traheret per fretae navibus
Idaeis Helenen perfidus hospitam,

2. Helenen] Horace uses the Greek inflections in his odes, and the Latin in his iamic verses, satires, and epistles (Bentley).
This might be expected, especially when,
Ingrato celeres obruit otio
Ventos ut caneret fera Nereus fata: Mala ducis avi domum
Quam multo repetet Graecia milite,
Conjurata tuas rumpere nuptias
Et regnum Priami vetus.
Heu heu quantus equis, quantus adest viris
Sudor! quanta moves funera Dardanae
Genti! Jam galeam Pallas et aegida Curusque et rabiem parat.
Nequicquam Veneris praesidio ferox
Pectes caesariem et grataque feminis
Imbelli cithara carmina divides;
Nequicquam thalamo graves
Hastas et calami spicula Cnosii
Vitabis strepitumque et celerem sequi
Ajacem; tamen heu serus adulteros
Crines pulvere collines.
Non Laertiaden exitium tuae Genti, non Pylium Nestora respicis?
Urgent impavidi te Salaminius
Teucer et Sthenelus sciens
Pugnae, sive opus est imperitare equis
Non auriga piger; Merionen quoque
Nosce. Ecce furit te reperire atrox Tydides melior patre,
Quem tu cervus uti vallis in altera
Visum parte lupum graminis immemor
Sublimi fugies mollis anhelitu,
Non hoc pollicitus tuae.

as in this instance, the imitation of Greek writers is obvious.

7. Conjurata—rumpere] This is a legitimate prose construction. "Conjurare patriam incendere" (Sal. Cat. 52. 24. See Liv. 22. 38).

13. Veneris praesidio] See Hom. II. iii. 54, and on v. 16 see II. iii. 330. vi. 321. Horace's description of Paris is drawn, not from Homer, who makes him brave, but from later writers who altered the Homeric characters. See Heyne, Exc. i. Aen. ii. See also Aen. iv. 215, sq.

15. divides:] 'Dividere carmina' is perhaps to sing and play alternately.

24. Teucer et] In this verse and in v. 36 Horace has introduced a trochee in the first foot contrary to his own custom, but in accordance with the practice of the Greeks. Here 'que' has been added to 'Teucer,' or 'te' substituted for 'et' by way of sustaining the metre, but with little authority; and 'Pergameas' has been put in for 'Ilacas' in v. 36 for the same purpose without any authority at all. Cunningham, Sandon, Jani, Fes, Meineke support this reading, which is as old as the fifteenth century, but is not found in any MS. See Kirchner, Novae Qu. p. 57, n. 'Sciens pugnae' is Homer's παλίμον ευ μίδως, and 'Tydides melior patre' is taken from Sthenelus' vaunt, II. iv. 405: ἤμεις τοι πατέρων μη γέ μίδως εὐχίμεθ' ειναι.
HORATII FLACCI

Iracunda diem proferet Ilio Matronisque Phrygum classis Achillei;
Post certas hiemens uret Achaicus Ignis Iliacas domos.

33. diem] For 'diem supremam.' In this form the expression is like the Hebrew which we meet with frequently in the Scriptures: "Remember the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem" (Ps. cxxvii. 7), and "they that come after him shall be astonished at his day as they that went before were affrighted" (Job xviii. 20).

CARMEN XVI.

The poet Stesichorus, as the story goes, lost his eyesight as a punishment for a poem in which he appears to have repeated the ordinary stories about Helen, and did not recover it till he had written another poem recanting his opprobrious verses. Of this παλινῳδία which is referred to in Epod. xvii. 42, and which was very familiar to the ancients, Plato has preserved the opening verses in the Phaedrus, p. 243, A. It began thus:—

οὐκ ἐστὶν ἔτυμος λόγος οὗτος, οὐδ' ἔβας ἐν νησίν εὐθύμως,
οὐδ' ἵκεσε Πέργαμα Τροίας. (29 Bergk.)

This poem had a plain purpose with which the ode before us has nothing in common. Nevertheless it has been generally supposed till of late years to be an imitation of Stesichorus, and some of the grammarians have prefixed to the ode the title "Ad Tyndaridem," no doubt under the same impression. The foundation of this opinion appears to have been the statement of Acon: "Hanc oden in satisfactionem factit amicis sueae, imitatus Stesichorum poëtam Siculum qui vituperationem scribens Helenæ caecatus est et postea responsio Apollinis laudem ejus scripsit et oculorum aspectum recepit." He does not therefore say that Horace imitated the ode of Stesichorus but only his example. It is very probable, as Buttman suggests, they got the name from the next ode and put it before this, which contains no name nor any clue to the person addressed. Some MSS. have the inscription "Palinodia Gratidiae ad Tyndaridem," and whoever invented this inscription must have supposed the ode to have been addressed to the daughter of that woman, whom he lampoons in his Epodes. Cruquius' Scholiast affirms that it is addressed to that person herself, and there are many who follow this view of the case, among others Hein-dorf on S. i. 8. Franke is decidedly of that opinion, and supposes this ode to have been written about the same time with Epod. xvii., and for the same mock purpose. I think there can be little doubt in the mind of any one who reads this poem, that it was composed (though not in seriousness) with reference to some verses Horace had actually written, and that it is not a mere translation of Stesichorus' or any other poem, while at the same time there are Greek ideas in it, which he borrowed from that or some other source. Beyond this I am not bold enough to go.

ARGUMENT.

Lovely daughter of a lovely mother, destroy those libellous verses how thou wilt. Cybele, Apollo, Liber agitate not their votaries' hearts as anger does, which is stopped neither by sword, nor by waves, nor fire, nor by the falling of the skies themselves. When Prometheus was bidden to take a part from every animal to give to man, he implanted in our hearts the lion’s fury. Wrath laid Thyestes low, and hath brought proud cities to the dust. Be appeased. In the sweet season of youth I was tempted by hot blood to write those rash verses. I would now lay aside all unkindness, if thou wilt but let me recall my libel and give me back thy heart.

O matre pulchra filia pulchrior,
Quem criminosis cunque voles modum
Pones ëambis, sive flamma Sive mari libet Hadriano.
Non Dindymene, non adytis quatit
Mentem sacerdotum incola Pythius,
Non Liber aeque, non acuta
Sic geminant Corybantes aera Tristes ut irae, quas neque Noricus
Deterret ensis nec mare naufragum
Nec saevus ignis nec tremendo
Juppiter ipse ruens tumultu.

Fertur Prometheus, addere principi
Limo coactus particulam undique
Desectam, et insani leonis
Vim stomacho apposuisse nostro.
Irae Thyesten exitio gravi
Stravere, et altis urribus ultimae
Stetere causae cur perirent
Fundet ensim imprimeretque muris
Hostile aratum exercitus insolens.
Compesce mentem: me quoque pectoris
Tentavit in dulci juventa
Fervor et in celeres ëambos
Misit furentem; nunc ego mitibus
Mutare quaero tristia, dum mihi
Fias recantatis amica Opprobris animumque reddas.

8. Sic geminant] So all the MSS. Bentley conjectures ‘si geminant’ in the sense of ‘cum,’ and he is followed by Mitsch., Jahn, and Fea. But the received reading is very intelligible.

13. Fertur Prometheus.] This story is not found elsewhere. Whether Horace got the foundation of it from the story told by Plato, Protag. 30, sqq.; or whether he found it in this form in Stesichorus’ palinode or some other Greek poem, or invented it to suit his own purpose (which is not likely), cannot be determined. ‘Principi limo’ corresponds to πρωτον ἄρχον πηλόν in Soph. Frag. (432 Dind.), καὶ πρωτον ἄρχον πηλόν ὅργαζεν χερον.

24. celeres] A. P. 251: “iambus pes citus.” The quality of the measure is mentioned as some palliation perhaps of the severity of the verses.
CARMEN XVII.

It may entertain the reader to know that a treatise was once written on the subject of Horace's Tyndaris, in which it was proved to the satisfaction of the writer that she was a freedwoman of Rhaemetalces, king of Thrace, that she is the person Horace elsewhere speaks of as Therssa Chloë, Sidonia Chloë, and Venus Marina; also that she was a poetess. It being assumed that the last ode was addressed to Tyndaris, according to the common inscriptions, it is supposed by many that the lovers had made up their quarrel, and that Horace here proposes a meeting to seal their reconciliation. All this which is plainly unreasonable should be put aside by any who wish to understand Horace. There is no connexion between the two odes, except that the title, which belongs to this, has been borrowed for the other, and there is no reason to suppose that Horace, writing at his farm, had any other than an imaginary Tyndaris, with an imaginary Cyrus, in his mind.

ARGUMENT.

Tyndaris, often doth Pan leave Lycaeus to visit Lucretile, protecting my flocks from sun and wind; my goats go unharmed and fear not snake or wolf when his sweet pipe sounds in the vale of Ustica. The gods love me for my piety and my muse. Here Plenty awaits thee; here shalt thou retire from the heat and sing of the loves of Pene-lope and Circe for Ulysses. Here thou shalt quaff mild Lesbian in the shade, nor shall strife be mingled with the cup, nor shalt thou fear the jealous Cyrus, lest he lay his violent hand upon thee.

Ve¬lox amoenum saepe Lucretilem
Mutat Lycaeö Faunus et igneam
Defendit acstatem capellis
Usque meis pluviosque ventos.
Impune tutum per nemus arbutos
Quaerunt latentes et thyma deviae
Olentis uxores mariti,
Nec virides metuunt colubras
Nec Martiales Haediliae lupos,

1. Lucretilem] 'Mons Lucretilis' is identified by De Chaupy and others with the lofty mountain (or range) called Monte Gennaro, that overhangs the valley of the Licenza—Horace's Digestia (Epp. i. 18. 104),—in which his estate lay. De Chaupy gives a very agreeable account of the scenery, to shew that it was "un séjour plein d'attraits pour le Dieu Pan," a place to which Faunus might well resort from his Arcadian home Lycaeus. Ustica, the Scholiasts say, was a mountain or a mountain and valley. Acron favours the latter, interpreting 'cubantis' by 'depressae.' Prophyrion, on the other hand, and Comm. Crux refer the epithet 'ad resupinam regionem ejus.' De Chaupy, who illustrates 'personae saxa' by the echoes he himself heard on the spot, which he identifies with Horace's estate and the bare rocks that here and there show themselves, thinks he can also fix upon this spot Ustica on the slope of the hills, and he therefore does not allow Acron's interpretation of 'cubantis.' But it must be a matter of conjecture.—The construction with 'muto,' 'permuto,' by which the remoter object becomes the nearer, is not peculiar to Horace, but it will be found to occur several times in his works. Virg. Georg. i. 8: "Chaonian pingui glandem mutavit arista." 'Ἀλλὰ ἀγαθοσύλῳ, ἑμὲν ἑμὶ τοῦθεν also admit of this double construction, sometimes the thing given in exchange being in the accusative, sometimes the thing taken. See Heindorf on S. ii. 7. 110.

7. Olentis uxores marit.] See Georg. iii. 125, "Quem legere ducem et pecori dixere
CARMINUM I. 17.

Utanque dulci, Tyndari, fistula Valles et Usticae cubantis Levia personuere saxa.
Di me tuentur, dis pietas mea
Et Musa cordi est. Hic tibi copia Manabit ad plenum benigno
Ruris honorum opulenta cornu.
Hic in reducta valle Caniculae
Vitabis aestus et fide Teia
Dices laborantes in uno
Penelopen vitreamque Circen;
Hic innocentis pocula Lesbia
Duces sub umbra, nec Semeleius
Cum Marte confundet Thyoneus
Proelia, nec metues protervum
Suspecta Cyrum, ne male dispari

maritum." Theoc. vii. 49, ἑ τράγη τὰν λευκὸν αἰγῶν ἀνηπ. Ov. Fast. i. 333:
"Ita rex placare sacrorum Numina lanigerae conjuge debet ovis."

9. Nec Martiales Haediliae lapsos, 'Haediliae' is the reading of nearly every MS., and in the margin of B, Orelli says, is written 'mons,' and so he and Dillenbr. understand it—one of the Sabine hills. 'Haedilia,' the reading of some MSS., and most of the old editions, is only a corruption of the other. Bentley takes to himself the credit of suggesting 'haedulae' formed from 'haedus,' as 'equulae,' 'hinulae,' from 'equus' and 'hinnus.' But Aratus and Torrens had anticipated his conjecture, though they thought only of the masculine 'haedulea.' 'Haedulae' has been very generally adopted since Bentley. Gesner says this reading 'haedulae' occurs 'in bonis libris:' but he does not mention which place they are, and Bentley had never seen them, or he would have mentioned that he had done so. 'Haediline' Laminius and some others prefer, as signifying 'the folds,' but no such word is found elsewhere, and there is no analogy to support it. If there were such a word, its antepenultimate syllable would be long, as 'ovile.'

14. Hic tibi copia] The order of the words is 'hic copia opulenta ruris honorum manabit ad plenum tibi benigno cornu.' 'Here plenty, rich in the glory of the country, shall pour herself out for thee abundantly from her generous horn.' 'Ad plenum' occurs in the same sense Georg.

The 'cornu copia,' so common in ancient works of art, was a symbol belonging to the goddess Fortuna, to whom it is said to have been presented by Hercules. More may be learnt by referring to the Articles Amalthea (whose horn it is supposed originally to have been) and Achelous, from whom Hercules won it, in Smith's Dict. Myth.

18. fide Teia] "Perhaps," says Torrens, "Anacreon had a song upon the subject, for to talk of adapting the Odyssey of Homer to the lyre of Anacreon is absurd." That Horace had some reason for choosing this subject is certain, but who shall say what it was? Why Circe is called 'vitrea' has been much disputed. Smart and Francis translate the word 'frail.' Dacier refers it to her complexion, "qui étoit uni comme une glace." It probably means, as Turnebus says, no more than 'caerulea' in Epod. xiii. 16: "nec mater domum caerulea te revectet;" and 'virides' in Ov. Tr. i. 2. 59: "Pro superi viridesque Dei quibus aqua curae."

22. Semeleius—Thyoneus] Bacchus is here called by both the names of his mother Semele, who was also named Thyone ἀντί τοῦ θείου.

25. male dispari] 'Male' is here used as in S. i. 3. 31, "Male laxus calceus." Cyrus Incontinentes injiciat manus
Et scindat haerentem coronam Crinibus immoderamque vestem.

was not fortunate in his amours if we are to believe Dacier, who tells us with as much confidence as if he had written the odes himself, "c'est le même dont il est parlé dans l'ode 35, et qu'Horace appelle 'turpis,' laid, villain."

CARMEN XVIII.

There has been preserved in Athenaeus, x. p. 430, a single line of Alcaeus of which the first verse of this ode is almost a literal translation. The metre also is the same. The verse is as follows (44 Bergk): μηθὲν ἄλλο φιλεύσας πρῶτον δινδρεον ἄμπιλω. Whether the rest of the ode is a translation of what follows in the poem of Alcaeus we have no means of knowing, but I think in all probability it is a close adaptation. If we were not put upon the right scent, as I think we are, by the above fragment, we should suppose Horace had a friend Varus, who had a villa at Tibur, and who was making a plantation there. Varus was the cognomen of his and Virgil's friend Quintilius, whose death is lamented in C. xxiv. of this book. But whether or no he is the person here referred to, or (which appears to Buttmann, and I agree with him, the better way of putting it) whose name is used for the purpose of giving spirit to the ode, it is quite impossible to say. "Sterilem agrum frustra rimeris," as Franke judiciously says on another equally impossible question. It has been doubted whether Horace wrote 'Vare' or 'vere,' in consequence of a note which appears in the two Scholiasts, Acron and Comm. Cruq.: "suadet ut cum vernum competens tempus est nullam arborem prius quam vitem ponat," from which it has been inferred that they had 'vere' in their copies. Some confirmation of this theory is derived from Virg. Georg. ii. 319, sq.:—

"Optima vinetis satio cum vere rubenti Candida venit avis longis invisa colubris."

Which Estré states is quoted by Acron. I do not find the quotation in my copy. All existing MSS. and editions have 'Vare.' Jahn affirms that this person is 'haud dubie' the same as Canidia's old lover, Epod. v., and Weichert (de L. Varii et Cassii Parmensis vita) says the same. Such boldness appears to me most irrational. The respectable names of these scholars have misled the writer of the article Varus (xii.) in Smith's Dict. Biog., who might have corrected his judgment by referring to Estré, to whose work he refers others.

Torreultius believes the person to be that unfortunate Varus whose legions were cut off by Arminius in Germany, a.d. 10. But as he supposes Catullus to have addressed the same person (C. x.), who was his junior by at least half a century, his judgment is worth nothing. Other conjectures have been hazarded by scholars of repute, which Estré has stated and disposed of very clearly.

"Of Quintilius' Villa ruins yet remain at Tivoli in the quarter called after him Quintigliolo," says Fea, a credulous but industrious commentator.

ARGUMENT.

The vine is the first tree thou shouldst plant, Varus, by the walls of Tibur. Hardships are only for the sober, wine drives away all cares. Who croaks of battles and poverty rather than of Bacchus and Venus, when he is mellow? But that no man exceed, let him think of the bloody frays of the Centaurs, and Lapithae, and of the Thracians, over their cups, when the appetite confounds right and wrong. I'll not arouse thee unbidden, beautiful Bassareus, nor drag thy mysteries from their secret places. Silence the horn and drum, whose followers are vain glory and broken faith.

NULLAM, Vare, sacra vite prius severis arborem Circa mite solum Tiburis et moenia Catili. Siccis omnia nam dura deus proposuit, neque Mordaces aliter diffugiunt sollicitudines. Quis post vina gravem militiam aut pauperiem crepat? 5 Quis non te potius, Bacche pater, teque, decens Venus? At ne quis modici transitam munera Liberi Centaurea monet cum Lapithis rixa super mero Debellata, monet Sithoniis non levis Euius, Cum fas atque nefas exiguo fine libidinum Discernunt avidi. Non ego te, candide Bassareu, Invitum quatiam, nec variis obsita frondibus Sub divum rapiam. Saeva tene cum Berecyntio Cornu tympana, quae subsequitur caecus Amor sui Et tollens vacuum plus nimo Gloria verticem, Arcanique Fides prodiga, perlucidior vitro.

2. Tiburis et moenia Catili.] εν δια ευοιν. See C. i. 7, 13, n. Horace shortens the penultimate syllable of Catilii' name for the sake of the metre, and the same liberty is taken with the name of Porsenna, Epod. xvi. 4, where see note.

super mero] It is disputed whether this means ' over their wine,' or ' about their wine.' The latter is the more ordinary significance of 'super' with the ablative; but in Aen. ix. 61, we have ' nocte super media,' which sanctions the other version, and this gives the best sense. The story is that at the marriage-feast of Peirithous, king of the Lapithae, the Centaurs, being guests, attempted in their drunkenness to carry off the bride Hippodamia and the other women present, which led to a contest and the Centaurs were beaten. 'Cum' (v. 10) refers to 'super mero,' which applies also to the Sithonians, who were a people of Thrace on the borders of Macedonia. The quarrel of Bacchus with the Thracians, on account of Lycurgus' treatment of his vines, and the habitual drunkenness visited upon them, are well known. See C. i. 27, 1, sq.

10. Cum fas atque nefas] 'When the greedy of wine distinguish between right and wrong by the slender line of their lusts,' that is, the slender distinction that lust so inflamed can draw. 'Avidus' is used absolutely for 'avidus pugnæ,' C. iii. 4. 56.

12. quatiam.] This is explained by Aen. iv. 301:

—— "qualis commotis excita sacrís
Thyas ubi audito stimulant trieterica Baccho Orgia nocturnusque vocat clamore Cithaeron," where Servius in his commentary quotes this passage of Horace. The whole passage is Greek in its character. The Liberalia bore little analogy to the Dionysia to which the thyrsus and the cista with its sacred contents (whatever they may have been) and its covering of vine and ivy belonged. The picture of vain glory holding high its head, full only of the fumes of debauch, is very happy whether original or not. The other characteristic of the maudlin state is repeated once or twice. See Epod. xi. 14. S. i. 4. 89.

CARMEN XIX.

Glycera (Γλυκέρα) is one of Horace's favourite names. She is set down as the Cinara of C. iv. 13. 21 (see n.), but with what show of reason beyond their having the same number of syllables, it is not easy to see. We need not take Horace too much at his word when he says that his days of love were over. Many a young sentimentalist has imagined this and found himself mistaken as the poet appears to have done. Those who choose to insist that Horace is confessing on his own account that "the heyday of his blood was tamed," put this ode rather late, a. u. C. 729 or 730. Others find in the allusion to the Parthian (v. 12) occasion to fix the date a few years later (734 or 735) when the standards of Crassus had been recovered from that troublesome enemy. This important epoch is ever before the minds of one section of the chronologists: "die noctesque quidam veluti spectris territi cogitassent de signis et captivis a. 734 a Parthis Augusto redditis," says Franke, whose acumen, however, while it has led him on the whole into a more consistent and probable chronological scheme than Kirchner and others, is not above being misled by too much zeal for its own inventions. I should be no more disposed with him to say Horace wrote this ode while the Arabian expedition (i. 29) was pending, than with his adversaries that he wrote it five or six years later. When or under what circumstances or to whom (if any body) he wrote, we must be content to be ignorant. (See C. iv. 1, Introduction.)

ARGUMENT.

The mother of love, Semele's son, and wantonness recall my heart to love I thought I had put away for ever. I burn for Glycera purer than marble, and that mischievous face so dangerous to look upon. With all her strength hath Venus come upon me, and bids me sing no more of idle themes, the Scythian and the Parthian. Build me an altar, slaves, bring boughs and incense and wine, for I would soften the goddess with a victim.

MATER saeva Cupidinum
Thebanaeque jubet me Semeles puer
Et lasciva Licentia
Finitis animum reddere amoribus;
Urit me Glycerae nitor
Splendentis Pario marmore purius;
Urit grata protervitas
Et voltus nimium lubricus adspici.
In me tota ruens Venus
Cyprum deseruit, nec patitur Seythas

1. Mater saeva Cupidinum] This verse occurs again C. iv. 1. 5. Cf. Catull. iii. 1. "O veneres Cupidinesque." The multiplication of the forms of ἐρως was derived from the Greeks by the Romans. 'Semeles' is the form most generally adopted now. The older editions and the great majority of MSS. have 'Semelae.' But, as before observed, Horace seems to prefer the Greek form in the odes. 'Semele,' which occurs in some MSS., and in Ven. 1842, is probably for the true form, and may have led to the other. Duenterz with much perseverance affirms that Horace does not use the genitive in 'es.' Why not the genitive as well as the nominative and accusative? Such assertions have no meaning.

8. lubricus] Forcellini derives this from the verb 'labor.' He quotes this passage, and I have followed his interpretation in the Argument. It is hard to get a word exactly corresponding to 'lubricus.'
CARMINUM I. 19, 20.

49

Et versis animosum equis
Parthum dicere nec quae nihil attinent.
Hic vivum mihi caespitem, hic
Verbenas, pueri, ponite thuraque
Bimi cum patera meri:
Mactata veniet lenior hostia.

9. ruens] This is like Eur. Hipp. 433:
Κόπτεις γὰρ οὖ φορητὸν ἣν πολλὴ ῥυγῆ.
10. Scythas] Under this name Horace, with the historians of this period, understood all the nations on and beyond the Tanais, as well as those on and north of the Danube, as the Geloni, Getae, Daci, with one or more of whom the Romans were at this time perpetually at war. The allusion to the Parthians is explained by Justin's description (xlii. 2): "Cominus in acie praeliari aut obsessas expugnare urbes nesciunt.
Pugnanti autem procurentibus equis aut terga dantibus. Saepè etiam fugam simulant ut incantores adversum vulnera inquietantes habent." See also Virg. Geor. iii. 31:
"Fidentemque fuga Parthum versisque sagittis;" and C. ii. 13. 17: "Miles sagittas et celerem fugam Parthi." — See Plato, Laches, p. 191, A.
12. quae nihil attinent.] Compare Anacreon (Pseudo):
τί δὲ μοι λόγων τεσσάρων
τῶν μηδὲν ὑφελούντων;
(53 Bergk.)

They were nothing to a man in love.
13. vivum — caespitem.] This rude sort of altar was enjoined upon the Israelites in the wilderness in preference to any other (Exod.
xx. 24). The word 'verba' was used for any boughs employed for crowning the altar or for sacred purposes. The Schol. Acron, on C. iv. 11. 7, makes the same remark, and says the word is from 'herba.' He means, I suppose, that 'verb' and 'herb'
are the same root, and he is probably right.
(See also Forcell.)

CARMEN XX.

A.U.C. 730 (?).

In the thirteenth ode of the second book Horace relates how he was nearly killed by the falling of a tree. In the seventeenth ode of the same book he associates this accident with the recovery of Maecenas from sickness, and his reception with applause in the theatre. The eighth of the third book was written on the first anniversary of his accident, and therefore the year after Maecenas' recovery. The dates therefore of both these events to which the odes that more expressly belong to them give no clue, may be determined if we can determine that of C. iii. 8. It will be seen by referring to the introduction to that ode that there is great difference of opinion upon the subject, and but small means of deciding it. But upon the date of Maecenas' recovery depends the date of this ode, in which he is invited to drink some Sabine wine bottled on that occasion. Now wine of this sort was not in its prime under four years' keeping (C. i. 9. 7, n.), and was not likely to have been fit to drink under two years. After, therefore, the reader has satisfied himself better than I can satisfy him of the date of C. ii. 13 and 17, he will put this not less than two years later, and he will have got an approximate date. Franke puts it in A.U.C. 729 or 730.

ARGUMENT.

You shall have some poor Sabine, Maecenas, bottled at that time when the echoes of the Vatican resounded your praises. You drink Caecuban and Caleian, but the vines of Falernum and Formiae are not for me.
1. Vile potabis modicis Sabinum Cantharis] It has been said before that Sabine wine was none of the worst; but it was cheap and poor compared with the best, to which Maecenas was used, and this probably had not had the benefit of keeping. Horace commends it therefore by referring to the circumstances under which it was bottled. (I use that term for the process diffundendi or condendi for want of a better.) If it was made on his own farm, which Maecenas gave him, this would enhance the compliment, which would be increased by his having done it with his own hand. Jâni (a good scholar, but unwise commentator) thinks on the other hand Horace meant to give his friend a hint to bring some better wine with him.—The most ordinary kind of earthenware jug was called ‘cantharus’ supposed to be the name of its inventor. Horace had tried to improve his wine by putting it into a ‘testa’ or ‘amphora,’ which had contained some of the rich wine of the Aegaean. (See C. i. 9. 7, n.)

5. Care Maecenas eques,] Bentley, on the authority of one MS. of the Royal Society, edits ‘clare’ for ‘care.’ He admits that ‘care’ is consistent with the occasion and the familiar friendship between Maecenas and Horace (C. ii. 20. 7). But he thinks ‘eques’ wants an epithet; besides Mart. (vi. 58) has,

   “Sospite me sospes Latias reveheris ad urbes

   Et referes pili praemia clarus eques.”

But the character of the ode and the great preponderance of authority in the MSS. lead me to prefer the common reading. Martial was not thinking of Horace or Maecenas, but of his friend Aulus Pudens. A verbal coincidence, however unconnected the passages may be in other respects, is always enough to furnish Bentley with an argument in support of a favourite theory. Maecenas was content with the equestrian rank and would take no higher: hence the frequent repetition of the title ‘eques’ by Horace and others. (See iii. 16. 20, and his life in Dict. Biog.)

7. Vaticani Montis imago.] The theatre must have been that of Pompey, which was opposite to the Vatican hill on the left bank of the river, the hill being on the right or Etruscan bank, which gives propriety to the words ‘paterni fluminis ripae.’ Fea says he has observed the echoes of sounds striking on the Janiculum, which was part of the Vatican hill. The antepenultimate syllable of Vaticanus is long in Martial and Juvenal. On ‘imago’ see above, C. 12. 3, n.

10. Tu bibles] The future has here the same signification as above, C. 6. 1, 7. 1. ‘You may drink if you please the richer wines. I have none such.’ Respecting the wines here mentioned see above, C. 9. 7, n. Some of Lambinus’ MSS. had ‘Caecubam,’ which Jani says is ‘ornatius et concinnius;’ and Fea adopts it too. The force of Jani’s remark is not obvious.
CARMINUM I. 21.

CARMEN XXI.

The year after Augustus returned to Rome from the taking of Alexandria, that is A.U.C. 726, he dedicated a temple to Apollo on the Palatine hill (C. i. 31), and instituted quinquennial games in honour of Apollo and Diana, and called them the 'Ludi Actiaci.' For their first celebration Franke supposes Horace to have written this ode, and Cruciuis' Scholiast bears him out by a remark which, though by some confusion it has got transferred to the saecular ode, belongs plainly to this. The scholiasts and some commentators following them believed this ode to be an introduction to the saecular. Sandon, on whom our translator Francis pinned his faith, held that opinion, and placed them together, and so does the translator. Franke's opinion is rendered doubtful by the word 'principe' (v. 14), for Augustus did not get that title till the ides of January, A.U.C. 727, and therefore after the first celebration of the Actian games. Others refer this ode to a later year, 731, when, as we learn from Dio Cass. (iv. 1), Rome was visited by pestilence and famine. It is more likely, as Orelli remarks, to have been an exercise from fancy suggested by some such festival as that of 726. It has not the dignity or pretensions of an ode written for such a special occasion.

ARGUMENT.

Sing, ye damsels, of Diana; sing, ye youths, of Apollo and Latona dear to Jove, of Diana who rejoices in the streams and woods of Algidus, or Erymanthus, or Cragus. Praise ye no less Tempe and Delos Apollo's birth-place, and the shoulder that is graced with the quiver and the lyre—that in answer to your prayer he may turn the griefs of war, famine, and plague from Rome and her Prince upon the heads of her enemies.

Dianam tenerae dicite virgines,
Intonsum, pueri, dicite Cynthiaum
Latomamque supremo Dilectam penitus Jovi.

Vos lactam fluiis et nemorum coma,
Quae cueneque aut gelido prominet Algido
Nigris aut Erymanthi
Silvis aut viridis Cragi;
Vos Tempe totidem tollite laudibus
Natalenque, mares, Delon Apollinis, Insignemque pharetra
Fraternaque humerum lyra.

Hie bellum lacrumosum, hic miseram famem

5. coma,] Several MSS. have 'comam,' and among them all Cruquiuis' Blandinian MSS., the oldest of which is held in great repute. Also the oldest Berne, and so Ven. 1483. Bentley prefers that reading. I think it involves confusion.

6. Algidus] Algidus was the name of a mountain in Latium, sacred to Diana (C. S. 69), so called from its temperature. It is elsewhere called 'rivalis' (ii. 23. 9). Cragus in Lydia and Erymanthus in Arcadia were mountains on which the goddess was supposed to hunt.

9. Vos Tempe] Tempe is mentioned because there Apollo purified himself after slaying the serpent Python.

12. Fratena] Invented by Mercury.

13. Hic bellum lacrumosum,] War in general, not civil war only as Bentley supposes, or the wars intended against the Arabs and Britons as Dillenbr.—Bentley, in order to give Diana something to do, 'ne nihil omnino hic agat,' wishes to substitute 'haec' for 'hie.' But he has no authority, and Apollo was especially ἀλέξικος, particularly in respect of Augustus, his reputed son. Jani and Sanadon follow Bentley. 'Lacrumosum' corresponds to the ἐκφρούσεις πολέμου of Homer, and 'lacrumabile bellum' of Virgil.
Pestemque a populo et princepe Caesare in Persas atque Britannos
Vestra motus aget prece.

14. et princepe Caesare] Scaliger proposed the omission of 'et,' and some editors have followed him, understanding Horace to mean 'because Caesar is prince.' The conjunction is stated by Kirchner (Nov. Qu. p. 57, n.) to be wanting in an old edition by a Dutchman, Peter Von Os, which he considers sufficient authority. It often happens that when commentators get an edition to which others have not access they give it undue weight from its rarity. Kirchner cannot tell on what MSS. or editions the Dutch editor depended, or whether his omission of 'et' may not have been a slip or conjecture of his own. The conjunction here is in accordance with a practice very common with Horace, of coupling a general and a particular object, of which Dillenbr. has collected a great many instances, on C. i. 3. 19:—

"mare turgidum et Infames scopulos Acroceranuia."

CARMEN XXII.
A.U.C. 729 (?). See note on v. 15.

Aristius Fuscus was an intimate friend of Horace's, and the wag whom he represents as playing him false in his interview with the troublesome fellow he met on the Sacra Via (S. i. 9. 61). Horace and he were

"paene gemelli,
Fraterinis animis; quicquid negat alter, et alter;
Adnuimus pariter; vetuli notique columbi" (Epp. i. 10).

We know nothing more of him except from the statements of the Scholiasts, who make out that he was a writer of tragedies; another says of comedies, and all that he was a grammarian. It has also been doubted (from the confused statements of the Scholiasts) whether Horace is not the person meant S. i. 9. 22, which runs in all the MSS.,—

"Si bene me novi non Viscum pluris amicum Non Varium facies."

It is impossible to determine the date of the ode. We can only say that it was written after Horace had got his country-house, that is, not earlier than A.U.C. 722.

Fuscus, as usual, has not much to do with the ode, his name being borrowed as that of Sestius (C. 4) and others, and for the same purpose.

ARGUMENT.

An honest man, Fuscus, may go unarmed along the burning shores of Africa, over the wild Caucasus or to the fabulous East. 'Twas there, as I wandered careless in the woods singing of my Lalage, a wolf such as Apulia and Africa rear not met me and fled. Set me in the cold and stormy north, or in the burning and uninhabited tropic, still will I love my smiling, prattling Lalage.

INTEGRÆ vitae scelerisque purus
Non eget Mauris jaculis neque arcu
Nec venenatis gravida sagittis, Fusce, pharetra,

1. Integer vitae scelerisque purus] These are Graecisms, but not peculiar to Horace: 'animi maturus Aletes' (Aen. ix. 246); 'integer aevi' (Aen. ix. 255); 'amens animi' (Aen. iv. 263); 'praestans animi juvenis' (Aen. xii. 19), are all similar expressions. Καθαρός ἀδικίας καὶ ἀνοσίων ἱγών (Plat. Rep. vi.) 'Αγνός μὲν, ὥ παί, χεῖρας ἀμαρτος φέρωνς (Eurip. Hipp. 316). The more usual prose form with the ablative occurs S. ii. 3. 213: "purum est vitro tibi quum tumidum est cor?"
Sive per Syrtites iter aestuosas
Sive facturus per inhospitalem
Caucasum vel quae loca fabulosus Lambit Hydaspes.
Namque me silva lupus in Sabina,
Dum meam canto Lalagen et ultra Terminus curis vigor expeditis, Fugit inermem,
Quale portentum neque militaris
Daunias latis alit aesceletis,
Nec Jubae tellus generat leonum Arida nutrix.

5. per Syrtites iter aestuosas] This cannot mean among seas that boil upon the Syrtes; but along the burning coast that borders on them. "Non aestuosae grata Calabriae Armenta," C. i. 31. 5. The dangers of a sea-voyage are not referred to here. "Caucasus" has the same epithet applied to it again Epod. i. 12, and Aesch. (P. V. 20) calls it άπανθωτων πάγων. The epithet "fabulosus," and the amount of knowledge the Romans had of India, are sufficiently explained by Pliny (N. H. vi. 17): "Patefacta est non modo Alexandri Magni arma regumque qui ei successeret, circumvectis etiam in Hircanum mare et Caspium Seleuco et Antiocho praefecto eorum Patrocle; verum et aliis auctoribus Graecis—non tamen deest diligentiae locus, adeo diversa et incredibilia traduntur."

11. curis — expeditis.] This is the reading of most and the best MSS. Lambinus and some others, whom Bentley follows, prefer the reading of Comm. Cruq. and some MSS. "expeditus." Like "solvo," "expedio" admits of two constructions. See Catull. 31. 7. "O quid solutis est beatius curis?" But there is also "solvite corde metum, Teucri," Aen. i. 502. Horace says (C. iii. 24. 8): "non animum metu Non mortis laques expedes caput." I think Dillembr. is right in defending "expeditus," not only by the authority of the MSS., but for the sake of the ομοιοίησεων, which this measure abounds in. Besides this verse there will be found six instances in this one ode, vv. 3. 9. 14. 17. 16. 22.

14. aesceletis.] ἄεσκελεισθον. The reading "Daunias" is that of the best MSS. "Daunia in latis" is that of others, which Lamb., Cruq., and Bentley adopt. But "in" is a mere interpolation of some who found the reading "Daunia latis," and wished to save the metre.

15. Jubae tellus.] It has been doubted whether Horace alludes to the elder or the younger Juba. Orelli has printed in an excursus an argument by one of his countrymen in favour of the younger. It seems, as far as I can understand it, to amount to this,—that the son received at the hands of Augustus, in place of his father's kingdom of Numidia, the whole of Mauritania, and those parts of Gaetulia which lie contiguous to the range of Atlas, and that these were more productive of wild beasts than Numidia (the elder Juba's kingdom), Gaetulian lions being proverbial. But the extent of the father's dominion Horace was not likely to define more accurately than Lucretius, who says (iv. 670) it was the widest in the world:—

"longissima regna; Cardine ab occido vicinus Gadibus Atlas Terminat: a medio confinis Syrtibus Ammon."

He was lord, says he, not only of the Numidian but of the Gaetulian, and a host of other tribes, all which is mere exaggeration. This therefore proves nothing, and Horace might very innocently have called the whole of Libya "Jubae tellus," even if the elder had never had a son, or that son had never risen in favour with Augustus, and been invested with the kingdoms of Mauritania and Gaetulia. It is not however improbable that Horace, who notices the events of the day, may have used the phrase in this instance with reference to the honours newly granted to the younger Juba, who received the grant of these parts of Libya a. u. c. 729. This would help to fix the date of the ode.

16. Arida nutrix.] Baxter entertains his readers with the following note: "Festive posuit 'Arida nutrix,' quaedam enim sunt aridae nutrices—'dry-nurses.'"
Pone me pigris ubi nulla campis
Arbor aestiva recreatur aura,
Quod latus mundi nebulae malusque
Juppiter urget;
Pone sub curru nimium propinqui
Solis in terra domibus negata:
Dulce ridentem Lalagen amabo,
Dulce loquentem.

23. Dulce ridentem] Sappho, Fr. 2:
υδής φωνεισάς—καὶ γαλαίσας ἰμιροεῖν. See note on C. ii. 12. 14. See also Catullus ad Lesbiam (51. 3):
—"identidem te Spectat et audit Dulce ridentem."

Whether or no Lalage is the same person as Cinara (iv. 1), and Glycera (C. 19), may be left to the decision of those who know more of Horace's amours than others do.

Petrarch has imitated Horace in one of his sonnets: (In qual parh)
"Chi non sa come dolce ella sospira
E come dolce parla e dolce ride."

This appears to be imitated from a poem of Anacreon, of which a fragment has been preserved in Athenaeus (ix. p. 396):

αγανωστὶ
ἀτε νεβρόν νεόθηλία γαλαθηνὸν ὅστ' ἐν ὑλῆς ekεφόσιοις ἀπολεφθεῖς ὑπὸ μητρὸς ἐπτούθη. (Fr. 51. Bergk.)

In spite of which the whole matter is treated by most as another of Horace's numerous gallantries, the bad success of which sat so ill upon him that he wrote the vindictive ode (iii. 26), in which the timid fawnlike girl of this poem becomes the haughty Chloë, only to be tamed by the scourge of the Queen of Love.

ARGUMENT.

Thou fleest from me, Chloë, as a fawn that has lost its dam and trembles at every breeze.
I follow not as a wild beast to tear thee. O cease from following thy mother, for 'tis time to follow after man.

Vitas hinnuleo me similis, Chloë,
Quaerenti pavidam montibus aviis
Matrem non sine vano Aurarum et siliæ metu.

Nam seu mobilibus veris inhorruit

5. Veris inhorruit Adventus foliis] Bentley objects to this, the reading of all the MSS. He objects to the mention of leaves in the early spring, to the fawns seeking their dams, or the lizards leaving their winter hiding-places at that season; and he objects to the expression 'the approach of spring trembles among the leaves.' He therefore proposes "vepris inhorruit ad ventum." To me the expression as it stands appears very poetical, and the inaccuracies, if they be so, very pardonable. The authority of all the MSS. under these...
Adventus foliis seu virides rubum
Dimovere lacertae,
Et corde et genibus tremit.
Atqui non ego te tigris ut aspera
Gaeotulusve leo frangere persequor:
Tandem desine matrem Tempestiva sequi viro.

circumstances is sufficient reason for retaining 'veris adventus.' Bentley's correction was much applauded by his friend Graevius, and by Burmann, to whom Graevius mentioned it. In his notes Graevius adheres to the received text, and Burmann in his edition adopts the correction of Muretus, 'vitis.' Bentley's alteration had been previously made in one or two quarters, but not with his knowledge. See his note, and Cunningham, Animadv. p. 47.

12. Tempestiva — viro.] Aen. vii. 3:—
"Jam matura viro, jam plenis nubilis annis."

CARMEN XXIV.
A.V.C. 730.

Jerome, in his edition of the Chronicles of Eusebius, places the death of Quinctilius Varus, the subject of this ode, in the first year of the 189th Olympiad, that is A.V.C. 730 (Clinton, F. H.). This therefore fixes the date of the ode. Quinctilius was born at Cremona, and was a neighbour and friend of Virgil, through whom it is probable Horace made his acquaintance. He is referred to (according to the Scholiast who is probably right) in the Epistle to the Pisos, v. 433, sqq., as a discerning critic; and the language there used shows that he was dead when it was written. The Scholiast Acron says, that some supposed he was Virgil's brother, which notion arose plainly from the language Horace uses in this ode. Servius also, on Virg., Ec. v. 20 (in which he supposed Daphnis to be meant for this Quinctilius, whereas that eulogium was written about seventeen years before his death, and Daphnis plainly is intended for Caesar), calls him 'cognatum Virgili.' But for this there is no warrant.

The opinions that identify him with C. iii. and xviii. of this book and Epode v. are noticed in the introductions to those odes.

ARGUMENT.
What bounds shall be set to our grief for one so dear? Teach us a mournful strain, Melpomene. Can it be that Quinctilius, whose like Modesty, Justice, Fidelity, and Truth shall not behold again, is gone to his everlasting rest? Many is the good man that mourns him, but none more truly than thou, Virgil. 'Twas not for this thou didst commit him to the care of Heaven. But in vain thou dost ask him back. The lyre of Orpheus could not bring back the blood to the shadowy form which Mercury hath gathered into hell. 'Tis hard to bear: but patience makes that lighter which no power can change.

Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus Tam cari capitis? Praecipe lugubres Cantus, Melpomene, cui liquidam pater
Vocem cum cithara dedit.
HORATHI FLACCI

Ergo Quinctilium perpetuus sopor
Urget! cui Pudor et Justitiae soror
Incorrupta Fides nudaque Veritas
Quando ullum inveniet parem?
Multis ille bonis flebilis occidit,
Nulli flebilior quam tibi, Virgili.
Tu frustra pius heu non ita creditum
Poscis Quinctilium deos.
Quodsi Threicio blandius Orpheo
Auditam moderere arboribus fidem,
Non vanae redate sanguis imaginii,
Quam virga semel horrida
Non lenis precibus fata recludere
Nigro compulerit Mercurius gregi.
Durum: sed levius fit patientia
Quidquid corrigere est nefas.

6. Pudor et Justitiae soror,—Fides,] Figures of these personages are found on coins with various descriptive accompaniments. They are associated again C. S. 57. Cicero (de Off. i. 7) says, "Fundamentum autem justitiae est fides, id est dictorum conventorumque constantia et veritas."

8. inveniet] Most of the older editions have 'invenient;' but nearly all the MSS. appear to have 'inveniet,' and Bentley has shown, by a large number of instances, that it is Horace's usual practice to have the verb in the singular number after several substantives as here. He says that it is never otherwise except in corrupt passages, which is his usual way of begging the question. In C. iii. 16. 7 all the MSS. have 'risissent.'

11. Tu frustra pius heu non ita creditum] 'It is vain, alas! that with pious prayers thou dost ask the gods to restore Quinctilius, whom thou didst entrust to their keeping, but not on these terms' (i.e. that they should take him away). Such is Porphyrian's explanation. Lambinus and Graevius understood 'non its creditum' to mean that he was not entrusted to Virgil on such terms as that he was never to part with him. I prefer the first; but it is not easy to say which is right.

13. Quodsi] All the Berne MSS., and Cruquius', and some others, have 'quid si,' which some editors adopt, with the usual note of interrogation after 'quid.' (See Long's note on Cic. Verr. Act. ii. 1. 2. c. 7.) But 'quodsi' is supported by good authority, and most of the editors have adopted it. I have no doubt it is right. Horace never uses 'sin,' which Virgil uses as often and in the same way as Horace uses 'quodsi.'

15. imagini.] 'Imago' was that unsubstantial body in which the soul was supposed to dwell after death, called by the Greeks icoM. Such were the forms that Aeneas saw and thought them substantial:—

'Et ni docta comes tenues sine corpore
Admonenat volitare cara sub imagine formae, Irruat et frustra ferro dimerberet umbras.'

Aen. vi. 292, sqq.

17. Non lenis precibus fata recludere] This Greek construction has been noticed before (i. 18). The expression 'fata recludere' seems to mean 'to open the door of hell when Fate has closed it.'

18. Nigro compulerit—gregi.] 'Has gathered to the dark crowd.' The divine is only admissible in poetry. S. ii. 5. 49: 'Si quis casus puerum egerit Orco,' for 'ad Orcum.'

19. Durum: sed levius] Donatus says that Virgil was much in the habit of commending this virtue of patience, saying that the hardest fortunes might be overcome by a wise endurance of them. Therefore, says Fabricius, Horace consoles Virgil with his own philosophy.
CARMEN XXV.

Besides this there are two other odes (iii. 15. iv. 13), the subject of which is the wantonness of faded beauties, a subject probably handled with still greater pungency by Archilo- chus, for it was one his sarcasm would find scope in and would be likely to fasten upon. It is impossible to say whether Horace had any individual in his mind when he wrote any one of these odes. If he had, we need not go farther and suppose that he wrote as a disappointed lover. For instance, Jani's indignation at the virulence with which Horace can find it in his heart to attack (in C. iv. 13) the woman he was so fond of (in C. iii. 10), seems to be unnecessary. But it is a fair specimen of that matter-of-fact school of interpretation. I have before had occasion to remark, how the same principle is applied to Lydia and how many new lights she appears in (C. 13. Introduction).

ARGUMENT.

Thy windows are no longer assailed and thy slumbers broken by saucy youths; thy door turns no more on its hinges; the serenade is silent. Now 'tis thy turn, in some lone alley on a dark night, with the winter wind blowing and thy heart on fire with lust, to cry for lovers, and complain that young blood goes after the tender plant and hides the old leaves go float upon the Hebrus.

Parcius junctas quasiunt fenestras
Ictibus crebris juvenes protervi,
Nec tibi somnos adimunt, amatque
Janua limen,
Quae prius multum facilis movebat
Cardines; audis minus et minus jam:
"Me tuo longas pereunte noctes, Lydia, dormis?"
Invicem moechos anus arrogantes
Flebis in solo levis angiportu, Thracio bacchante magis sub inter-
lunia vento,
Cum tibi flagrans amor et libido
Quae solet matres furiare equorum
Saeviet circa jeur ulcerosum,
Non sine questu

2. Ictibus] The Blandinian MSS. and the three oldest Berne and some others give 'jactibus,' which reading is probably a gloss, to explain the nature of the 'ictus,' which meant, it would seem, the throwing of stones. Lambinus likes that word, but nobody adopts it. Rutgersius proposed 'tactibus,' but it has justly met with no favour.
3. amat] So 'littus ama' (Aen. v. 163), 'it cleaves to.' 'Multum' in this sense is rather a favourite expression with Horace, as 'multum demissus homo,' S. i. 3. 57. 'Multum celer,' S. ii. 3. 147. Such a serenade as that which follows is C. iii. 10.
7. Me tuo] The possessive pronoun is used thus abruptly once before (i. 15. 32), "non hoc polliciatus tuae;" and Ov. Remed. Am. 492: "Frigidior glacie fac videare tuae." Bentley reads, 'proprio motu vel invitis codicibus,' 'longam noctem.'
14. furiare] This word we do not meet with before Horace.
Laeta quod pubes hedera virente
Gaudet pulla magis atque myrto,
Aridas frondes hiemis sodali Dedicet Hebro.

18. pulla] This Porphyrian interprets 'subcrescent,' as from a root 'pull,-,' from which 'pullulo' is formed. Rutgersius gives it the same meaning in Epod. xvi. 46. But there is no authority or reason for departing from the usual meaning, which is 'dark.' The etymology I am not acquainted with.

20. Dedicet Hebro.] There is not much more difficulty in accepting this expression than that with which the next ode opens:—

"Tradam protervis in mare Creticum Fortare ventis."

But critics have found it a stumbling-block, and 'Euro' has been substituted for 'Hebro' by Bentley and some other editors, the way having been led by Rutgersius. The same substitution, against all authority as in this case, has been made in Aen. i. 317, 'praeventitur Hebrum;' where Heyne and Wagner have defended the common reading very well. But why should young men at Rome dedicate the dry leaves or any thing else to the Hebrus, a river of Thrace? why not to the Tiber? What have we to do with that? If Horace wrote 'Hebro' as all the MSS. say he did, he had some inducement to do so. There is no reason to suppose he was asleep, as Steiner in compassion suggests; it is more likely that he got the idea, and so the word, from the Greek. The distance of the river and the extravagance of the notion seem to suit the general scope of the sentence very well. And the coldness of the stream has probably something to do with it.

CARMEN XXVI.

At the time this ode was written it would appear that the affairs of the Parthians were occupying a good deal of attention at Rome, since Horace speaks of himself as the only one who gave no heed to them. The circumstances that may be supposed to be referred to are to be gathered from the following account. In the year A.U.C. 724, Phraates (see Dict. Birg. Arsaces XV.) being on the Parthian throne, and having by his cruelties made himself obnoxious to his subjects, Tiridates, likewise one of the family of Arsacidae, was set up as a rival to Phraates, but was defeated in his attempt to dethrone him, and fled for protection that same year to Augustus, who was then in Syria, after the death of M. Antonius. (Dion Cass. li. 18.) Shortly afterwards, however, the Parthians succeeded in getting rid of their king, and Tiridates was called to the throne. In A.U.C. 729, Phraates, having obtained assistance from the Scythians, returned and recovered his kingdom; and Tiridates fled to Augustus once more for protection. He was then in Spain. The following is Justin's account (though professing to give a particular history of Parthian affairs he does not refer to Tiridates' former ill success): Phraates, he says, elated with his success against M. Antonius, grew more cruel than ever, and in consequence "in exilium a populo suo pullitur. Itaque cum magno tempore finitimas civitates ad postremum Scythas precibus fatigasset, Scytharum maximo auxilio in regnum restitutit. Hoc absente regem Parthi Tiridatem quendam constituerat; qui audito adventu Scytharum cum magna amicorum manu ad Caesarem in Hispaniam bellum tunc temporis gerentem profugiit obsidem Caesari minimum filium Phraatius ferens quem negligentius custodiendum rapuerat. Quo cognito Phraates legatos statim ad Caesarem mittit, seruum suum Tiridatem et filium remitti sibi postulat. Caesar et legatione Phraatis audita et Tiridatis postulatis cognitis—neque Tiridatem dediturum se Parthis dixit neque adversus Parthos Tiridati auxilia daturum. Ne tamen per omnia nihil a Caesare obtentum videretur Phraati filium sine pretio remisit, et Tiridati quoad manere apud Romanos velut opulentum sumptum praebesi jussit. Post haec finito Hispaniensi bello cum in Syriam ad compendium Orientis statum venisset, metum Phraati incussit ne bellum Parthiae vellet inferre. Itaque tota Parthia captivi ex Crassiano sive Antonii exercitum recolleti signa cum his militia Augusto remissee. Sed et filii nepotesque Phraati obsides Augusto dati, plusque Caesar magnitude nominis sui fecit quam armis alius imperator facere potuisset" (Justin, Hist. xii. 5). I have given the whole of this account, as it contains in brief, and with sufficient accuracy for the purpose of this commentary, most of the events of Parthian history which Horace alludes to, and will serve for reference hereafter. The assembling of the Scythian force and the alarm of Tiridates are evidently referred to here, and the two seem to be associated. It is natural to infer therefore that it was just before Tiridates fled from his kingdom, in a.u.c. 729, that the ode was composed. Some, however, have referred it to the period when Phraates’ ambassadors were in treaty with Augustus, and when the fate of Tiridates was undecided, which would put the date a year later. Others again have assumed that the whole of the transactions described by Justin are to be referred to the year 724, and that Tiridates never fled to Augustus in Spain at all. This is the judgment of Lachmann (Let. to Franke, p. 239), but it is rather an unwarrantable judgment. Justin had before his eyes the history of Trogus, which he abridged, and must have known better than Lachmann what it contained. His reason, moreover for wishing to place the date of the ode further back is nothing more than an objection to the rhythm of the 7th and 11th verses, which is a very fallacious argument. In favour of the earlier date is quoted, by Orelli, Virg. Georg. ii. 495:—

"Illum non populi fasces non purpura regum Flexit et invidos agitans discordia fratres;
where the brethren are Phraates and Tiridates. The Georgics having been written in 724, it is assumed that the events above referred to must have taken place before that year. But the earlier and unsuccessful designs of Tiridates are more probably referred to by Virgil. Against the earlier date there is an argument of much weight in the age of Lamia. He died a.u.c. 786 (Tac. Ann. vi. 27), and the year before he had held the office of praefect of the city. If he was only twenty when this ode was written, he must have been eighty-two when he died, and eighty-one when he held the above post, which was made one of considerable importance by Augustus, and continued to be so under his successor. He is described as being ‘vivida senectute’ at the close of his life, and it is just possible he may have held the above post at that advanced age, but it is not probable, and I think it a fair argument, as far as it goes, for putting the date of the ode as late as we can. For further particulars respecting Lamia see C. iii. 17. The attempt to deduce from this ode any evidence of his being of a melancholy temperament is ridiculous.

ARGUMENT.

As the friend of the Muses should, I toss care to the winds, and mind not as every one else does the alarms of Tiridates. Sweet Muse, weave a garland for my Lamia. All my honours without thee are nought, him shouldst thou with thy sisters consecrate with the lyre.

Musis amicus tristitiam et metus
Tradam protervis in mare Creticum

1. Musis amicus] See C. iii. 4. 25:—

"Vestris amicum fontibus et chorus." The following image is common in the Greek poets. It occurs two or three times in the Anacreontic poems:—

τῷ θ' ἀχος πίθυνης μιχλήν ἀνεμοτρόφης θυέλλη. (39 Bergk.)

δ' ἵγῳ πῶς τὸν οἶνον ἀπολιπτεναι μίριμαι πολυφρόνεις τε βουλαι ἰς ἀλκητένοις ἀήμας. (51.)

ἐμῶν φρενῶν μὲν αὔρας
φιέρειν ἰδικα λότας;
Portare ventis, quis sub Arcto
Rex gelidae metuatur orae,
Quid Tiridaten terreat unice
Securus. O, quae fontibus integris Gaudes, apricos necte flores, Necte meo Lamiae coronam,
Pimplea dulcis! Nil sine te mei
Prosunt honores: hunc fidibus novis,
Hunc Lesbio sacrare plectro
Teque tuasque decet sorores.

and elsewhere. So also Theocritus (xxii. 167):—

See last note of the last preceding ode.

3. quis] This is probably the dative case, and refers to the terror inspired in Tiridates and his party by the approach of the Scythians. Dillenbr. prefers taking it as the nominative case, and it is not easy to decide which it is; in the loose way of talking Horace may either mean he does not care who is the king of the Scythians, or who is afraid of the king of the Scythians. Either contains meaning enough for the occasion. See Introduction.

CARMEN XXVII.

Porphyrian calls this ode "προτερπτικὴ ad hilaritatem cujus sensus sumptus est ex Anacreonte in libro tertio," and Comm. Cruq. quotes the words of Anacreon which are these:—

(\text{I suppose} δύναται is meant by Bergk for \text{δή} αὑτή. But I need not stop to discuss his Greek, in which he is not always happy. δύναται is an obvious correction.) Whether the remainder of the poem furnished any of the other ideas in Horace's ode, or whether he got his scene from life, we cannot tell. Nothing can surpass the good temper and dramatic case that runs through the ode.

ARGUMENT.

Let barbarous Thracians fight over their wine—stop your unhallowed noises, my friends, and each lie quietly on his couch. What, am I to join you? Then let that boy tell me who has got his heart. Will he not? Then I drink not. Whoever it is, thou hast no cause to be ashamed. Here whisper it in my ear.—Ah! poor boy, what a Charybdis hast thou got into! What witch, what god shall deliver thee? Pegasus himself could not do it.
Natis in usum laetitiae scyphis
Pugnare Thracum est: tollite barbarum
Morem, verecundumque Bacchum
Sanguineis prohibete rixis!
Vino et lucernis Medus acinaces
Immane quantum discrepat: impium
Lenite clamorem, sodales,
Et cubito remanete presso!
Voltis severi me quoque sumere
Partem Falerni? Dicat Opuntiae
Frater Megillae quo beatus
Volnere, qua percat sagitta.
Cessat voluntas? Non alia bibam Mercede. Quae te cunque domat Venus
Non erubescentis adurit
Ignibus ingenuoque semper
Amore peccas. Quidquid habes age
Depone tutis auribus. Ah miser, Quanta laborabas Charybdi,
Digne puer meliore flamma!
Quae saga, quis te solvere Thessalis
Magus venenis, quis poterit deus?
Vix illigatum te triformi Pegasus expediet Chinaera.

3. verecundum] In Epod. xi. 13 he is called 'inverecundum,' and Bentley proposes that word here. But the cases are different, and the MSS. are unanimous.
5. Vino et lucernis] In prose these datives would be expressed by the ablative with 'a.' The same construction in Horace are 'dissidens plebi,' C. ii. 2. 18: 'medio ne discrepet imum,' A. P. 152.
acinaces] This word, which signifies the Persian scimitar or short sword, appears to have been introduced into Greece after the Persian wars. It is commonly used by Herodotus. Horace seems to have been the first Latin writer that employed it.—Horace says quarrelling is vastly unsuited to those jovial meetings which are kept up to a late hour—'vino et lucernis.' The Romans sat down to table seldom later than three or four o'clock, and commonly continued there till past midnight.
6. Immane quantum] This form is imitated from the Greek: οὐρίων δοσιν, θαμματίων δοσιν, ἀμήχανων δοσιν,θαμματία νῆλικα, ἀμήχανων δοσιν—phrases we meet with in Plato, Aristotle, Demosthenes, Aristophanes, &c. The same expression occurs in Tacitus and Sallust, and 'mirum quantum,' 'nium quantum,' are used by Cicero, and Livy (ii. 1, fn.). The oldest Berne MS. has 'discrepet,' but the indicative mood is right, 'immane quantum' being merely an expletive.
10. Opuntiae] The birthplace of Megilla (the Locrian Opus) is added, as Butt-mann remarks, only 'to give the poem a fresher look of individuality.' The same remark will apply in other instances, as, for instance, 'Xanthia Phocen' (C. ii. 4. 2).
19. laborabas] Several MSS. have 'laboras Charybdi' against the metre; one or two have inserted the preposition 'in' to make the verse straight; but the oldest and best MSS. have the imperfect tense, of which Bentley can make nothing. Orelli may be right in saying it refers to the time when the question was put. But I am not sure that some finer sense of the imperfect tense is not to be traced in this word, as in 'Tempus erat dapibus, sodales' (C. i. 37. 4, where see note).
CARMEN XXVIII.

A great deal has been written about this ode, as to the spirit and purport of it, the occasion of its composition, the persons introduced, and the parts they respectively bear. The more literally we take the ode and the less we search for hidden meanings, or attempt to fix the date or the causes that led to the train of thought, the more likely we are, I conceive, to arrive at the true bearing of the ode. Septimius, one of Horace's most intimate friends, had a villa at Tarentum (C. ii. 6), where it is likely Horace on some occasion, if not often, paid him a visit. It seems to me not improbable that he may have seen a body cast on shore at that place where the scene appears to be laid. The sight of this body might naturally suggest such an ode as this, in which the spirit of a shipwrecked man is introduced moralizing upon death and asking for burial. His reflections take the form, in the first instance, of an address to Archytas the philosopher, whose name was associated with the place; and he joins with him other worthies, whose wisdom and greatness had not saved them from the common lot of all. There would appear to have been a legend that Archytas was buried on the shore under the promontory of Matinum, running out from the range of Mons Garganus in Apulia. Possibly a tomb was shown there that was said to be his. But it does not follow that the speaker was there. The name of Archytas would be suggested by his association with Tarentum, where I think (from v. 29) the scene is laid, and the name of such a man is naturally connected with the reflections of this ode, even independently of his connexion with the place. That Archytas was shipwrecked on a voyage down the Adriatic (which is the general opinion) has been too hastily assumed from this ode. If he was really buried at the foot of Mons Garganus, there are other ways of accounting for it. But the fact itself is not beyond question.

The ode has much the appearance at first sight of a dialogue, and the great majority of commentators take it in that way. Though differing from others as to the division of the dialogue, which I thought should take place in the middle of the fifteenth verse, I was once of the same opinion myself. I have now changed that opinion, and believe, with Hottinger and others, quoted by Orelli in his Excursus, that it is no dialogue at all, which view I am the more disposed to adopt, because it is supported by the judgment of my friend Mr. Long. Those who hold this opinion are, nevertheless, divided in their interpretation. Casaubon affirmed that the ode was merely the poet's meditation upon the fate of Archytas and on the destiny of all great men: followed by an appeal, on the part of Archytas, for burial (I suppose at v. 21). Lübker and Rezel think Horace's ghost is speaking under the fanciful notion that he himself had been drowned off Palinurus (C. iii. 4. 27). G. Fabricius supposed the shade of Archytas to be speaking throughout. Hottinger (Opusc. Phil. Lips. 1817) and Weiske (Jahn. Annal. Phil. 1830) held the view that I have adopted, with the exception that they supposed the unfortunate man, whose body is lying unburied, is speaking at the tomb of Archytas on the promontory of Matinum. I see no occasion for that, and think the subject of the ode is more likely to have been suggested at Tarentum than any where else. The words 'Neptuno custode Tarenti' seem to fix the scene. If Archytas was buried, or supposed to be buried, at Matinum, it would be natural for one who thought of the narrow space to which his greatness was reduced to mention the spot where his bones lay. But it does not appear why a person speaking at Matinum should talk of Neptune particularly as the 'custos Tarenti.'

Those who consider that the whole ode consists of a dialogue between a sailor and Archytas divide it either after v. 6, or v. 16, or v. 20. They who make the mariner cease to speak at v. 6, do so chiefly, because the subjects that follow that verse are supposed to be above a speaker of his class. But, as that would be contradicted by Archytas'
argue to his judgment in v. 14, it has been proposed to alter 'te' into 'me' or 'se,' though most even of those who divide the colloquy at v. 6 have overlooked this difficulty, and accepted 'te' on the authority of the MSS. But 'nauta' is not properly a common sailor, but 'navicularius,' a shipmaster. "Nautam accipere debemus eum qui naves exercet. Quamvis nautae appellatur omnes qui navis navigandae causa in nave sunt, sed de exercitore solummodo Praetor sentit" (Dig. 4. 9. 1. § 2). The 'exercitor' is the person who charters the ship. There does not seem to be any natural division at v. 16, and for Archytas to begin (at v. 21) with 'Me quoque devexi,' &c., nothing having gone before with which to connect those words, is also unnatural; while, if we understand him to begin his reply at 'Sed omnes una manet nox,' we have an opposition between the sarcasm of the first speaker (who says ironically of those that aspired to connexion with the gods and to the highest order of wisdom that they had not escaped death, not even Pythagoras, though he pretended to have done so once) and the grave truth, solemnly propounded by the philosopher, that all must die, wise and unwise, old and young, on land or at sea, and illustrated by his own case. This was once my opinion, and as many will still adhere to the theory of the dialogue and Archytas' shipwreck, I have put that theory in what appears to me the best form. The other explanation of the ode, however, I feel little doubt, is in the main the true one. Another to which Orelli inclined (though he suspended his judgment on the whole question) supposes a sailor coasting along the Apulian shore and seeing the tomb of Archytas, whereupon he breaks out into the address 'Te maris,' &c., from v. 1 to 20. Then the ghost of a lately shipwrecked man comes forward and prays for a little sand. It would be difficult to imagine any circumstances that could have suggested such a scene, especially with so abrupt a change of persons. The sudden apparition of a ghost echoing back to the mariner at sea his own words to my mind appears almost ludicrous.

One difficulty appears to me to be fatal to the notion of a dialogue, and that is contained in the second and third verses, in which it appears to be clearly intimated that the body of Archytas has already received that which he is supposed so earnestly to pray for: for though many, I am aware, get over this difficulty by supposing 'cohibent munera' to mean that the want of the scanty gift of a little earth was keeping him back from his rest, I do not see how the words will bear that sense; nor can I translate 'cohibent' with Dillenbr. and others, as if it was meant that his body occupied but a small space on the surface of the ground. The words can only mean that he was under the sand, whether partially or otherwise, and in either case he would not require dust to be cast three times on him.

This consideration, as well as the unity and simplicity it gives to the ode, has induced me, with much confidence, to adopt the explanation I have given. The propriety of a sea-faring person being appealed to consists in his being exposed to risk of the same fate with the person who appeals to him.

ARGUMENT.

Even thee, thou measurer of earth and sea, thou counter of the sands, Archytas, how small a portion of earth contains thee now! It profits thee not to have searched the air and traversed the heavens since thou wert to die. So Tantalus, Tithonus, and Minos have died, and Pythagoras too with all his learning hath gone down once more to the grave. But so it is: all must die alike; some to make sport for Mars, some swallowed up in the deep: old and young go crowding to the grave: none escape: I too have perished in the waters. But grudge me not, thou mariner, a handful of earth: so may the storm spend itself on the woods while thou art safe and thy merchandize increases. Is it a small matter with thee to bring ruin on thy children? Yea, perhaps retribution awaits thyself: my curses will be heard, and then no atonement shall deliver thee. 'Tis but the work of a moment—thrice cast earth upon me and hasten on.
Te maris et terrae numeroque carentis arenae
Mensorem cohibent, Archytas,
Pulveris exigui prope litus parva Matinum
Munera, nec quidquam tibi prodest
Aérias tentasse domos animo roteundum
Percurrisse polum morituro.
Occidit et Pelopis genitor, conviva deorum,
Tithonusque remotus in auras
Et Jovis arcanis Minos admissus, habentque
Tartara Panthoiden iterum Orco
Demissum, quamvis elipeo Trojana refixo Tempora testatus nihil ultra Nervos atque cutem morti concesserat atrae,
Judice te non sordidus auctor
Naturae verique. Sed omnes una manet nox
Et calcanda semel via leti:
Dant alios Furiae torvo spectacula Marti;
Exitio est avidum mare nautis;

1. Te maris et terrae] ‘Te’ is emphatic, as the abruptness of the opening requires. μετρίων in κύμαρα (Theoc. xvi. 60), were proverbial expressions for lost labour. See Pind. Ol. 13. 46 and Georg. ii. 104. sqq. —

--- "neque enim numero comprehendere refert;
Quem qui scire velit, Libyci velit aequoris
Dicere quam multitae Zephyro turbatur arenae."

Archimedes’ work Oaaxμύρνα in which he computes the grains of sand on the shores of Sicily, was probably only looked upon by his contemporaries as the production of an ingenious dreamer, and may be alluded to here. There is no reason to suppose that Archytas ever attempted to solve any such problem.

3. Pulveris exigui — parva — Munera] See Introduction. ‘Munus,’ which seems to contain the same element as μοία, may be rendered as in the Argument. It is not properly equivalent to ‘donum.’

6. Percurrisse polum] ‘Atque omne immensum peragravit mente animoque,’ Lucr. i. 75.

9. Minos] Called by Hom. (Odyss. xix. 149) *Διὸς μεγᾶλον δοριστῆς, the grandson of him who became judge in Hades.

10. Panthoiden] The story alluded to is that of Pythagoras, who to prove his doctrine of metempsychosis declared that he had been Euphorbus the son of Panthous who fell in the Trojan war. In support of which he claimed as his own a shield hung up in the temple of Juno at Argos, which when taken down proved to have his name of Euphorbus engraved on it. The nearest translation that I can give of what follows ‘quamvis elipeo,’ &c. is, ‘although, by taking down the shield and testifying to the season of the Trojan war, he proved that he had surrendered nothing but his sinews and his skin to death.’

11. quamvis] ‘Tacitus and the later writers use ‘quamvis’ with an indicative, and vice versa ‘quanquam’ with a subjunctive’ (Key’s Gram. 1227, b. note). The prose-writers of Horace’s time would not use ‘quamvis’ with an indicative; and he uses the subjunctive where the case is strictly hypothetical, as C. iv. 2. 39, or where it suits the metre, as C. iv. 6. 7.

non sordidus auctor Naturae verique.] i.e. ‘no mean teacher of truth physical and moral,’ or, as we should say, ‘no mean authority’ on such subjects. Cicero says of Plato (Orat. iii.): ‘Has rerum formas appellat ideas ille non intelligendi solum sed etiam dicend om sess gravissimam auctor et magister,’ and of Caecilius: ‘malus auctor Latinitatis est’ (Ad Att. vii. 3). ‘A trustworthy person, one on whose evidence we can rely, is ‘auctor idoneus.’ Livy calls Mixta senum ac juvenum densentur funera, nullum
Saeva caput Proserpina fugit.

Me quoque devexi rapidus comes Orionis
Illyricis Notus obruit undis.
At tu, nauta, vagae ne parce malignus arenae
Ossibus et capiti inhumato

Particulam dare: sic quodcumque minabitur Eurus 25
Fluctibus Hesperii Venusinae
Plectantur silvae te sospite, multaque merces
Unde potest tibi defluat aequo

Ab Jove Neptunoque sacri custode Tarenti.
Negligis immitteris nocituram 30
Postmodo te natis fraudem committere? Fors et Debita jura vicesque superae

Te maneant ipsum: precibus non linquar inultis,
Teque piacula nulla resolvent.

Polybius 'actor non spernendus,' a man whose evidence and statements may be relied on." (Long on Cic. Verr. Act. ii. 5. c.
22, which note the student should refer to.)

17. Furiae] This name represents the Greek notion of the Erinnyes as Ποίαι, or 'Apati, the divinities which executed vengeance on the guilty, and in that character stirred up strife as here represented. So Virgil (Aen. iv. 610) calls them 'Dirae
ultrices;' and again (Aen. vii. 324):—

"Terrificam Allecto diraram ab sede so-rorum
Infernisque ciet tenebris; cui tristia bella
Iraeque insidiae et criminaux cordi,

See also Aen. xii. 845—852. 'Spectacula' corresponds to C. i. 2. 37. 'Avarum' is repeated C. iii. 29. 61, in spite of which,
with no MS. authority, or that of but one
MS. of a later date, Laminibus, Cruquius, and others read ' avidis,' which is a useless
epithet.

19. densentur] 'Densere' occurs in Lucretius, Virgil, and Tacitus. Livy has only ' densare.'

20. Proserpina fugit.] The perfect has the aoristic sense here. The allusion is explained by Virg. Aen. iv. 698:—

"Nondum illi (Didoni) flavum Proserpina vertex crinem
Abstulerat Stygioque caput damnaverat Orco."

In Eurip. (Alc. 74) Death says in respect to his victim,

στείχω δ' ἐπ' αὐθήν ὡς κατάρξωμαι
εἰρέω;
ἵρος γὰρ ὠμοὶ τῶν κατὰ θεονές θιῶν
ὅτω τοῦ ἐγχειρον κρατός ἀγνία γρίξα.

The general practice τοῦ κατάργεσθαι τῶν ἱρῶν was to cut off the forelock of the victim.

21. devexi—Orionis] Orion sets about the beginning of November, a bad time for sailors. C. iii. 27. 18. Epod. xv. 7. Virg.
Aen. vii. 719: "Saevus ubi Orion hibernis conditur undis."

23. At tu, nauta.] A shipmaster (see Introduction) may be supposed to be pass-ning, and the shade to appeal to him.

24. capiti inhumato] To avoid the hiatus Peerlkamp and Axt propose to substitute ' intumulato,' which Orelli thinks is a word coined by Ovid (Heroid. ii. 136): "Oc-currurque oculis intumulata tuis."
Other hiatuses occur C. ii. 29. 13. iii. 14. 11.
Epod. v. 100. xiii. 3.

25. sic] See note on i. 3. 1.

29. custode Tarenti.] Taras, the founder of Tarentum, was a son of Neptune, who is represented on Tarentine coins as the tutelar deity of the place.

31. Postmodo] This belongs to ' noxi-turam,' and ' te' is dependent on ' natis.'
'Modo' limits ' post' to a short time.

36. Injetto ter putere] The number three is so familiar in all ceremonies of a Quamquam festinas non est mora longa; licebit

Injecto ter pulvere curras.

required by the Roman law for neglect of this duty to the dead was a sow, and the person neglecting it was said 'porcam contrahere.' See Forcell. Praecidaneus. The word 'curras' is against the notion of the 'nauta' being at sea, as supposed by the theory Orelli favours (see Introduction), though he seems to think that it is used as in S. i. 1. 30, "per omne audaces mare qui currunt," where he quotes this passage. I do not think Horace would use it in that sense absolutely.

CARMEN XXIX.

In the year of the city 730 an army was sent into Arabia Felix by Augustus under Aelius Gallus, who was governor of Egypt. The force chiefly consisted of troops stationed in that province (Strabo, xvii.: Τελλάς Αλιός μηρι τῆς ἐν Λιγύντηρ φρονᾶς εἰς τὴν Ἀραβίαν ἰμβαλὼν, κ.τ.λ.); but the prospect of wealth the expedition held out, from the indefinite knowledge then possessed of the country, attracted young men at Rome and induced, it would seem, Iccius, a man of studious habits, to join it. The expedition was attended with nothing but disaster, and the greater part of the force perished. But Iccius survived, and we find Horace writing to him a few years later as Agrippa's steward in Sicily (Epp. i. 12). Beyond this nothing is known of Iccius. Much has been said about his being avaricious, and it will be found that that is the opinion of the author of his life in the Biographical Dictionary usually referred to in these notes; who says, that both in this ode and the epistle "Horace reprehends pointedly but delicately in Iccius an inordinate desire for wealth." I do not think this idea would have presented itself to so many minds if the Scholiasts had not made such remarks as these: "Ad Iccium scribirena quem miratur philosophiae intermisso studio repente se ad militarem vitam contulisse cupiditatem divitiarum." —"Parsimoniam laudat cum moracitate" (Acron). "Per quod videtur concupiscere divitias Arabum." —"Inconstantine reprehendit qui per avaritiam philosophiae studium militiae mutavit" (Porphyrius). Such remarks prove nothing and throw no light upon Horace's meaning, of which we must judge for ourselves. The point is not worth discussing as respects the unknown Iccius; but the character of the ode is lost in this view of it. It is a piece of good-tempered jocular irony, of which the point lies in the man of books going forth as a conqueror to subdue fierce nations untamed before, and to return laden with the spoils of the East. Iccius may have been of a restless character and not easily satisfied with his position, if we may judge by the language of the epistle; but that scarcely affects the spirit of this ode, in which there does not appear to be any thing serious expressed or intended. Later times have seen young and chivalrous men hastening to an El Dorado in expectation of wealth and distinction, and finding nothing but disappointment, and such appears to have been the case on the occasion of this expedition into Arabia.

Jacobs has discussed these two poems in his Lect. Venusinae, Art. i., reprinted from the Rhein. Mus. 1828. As the expedition was some time preparing, it is not clear whether this ode was written a. u. c. 730, the year of the expedition, or a year or two earlier.
ARGUMENT.

What, Iccius, after all dost thou grudge the Arabs their wealth, and prepare chains for the princes of Sabaea and the fierce Mede? Which of the fair barbarians dost thou mean to bring home for thy bed, or what royal page for thy table? Sure, rivers shall flow back to their mountains and the Tiber turn again, if Iccius can desert his books to put on the breastplate.

Iccius, beatis nunc Arabum invides Gazis, et acrem militiam paras
Non ante devictis Sabaeae
Regibus, horribilique Medo
Nectis catenas? Quae tibi virginum Sponso necato barbaro serviet?
Puer quis ex una capillis
Ad cyathum statuetur unctis,
Doctus sagittas tendere Sericas
Arcu paterno? Quis neget arduis Pronos relabi posse rivos Montibus et Tiberim reverti,
Cum tu coemptos undique nobilis

1. nunc] This word expresses surprise, ‘what now! to belic all expectations and abandon all your pursuits!’

2. Sabaeae] The Romans had possession of parts of Arabia Petraea but not of Arabia Felix. Hence he says—

“Intactis opulentior Thesauris Arabum.”

(C. iii. 24. 1.) It may have been reported that the army would proceed against the Parthians after the Arabs were conquered, or as is more probable the ‘horrible Mede’ is only introduced to heighten the colouring of the picture.

5. Quae—virginum—barbara] A very uncommon construction (like τίς ἄνδρι ἰδίῳ;) for ‘qua virgo barbaro’ or ‘qua virginitas barba- barum.’ There is humour in the question, as if Iccius had only to choose for himself some royal damsel whose betrothed he was to slay with his own hand, and an Eastern page of great beauty brought from his native wilds to wait upon one of the princes of this happy land. If Horace confounds Tarts and Parthians, it only makes the picture more absurd.

7. Puer ex una] These words are to be taken together. Boys whose office it was to pour out the wine are called in inscriptions ‘pueri a cyatho’ or ‘ad cyathum,’ or ‘ab argento potorio,’ ‘ad argentum potorium,’ ‘a potione,’ and so forth. Fea speaks of a very elegant picture of a boy in the act of pouring wine, which was dug up at Rome in 1780.

13. nobilis Panaeiti] It is difficult to decide whether Horace meant this epithet for ‘libros’ or ‘Panaeti.’ It will suit either, since the accusative plural is written in the MSS. ‘es,’ ‘eis’ or ‘is.’ Bentley connects it with the Stoic: but whether he is right or wrong in his conclusion his reason is bad: ‘ni libros duplicem epitheto accumulumus?’ ‘coemptos’ is not an epithet, and there was no reason why Horace should not say ‘nobiles libros coemptos’ in the sense ‘quos coemisti’ if he had pleased. Orelli agrees with Bentley.

Libros Panaetii Socraticam et domum
Mutare ionicis Hiberis
Pollicitus meliora tendis?

(Div. ii. 1); and Horace supposes himself to be asked 'quo me ducet, quo Lare tuler,' (Epp. i. 1. 13). From Panetius of Rhodes Cicero appears to have gathered the substance of his work De officiis. He professed the doctrines of the Stoics, but seems to have qualified them with opinions derived from the writings of Plato and others of the Socratic school, which accounts for their being mentioned in connexion with his name. He flourished in the second century B.C., and was intimate with the younger Scipio.

CARMEN XXX.

A fragment of one of Alcman's poems (10 Bergk) runs Κύπρον ἤμωτάν λιποίσα καὶ Πάφον περίφτητον, and of Sappho's (7 Bergk), ἣ σε Κύπρος ἢ Πάφος ἢ Πάνορμος. A longer fragment of Anacreon's (2 Bergk), containing an invocation to Bacchus on behalf of Cleobulus, is usually quoted in connexion with this ode, but it is not improbable that the main incident of a lady sacrificing or dedicating a little chapel to Venus is taken from life.

ARGUMENT.

Royal Venus, leave thy beloved Cyprus and come dwell in Glycera's temple. Let Love come with thee, and the Graces, and Nymphs, and Youth who is unlovely without thee, and Mercury too.

O Venus, regina Cnidi Paphique,
Sperne dilectam Cypron, et vocantis
Thure te multo Glyceriae decoram
Transfer in aedem.
Fervidus tecum puer et solutis
Gratiae zonis proponentque Nymphae
Et parum comis sine te Juventas Mercurique.

2. Sperne dilectam Cypron,] This can hardly fail to have been taken from the above fragment—Κύπρον ἤμωταν λιποίσα καὶ Πάφον περίφτητον.
4. aedem.] The humblest houses had their little chapel set apart for an image. Tibullus alludes to this (i. 10. 20),—

"Tunc melius tenuere fidem cum paupere cultu, Stabat in exigua lignaeus aede deus."

5. solutis Gratiae zonis] The Graces as Seneca saw them were always painted and sculptured with loose and transparent drapery (De Benefic. c. 3): "Quare tres Gratiae et quasi sorores sunt, et quare manibusimplexis, quare ridentes, quare juvenes, et quare virgines, solutaque ac perulcida veste?" Pausanias (ix. 35. 6) says that the older painters and sculptors represented them clothed, but the later ones in his time naked, οἱ δὲ ὑστερον όνκ αἰδα ἵπτ' ὑπὲρ μεταβαλθάσα το σχῆμα αὐτὰς. Χάριτας γονίν οἱ κατ' ἐκ πλασσόν τε καὶ γυραφον γυμνάς. See C. i. 4. 6; iii. 19. 16; iv. 7. 6.

7. Et parum comis sine te Juventas] See Homer (Hymn to Apollo, 195): ἧ βῆ τε Δῶς θυγατριν τ' Ἀφροδίτη. Plutarch (Conjugalia Praecepta, Introd.) explains the combination of Venus and Mercury and the others thus, οἱ παλαιοὶ τῇ Ἀφροδίτῃ τόν 'Ερμην συγκαθίσαντα ως τῆς περὶ τον γάμον ἕκοιν σάλλεσαν μάλιστα λόγον ἐκουσήν, την τε Πελεθραί ὕπατης οὐκ ἐπιθυμοῦντες εἰσπράττωμαι παρ' ἄλληλοιν ὧ βούλονται ἢ μή μαχόμενοι μηδὲ φιλονικοῦντες.
CARMEN XXXI.

In a.u.c. 726 (25th October), Augustus dedicated a temple with a library attached, which he had built in honour of Apollo, on the Palatine hill, to commemorate his victory at Actium (Suet. Octav. 29, Dio Cass. iii. 1). After the ceremonies of the day of dedication were over, we may suppose Horace putting in his own claim to the god’s favour in this ode, in which he represents himself as offering a libation (whether in private or at the temple is uncertain), and asking for that which according to Juvenal (x. 356) should be the end of all prayer, ‘mens sana in corpore sano!’

ARGUMENT.

What asks the poet with his libation of Apollo? not cups, or herds, or gold and ivory, or rich fields. Let those who may prune Calenian vines, and rich merchants drink rich wine out of cups of gold, favourites of heaven, who traverse the deep in safety. My food is the olive, the chicory, and mallow. Let me enjoy what I have, thou son of Lato, sound in body and mind, and let my age pass with honour and the lyre.

Quid dedicatum poscit Apollinem
Vates? quid orat de patera novum
Fundens liquorem? Non opimae Sardiniae segetes feraces,
Non aestuosae grata Calabriae
Armenta, non aurum aut ebur Indicum,
Non rura quae Liris quieta
Mordet aqua taciturnus amnis,
Premant Calena falce quibus dedit
Fortuna vitem, dives et aureis
Mercator exsiccet culullis
Vina Syra reparata merce,

1. dedicatum] This word is applied to the god as well as his temple. So Cic. de N. D. ii. 33, says, “ut Fides ut Mens quas in Capitolio dedicatas vidimus proxime a M. Aemilio Scauro.” Or. Fast. vii. 637:—

“Te quoque magnifica, Concordia, dedicat
Livia.”

5. Calabriae] C. i. 6. 10; Epod. i. 27, n. 9. Premant] Virgil uses this word in the same sense (Georg. i. 157): “et ruris opaci Falce premes umbras;” and Ovid (Met. xiv. 628):—

“adunca dextera falce
Qua modo luxuriem premit et spatiantia passim Brachia compescit.”

‘Vitem’ is governed, ἀπὸ κοινοῦ, by ‘pre-mant’ and ‘dedit.’ It is only necessary to mention this because of the punctuation of Bentley and other editors, who put a comma after ‘falce’ and another after ‘Fortuna.’ Bentley prefers ‘Calenam’ to ‘Calena.’ But, though the omission of the mark which usually represents the final ‘m’ is so common that it proves nothing in exceptional cases, yet there is no reason to suppose the抄ysts of all existing and known MSS. made the omission in this instance. But none read ‘Calenam.’ ‘Falce,’ moreover, is much less terse with the epithet than without; and, notwithstanding Bentley’s distinction between fixtures and moveable instruments, the expression ‘Calena falce,’ is as appropriate as ‘praelo Caleno,’ above (20. 9), or ‘Laestrygonia amphora,’ ‘Sabina diota,’ ‘Graeca testa,’ where to the press that makes or the vessel which contains the
HORATII FLACCI

Dis carus ipsis, quippe ter et quater
Anno revisens aequor Atlanticum
Impune. Me pascunt olivae,
Me cichorea levesque malvae.
Frui paratis et valido mihi,
Latoë, donec et precor integra
Cum mente, nec turpem senectam Degere nec cithara carentem.

wine is applied the name of the wine itself,
by a common enallage.
12. Vina Syra reparata merce,] Wine taken in exchange for Syrian goods, which includes all the costly merchandise of the East; elsewhere called 'Tyriae merces.'
The seaports of Syria were entrepôts for goods from and for the East, and were frecuented by a vast number of ships from all parts.—Though Horace uses many words compounded with 're,' without any perceptable difference of meaning from the simple words, as 'retractare,' 'resercare,' 'resolvere,' 'revincre,' 'renare,' 'remittere,' there is the force of bartering in this word,
as in ἀνταγωγικέςθαι. (See C. i. 37, 24,
n. 'Mercator' was a dealer in wares, who generally sailed or travelled with his goods into foreign parts to dispose of them. The 'mercatores' were an enterprising class, and penetrated into barbarous and distant countries and dangerous seas in pursuit of money. The mention of the Atlantic is a little out of place immediately after 'Syra merce'—but as usual Horace writes generally, and does not aim at strict accuracy.
'Aequor Atlanticum' suited his verse.
The travelling merchants are often referred to by Horace. See C. i. 1. 15; iii. 24. 40.
S. i. 1. 6, 4. 29. Epp. i. 1, 45, 16. 71.

CARMEN XXXII.

This ode has caused the commentators a good deal of trouble. Whether it was meant to be an introduction to some poem Horace wrote or intended to write on one of the events of the day, or what sort of song he was asked for and by whom, are all questions that have been freely discussed. The question turns in the first instance on the word with which the ode begins. The Scholiasts read 'Poscimur,' on which Acron's comment is 'poscebatur dicta sua edere;' Porphyrion's 'Exigitur a nobis ut canamus.' But a large number of MSS. have 'Poscimus,' which Bentley adopts after Lambinus and all the older editions. (Cruquius, however, following his Blandinian MS., reads 'Poscimur."
With that reading the ode becomes a mere invocation of the Muse, which would suit any poem or any subject. With 'Poscimur,' which I have followed most of the modern editors in adopting, there is still no clue whatever to the occasion of the ode, and the Scholiasts' remarks do not help us. I see no grounds for Dillenbr.'s supposition that on some important occasion Horace was asked to write a poem, and wrote this short ode to deprecate such a demand, and to show that his muse was not suited to such themes.
There is nothing in it of that sort. I have no doubt 'poscimus' is the true reading, and it may mean merely that the poetic 'afflatus' was on him. The abruptness of the opening favours that notion. See note on v. 2.

ARGUMENT.

I am asked to sing. If I have ever composed a song that shall not die, with thee my lyre, come help me to a Latin song—thou whom Alcaeus did first touch, who in the field or on the deep still sung of Liber, the Muses, Venus and her son, and Lycus with dark eyes and hair. Thou glory of Phoebus, welcome at the tables of the gods, thou consoler of my toils, help me whenever I shall invoke thee.

Poscimur. Si quid vacui sub umbra
Lusimus tecum quod et hunc in annum
Vivat et plures, age dic Latinum, Barbite, carmen,
Lesbio primum modulate civi,
Qui ferox bello tamen inter arma,
Sive jactatam religarat udo
Litore navim,
Liberum et Musas Veneremque et illi
Semper haerentem puerum canebat
Et Lyceum nigris oculis nigroque Crine decorum.
O decus Phoebi et dapibus suprimei
Grata testudo Jovis, o laborum
Dulce lenimen, mihi cumque salve
Rite vocanti.

1. Poscimur.] See Introduction. 'Umbra' Bentley changes into 'antro.' He does not quarrel with 'umbra,' but finding 'antro' in one MS. he embraces it with both his arms: 'Non possimus non ambabus ulnis eam amplecti.' Cunningham, his foe, is here his only follower I believe, though he (Bentley) proves satisfactorily by twenty quotations that poets do sometimes compose their verses in caves.

2. Quod et hunc in annum] It has been disputed whether these words belong to 'lusimus' or to 'carmen.' I take them to belong to the former. Horace seems to mean that he feels impelled to higher strains than he had yet practised, and he calls on his lyre to help him whenever he should approach them. From the words
'Latinum carmen,' Gesner supposes the ode to have been written for the 'Ferine Latine,'
'Barbitos' is used as a feminine noun by the early Greek writers. On the battles, and voyages, and mishaps of Alcaeus Smith's Dict. Biog. may be consulted.
(See also C. ii. 13. 26. sqq.) The name of Lycus appears in a fragment of Alcaeus still extant (57 Bergk), being quoted by the Scho-lissant on Pind. Ol. x. 15: 'οικ Εγω Λύκον in Moisayς Αλήω. Cicero (de Nat. Deor.
i. 21) says, 'Naevus in articulo pueri de-lectat Alcæum. At est corporis macula naevus: illi tamen lumen videbatur,' where 'in articulo pueri' has been supposed to be a corruption of 'in Lyco puer.'

5. modulate] See C. i. 1. 24, n.

10. haerentem] This verb 'haerere' is taken by Horace with a dative as here, and
S. i. 10. 49; or with an ablative with 'in,'
as S. i. 3. 32; or without 'in,' as C. i. 2.
S. ii. 3. 205.

15. Cumque] As 'quandoque' is put for 'quandocumque' (see Index); 'cumque' is put for 'cumcumque' or 'quaquumquaque,'
which occurs in Lucret. ii. 113:

"Contemplator enim, quum solis lumina ququadem
Insertim fundunt radios per opaca domo-
rum!"

'Cumque' belongs to 'vocanti.'
CARMEN XXXIII.

The extant elegies properly attributed to Tibullus mention only two mistresses of his, under the names of Delia and Nemesis, and these are the only two that Ovid mentions in the beautiful eergy he wrote on that poet's death (Amor. iii. 9. 31, 55, sqq.). Of the person he calls Delia he was enamoured during the earlier part of his life; of Nemesis during his later years. (He died between thirty and forty, about the same time as Virgil.) Much has been written to prove that the Glycera of this ode stands for Delia (see particularly Spohn de A. Tibulli vita et carm. p. 50. 96, who believes that Delia, Nemesis, Glycera, Neaera—a name occurring only in the third book, which Tibullus it is pretty certain did not write, were all the same woman). Others have identified Glycera with Nemesis, on account of the number and quantity of the syllables being the same, and the epithets Tibullus applies to her, 'avara,' 'rapax,' 'saeva,' 'dura,' which correspond to Horace's 'inmitis.' Dissen is certain that Glycera is neither Delia nor Nemesis, but another mistress otherwise unknown. Orelli is of the same opinion, but adds that those who thus attempt to settle to a nicety the loves of Roman gentlemen, and pretend to know more about them than they have told us, only create a smile among those who have lived long in France or Italy,—impling that his countrymen were had judges of the amusements of their more gallant neighbours. It is not even certain that Tibullus wrote the pitiful elegies Horace speaks of. Glycera is one of Horace's favourite names, and cannot be taken for a real name here or elsewhere. It occurs in Plautus (Mil. Glor. ii. 5. 26); and Martial (xiv. 187). Whether the person had any more reality than the name or the verses is I think doubtful. That Tibullus wrote elegies, that he was not rarely crossed in love, and that he was on some occasion in a desponding humour, are facts sufficient to form a probable foundation for this good-tempered little poem. Whoever goes further than this will find he is out of his depth.

Horace was much attached to Tibullus, who was a favourite with his contemporaries. To him was addressed the fourth epistle of the first book.

ARGUMENT.

Come, Albius, do not be drawing pitiful poetry upon Glycera, because she prefers a younger man to you. Pretty Lycoris loves Cyrus, Cyrus inclines to Pholoe, who admires the vulgar sinner as the she-goat loves the wolf. Such are Love's diversions, bringing opposites under the yoke together. So it happened to me—a tender heart was attached to me, while I could not free myself from the fetters of Myrtale, more cruel than the waves of the Adriatic.

Albi, ne doleas plus nimio memor
Immitis Glycerae, neu miserables
Decantes elegos cur tibi junior Laesa praenitentiae fide.

Insignem tenui fronte Lycorida

3. cur] 'Cur,' or 'quur,' is formed from 'qui' (Keys' Gr. 316), and has the force of 'quod' here, as in Epp. i. 8. 10, and in Cicero (Att. iii. 13): "quod me accusas cur hunc meum casum tam graviter feram debes ignoscere."

5. tenui fronte] A low forehead was considered a beauty, and the women braided their hair accordingly, as is seen in some statues, among others in the so-called Isis of the Townley Gallery. The same appears to have been considered an attraction in men, Epp. i. 7. 26: "reddes — nigros augusta fronte capillos." Intellectual beauty...
Cyri torret amor, Cyrus in asperam
Declinat Pholoë; sed prius Apulis
Jungentur capreæ lupis
Quam turpi Pholoë pecesset adultero.
Sic visum Veneri, cui placet impares
Formas atque animos sub juga ænea
Saevo mittere cum joco.
Ipsum me, melior cum peteret Venus,
Grata detinuit compede Myrtale
Libertina, fretis acrior Hadriae Curvantis Calabros sinus.

as we view it in men is better described by Pliny, Epist. iii. 6. 2: "rari et cedentes capilli; lata frons."
6. C. r. in asperam Declinat Pholoë] Heyne, on Tibull, i. 8, has been at pains to show that Horace's Pholoë and the heroine of that elegy are identical; and Broukhusius identifies Cyrus with her lover Marathus.
Any one who reads Horace's words with his eyes open will see that he is making names for a case of common occurrence;
and whoever cares to read Tibullus' elegy, which is the least pure of his poems, will see that he is not pleading for a Cyrus such as Horace describes. See C. ii. 5.

8. Jungentur capreæ lupis] This is a common hyperbole. Ep. xvi. 30: "Novaque monstra junxitur libidine Mirus λέυκος εἰν ὑμναίοι.
14. compede] This word is used twice again by Horace in the singular number:
"grata compede vinctum" (C.iv. 11. 24);
"nivali compede vincxit" (Epp. i. 3. 3);
and once by Tibullus: "Spes etiam valida solatur compede vincitum" (ii. 6. 25). These are the only instances till after the Augustan age. Bentley has quoted several inscriptions to show that Myrtale was a common name among freedwomen.

CARMINUM I. 33, 34.

CARMEN XXXIV.

If Horace had any serious meaning in this ode, as I think he had, it is to be supposed he wrote it under some impulse of conscience, which told him that he had been too careless of that sovereign power which governs all things. The language, though impulsive, appears genuine; and whether it was through the phenomenon here mentioned or any other cause that his mind was impressed, he seems to express more than merely poetical feeling; and the power acknowledged is not that conventional Fortune of the next ode, but the Supreme Being who declares his existence by the voice of conscience, through sudden impressions and startling signs, such as under some form or other we may believe Horace was struck with.

I believe Baxter was the first from the word 'apicem' (v. 14) to suppose an allusion to the Parthians and the transfer of the power from Phraates to Tiridates, or back from Tiridates to Phraates. This opinion is generally adopted now, and Buttmann has given it his sanction. He says "apex is the peculiar name for the head-dress of the Persian kings; and, just about the time when by the most probable calculation the odes of this book must have been written, a revolution took place in the Parthian empire, the most powerful state in the world next to Rome, whereby Tiridates was dethroned and driven out of the country, and Phraates was re-established in his stead." More weight I think is given to these words than they deserve. Chronologically considered they must be allowed to be very loose. The translator of Buttmann's article in the Cambridge Philosophical Museum (May, 1832) destroys his theory completely by saying, "there can be little doubt too that Horace was also thinking of the omen of Lucius Tarquinius: the image and the expressions

\[\text{\textit{Hinc epicem rapax}}\]
\[\text{\textit{Fortuna cum stridore acuto}}\]
\[\text{\textit{Sustulit'}}\]

clearly allude to the eagle that carried up his bonnet 'cum magno clangore,' as Livy tells the story; and, though Livy calls the bonnet a 'pileus,' Cicero (de Legg. i. 1) uses the very word 'apex.' It is not probable that Horace meant to allude to both these historical facts together, but more likely that he intended neither the one nor the other; and that the 'dilogia' supposed has been too hastily taken up from Baxter, who finds these double meanings at every turn.

ARGUMENT.

Careless of Heaven I have been wandering in the darkness of an insane creed; I now retrace my steps, awakened by the sign of Jove's chariot dashing through an unclouded sky, that chariot with which he shakes the earth, the waters, and hell, and the ends of the world. God is strong to bring down the mighty and exalt the low, to take the crown from one and place it on the head of another.

\textbf{Parcus deorum cultor et infrequens}

\textbf{Insanientis dum sapientiae}

\textbf{Consultus erro, nunc retrorsum}

\textbf{Vela dare atque iterare cursus}

\textbf{Cogor relietos: namque Diespiter,}

\textbf{Igni coruseo nubila dividens}

\textbf{Plerumque, per purum tonantes}

\textbf{Egit equos volucremque currum,}

---

2. sapientiae] 'Sapientia' is used for philosophy. The doctrines of Epicurus are so called \textit{kar} ἐξοχή by Lucretius:

---

"Deus ille fuit, Deus, inculce Memmi, Qui princeps vitae rationem inventam quae Nunc appellatur sapientia" (v. 8, sqq.).

This creed Horace professed, writing in his twenty-eighth year, to hold,

---

"Deos didici securum agere aequum
Nec si quid miri faciat natura, deos id Tristes ex alto caeli demittere tecto."

(Sat. i. 5. 101.) But it is not necessary to take him at his word. On 'consultus,' which is used like 'jurisconsultus,' see Forcell. Lambinus has collected from the Greek poets many expressions like 'insanientis sapientiae,' and has added one or two from Cicero, which Orelli has copied, and has added δοσφος, ἤ ν ὁ τις ὁ νομισάω, σοφία from Gregory of Nazianzus, who has imitated Horace perhaps unconsciously.

5. relictos:] N. Heinsius (on Ovid, Met. viii. 173) conjectured 'relectas,' and Bentley has adopted that word, solemnly affirming that he thought of it before he knew Heinsius had done so; "equidem, quod sancte asseverare possum," &c. Gesner says it is a necessary correction. No other editors have been of that opinion, and the MSS. have all 'relictos,' and the verse is so quoted by Eutyches the grammarian (ap. Bent.). The reader will judge how much weight is due to the alteration by reading Bentley's condemnation of the received reading. "Iterare relictia maria, vestigia, vias, spatia, recte quidem dixeris, cursus autem cum non ipsa via sed per viam decurso, non dixeris cursus relietos sed intermissos; non desertos, sed destitos." Most persons who can admit the propriety of 'viar relietis' will not quarrel with 'cursus relietos.' 'Iterare cursus relietos' signifies to return to the paths he had left; 'iterare' being equivalent to 'repetero.'
Quo bruta tellus et vaga flumina, Quo Styx et invisi horrida Taenari
Sedes Atlanteusque finis
Concutitur. Valet ima summis

Dissipiter,] Aulus Gellius (Noct. Att. v. 12) says that this name was given to Jove as 'diei et lucis pater,' and Macrobius probably only follows Gellius in giving the same derivation. 'Dies' is an old form of the genitive (Key's Gr. § 146). But probably the two first syllables are only a different form of 'Jupp.' in 'Jupiter,' and from the same root as Zeus.

7. per purum tonantes The phenomenon of thunder heard in a clear sky is frequently alluded to by the ancients, and was held especially ominous. The chorus in Oed. Col. (v. 1450) suddenly exclaims *εκπεν αθόρμ, ὥ Ζεὺς, *which Oedipus takes up immediately as a sign of his approaching end. See Virg. Georg. i. 487. Aen. vii. 141, &c. Hom. Odys. xx. 112, sqq.:—

> Ζεὺς πάτερ—
> ή μιγάλ ἰβούρνησας ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ ἀστερεῶνος
> οὐδὲ παῦ νύφος ἑστὶ τέρας νῦ τειρ τοῦτο ραῖνες.

Lambinus has collected many more instances. Lucrètius denies the possibility of such anomalous thunder (vi. 247):

> ——'nam caelo nulla sereno
> Nec leviter decusis mittuntur nibibus unquam.'

And again (v. 400):

> 'Denique quae nunquam caelo jacit undique puro
> Jupiter in terras fulmen sonitusque profundit ?'

Nearly all the old editions put a stop after 'dividers' and join 'plerumque' with what follows, which makes nonsense. The Scholiasts did not read the passage so, nor Landinus; otherwise I have met with none till Talbot who have not thus spoilt the passage. Bentley has a very long note to prove what requires no evidence but that of common sense, and to claim the merit of the discovery. It is singular that he had not seen it in the edition of Baxter to whom he sometimes refers with respect, and who complains in a later edition of the 'great and ingenious man's' injustice to his countryman. But Talbot had preceded them both, and got no credit from either; so had Creecy (note on Lucret. vi. 95).

11. Atlanteusque finis] Apparently imitated from Eurip. (Hipp. 3), τερμώνων τ' Ατλαντικών.

12. Valet ima summis] It is impossible not to compare this with various familiar passages of the sacred Scriptures; as, 'He hath put down the mighty from their seat and exalted them of low degree' (Luke i. 52). 'Promotion cometh neither from the east nor from the west nor from the south. But God is the Judge; he putteth down one and setteth up another' (Psalm lxxv. 6, 7). The sentiment however is common. Tacitus seems to have had Horace's words in his mind when he wrote of the public funeral given to Flavius Sabinus and the overthrow of Vitellius, that they were "magna documenta instabilis fortunae sumnaque et ima miscentis" (Hist. iv. 47). Seneca has the same words in his Thyestes (508): 'Iam permutat levis hora summis;' Ausonius in his 143rd epigram says of Fortune, 'Et summa in imum vertit et versa erigit.' Horace's words were no doubt familiar to these writers. Bentley would read 'insigne' for 'insignem' to keep the opposition uniform. Cunningham with more consistency would have 'insignia,' comparing Virg. Aen. vi. 35:

> "Bis patriae occidere manus. Quin protinus omnia > Perlegerent oculis," and other places of the same kind. But we may be contented with 'insignem' (the reading of all the MSS.), which has more poetry in it than the neuter, and is more expressive of that which is meant, the vicissitudes of human life. Bentley supposes Horace to have had in mind Hesiod's Works and Days (5, sqq.), 'Ρία μὲν γὰρ βραών ῥία δὲ βραώμα αχαίπτεν, Ρία δὲ ἀρίηλον μὴν βυθι καὶ ἀθάνον διέζων, Ρία δὲ τ' ἅλευνε σκολοῦν καὶ ἀγίνορα κάρας Ζεὺς ὑψιζημίστης, and answers his own objection to 'insignem' by saying that ἀρίηλον is masculine.

On the allusions in the last stanza see Introduction. The language corresponds to the opening stanza of the next ode. 'Apex' signifies properly the tuft (composed of wool wrapped round a stick) or the top of the Flamen's cap. It appears to stand for any covering of the head, for, as before observed, Cicero uses it to express Livy's Mutare et insignem attenuat deus
Obscura promens; hine apicem rapax
Fortuna cum striodore acuto Sustulit, hic possuisse gaudet.

'pileus.' ‘Ab aquila Tarquinio apicem impositum putant’ (de Legg. i. 1); and Horace applies it to the royal crown (C. iii.
21. 20). ‘Valere’ with an infinitive is not used by prose-writers till after the Augustan age.

CARMEN XXXV.
A. U. C. 728.

When Augustus was meditating an expedition against the Britons and another for the East, Horace commended him to the care of Fortune the preserver, as Findar committed the sons of Himera:

Δίσεομαι, παί Ζηνός 'Ελευθερίων,
'Ιμέραν εὖροσθείνε' ἀμφιπόλει, Σωτερα Τέχα
τίν γὰρ ἐν πόντῳ κυβερνῶντα θοι νάεις, ἐν χήρα ἔτε θεομορφοί πόλειμ κάγοραι βουλαφορόι. (Olymp. xii.)

Which passage probably Horace had in mind. The last expedition against Britain contemplated by Augustus was a. u. c. 728 (Dion Cass. 53. 25), which was interrupted by an insurrection of the Salassians, an Alpine people, who in Tīn Βρεταννίαν ἐπιειδὴ μὴ ἥθησαν ομολογήσαι στρατευσιόντων κατίσχον οἱ Σαλάσσοι. At the same time he was preparing the force that was to conquer Arabia (see C. 29 of this book). To this year therefore the composition of this ode may be assigned.

The oldest temples of the goddess Fortune were at Rome, where we learn from Plutarch (on the Fortune of the Romans, c. x.), τὰ τῆς Τύχης ἵππα πάμπολλα καὶ παλαιὰ καὶ λαμπρὰ τιμᾶς πάσας ὡς ἑπάν εἰπέν ἐνδυρθαν καὶ καταμίκται τοῖς ἵππονυστάtοις μέρεσι καὶ τόποις τῆς πόλεως.
The oldest of her temples was dedicated to Fortuna Virilis by Ancus Martius (Plutarch says).
There was another to Fortuna Muliebris, found in commemoration of the victory of Coriolanus’ mother over her son; and Servius Tullius founded two on the Capitoline hill to Fortuna Primigenia and Fortuna Obsequens: on the Palatine hill there were two to Fortuna Privata and Fortuna Viscosa.
There was also a Fortuna Virginalis and a Fortuna Bonae Spei, a Fortuna Mascula, Ἀλλαὶ τε μύραι Τύχης τιμαι καὶ ἵππονύστας ἃν τὰς πλεῖστας Σφρομίας χατιστην, εἰδὼς ὅτι μεγάλῃ ῥοπῇ, μᾶλλον ἐκ ὀξιν, ἡ Τύχη παρὰ πάντα λέγεται ἀδιάβρωτων πράγματα. But the worship of this goddess was most solemnly maintained, when Horace wrote, at Praeneste and at Antium, where she had an oracle. The Roman conception of this divinity was probably different from that of the Greeks, who thought of her chiefly as a capricious goddess and blind. But that such was not the only idea of her even among the Greeks is plain from Findar’s ode above quoted. Findar in other poems now lost described her as φερίπολις, the supporter of states; also as one of the Μοῖραι, and the most powerful of them; but elsewhere as ἀπευθής, uncertain, unknown; in which character casual altars were erected to her by the Greeks as ἀγνώστος θεὸς.
See St. Paul’s address to the Athenians in Acts xvii. 23; also Pausanias, iv. 30; vii. 26;
and Plutarch’s Treatise above mentioned, caps. 4 and 10. From Plutarch’s account she would appear to be the one divinity held from the earliest times in repute by the Romans. How far Horace may have drawn the attributes and attendants he here assigns to Fortune from generally received notions, or whether the images are partly his own, we cannot determine. She was represented on Roman coins with a double ship's rudder in one hand and a cornucopiae in the other, which may furnish a clue to the allusions in the second stanza. There are passages which may have been drawn from paintings in the temple at Antium. It is difficult to say. But there is no ode more justly celebrated for the combination of various images, and for its condensed poetry than this.

ARGUMENT.

Queen of Antium, all-powerful to exalt or to debase, the poor tenant cultivator worships thee and the mariner on the deep. Thou art feared by the savage Dacian and nomad Scythian, by all cities and nations, yea by proud Latium herself, by royal mothers trembling for their sons, and kings fearing for their crowns. Necessity with her stern emblems goes before thee. Hope and Fidelity go with thee when thou leavest the house of prosperity, while false friends fall away.

Preserve Caesar as he goeth to conquer Britain; preserve the fresh levies destined for the East. It repenteth us of our civil strife and impious crimes. Let the sword be recast and whetted for the Scythian and the Arab.

O DIVA, gratum quae regis Antium,
Praesens vel imo tollere de gradu
Mortale corpus vel superbos
Vertere funeribus triumphos,
Te pauper ambit sollicita prece
Ruris colonus, te dominam aequoris
Quicunque Bithynia lacessit
Carpathium pelagus carina.
Te Dacus asper, te profugi Scythae
Urbesque gentesque et Latium ferox Regumque matres barbarorum et Purpurei metuunt tyranni,
Injurioso ne pede prorugas
Stantem columna, neu populus frequens
Ad arma cessantes, ad arma
Concitet imperiumque frangat.

2. Praesens] There is no other instance of praesens with an infinitive. Forcell, gives several examples of praesens with the signification of potens. In its application to the gods it expresses their presence as shown by their power. In three other places Horace applies it to them (see Index); and Cicero (Tusc. Disp. i. 12. 20) says of Hercules, "rapad Graecos indeque prolapseas ad nos et usque ad Oceanum tantus et tam praesens habetur deus."

9. profugi Scythae] This is explained by the wandering habits of the Scythians, not by their method of fighting above alluded to. It explains "campestres Scythae" (C. iii. 24. 9), and corresponds to (Aesch. P. V. 700) Σκίδαθας ὧ δ' ἀφίκετο νομίδας ὧι πλεκτας στίγμα τετράθει ναισίς ἵπποι εὐκάρποις ἀχοῖς.

11. Regumque matres barbarorum] Orelli quotes the description in the 5th chapter of Judges, ver. 28: "The mother of Sisera looked out at a window, and cried through the lattice, Why is his chariot so long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariot?" There are four objects in respect of which Fortune is here said to be invoked—the seasons, the winds, war, and faction. See Introduction.
Te semper anteit saeva Necessitas
Clavos trabales et cuneos manu
Gestans ääna, nec severus
Uneus abest liquidumque plumbum.

Te Spes et albo rara Fides colit
Velata panno nec comitem abnegat,
Uteunque mutata potentest
Veste domos inimica linquis.

At volgus infidum et meretrix retro
Perjura cedit, diffugient cadis
Cum faece siccatis amici
Ferre jugum pariter dolosi.

Serves iturum Caesarem in ultimos
Orbis Britannos et juvenum recens
Examen Eois timendum Partibus Oceanoque rubro.

14. Siantem columnam.] The figures of Peace, Security, Happiness, and others, are each represented on old monuments as resting on a column. Addison (Dial. ii. on Medals) mentions a medal of Antoninus Pius on the reverse of which securitas publica is thus represented.

17. Te semper anteit saeva Necessitas] The several things that Necessity is here represented as holding are emblems of tenacity and fixedness of purpose—the nail, the clamp, and the molten lead; they have nothing to do with torture as many have supposed.

18. ‘Clavi trabales’ had passed into a proverb with the Romans. Compare Cicero in Verr. Act. ii. 5. 21: ‘ut hoc beneficium, quemadmodum dietur, trabali clavo figurat.’ ‘Cunei’ were also nails wedge-shaped, the diminutive of which ‘cuncoi;’ Cicero employs in translating a passage from Plato’s Timaeus (p. 1053), οὐ τοῖς ἀλτοῖς οἷς αὐτοὶ νυσίξας δεσμός ἀλλὰ διὰ σιμείατα ἀδόρατος πυκνοὶ γόμφοι συντήκουσε, which Cicero renders ‘crebris quasi cuneolis injectis’ (Tim. 13). Forcellini does not give this sense of ‘cuneus,’ but it occurs in Cicero’s translation from Aeschylus (Tusc. ii. 10), where Promethes fastened to the rock says of Mulciber,

19. Hos ille cuneos fabrica crudeli inserens
Ferrupit artus: qua miser sollertia
Transverberatus castrum hoc furiarum incolo.

Pindar uses the same metaphor (Pyth. iv. 71), τίς δὲ κινδύνος εφαρμοίς ἀδιά-maντος δῆσεν ἄλοις; and Aeschylus (Sup. 944), τῶν δ’ ιδήλωτα τοίχω φόμος εὐάματα ως μένων ἀφαράτως—of a decree.

On the nails of Fate see C. iii. 24. 7. The metaphor of molten lead, used for strengthening buildings, is used by Euripides (Androm. 267), καὶ γὰρ εἰ πέριξ σ’ ἤξει τητός μο-νεθὸς.

21. The picture represented in this and the following stanzas, apart from the allegory, is that of a rich man in adversity going forth from his home with hope in his breast and accompanied by a few faithful friends, but deserted by those who only cared for his wealth. In the person of Fortune therefore is represented the man who is suffering from her reverses, and in that of Fidelity the small (rara) company of his true friends. Fortune is represented in the garments of mourning (mutata veste), and Fides in a white veil emblematic of her purity. With such a veil on their head men offered sacrifice to her, according to the Scholiasts on this passage. She is called by Virgil (Aen. i. 206) ‘Cana Fides,’ where Servius has a note which connects the expression with this of Horace. But there it probably means ‘aged.’ According to Livy (i. 21) Numa established religious rites for Fides.

22. nec comitem abnegat] Ovid (A. A. i. 127) has copied this expression, which is the same as if i se’ had been added: ‘Si qua repugnarat nimirum comitemque ne-garat.’ Bentley, quite mistaking the character of this passage, proposes to read ‘vertis’ for ‘linquis,’ v. 24.

Eheu cicatrixum et sceleris pudet
Fratrumque. Quid nos dura refugimus

Aetas? quid intactum nefasti
Liquimus? unde manum juvenus
Met deorum continuit? quibus Pepercit aris? O utinam nova Ineunde diffingas retusum in Massagetas Arabasque ferrum!

28. Ferre jugum pariter dolosi. This appears to be an imitation of Pindar (Nom. x. 78), o"kat oμα δ' εκθνων ταυτωμα
Φωτ: παροι δ' ην πόσος τιστει βροτων Kαμάτων μεταλαβάντων. Theocritus has a similar expression (xii. 15), ἀλλὰς των δ' ἐφηθραφ ἦσσι �aphore: and Plautus (Asul. ii. 2. 52),

"— ubi tecum conjunctus sim, Ubi onus nequeam ferre pariter, jaceam ego asinum in luto;"

the metaphor being obviously taken from beasts unequally yoked.

29. ultimos Orbis Britannos See Introduction. "Et penitus toto divios orbe Britannos" (Virg. Ec. i. 67). Catullus (Epig. xi.) says—

"Sive in extremos penetrabit Indos—— Gallicum Rhenum horribiles et ultimo mosque Britannus."

Bentley objects to 'ultimos orbis,' and proposes 'oro' for 'orbis.' He thinks the expression barbarous, but admits that Virgil wrote 'extremique hominum Morini' (Aen. viii. 727), which is sufficiently like Horace's phrase. Cunningham proposes 'ultimi.' But the MSS. do not vary. They all have 'ultimos orbis.' Lucan (viii. 541) has 'extremique orbis Iberi,' where however Bentley says 'extremi' is the genitive case.

39. diffingas retusum] This must have been the reading of the Scholiasts, of whom Acron says, "Diffingas, confusum reformes, nam et sic ut ferre formare dictur, sic et diffingere est quassatum reformare. Retusum, civilibus bellis hebetatum;" and Porphyrion: "ut ferrum quod retudimus in corporibus nostrorum bello civil diffingas (i.e. refabrices) adversus Barbaros." This gives a very good meaning; but 'diffingas' is a word met with in no author but Horace, who uses it here and in C. iii. 29. 47: "neque diffinget infectumque reddet." MS. authority on words compounded with 'di' and 'de' is not to be trusted, as before observed (C. i. 1. 13). Some MSS. of good character have 'defingas' and some 'recusum.' Bentley adopts 'defingas,' saying that nothing can be more alien from Horace's meaning than 'diffingere,' which is to 'break up' or 'unmake.' What sense he gives to 'defingas' he does not say. For 'retusum' he proposes 'recoctum' out of his own head, thereby losing one of the chief points in the sentence, viz. the blunting of the sword on the bodies of their brethren, as Cunningham observes (Animad. v. p. 346). 'Recusum incede' is justly objected to. The MSS. are in the proportion of four to one in favour of 'diffingas retusum;' and all the old editions have that reading. Lambinus can make nothing of it, and proposed first 'destringes,' and then in a later edition 'defigas' with 'recusum.'

---

CARMEN XXXVI.

About a. u. c. 730.

Who Numida was we have no means of knowing. That his gentillician name was Plotius is stated by Comm. Cruq., while the other Scholiasts, Acron and Porphyrion, call him Pomponius. But Numida appears to have been a cognomen of the Plotia or Plantia gens (see Estré, Prosop. p. 480). That he was an intimate friend of Horace's appears from this ode. He was also a great friend of Lamia's (see C. 26 of this book). Baxter supposes him to have been one of Pompey's party, and to have returned to Rome from following Sextus in Spain with Augustus' pardon, which he infers from the unusual joy Horace expresses. Buttmann seems to give, whether designedly or not I cannot tell, some support to this notion by saying of Bassus, one of the friends introduced in this ode, that “if Quintus Caecilius Bassus, whom we read of in Cicero and other writers as a leading person among the Pompeian party, had a son, he would be just such a youth as we want” to fill that part. It is generally believed, however, that the person who forms the principal subject of this ode had lately returned from the army in Spain, either with Augustus A.D.C. 730 or a little while before.

ARGUMENT.

Let us sacrifice to the guardian gods of Numida on his safe return from Spain; he is come to embrace his dear friends, but none more heartily than Lamia in remembrance of their early days. Mark the fair day with a white mark; bring out the wine without stint; cease not the dance; let Bassus out-drink Damalis the drunken; bring the rose, the parsley, the lily, for our feast. Though all eyes shall languish for Damalis, she will cleave only to Numida.

Er thure et fidibus juvat
Placare et vituli sanguine debito
Custodes Numidae deos,
Qui nunc Hesperia sospes ab ultima
Caris multa sodalibus,
Nulli plura tamen dividit oscula
Quam dulci Lamiae, memor
Actae non alio rege puertiae Mutataeque simul togae.

Cressa ne careat pulchra dies nota,

3. Actae non alio rege puertiae] ‘Rege’ the Scholiasts interpret ‘patrono,’ and apply it to Lamia, as if he had been the patron of Numida in his youth, which would imply that he was a freedman. Turnebus (Adv. ix. 14) who is followed by Laminus, Stephanus, Heinsius, Graevius, Sanadon, Dacier, and others, understand ‘non alio rege’ to mean ‘under the same schoolmaster,’ ‘rege’ being equivalent to ‘custode,’ A. P. 161; and ‘rectores’ in Tac. Ann. xiii. 2; “Rectores imperatoriae juventutis,” i. e. Seneca and Burrus the tutors of Nero and Britannicus. This opinion is adopted by Doering and Orelli, and it is supported by v. 9 Dillenbr. and others explain this passage by Epp. i. 1. 59: “pueri ludentes rex eris aiunt,” and making ‘rege’ the king of the game. As in the scene described by Tacitus (Ann. xiii. 15): “Festis Saturno diebus inter alia aequarium ludicra, regnum lusu sortientum, evenerat exsors Neroni,” &c. I do not know with whom this notion originated. Landinus says it may mean king of the feast, συμποσίαρχος. When Sanadon says that the Greeks and Latins used to call the tutors of children their kings or governors, he is merely deceiving the ignorant. Heinsius invented the term παιδωναξ after the analogy of χειρώναξ, but he did not pretend that the Greeks used such a term. If such is Horace’s meaning here, the expression stands alone. It occurs no where else in Greek or Latin authors in this sense, though it may have been used in a familiar way; and I think this is the true explanation.

puertiae] Other instances of syncope are ‘lamnae,’ ‘surpuerat,’ ‘surpète,’ ‘soldo,’ ‘caldior.’

10. Cressa ne careat pulchra dies nota,]
The Scholiasts all affirm that it was a custom with the Cretans “dies laetos albis calculis, nigris contrarios, numerare” (Acron). “Calculis quos in pharetras mittebant” adds Porphyrius, by way of giving probability to his story by particularity. But so there would be no learning whether a black or a white pebble were intended, since both were Cretan. The same objection applies to ‘Thressa,’ which has been proposed as a substitution for ‘Cressa,’ because, according to Pliny (Nat. Hist. vii. 40), the practice was observed by the Thracians. That the custom of marking fair days with a white stone or mark, and unlucky ones with a black, had passed, if not into practice, into a proverb with the Romans, is well known. Hence Persius (ii. 1, sqq.), writing to his friend on his birthday says:

‘Hunc, Macrine, diem numeram meliore lapillo,
Qui tibi labentes apportit candidus annos;’
CARMINUM I. 36.

Neu promptae modus amphorae,
Neu morem in Salium sit requies pedum,
Neu multi Damalis meri
Bassum Threicia vineat amystide,
Neu desint epulis rosae,
Neu vivax apium, neu breve lilium.
Omnem in Damalin putres
Depontem oculos, nec Damalis novo
Divelletur adultero Lascivis hederis ambitiosior.

and Martial (xii. 34) writing to his kinsman says that of the thirty-four years of their intercourse the greater number had been happy:

"Et si calculus omnis huc et illuc
Diversus bicolorque digeratur Vincet candida turba nigriorem."

And Catullus exclaims in joy at Lesbia's return to him: "O Lucem candidiore nota!" (evil. ad Lesbiam). Horace only uses 'Cressa' (the adjective of 'creta,' chalk, so called as coming from Cimolus, a small island near Crete), where Catullus and the others use its equivalent 'candida.' Graevius adopted the notion of Hardain (on the above passage of Pliny), who takes 'Cressa nota' to mean the same as 'nota Falerni' (C. i. 3. 8. S. i. 10. 24), 'Cretan wine.' Bentley was not aware that his friend had patronized this interpretation, which he satisfactorily disposes of by showing that Cretan wine was nothing more than 'passum,' a sweet liqueur made of raisins.

12. Neu morem in Salium] 'Sallium' is an adjectival like 'Salians' in the next ode. Orelli hesitating between adjective and substantive contradicts himself in his notes in this place and C. iv. 1. 28, where it occurs again. See note.

13. multi Damalis meri] Such is the expression 'Multi Lydia nominis' (C. iii. 9. 8). Ovid (Met. xiv. 252) has nearly the same words: "Eurylocumque simul, multique Elpenora vini." And Cicero (ad Fam. ix. 26, sub fin.): "non multi cibi hospitum accipies; multi jocis." In Verr. Act. ii. 1. 5. c. 7: "Eumenidae, nobilis hominis et honesti, magna pecuniae," where Mr. Long rightly interprets 'magna pecuniae' by 'pecuniosus.' It appears from inscriptions that Damalis was a name common among freedwomen (Estre, p. 481). Who Bassus was, we cannot tell without knowing more of his friend Numida (see Introduction). Martial mentions a Bassus, who according to his severe insinuation might vie with Damalis (vi. 69):—

"Non miror quod potat aquam tua Bassa, Catulle:
Miror quod Bassi filia potat aquam," where the name is probably fictitious; but it may have been proverbial. That, however, it may have become from this verse of Horace. There can be little doubt, however, that Bassus was a real person and a friend of the soldier whose return was to be celebrated. Damalis may be any body—a woman like Lyde (C. ii. 11. 22), brought into the ode to make up a scene.

14. Threicia vineat amystide] 'Amystis' was a deep draught taken without drawing breath or closing the lips (δ, μετίν). Aristophanes uses the word (Acharn. 1229):—

καὶ πρός γ’ ἀκρατον ἐγχίας ἀμυστὸν ἐκλαφα,

and Euripides (Cyclops, 416, sq.):—

ὁ δ’ ἱκτίλων ἀν τὰς ἀνασαχόντων βοράς

λείτας ἐπασῖν τ’ ἀμυστὸν ἐκλαφα.

For Threicia see i. 27. 2.

17. putres Deponent oculos.] 'Will fix their languishing eyes.' Persius uses the word 'putres' in the same way:—

"hunc aequalis decoquit: ille
In Venerem est putris," or, as some MSS. read, 'putret.' The Scholiast Acron interprets it "nimio potu marcentes et libidine resolutos." Theocritus expresses the word by τήθεσθαι (i. 90): καὶ τὸ δ’ ἐτεί κ’ ὕπορης τὰς παρθένοις οἷα γελῶντι Τάκκεια δραβαλώς.

20. ambitiosior.] This is the only passage in which the word occurs in this sense, the nearest to 'ambire' in its primitive meaning. See Forcell.
CARMEN XXXVII.

A.U.C. 724.

The occasion that gave rise to this ode, and the time therefore of its composition, are sufficiently clear. Intelligence of the deaths of M. Antonius and Cleopatra was brought to Rome by M. Tullius Cicero (M. F.) in the autumn of A.U.C. 724. Horace appears to have started with an ode of Alcaeus (20 Bergk) on the death of Myrtilus in his head. It began,

\[ \nu \nu \nu \chi \rho \mu \varepsilon \upsilon \theta \eta \nu \kappa a i \tau \iota \nu \pi \rho \delta \beta \eta \nu \ \pi \iota \nu \nu \nu \iota \pi \iota \delta \delta \eta \kappa \alpha \tau \theta \alpha \varepsilon \vartheta \ \\
\]

The historical facts referred to in this ode may all be gathered from Plutarch’s life of M. Antonius, and from Dion Cassius, at the end of the fiftieth and beginning of the fifty-first books.

ARGUMENT.

’Tis time to drink, to smite the earth, and set out a feast for the gods, my friends. We might not bring down the Caecuban while that mad queen with her foul herd were threatening Rome with destruction. But her fury is humbled, her fleet in flames, her drunken heart shook with fear when Caesar hunted her from Italy as the hawk pursues the dove or the hunter the hare, to chain the accursed monster; who feared not the sword nor fled to secret hiding-place, but was bold to see her palace laid low, and to drink in her veins the poison of asps, her courage kindling as she resolved to die rather than be dragged in triumph by the conqueror.

Nunc est bibendum, nunc pede libero
Pulsanda tellus, nunc Saliaribus
Ornare pulvinar deorum
Tempus erat dapibus, sodales.
Antehac nefas dempromere Caecubum
Cellis avitis, dum Capitolio
Regina dementes ruinas
Funus et imperio parabat

“Non Albana mihi sit commissatio tanti
Nec Capitolina Pontificumque dapés.”

4. Tempus erat] This imperfect tense seems to mean that this was the time that the fates had intended for such festivities, though it is difficult to determine its precise meaning. Ovid (Tr. iv. 8. 24, sq.) has it twice over in this unusual way:—

“Sic igitur tarda vires minuente senecta
Me quoque donari jam rude tempus erat;
Tempus erat nec me peregrinum duere caelum
Nec siccam Getico fonte levare sitim.”

The Greeks used the imperfect ἵχροι in the same undefined way. Two examples from Aristophanes will be enough:—

ἐμοὶ μελῆσαι ταῦτα γ’, ἄλλ’ ἥξειν ἵχροιν.

(Pax, 1041.)

ὁκ ἵχροιν ζητεῖν τινα
σωτηρίαν νῦν, ἄλλα μὴ ἐλάμψει ἠτι;

(Equit. 11, sq.)

See note on i. 27. 19.

6. Cellis] The ‘cella’ was properly speaking a chamber partly above and partly Contaminato cum grege turpium
Morbo virorum, quidlibet impotens
Sperare fortunaque dulci
Ebría. Sed minuit furorem
Vix una sospes navis ab ignibus,
Mentemque lymphatam Mareotico
Redegit in veros timores
Caesar, ab Italia volantem
Remis adurgentis, accipiter velut
Moles columbas aut leporem citus
Venator in campis nivalis
Haemoniae, daret ut catenis
Fatale monstrum: quae generosius
Perire quaerens nec muliebriter
Expavit ensem nec latentes Classae cita reparavit oras.

under ground, in which the 'dolia' were kept. That in which the 'amphorae' were stored was called 'apotheca,' and was in the upper part of the house; hence the terms, 'depromere,' 'deriperere,' 'descendere.' 'Capitolio' is equivalent to 'urb.' See C. iii. 3. 42; iii. 30. 8.

9. Contaminato cum grege turpium Morbo virorum] 'With her filthy herd of men (forsooth) foul with disease.' The corrupt lusts of that class of persons who were most about an Eastern queen are properly called a disease. 'Virorum,' to which Bentley objects, is used ironically as it would seem. He proposes 'oppobriorum' for 'morbo virorum,' to correspond to Homer's κάκα διάγχεια; but, as he objects to nothing but 'virorum,' his alteration would not be wanted even if it were better than it is. In Epod. ix. 11 Horace complains:—

"Romanus ohe! posteri negabitis
Emancipatis foeminac
Fert vallum et arma miles, et spadonibus
Servire rugosis postem."'

"Turpium: Eunuchorum quos satellites habuit Cleopatra" (Aron).

10. impotens Sperare] This is a common construction, noticed at C. i. 1. 18. 'Impotens' corresponds to δεσπαρτιγ, and signifies want of self-control; 'wild enough to expect any thing.' See Forcell.

12. Ebría.] Demosthenes (Phil. i. 54. 9, Reiske) applies the same metaphor to Philip:

\[\text{γιγό ὅ ἁγιαρ μὲν, ὅ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναίοι, νὴ τοὺς θεοὺς ἐκίνηαν μὲνεῖν τῷ μεγίθει τῶν πετραγμάτων.}\]

13. Vix una sospes navis] Cleopatra's fleet escaped from the battle of Actium, but M. Antonius saved no more than his own ship in which he fled to Egypt. No allusion is made to M. Antonius throughout the ode, for the same reason that led Augustus to require the Senate to proclaim war only against Cleopatra though M. Antonius was the chief object of it.

14. Mentemque lymphatam Mareotico] 'Lymphatus' is equivalent to μύμφῖληπτος, 'lympha' and 'nympha' being the same word (see Forcell). Mareotic wine was from the shores of the Lake Mareotis in the neighbourhood of Alexandria. 'In veros timores' is opposed to what the Greeks called ῥά μεκά τόυ τῶλων. Cleopatra's fleet fled from Actium before a blow was struck, under the influence of a panic, but Horace chooses to say it was a 'verus timor.' The historical facts are not accurately represented in this ode. Though it is said that Cleopatra meditated a descent upon Italy, in the event of M. Antonius and herself proving successful at Actium, she fled from that place to Egypt and never went near Italy, whither Augustus returned after the battle; and it was not till the next year, A.D.C. 724, that he went to Alexandria, and the deaths of M. Antonius and Cleopatra occurred.

24. reparavit] Literally, 'took in exchange for her own kingdom shores out of 2
The ARGUMENT.

the sight of men.' It is said that Cleopatra contemplated quitting Egypt to escape from Augustus, and that she transported vessels across the desert to the Red Sea; but they were destroyed by the Arabs, and she abandoned her design. Plut. Ant. c. 69. On the word 'reparavit' see C. i. 31. 12, n. Bentley proposes 'penetritavit,' but without altering the meaning of the passage, which is sufficiently expressed by 'reparavit,' the reading of all the MSS. with the exception of one, which has 'repetitavit.' Bos proposes by the addition of one letter to make it 'ireparavit' (Animad. p. 36). Orelli gives various other conjectures, as 'repedavit,' 'peraravit,' 're-promavat,' 'recravit,' 'properavit,' 'trepidavit.'

25. jacentem] One MS. appears to have 'tacentem,' which Bentley approves appealing to C. iv. 14. 36: "vacuum patefecit sulum." Because Cleopatra's palace was not pulled down, he thinks 'jacentem' inappropriate and unhistorical. On Cleopatra's death, &c. see Plut. Ant. c. 84.

30. Liburnis] See Epod. i. 1, n. The Schollast Porphyrin relates on the authority of Livy that Cleopatra having the prospect of being carried to Rome used to exclaim ob θραμβεῖς ουμα. The passage is not to be found in Livy's extant work.

CARMEN XXXVIII.

"The only two persons," says Franke, "who know when this ode was written are Kirchner and Grotefend. The former assigns it to a.u.c. 729, the latter to 725." It may be said in favour of the former, that he expresses a doubt upon the subject by marking the date with a (?). The words were probably written as a song and set to music. I learn from Jani that Voltaire had a contempt for this ode, and that for his disrespect he was well punished by the illustrious Schmid: "egregie deperexum dedit Cl. Schmidius." There is not much to remark upon it one way or the other. No great pains are usually bestowed on such matters. Some suppose it to be a translation, others an original composition. It is probably only a good imitation of Anacreon. The time is supposed to be Autumn (v. 4).

ARGUMENT.

I hate your Persian finery, your sutiile crowns. Hunt not for the rose, boy; I care not thou shouldst seek for aught save the myrtle, which will do for thee the servant and for me thy master drinking under the shade of my vine.

Persicos odi, puer, apparatus,
Displentor exae philyra coronae;
Mitte sectari rosa quo locorum
Sera moretur.

2. philyra] The linden-tree was so called by the Greeks; and its thin inner bark was used for a lining on which flowers were sown to form the richer kind of chap-
CARMINUM I. 38.

Simplici myrto nihil allabores
Sedulius curo: neque te ministrum
Dedecet myrtus neque me sub arta Vite bibentem.

letus called 'sutes.' Ov. Fast. v. 335, sqq.:

"Tempora sutilibus cinguntur tota coronis,
   Et latet injecta splendida mensa rosa.
   Ebrius incinctis philyra conviva capillis
   Saltat et imprudens vertitur arte meri."

See also Pliny, N. H. xvi. 14. xxi. 3.
5. allabores] This is a coined word, and signifies to labour for something more. It therefore corresponds to \( \pi\sigma\sigma\sigma\sigma\sigma \nu\nu\nu \) rather than to \( \iota\iota\iota\iota\iota\iota\iota \), to which some trace it. \( \iota\iota\iota\iota\iota\iota\iota \) signifies to persevere, or labour hard in quest of an object. For 'curo' one MS. reads 'cure.' Bentley reads 'cura,' the imperative mood, for 'cave,' but afterwards preferred the reading of the Peter-House MS. 'oro,' against the metre. 'Oro' is obviously a corruption not of 'cura' but of 'curo.'
Q. HORATII FLacci

CARMINUM

LIBER SECUNDUS.

CARMEN I.

A. U. C. 724—25.

Pollio retired from public affairs, in which he had taken an active part for twenty years, after the triumph he obtained for his victory over the Parthini, an Illyrian people, A. U. C. 715 (v. 16), and betook himself to literature, but confined himself at first chiefly to dramatic writing. It appears from Suetonius (de Illust. Gram. c. 10) that he did not undertake his history till after the death of Sallust, A. U. C. 720 (see Clinton, F. H. a. 39 n. c.), for it was after that event that he became acquainted with the grammarian Atteius, who furnished him with rules for composition. And if the history was not begun till that year, even though (as is probable) Pollio should have taken notes of most of the transactions he had to relate, with a great many of which he had been personally connected, it is not probable that so large a work, consisting of seventeen books, and taking in the whole period from the first triumvirate to the conclusion of the civil wars, could have been so far completed as to be communicated to his friends before the year A. U. C. 723, which was the year of the battle of Actium. But the words "arma nondum expiatis uncta cronoribus" (v. 4, sq.), coupled with "cui dabit partes scelus expiandi Juppiter" (C. i. 2. 29, sq.), make it likely that these two odes were written about the same time; that is to say, shortly after the battle and before Augustus had established his government in the confidence of the people. It is true Lambinus and some of the older commentators were of opinion that the history of Pollio is not meant, but only his tragedies, which they say related to the events of the times, and which Horace wishes him to lay aside for a while and give his attention to public affairs, until the republic should be settled. So they interpret

— "mox ubi publicas
Res ordinaris grando munus Cecropio repetes cothurno."

But there is no reason to suppose any of Pollio's tragedies had reference to the events of the day, while his history related to nothing else. The Scholiasts understood the history to be referred to (see note on v. 10).

The ode was written after hearing Pollio recite part of his work; a practice which he is said to have been the first to introduce among literary men at Rome.

ARGUMENT.

The civil wars, their causes, their faults, their progress, the sports of fortune, and the fatal leagues of chiefs, and arms stained with blood not yet atoned for,—a dangerous task is thine, and treacherous is the ground thou art treading.

Leave the tragic Muse for a little while, and thou shalt return to her when thou hast finished the historian’s task, O Pollio! advocate, senator, conqueror! Even now I seem to hear the trumpet and the clarion, the flashing of arms, and the voices of chiefs, and the whole world subdu’d but the stubborn heart of Cato. The gods of Africa have offered his victors’ grandsons on the tomb of Jugurtha. What land, what waters are not stained with our blood? But stay, my Muse, approach not such high themes.

Motum ex Metello consule civicum
Bellique causas et vitia et modos
Ludumque Fortunae gravesque
Principum amicitias et arma
Nondum expiatis uncta cruoribus,
Periculosae plenum opus aleae,
Tractas et incedis per ignes
Suppositos cineri doloso.
Paulium severae Musa tragoediae
Desit theatris: mox ubi publicas
Res ordinari grande munus
Cecropio repetes curthorno,

1. Motum ex Metello consule] The foundation of the civil wars is here laid in the formation of the (so-called) triumvirate by Caesar, Pompey, and Crassus, which took place in the consulship of Q. Caecilius Metellus Celer, and L. Afranius, A.U.C. 694, B.C. 60. But, though this was the first great act of aggression on the liberties of Rome, the civil war did not break out till the year A.U.C. 704, B.C. 59, when Caesar and Pompey came to their final rupture. Cruquius supposes Q. Caecilius Metellus Numidicus to be the consul referred to. His consulship was in the year 404, B.C. 109, the third year of the Jugurthine war, which as leading to the civil war of Marius and Sylla he considers the foundation of the mischiefs referred to by Pollio. But such was not the subject of his history, which was confined to those civil commotions of which he himself had been witness, as the Scholiast Porphyrius says, “In translatione bellorum cum Romano civili debuit Pollio historiam bellis civiliis consulari, &c.” (Lentuli et Materni coepit altins repetit, i.e. A Metello Celere et L. Afranio Cosse.” (‘Mamerti’ is a mistake for ‘Marcelli.’) Lentulus and Marcellus were consuls the year after the breach between Caesar and Pompey, A.U.C. 705.)

4. Principum amicitias] The alliance of Caesar and Pompey, and the subsequent coalition of M. Antonius and Augustus, more than once broken and renewed, and always maintained at the expense of the people’s liberties, are here principally referred to.

6. Periculosae plenum opus aleae] Pollio had been faithful to Julius Caesar, but after his death had sided rather with M. Antonius than Augustus; and therefore, when the latter had succeeded in putting an end to his rival, and had the entire power in his own hands, it was a bold and difficult task that Pollio had undertaken. It does not appear, however, that he involved himself in any difficulty with Augustus, for he lived quietly to a good old age, dying in his eightieth year at his villa at Tusculum, A.U.C. 758, A.D. 4. A. Cremutius Cordus, the historian who was capitaly condemned by Tiberius for having called Brutus and Cassius the last of the Romans, appealed in his defence to the impunity with which Pollio had expressed his sentiments (Tac. Ann. iv. 34). It is probable his history was written with impartiality, and Augustus was not jealous and could afford to be otherwise.

7. incedis per ignes] ‘Thou art treading on ashes that cover a smouldering fire,’ like Insigne maestis praesidium reis
Et consulenti, Pollio, curiae,
Cui laurus aceretos honores
Delmatico peperit triumpho.
Jam nunc minaci murmure cornuum
Perstringis aures, jam litui strepunt,
Jam fulgor armorum fugaces
Terret equos equitumque voltus:
Audire magnos jam videor duces
Non indecoro pulvere sordidos,
Et cuncta terrarum subacta
Praeter atrocem animum Catonis.
Juno et deorum quisquis amicior
Afris inulta cesserat impotens
Tellure victorum nepotes Rettulit inferias Jugurthae.
Quis non Latino sanguine pinguior
Campus sepulcros impia proelia Testatur auditumque Medis Hesperiae sonitum ruinae?

the ashes at the mouth of a volcano, cool on the surface but burning below.' Such is the threat of Propertius to his rival (i. 5.
4):—
"Infelix! properas ultima nosse mala, Et miser ignotos vestigia ferre per ignes;"

10. mox ubi publicas Res ordinatis
'When you shall have finished your history of public events.' Thus Bentley also takes it, saying the Greeks used συντάγμα for writing a book. Plutarch uses σύνταγμα for a book. άναταγοδα occurs in the preface to St. Luke's Gospel, and is thus rendered in the Vulgate translation, "Quoniam quidem multi conati sunt ordinare narrationem" (quoted by Orell). The Scholiast Acron says that Pollio was writing tragedy at the same time with his history, and that the style of the one affected the style of the other; so that Horace advises him to lay aside his tragedies in order that he may do justice to his history. As the theme is delicate and he is well able to adorn it, he should put aside the only obstacle to its proper accomplishment, viz.
his tragedies. They were probably of no great merit. None have survived, and he has no credit for them, except with Horace and Virgil, who were under personal obligations to him. See S. i. 10. 42, and Virg.

Ec. viii. 10. Turnebus advocates this interpretation (Adv. x. 21).
16. Delmatico—triumpho.] See Introduction.
17. Jam nunc]. See C. iii. 6. 23, n.
21. Audire—videor] 'I seem to myself to hear,' as C. iii. 4. 6. Cicero uses the word with 'videre' not unfrequently, as (de Am. 12) "videre jam videor populum a senatu disjunctum." Divin. in Q. Caecl.
c. 14: "Te, Caeclii, videas jam videor," &c.
23. cuncta terrarum subacta] It is probable that Pollio had given a very stir-ing account of Caesar's African campaign, in which he himself served, and that his description had made a great impression upon Horace. The victory of Thapsus made Caesar master of the whole Roman world. Bentley reads 'videre' for 'audire,' as being more appropriate to 'cuncta terra-rum.' But Horace is plainly referring to what he had heard Pollio read. The MSS.
all have 'audire.'
25. Juno et deorum] 'Juno and any of the gods that favour Africa, who had departed helplessly (i.e. after the Jugurthine war) and left that land unavenged, have offered up as an atonement (reftulit) the grandsons of those victors on the grave of Jugurtha.' Ten thousand of the Pomepeian army alone fell at the battle of
CARMINUM II. 2.

Qui gurges aut quae flumina lugubris
Ignara belli? quod mare Dauniae
Non decoloravere caedes?

Quae caret ora cruore nostro?
Sed ne relictis, Musa procax, jocos
Ceae retractes munera neniae:
Mecum Dionaeo sub antro
Quaere modos leviore plectro.

9

Thapsus. It has been suggested that the Jugurthine rather than any of the other African wars is referred to, because Sallust's history had lately come out and was being much read. It may be so.

29. pinguior]

"Nec fuit indignum superis bis sanguine nostro Emathiam et latos Haemi pinguecere campos" (Virg. G. i. 491).

"How that red rain hath made the harvest grow!" is Childe Harold's sarcastic exclamation on the field of Waterloo. Plutarch (Marius, c. 21) speaks of the fertilizing effect of the blood of the thousands of Ten-tones whom Marius slaughtered at Aquae Sextiae (Aix), near Marseilles.

34. Dauniae] C. iii. 30. 11; iv. 6. 27.
35. 'Decoloravere' does not signify to change the colour, as Acron says, but 'to dye deeply.'
36. Ceae—neniae:] Horace does not confine this word to its usual sense of 'a dirge' (see Index), but it suits the quality of Simonides' poetry, which was of a severe and melancholy cast.
37. retractes] See note on i. 31. 12.
38. Dionaeo—antro] A cave dedicated to Venus, the daughter of Dione.

CARMEN II.

A. U. C. 730.

Horace, meaning to write an ode on the moderate desire and use of wealth, dedicated it to C. Sallustius Crispus, grand-nephew of the historian and inheritor of his property. He had previously alluded to him in no terms of praise in Sat. i. 2. 48; but that Satire was written many years before this ode, and at this time Sallustius was in high favour with Augustus and possessed of great riches, of which Horace implies that he made a good use. From the reference to Phraates' return to his throne (v. 17), which took place A. U. C. 729 (see C. i. 26, Introduction), the ode must have been written after that event. Proculeius mentioned in v. 5 was brother or cousin (it is not certain which) to Licinius Murena, who A. U. C. 732 was detected in a conspiracy with one Fannius Caepio to take away the life of Augustus (see C. ii. 10, Introduction). I cannot infer so positively as Franke and others do that Horace would have abstained from mentioning the generosity of Proculeius, if his relation's crime had been committed when he wrote; but that chronologist takes this allusion as an argument that the ode was written between A. U. C. 720 and 732, and from the tone of the allusion to Phraates he supposes his restoration to have been recent, and therefore assigns the ode to the year 730, in which Orelli and Dillenbr. agree with him.

ARGUMENT.

Silver hath no beauty while hid in the earth, Sallustius, who despisest the ore till it is polished by moderate use. Proculeius for his generosity to his brethren will live for ever, and the man who rules the spirit of avarice is a greater king than if from Carthage to Gades were all his own. The dropsy grows and grows till its cause is expelled. Phraates restored to his throne is not happy; he only is a king and conqueror who looks on money with indifference.
Nullus argento color est avaris
Abdito terris, inimice lamnae
Crispe Sallusti, nisi temperato Splendeat usu.
Vivet extento Proculeius aevó
Notus in frater animi paterni;
Illum aget penna metuente solvi
Fama superstes.
Latius regnes avidum domando
Spiritum, quam si Libyam remotis
Gadibus jungas et uterque Poenus Serviat uni.
Crescít indulgens sibi dirus hydrops,

2. Abdito terris,] Lambinus' conjecture ‘abitae terris’ to agree with ‘lamnae’ has been adopted by many editors, but it has no MS. authority. I see no other great objection to it. ‘Avaris’ Doering understands to be the dative case, ‘hidden by the avaricious in the earth’; as S. i. 1. 41:

‘Quid juvat immensus te argenti pondus et auri
Furtim defossa timidum deponere terra?’

But, besides the confusion this introduces in the construction, the force of the allusion is thus lost. Sallustius possessed some valuable mines in the Alps, and to this circumstance Horace seems tacitly to refer. The character given of Sallustius by Tacitus (Ann. iii. 30) is rather different from Horace’s description. Tacitus says he was ‘diversus a veterum instituto per cultum et munitiás copiaque et afluencia luxu propior:’ on the strength of which some commentators have supposed Horace meant to give him a hint upon his extravagance, for which impertinence the great man would not have thanked him. To bear out their case they refer ‘nisi temperato’ to the first line. Horace inverts the order of the cognomen and gentilicium name, as Tacitus frequently does; as ‘Agrippam
Postumum’ (Ann. i. 3), and elsewhere.
The eleventh ode of this book is addressed to Quintius Hirpinus; and the names are inverted as here.

lamnae] Ovid (Fast. i. 207):

‘Jura dabat populis posito modo consul aratro
Et levis argenti lamina crimen erat.’

For examples of syncope see i. 36. 8, n.

5. Vivet extento Proculeius aevó] Proculeius is stated by the Scholiasts to have assisted his brothers Caepio and Murena, who had lost their property in the civil wars. Seipio, as the name appears in Ascen-sius’ text of the Scholiasts, is a mistake for Caepio. But it is doubtful whether Caepio, whose family name was Fannius, was any relation of Proculeus Murena whose conspiracy he joined (see Introduction), or whether Murena was Proculeus’ brother or cousin. Proculeus was in great favour with Augustus and was intimate with Maeceenae (who married his sister or cousin Terentia), and probably with Sallustius.
He was alive at this time, and did not die
till after Horace; therefore the reading ‘agit’ which is that of many old MSS. is rejected by most editors. Proculeus was like Maeceenae a favourer of letters, and is so referred to by Juvenal (S. vii. 94):
‘Quis tibi Maeceenas quis nunc erit aut Proculeus?’

of Greek constructions is one of the chief features of his style. He uses ‘metuente’ here in the same sense as in C. iv. 5. 20, ‘Culpari metuít Fides,’ ‘wings that refuse to melt,’ as Icarus’ did.

9. Latius regnes] This is referred to by some (see note on v. 2) as showing that Horace is addressing a lecture to Sallustius.
But he is only speaking generally (see Argument).

11. uterque Poenus] This means (as the Scholiasts explain) the Carthaginians of Africa and their colonies in Spain, not the Phoenicians as Graevius says. ‘Uterque pontus’ has been suggested by Schroeder, because there were not two Poeni. But the above explanation is sufficient.
Nee sitim pellit nisi causa morbi
Fugerei venis et aquosus albo Corporis languor.
Redditum Cyri solio Phraaten
Dissidens plebi numero beatorum
Eximit Virtus populumque falsis
Dedocet uti
Vociebus, regnum et diadema tutum
Deferens uni propriaque laurum
Quisquis ingentes oculo inretorto Spectat acervos.

13. Crescit indulgens] Ovid has imitated this expressive simile (Fast. i. 215, sq.):
"Sic quibus intumuit suffusa venter ab unda Quo plus sunt potae plus sitiumtur aquae."

17. Redditum Cyri solio] See Introduction. The Scholiast Acron has a strange note here on the history of Phraates, how he was the son of Cyrus the Great, exposed by his parents, and educated by Brahmins.

18. plebi ] The Scholiasts read 'plebis,' and that reading appears in the Blan- dinian MSS., and Cruquius prefers it greatly to 'plebi,' supposing it to be a Greek construction, as θαφρον των πολλων. But the majority of MSS. and all the editions are in favour of 'plebi,' and the passage is so quoted by Priscian, 18. 15. See C. i. 27. 6, n. 'Beatum' is the reading of some MSS. and of Ven., and Fea prefers it, and Meineke. All the Berne MSS. and most of the others have 'beatorum,' and the elision is sufficiently common.

23. inretorto] This is explained by 'obliquo' in Epp. i. 14. 37: "Non istic obliquo, oculo mea commoda quisquam Limat." Turnebus (Adv. x. 21) illustrates the longsquints of the covetous by a quotation from Varro, who says of the house of a certain man with a handsome wife, "multis enim qui limina intrarent integris oculis strabones facti sunt. Habet enim quiddam ἐλευσίκον provincialis formosula uxor."

CARMINUM II. 3.

CARMEN III.

The person to whom this ode is nominally addressed is supposed generally to be Q. Delliis, who, from being a follower first of Dolabella and then of Brutus and Cassius, became a devoted adherent of M. Antonius, and his tool throughout his intrigues with Cleopatra, till shortly before the battle of Actium, when he quarrelled with Cleopatra and joined Augustus, who received him with favour (Plut. Anton. c. 59). Plutarch calls him istorapis. Comm. Cruq. gives the name 'Gellius,' and Horace had a friend L. Gellius Poplicola, brother of Messalla, whom he alludes to in Sat. i. 10. 85, and who was taken prisoner by Brutus and Cassius. (See Estré, p. 174.) Whether we take Delliis or Gellins it matters little. Horace's way of giving a name to his odes has been sufficiently noticed, and in this, as in other cases, there is nothing to guide us to the person whose name he uses. The ode is on two of his usual common-places, moderation and the certainty of death. I cannot go with Franke in assigning the ode to a. u. c. 725 in the uncertainty that hangs over the person.

ARGUMENT.

Be sober in prosperity or adversity, in sadness or in mirth. What is the use of the shade and purling stream if we bring not thither wine and flowers while circumstances and youth permit, and life is our own? Soon thou must give up all to thine heir; rich and noble, or poor and humble, we must all come to one place in the end.

AEQUAM memento rebus in arduis
Servare mentem, non secus in bonis
Ab insolenti temperatam
Laetitia, moriture Delli,
Seu maestus omni tempore vixeris,
Seu te in remoto gramine per dies
Festos reclinatum bearis Interiore nota Falerni.
Quo pinus ingens albaque populus
Umbram hospitalam consociare amant
Ramis? Quid obliquo laborat Lympha fugax trepidare rivo?
Hue vina et unguenta et nimium breves
Flores amoenae ferre jube roae,
Dum res et actas et sororum
Fila trium patiuntur atra.
Cedes coemplitus saltibus et domo
Villaque flavus quam Tiberis lavit,
Cedes et exstructis in altum
Divitiis potietur heres.

2. non secus in] A very few MSS. have 'non secus ac,' which Bentley prefers as the more usual phrase: but 'non secus' may stand alone.

8. Interiore nota Falerni.] The cork of the 'amphora' was stamped with the name of the consul in whose year it was filled, and the 'amphorae' being placed in the 'apotheca' as they were filled, the oldest would be the innermost. Cicero (Brut. 83), mentioning the speeches in Thucydides, likens them to very old Falernian, and says the style had better be avoided, 'tanquam Anicianam notam,' like wine of the consulship of Anicius, 'atque eae notae sunt optimae, credo, sed nimia vetustas nec habet eam quam quaerimus suavitatem nec est jam sane tolerabilis.'

9. Quo pinus ingens] The oldest and best MSS. have 'quo,' which signifies 'to what purpose,' as 'quo mihi fortunam si non conceditur uti?' (Epp. i. 5. 12). 'Qua' is Bentley's reading from two MSS. of Lam- binius, who was the first to adopt it. In v. 11 the MSS. vary between 'quo,' 'qua,' and 'quid.' Landinus has the first; Ascrenius and Laminus the second; Cruquius has 'quid?' Without the interro- gatory mark, 'quid' is I think the true reading. It is that of the oldest Berne and Blandinian MS. Stephens (1600) has 'et,' and Bentley and most of the later editors, but no MSS. The Scholiast Porphyrian had 'quid obliquo,' and his comment is 'subaudientium, si ea non utimur; et est totum adverbaliter dictum,' which shows the sense in which he understood the passage. But such an hiatus is quite inadmissible. 'Qua' and 'et' are very simple emendations, and give a good meaning. But I cannot account for the other readings if Horace wrote 'qua—et.' He seems to mean, 'What were the shade and the cool stream given for? Bring out the wine and let us drink;' which is abrupt, and more spirited than the other.

albaque populus] Not 'altaque,' as the oldest editions have it, corrected by Laminus. This mistake arose from Epod. ii. 10, 'Altas maritat populos.' The Greeks had two names for the poplar—λιβεκη, which was white, and στειβασ, which was dark. Virgil calls the white 'bicolor.' 'Aman,' as in C. iii. 16. 10, is used like the Greek φιλοδοσι 'are wont,' though some would give it a stronger meaning, i.e. twine their Divese prisco natus ab Inacho
Nil interest an pauper et infima
De gente sub divo moreris,
Victima nil miserantis Orci.
Omnes codem cogimur, omnium
Versatur urna serius ocius
Sors exitura et nos in aeternum
Exilium impositura cumvae.

16: "Omne capax movet urna nomen." The notion is that of Fate standing with an urn, in which every man's lot is cast. She shakes it, and he whose lot comes out must die. Ovid has imitated this passage (Met. x. 32):

"Omnia debemur vobis paullumque morati Serius aut citius sedem properamus ad unam.
Tendimus hoc omnes."

This amusing ode represents a gentleman in love with his maid-servant; a circumstance of sufficiently common occurrence to warrant the supposition that Horace may have had one of his friends in view, and that the ode is founded on fact. The name Xanthias must be fictitious, and Phocaeus indicates that the person was also supposed to be a Phocian. It is usual to suppose that "Xanthias Phoceus" represents two names, and "ad Xanthiam Phocuem" is the common inscription, as if Phocaeus were a Latin name, which the second line proves it is not. Why Horace, assuming a Greek name for his real or supposed friend, should also make him a Phocian, who can pretend to tell? "Say it was his humour," or there may have been a significance in it which has passed away, or never existed but for the understanding of the person addressed and perhaps a few intimate friends. Xanthias was a name given to slaves, like Geta, Sosius, &c., as in the "Frogs" and other plays of Aristophanes.

The date of the ode cannot be mistaken. Horace was born A.U.C. 689, and he wrote this ode when he was just finishing his eighth lustre, which would be in December, A.U.C. 729.

ARGUMENT.

Be not ashamed, Xanthias; heroes have loved their maids before thee. Achilles his Briseis, Ajax his Tecmessa, and Agamemnon his Cassandra, when Troy had fallen before the Grecian conqueror. Doubtless your Phyllis is of royal blood: one so faithful and loving and unselfish is no common maiden. Nay, be not jealous of my praises; my eighth lustre is hastening to its close.

Ne sit ancillae tibi amor pudori,
Xanthia Phoeceu! Prius insolentem
Serva Briseis niveo colore
Movit Achillem;
Movit Ajacem Telamone natum
Forma captivae dominum Tecmessae;
Arsit Atrides medio in triumpho
Virgine rapta,
Barbarae postquam cecidere turmae
Thessalo victore et ademptus Hector
Tradidit fessis leviora tolli Pergama Grais.

Nescias an te generum beati
Phyllidis flavae decorent parentes:
Regium certe genus et penates
Maeret iniquos.
Crede non illam tibi de scelesta
Plebe diletam, neque sic fidelem,
Sic lucro aversam potuisse nasci Matre pudenda.
Brachia et voltum teretesque suras
Integer laudo; fuge suspicari,
Cujus octavum trepidavit aetas Claudere lustrum.

1. Ne sit —] Lambinus has a way of taking 'ne' in this place and others (C. i. 33. 1; iv. 9. 1), which is different from that of most other commentators. He considers it not prohibitive but causal,—that you may not be ashamed consider that,' &c., as it is in A. P. 406: "Ne forte pudori Sit tibi Musa lyrae solleri et cantor Apollo."

7. Arsit—virginem rapta] 'Arsit' is used by Horace three times with an ablative—here; in C. iii. 9. 5: "Donec non alia magis arsitii" (where Bentley conjectures 'aliam'); and in Epod. xiv. 9: "Non alter Samio dicunt arsitio Bathyllo Anaenonta Teiunum"; and once as a transitive verb (C. iv. 9. 13): "Non sola comtos arsit adulteri crines;" as it is in Virgil's second Eclogue: "Formosum pastor Corydon ardebat Alexin."

10. ademptus Hector] This is from the Iliad (xxiv. 243):—

13. Nescias an te] All that follows in this and the next stanza is evidently good-natured banter.

23. Claudere] Bentley conjectures 'condere.' Graevius appears to have assumed that reading, for in his notes he says, "Censores dicebantur condere lustrum cum id finirent." The MSS. do not vary. Horace uses the word 'condere' (C. iv. 5. 29).
CARMEN V.

The Zurich MS. (of the tenth century) has an inscription AD GABINUM; and Estré (p. 503) and Walckenaer (Histoire de la Vie et des Poésies d’Horace) accept Gabinius as the person to whom this ode is addressed. If such a person existed among Horace’s friends, he may have been, Orelli suggests, son or grandson of A. Gabinius the factious contemporary of Cicero. The Scholiasts give us no help; and the above inscription stands alone. Acron had no knowledge of it, for he says, “Incertum est quem alloquatur hac ode.” There may be something, however, in it; but the discovery of the name, were we certain of it, would be of no value beyond leading to the inference that the ode had perhaps some foundation in fact. Of the names introduced between the fifteenth and twentieth verses, Cracius’ Scholiast has justly observed “haec nomina pro exemplis posuit.” This remark is very sensible, and might have saved some scholars a great deal of trouble. Heyne, for instance, on Tibullus (i. 8; see C. i. 33. 7, n.) makes Pholoe and Chloris identical with the daughter and mother mentioned C. iii. 15. 7.

ARGUMENT.

That girl is too young for a yokefellow; an unbroken heifer is she that cares only for the pasture, and her gambols, and the cool stream; an unripe grape that autumn soon will ripen. She will soon come of her own accord when time shall have taken a few years from thy youth and added them to hers: then will she wax wanton and seek a mate, and thou wilt love her above coy Pholoe, or Chloris as fair as the moon, or Gyges, whom the cleverest guest at thy table could not distinguish from a girl.

Nondum subacta ferre jugum valet
Cervice, nondum munia comparis
Aequare nec tauri ruentis’
In venerem tolerare pondus.
Circa virentes est animus tuae
Campos juvenae, nunc fluviiis gravem
Solantis aestum, nunc in udo
Ludere cum vitulis salicto
Praegestientis. Tolle cupidinem
Immitis uvae: jam tibi lividos
Distinguet Auctumnus racemos Purpureo varius colore.

5. Circu] This is the Greek περί, as in Aristoph., Equit. 87: 16οβ γ’ αερανου περί ποτεν γούν ιατι σου.
7. Solantis] This is the poetical word for satisfying hunger or thirst, as Virgil (Georg. i. 159): “Concussaque famem in sylvis solabere quercu.”

5—“ut variis solet uva racemis
Duces purpureum nondum matura colorem.”

But ‘variis’ is poetical, and the MSS. do not vary. Propertius has a similar verse (iv. 2. 13): “Prima mihi variat liventibus uva racemis.” Horace’s lines may be translated, if there is any difficulty, ‘Ere long autumn with its varied hues will dye the green grape with purple.’
Jam te sequetur: currit enim ferox Aetas et illi quos tibi demserit
Apponet annos; jam proterva
Fronte petet Lalage maritum:
Dilecta quantum non Pholoë fugax,
Non Chloris albo sic humero nitens,
Ut pura nocturno renidet
Luna mari, Cnidiusve Gyges,
Quem si puellarum insereris choro
Mire sagaces falleret hospites
Discermin obscurum solutis
Grinibus ambiguoque vultu.

11. ferox Aetas] Time is compared to a wild horse, as in Ovid (Fast. vi. 772): "fugunt freno non remorante dies." But Cnopus would make 'ferox' and 'fugax' change places. The words which follow have been a good deal canvassed. I have given the plain meaning in the Argument. Bentley conjectures 'quod tibi demserit apponet annus,' because, he says, the idea of time taking away the man's years to add to the woman's is as far from Horace's meaning as can be. It is true that Horace does not mean it in the same sense as Jason meant when he proposed to give up his own life to prolong his father's (Met. vii. 168): "Deme meis annis et demptos adde parenti;" but he means 'she will approach the flower of her age as you recede from it; and expresses it thus, 'her years will become more numerous as the remainder of your time becomes shorter.' The Scholiasts take this view of the passage: "pro viribus et aetatis flore ponit annos; quae jam per senium minuerunt, illi augerentur" (Acron). The way of speaking is like that of Deianira when, comparing her own age and attractions with those of her rival, she says,—

\[ \text{Ovid express the same ambiguity in the case of Atalanta very elegantly (Met. viii. 322):—} \]

"Talis crat cultus; facies quam dicere vere Virgineam in pueru puerilem in virgine possis." Boys let their hair grow till they assumed the 'toga virilis.' Juvenal (S. xv. 136) says, \[ \text{"cujus manantia fietu} \]

"Ora puellares faciunt incerta capilli."

On the name of Gyges see C. ii. 17. 14, n.

CARMEN VI.

A. U. C. 729 (i).

Of Septimius the Scholiast Acron writes, "Septimium Equitem Romanum anicum et commilitonem sumum hac odo alloquitur." Whether this description as to the rank and former service of Septimius be correct, or whether the latter is only gathered from v. 7, we cannot tell. He has been supposed to be the person of whom Augustus writes to Horace in a letter preserved in his life attributed to Suetonius: "Tui qualem habeam memoriam poteris ex Septimio quoque nostro audire. Nam incidit ut illo coram fieret a me tui mentio." Horace also wrote a letter of introduction for him to Tiberius (Epp. i. 9).
Beyond this we know nothing of Septimius, except that Cruxius' Scholiast makes him the same as Titius in the epistle to Julius Florus (Epp. i. 3, v. 9, see note).

The date of this ode has been much discussed. Estré places it very soon after Horace's first arrival at Rome, when he was fresh from the fatigues of war, which the expression 'Sit modus lasso maris et viarum Militiaeque' seems to favour. But a young man just returning home to begin life does not begin by writing about a retreat for his declining years. There is a character about the ode which belongs to a later period. He must have been familiar with Tibur and Tarentum and other localities which he alludes to. The allusion to the Cantabri in v. 2 is supposed by others to fix the date much later, namely, in A.U.C. 729, when Augustus was engaged in reducing a rebellion in Spain. At any time before A.U.C. 725, when the Cantabri were first reduced, they could have been called by Horace 'indoctos juga ferre nostra,' even though no attempt had been made to impose that yoke. In 725 they were reduced to subjection; in 728 they broke out again, and in the following year they were finally subdued, though an unimportant disturbance had to be put down by Agrippa some years afterwards (see C. iii. 8. 21; iv. 14. 41. Epp. i. 12. 26). If therefore the ode was written after 725, it must have been in the beginning of 729 or thereabouts, and I am inclined to think that was the date, though I admit the difficulty of understanding why Horace should speak of himself even poetically as tired of warfare and the sea, so many years after he had ceased to have any thing to do with either. That he does not speak of his Sabine farm, but gives the preference to Tibur or Tarentum, proves nothing. Long after he had possession of his farm, he expresses his preference for those places (Epp. i. 7. 44):

—— "mihi jam non regia Roma Sed vacuum Tibur placet aut imbellae Tarentum."

(See also C. iii. 4. 21, sqq.) And that he frequented Tibur is well known. Some say he owned, some he rented, a small property there. It may, however, be doubted after all perhaps, whether Horace must be taken as speaking strictly of himself. He may only mean in effect, that the weary need seek no happier resting-place than Tibur or Tarentum, though he puts the matter in the form of a wish for himself. It was probably on or after a visit to Septimius that Horace composed the twenty-eighth ode of the first book; and, probably with the attractions of Tarentum fresh in his mind, he wrote this ode. But he may have paid his friend many visits.

ARGUMENT.

Septimius, who art ready to go with me to the ends of the earth, I would that I might end my days at Tibur, or, if that be forbidden me, at Tarentum. Above all others I love that spot, with its honey, its olives, its long spring, and mild winter, and grapes on Mount Aulon. On that spot we ought to live together; and there thou shouldst lay my bones and weep over them.

SEPTIMI, Gades aditare mecum et Cantabrum indoctum juga ferre nostra et Barbaras Syrtes ubi Maura semper

Aestuat unda,

1. Septimi, Gades aditure mecum] Horace has apparently imitated Catullus in his ode to Furius and Aurelius:

 "Furi et Aureli comites Catulli
Sive in extremos penetrabit Indos
Litus ut longe resonante Eoa Tunditur unda.
Sive in Hyrcanos Arabasque molles;
Seu Sacas sagittiferosque Parthos;

Sive qua septemgeminus colorat
Aequora Nilus;
Sive trans altas gradietur Alpes
Caesaris visens monimenta magni Gallicum Rhenum horribilesque uli-mosque Britannos
Omnia haec quacumque feret voluntas
Coelitum tentare simul parati," &c.
Tibur Argeo positum colono
Sit meae sedes utinam senectae,
Sit modus lasso maris et viarum Militiaeque!
Unde si Pareae prohibent iniquae,
Dulce pellitis ovibus Galaesi
Flumen et regnata petam Laconi
Rura Phalantho.
Ille terrarum mihi praeter omnes
Angulus ridet ubi non Hymetto
Mella decessunt viridique certat
Baca Venafro;
Ver ubi longum tepidasque praebet
Juppiter brumas, et amicus Aulon
Fertili Baccho minimum Falernis Invidet uvis.
Ille te mecum locus et beatae

Propertius likewise has the same idea in his elegy to Tullus (i. 6. 1, sqq.):—
"Non ego nunc Adriae vereor mare noscere tecum,
Tulle negne Aegeae ducere velas sola.
Cum quo Rhipaeos possim conscendere montes, Ulterioraque domos vadare Memnonias."

With these examples before him it is surprising that Graevius should have gone with Dacier in supposing that Horace and Septi-timius had engaged to join the Cantabrian expedition.

5. Argeo — colono] Catillus or his brother Tiburtus (see C. i. 18. 2, n.).
7. Sit modus lasso] 'lasso' may be taken with 'maris,' &c. (as 'fessi rerum,' Aen. i. 182), or absolutely, leaving the genitives to depend on 'modus:' or the genitives depend upon both.
10. pellitis] One of the Scholiasts interprets this 'lanatis, villosis,' and some take 'dulce' with 'pellitis,' which leaves no word to govern 'ovibus.' 'Pellitis' is more generally and correctly supposed to refer to the practice of covering the sheep with skins to preserve their wool. The Galæusus (Ga-ласо) flowed through the ager Tarentinus, which was rich in gardens and corn-land, as well as in pastures. How Phalanthus, the leader of the Parthenia, emigrated from Lacedaemon and got possession of Tarentum, is related by Justin (iii. 4).
11. regnata] Similar passives are found in C. iii. 3. 43, "Medis triumphatis;" iii.
19. 4, "Bella pugnata;" Epod. i. 23, "Bel-lum militabitur;" S. ii. 5. 27, "Res certabitur."
'Regnata' occurs again in C. iii.
29. 27, and Tacitus (Hist. i. 16) speaks of "gentes quae regnantur." The word is not used by prose-writers of an earlier age than Tacitus.
15. decessunt] This word is used again in the same sense of 'giving place to' in the second epistle of the second book, v. 213:
"deceperat."
18. 'Aulon' is stated by Acron to have been a hill near Tarentum; by Porphyron a place fruitful in vines. Bentley, disliked the epithet 'fertili' for 'Baccho,' reads with some MSS. 'fertilis;' and, as this renders it necessary to get rid of 'amicus,' he does by changing it 'levissima mutatione' into 'apricus.' He quotes Acron 'in loco,' who says of the climate of Tarentum 'et melle et olivetis praeclarii hiemese quoque apriciores habet,' and thinks he must have had 'apricus' in his copy. No MS. that we know of has it.

The honey of Tarentum or Calabria (iii.
16. 33), and of Matinum (iv. 2. 27) in Italy, of Hybla in Sicily, and of Hymettus in Attica, are those Horace celebrates most.
Venafrum (hod. Venafro) the most northern town of Campania was celebrated above all places in Italy for its olives. 'Venafrus' is the dative case. See C. i. 1. 15, n.
21. beatae — arcus:] 'Rich heights' of Aulon or other hills near Tarentum. 'Arx,' which is derived by Forcellini from ἄρχος, is rather akin to ἄρχος, and signifies prima-Postulant arces; ibi tu calentem
Debita sparges lacrima favillam Vatis amici.

rily a fortified place; and, fortified places being commonly on heights, 'arc,' in a derived sense, came to mean a hill generally. Varro therefore, whom Forcellini corrects, is more near the truth in deriving the word 'ab arcano:' ἱππος-ος contains the root 'arc' of 'arc-a,' and 'arc-a,' which ἱππος does not. The name would lead us to suppose it was a valley; and, from the fact that it gave excellent pasture for sheep, we might infer that it was not only a hill. See Martial (xiii. 125):—

"Nobilis et lanis et felix vitibus Aulon Det pretiosa tibi vellera, vina mihi."

Cramer (Italy, ii. 328) speaks of "the fertile ridge and valley of Aulon," now Terra di Melone, as on the left bank of the Galaesus. He refers to Romanelli (i. 293).

---

CARMEN VII.
A.U.C. 724.

"Ad Pompilium Varum scribit gaudens ob ejus in patriam reditum quem commilitonem in castris Bruti et Cassii suisse commoratam; et belli civis sivasese percusa Augusto victore." These are the words of Acron, and many of the MSS. have 'AD POMPILIO' or 'POMPEIUM VARUM,' the latter being correct. But Samadon, followed by nearly all commentators till the last few years, has confounded the person here addressed with Pompeius Grosphus, to whom the 16th ode of this book is written (see Introduction), and who is mentioned in the twelfth epistle of the first book (v. 22). But the proscribed follower of Brutus cannot be identified with the wealthy Grosphus, as Estré has observed, and, as Vanderburg has remarked, the newly made citizen would not have been addressed in the language here used: "Quis te redonavit Quiritem Dis patris Italice caelo." Masson (Vie d'Horace, p. 88, sq.) fixes the date in A.U.C. 715, in which year those of the republican party who had followed Sextus Pompeius were allowed to return, peace being made between Sextus and the triumvirs, and an amnesty being granted to his followers. Kirchner (Q. H. p. 5) strongly supports this opinion. Dacier asks why then Horace should have used the words "Quis te redonavit, &c.?” and though the words must not be taken too literally as a question, and are more an expression of joyful surprise, yet there is something in the remark; and moreover it is pretty certain that Horace when he wrote was in possession of his country-house, and had been in it some time (vV. 19, 20). But he did not get this house till after the first book of Satires was finished, that is not till A.U.C. 720, and it may have been a year or two later. The long service of Pompeius (mentioned in v. 18) is inconsistent with the above early date; and something may be said in respect to the style of the ode, which is one of Horace's best. Also it is doubtful, as it appears to me, whether even in jest Horace would have alluded to Philippi in the way he here does, if he were writing soon after that memorable disaster. On the whole it is most probable that Pompeius did not return to Rome, as Acron intimates, till after the civil war was over, having meanwhile followed the fortunes first of his namesake Sextus, and then of M. Antonius, and that the ode was written A.U.C. 724, or thereabouts.

ARGUMENT.

O Pompeius, my earliest friend and best, with whom I have served and indulged full many a day, who hast sent thee back to us a true citizen of Rome? We fought and fled together at Philippi; but, while I was carried off by Mercury, the wave drew thee back into the stormy ocean again. Come then pay thy vows unto Jove, and lay thy weary limbs under my laurel. Bring wine and ointment and garlands; choose a master of the feast, for I will revel like any Thracian for joy that my friend hath returned.

O saepe mecum tempus in ultimum
Deducte Bruto militiae duce,
Quis te redonavit Quiritem
Dis patriis Italoque caelo, Pompei meorum prime sodalium,
Cum quo morantem saepe diem mero Fregi coronatus nitentes Malobathro Syrio capillos?
Tecum Philippos et celerem fugam
Sensi relicta non bene parmula,
Cum fracta virtus et minaces
Turpe solem tetigere mento.
Sed me per hostes Mercurius celer
Denso paventem sustulit aere;
Te rursus in bellum resorbens

1. tempus in ultimum] During the two years between his leaving Rome and the battle of Philippi, Brutus went through many hard-fought battles with the native tribes in Macedonia and in Asia Minor, as well as in resisting the assumption of his province by C. Antonius the triumvir's brother, to whom the Senate had assigned it. 'Tempus in ultimum' does not mean so much to the brink of the grave, as we should say, as into extreme danger or need. Forcell. gives examples of this meaning of 'tempus.'

3. redonavit Quiritem] This word 'redonare' is peculiar to Horace. He uses it again C. iii. 3. 33. It has been suggested that Horace got Maecenas to intercede for Pompeius' pardon, I do not know on what grounds. 'Quiritem' has particular force as 'unshorn of your citizenship.' He had not been capite deminutus. The singular 'Quiris' does not occur in prose-writers. Heinsius' conjecture 'Quiritum' is weak and insipid.

5. prime sodalium] It is probable that the days Horace enjoyed so much with his friend were spent at Athens. The language does not seem to suit a camp life, especially on such a service as the army of Brutus went through. On 'fregi' see C. i. 1. 20, note.

8. Malobathro] Oil produced from an Eastern shrub of that name. Graevius says it came from the Malabar coast, and that its native name was Tamalobatra. It must in that case have been of the betel tribe. But the betel has no smell, nor is any oil extracted from it. If this be an Indian plant, 'Syrio' is only used in the same extended application in which Ovid uses 'Assyrium' (Amor. ii. 5. 40); "Maeonis Assyriam foemina tinxit ebur." See C. ii. 11. 16.

9. Philippos et celerem fugam] We need not take Horace too much at his word. He was not born for a soldier any more than his friend Iccius (C. i. 29); and he could afford to create a laugh against himself as a ῥίψασπις. He had in mind no doubt the misfortune that befell Alcaeus, as related by Herodotus (v. 95). There was nothing disgraceful in the flight from Philippi, which Brutus advised and necessity compelled. Orelli interprets thus:—"the boldest amongst us bowed their heads to the ground which their shame had disgraced, to ask for quarter," as Caesar describes Pompey's soldiers doing after the battle of Pharsalia (Bell. Civil. iii. 98). Lambinus understands Horace to mean that they bit the dust, as Turnul says of Mezentius (Aen. xi. 418): "Procubuit moriens et humum semel ore momordit," and Ag. in his prayer against Hector (II. ii. 417): πολλεῖς ὁ ἀμφ' αὐτῶν ἵταροι Πην- νίες ἐν κοινήσει δόδαξ λαύσιν γαίαν, and Euripides of Eteocles and Polyneices (Phoc- niss. v. 1438): γαίαν ὁ δόδαξ ἱλότις ἀλλ ἅ- λον πήλας Πιστουσιν ἀμφω. All that seems to be meant is that the bold were struck to the ground.

13. Mercurius celer Denso — sustulit aere:] Poets were 'Mercuriales viri' (C.
CARMINUM II. 8.

Unda fretis tulit aestuosis.
Ergo obligatam rede Jovi dapem
Longaque fessum militia latus
Depone sub lauru mea nec
Parce cadis tibi destinatis.
Oblivioso levia Massico
Ciboria exple; funde capacibus
Unguenta de conchis. Quis udo Deproperare apio coronas
Curatve myrto? quem Venus arbitrum
Dicet bibendi? Non ego sanius
Bacchabor Edonis: recepto
Dulce mihi furere est amico.

ii. 17. 29). He refers his preservation directly to the Muses in C. iii. 4. 26. He had in mind no doubt Paris's rescue by Venns (II. iii. 361); and Aeneas's by Phoebus in a thick cloud (II. v. 344; Aen. x. 81).

15. resorbens Unda] Like the wave, that, just as the shipwrecked man is struggling to shore, lifts him off his feet and throws him back again. Catullus, writing to Manlius, has a like expression:

—— "tanto te absorbens vortice amoris Aestus in abruptum detulerat barathrum."

18. Longaque — militia] If the assumed date be right, Pompey had had no rest for more than thirteen years, beginning with the wars of Brutus, A.v.c. 710, and ending with the battle of Actium.

22. Ciboria] A drinking-cup like the pod of an Egyptian bean, of which this was the name. For 'exple' some MSS. have 'imple,' but the other is stronger and has most authority. 'Funde' means 'pour upon your head.' 'Udo' is perhaps like the Greek ὑδῷδω, 'supple.' Theocritus (vi. 69) calls it πολύγαμπτον αἶλους.

25. Curatve myrto?] Dillerbr. has given a variety of instances in which the enclitics 'que,' 've,' 'ne' are added to a word other than that which is to be coupled with the preceding word. There are two examples close to each other in C. ii. 19. 28. 32. Dillenbr. says this construction is adopted advisedly to give force to the particular word to which the enclitic is added, and to strengthen the connexion. The truth of this is more apparent in some other cases than in this; but it is true and worth observing.

Venus] This was the highest cast of the dice, as 'canis' was the lowest. Propertius brings them both in together (iv. 8. 45, sq.):—

"Me quoque per talos Venerem quae rente Secundos
Semper damnosii subsiluere canes."

'Dicet' is used in the same sense as by Virgil (Georg. iii. 125): "'Quem legere ducem et pecori dixere maritum;' where Servius explains 'dixere' by 'designavere.'

26. furere] See C. iii. 19: "Insanire juvat," both being imitated from Pseudo-Anacreon (31 Bergk), βὴλω βὴλω μανῆματ.

The Edoni were a people of Thrace (see C. i. 27. 2).

CARMEN VIII.

The MSS. vary in the name of the woman addressed in this ode. The best give her the name of Julia with Barine or Varine. Bentley objects to Barine as neither Greek nor Latin, but has no other name to suggest. It did not occur to him that it might be barbarian. Peerlkamp would substitute Barsine, which happens to be the name of one of Alexander the Great's wives. The matter is of no great importance. The ode is probably a mere imitation of the Greek or fancy of the poet's.
ARGUMENT.

Barine, if I could see thee punished for thy false vows, I might believe thee again. But the moment after thou hast forsown thyself thou art lovelier and more bright than ever. Perjury then is profitable, Venus and her train laugh at it. Fresh slaves follow thee, and the old ones cannot leave thy roof; mothers and stingy fathers and new-married brides are afraid of thee.

ULLA si juris tibi pejerati
Poena, Barine, necuisset unquam,
Dente si negro fieres vel uno
Turpior ungui,
Crederem. Sed tu simul obligasti
Perfidum votis caput enitescis
Pulchrior multo, juvenumque prodis Publica cura.
Expedit matris cineres opertos
Fallere et toto tacitura noctis
Signa cum caelo gelidaque divos
Morte carentes.
Ridet hoc inquam Venus ipsa, rident
Simplices Nymphae, ferus et Cupido
Semper ardentes acuens sagittas
Cote cruenta.
Adde quod pubes tibi crescit omnis,
Servitus crescit nova, nec priores
Impiae tectum dominae reliqunt Saepe minati.

1. juris—pejerati] This expression is not found elsewhere. It is formed by analogy from 'jus juratum,' Acron speaks of a form 'jus juratum,' but that too is not found in extant writings. Ovid has imitated the opening of this ode (Amor.iii.3.1, sq.):—

"Esse deos, i. crede: fidem jurata fedellit, Et facies illi quae fuit ante manet,"

Theocritus mentions a pimple on the tip of the tongue or the nose as a punishment for lying (Idyll. ix. 30):—

μηκίρ ἐπὶ γλώσσας ἄκρας ἀλοφύγδωνα and (xii. 24)

ἐγὼ δὲ σε τῶν καλῶν οἰνέων πψίεις μῖνος ὑπερθεὶν ἀραίης οὐκ ἀνα-φως.

9. opertos] I do not find that this word is used elsewhere for 'sepultos.' There was no more common oath than by the ashes of the dead, and the moon and stars. Orelli has collected instances to which others might be added in abundance, as Ovid, Heroid. iii. 103; viii. 119.

13. Ridet hoc inquam Venus ipsa,] Tibullus (or the author of the third book attributed to him) says the same of Jove (iii. 6. 49):

"— perjuria ridet amantum Juppiter et ventos irrita ferre jubet."

Stephens in his Thesaurus (vol. ii. p. 35) mentions two Greek proverbs to the same effect: αφροδισίως ὄρκος οὐκ ἐμπιστεύεις, and τὸν γὰρ γυναικὸς ὄρκον εἰς ὕψος γράφω, the latter being probably a verse from a Greek dramatist.

15. Semper ardentes] This seems to be taken from a picture. Moschus (Id. i.) says of the weapons of love, πυρὶ πάντα βεβαπται. 'Semper' belongs to 'ardentes.'
Te suis matres metuunt juvencis,
Te senes parci miseracque nuper
Virgines nuptae, tua ne retardet Aura maritos.

23. Virgines] Like 'puellae' (C. iii. 14. 10) this word does not belong exclusively to maids.
Bentley thinks Horace probably wrote 'cura' not 'aura' in the last line; but he is alive to the objection to the repetition of the same word from v. 8. Orelli gives all the interpretations that have been proposed for 'aura,' and quotes, as illustrating his own opinion, Virgil (Georg. iii. 250):—

"Nonne vides ut tota tremor pertentet Corpora si tantum notas odor attulit auras?"

Forcellini quotes Aen. (vi. 204), "Discolor unde auri per ramos aura refusit:" with which Servius compares this of Horace. Forcelli says, "interdum aura significat tenue quiddam et varium ex aere et lumine aut colore resultans." Acron says, "aura, aut facilitas qua in amorem trahuntur, aut unguentorum odor;" and Porphyrius, "amoris aura quae ad te eos fert." The Scholiasts therefore were as little prepared with an explanation as modern commentators. The interpretation of Mancellinus is, "aura, id est splendor et nitor." Perhaps the literal interpretation of Porphyrius is best, 'tua aura,' "the breeze that sets them towards thee." 'Popularis aura' (C. iii. 2. 20) is the shifting breeze of popular opinion or favour.

CARMEN IX.

A.u.c. 729 (?).

C. Valgius Rufus was a poet of much merit, and appears to have been sad for the loss of a young slave (not his son, as Sanadon and Dacier suppose, arguing from the examples brought forward in mitigation of Valgius' grief). At a time of public rejoicing (probably at the closing of the temple of Janus, A.u.c. 729, after the Cantabri had been put down by Augustus, C. ii. 6. Introduction) Valgius is called upon (as Tibullus was in C. i. 33) to cease from writing mournful verses on his loss, and to turn his thoughts to the praises of Augustus.

ARGUMENT.
The rain does not always fall, nor the storms rage, nor the frost continue for ever, Valgius.
But thou mournest for Mystes from morning till night. Nestor did not always weep for Antilochus, nor his parents and sisters for Troilus. Cease thy wailings, and let us sing of the triumphs of Augustus.

Non semper imbre abstrinae nubibus hispidos
Manant in agros aut mare Caspium
Vexant inaequales procellae
Usque, nec Armeniis in oris,

3. inaequales] This epithet is equivalent to 'iniformes' (C. ii. 10. 15). See C. i. 7. 15:—

"Albus ut obscuro deterget nubila caelo Saepe Notus neque parturit imbrés Perpetuos, sic tu—"
Amice Valgi, stat glacies iners
Menses per omnes aut Aquilonibus
Querecta Gargani laborant
Et foliis viduantur orni:
Tu semper urges flebilibus modis
Mysten ademptum, nec tibi Vespero
Surgentec deceudit amores
Nec rapidum fugiente Solem.
At non ter aeo functus amabilem
Ploravit omnes Antilochum senex
Annos, nec impubem parentes
Troilum aut Phrygiae sorores
Flevere semper. Desine mollium Tandem querelarum, et potius nova Cantemus Augusti tropaea
Caesars et rigidum Niphaten,
he did not know or care whether it was a mountain or a river. However this may be, there can be no doubt Niphates was a mountain-range east of the Tigris. The name means the snow-mountain. Perhaps a part of it may have been covered with perpetual snow. Strabo (p. 529, Ed. Cas.) makes the Tigris rise in the Niphates. This fact may account for the confusion that existed between mountain and river. The successes of Augustus in Armenia were in a.u.c. 734, and the geographical question therefore is chiefly of interest here in a chronological point of view: but even that interest vanishes, if we suppose Horace to be speaking of conquests to come, as he does in C. i. 12. 53, sqq. We may then admit that Horace wrote of the conquest of Armenia even five years before any successes were gained there.

"Hic Lelegas Carasque sagittiferosque Gelonos Finxerat. Euphrates ibat jam mollior undis;"

or it may be Horace meant the Tigris. See last note. There was a river Medus which flowed into the Araxes, near Persepolis, but it was a small stream, and probably unknown to Horace. He cannot allude to this, as some suppose. Lambinus, however, thinks he means this river, and says the expression is that we meet with elsewhere. 'Metaurus flumen' (C. iv. 4. 36), and 'Rhenum flumen' (A. P. 5).

22. vertices,] Heinsius on Aen. i. 117, states that the Medicean MS. always has the reading 'vertex,' not 'vortex.' The MSS. and editions vary in this passage, and Forcellini says that 'vertex' and 'vortex' are written indiscriminately in the MSS. of all the Latin authors. Fea adopts 'vertices,' but with it Charisius' absurd etymology, "vertex a vertendo dicitur: vortex a vorando." The passage from Quintilian, quoted by Forcelli, shows how 'vertex' passed into its derived meanings.

23. Gelonos] This was one of the tribes on the north bank of the Danube. See note on 21, and C. i. 19, 10, n. About the same time, it is supposed, with Augustus' expedition against the Cantabri, Lentulus drove the Transdanubian tribes across the river (see C. iii. 8, Introduction). But whether this is alluded to here must be matter of doubt.

CARMINUM II. 10.

Medumque flumen gentibus additum
Victis minores volvere vertices,
Intraque praescriptum Gelonos
Exquis equitare campis.

CARMEN X.

Licinius Murena, or A. Terentius Varro Murena, as he was called after his adoption by A. Terentius Varro, was apparently a man of restless and ambitious character; and, as we have seen, paid the penalty of his rashness with his life (C. ii. 2, Introduction). It is very probable that Horace wrote this ode to his friend to warn him of the tendencies of his disposition. All else that we learn from Horace's poems respecting Murena is that he was of the college of augurs (C. iii. 19), and that he had a house at Formiae, where he received Maccenas and his party on their way to Brundusium (S. i. 5. 37, sq.). As Murena was put to death a.u.c. 732, this ode must have been written before that year.

Although it may be inferred from the tone of this ode that Murena was not incapable of the conduct imputed to him and on the charge of which he died, it is but fair to him to say that his guilt does not appear to have been proved. Dion (54. 1. 3) says that, "in the year when M. Marcellus and L. Arruntius were consuls, Fannius Caepio headed a conspiracy, which was joined by others; and Murena was said to have entered into it with them, either truly or slanderously. The conspirators did not appear to take their trial, and were condemned in their absence, but were taken and put to death shortly afterwards. Proculeius, his brother, and Maccenas, who had married his sister, were unable to obtain Murena's pardon." The same historian charges him with ungovernable and indiscriminate rashness of speech: ἀκράτῳ καὶ κατακορῷ παρρήσιᾳ πρὸς πάντας ὅμοιως ἰχρῆτο (54. 3).
ARGUMENT.

The way to live, Licinius, is neither rashly to tempt nor cowardly to fear the storm. The golden mean secures a man at once from the pinching of poverty and the envy of wealth. The loftiest objects fall soonest and most heavily. In adversity or prosperity the wise man looks for change. Storms come and go. Bad times will not always be bad. Apollo handles the lyre as well as the bow. In adversity show thyself brave, in prosperity take in sail.

Rectius vives, Licini, neque altum
Semper urgendo neque, dum procellas
Cautus horrescois, nimium premendo Litus iniquum.

Auream quisquis mediocritatem
Diligit tutus caret obsoleti
Sordibus teeti, caret invidenda Sobrius aula.

Saepius ventis agitatur ingens
Pinus et celsae graviore casu Decidunt turres feriuntque summos Fulgura montes.

5. Horace's language comes near to that of Aristotle (Polit. iv. 12), καὶ σοζονται ο' ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν οὔτοι (ὁ μέσος) μάλιστα τῶν πολιτῶν οὔτε γὰρ αὐτοὶ τῶν ἄλλων ὄφερ οἱ πίνυτις ἐπιθυμοῦσιν οὔτε τῆς τούτων ἔτεροι. Aristotle quotes a maxim of Phocylides to the same effect, πολλὰ μίσουσιν ἁρσα' μέσος θέλω ἐν πόλει εἶναι. That every virtue is a mean between two vices is a doctrine laid down in the Ethics of this author (Nic. Eth. ii. 7), and Cicero (de Off. i. 25) says, "Nunquam iratus qui accedit ad poenam mediocritatem illam tenebit quae est inter nimum et parum."

6. obsole[ ] That which has gone out of use; therefore old and decayed. For the various applications of the word see Forcell.

9. Saepius] Burmann's conjecture (on Ovid, Heroid. xiv. 30), 'saevius,' is strongly defended by Jani, who thinks 'saepius' much too weak, especially for so elaborate a poem. Sanadoor adopts 'saevius' as agreeing better with 'graviore casu,' which he says, would have been 'freqventiore casu' had the true reading been 'saepius.' Dacier is opposed to him, and so are all the MSS., the Scholiasts, and every edition earlier than the eighteenth century (Burmann edits 'saepius'), and all the editors of this except Fea. Cunningham approves of 'saevius' only, as it would seem, because Bentley does not, and yet Bentley carries the system of correcting on aesthetical principles far enough. The same editors follow one another in reading 'excelsae' for 'et celsae.'

The illustrations used in this stanza are frequently met with. A passage of Lucanus' fifth book (1116—1133) may be compared with this ode. In the sixth book (v. 420, sq.) he asks,

"Ataque cur plerumque petit loca, plurima quo plus Montibus in summis vestigia cernimus ignis?"

The oldest passage containing this illustration is one of Herodotus (vii. 10), ὃς τὰ ὑπερίχοντα ζῶα ως κεραυνοί ὁ θεός οὐδὲ ἤφαντότας, τὰ ἐκ μυκρὰ ὤνδεν μιν κυλεύοντα ὄρνη δὲ ως ὡς οἰκήματα τὰ μέγιστα ἀχι καὶ εὔνομα τὰ τοιαύτ' ἀποσκεπτεῖ τὰ βίλας φιλέεν γὰρ ὁ θεός τὰ ὑπερίχοντα πάντα κολούνων. Of later writers Ovid says (Rem. Am. 369),

"Summa petit livor, perflant altissima venti, Summa petunt dextra fulmina missa Jovis."

And Claudian (in Rufnum, i. 21),
CARMINUM II. 10.

Sperat infestis, metuit secundis
Alteram sortem bene praeparatum
Pectus. Informes hiemes reducit
Juppiter, idem
Summovet. Non si male nunc et olim
Sic erit: quondam cithara tacentem
Suscitat musam, neque semper arcum Tendit Apollo.
Rebus angustis animosus atque
Fortis appare; sapienter idem
Contrahes vento nimium secundo Turgida vela.

"— non ad culmina rerum Injustos crevise queror, tolluntur in altum
Ut lapsu graviore ruant."
And Juvenal (S. x. 105),

"— numerosa parabat
Excelsae turris tabulata unde altior esset Casus et impulsae praeceps immane ruinae."

In the passages above quoted 'fulmina' is used. But here, though 'fulgura' is properly only a flash of lightning, the best MSS. are in favour of 'fulgura,' and the word is used in the sense of 'fulmina,' as by Virgil (Georg. i. 488), "Non alias caelo ceciderunt plura sereno Fulgura." Landinus and Torrentius have 'fulmina,' though the former prefers 'fulgura.' Landinus (1463), Ascensius (1513), Cruquius, have 'fulgura,' and so most modern editions (except Fea's) since Bentley, who successfully defended the common reading. Very few MSS. have 'fulminum.' Stephens reads 'fulmina,' and quotes the proverb 'procul a Jove procul a fulmine.'

15. Informes hiemes] This epithet is like 'inaequales' in the last ode. Compare C. iii. 29. 43: —

"— cras vel atra
Nube polum Fater occupato
Vel sole puro."

In both cases Horace perhaps remembered Theocritus' lines (iv. 41), φίλο Βάττες τάχ' αύριον ἱσετ' ἀμένον. Ἡώ ζεὺς ἄλλοκα μίν πίλει αἴθριος, ἄλλοκα ο' ὑπ'.

17. olimSicerit: quondaneithara] 'Olim' being derived from the demonstrative pronoun 'illo,' of which the older form is 'ólo,' or 'ollo' (Key's L. G. 298), which only indicates the remoter object, signifies some time more or less distant, either in the past or future. So likewise 'quondam,' which is akin to 'quum,' an adverb relating to all parts of time, signifies any time not present. 'One of those days' is an expression our Irish neighbours use for some future day. The reading 'citharae,' which Bentley adopts on the authority of some pretty good MSS., but against the best, appears to me weak. 'Musam citharae' for 'cithara' is no where else used, and the nearest expression to it that Bentley can produce is 'Musa Tragoediae' (C. ii. 1. 9), which is not analogous. 'Musam' is equivalent to 'mele' in Lucret. (ii. 412):

"Ac Musaea mele per chordas organici quae Mobilibus digitis expergefacta figurant," when 'expergefacta' corresponds to 'suscitare' in the text.

Respecting Apollo as the destroyer of men and the god of music see Dict. Myth. Art. Apollo.

22. appare] This word has particular force (see Argument).
CARMEN XI.

The date of this ode has been much discussed. If any argument could be founded upon the first line, it would naturally be inferred that the Cantabri and the Scythian tribes were in arms at the time it was written. Lentulus’ expedition against the tribes of the Danube, who had invaded the Roman provinces is supposed, as I have said before (C. 9. 23, n.), to have taken place while Augustus was in Spain. Supposing this to be alluded to, the date of the ode may be considered settled within a year, that is, it must have been written about A.U.C. 729; and Horace speaks of his grey hairs (v. 15), which is consistent with that date, for he was then forty. But the date of the expedition of Lentulus is uncertain. The only authority on the subject is Florus (v. 12), who does not mention the date or give any clue to it (see C. iii. 8. Introd.). But after all it is not necessary to suppose that Horace meant any thing very definite by thus coupling two distant and troublesome enemies together. The name Scythian was applied to a great many people, some of whom were continually giving trouble to the Romans; and as Estré says (p. 414) if Horace had said,

"Quid bellicosus Parthus et Aethiops, or,

"Quid bellicosus Medus et Allobro
Hirpine Quinti cognitet Alpibus Divitus objectis,"

the sense would have been just the same, and the purpose of the writer as well answered, that being merely to introduce a convivial ode. He has prefixed to it a name we hear of no where else, and which has caused a good deal of difficulty to scholars. There is no Hirpinus on record but this one, belonging to the Quintian family or any other. Whether this person was a neighbour of Horace’s, and got his name from his Sabine connexion (the Hirpini were a Sabine people), or whether Horace gave some friend this name from some familiar whom unknown to us, is a matter of doubt. It has been assumed that this Quintius, and the one to whom is addressed Epp. i. 16, are the same. But the latter appears to have been younger than the former, whom Horace addresses as if he were a contemporary (v. 15). Cruquius would substitute ‘Crispine’ for ‘Hirpine.’ T. Quintius Crispinus was consul with Drusus A.U.C. 745, and it is more probable that the epistle above referred to was addressed to him than that this ode was. Finally to suppose with most of the commentators that this Hirpinus, whoever he was, was a nervous person inclined to look with alarm on the aspect of affairs, and especially afraid of a descent of the Scythians upon Italy, is as usual to mistake the character of the ode. That the disturbances and designs of the distant tribes were troublesome to Rome and topics of conversation is enough to account for their introduction here, without supposing that Horace or his friend attached more weight to them than other people.

ARGUMENT.

Never mind what distant nations are about, nor trouble thyself for the wants of life, which wants but little: youth is going and age approaching: the flowers and the moon are not always bright: why worry thyself for ever? Let us drink under the shade of yonder tree. Mix wine, boy, and bring Lyde to sing to us.
Quid bellicosus Cantaber et Scythes,
Hirpine Quinti, cogit et Hadria
Divisus objecto remittas
Quaerere, nec trepides in usum
Poscentis aevi paucar. Fugit retro Levis juventas et decor, arida
Pellente lascivos amores
Canitie facillemque somnum.
Non semper idem floribus est honor
Vernis neque uno Luna rubens nitet
Volk : quid acternis minorem
Consilii animum fatigas?
Cur non sub alta vel platano vel hac
Pinu jacentes sic temere et rosa
Canos odorati capillos,
Dum licet, Assyriaque nardo

2. Hirpine Quinti.] The names are inverted, as in C. ii. 2, 3; "Crispe Sallusti."
3. remittas.] For examples of 'remitto,' in the sense of deferring (as C. iv. 4, 21, 'quaerere distulit'), or altogether omitting, see Forcell. Lambinus interprets the word by 'remissus quaeas.'
4. trepides] This word, the root or stem of which is 'trep ('τρπιω), signifies to hurry hither and thither. So "pars castra hostium, pars terga trepidantium invaderet" (Livy, xxvii. 1); that is, while they were hurrying about in confusion, before they had time to form in line. Hence to be eager or anxious, as here and elsewhere. Some commentators interpret the words as if Horace meant to say "ne trepides aevi (causa sc.) paucar poscentis in usum," thinking that 'trepidare in usum aevi' is not translateable. But 'trepidare aevi' is not Latin, and not a Graecism that Horace would adopt. 'In usum' Graevius explains "in sumptum vitae," quoting Cic. ad Att. (xi. 11): "Id quoque velim cum illa vidas ut sit qui utamur," i.e. "unde sumptus sustineamus." Also he quotes St. Paul to the Philippians iv. 16: και ἅπαξ καὶ δις εἰς τὴν χρείαν μοι ἐπιμένετε, which the Vulgate translates "semel et bis in usum mihi misistis."
9. honor] The MSS. vary between 'honos' and 'honor.' The latter is preferable for euphony, and Bentley, says he who first changed it to 'honos' had no ears. Lambinus and Craquins and some of the old editions have 'honos.'

10. rubens] So Propertius (i. 10. 8): "Et medii caelo Luna ruberet equis." This word is nowhere else used to express the brilliancy of the moon. Catullus uses it for the bright yellow of the ripe corn (xx. 7): "Rubens arista sole servido," and Claudian (in Rufin. i. 102) for the golden waters of Pactolus: "stagna rubentis Aurea Pactoli." Aulus Gallius has a chapter on colours (Not. Att. ii. 26), in which Favroinus the Sophist discusses that subject with the orator Fronto, and attributes to the poverty of the Latin language, as compared with the Greek, its description of various bright colours by one word 'rubor:' "quum aliter rubeat ignis aliter sanguinis aliter astrum aliter cocum, has singulari rufi varietates Latina oratio—significat una ruboris appellat.ione." Virgil even applies it to the green fields in spring (Georg. iv. 306): "Ante novis rubeant quam prata coloribus."
11. minorem] This, like ἥσσων, signifies 'the victim of' or 'a slave to,' as we should say.
14. sic tenere] 'Sic' has a force of its own, signifying 'carelessly,' as 'it may be,' as, among other places, Terence, Phorm. (i. 2. 94): "Quid paedagogus—ile quid rei gerit? Ge. Sic tenuitier," ὀφίως has the same force. St. John describes our Lord sitting at Jacob's well in these words: ὁ ὄνομα Ἰησοῦς κεκατακεσ ἐκ τῆς ὁποίας ἐκαθάλετο ὀφίως ἐπὶ τὴν πηγὴν (iv. 6).
16. Assyriaque nardo] It was not only the poets that confounded Syria and Assyria. Cicero (in Verri. ii. 3. 33) speaks of Potamus uncti? Dissipat Euius
Curas edaces. Quis puer ocius Restinguet ardentis Falerni
Pocula praetereunte lympha?
Quis devium scortum eliciet domo
Lyden? Eburna die age eum lyra
"Matiret in comptum Lacaenae
More comas religata nodum.

"reges Persarum ac Syrorum," for the kings of Persia and Assyria. See also Pliny (N. H. v. 12). Horace uses 'Syrio' for an Indian commodity (above, C. 7. 8), "Malolathro Syrio;" and 'Assyrii' for the deserts of Syria (C. iii. 4. 32), and 'Assyrius' for any Eastern person (A. P. 118), "Colchus an Assyrius." This confusion is easily accounted for by the title of that great division of Alexander's empire, which embraced the whole of Asia under the dominion of a Syrian monarch.

17. Dissipat] This is the reading of all the MSS. Bentley would adopt Heinsius' alteration 'dissipet' if there were authority.
He is not usually deterred by such a consideration. But 'dissipat' is much better.

18. Quis puer] "Velut in ipso jam convivio voluit videri" (Acron).

21. devium] One who lives out of the way, as (Ov., Heroid. ii. 118) "Et cecinit maestum devia carmen avis."

23. in comptum] This is the reading of the best MSS., for those which have 'incomptum' as one word must have got it from an oversight of the transcriber. One MS. appears to have 'in comptam,' which Bentley adopts as one word 'incomptam' to agree with 'comam,' which is his reading
after many MSS. But there is good authority for 'comas.' Bentley conjectures 'nodo'

for 'nodum,' to correspond to C. iii. 14. 22:
"Myrrhaeum nodo colibere crinem." 'In comptum nodum' signifies into a plain knot without ornament. "In praeposito appo-sita est non composita" (Comm. Crupq.)

CARMEN XII.

The Scholastia Acron on Sat. i. 2. 64 has collected from Horace instances of fictitious names put for real ones of the same number of syllables of the same quantity; as Licinia (so all the Scholiasts write the name) for Terentia. Malthinus for Maecenas in the 25th verse of the above Satire; and Vellius for Annius in the 64th. Bentley quotes Persius (Sat. i. 121): "Auriculas asini Mida rex habet," where Mida stands for Nero. He also quotes from Apuleius a number of instances gathered from Catullus, Tibullus, Pro-pertius, and Ticida, whom Ovid mentions (Trist. ii. 437 sq.) in conjunction with other poets as disguising the name of Metella under the fictitious one of Perilla. To these may be added Canidia, substituted it would seem for Gratidia by Horace. Assuming, then, that Licymnia represents Terentia (and not a mistress of Horace, as some commentators suppose, and Acron inconsistently suggests as an alternat for Terentia), the date of the ode may be conjectured. Maecenas was married to Terentia about A. U. C. 721 or 722 (Epod. iii.), and she must have been in the prime of her beauty when this ode was written. But the reference to Augustus' wars, especially in the verses "ductaque per vias Regum colla minacium," makes it almost certain that it was not written before his triumph in the month Sextilis, A. U. C. 725. But the harmony between Maecenas and his wife was not of long continuance: therefore it is probable the ode was written soon after the triumph. That Augustus is called Caesar (v. 10) seems to Franke to make it probable
ARGUMENT.

Do not ask me with my soft lyre to sing of bloody wars, of centaurs, and of giants: as for the triumphs of Caesar, Maecenas, thou couldst tell them better in prose than I in verse. My task is to sing of the beauty and faithfulness of Licymnia, who graces the dance and sports with the damsels on Diana’s holiday. Wouldst thou for all the wealth of Persia, Phrygia, and Arabia give a lock of Licymnia’s hair or the kiss she refuses but loves thee to snatch, and will sometimes snatch before thee?

Nolis longa ferae bella Numantiae,
Nec dirum Hannibalem, nec Sículum mare
Póneo purpureum sanguine mollibus
Aptari citharæ modis;
Nec saevo Lapithas et nimium mero Hylæum domitosque Herculea manu
Telluris juvenes, unde pericum
Fulgens contremuit domus
Saturni veteris; tuque pedestrībus

2. dirum Hannibalem,] The best MSS. very between ‘dirum’ and ‘durum.’ Quintilian (viii. 2) commends among other instances of propriety in language, Horace’s epithets, ‘acrem’ for ‘tibiam,’ and ‘dirum’ for ‘Hannibalem;’ and as the same epithet occurs twice again in the same connexion (C. iii. 6. 36; iv. 4. 42), I prefer it to ‘durum.’ Bentley supports ‘durum’ as opposed to ‘mollibus.’ But such antitheses are not in Horace’s style. The Scholiasts appear to have read ‘durum.’

Sículum mare] Alluding to the naval victories of Dùllius, Meltellus, and Lutasius Cátulus in the first Punic war (see C. iii. 6. 34).

5. nimium mero] This use of ‘nimium’ is common in Tacitus, who also uses it with a genitive as (Hist. iii. 75): “nimius sermonis erat.” Forcell gives other examples. Dacier is persuaded there is an allegory in these names; the Lapithae and giants standing for Brutus and his army, Hylæus for Antony, and Hercules for Augustus.

9. tuque pedestrībus] The conjunction couples this part of the ode with the preceding, not with what follows. ‘Que,’ after negative sentences, has a qualified adversative sense, as, among other instances (C. i. 20. 3):

— “neque in terris morabor
Longius, iniadiaque major Urbes relinquam.”

So qu often follows verē, the fact being that every negative proposition may be resolved into an affirmative with a negation. Here the connexion is between nobis and dicas. Orelli is of opinion, and argues it strongly, that tu is to be taken generally for any body, not as referring to Maecenas or any intention of his to write an account of Augustus’ wars, which it is generally assumed he either executed or contemplated. But there is no more necessity for that assumption than to suppose that Varus wrote an epic on Maecenas, because Horace says (C. i. 6. 1) “Scriberis Vario fortis,” &c.
Dices historiis proelia Caesaris,
Maece nas, melius ductaque per vias
Regum colla minacium.
Me dulces dominae Musa Liciymniae
Cantus, me voluit dicere lucidum
Fulgentes oculos et bene mutuis
Fidum pectus amoribus;
Quam nec ferre pedem dedecuit choris,
Nec certare joco nec dare brachia
Ludentem nitidis virginibus sacro Dianae celebris die.

Maece nas was an author, though probably an indifferent one; and Horace may have put off his request that he should write a poetical account of Augustus' achievements by suggesting that he should write one in prose. It does not follow that Maece nas ever wrote or that Horace ever seriously intended to advise his writing. 'Pedestri bus' is an adaptation of the Greek πεζος λόγος for 'prose,' or 'soluta oratio,' which latter was the usual expression for prose in Horace's time. He uses the word
'pedestri' again twice to express a plain style of speech, but not for prose as opposed to poetry (S. ii. 6. 17): "Quid prius illustrem satiris musaque pedestri?" and (A. P.
35) "tragicus plerumque dolet sermonae pedestri." Quintilian uses the word but expressly as a Graecism (see Forcelli).
The word 'prosa,' or 'prorsos,' as its correct form appears to be, is of later use than the age of Augustus.

11. ductaque per vias] See C. i. 2. 49; iv. 2. 35, n. Epod. vii. 7.

12. minacium.] The MSS. vary between 'minacium' and 'minantium,' which words might easily be confounded through the omission of the mark usually substituted for 'n' in the latter, 'minantium.' But the participle would signify that they were now threatening, which would perhaps be out of character, though Jani thinks 'minantium' very graphic: "Quam graphicum hoc!" Jani is abundant in exclamation.
Bentley quotes Ovid (Trist. iv. 2. 21, sq.):
"Vinculaque captiva reges cervice gerentes
Ante coronatos ire videbit equos.
Et certe vultus alius pro tempore versos Terribiles alius, inmemoresque sui."

'Minax' is a favourite word with Horace.

13. dominae] If by Liciymnia is meant Terentia (see Introduction), 'dominae' may stand for wife, as in Virg. (Aen. vi. 397):

"Hi Ditis dominam thalamo deducere adorti." Ovid (Trist. iii. 3. 23): "Nun-tiethucaliquis dominam venisse, resurgam;"
and again in the forty-first verse:

"Nec dominae lacrymis in nostra cadentibus ora
Accedent animae temporis parva meae?"

So 'amans;' "vans apse luit amantem" (Aen.
i. 352). Some MSS. have 'dulcis;' and the editors differ as to the substantive to which this epithet belongs, 'musa,' 'domi-nae,' or 'cantus.' Bentley edits 'dulcis,' but quotes the line with 'dolces,' which he preferred therefore is plain; and it is likely that the transcribers who wrote 'dulcis' meant it for 'dulceis,' the accusative case.
'Cantus' wants an epithet.

14. lucidum Fugentes] Dillenbr. has a note here in which he says the neuter adjective is used adverbially in phrases like this, where there is to be expressed of the subject not only what it is but what it does.
In this place he says "oculi tantopere fulgent ut lucere videantur," I do not quite see the distinction. Had he said "tantopere fulgent ut lucre videantur," it might be supposed he meant that the eyes shine so,
they seemed to cast forth lightning, 'fulgere' being equivalent to 'fulgere emitttere." In 'turbidum laetatur' (ii. 19. 6) the remark is more clearly verified, since there he who rejoices is also confused. In 'dulce ridentem' (i. 22. 23); 'per fidum ridens' (iii. 27. 67); she who smiles is also sweet or roguish, and so on in 'gratum eolocuta' (iii. 3. 17); 'resonantem friste'
(S. i. 8. 41), &c., but I do not see what is gained by the observation. The neuter adjective only performs in those cases the office of an adverb, which is very common in all languages.

20. Dianae celebris die.] Her festival was held on the ides of August. The dances CARMINUM II. 13.

113

Num tu quae tenuit dives Achaemenes,
Aut pinguis Phrygiae Mygdonias opes
Permutare velis crine Liethniae, Plenas aut Arabum domos?
Dum flagrantia detorquet ad oscula
Cervicem aut facili saevitiae negat,
Quae poscente magis gaudeat erip,
Interdum rapere occupet.

at her festival were led by ladies of rank (see C. iv. 6. 31. A. P. 232). This and the use of 'dedecuit' shows that the person intended by Licymnia was not as some suppose a mistress of Horace's. To such a person the notion of being disgraced by dancing at a private house would not apply. 'Choris' appears to be opposed to the sacred dances.
Dancing was not unusual in private society at this time even among ladies. Therefore it was not degrading even to Terentia, who was probably fond of this amusement. Jani supposes 'certare joco' to mean another kind of dance of a merrier kind. But the words will not bear that meaning, and Horace is only referring to two kinds of dancing, private and public. Other words used with 'brachia' to express dancing are 'jactare,' 'deducere,' 'ducere,' 'mittere,' 'mo-vere' (see Forcell. Brachia). The graceful motion of the arms seem to have been one of the chief attractions in dancing, as it is still wherever it is practised as an art.

"Si vox est, canta: si nolli, brachia, salta,"
"Brachia saltantis, vocem mirare canentis," says Ovid (A. A. i. 595; ii. 303).
The expression 'ferre pedem' is used by Virgil (Georg. i. 11): "Ferte simul Faunnique pedem Dryadesque pellac;" and 'ladere' likewise (Ec. vi. 27): "Tum vero
in numerum Faunosque ferasque videres Ludere." 'Dianaes celebres die' is the day on which Diana was worshipped, the people flocking to her temple for that purpose. On this sense of 'celebris,' see Mr. Long's note on Cic. in Verr. Act. ii. 1. 2. c. 66, where the connexion of 'celebris' and 'creber' is satisfactorily shewn.

25. Dum flagrantia] The connexion is not strictly maintained between this stanza and the one before it; but it is easily understood. Some MSS. and Lambinus have 'fragrantia,' the author of which reading must have had in mind Horace's amusing denunciation in Epod. iii. 19, sqq., after he himself had been poisoned with Mac-cenas' garlic.

27. 'poscente' goes with 'magis,' not with 'cripi,' as some suppose. 'More than you who ask,' not as Rutgersius says,
'more than the woman who asks.' The Scholiast Acron read 'occupat' in v. 26, which carries the word back to 'dum' (v.
25), instead of connecting it as is natural with 'gaudeat.' Bentley reads 'occupat,' all the editions before him that I have seen have 'occupet,' and the older MSS. 'Oc-cupare' has the force of φθάνειν. See Forcell. and Index.

CARMEN XIII.

A.U.C. 728 (?).

The date of this ode is fixed with some confidence by Franke A.U.C. 728, by Dillenbr.
729, because it was written the year before C. iii. 8. (See Introduction to that ode, and
iii. 29.) The invitation to Maecenas was written evidently for the first anniversary of the accident referred to in this ode. Lachmann (Ep. to Franke, p. 240) considers it to be one of Horace's earliest, in consequence of the metre of v. 27, "Alcace, eetrio dura navi;" and for similar reasons he puts C. iii. 8 at an early date. But such conclusions have been already noticed. There is nothing in them, as I believe, whatever. The latter part of the ode is a remarkable instance of Horace's way of digressing into subjects only remotely connected with his principal theme.
HORATII FLACCI

ARGUMENT.

Whoever planted thee, thou tree, did so on an evil day; and with impious hand he reared thee to the destruction of his children and the disgrace of the village. Parricide, guest-murder,—there is no crime he would not commit. No one is safe against danger. The Phoenician sailor fears the Bosporus, and nothing else; our soldier the Parthian; the Parthian nothing but the might of Rome; but death comes suddenly on all. How nearly was I sent to the regions below, where all the shades wonder, Cerberus listens, the Furies are charmed, and the damned suspend their labours, while Sappho complains of her faithless countrywomen, and Alcaeus sings of the dangers of the deep and of the battle-field.

Ille et nefasto te posuit die,
Quicunque primum, et sacrilega manu
Produxit, arbos, in nepotum
Perniciem opprobriumque pagi;
Illum et parentis crediderim sui
Fregisse cervicum et penetralia
Sparsisse nocturno cruore
Hospitis; ille venena Colchica
Et quidquid usquam concipitur nefas
Tractavit, agro qui statuit meo
Te, triste lignum, te caducum
In domini caput immentis.
Quid quisque vitet nunquam homini satis

1. nefasto] A 'dies nefastus' was properly one on which, the day being dedicated to religion, it was not lawful for the praetor to hold his court. Ovid thus defines 'dies fasti' and 'nefasti' (Fast. i. 47):

"Ille nefastus erit per quem tria verba silentur; Fastus erit per quem lege licebit agi;"

where the three words alluded to are said to be 'do,' 'dico,' 'addico,' all of them familiar and of common occurrence in Roman civil procedure. Hence the name, which is compounded of 'ne' and 'fari.' And, because no secular work but what was necessary could prosper on the days called 'nefasti,' all unlucky days came to bear that name as here; and the word was hence applied to express all that was bad, as C. i. 35. 35. Bentley and others have attempted to mend the text in a variety of ways, of which Bentley's is the worst: 'Ille a nefasto.' "He not only planted thee on an evil day (whoever it was that first planted thee), but with impious hand reared thee." I see no difficulty here. The pagus was Mandela in a valley of the Sabine hills, where Horace had his farm.

6. Fregisse cervicum] This is the ordinary phrase for strangulation. It occurs again Epod. iii. 2. Sallust (Cat. 55) has "Frangere gulam laqueo;' and Cicero (in Verrem, ii. v. 42) : "Praetorem tu accusas? Frangere cervices." The force of 'penetralia' is, that in the inner part of the house the images of the penates and the hearth of Vesta were placed, where, if any where, the person of a guest should be sacred.

8. venena Colchica] Some MSS. and most of the old editions have Colchica; and for the metre's sake I adopt it. Orelli and nearly all modern editions have Colcha, which is an ordinary poetical form. Of the same abbreviated form are Marsus, Maurus, Medus, Hispanus, &c.

10. Tractavit.] This word is sufficient for both substantives. There is no necessity for supplying 'patravit' for 'nfas,' as Orelli says. The word 'tractare' is widely applied (see Index).

11. caducum] This word signifies 'falling' (iii. 4. 44), 'fallen,' or 'ready to fall.' More generally the last, as here. Virgil has (Aen. vi. 481): "Hic mulium fleti ad superos belloque caduci Dardanidiem;' where it means 'fallen.'
Cautum est in horas: navita Bosporum
Poenus perhorrescoit neque ultra Caeo timet aliunde fata,
Miles sagittas et celerem fugam

14. Bosporum] The form of the Greek υσις πορος requires that the name should be written thus, and not Bosphorum, as it is often spelt.

15. celerem fugam] C. i. 19. 11, n. Bentley is angry with the old MSS.—"iras-cor membranis veteribus"—for having, without exception, this word 'celerem,' and thinks Horace certainly was not thinking what he was about if he wrote it. He thinks 'reducem' is a much better word. In a long note full of quotations, Bentley does not notice Ovid (A. A. iii. 786): "Ut celer aversis utere Parthus equis." If Horace stumbled, therefore, he was not without a partner in his fall. 'Reducem' is very clumsy and without meaning. I am not aware that any editor has adopted the word. Plutarch (Crassus, c. 24), describing the attacks of the mounted Parthian archers on the army of Crassus on the plains of Mesopotamia, says, ὑπέφυγον γὰρ άμα βδλουν-

16. Italum robur] Interpreters differ as to the meaning of this word 'robur.' Some, among whom is Dillonburge, take it in its plain meaning—the power of Italy. Others, and Orelli among them, interpret it the prisons of Italy, 'robur' being the name given to the inner cage or cells where the worst malefactors were kept. According to Festus, "Robur in carcere dictur is locus quo praeceptitatur maleficiorum genus; quod ante arcis robusteis inledebatur." For instances of this use, see Forcell. The Scholiasts take no notice of the word. They probably therefore took the meaning the other way, which is the simplest and best. Lipsius quotes a passage from Josephus, from which it appears that among other things which the Roman soldier carried to battle with him (an axe, a saw, &c.) was a chain to secure any prisoner he might take.

To this Horace probably refers in 'catenas,' and below in C. viii. 22.

21. furvae regna Proserpinae] 'Fur-vus' is an old word signifying 'dark,' and is not different from 'fulvus,' except in usage. It is much used in connexion with the infernal deities and their rites. From the same root Festus derives 'furiae,' 'fuligo,' and other words of the same kind. The first syllable in Proserpina is long in other writers, except in one passage of Seneca (Her. Fur. 519): "Vidisti Siculae regna Proserpinae."

22. Sedesque discretas piorum et Acolis fidibus querentem

In the Homerick tales Elysium was separate from Tartarus, and these were the two divisions of Orcus according to the later notions. In the Homeric times Elys-

23. Sedesque discretas piorum Elysium was separate from Tartarus, and these were the two divisions of Orcus according to the later notions. In the Homerie times El-

Ely
Sappho puellis de popularibus,
Et te sonantem plenius aureo,
Alcaee, plectro dura navis,
Dura fugae mala, dura belli!
Utrumque sacro digna silentio
Mirantur umbrae dicere; sed magis
Pugnas et exactos tyrannos
Densum humeris bibit aure volgus.
Quid mirum, ubi illis carminibus stupens
Demittit atras belua centiceps
Aures et intorti capillis
Eumenidum recreantur angues?

The affection of Socrates for some of his young pupils was of that sublimated kind which was liable to be mistaken for a grosser feeling; and I consider it next to impossible for any modern reader fully to enter into the language of the "Phaedrus" and comprehend the quality of the feelings there described as Plato understood them, if he did understand them. On the subject of Sappho the reader may consult Müller's Dorian, B. iv.
Quin et Prometheus et Pelopis parens
Dulci laborum decipitur sono;
Nec curat Orion leones
Aut timidos agitare lycenas.

the interrogative 'quin,' corresponds to that of ὦκον. See Key's Latin Gr. 1172, note. 38. laborum decipitur'] See ii. 9, 17, n. The MSS. are divided between 'laborem' and 'laborum.' But, according to Jani's collection of various readings, the majority, and some of the best (all the Blandinian), have the genitive; and this was the reading of the Scholiasts. Lambinus, Graevius, Heinsius, Bentley, Sanadon, Cunningham prefer the accusative, which would be equivalent to πόνον κλίπτεται, which might stand; but the more usual construction would be πόνον ἑπίλθθσαε; and 'oblivisci,' to which 'decipi' is equivalent, governing the genitive case, I think Horace wrote 'laborum,' and not 'laborem.'

CARMEN XIV.

If Postumus be in this instance a real name, Horace's friend may have been the person to whom Propertius wrote a beautiful elegy (iii. 12) on the occasion of his going, as Kuinoel supposes, with the unfortunate expedition of Aelius Gallus against the Arabians, though there is no resemblance between the ode and the elegy, unless it may be traced in Horace's 'placens uxor' (v. 21). Propertius reproaches Postumus for leaving his affectionate wife Gallus, whose fidelity he compares with that of Penelope. Estre supposes it likely that this Postumus is he who a.d. 5 was consul suffectus, and a.d. 10 triumphed for his victories over the Dalmatians. This was Postumus Vibius. But it is all very uncertain. The ode is clearly one of those to which any other name might as well have been prefixed, since it only deals with Horace's ordinary commonplace, the certainty of death for all men. The tone is rather more melancholy than usual. Jani chooses to suppose that Postumus was rich, but covetous and self-indulgent, afraid of death, and too careful of his health. Dacier supposes Postumus to be no other than Julius Florus, to whom the third epistle of the first book and second of the second book are addressed. The Julian family, he says, frequently bore this surname, and the qualities which Horace assigns to the one he assigns also to the other, those qualities being ambition, fear of death, and a host of others. (See Epp. i. 3. 25, and ii. 2. 205, sqq.) But as Horace does not in reality charge these vices upon either of his friends, as will be readily seen by an attentive reader, they cannot be identified by this comparison. The date of this ode is as uncertain as the person, though Jani, from its sombre tone, supposes it must have been written late.

ARGUMENT.

Time is slipping away, Postumus, and piety will not retard the approach of age or Death.

No sacrifices will propitiate Pluto, who keeps even the giants Geryon and Tityos beyond that stream which all must cross, even though we expose not ourselves to the dangers of war, the sea, and climate. Thou must leave home, wife, and all thou hast behind, and thine heir will squander what thou hast hoarded.

Eheu fugaces, Postume, Postume, Labuntur anni, nec pietas moram
Rugis et instanti senectae
Affert indomitaque morti,—
6. illacrumabilem] Here this word is used in an active sense. It is used passively in C. iv. 9. 26: "Omnes illacrumabiles urgentur." See note on C. i. 3. 32.

It corresponds with Homer's, "Αἰδης ἀμιλικεῖς ἢ ἀδάμαστος (II. ix. 158), where ἀδάμαστος is expressed by 'indomitae' (4).

Compare Aristophanes (Ran. 1392), μόνος θῶν γὰρ θάνατος οὐ δώρων ἱψα, and Horace's "Orcus—non exorabiliis auro" (Epp. ii. 2. 178).

7. ter amplum] 'Ter' is not merely intensive as some take it, but expresses the triple form of the giant. "Quidve tripertora tergemini vis Geryonae" (Lucret. v. 28).

8. tristi Compescit unda,] This is Virgil's description (Aen. vi. 438):—

"— tristique palus inamabilis unda Alligat et novies Styx interfusa coerect," which is repeated from Georg. iv. 479. Sophocles (Electra, 127) calls it πάγκοιον λίμναν.

10. Quicunque terrae munere vescimur.] This expresses the words of Homer, δὲ ἄνθητος τ' ἅμα καὶ θέαν Ἀδριτίτης ἀκτην (II. xiii. 322), εἰ ἀράβης καρπὸν ἐδώσα (II. vi. 142), which last Simonides has closely imitated in the fragment preserved in Plato's Protagoras (6 Bergk).

11. reges] This is Horace's usual word for the rich, as observed on C. i. 4. 14. 'Colonus' was the lessee of a farm, the owner of which was called 'dominus' in respect to that property. 'Reges' therefore here are 'domini.' A 'colonus' might be rich and the tenant of a large farm; but Horace refers to the poorer sort here and in C. i. 35. 6. See Cic. in Verr. ii. 3. 5, 22; Long's notes. 'Inops' he uses sometimes in an extreme, sometimes in a qualified sense of want, but more generally the latter, as he does 'pauper' C. i. 1. 18, n. The opposition is between high and low, and the difference is one of position, as in the third ode of this book (v. 21, sqq.):—

"Divese prisco natus ab Inacho
Nil interest an pauper et infima
De gente sub divo moreris, Victima nil miserantis Orcl."

"The small and great are there, and the servant is free from his master" (Job iii. 19). This seems to express Horace's meaning.

15. Frustra per auctumnos nocentem] There is a like passage in S. ii. 6. 19:

"Nec mala me ambitio perdit nec plumbeus Auster
Auctumnusque gravis Libitinae quaeactus acerbae."

Dillenbr. says 'corporibus' may be governed by 'nocentem' or 'metuemus.' It can only be governed by 'nocentem.' Horace would not put that participle absolutely for 'noxium,' especially with a dative immediately following and depending on another word.

19. dannatusque longi] This follows the Greek construction, καταγγειοις πό-νον, as observed C. ii. 9. 17, n. Dillenbr.

CARMINUM II. 15.

Linquenda tellus et domus et placens
Uxor, neque harum quas colis arborum
Te praeter invisas cupressos
Ulla brevem dominum sequetur.
Absumet heres Caecuba dignior
Servata centum clavibus, et mero Tinget pavimentum superbo Pontificum potiore coenis.

says the genitive is admissible because 'damnare haud procul abest ab aestimando,' and that the genitive expresses the price. That might be true of the Greek usage, but the Latins expressed the price, except in the case of particular well-known words, by the ablative case.

21. et placens Uxor.] This may be imitated from Lucretius (iii. 907): —

"Nam jam non domus accipiet te laeta, neque uxor Optuma."

24. brevem] 'Brevis' is nowhere else used in this sense. It corresponds to διαγορέων and μιννθαδίος. With this passage compare C. ii. 3. 17, sqq.

25. dignior] This is ironical: the heir at least would know that wealth was made to spend, and so would be a worthier possessor than the man who had hoarded it.

27. superbo] This reading is supported by better MSS. than 'superbum,' '-bus,' '-bis.' The pride of the heir is transferred to the wine. Cicero (Phil. ii. 41) says, 'natabant pavimenta mero, madebant parietes.' On the pontifical feasting see C. i. 37. 2, n.

CARMEN XV.
About a. u. c. 726.

When Augustus had brought the civil wars to an end, a. u. c. 725, he applied himself to the reformation of manners, and Horace probably wrote this and other odes (ii. 18. iii. 1—6) to promote the reforms of Augustus; perhaps by his desire or that of Maecenas. They were all probably written between a. u. c. 725 and 728, and they should be read together, and with C. i. 2. From the reference to the temples in the last stanza, it may be assumed perhaps that this ode and iii. 6. 1 were written about the same time, that is, in 726, when Augustus set himself particularly to restore the public buildings. The authorities on the subject are Suetonius (Vita Octav. 30), Dion (53. 1, 2), and Velleius (2. 80), and the Monumentum Ancyranum.

Augustus passed several sumptuary laws to keep down the expensive habits of the rich citizens, regulating in particular the cost of festivals and banquets. But they soon fell into disuse and contempt, as Tiberius, writing to the senate fifty years afterwards, declared: 'Tot a majoribus referatae leges, tot quas divus Augustus tuliit, illae oblivione, haec, quod flagitiosius est, contemptu aboliitae securiorem luxum fecere' (Tac. Ann. iii. 54). For an account of the 'Sumptuariae leges' passed by Augustus, see Aul. Gell. ii. 24, and Smith's Dict. Antiq.

ARGUMENT.
The rich man's palaces and flower-gardens and ponds are occupying all our once fertile land. This was not the way of our ancestors, who had but little while the state was rich; who dwelt in no spacious houses; whom the law bade content themselves with a turf-roofed cottage, and beautify the towns and temples with marble.
JAM paeca aratro jugera regiae
Moles rellinent; undique latius
Extenta visentur Lucrino
Stagna lacu, platanusque caelebs
Evincet umlos; tum violaria et 5
Myrtus et omnis copia narium
Spargent olivetis odorem Fertilibus domino priori,
Tum spissa ramis laurea fervidos
Excludet ictus. Non ita Romuli
Praescriptum et intonsi Catonis
Auspiciis veterumque norma.

1. JAM paecu aratro] Tiberius (see Introduction) complained to the senate that Rome was entirely dependent on the provinces for her corn, and was at the mercy of the winds and waves, which might at any time cut off the supply and reduce the citizens to live on their ornamental woods and country houses. (Compare Sall. Bell. Cat. 13.)

2. undique latius The Scholiasts have strangely misunderstood these words, joining latius with visentur, as if Horace meant ‘the expanded waters of the Lucrine lake will be overlooked more widely,’ i.e. from lofty houses built on its banks. Cicero (ad Att. i. 18, 19, 20) complains that some of his contemporaries (‘ piscinarii’ he calls them) were so devoted to their fish-ponds, that they cared more for them than for all the interests of the state, as if this might fail and they still keep their playthings: ‘Ita sunt stulti ut amissa republca piscinas suas fore salvas sperare videantur’ (18); and again, ‘Nunc vero cum—nostri principes digito se caelum patere attingere si muli barbati in piscinis sint qui ad manum accedant, alia autem negligent, nonne tibi satis prodesse videor,’ &c. (ii. 1). Elsewhere he calls them ‘piscinarum Tritones’ (ii. 9).

5. tum violaria This is opposed to ‘tum laures’ (v. 9).

6. Myrtus This word is of two declensions. So likewise are ‘quercus,’ ‘laurus,’ ‘pinus,’ ‘cornus,’ ‘ficus,’ &c. and, as Bentley says, judging from the variations in the MSS., ‘cupressus’ but the readings now generally received all assign the last word to the second declension. In a very elegant illustration of the ornaments of speech Quintilian has the following passage: ‘An ego fundum cultuorem putem in quo mihi quis ostenderet lilia et violas et anemonas, fontes surgentes, quam ubi plena messis aut graves fructu vites erunt? Sterilem platanum ton-sasque myrtos, quam maritam ulnum et uberos oleas praepoptavet? Habeant illa divites libet; quid esset si nihil alid haberent?’ (Inst. viii. 3. 8), in which ‘myrtus’ occurs of the second declension, and ‘maritam ulnum’ explains ‘platanus cae-lebs.’ It seems as if Quintilian had Horace’s ode in mind.

10. ictus. Some good MSS. have ‘ae-stus.’ ‘Hand dubie ex interpretatione,’ says Jani. Lucretius uses ‘ictus’ several times: ‘Qui quoniam quodam gignuntur luminis ictu’ (ii. 808), ‘aestiferum ut tantum radiorum exaegat ictum’ (v. 612). Ovid also (Met. v. 369), ‘Phoebos submovet ictus’ (not ‘ignes’). Bentley remarks that Horace is holier than any in putting ‘ictus’ by itself, without ‘soles,’ ‘radiorum,’ &c. But ‘fervidos’ is nearly equivalent to any of those genitives.

10. Non ita Romuli Aul. Gellius (ii. 24) introduces his account of certain ancient sumptuary laws with these words, ‘Parsi-monia apud veteres Romanos et victus atque coenarum tenuitas non domestica so-lum observatione ac disciplina sed publica quoque animadversione legumque complu-rium sanctionibus custodita est.’

11. intonsi The commentators are at pains to inform us from Pliny (N. H. vii. 59) that the age of shaving at Rome began A.U.C. 454, when barbers were first imported from Sicily. But the conventional sense of ‘intonsi,’ in which alone it could apply to the Censor Catu, is ‘antiqui,’ as may be seen by comparing the two verses of Ovid, quoted in the note on C. i. 2. 15.
Privatus illis census erat brevis,
Commune magnum: nulla decempedis
Metapa privatis opacam
Porticus excipiebat Arcton,
Nec fortuitum spernere caespitem
Leges sinehant, oppida publico
Sumptu jubentes et deorum
Templa novo decorare saxo.

14. nulla decempedis] 'Privatis' agrees with 'decempedis.' Horace complains that the private houses of his day had verandahs so large as to be measured by a ten-foot rule. Here they dined in the hot weather, and caught the cool breezes of the north. This practice was called 'caenatio ad Boream.' 'Opacam excipiebat Arcton' is like Virgil's 'Frugis captatis opacam' (Ec. i. 53), where 'the shady coolness' means 'the coolness caused by the shade:' and 'opacam Arcton' combines the notions of the north wind and the coolness of the shady side of the house, which was the north side. 'Metapa' is again used passively in S. i. 2. 114, but no other writer so uses the word.

17. 'Fortitum—caespitem' means cottages roofed with turf, as Virgil says (Ec. i. 69), 'tuguri congestum culmine caespes,' not 'couches,' as Dillenbr. says, quoting Tibullus (li. 5. 99),

"At sibi quisque dapes et festas exstruct alto Caespitibus mensas caespitibusque to-rum."

Here the whole passage has reference to buildings. 'Fortitum' is equivalent to τὸν τυχόντα. It is sometimes used as a trisyllable. Cicero, in his defence of L. Flaccus (c. xii.), has a passage very like this, "Haec enim ratio ac magnitudo anierorum in majoribus nostris fuit ut cum in privatis rebus suisque sumptibus minimo contenti tenuissimo cultu viverent, in imperio atque in publica dignitate omnia ad gloriam splendoremque revocarent. Quaeuerit enim in re domestica continentiae laus; in publica dignitas." Horace alludes to the ruined state of the temples in Sat. ii. 2. 104:

Quare
Templa ruunt antiqua Deum?

CARMEN XVI.
After A. U. C. 720.

There are no means of fixing the date of this ode. It was written, however, after Horace had come into possession of his farm, to which he refers (v. 37). The person Pompeius Gropthus, to whom the ode is addressed was, according to Porphyrius, of the equestrian order. He was possessed of large property in Sicily, of which island he was probably a native. On his return Horace gave him a letter of introduction to his friend Icclus (Epp. i. 12), in which he speaks highly of his worth. Cicero mentions a Sicilian Eubulides, who bore the surname of Gropthus, a man of high character and birth, and great wealth (in Verr. ii. 3. 23). Estré supposes (p. 473) that this Gropthus was made a Roman citizen by Cn. Pompeius, and took his name, which descended to Horace's friend, his son or grandson. He is not to be confounded (as Jani and others confound him) with the Pompeins of C. ii. 7 (Introduction). He appears, from the latter part of the ode, to have been in Sicily when it was written. Perhaps he had written Horace a letter which called up the particular train of thought that runs through the ode, or had qualities which made it applicable to him.

ARGUMENT.
The sailor and the savage warrior alike pray for rest, but wealth cannot buy it. Riches and power cannot remove care from the dwelling. The humble alone are free. Why do we aim at so much happiness in this short life, and run away from home? We cannot fly from ourselves and care. We should be cheerful for the present, and not expect perfect happiness. One man lives many days, another has few. I may have opportunities of happiness which are denied to thee; and yet thou hast ample possessions, and I but a humble farm, a breath of the Grecian muse, and a contempt for the vulgar.

Otium divos rogat in patente
Prensus Aegaco, simul atra nubes
Condidit lunam neque certa fulgent
Sidera nautis;
Otium bello furiosa Thrace,
Otium Medi pharetra decori,
Grospehe, non gemmis neque purpura venale neque auro.
Non enim gazae neque consularis
Summovet lictor miseros tumultus
Mentis et curas laqueata circum
Tecta volantes.
Vivitur parvo bene cui paternum
Splendit in mensa tenui salinum,
Nec leves somnos timor aut cupidó
Sordidus aufert.
Quid brevi fortes jaculamur aevó
Multa? Quid terras alio calentes Sole mutamus? Patriae quis exsul
Se quoque fugit?

1. patente I have adopted Bentley’s termination, though nearly all the MSS. have ‘patenti’ (see note on C. i. 2. 2). Servius, on Virgil (Georg. iv. 42), “Deprensis olim statio fidissima nautis,” says that ‘depressus’ was a nautical term for a ship overtaken by a storm. This, as well as the weight of MS. authority, gives the preference to ‘prensus’ over ‘pressus,’ which several MSS. have, and Gesner approves. ‘Prensus,’ written with the usual mark ‘prēsus’ would easily pass into ‘pressus;’ and Jani says the copyists often interchange these words. ‘In patenti’ has been changed into ‘impotentē’ a common epithet for the winds and waves (see C. iii. 30. 3. Epod. xvi. 62). But the MSS. and old editions all have ‘in patenti,’ either as one word or two. The storms of the Aegean are mentioned C. iii. 29. 63: “Tutum per Aegos tumultus,” &c.

10. Summovet This is the proper word to express the lictor’s duty of clearing the way. The word ‘laqueatus’ is fully explained by Forcell.

14. salinum See note on S. i. 3. 13. ‘Cupído,’ when it refers to the love of money, is always masculine in Horace.

17. jaculamur See C. i. 2. 3, n.

18. Quid terras alio calentes Virgil has the same expression: “Atque alio patriam quaerunt sub sole jacentem.”

19. Patriae—exsul This is another Graecism, παριδος φυγας. Ovid uses the same construction (Met. ix. 409): “Exsul mentisque domusque.” There is a passage in Lucretius (iii. 1071, sqq.), which may aptly be compared with this, where he complains that men—

"Quid sibi quisque velit nescire et quacrec semper"
Scandit aeratas vitiosa naves
Cura nec turmas equitum relinquit,
Ocior cervis et agente nimbos Ocior Euro.

Laetus in praesens animus quod ultra est
Oderit curare et amara lento
Temperet risu; nihil est ab omni Parte beatum.

Abstulit clarum cita mors Achillem,
Longa Tithonum minuit senectus,
Et mihi forsan tibi quod negarit Porriget hora.

Te greges centum Siculaeque circum
Mugiant vaccae, tibi tollit himitum
Apta quadrigis equa, te bis Afro Murice tintae

Commutare locum, quasi onus deponere possint."

"Vitiosa" may, as Orelli says, be rendered "morbid," arising from a diseased state of mind. With "turmas equitum" is usually compared "post equitem sedet atra cura" (iii. 1. 40); but the sense there is a little different. Here he speaks of care following a man to the field of battle; there he refers to the rich man ambling on his horse. The notion is not Horace's, I think. The idea has something of a proverbial aspect. Like sentiments are found in S. ii. 7. 111—115. Epp. i. 11. 25, sqq. 14. 12, sq.

26. Oderit] This is a strong way of expressing "nolle." Forcell. does not notice it, and yet it is peculiar.

27. nihil est ab omni] This looks like an imitation of Euripides:

ωστ' ούτις ἀνδρῶν εἰς ἀπαντ' εὐδαιμονεῖ. (Alexander, Fr. 3. Dind.):

or of Bacchylides (1 Bergk):—

οἶνος, ἡμῖν θεός μοῖραν τε καλῶν ἔρων ούν τις ἐπιζήλου τύχα ἀφενιῶν βιομάν ἐδαίμων
οὐ γὰρ τις ἐπιθυμῶν πάντα γ' εὐdai'mon εἶν.

35. equa.] Marcs rather than horses were used for racing. Virg. Georg. i. 59: "Eliadum palmas Epioros equarium."

— bis Afro Murice tintae] These garments were called δίβαφος; compare Epod. xii. 21: "Muricibus Tyriis iteratae vellera lanae." The purple dyes most prized were the Tyrian, the Sidonian (Epp. i. 10. 26), the Laconian, and African (Epp. ii. 2. 181). Porphyry's remark, "Afrum muricem pro Tyrio dixit quia Tyrii in Africam transierunt," is not to be attended to. The garment dyed with this colour was the lacerna, an outer cloak worn over the toga, of which Martial mentions that they were sometimes sold as high as 10,000 sesterces. The epigram is worth quoting:—

"Emit lacernas millibus decem Bassus Tyrias coloris optimi. Lucrfecit.
Adeo bene emit? inquis. Immo non solvit."

What these garments gained in appearance by their dye they lost in savour; for Martial reckons among the worst smelling objects "bis murice vellus inquinatum." "Olidaque vestes murice," he speaks of elsewhere (i. 50. 32). And again:—

"Tinctis murice vestibus quod omni
Et nocte utitur et die Phileas,
Non est ambitiosa nec superba;
Delectatur odore non colore." (ix. 63.)

38. Spiritum Graiae tenuem Camenae] Interpreters differ as to the meaning of "tenuem." Porphyry explains it by "subtilem." Franke makes it synonymous with "molles" (ii. 12. 3). Graevius, "imbellem non aptum heroum factis et rebus gestis canendis." I do not think he means to describe the genius of the Greek muse, but (modestly) the amount of inspiration given to himself. 'Humile ingenium Graiae musae.' (Comm. Cruq.)
Vestiantur lanæ: mihi parva rura et Spiritum Graiae tenuem Camenae
Parca non mendax dedit et malignum
Spernere volgus.

39. Parca non mendax] Elsewhere he addresses the Parcae as 'veraces,' "Vosque veraces cecinisse Parcae" (C. S. 25); and Persius (v. 48) speaks of "Parca tenax veri."
It may therefore be taken as a conventional epithet.

CARMEN XVII.
A.U.C. 728 (?)

The two last lines of this ode, showing that Horace had not yet paid the sacrifice he had vowed to Faunus for his preservation from death, makes it most probable that it was written not long after C. 13 of this book, the composition of which has been assigned with some hesitation to A.U.C. 728. In the same year Maecenas appears to have recovered from a bad attack of fever to which he was liable, and was received with applause in the theatre on his first appearance after his illness (C. i. 20. 3). But his recovery seems to have been only partial; and it would appear that Horace had to listen to his complaints and apprehensions of death, his fear of which is said to have been great.

ARGUMENT.

Why kill me with thy complaints? I cannot survive thee, Maecenas: one half of my life being gone, how should the other stay behind? I have sworn to die with thee, and the monsters of Hell shall not separate us. Our star is one and the same. The power of Jove rescued thee from the adverse influence of Saturn on that day when thou wast received with acclamations in the theatre, and Faunus at the same time rescued me from death. Offer thy sacrifice and dedicate thy temple, and I will offer my unpretending lamb.

Cur me querelis examinas tuis?
Nec dis amicum est nec mihi te prius
Obire, Maecenas, mearum
Grande decus columnque rerum.
Ah te meae si partem animae rapit
Maturior vis, quid moror altera,
Nec carus aeque nec superstes
Integer? Ille dies utranque

6. altera.] 'Alteram' is the reading of some MSS. Among the editors it is adopted by Sanadon, Burmann, and Cunningham.
Porphyrión had that reading, for he says, by way of interpretation, "partem quae apud me est non retinebo." Two definitions of friendship by Pythagoras (quoted by Cruquius) are worth preserving. One is, σω-ματα μίν εἶν ἕνω ψυχῆ ἐν μία; and the other,

Erasmus (Adag. Neaera et Charmion) speaks of a custom of the Egyptians, among whom it was usual for persons to bind themselves
by an oath each not to survive the other,
such persons being called οἱ συναποθησοντες. Cruquius quotes Erasmus, but doubts the fact, which Erasmus does not.
It corresponds with Caesar's account of the Ducet ruinam. Non ego perfidum
Dixi sacramentum: ibimus, ibimus
Uteunque praecedes, supremum
Carpere iter comites parati.
Me nec Chimaerae spiritus ignae
Nec, si resurgat, centimanus Gyas
Divellet unquam: sic potenti Justitiae placitunque Parcis.
Seu Libra seu me Scorpios adspicit
Formidolosus pars violentior
Natalis horae, seu tyrannus
Hesperiae Capricornus undae,

Soldurii (B.G.iii. 23), where, speaking of the Aegyptian, he says, "Adcantuannus, qui summan imperit tenebatur cum pc devotis quos illi Soldurios appellant, quorum haec est conditio uti omnibus in vita commodis una cum his fraudatur quorum se amictiae dederint; si quid is per vim accidat aut eundem casum una ferant aut sibi mortem consciscant: neque adhuc hominum memoria repertus est quisquam qui eo interfector cujus se amictiae devovisset mortem recusaret." "Carus' requires 'ipsi' to be supplied, as (Epp. i. 3. 29) "Si patriae volumus, si nobis vivere cari." 'I shall love myself less, and but part of me will survive.' Horace and Maecenas died the same year, and it has been unreasonably surmised, from this coincidence and the language here used, that Horace hastened his own death in order to accompany his friend. (Compare Epod. i. 5.)

14. Gyas] Acron and Porphyryon read 'Gigas,' and interpret 'Briareus.' Bentley says all his MSS. have that reading, which has probably arisen out of 'Gyges,' the Doric form of 'Gyges,' which occurs in some MSS. The MSS. of Hesiod vary between Г'νε and Г'γνε, as—

Κότος τε κράσευς τε θύη τ' ατασος πολίμοιο.
(Theog. 714.)

Commenting on which line, Buttmann (Lex. p. 2. Fishlake) says he thinks Г'νε is the original and more correct form, being a form of γωνον. He considers that Г'γνε is a corruption arising out of the Lydian name, which Horace has adopted (C. ii. 5. 20; iii. 7. 5), the first syllable of which is long, and that is an argument against this form. On Buttmann's authority I have adopted 'Gyas,' which Orelli also prefers (though his oldest MSS. have 'Gigas'), both here and at iii. 4. 69. Bentley reads 'Gyges,' but rather argues against it. Labyrinth had originally adopted that reading, but his opinion was changed by the above objection about the quantity, which Bentley notices as if it were his own. Labyrinth and Ascensius follow the Scholiasts, though the former, quoting Hesiod in his Commentary, gives 'Gyas' as the name of Briareus' brother. Stephens has 'Gyas,' 'Cruquius 'Gigas,' in deference to all his MSS. (including the Blandian; so that all the oldest MSS. known to have been collated concur in that reading). Of the editors I have compared besides the above, Burmann reads 'Gigas.' Baxter, Jani, Gesner, Mitsch., Faa. 'Gyges.' Cunningham, Dacier, Sanandon, Dillenb., Duuentz, Jahn, 'Gygas.'

16. Justitiae] Δις and the Μοιας were daughters of Zeus and Themis, and the former is here introduced as associated with her sisters: "quibusceum aptissime conjungitur tanquam πιπρέπος," says Orelli; he does not say why.

17. Seu Libra] What Horace thought of astrology may be collected from C. i. 11. He introduces a little of it here to entertain his friend, showing, at the same time, but little care or knowledge of the subject, and rather a contempt for it.

"Quid movet pisces animosque signa Leonis,
Laetus et Hesperia quid Capricornus aqua."

"Laetus' being Kuinoel's reading instead of 'lotus,' in a sense corresponding to 'tyrannus' here, and to Virg. (Aen. ii. 417):

"Confluunt Zephyrusque Notusque et laetus Eois Eurus equis."
Utrumque nostrum incredibili modo
Consentit astrum. Te Jovis impio
Tutela Saturno refugens
Eripuit volucrisque Fati
Tardavit alas, cum populus frequens
Laetum theatris ter crepuit sonum:
Me truncus illapsus cerebro
Sustulerat, nisi Faunus iectum
Dextra levasset, Mercurialium
Custos virorum. Reddere victimas Aedemque votivam memento:
Nos humilem seriemus agnam.

21. Utrumque nostrum] Persius (v. 45, 51) has repeated and expounded Horace's ideas writing to his master Annaeus Cornutus:
"Non equidem hoc dubites amorum foedere certo
Consentire dies et ab uno sidere duci.
Nostra vel aequali suspendit tempora Libra
Parca tenax veri, seu nata fidelius hora
Dividit in Geminos concordia fata duorum, Saturniique gravem nostro Jove frangimus una,
Nescio quod certe est quod me tibi temperat astrum."

23. refulgens] Shining in opposition, so as to counteract his influences. Thus it is doubtful whether 'Saturno' be governed by 'refulgens' or 'eripuit.' Bentley takes 'volucris' with 'alas,' for which 'celeres' would have been a more suitable and probable epithet, as in C. iii. 29, 53.

26. ter crepuit sonum:] So Propertius:
"Natalis nostrae signum misere puellae Et manibus faustos ter crepuerse sonos."

'Puellae,' i. e. 'Musee.'

23. Sustulerat,] The use of the indicative in hypothetical cases of this kind is not easily reduced to rule; but it seems to correspond to the Greek construction of ἰδὼν with the indicative. When the condition is not fulfilled, or is a negative condition, or implies a negation, then the consequent clause may be expressed by the indicative mood, in the pluperfect tense if the action be a complete action and past, in the perfect if it be present. "Sustulerat si non levasset: sed levavit." See Wagner on Aen. ii. 55. See also his note on Aen. iv. 19:
"Si non pertaenem thalami teadeaque fuisset, Huic uni forsan potui succumbere culpae,"

where the perfect is used to express what might have been done at the time of speaking, for which the Greeks used the imperfect. See C. iii. 16. 3:
"Tristes excubiae munierant satis
Si non —
Custodem pavidum Juppiter et Venus
Risissent."

Professor Key (L. G. 1214, sqq.) says that the apparent exceptions to the rule that in such cases as this the subjunctive is required in both clauses, are to be explained for the most part by the sentences being elliptical. He also quotes this passage, and explains it as a "mere instance of ordinary exaggeration forthwith corrected." He translates the words thus: "Horace a trunk down gliding on his scull had carried off (or at least would have done so), had not Faunus with his hand lightened the blow." It is very difficult to put into words the nicety of a conventional expression. Mr. Key's judgment always commands respect, but this explanation is hardly satisfactory, I think; though it is more easy to feel the force of the construction than to explain it. It is common in our own language, in which Horace's meaning might be thus expressed, "the trunk had killed me, had not Faunus lightened the blow." Mr. Key adds in a note, "it should be observed, that in sentences of this character the 'nisi' or 'si' always follows." See Mr. Long's note on Cic. in Verr. ii. 5. 49, "licitum esset,... veniabant."

Horace was under the particular care of Mercury, the Muses, and Faunus, to each of whom, as well as to Liber (iii. 8. 7), he attributes his preservation on this memorable occasion (C. iii. 4. 27). Faunus or Pan was the son of Hermes or Mercury.
CARMINUM II. 18.

CARMEN XVIII.

After A. u. c. 720.

This ode, which deals with Horace’s favourite subjects, the levelling power of death, and the vanity of wealth, and the schemes of the wealthy, is dedicated to no particular friend, and is another proof of the little value or character that odes of this class derive from a name; though it was the poet’s pleasure at times to attach names to them. What I mean is, that the name we find in conjunction with such odes must usually be looked upon as non-essential, and that to draw inferences from the ode, in respect to the individual nominally addressed, is a mistake. C. iii. 24 bears a strong resemblance to this ode, which must have been written after Horace became possessed of his farm, and that is all that can be said of the date.

In writing the first few verses Horace may have had in mind some lines of Bacchylides, inviting the Dioscuri to feast with him, preserved in Athenaeus (28 Bergk), οὐ βοῦν πάρεσθι σώματ' οὖντε χρυσός οὔτε πορφύρου τάπητες, ἀλλὰ θύμος εὔμενής Μοῦσά τε γλυκεία.

ARGUMENT.

No gold in my roof, no marble in my hall, no palace have I, nor female clients to serve me, but I have honesty and understanding, and though I be poor I am courted by the rich: what more should I ask of the gods or my friend, content with my single Sabine estate? Days are passing on, and, though ready to drop into thy grave, thou art building and stretching thy borders, and tearing up the landmarks of thy client, and driving him from his home. But to what purpose is this? To Hades thou must go in the end: the earth opens to rich and poor; Promethens the crafty, and Tantalus the proud, they cannot escape; and the poor man finds in death a release from his toils, whether he seek it or not.

Non ebur neque aureum
Mea renidet in domo lacunar;
Non trabes Hymettiae
Premunt columnas ultima recisas

3. [trabes] The architrave or base of the entablature resting upon a column is probably meant. ‘Hymettias’ and ‘recisae’ are conjectural readings, supported but not adopted by Bentley and Cunningham, so that ‘trabes’ should be beams of wood for the support of the roof, as C. iv. 1. 20, “sub trabe citrea.” The conjecture is due to Thomas Gale, who was Greek Professor at Cambridge shortly before Bentley’s time.

The foreign marbles used by the Romans in Horace’s time were from Hymettus in Attica (which was white), and Pentelicus, part of the same range, from Numidia (which was yellow and here referred to), from the coast of Africa, from Taenarus in Laconia (which was green and highly valued), from Paros, from Carystus in Euboea, from Syene in the Thebaid, which, according to Pliny, was περθοποίκιλον, white with red spots. (“Trabes ex eo fecere reges quodam certamine obeliscos vocantes,” N. H. 36. 8. All the large obelisks are of granite. But Pliny’s description seems not to apply to that stone but to marble.) From Synnada in Phrygia was procured a still more famous marble, also white with red spots. See Stat. Sylv. i. 5. 36—41. Martial (ix. 77) says that one Tucca built his baths,—
Africa; neque Attali
Ignotus heres regiam occupavi;
Nec Laconicas mihi
Trahunt honestae purpuras clientae:
At fides et ingenii
Benigna vena est, pauperemque dives
Me petit; nihil supra
Deos lacesso, nec potentem amicum
Largiora flagito,
Satis beatus unicus Sabinis.
Truditur dies die,
Novaeque pergunt interire lunae.
Tu secanda marmora
Locas sub ipsum funus, et sepulcri
Immemor struis domos Marisque Baiis obstrepentis urges

"De marmore omni quod Carystos invent Quod Phrygia Synnas, Afr a quod Nomas mittit
Et quod virenti fonte lavit Eurotas."

Tibullus mentions three sorts, and has Horace's word 'trabes' in the following lines (iii. 3. 13):
"Quidve domus prodest Phrygiis innixa columnis.
Taenare sive tuis, sive Caryste tuis.
Et nemora in domibus sacros imitantia
lucos?
Aurataque trabes marmoreumque
solum?"

Propertius has a passage very like this of Horace (iii. 2. 11, sqq.):
"Quod (i.e. quamvis) non Taenariis domus
est mihi fulta columnis
Nec camera auratas inter eburna trabes
At musae comites et carmina cara legenti," &c.

5. Attali] See C. i. 1. 12 n. The meaning is, 'I have not had the luck to come to an unexpected estate, as the Romans came in for the property of Attalus.'
6. honestae—clientae.] The form 'clientes' is found in the old editions, and 'clien ten' is of common gender. But Charisius the Grammarian says that 'clientae' is the proper form here. The same occurs in Plautus (Mil. Glor. iii. 1. 192), "Habeo eccillum meam clientam meretricem adolescentulam;" (Rudens, iv. 1, 2) "jam clientas repperi atque ambas forma scinita atque acetula." It is not easy for us to enter into the state of society, which is represented by the words 'honestae—clientae,' supposing them to mean, as they seem to do, women of good birth receiving the bounty of rich patrons, and rendering them service in return. But I do not feel sure that this is what Horace means, and I have seen no satisfactory explanation of the words 'honestae clientae.' Mr. Long has suggested to me that they may refer to the rustic women on a man's farms, the wives of the coloni. The formal and legal connexion of client and patron had undergone great changes, and the use of the terms had become extended before Horace wrote; at which time, and still more afterwards, bodies of voluntary retainers were encouraged by men of wealth, who liked the display and the consequence such attendance gave them, and purchased it at a costly rate. The daily dole, which went by the name of 'sportula,' was not established till some years after Horace wrote; but the system which led to it existed in his day, though not to the same extent that it afterwards reached. On the subject of the 'clienta' in its regular sense, see Smith's Dict. Antiq.

10. Benigna vena] This metaphor is from a mine; but Ovid (Trist. iii. 14. 33) takes the same word for a running stream:
"Ingenium fregere meum mala cujus et ante
Fons infecundus parvaque vena fuit."

16. interire] This word seems to be an Summovere litora,
Parum locuples continente ripa.
Quid, quod usque proximos
Revellis agri terminos et ultra Limites clientium
Salis avarus? Pellitum paternos
In sinu ferens deos
Et uxor et vir sordidosque natos;
Nulla certior tamen
Rapacis Orci fine destinata
Aula divitem manet
Herum. Quid ultra tendis? Aequa tellus

adaptation of φθικεω, by which the Greek expressed the latter days of the month.

17. Tu secunda marina Locas. i.e. any luxurious old man—'You enter into contracts for the hewing of marble,' to ornament your houses, in the way of pillars, wall-coating, and floors: unless 'secare' be limited to slabs for lining the walls, as Orelli says. 'Locare' may be said either of one who receives or of one who pays money: 'locare rem faciendam' or 'utendam,' to let out work to be done, or to let a thing (as a house, &c.) to be used. In the former case the 'locator' pays, in the latter he receives payment. Here the former is plainly meant. When 'locare' signifies as here the giving out of work to be done, the person who contracts to do it is called either 'conductor' or 'redemptor' (see below C. iii. 2. 55, n.), and, when the 'locator' lets for a price, the hirer is said 'conducere,' so that 'conductio' and 'locatio' are the correlates which express the contract by which a sum of money (merces) is agreed to be paid for the use of a thing, or to be received for the doing of something' (Long's note on Cic. in Verr. Act. i. c. 6).

20. urges Summovere litora.] Compare with this C. iii. 1. 33, sqq.: "Contracta pisces sequora sentiant." 'Summovere' is to push up or push out farther into the sea by artificial means, and so increase your grounds on which to build. Εὐκείλευ, ἐπικείλευ, are used by the Greek writers like 'urgere' in this place: as in Herodotus (i. 163, sub fin.), ἐπικείλευς ὀμηνιατίλευς αὐτός, where, and in like passages, it is usual to understand τὸν νοῦν, I think unnecessarily.

22. ripa.] Forcellini does not notice the use of 'ripa' for 'littus' in this place, nor does he produce any other instances except from Colnemella, though he quotes examples of 'littus' for 'ripa,' which is more common. Orelli says the poets so use the word, but does not say where.

23. Quid, quod usque] 'Quid' is commonly used to introduce a fresh instance or illustration of what has been said before. It has been usual to insert a note of interrogation after it in these cases, which only makes an intelligible formula unintelligible. See Mr. Long's note on Cic. in Verr. ii. 2. 7, 'Quid haebereditas,' and S. i. 1. 7, n.

24. Revellis agri terminos] Jani quotes from Festus a law of Numa, "qui terminos exaratis ipsum et boves sacri suntu," and a law of the twelve tables, "Patronus si clienti fraudem fecerit sacer esto." Solomon thus exhorts the rich (Prov. xxiii. 10, 11): "Remove not the old land-mark and enter not into the fields of the fatherless, for their Redeemer is mighty, he shall plead with thee."

29. Nulla certior tamen] The sentence is not easily rendered. The nearest translation appears to be this, 'There is no dwelling marked out (or defined) which more certainly awaits the wealthy landlord than the bounds of greedy Orcus.' Horace means to say, 'though you think you may push the boundary of your estate farther and farther, you must go to a home marked out for you, and which you can neither expand nor escape from.' In 'destinata' (agreeing with 'aula,' not with 'fine,' as Lambinus and others say) and in 'finis' is contained the notion of prescribed and fixed limits, in which the force of the passage lies. 'Finis' is once used by Horace in the feminine gender (Epod. xvii. 36). It is not usually of that gender, and when it is it generally has some reference to death. With respect to Horatii

Pauperi recluditur
Regumque pueris, nec satelles Orći
Callidum Promethea
Revexit auro captus. Hic superbum
Tantalum atque Tantali
Genus coërcet; hic levare functum
Pauperem laboribus Vocatus atque non vocatus audit.

aula,' Orelli quotes Eurip. (Alcest. 259):

ἀγεὶ μ’, ἀγεὶ μὲ τις, ὁχ ὅφις; νεκὺνν ις

He does not allow 'destinata' to be the nominative agreeing with 'aula,' but makes it an ablative agreeing with another 'aula,' understood. Dillenbr. takes it with 'fine.'

Bentley conjectures 'capacis' for 'rapacis,' a very flat substitution. He also follows Servius (on Virg. Aen. vi. 152) in reading 'sede' rather than 'fine.' Torren-itus, and Laminus, and Stephens had spoken favourably of that reading, and some editors have adopted it, but there is very little MS. authority for it.

35. Callidum Promethea] This story of Prometheus trying to bribe Charon is not found elsewhere.

36. Hic] i.e. Orucus, 'non exorabilis auro' (Epp. ii. 2. 179).

40. Vocatus atque non vocatus audit.] It is usual to quote here Thucydides (i. 118), καλοῦμνος τι καὶ ἀκλητος θιος πάρεσται. Horace's language is bolder, coupling 'audit' with 'non vocatus,' 'Functum laboribus' is derived from the Greek κικμη-κότα.

CARMEN XIX.

This ode was perhaps composed at the time of the Liberalia, like the third elegy of the fifth book of Ovid's Tristia, but in what year there are no means of determining. Orelli says it appears to be copied from a Greek poem, because it approaches the character of the dithyramb. Except in the subject the resemblance does not strike me. If Horace had written on purpose to show the impossibility of reaching the force and beauty of the higher order of Greek lyric poetry through the medium of his language, he could not have succeeded better, and the ἐνθουσιασμος, 'furo,' &c., which some commentators profess to find in the ode, exist, I think, only in their own mistaken conception of Horace's mind and writings. They create the inspiration they expect to find. The subject is as likely to have been suggested by a Greek picture as a Greek poem, but neither hypothesis is necessary. The scene is laid in the woods,

In' ὁ βασιλέως
ἀι Δίωνυσος ἴμβομεν θείας ἀμφιπλών τιθάναι (Soph. Oed. Col. 678, sqq.), and the poet is supposed to come suddenly upon the party, consisting of Bacchus, with his attendant nymphs, and the wild creatures of the woods, all attending with admiration to the god as he sings his own achievements. The poet is smitten with terror, which gives place to the inspiration of the divinity, in virtue of which he breaks out into echoes of all he had heard. I cannot persuade myself that in this style Horace felt that his strength lay, or that he made any pretension to the afflatus which his admirers claim for him. There is skill in the poem; but the Greek fire is wanting, as we may easily conceive would be the case with a gentleman farming his own estate on the Sabine hills. Horace was a man of the world, with good sense and good breeding; he had "fides et ingenii benigna venas," integrity, and fine wit, and correct taste and judgment; but he was not a dithyrambic poet, and if he had been the language he wrote in would have checked his genius, and brought down his ideas to the more practical level above which the Roman mind rarely soared.

The article Dionysus in Smith's Dict. Mythol. may be consulted, and will explain most of the allusions in this ode.

ARGUMENT.

Among the far hills I saw Bacchus—O wonderful!—reciting, and the Nymphs learning, and the Satyrs all attention.

Awe is fresh in my heart; the god is within me and I am troubled with joy. O spare me! dread Liber. It is past, and I am free to sing of the Bacchanals; of fountains of wine and milk and honey; of Ariadne; of Pentheus and Lycurgus; how thou tamedst the waters of the East and dost sport with the Thracian nymphs; how thou hurledst the giant from Heaven, and how Cerberus did crouch to thee and lick thy feet.

Bacchus in remotis carmina rupibus
Vidi docentem—credite posteri—
Nymphasque discentes et aures Capripedum Satyrorum acutas.
Euoe, recenti mens trepidat metu
Plenoque Bacchi pectore turbidum
Lactatur. Euoe, parce Liber, Parce, gravi metuende thyroso!
Fas pervicaces est mihi Thyiadas
Vinique fontem lactis et uberes
Cantare rivos, atque truncis
Lapsa cavis iterare mella;

1. Bacchus] The legends and attributes of Bacchus contained in this ode are entirely of Greek origin. The Romans had no independent notions of this divinity, whose name Βάκχος, the shouter, is properly no more than an adjunct of Δίανυσος.

2. docentem — discentes] These correspond to the Greek terms διδάσκειν and παρά-δαίνει, as applied to the choragus and chorus.

3. Capripedum Satyrorum] The Satyrs are usually confounded with the Fauns, Faunus again being confounded with Pan, who was represented with goat's feet like the Satyrs. Propertius (iii. 17. 34) speaking of the attendants of Bacchus calls them Pans: "Capripedes calamo Panes hiante canent." Ovid (Met. i. 193) makes the Fauns and Satyrs attend on this god, and again (vi. 392, sqq.) makes the Fauns and Satyrs brothers; whereas Faunus was only a Latin deity. Lucian describes the Satyrs as being ðεκτις τα δότα, but only describes Pan as having the lower extremities like a goat, τὰ κάτω αἱγῆ τοικῶς. It is vain therefore trying to trace any consistency in the poets' conceptions of these uncouth divinities.

9. Fas pervicaces est] Bentley proposes 'sit' for 'est,' without authority or necessity (see Argument). 'Fas est' is equivalent to ἐναρτῶν ἑστ. The power as well as the permission of the god is given: "Fas nunc non significat licet sed possibile" (Porph.).

10. lactis—mella:] The same attribute that made Dionysus the god of wine also gave him milk and honey as his types. He represented the exuberance of nature, and was therein closely connected with Demeter. Euripides (Bacchae, 704, sqq.) may be consulted, and Plato (Ion, p. 534, Α): αἱ Βάκχαι πρὸνται ἐκ τῶν πτωτῶν μείλι καὶ γάλα κατεύθυνεται, ἐμφρονεῖς καὶ οὐσιον οὐ. Any traveller in the East can tell of honeycombs on the trees as curiously wrought as any in garden-hives. Virgil
Fas et beatae conjigis additum
Stellis honorem tectaque Penthei
Disjecta non leni ruina, Thracis et exitium Lyceurgi.
Tu flectis amnes, tu mare barbarum,
Tu separatis uvidus in jugis
Nodo coérces viperino
Bistonidum sine fraude crines:
Tu, cum parentis regna per arduum
Cohors Gigantum scanderet impia,
Rhoetum retorsisti leonis
Unguibus horribilique mala;
Quamquam choreis aptior et jocis
Ludoque dictus non sat idoneus
Pugnae ferebaris: sed idem Pacis eras mediusque belli.

says Ec. iv. 30: “Et durae quercus sudabunt rosicida mella.”

12. iterare] Forcellini does not notice this instance, but quotes others from Plautus, and one from Gellius (referred to by Orelli), in which ‘itero’ signifies ‘to relate.’ The sense in those cases is, going over again in narrative what had passed in action. Here, I think, it is repeating what the poet had heard from the god as he taught the Nymphs to praise him.

13. beatae conjigis] i.e. Ariadne, whose crown is one of the constellations, ‘corona,’ placed in heaven by Bacchus, according to the story recorded in his happy manner by Ovid (Fast. iii. 459—516).

14. tectaque Penthei] So Euripides of the same person (Bacch. 363):—

Bάκχιος δόματ' ἵρρηξ' χαμάζε' συντεθράνωται
ἐ' ἀπαν.

17. Tu flectis amnes,] The Hydaspes and Orontes which Bacchus is said to have walked over dryshod.

19. Nodo coérces] This is a variation of ‘nodo cohíbere crimem’ (C. iii. 14. 22). The Bistones were a Thracian tribe. For other instances of ‘fraus,’ in this sense of harm, see Forcell. It occurs again C. S. 41.

21. Tu, cum parentis] Horace followed some legend not found by us elsewhere in this description of Bacchus changed into a lion and fighting with Rhoetus, whose name is Rhoecus in the editions of Lambinus and Cruquius (who follows a correction of his oldest Blandian MS.), Baxter, Dacier, and some others, as from ‘Poioc,’ who however was a Centaur. But all the best MSS. (with the above exception, and there Rhoecus is a corrected reading), and all the old editions (according to Jani; of the fifteenth century I have only had access to the Venetian reprint of Landinus, 1483, which has Rhetium) have Rhoetus, or other forms with ‘t.’ See Bentley’s note, which is very long. He suspects ‘horribilis’ to be the true reading. But none of the MSS. support him.

23. Pacis eras mediusque belli.] Forcellini does not throw much light upon this expression by saying that ‘medius’ is one, ‘qui ad duas res contrarias aequa aptus est,’ or by quoting Livy (i. 32), “Medium erat in Anco ingenium et Numae et Romuli memor.” Dillenbr. says “Medius pacis et belli appellatur deus sua natura neutri parti deditus, sed ut tempus fert modo bellicosusmodo pacis amans;” and quotes Epp. i. 16. 9: “Virtus est medium vitiorum et utrique reductum.” I think it means you were the same whether engaged in (in the midst of) peace or war; the same, i.e. as vigorous in war as in the dance or jest. So I find Turnebus understands it, quoting no better authority however than the Evangelist St. John (i. 26), μίας ἐν οὐκ ἔκτη

κεν. St. Matthew also has (xiv. 24), τὸ ἐν πλοίον ἡγε μέσον τῆς θαλάσσης ἧν. The whole of this stanza offends the taste of many editors. Their judgment may be just, but the verses appear suited to their position, and worse might be found even in Te vidit insons Cerberus aureo
Coru decorum, leniter atterens
Caudam, et reecedentis trilingui
Ore pedes tetigitque crura.

Horace, who rarely sinks below himself.
I think he was more likely to do so in attempting a dithyrambic flight than at any other time. I see no reason for supposing the stanza is not genuine.

30. leniter atterens Caudam,] 'Gently brushing his tail against — ' what? ask the critics, puzzled by the preposition. Orelli says against his own belly! There is a notion of tameness and pleasure in the action. 'As you came he gently wagged his tail, as you departed he licked your feet.' 'Ter.' is to turn or wag, and 'adter.' is to wag at or towards.

CARMEN XX.

This ode has none of the appearance to my mind of having been written, like the last of the third book, for the purpose of closing and commending a completed work, as those affirm who believe the two first books were published separately. There does not appear to be any method in the arrangement of the odes between the introductory one of the first book and the last of the third (with the exception of the six first of that book which are evidently connected with one another); and the position of this is probably as accidental as that of others. This ode appears to have been written impromptu, and I think the style is mock-heroic, or but half serious, though Horace had at least as much right as others to commend his poetry and to be conscious of his own powers. Various specimens of self-commendation, on the part of the poets, are quoted by Dillenb. on C. iii. 30, beginning with Ennius' famous verses,—

"Nemo me lacrumis decoret nec funera fletu Fastit. Cur? Volito vivu' per ora virum."

I think ' quem vocas' refers to some particular invitation of Maecenas, and that the ode was the result of that invitation, which opinion I had expressed before I met with Dil- lenbr.'s comments on this ode in his Qn. Hor. (1841, Bonn). He there treats it as an outburst of youthful spirits on the occasion of Maecenas' first invitation, described in Sat. i. 6. The epithet ' dilecte,' implying a familiarity of some standing, is opposed to this view, and Dillenbr. says nothing about it in his edition of Horace, though he there treats the ode as a juvenile production. I do not see any reason to agree with him as to that particular point.

ARGUMENT.

On a fresh strong wing shall I soar to heaven far above envy and the world. Whom thou, dear Maecenas, delightest to honour, Styx hath no power to detain. Even now my plumage is springing, and I am ready to fly away and sing in distant places, and to teach barbarous nations. No wailings for me: away with the empty honours of a tomb.
HORATII FLACCI

Non usitata nec tenui ferar
Penna biformis per liquidum aethera
Vates, noque in terris morabor
Longius, invidiaque major Urbes relinquam. Non ego, pauperum Sanguis parentum, non ego quem vocas,
Dilecte Maecenas, obibo
Nec Stygia cohibebor unda.
Jam jam residunt cruribus asperae
Pelles, et album mutor in alitem
Superne, nascunturque leves
Per digitus humerosque plumae.
Jam Daedaleo oior Icaro
Visam gementis litora Bospori
Syrtesque Gaetulas canorus
Ales Hyperboreosque campos.

1. Non usitata] Aristophanes makes the poet Cinesias say (Av. 1372):—

On the meaning of 'biformis' the interpreters are not agreed. Horace can only mean as swan and poet.

4. invidia major] Horace was not too good to be maligned, but he could rise above it, which is the meaning of 'major,' κριτικως.

5. pauperemque dives

Me petit' (C. ii. 16. 10).

11. Superne,] As this is formed from 'supernus,' the last syllable would naturally be long; but it is short in Lucretius twice, and the same with 'inferne.' It may therefore be short here; and there is no necessity for departing, as Fea does, from the reading of the best MSS., and taking 'superna' from a few. Forcellini observes that some MSS. have 'apprime,' with the last syllable short, in Virgil (Georg. ii. 134), "Flos apprime tenax," which is generally written 'apprima.'

13. Daedaleo oior] Orelli has collected many examples of hiatus like this from Horace, Virgil, and Ovid. In Horace, see C. i. 28. 24. Epod. v. 100; xiii. 3. The oldest Berne and Zürich MSS. have 'notior' and 'nocior,' which last is an evident corruption of the true reading. Bentley conjectures 'tutor.'

15. canorus Ales] "O mutis quoque piscibus Donatura cyni si libeat sonum."

(C. iv. 3. 19, sq.)

"Multa Diraeum levat aura cycnum."

(C. iv. 2. 25.)
The bird therefore that Horace means cannot be mistaken. Virgil (Ec. ix. 27) has—
Me Colchus et qui dissipulat metum
Marsae cohortis Dacus et ultimi
Noscent Gелиoи, me peritus Discet Hiber Rhodanique potor.
Absit inani funere neniae
Luctusque turpes et quерimoniae;
Compescе clarem et sepulcri
Mitte supervacuos honores.

"Vare tuum nomen — Cantantes subline ferent ad sidera cygni."
Plato (Rep. x.) speaks of the spirit of Orpheus taking the shape of a swan: ἐδίκην μὲν γὰρ ἑρ ψυχὴν τὴν ποτὶ Ὄρφεως γενομένην κύκνου βίον αἰφνίδιν. On the Hyperboreans, see Müller (Dorians, ii. 4, § 6). Pindar calls them 'Απόλλωνος θεράποντες (Ol. iii. 16), to whom they sacrificed asses (Pyth. x. 36). There was a mystery attached to the distant regions of the north, to which Pindar says no man ever found the way by land or sea:

ναυσί δ’ οὔτε πειζός ἴων ἄν εὔροις
ἐς Υπερβοριῶν ἀγώνα βαυματάν ὅδων.
And, though Perseus went there, it was with the divine help, with which the poet piously observes any thing may be done. They did not however neglect the Muses:

Μοῖσα δ’ οὐκ ἀποδαμεῖ τρόποις ἐπὶ σφέτεροι, πανταὶ ἐν χοροῖ παρθένων
λυρᾷν τι βοαι κάνασαι τ’ αἰλῶν δοῦνται.

They were a happy race, ἀνέρων μακάρων ὄμηλος; a sacred family, ἵων γενέα, free from old age, disease, and war. Compare Pliny (N. H. iv. 26). These considerations will explain Horace's meaning.

19. peritus] Here the meaning is 'instructed,' as 'juris peritus' is one instructed and skilled in the law. Horace means that barbarous nations will become versed in his writings: 'mei peritus me discet' is perhaps the full sentence. But why he should class those who drank of the waters of the Rhone (of which many Romans drank) with the barbarians mentioned is not easy to understand. As far as I can see, the adaptation of the name to the metre is the only way of accounting for it. By Hiber is probably meant the Caucasian people of that name. The mode of expression for the inhabitants of a country, as those who drink of their national river, is repeated twice (C. iii. 10. 1):

"Extremum Tanain si biberes, Lyce;"
and (C. iv. 15. 21),

"Non qui profundum Danubium bibunt."

It may be observed here, as well as any where else, how frequently Horace ends the third verse of the Alcaic stanza with a word that belongs immediately to the last word of the stanza. The remark is Dillenbr.'s, and it is worth attending to. The Daci were not finally subdued till the reign of Trajan. But see C. ii. 9. 23, n.

24. supervacuos] The prose-writers before Pliny used the form 'supervacaneus.' Forcellini quotes one passage from Cicero (de Nat. Deor. i. 33), in which he says some editions have 'supervacuos.' All modern editions have the other form.
Q. HORATII FLACCI

CARMINUM

LIBER TERTIUS.

CARMEN I.

About A.u.c. 728.

This and the five following odes are generally admitted to be among the finest spec-mens of Horace's manner, and it appears to me that in this didactic style he shows most of his own character and genius. It is, as far as we know, entirely his own. There is no opinion from which I more entirely dissent than this of Franke, "Tota Horatii poesis lyrica et ex ipsius sententia dici et haberi potest amatoria" (F. H. p. 57). And Buttmann's sentence, which goes into the other extreme, appears to me as far from the truth, unless he limits it, as I believe he really meant to do, to the style that Franke thinks his strongest.
"Non-reality," he says, "is an essential feature of Horace's odes." The fact appears to be, that reality was so much a part of Horace's mind, that he was never so great as when he wrote on some real subject, something that drew out his sound common sense, his regard for a friend, his sense of right, his appreciation of nature, and his feelings in respect to the times he lived in and especially the condition of Rome itself. It is this that gives to the six odes with which the third book opens the force and charm we find in them. It has been already said (C. ii. 15, Introduction) that they appear all to have been written about the same time with one another and with other odes, namely, that time when Augustus set himself the task of social reformation after the close of the civil wars.

The general purport of this ode is an exhortation to moderate living and desires.
The first stanza is generally understood to have been added as an introduction to the six odes, viewed as a whole.

ARGUMENT.
The worldly I despise, but have new precepts for the young.
Kings rule over their people, but are themselves the subjects of Jove. One may be richer, another nobler than his fellows, but all alike must die. No indulgence can get sleep for him who has a sword ever hanging over him, while it disdains not the dwellings of the poor. He who is content with a little fears not storm or drought. The rich man builds him houses on the very waters, but anxiety follows him go where he will.
If then marble and purple, rich wines and costly perfumes, cure not grief, why should I build me great houses, or exchange for the burthen of riches my humble Sabine farm?

Odi profanum vulgus et arceo;
Favete linguis: carmina non prius
Audita Musarum sacerdos
Virginibus puerisque canto.
Regum timendorum in proprios greges,
Reges in ipsos imperium est Jovis
Clari Giganteo triumpho,
Cuncta supercilio moventis.
Est ut viro vir latius ordinet
Arbusta sulicis, hic generosior
Descendat in Campum petitor,
Moribus hic meliorque fama
Contendat, illi turba clientium
Sit major: aqua lege Necessitas
Sortitur insignes et imos;
Omne capax movet urna nomen.
Districtus ensis cui super impia
Cervice pendet non Siculæ dapes
Dulcem elaborabunt saporem,
Non avium citharæaque cantus

1. Odi prophanum vulgus] The first stanza is an imitation of the language used by the priests at the mysteries. There is a parody on the same in the Frogs of Aristophanes (353, sqq.)—

2. suæ penni κατάστασιν τοίς ἵματοις

3. ὅσις ἀπορος τοιώνει λόγων ἥ γνώμην

4. μὴ καθαρίσα

5. ἤ γενναίων ὄργαν Μουσῶν μήτ' εἰπέν μήτ' ἐχόρευσαν.

6. Favere linguas,' like εὐφημεῖν, in its first meaning seems to signify the speaking words of good omen. But it came as commonly to signify total silence. Horace speaks as if he despairs of impressing his precepts on any but the young, and bids the rest stand aside as incapable of being initiated in the true wisdom of life.

7. Musarum sacerdos] Ovid calls himself the same (Amor. iii. 8. 23):—

8. Ille ego Musarum purus Phoebique sacerdos.'

9. triumpho, Cuncta] There is some abruptness in this, which Cunningham removes by inserting 'et.' It does not appear in the MSS.

10. Esto ut] This is equivalent to ιστιν ὧς, 'it may be.' Bentley prefers 'esto ut,' and Cruquius' Scholiast says in his note, as we have it, 'est pro sit.' He appears to have read 'esto.' 'Esto' without 'ut' occurs in Sat. i. 6. 19.

11. Descendat in Campum] The comitia centuriata at which the election of magistrates took place was held in the Campus Martius, from whence Tacitus says (Ann. i. 15) they were removed by Tiberius to the senate, meaning that the senate chose the magistrates, under his dictation. But even then the form of comitia continued in the Campus Martius.

12. Contendat.] This verb is used sometimes as a transitive verb for 'petere,' as in Cic. in Verr. (ii. 2. 53), 'Hic magistratus a populo summa ambitione contenditur.'

13. Omne capax] Compare C. ii. 3. 26, and likewise i. 4. 13; ii. 16. 32.

14. Districtus ensis] Some MSS., according to the usual variation in such compounds, have 'drestictus,' which most editors adopt. Cruquius inserts 'districtus' in his text, and Heindorf supports it on S. ii. 1. 41, where it occurs again. The Scholiasts, according to the text in Ascensius, have the same word, which is probably the right one, as signifying the separation of two things which have been joined. But the point is doubtful.

15. Siculæ dapes] Plato (de Rep. iii. p. 404, § 13, Becker) speaks of Σωρακοσίαν τραπέζαν καὶ Σικλικήν ποικιλιάν ὅφου, where Ast says "pervulgatae sunt luxuriosae mensae Σικλικαι, Συβοραικαι, Ιταλικαι et Χίναι." Plautus, in the prologue to the Rudens (v. 53), says

16. Infit lenoni suadere ut secum simul

17. Dicito'] The old editions have Somnum reducent. Somnum agrestium
Lenis virorum non humiles domos
Fastidit umbrosamque ripam,
Non Zephyris agitata Tempe.
Desiderantem quod satis est neque
Tumultuosum sollicitat mare,
Nec saevo Arcturi cadentis Impetus aut orientis Haedi,
Non verberatae grandine vineae
Fundusque mendax, arbore nunc aquas
Culpante nunc torrentia agros
Sidera nunc hiemis iniquas.
Contracta pisces aequora sentiunt
Jaectis in altum molibus; huc frequens
Caementa demittit redemptor
Cum famulis dominusque terrae.

'elaborarunt,' as referring to Damocles.
But the future has most authority, and Horace is laying down a maxim, not relating a fact. Cic. (Tusc. Disp. v. 21) tells the story of Damocles with reflections similar to these. Compare Persius (iii. 40):

"Auratis pendens inaquaribus ensis Purpureas subter cervices terruit."

20. Non arium] Seneca (de Provid. iii.), quoted by Dillenbr., says that Maecenas sought sleep by the help of distant music. Aviaries were not uncommon in the houses of the rich.

21. Somnus agrestium] Acron and Porphyrian, whom Dillenbr. follows, make 'agrestium virorum' dependent on 'Somnus,' which destroys the prosopopoeia. Dillenbr., in his Questiones Horatiaenas, has drawn particular attention to the alternate arrangement of the epithets in this passage among many others. He gives several instances, and they are numerous enough to constitute a feature in Horace's style. "Spiritum Graiae tenuem Camoenae," is one instance out of many. It is said to arise out of the liking the Latin poets had for homoeoteleuton.

27. Arcturi cadentis—orientis Haedi.] Arcturus sets the beginning of November.
The constellation Arigia, of which the kids (two stars) form a part, rises the beginning of October.

29. verberatae grandine vineae] See Epp. i. 8: 4: "Grando contundet vites." 'Mendax fundus' is like 'spem mentita seges' (Epp. i. 7. 87), and opposed to 'segetis certa fides' (C. iii. 16. 30). As the olive-tree complains of the rain, so Gesner would have the field abuse the drought and the storm, putting 'agro' for 'agros,' and supposing the final 's' to have arisen out of the first letter of the following word 'sidera.' 'Arbore' means chiefly perhaps the olive. There is no variation in the MSS., nor has any other emendation but Gesner's been suggested. And yet it must be allowed that the stanza has an odd appearance, the tree complaining of the excessive rain, or the star that burns the fields, or the cruel storm. If the reading be correct, the verses are not among Horace's happiest. But that is no reason for altering or abandoning them.

32. Contracta pisces aequora sentiunt] Compare C. ii. 18. 20,—

"Mariesque Bails obstrepetenis urget Summovere litora;"

and Epp. i. 1. 64,—

"Si dixit divas, lacus et mare sentit amorem
Festinantis heri, cui si vitiosa libido
Fecerit auspiciam, Cras ferramenta Teanum Tolletis, fabri."

33. Caementa demittit redemptor] Compare C. iii. 24. 3, sq.:

"Caemensis licet occupes Tyrrenenum omne tuis et mare Apulicum."
The walls were faced on either side with stone, and loose stones (caementa) were thrown in between. 'Frequens' goes with 'cum famulis,' according to Doering, and means 'cum frequenti famulum turba.' Others say it means 'frequenter.' I think it means this, or 'many a redemptor,' 'Re-
Fastidious. Sed Timor et Minae
Scandunt eodem quo dominus, neque Decedit aerata triremi, et Post equitem sedet atra Cura.
Quodsi dolentem nec Phrygius lapis
Nec purpurarum sidere clarior
Delenit usus nec Falerna
Vitis Achaemeniumque costum,
Cur invidendis postibus et novo
Sublime ritu moliar atrium?
Cur valle permutem Sabina Divitas operosiores?

dimere' was said of one who undertook to perform certain work for a stipulated price. The only case in which the person who paid was called 'redemptor' was that of the public revenue, the farmers of which were said 'redimere vectigalia' or 'emere' (Cic. in Verr. ii. 3. 12). See C. ii. 18. 17, n.

39. [triremi, et] Bentley prefers omitting the 'et' for the sake of his ears, and substitutes 'postque.' The 'aerata triremis' was the rich man's private yacht.

41. Phrygius lapis] See C. ii. 18. 3, n. 43. delenit] The MSS. and editors vary between this form and 'delinit.' The oldest MSS. appear to favour 'delinit,' and it is the oldest form. Forcellini quotes this verse with 'delinit;' but it is one of the readings that the earliest MSS. we know of cannot decide, and the question is not material. The expression 'purpurarum usus sidere clarior' is uncommon. The first two words, which belong properly to 'purpurarum,' are transferred to 'usus'—'the enjoyment or possession of purple brighter than a star:' which, though 'sidus' should be taken for the sun, as it may be, is rather a singular comparison.

44. Achaemeniumque costum,] See C. ii. 12. 21. 'Que' is the reading of the MSS., and there being no opposition it is the right reading, though Bentley will have 've.'

46. operosiores?] Bentley would read 'onerosiros' if the MSS. would let him, though he acknowledges that nothing would be gained by it.

CARMEN II.

About a.u.c. 728.

In addition to the general argument noticed before, Franke discovers in verses 19, 20, an indication of the date of this ode, supposing Horace to allude to Augustus' expressed intention of laying down his power in a.u.c. 726. I do not see any necessary connexion.

The purpose of this ode is to commend public and social virtue, and the opening shows that it is a continuation of the preceding ode.

ARGUMENT.

Contentment is to be learned in arms and danger. To die for our country is glorious, and death pursues the coward. Virtue is superior to popular favour or rejection, and opens the way to the skies, and rises above the dull atmosphere of this world. Good faith too has its reward, and I would not be the companion of the man who neglects it, lest I share his sure reward.
ANGUSTAM amice pauperiem pati
Robustus acri militia puer
Condiscat, et Parthos feroce
Vexet eques metuendus hasta,
Vitamque sub divo et trepidis agat
In rebus. Illum ex moenibus hosticis
Matrona bellantis tyranni
Prosiciens et adulta virgo
Suspiret, eheu, ne rudis agminum
Sponsus lacesat regius asperum
Tactu leonem, quem cruenta
Per medias rapit ira caedes.
Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori:
Mors et fugacem persequitur virum,
Nec parcit imbellis juventae
Poplitibus timidoque tergo.

1. amice] Some MSS., which Lambinus and Bentley follow, read 'amicic;' and the ancient title 'ad amicos' shows that the Grammarians who first affixed that title had 'amicic' before them. And Acron, "Oden generatit ad amicos scribit commonem," &c. But Horace's advice is addressed to the young, as he shows not only in the introductory stanza of the first ode, but in the opening also of this. 'Amice ferre' is plainly the reverse of 'moleste ferre,' and corresponds to 'clementer' in Cicero's letter to Atticus (vi. i.): "Cnaeus noster clementer id fert" (the loss of his money). "Perundum est molliter sapienti" is another form of expression for the same meaning (Cic. de Senect. ii. 5). This use of 'amicic' is not noticed by Forcellini, who probably read 'amicic.' I observe he chiefly used Lambinus' Horace. 'Militia,' in the next verse, may depend either on 'robustus' or 'condiscat.' Orelli decides on the latter, I do not know why.

2. Parthos feroce] "Species pro geneere" (Acron).

5. sub divo et trepidis] Doering omits 'et' against all MSS. and editions, to the injury of the verse and sense. 'Et' is wanted to couple 'trepidis rebus' with 'divo,' as 'que' couples 'vitam agat' with 'Parthos vexet.'

6. Illum ex moenibus] This picture, representing the fears of the Parthian mother and maiden, the danger of their son and lover, and the prowess of the Roman soldier, has been much commended. It is not in Horace's usual style, and is perhaps better suited to an ode addressed to the young than to any other. To them it might be inspiring, but hardly to older minds. Helen, looking out with her damsels from the walls of Troy (II. iii. 139, sqq.), or the description of Hesiod (Scut. Herc. 242),

----—ai δι γυναικες ιδιμητων ιτι πόρων χάλκειαν δε βων κατα δ' ιερηπτουντο παραις, or Antigone looking from the walls of Thebes (Eurip. Phoen. 85), were perhaps before Horace's mind.

13. Dulce et decorum est] In Horace's mind there was a close connexion between the virtue of frugal contentment and devotion to one's country. They are associated below (C. iv. 9. 40, sqq.).

14. persequitur] In this word is contained all that Bentley would gain by changing it against the MSS. to 'consequitur,' and it is more graphic. The line is a translation from Simonides (65 Bergk), ο δ' αδ θανατος κις και τον φυγμαχον.

Horace may have seen Tyrtaeus' elegy (7 Bergk), which begins—

tεφαμανει γαρ καλν ει προμαχοιας εικονα ανερ' αγαθον πει χ' παρηνδι μαρφαμενον.
'Persequit' signifies 'to pursue and overtake.' Bentley prefers 've' to 'que,' with 'timido,' a change he often makes. His reason is odd,—that there was no need for death to strike in more than one place; one would be enough. "Quod sane argutius!"
Virtus repulsae nescia sordidae
Intaminatis fulget honoribus,
Nec sumit aut ponit secures Arbitrio popularis aurae.

Virtus recludens immeritis mori Caelum negata tentat iter via,
Coctusque volgares et udam
Spernit humum fugiente penna.

Est et fideli tuta silentio
Mercis: vetabo qui Cereis sacrum
Vulgarit arcanac sub isdem Sit trabis fragilemve mecum

says Jani: 'absurdus' might have been better. Livy might have corrected him, who tells how 500 Numidians fell upon the Romans, "tergaque ac popiles caedentes strangem ingentem fecerunt" (xxii. 48). 'Tergo' is not opposed to 'popilibus,' but coupled with it, and 'timido' applies to both (see note on C. i. 2. 1).

17. Virtus repulsae nescia sordidae] 'Nescia' seems to mean 'unconscious of,' because 'indifferent to' the disgrace of rejection, which, if disgraceful to any, is not so to the virtuous, but to those who reject them. Dillerbr. interprets otherwise, that the virtuous do not seek honours, and therefore do not know the discredit of defeat; but that is contrary to fact, and therefore not likely to be Horace's meaning.

18. Intaminatis) This word, not being found elsewhere, has been much discussed. Like 'contaminatis,' 'attaminatvs,' it is derived from the obsolete word 'taminus,' and contains the root 'tag' of 'tango' as 'integer' does. 'In-contaminatis' is the reading of a few MSS. H. Stephens (Diat. ii. 1) says, "Ex quam pluris manuscriptis exemplaribus afferri videmus 'incontaminatis,'" which is simply an invention, if the other editors are not all false. Cruiquius adopts it in his text (Orelli says "e Codd.," but I think he is mistaken, for Cruiquius notices none in his commentary, where he has 'intaminatis'), and his Scholiast had the same reading. The other Scholiasts had 'intaminatis,' which is the reading of all the editions I have seen, except those of Cunningham and Sandon. Lambinus and Bentley edit this, but prefer the other; but the latter sufficiently answers his own and the only argument against the received reading, by asking, "Are there not other words in Horace, Cicero, and others, which, through the loss of so many writers, we find no where else?"

20. Arbitrio popularis aurae.] This word which plainly means that the popular judgment is like a shifting breeze, setting now this way, now that, appears in Virgil (Aen. vi. 817):—

"Nimium gaudens popularibus auribus,
And in Lucan (i. 132):—

"Totus popularibus auris Impelli plausuque sui gaudere theatr." Compare for the sentiments C. iv. 9. 39, sqq.

25. Est et fideli tuta silentio] Simonides, in the same poem (Bergk says, p. 767) from which the former quotation comes (v. 14, n), says—

ιστι και σιγας άκινδυνον γίρας, which words it appears Augustus was acquainted with and approved. When Athenodorus was about to leave his camp he embraced the emperor and said, "O Caesar, whenever thou art wroth, say nothing, do nothing, till thou hast gone over in thy mind the twenty-four letters of the alphabet." Whereupon the emperor took him by the hand and said, "I have need of thee still;" and he detained him a whole year, saying, "Silence too hath its safe reward." (Plut. Apophthegm. Reg. et Imper. Caesar. Aug. 7.) Secrecy is a sign of good faith, and not an easy one to practise. Horace's indignation is levelled against the breaking of faith generally, and the divulging of the secrets of Ceres (whose rites, however, it is attend by women only is mentioned by way of illustration. Doering suggests, by way of accounting for the introduction of this particular virtue, that some notorious act of treachery is referred to indirectly. But the introduction of that virtue does not require an apology. There are few moral qualities that can be said to take precedence of it. It is the basis of friendship, as Cicero says, and without it society cannot exist. (Compare S. i. 4. 84, n.) It is probable, if Plutarch's story be true, that Horace had heard Augustus repeat his favourite axiom. Mitsch. quotes Callimachus (Hymn. ad Cerr. 118):

\[ \Delta \mu \alpha \tau \epsilon \mu \eta \tau \iota \nu \omega s \iota \mu o i \phi i o s \delta s \sigma o i \alpha \pi \tau \chi \delta \iota s \varepsilon i t h \mu \eta \delta \delta \mu \alpha \tau o i x e s. \]

Horace seems to have imitated Euripides (Elect. 1354):

\[ o \nu t o s \delta o n \delta e i \epsilon w n m u \delta e i s \theta e l e t o w, \mu \nu \delta \iota p i \omega r k o w n \mu \tau t a \sigma m p \nu e i t o w. \]

This way of speaking seems to have been proverbial. Compare Aesch. S. c. T. 602, sqq. The precise character of the worship of Ceres at Rome is not easily made out. There were no mysteries among the Romans corresponding to the Eleusinian or any of the other Greek Mysteries. But Cicero, anathematising Verres at the close of his last oration, speaks of the rites of Ceres and Libera (whom the Romans joined together, though the latter was a Latin and the former a Greek divinity) as those which "sunt opiniones hominum ac religiones ferunt longe maximis atque occultissimis caerimoniiis continentur;" and, though introduced from abroad, he says these rites were observed by the Romans in public and private with such exactness, that they might appear to have been not imported into Rome from other countries, but exported to them from Rome. He does not seem to have known much about the matter.

28. fragilenae] 'Que!' is the common reading, but there is no connexion between 'trabilla,' 'phacelon,' and 've,' which is Bentley's correction, is confirmed by the oldest Berne MS. In respect to 'Diespiter' see C. i. 34. 5, n.

32. Deseruit pede Poena claudio.] Blomfield quotes this passage in his glossary on Aesch. Agam. 57:

\[ t \omega n \delta e \mu e t o i x o n \upsilon \tau e r o f \rho o v o n \pi \iota \pi u i p a r a b a s i o n \epsilon \rho i n \nu n. \]

The same expression occurs also in the Choephor. 362,

\[ \zeta \epsilon \nu \delta \epsilon \nu \kappa \alpha \tau \omega \theta e n \alpha \mu \iota \mu \mu t o w n \upsilon \tau e r o f \rho o v o n \alpha t a n \beta \rho o t o w \tau \lambda \mu o n o i k a i \pi a n o \u f r a g h x e r i, t o k o u d i s \delta \varepsilon \delta \mu o w s \tau e l e i t a i, \]

and corresponds to \( \upsilon \tau e r o f \rho o r \delta o r o i \) in Soph. Antig. 1074,

\[ t o u t o w s e f o r w \beta i \mu \tau \iota \rho e s \upsilon \tau e r o f \rho o r \delta o r o i \lambda o x \sigma \iota \sigma u n \tau \alpha d o u k a i \tau e \nu \nu \epsilon \iota \nu \nu \epsilon \nu i n \nu c e s. \]

Tibullus thus expresses the same idea (i. 9. 4), "Sera tamen tacitis Poena venit pedibus."

---

CARMEN III.

About A.U.C. 728.

This ode, which could not have been written before A.U.C. 727, when Augustus received that name, commends the virtue of perseverance by the example of heroes who had secured divine honours by it. It cannot be said that the long speech of Juno bears very directly upon the text supplied by the two first stanzas. A prophecy of the glory and extent of the Roman empire might have been adapted to any other ordoxium, or have been introduced without any at all. But it was necessary for Horace to diversify his homilies. The mention of Romulus is contrived to introduce the praises and power of Augustus, and the speech is not destitute of such oratorical power as the case admitted of. It also contains indirect exhortations to abstention and contentment, and so bears on the general scope of these odes. Suetonius, in his life of Julius Caesar (c. 79), says it was generally reported he meant to transfer the seat of empire to Alexandria (in Troas probably, not the Egyptian city) or to Ilium. Lucan ascribes to him the same intention, and makes him say (ix. 997),

"Restituum populos: grata vice moenia reddent Ausonidae Phrygibus, Romanque Pergama surgent."

Whether such was really the case or not it appears that at the time such a transfer was not considered too absurd to be spoken of. We know when the abandonment of the mother city for Veii had its advocates, who were not influenced solely by the superior attractions of the city but by dislike to the institutions of Rome, and laws which could only be got rid of by such a change. We can easily believe that in Horace's time among the remedies proposed for the evils of the state some may have freely spoken of transferring the seat of government to another spot, and that the site of Troy, the city of their ancestors and the fountain of their race, may have been fixed upon for that purpose. To meet the spirit of avarice in some, and restlessness in all that would be mixed up with such a notion, seems to have been Horace's purpose. One of Orelli's Berne MSS. has this inscription, "Ad Musas de Augusto qui in proposito videtur perseverare," as if Augustus had entertained a desire and intention like the above, and some commentators have taken up that notion. If it had been the case there is no likelihood that Horace would have taken this occasion and means of dissuading him. I believe, as I said before, he wrote these odes, if not by the emperor's desire, to second his efforts and with his approval.

The words in which Justin describes the meeting of the Roman soldiers with the people of the Troad, when Scipio landed in Asia in his expedition against Antiochus, are worth quoting. He says: "Cum igitur ab utriisque bellum pararetur ingressaque Asiam Romani Ilium venissent, mutua gratulatio Iliensium ac Romanorum fuit; Iliensibus Aeneam ceteraque cum eo duces a se profectos, Romanis se ab his procreatos referentibus; tantaque laetitia omnium fuit quanta esse post longum tempus inter parentes et liberos solet. Juvabat Ilienses nepotes suos Occidente et Africa domita Asiam ut avitum regnum vindicaret, optabilem Trojae ruinam puisse dicentes, ut tam feliciter renascere: contra Romanos avitos Lares ut incunabula majorum, templaque ac deorum simulacra inexpelible desiderium videndi tenebat" (31. 8).

ARGUMENT.

The upright man and firm no terrors can drive from his purpose. Through this virtue Pollux, Hercules, Augustus, Bacchus, have been translated to the skies. Romulus likewise, at the instance of Juno, who thus addressed the assembled gods: "Ilium hath paid the penalty of its founder's crime. That impious umpire and his foreign trumpet have overthrown it. But his beauty is gone; Priam's perjured house hath fallen; the war our quarrels protracted is at an end. My wrath then I remit. Let Mars have his hated grandson, let him come among us: only let seas roll between Ilium and Rome, and let the exiles reign where they will; let their Capitol stand and the Medes own their sway; but let the tomb of Priam and of Paris be the lair of beasts. From Gades to the Nile let her be feared, but let her learn to despise the gold that lies buried in the ground. Let her stretch her arms to the limits of the earth, to the stormy north and the fiery east, but let her not dare to repair the walls of Troy. On an evil day would she rise again: thrice let her rise, thrice should she fall by the power of Jove's sister and spouse."

But hold, my Muse, nor bring down such themes to the sportive lyre.
Justum et tenacem propositi virum
Non civium ardo prava jubentium,
Non voltus instantis tyranni
Mente quatit solida, neque Auster

Dux inquieti turbidus Hadriæ,
Nec fulminantis magna manus Jovis;
Si fractus illabatur orbis
Impavidum ferient ruinae.

Hac arte Pollux et vagus Hercules
Enisus arces attigit igneas,
Quos inter Augustus recumbens
Purpureo bibit ore nectar.

Hac te merentem, Bacche pater, tuae
Vexere tigres indocili jugum
Collo trahentes; hae Quirinus
Martis equis Acheronta fugit,
Gratum elocuta consiliantibus
Junone divis: Ilion, Ilion
Fatalis incestusque judex
Et mulier peregrina vertit

1. Justum] i. e. "qui jus servat."
5. Dux inquieti turbidus Hadriæ,]
Compare C. ii. 17. 19:
"— tyrannus Hesperiae Capricornus undae;" and i. 3. 15:
"Quo non arbiter Hadriæ Major."

This assemblage of terrible objects is hetero-egeneous enough, but the seventh and eighth verses present a fine picture. The third corresponds with Juvenal's

"— Phalaris licet imperet ut sis Falsus et ad moto dicit perjuria taurus" (viii. 81).

6. Fulminantis] This is not a word used by prose-writers of Horace's day. The same may be said of 'triumpthatis' (v. 43).
7. illabatur] The Zürich and one other of Orrelli's MSS., with three of Bentley's, have the future, and with 'ferient' that is the more regular construction. But see below, C. ix. 12. 4.
10. Enisus] Some MSS. of good repute have 'innixus,' which reading has led to 'innixus,' the reading of Acron, who renders it 'incumbens.' All the old editions appear to have 'innixus,' and Cruquius was the first to adopt 'enius,' from his Blandinian MSS. and others. The idea is that of struggling forward and not of rest; 'enius'

therefore is no doubt the best reading. See Forcell., and compare C. iv. 8. 29. Epp. ii.
1. 5. sq. Cic. de Legg. ii. 8.
12. Purpureo bibit ore nectar.] Some MSS. have 'bibet.' But the present has more force than the future, as in Epp. ii. 1.
15:
"Praesenti tibi maturos largimur honores
Jurandasque tuum per nomen pinnus arar;"
and (C. iv. 5. 32) "— alteris
Te mensis adhibet deum."

The epithet 'purpureo' seems to be taken from the Greek

— πορφυρίου
ἀπὸ στόματος ἱεσά φωνάν παρθεόνος (Simonides, 72 Bergk).

16. Martis equis] 'Patris equis' is a doubtful reading which Bentley and Gesner prefer. This appears to have been the gen-ueine old legend of the disappearance of Romulus. See Ovid, Met. xiv. 820, sqq.
Fast. ii. 495, sq.:
"Hinc tonat hinc missis abrumpit ignibus
aether,
Fit fuga, rex patris astra petebat equis;"
In pulverem, ex quo destituit deos Mercede pacta Laomedon, mihi Castaeque damnatum Minervae Cum populo et duce fraudulento. Jam nec Lacaenae splendet adulterae Famosus hospes nec Priami domus Perjura pugnaces Achivos Hectoris opibus refringit, Nostrisque ductum seditionibus Bellum resedit. Protinus et graves Iras et invisum nepotem Troica quem peperit sacerdos Marti redonabo; illum ego lucidas Inire sedes, dueere nectaris Succos, et adscribi quietis Ordinibus patiar deorum. Dum longus inter saevit Ilion Romamque pontus qualibet exsules In parte regnanto beati; Dum Priami Paridisque busto which gives some colour to the reading 'patris,' but not much, and the MSS. and editions are all in favour of 'Martis.' See note on Epod. xvi. 13.

21. ex quo] This signifies that the fall of Troy was determined from the time of Laomedon's crime, and that the crime of Paris and Helen caused its accomplishment. 'Destituo' with an ablative is unusual.

23. damnatum] Bentley prefers 'damnatum,' lest there should be any doubt whether Horace meant to say 'Ilium damnatum' or 'pulverem damnatum.' I do not think there can be any doubt. The feminine form of 'Illos' occurs elsewhere (Epod. xiv. 14).

25. adulterae] It is doubtful whether Horace meant this for the dative or genitive case. Doering thinks the former; Orelli the latter.

28. refringit.] All the meanings of this word, which here means to repel, are well given by Forcell. with examples.

29. ductum] 'Ducere' and 'trahere' for 'produere' and 'prothrahere' are usages well known.

32. Troica] There is no authority for 'Troia,' but Bentley adopts it here and in i. 6. 14; also Jani and Pena, the way having been led by Heinsius. There is much scorn in Juno's language, as in the words 'mulier peregrina,' 'Troia sacerdos,' 'fatalis inces-tusque judex,' 'exsules.'

33. Redonabo.] This word occurs only here and above (ii. 7. 3).

34. dueere nectaris] Many MSS. have 'discere,' and Porphyrius explains it, 'assuere soporibus nectaris.' But 'succus' means juice, not flavour, and to that sense 'ducere' is well suited. The same mistake appears in some of the MSS. in Ovid (A. Am. iii. 353):

"—telorum duece jactus Ut sciat"

Dillenbr. among others has 'discere.' I do not like it at all, in the face especially of the very common use of 'ducere,' in this sense of quaffing. So the Greeks used ἐλευθ. and νεφ. They both occur in one verse of Euripides (Cycl. 417), ἔφαινεν καὶ ἀνακαίνει.

35. quietis Ordinibus...deorum.] This savours of the Epicureanism Horace had learnt in early life; "deos didici securum agere sevum." (S. I. 5. 101.)

"Scilicet is superis labor est, ea cura quietos Sollicitat." (Aen. iv. 379.)

40. Priami—busto] Priam had no tomb according to Virgil's account (Aen. ii.
Insultet armentum et catulos ferae
Celent inulta stet Capitolium
Fulgens, triumphatisque possit
Roma ferox dare jura Medis.
Horrenda late nomen in ultimas
Extendat oras, qua medius liquor
Secernit Europen ab Afro,
Qua tumidus rigat arva Nilus,
Aurum irreptum et sie melius situm
Cum terra celat spernere fortior
Quam cogere humanos in usus
Omne sacrum rapiente dextra.
Quicunque mundo terminus obstitit
Hunc tangat armis, visere gestiens
Qua parte debacehentur ignes,
Qua nebulae pluviique rores.
Sed bellicosis fata Quiritibus
Hac lege dico, ne nimium pii
Rebusque fidentes avitae
Tecta velint reparare Troiae.
Troiae renascens alite lugubri
Fortuna tristi elade iterabitur,
Ducente victrices eatervas
Conjuge me Jovis et sorore.

557, but we need not quarrel with Horace for that. The whole plain of Troy, says Dillenbr., was in a sense his tomb. No greater affront could be supposed than is here desired. Electra represents Aegisthus as leaping on her father’s grave, intoxicated with wine (Eurip. Elect. 326, sq.):

\[
\text{μίθη δὲ βρεκνις τῆς ἵμης μητρὸς πόσις ὁ κλεινός, ὡς λέγουσιν, ἄνθρωποι τάφῳ.}
\]

Compare Epod. xvi. 10, sqq., and II. iv. 177.

44. dare jura Medis.] This has been seized upon by one class of chronologists to prove the ode was written after the Parthians had restored the standards of Crassus and M. Antonius. But there is nothing in the words to warrant this inference.

48. rigat area Nilus.] There is some variety in the punctuation of this passage in the different editions, some putting a full stop after Nilus, and a comma at ‘dextra’ (v. 52). I have followed Orelli in reversing this order, but it matters very little. Whether ‘aurum irreptum’ &c. be taken with the preceding stanza or the following, or both, the connexion is this: ‘let Rome extend her arms as she will, only let her not as her possessions increase learn to prize gold above virtue.’

53. Quicunque mundo] Bentley prefers ‘quacunque,’ “quot enim obscur pro mundi termini?” Nobody but Bentley would trouble himself about Horace’s expression, which is as intelligible as ‘quacunque.’ Several MSS. have ‘mundi’ for ‘mundo,’ and most have ‘tangat’ for ‘tangat.’ Lambinus, Crucuquis, and some other editors have ‘mundi,’ but the dative is wanted. Orelli prefers ‘tangat’ for the preponderance of authority. But ‘tangat’ corresponds to ‘extendat.’

64. Conjuge me Jovis et sorore.] Both Horace and Virgil (Aen. i. 46) get this combination from Homer (II. xvi. 432):

\[
\text{Ἡρμην δὲ προσέ πει καστυνήτην ἄλοχον τε.}
\]
Ter si resurgat murus aenæus
Auctore Phoebô ter pereat meis
Excissus Argivis, ter uxor
Capta virum puerosque ploret.
Non hoc jocosae conveniet lyrae:
Quo, Musa, tendis? Desine pervicax Referre sermones deorum et Magna modis tenuare parvis.

65. murus aenæus] Horace is partial to this epithet. See Epp. i. 1. 60, “... Hic murus aenæus esto.”
And below (C. 9. 18),— “Diductosque jugo cogit aenæo.”
C. 16. 1,— “... turris aenæa Robustæque fores.”
It means no more in this derived use than strength and stability. Gellius (ii. 3) says it was written ‘aenæus,’ the aspirate being introduced in this as in other words which he mentions for no other reason “nisi ut firmatas et vigor vocis quasi qui-busdam nimiis additis intenderetur.” But as he applies the same remark to ‘onus,’ ‘onustum,’ ‘lacruma’ (which he spells ‘lachryma’), we must suppose that the MSS.
he followed were none of the best. But his remark confirms Bentley’s on S. ii. 3, 183, where he deserts the received reading ‘aut aenæus,’ and adopts ‘et aenæus,’ saying, “necessaria est sane haec emendatio: nus-quam enim aenæus trisyllabon apud veteres poetas invenias (nisi forte ubi prave ediderunt pro ‘aereus’), sed ubique est aut ‘aenæus’ aut ‘aenus.’”

66. Auctore Phoebô.] Bentley would like to change ‘auctore’ into ‘structore,’ but would not object to ‘ductore,’ because Horace says elsewhere, “... potior ductos
Alite muros;”
and Virgil says (Aen. i. 423), ‘pars ducto
muros.’ Bentley’s morbid desire to change the received text as often as he could comes out in this case. Horace might as properly say ‘auctore Phoebô,’ as Virgil ‘Troiae Cynthius auctor’ (G. iii. 36).

69. Non hoc jocosae conveniet] The MSS. vary greatly in these words: ‘haec convenient’ is the reading of most editions, ‘hoc conveniet’ of most MSS., including the Berne and Blandinian.

CARMEN IV.
About a. u. c. 728.

Pursuing his purpose, Horace here commends the power of wisdom and learning in subduing brute force and violent passions. If a. u. c. 728 be the year in which Horace met with his accident (C. ii. 13), this ode could not have been written before that year, for the circumstance is referred to in v. 27. The expedition intended for Britain, but turned against Spain, took place that year, and seems to Franke to be alluded to in the ninth stanza. A Parthian expedition was in contemplation at the same time. The allusions to violent men unrestrained by the Muses appear to the same writer to have reference to Cornelius Gallus and M. Equatius Rufus, both disaffected men, the former of whom destroyed himself, and the latter conspired against Augustus’ life, both in the above year (Dion. Cass. liii. 23, 24). This may or may not be true, but it is consistent with the notion, which some chronologies are not, that all these six odes were written about the same time. That Horace was still a frequenter of Baiae appears from v. 24. But when he wrote Epp. i. 15, which was probably composed A.D.C. 731, he had been forbidden by the doctor to go there, which Franke also notices as limiting the date of the ode.

ARGUMENT.

Come down, Calliope, and sing a lofty strain. Is it a dream or am I wandering in the Muses' grove? I was a child, and tired with play I lay down to sleep on the Apulian hills. There doves made me a covering of leaves, and I slept safe, and men might well wonder how the gods were present with me. Yours am I, ye Muses, on the Sabine hills, at Tibur, at Praeneste, or at Baiae. Because I love your fountains and your choir I perished not when the battle was turned, nor by the accursed tree, nor in the Sicilian waters. Be ye with me and I will visit the mad Bosporus, the sands of the East, the savage Briton, the Concan, the Geloni, and the Tanais, unharmed. Ye refresh Augustus when he brings back his weary troops from the war. Mild are your counsels, and in peace is your delight. We know how that bold giant hand struck terror into the heart of Jove; but what was their strength against the aegis of Pallas? 'Twas that which drove them back, though Vulcan too, and Juno, and Apollo with his bow, were there. Brute force falls self-destroyed: the gods detest violence, but tempered strength they promote: let Gyas be my witness, Orion the seducer, Earth mourning for her sons, Actna with its ever-burning and un Consuming flame, the vulture of Tityus, and the chains of Peirithous.

Descende caelo et dic age tibia
Regina longum Calliope melos,
Seu voce nunc mavis acuta,
Seu fidibus citharaque Phoebi.
Auditis, an me ludit amabilis
Insania? Audire et videor pios
Errare per lucos amoenae
Quos et aquae subeunt et aurae.
Me fabulosae Vulture in Apulo
Altricus extra limen Apuliae
Ludo fatigatumque somno
Fronde nova puerum palumbes

2. longum] This seems to mean a sustained and stately song. There is a little likeness between this opening and a fragment of Alcman (29 Bergk):

Μῶσ᾽ ἀγε Καλλιότα, θύγατερ Δίδυς, ἄρχ᾽ ἱρατῶν ἱππῶν ἵππων ἤπειρον
ὑμνὸν καὶ χαριντα τίθι χαρὴν.

4. citharaque] The balance of authority is in favour of 've,' but the sense is against it. There is no opposition between 'cithara' and 'fidibus.' They mean the same thing. Bentley as usual prefers 've,' which got into the MSS. probably from a careless reference to 'seu.'

6. pios Errare per lucos] See C. iv. 2. 27.

9. fabulosae] The Scholiasts take this with 'altricus,' but it clearly belongs to 'palumbes' the 'stolded doves,' as 'fabulous Hydaspes' (C. i. 22. 8). The range of the Apennines that bore the name 'Vultur' was partly in Apulia and partly in Lucania. It is still called Monte Vulture. Venusia, Horace's birth-place, was near the boundary of those provinces, whence he calls Apulia his nurse, though elsewhere (S. ii. 1. 34) he says it is doubtful whether he was an Apulian or a Lucanian. Bentley expresses the greatest contempt for this, the ordinary interpretation, and proposes to read 'nutricis extra limina sedulae' taking 'nutrix' literally. For that word he has authority. The eldest Berne has it: but 'limina sedulae' is his own invention. Orelli says
Texere, mirum quod foret omnibus,
Quicunque celsae nidum Acherontiae
Saltusque Bantinos et arvum
Pingue tenent humiliis Forenti,
Ut tuto ab ariis corpore vipers
Dormirem et ursis, ut premerer sacra
Lauroque collataque myrto,
Non sine dis animosus infans.
Vester, Camenae, vester in arduos
Tollor Sabinos, seu mihi frigidum
Praeneste seu Tibur supimum
Seu liquidae placuere Baiae.
Vestris amicum fontibus et choris
Non me Philippis versa acies retro, Devota non extinxit arbos,
Nec Sicula Palinurus unda.
Uteuncque mecum vos eritis, libens
Insanientem navita Bosporum
Tentabo et turentes arenas Litoris Assyrii viator;

the passage is undoubtedly corrupt (V. L.). If so, all attempts to mend it have only made it worse. Doves have their part in sundry tales. Heyne's and Servius' notes on Aen. vi. 190 may be read by those who care to hear more about the birds of Venus.

9. Apuleo—Apuliae] The difference in the quantity of the first syllable is not singular. The word Sicanus is used as three different feet. Italus has the first syllable long or short, and so with other names.

11. Ludo fatigatunque somno] It is clear that some other word like 'oppressum' must be understood for 'somno.' It is a translation of καυμάτω ἀδοκίμις ἴδε καὶ ὑπνόι (II. x. 98). Acheronta, Bantia, and Forentum were neighbouring towns, and still retain their names under the forms Acerenza, Vanzi, Forenza. Orelli, with the authority of only one of his Berne MSS. and that the latest, reads Forenti instead of Ferenti, which Bentley has adopted. The modern name is in favour of Forenti. Orelli says the mistake arose from confounding this place with Ferentium, a Hori- can town. Stories such as Horace has here invented for himself are told of Stesichorus, Pindar, Aeschylus, Plato. That which Pausianias (ix. 23) tells of Plato is very like this.

17. Ut—Dormirem] This is connected with 'mirum,' 'how I slept.'

22. Tollor] Ovid uses the word (Met. vii. 779):—

"Collis apex mediis subjectis imminet arvis: Tollor eo."

'Seu' is understood after 'vester.' The epithet 'liquidae,' applied to Baiae, is explained by Cruquius' Scholiast of the clearness and purity of the atmosphere.

28. Nec Sicula Palinurus unda.] Horace's escape from shipwreck off Cape Palinurus is no where else related; and his biographers have been much perplexed as to the period of his life to which it ought to be referred. I have no conjecture to offer. A suggestion which has been pretty confidently put forth (Class. Mus. i. 205), that Horace was with the expedition against Sex. Pompeius, A.U.C. 718, in which many vessels were lost off Cape Palinurus, is inconsistent with the silence Horace maintains on the subject, which is no where alluded to in any part of his writings. It appears most improbable. Francis, in his note on the first Epode, makes the same statement: where he got it I do not know. Acron's comment is of no value: "Redeuntem se Horatius de Macedonias periclitatum dicit." 'Sicula unda'
Visam Britannos hospitibus feros
Et laetum equino sanguine Concanum,
Visam pharetratos Gelonos
Et Seythicum inviolatus amnem.
Vos Caesarem altum, militia simul Fessas cohortes addidit oppidis,
Finire quaecentem labores Picro recrreatis antro.

for the Tuscan Sea is an unusual limitation. It must not be confounded with Mare Siculum. Palinurus was on the western coast of Lucania. It retains its name as Capo di Palinuro.

31. urentes] The MSS. are divided between this and ‘arentes.’ Aeron read ‘urentes,’ as it appears. Four of Orelli’s best MSS., with the Leiden of the tenth century, have the same. He prefers it as less otiote, and because all sands are dry, but all do not burn as the Syrian beach does. There is not much in this argument. The participle of a transitive verb is not commonly used as an epithet by Horace; and if ‘urentes’ is neuter, it is not less idle than ‘arentes,’ which Bentley, Lamminus, and Cruequius prefer. Authority seems to be more in favour of ‘urentes,’ but on their own merits it would be hard to decide between the two words. ‘Litoris Assyri,’ Orelli says, may mean either the deserts east of Syria, in which Palmyra is situated, or the Syrian coast. ‘Litoris’ can hardly mean any thing but the latter. See note on C. ii. 11. 10.

33. Visam Britannos] Our ancestors had a bad name. St. Jerome says he saw a tribe in Gaul, the Aticoti, of British origin, eating human flesh (Orelli’s note). The stories of their human sacrifices are too authentic to be doubted. See Tacitus (Ann. xiv. 90), where he says of them, ‘cum captivum adulere aras at hominum fibris consulte deos fas habebant.’ Virgil (Georg. iii. 463) relates of the Geloni that they eat cheese dipped in horse’s blood. Whether the Concani, who were a Cantabrian tribe, did the same is doubtful. Horace perhaps got his idea from Virgil, and Silius copied Horace (iii. 360):—

"Nec qui Massageten monstrans feritate parentem Cornipedis fusa satiaris, Concane, vena."

38. addidit] The MSS. appear to be almost equally divided between this reading and two others, ‘addidit’ and ‘reddidit;’ and Bentley, with Pea and Meinecke, prefer the last. In the year A. u. C. 729, after the conquest of the Salassi, a people of the Gaulish Alps (Liv. Epit. 135. Dion Cass. 53. 25), Augustus assigned their territory to some of the praetorian troops, and there they built Augusta Praetoria (Aosta), and about the same time there were assigned to others lands in Lusitania, on which they built Augusta Emerita (Merida). ‘Reddidit’ may be right, but ‘addidit’ is a word used in a like case by Tacitus (Ann. xiii. 31): "Coloniae Capua atque Nuceria additis veteranis firmatae sunt." It also comes nearer to ‘addidit,’ which is the reading of all the Scholiasts, who explain it of the soldiers being sent to winter-quarters. I have no faith in this reading, and believe it to be a corruption of ‘addidit.’ Dillenbr. thinks ‘addidit’ much the best: ‘mirifico conjunctus cum finiendis veteranorum militum laboribus.’ The truth lies, in my opinion, between ‘reddidit’ and ‘addidit,’ and I have given my reason for preferring the latter with Orelli. Lamminus conjectures ‘fessus’ for ‘fessas,’ and Bentley is much pleased with the alteration but does not a-lopt it.

40. Picro recreatis antro.] Suetonius, in his life of Augustus (84, 85), relates that he followed literary pursuits with great zeal, and dabbled in poetry. He could not have had much time for such pursuits when this ode was written, but he may have said enough to let it be seen that he desired leisure to follow them.

41. Vos lene consilium.] The penultimate vowel coalesces with the next, as in ‘principium’ (iii. 6. 6). ‘Alfenius’ (S. i. 3. 130). ‘Naesidieni’ (S. ii. 8. 1). So Virgil says (Aen. i. 73): ‘Connubio jugam stabili.’ Orelli applies this unnecessarily to Augustus. It appears to be no more than a general commendation of the Muses. ‘Ye give peaceful counsel and rejoice in giving it, because ye are gentle (almae),’ is the meaning of the words.

43. Titanas immanenque turmam.] There is no necessity for understanding ‘turman'
CARMINUM III. 4.

Vos lene consilium et datis et dato
Gaudetis alme. Scimus, ut impios
Titans immanemque turmam
Fullmine sustulerit caduco,
Qui terram inertem, qui mare temperat
Ventosum, et urbes regnaque tristia
Divosque mortalesque turbas
Imperio regit unus aequo.

Magnum illa terrorem intulerat Jovi
Fidens juventus horrida brachiis,
Fratresque tendentes opaco
Pelion imposuisse Olympo.

Sed quid Typhoëus et validus Mimas,
Aut quid minaci Porphyriion statu,
Quid Rhoetus evolvisque trucis Enceladus jaculator audax to be explanatory of 'Titans,' as Orelli says. The wars of the Titans (with Uranus), the Gigantes, the Aloïdes, Typhon or Typhoëus (with Zeus), are all mixed up together in the description which follows. Virgil has given a description (Georg. i. 279, sqq.) where the Titans (Coeus and Japetus), Typhon and the Aloïdes, are brought together with little distinction. But neither Horace nor Virgil were writing a mythological history, and in this description of Horace there is great power.—Bentley conjectures 'corusco' for 'caduco' without improvement. Compare Aeschylus (P. V. 368), άλλ' ἥδεν αὐτῷ Ζηνὸς ἄγωμαν βίλοις καταβάτης κεραυνός εκτίνων φλόγα, where καταβάτης explains 'caduco.'

46. urbes] For this Bentley unauthorised substitutes 'embras.' A distinction is drawn by some between 'temperat' and 'regit,' as if one only applied to inanimate objects, the other to gods and men. But there is no such distinction in C. i. 12, 13, where 'temperat' governs 'res hominum ac Deorum,' as well as 'mare ac terras mundumque.'

50. Fidens juventus horrida] Orelli prefers taking 'horrida' with 'brachiis.' I think it should be taken as an epithet of 'juventus,' leaving 'fidens' to govern 'brachiis' as a participle. It appears to be an imitation of Homer's κάστα τὴν πεποθήτας (Il. xii. 130). 'Fidens,' as an adjective, is used in a good sense; 'confidens' in a bad, according to Cicero's definition (Tusc. iii. 7),

"Qui fortis est idem est fidens, quoniam confidens, mala loquendi consuetudine, in vitio ponitur." So Horace describes Persius as a man "confidens tumidusque" (S. i. 7). Silius seems to have remembered this line when he wrote (Pun. ii. 154), "Sed fuis latis humeris et mole juventae." The brothers Horace speaks of were Otus and Ephialtes, the sons of Aloëus, whose exploit of piling Pelion on Ossa in their attack upon Olympus (of which legend some have not failed to see the origin in the building of Babel,—see the notes of Myrcurius and Farneri on Ovid, Met. i. 151. 155, Burmann's quarto edition) is first mentioned by Homer (Odysse. xi. 314),

"Ossan et Olimpiam miissan themen, aut argi in' Ossar.
Πηλιον inomaihllon, ti' oIVENOĐ aByaτος εῺη.

The various stories respecting these worthies will be found in their place in Smith's Dict. Myth. See Virg. (Georg. i. 280),

"Et conjugatos caelum rescindere frates, Ter sunt conati imponeo Pelion Ossam
Scilicet, atque Ossae frondosum imponeo Olympum,"

where 'frondosum' explains Horace's 'opusco.' Ovid inverts the order, and puts Pelion uppermost, as Horace does:—

'Ignibus Ossa novis et Pelion altior Ossa
Arsit.' (Fast. iii. 441.)

In the fifth book of the Fasti (v. 35, sqq.), he attributes to the hundred-handed giants Briareus, &c., the exploit which the olden
Horatii

Contra sonantem Palladis aegida
Possent ruentes? Hinc avidus stetit Volcanus, hinc matrona Juno et Nunquam humeris positurus arcum,
Qui rore puro Castaliae lavit
Crines solutos, qui Lyciae tenet
Dumeta natalenque silvam, Delius et Patareus Apollo.
Vis consili express mole ruit sua:
Vim temperatam di quoque provehunt
In majus; idem odere vires
Omne nefas animo moventes.
Testis mearum centimanus Gyas
Sententiaram, notus et integrae
Tentator Orion Dianae

Virginea domitus sagitta.

Legend assigns to the Aloidae. These variations are only worth noticing as they help to show that the Romans set little value by these stories, and only used them as ornaments of poetry; and to prevent students from wasting their time with some commentators in attempting to reconcile statements which are not reconcileable.—Tytheüs (Τυφωνές) warred with Zeus on his own account. Mimas and Rhoeus were giants. Mimas was also the name of a Centaur; and the name of Rhoeus, who was also a Centaur, has by some editors been substituted for Rhoeus here and in C. i. 19. 23, where the confusion of names has been observed upon in a note. Porphyryon and Enceladus were of the same family. (See art. Gigantes in Smith’s Dict.)

58. avidus] Blomfield (Gloss. Aesch. P. V. 376) makes ‘avidus’ a mere ornamental epithet, so that ‘avidus Vulcanus’ is like ‘ignis edax.’ I think he is wrong, and that ‘avidus’ means ‘avidus pugnae,’ as in Virg. (Aen. xii. 439), ‘Ille avidus pugnae suras inclusurat auro.’ Tacitus puts the word absolutely (Ann. i. 57), ‘Caesar avidas legiones quituar in cuneos dispersit.’ In enumerating the principal gods who assisted Zeus in the battle, Horace means to say that, although they were present, it was Pallas to whom the victory was mainly owing; otherwise the force of his argument is lost. The description of Apollo combines his various places of abode, as Pindar does in Pyth. i. 39, sq., which lines Hermann thinks a blot on the poem, I do not know why.

Δύκε καὶ Δάλου ἀνάσσων Φοίβη Παρνασσὸς ti κράναν Κασταλίαν ὕδεων ἐθελήσας ταῦτα νῷρ τίβεμι.

‘Lyciae dumeta’ are the woods about Pataras, a town in Lycia, where Apollo passed six months of the year as he passed the other six at Delos (according to Servius on Aen. iv. 144), which place Horace means by ‘natalen sylvam,’ i.e. the woods on Mount Cythusa. Herodotus, speaking of the similarity in one particular of the worship of Belus at Babylon and Apollo at Pataras, alludes to this division of the god’s presence (i. 182): Κατάπαροι ἐν Παταρώι τῆς Δυκείας ἡ πρόμαντος τοῦ θεοῦ, ἵππων γίνεται ὁ γάρ ὃν ἀλλ᾽ ὅστις Χρυσάτριος αὐτόθι ἵππων δὲ γίνεται κ.π.λ.

67. idem odere vires] This seems to be taken from Euripides (Hel. 903), μουί γὰρ ὁ θεὸς τὴν βίαν. Respecting the name ‘Gyas,’ see note on C. ii. 17. 14. The various accounts of Orion’s death, respecting which Horace and Ovid followed different legends, may be found in the article Orion in Smith’s Dict. Myth. ‘Integer’ is equivalent to ‘intactus,’ and involves the same root (see above, C. iii. 2. 18, n.). ‘Tentator’ is not elsewhere used for a seducer. It is taken from the Greek πιείναν, which Timaeus (Lex. Platon.) explains thus: πιερίντα πιεράζοντα διὰ λόγων παιδα ἢ γυναῖκα, where see Ruhnken’s note. Tibullus uses the verb (i. 3. 73):—

" Άλλονον τενταρε Ιξιώνις αύσι Versantur celei noxia membra rota."

See Muretus on this passage.
CARMINUM III. 5.

Injecta monstris Terra dolet suis
Maeretque partus fulmine luridum
Missos ad Orcum; nec peredit
Impositam celer ignis Aetnen,
Incontinentis nec Tityi jeur
Reliquit ales, nequitiae additus
Custos; amatorem trecentae
Pirithoum cohibent catenae.

74. luridum] For the different meanings of this word, which is perhaps a contraction of ‘livoridus,’ and akin to ‘lividus,’ and so to the Greek πελιδών, see Porcell. and Index.
75. nec peredit] Aeschylus, in the place quoted above, speaks of—ποταμοι πυρος δαιτωντες άργιαι γναθους της καλλικαρφων Σικελιας λευρος γυναι.
Findar (Ol. iv. 7. Pyth. i. 19) and Aeschylus make Typhon or Typhoēus the offender on whom Aetna was laid. Callimachus assigns this punishment to Enceladus, and also, contradicting himself, to Briareus. Which version Horace adopted does not appear.
78. nequitiae additus] ‘Nequitiae’ may mean ‘propter nequitiam’ by a Greek construction, or it may be put for ‘nequam,’ the crime for the criminal.

CARMEN V.

A. U. C. 728.

There would seem to have been generally prevalent a feeling of soreness and impatience under the disgrace, so long unredeemed, of the reverses sustained in Asia by the Roman arms under Crassus and M. Antonius; and this feeling it appears to be Horace’s purpose in this ode to allay, and to discourage any hope or desire for the return of the Parthian prisoners. This desire Horace seems to impute to a degenerate spirit, and the story of Regulus is introduced apparently to call back men’s minds to the standard of a former generation. An honorable death, he tells them, is better than a dishonorable slavery, and a virtuous fame is more to be cared for than personal safety.

The usual inscriptions, “In landem Caesaris Augusti,” “Ad divum Augustum,” &c., do not represent the purport of the ode, though it is introduced with a flattering prophecy of the emperor’s success in the expedition he had probably just entered upon, which was that noticed in the last ode.

ARGUMENT.

Jove is in heaven; Augustus shall be a god upon earth when he hath subdued the Briton and the Persian. What! can a Roman forget his glorious home and live a slave with the Mede? ’Twas not thus Regulus acted, when he saw the ruin a coward’s example would bring on those who should come after him; and he cried, “I have seen our standards hung on Punic walls; our freemen bound; their gates unbarred; their fields all tilled. Will the ransomed soldier come back more ready for the fight? Ye do but add ruin to shame: the dyed wool recovers not its fair colour; and so virtue once lost cares not to be restored. When the freed hind fights its captor, the prisoner released shall cope again with his foe, he who has cried for mercy and made peace for himself on the battle-field: O shame! O Carthage, exalted on the fall of Rome!” Then he put away his wife and his children; and fixed his eyes upon the ground; strengthened the wavering minds of the fathers; and departed among weeping friends a noble exile. And though he knew the torments that awaited him, he put aside his troops of friends as calmly as if he were going down to his home at Venafrum or Tarentum.

Caelo Tonantem credidimus Jovem

Regnare: praesens divus habebitur
Augustus adjecitis Britannis Imperio gravibusque Persis.

Milesne Crassi conjuge barbara
Turpis maritus vixit et hostium,
Pro curia inversique mores!
Consensuit socerorum in armis
Sub rege Medo Marsus et Apulus,
Anciliorum et nominis et togae
Oblitus aeternaeque Vestae, Incoluni Jove et urbe Roma?

1. Caelo Tonantem] Orelli does right to take 'regnare' with 'caelo,' making 'Tonantem' absolute. 'Credidimus' has the common force of the aorist. 'Praesens,' which Dillenbr. takes in the sense noticed on C. i. 35: 2, is obviously 'praesens in terris,' as opposed to 'caelo.'

3. adjectis] This means 'when he shall have added.' It cannot mean, as some understand it, who place the date of the ode after the recovery of the standards from Phraates, 'because he has added.' That would be a direct assertion that Augustus had invaded and subdued Britain, which he never did, though Strabo says (iv. p. 138) that many of the native chiefs had sent to offer their territories to the acceptance of the Romans, oikian aixidon parastigasan tois 'Pramuia \\ %

maioi \\ %

aphro di \\ %

vphas. Horace's object seems to be to divert men's attention from the Parthian prisoners and past defeat to new objects of hope and ambition, under the guidance of Augustus.

5. Milesne Crassi] It was about twenty-eight years since the disastrous campaign of Crassus, when about 10,000 Roman soldiers, and several eagles, were left in the hands of the Parthians. Orelli says Horace does not allude to M. Antonius' losses in the same quarter eighteen years afterwards, partly because it would have been indelelic to wards Augustus, and partly because of his affection for his son L. Antonius.

--- conjuge barbara --- maritus] Ovid uses this construction (Heroid. iv. 134): "Et fas omne facit fratre marita soror."

Virgil exclaims with the same horror of Antonius, "Sequiturque (nefas) Aegyptia conjuconjurasse"

(Aen. vii. 638). The disgrace lay in the intermarrying with those who not only had not 'connubium' with Rome, but were her enemies.

7. Pro curia inversique mores!] Orelli says 'pro' "est deminuatis cum indignatione." It expresses vehemence varying according to circumstances. It is followed by the nominative or accusative. In the common exclamation "pro deum hominum-que fidem!" the accusative is always used.

(See the explanation of that phrase in Mr. Long's note on Cic. Divin. in Caecil. 3.)

3. in armis] Jani quotes one MS. which has 'arvis.' This reading Bentley adopts after Tan. Faber, and Heininsus. But there is nothing to prevent our supposing the Roman prisoners served in the Parthian armies. As slaves they would be forced to do so, and they might do it willingly, as Labienus did, who was not a prisoner. It is Horace's purpose at least to make it appear they did so.

10. Anciliorum] This genitive, from 'ancile,' is anomalous. Forcellini points out a similar irregularity in 'Saturnaliorum,' and Orelli adds 'sponsaliorum.' Horace collects the most distinguished objects of a Roman's reverence, his name, his citizenship (toga), the shield of Mars only to be lost, and the fire of Vesta only to be exting-

ished, when Rome should perish. Florus (iv. 11. 3) says of M. Antonius, that he was "patriciae nominis togae fascium oblitus," Hoc caverat mens provida Reguli
Dissentientis condicionibus
Foedis et exemplo trahentis
Perniciem veniens in aeum,
Si non periret inmiserabilis
Captivea pubes. Signa ego Punicis
Adfixa delubris et arma
Militibus sine caede, dixit,
Derepta vidi; vidi ego civium
Retorta tergo brachia libero
Portasque non clausas et arva
Marte coli populata nostro.

12. Incolumi Jove] That is, says the Scholiast, while the Capitol is safe where Jove's temple stood.

15. * exemplo trahentis*] Horace means to say, that Regulus had foreseen the danger to posterity of a precedent which should sanction the purchase of life upon dishonorable terms. 'This the far-seeing mind of Regulus guarded against when he refused to agree to dishonorable conditions, and drew from such a precedent a presage of ruin upon generations to come.' 'Exemplo trahentis' was the reading Cruquius' Scholiast followed ("adferenti in futurum perniciem rei publicae"), though no MS. collated in modern times has shown that reading. Lambinus and Bentley adopt it, though the latter prefers 'exemplis trahentis,' the genitive of quality. I think the reading I have followed, with Orelli and all the old editions, and most of the modern, is correct. 'Si non periret' is the hypothetical example from which the apprehension is drawn. Dillenbr. and others make 'trahentis' equivalent to 'quitrahireret,' 'seeing that he would by his example bring.' But the two participles coupled by 'et' cannot have the signification one of the indicative and the other of the potential mood. The Greek example quoted by Dillenbr. from Plato's Criton (p. 48) has no force here, inasmuch as the Greeks were able by means of ãν to show the potential or hypothetical bearing of a participle and avoid confusion. Plato's words are, τῶν ῥαπίων ἀποκτιστών καὶ ἀναβοσκομένων γὰρ ἀν ὡς οἷοι τι ἦσαν, where the first participle is equivalent to οἵ ἀποκτιστῶς, and the second to ἄναισθοσκόρον ἀν, but without ἀν it could only signify οἷ ἀναισθοσκοροντα.

17. Si non periret] There is no authority for the reading 'perirent,' which has been proposed. The fact is, that the two first lines of the Alcaic stanza are composed of two separate measures, the trochaic and dactylic; and though Horace usually employs a spoudee instead of the second trochee, he does not do so here, nor did the Greeks invariably: see Alcaeus (Fr. 19 Bergk), ὥστε εὖρε εὐξαν τῶν προτέρων ἀνω Στρίχυ, and (Fr. 35) οὐ χρή εὐγοίσιβοι θυμὸν ἐπιτρέπτως, Προσκόμομεν γὰρ οὐκέτι ἀδίμην.

21. Derepta vidi;] The difference between this word and 'direpta' is so plain, that it is singular the latter reading should here have been admitted. Lambinus first corrected it against all the MSS. he was acquainted with; for which Cruquius quarrels with him, and thinks 'direpta' will do very well. I believe that the remark made upon 'dimoveo' in the note on C. i. 1. 13 (see also note on C. 1. 17 of this book) applies equally to 'diripe.' The difference is clearly marked in Tacitus (Ann. i. 20): "Direptisque proximus vicis ipsoque Nauparto quod municipii instar erat, retinentes centuriones irissu et contumelios postremo verberibus insectantur praecipue in Aufidium Rufum praefectum Caesarum, in quem dereptum vehiculo sarcinis gravant." Again (c. 23), "Tribunos tamen ac praefectum castrorum extrusere; sarcinae fugientiun direptae." 'Deripere' is to pull down or off, 'diripere' to pull in pieces. The MSS., which are nearly unanimous in favour of 'diripere' here, favour 'deripere' in other places (see Index).

23. Portasque non clausas] The same image of security appears in A. P. 190: "Et aperiis otia portis."

24. Marte] This belongs to 'populata.' See C. i. 6. 2, n.
Auro repensus scilicet acrior
Miles redigit. Flagitio additis
Damnnum: neque amissos colorer
Lana refert medicata fuco,
Nee vera virtus cum semel excidit
Curat reponi deterioribus.
Si pugnat extricata densis
Cerva plagis erit ille fortis
Qui perfidis se credidit hostibus,
Et Marte Poenos proteret altero
Qui lora restrictis lacertis
Sensit iners timuitque mortem.
Hic unde vitam sumeret inscius
Pacem duello miscuit. O pudor!
O magna Karthago, probrosis Altior Italiae ruinis!

26. Flagitio additis Damnnum:] Franke suggests that it may have been proposed to purchase the liberty of the prisoners. Horace's words are 'ye are adding mischief to disgrace;' and from what follows it would seem that the mischief would arise from having among them again those who had sunk so low. The words are like those of Euripides (Rhes. 102), αἰσχρὸν γὰρ ἠμῖν καὶ πρὸς αἰσχύνη κακόν.

30. reponi deterioribus.] This has sometimes been translated as if Horace meant that true virtue would not suffer itself to be replaced by false, or virtue of a lower sort. I rather think he means that true virtue, when it has once been lost, does not care to be restored to the degenerate. So the Scholiasts understood it. "Excidit: scilicet animis. Curat reponi: i.e. restitui

ipsius animis deterioribus, i.e. minus bonis

quam prius." (Porph.) Acron gives the same explanation, and notices the opposite statement of Virgil (Aen. ii. 367):

"Quondam etiam victis reedit in praecondia

tur.*

Orelli adopts this interpretation.

33. Qui perfidis se credidit hostibus,] Bentley conjectures 'dedidit' destroying the force of the words 'he who has trusted himself to an enemy not to be trusted;' as C. iii. 27. 25,—

"Sic et Europe niveum doloso

Credidit tauro latus,"

where the opposition is the same. Bentley's usual method of arguing down a received reading, by citing passages from other writers where his own word occurs, is a mere waste of labour. Any number of passages in which 'hostibus sese dedere' may occur, will not prove against all the MSS., the character of the sentence derived from the epithet 'perfidis,' and the parallel passage I have quoted, that Horace here wrote 'de-didit,' which signifies an unconditional surrenrender without reference to the perfidy or good faith of the enemy. (See art. Dedi-ticii, Smith's Dict. Ant.)

37. Hic unde vitam] 'He (i.e. the coward), not considering to what he ought to owe his life (i.e. to his own sword, 'una salus victis,' Aen. ii. 354), confounds peace with war: that is to say, makes peace for himself on the field of battle. Bentley's mania for alteration leads him into a very great one here. In a few MSS. he finds the reading 'aptius' for 'inscius,' and this leads him to correct the whole passage thus,

"—timuitque mortem

Hinc, unde vitam sumeret aptius;
Pacem et duello miscuit,"

where the 'hinc' and 'et' are his own inventions, and the punctuation is also his own.

40. Altior Italiae ruinis!] On v. 52 of the last ode was quoted from Ovid (Fast. iii. 441) "Pelion altior Ossa," 'Pelion raised upon the head of Ossa.' So here is meant Carthage raised above the ruins of Italy, and looking down upon them.
Furtur pudicae conjugis osculum
Parvosque natos ut capitis minor
Ab se removisse et virilem
Torvs humi posuisse voltum:
Donec labantes consilio patres
Firmaret auctor nunquam alias dato,
Interque maerentes amicos
Egregius properaret exsil.
Atqui sciebat quae sibi barbarus
Tortor pararet; non alter tamen
Dimovit obstantes propinquos
Et populum redivus morantem,
Quam si clientum longa negotia
Dijudicata lite relinqueret,
Tendens Venafranos in agros
Aut Lacedaemonium Tarentum.

42. capitis minor] It is explained in the article 'caput' in Smith's Dict. Ant., that a Roman citizen taken prisoner by the enemy lost his status or civil rights. Livy says the Romans always wanted compassion for their own soldiers taken in war (xxii. 61), "praeter exemplum civitatis minime in captivos jam inde antiquitus indulgentis, pecuniae quoque summa homines movit;" i.e. besides the usual habit of the citizens, who from the earliest times showed very little indulgence for prisoners of war, they were deterred by the magnitude of the ransom asked for Hannibal's prisoners from listening to their envoys. The vacillation of the senate on that occasion resembles their behaviour as Horace represents it in the case of Regulus.

The authenticity of the story of Regulus, as far as concerns his interview with the senate and his return, is not doubted. The horrors of his death have been questioned, and among others by Niebuhr. Those who wish to read what has been said upon the subject will be referred to the authorities by turning to the article Regulus in Smith's Dict. Bieg.

52. redivus] Dillenbr. explains the plural to signify his frequent attempts to shake off his friends and return. It is rather adopted to avoid the recurrence of a final 'm.'

53. Quam si, &c.] Than if he had been settling a dispute, as patroni were wont to do between their clients, and was going to his country-seat at Venafrum or Tarentum.

CARMEN VI.

About A.U.C. 728.

As the former odes are addressed more to qualities of young men, this refers more especially to the vices of young women, and so Horace discharges the promise with which this series of odes begins. The state of female morals at the time Horace wrote was probably not so bad as it became shortly afterwards, though his picture is dark enough.

In v. 13 there is an allusion to the battle of Actium, which makes it evident that this ode was written after that event. There is no clue to the date but this, and we may fairly assume that it was written about the same time as the others of this set.
ARGUMENT.

On you will be visited your fathers' guilt, O Romans, unless ye shall restore the worship and acknowledge the sovereign power of the gods. Already have they afflicted our land; twice the Parthian hath checked our arms, the barbarian hath well nigh destroyed us in the midst of our strife, the age is so full of shameless adultery and lasciviousness. Not from such parents were born the conquerors of Pyrrhus, Antiochus, and Hannibal, the manly offspring of soldiers who had handled the plough and carried the faggot. So doth time spoil all things. Our fathers were not as their fathers, nor we as they; and our children shall be worse than ourselves.

Delicta majorum immeritus lues,
Romane, donec templas refeceris Aedesque labentes deorum et Foeda nigro simulacra fumo.

Dis te minorem quod geris imperas :
Hinc omne principium, huc refer exitum.

Di multa neglecti dederunt
Hesperiae mala luctuosae.
Jam bis Monaeses et Pacori manus
Non auspicatos contudit impetus

Nostros et adjecisse praedam
Torquibus exiguis renidet.

1. immeritus] I do not see the difficulty said to exist in this word. The ode is addressed, like the others, 'virginibus purisque,' and they could not be said to be responsible for the guilt of the civil wars (delicta) just brought to a close; but if they failed to do their duty in restoring the temples, and so repairing the consequences of the wars, they must be prepared to reap the fruits of them in the displeasure of the gods. Suetonius, as before mentioned (C.
ii. 15, Introduction), in his life of Augustus, relates how he applied himself to the restorating of the sacred buildings, which Ovid also records (Fast. ii. 59, sqq.), and Virgil amplifies his piety, saying he erected 300 shrines to the gods after his triumph:—

"At Caesar triplici invectus Romana tri-umpho
Moenia, dis Italis votum immortale sacrabat,
Maxima ter centum totam delubra per urbem." (Aen. viii. 714, sqq.)

'Delubra,' mere way-side shrines, each containing an image or an altar or both,
must not be confounded with 'templae.' Tibullus followed up the work that Augustus began (Tac. Ann. ii. 49): "Tisdem tempo-ribus deum aedes vetustate aut igni abolitas, coeptasque ab Augusto dedicavit." The temples he built or completed were three in number, dedicated to Liber, Libera, and Ceres, to Flora, and to Juno. See C. ii. 15.
20. S. ii. 2. 104.

2. Romane,] Horace uses the same form again, "Hic niger est, hunc tu, Romane, caveto" (S. i. 4. 65); and Virgil likewise,
"Tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento" (Aen. vi. 852). Livy often expresses himself so, as Quintilian observes (Inst. viii. 6), "Maxime in ovando valebit numerorum illa libertas: nam et Livius saepè sic dicti 'Romano proelio victor,' cum Romanos viciss numRows significat."

6. Principium,] See note above on C.
4. 41. Orelli here quotes Livy (45. 39):
"Majores vestri omnium magnarum rerum et principia exorsi ad Dis sunt et finem statuerunt."

9. Monaeses et Pacori manus] Pacorus was son of the Parthian king, Arsaces XIV., and appointed by his father to command the army against the Romans in the place of Surenas, who defeated Crassus A.U.C. 701, and whom Pacorus put to death. He was as-associated with the renegade Labienus, and overran Syria and a great part of Asia Minor, while M. Antonius was amusing himself with Cleopatra. Who Monaeses was is not Paene occupatam seditionibus
Delevit Urbem Dacus et Aethiops,
Hic classe formidatus, ille
Missilibus melior sagittis.
Fecunda culpae secula nuptias
Primum inquinavere et genus et domos;
Hoc fonte derivata clades
In patriam populumque fluxit.
Motus doceri gaudet Ionicos
Matura virgo et fingitur artibus;
Jam nunc et incestos amores
De terno meditatur ungui:

so certain. The principal person of that name recorded in history was a Parthian noble who fled from Phraates to M. Antonius, and, though he returned to the king, we do not hear that he fought against the Romans. It is therefore conjectured that Monaeses here means Surenas, which is not impossible, either through Horace’s indifference, or because Monaeses being a common Parthian name Surenas may have been so called, Surenas being a title, as Zosimus says. (Many MSS. and all Orelli’s best have Monaesis.) Estré (p. 269, sqq.) discusses what he considers the historical difficulties of the passage, and concludes by banishing the stanza altogether: “Stropha haece quae nimium dii interpretet una deceptit exulabit me judice ex carmine Horatiano.” Peerckamp had passed the same sentence on it before. Horace plainly alludes, perhaps without strict accuracy, to the defeat, first of Crassus, and then of M. Antonius, who was twice defeated, first through his legate Decidius Saxa in 714 by Pacorus, and four years later when he commanded in person, at which time however Pacorus was dead. The Scholiasts all say the defeats alluded to were those of Crassus and Saxa, whose name appears, as we now have their text, under the guise of Decius Sextus, except in Cruquius’ Scholiast, who gives the name correctly, all but one syllable, Didius for Decidius. ‘Non auspiciatos’ is the usual way of accounting for defeat, by laying it to the neglect of the auspices. Bentley, not liking ‘nostros non auspiciatos impetus,’ adopts, from one MS. of Priscian’s, ‘nostri,’ the dative, but suggests as a variety ‘nostorum.’

12. renidet.] Forcellini explains this word by ‘gaudere,’ ‘laetari.’ The word is not uncommonly used for smiling, and as it seems to be only another form of ‘niteo,’ the lighting up of the face through pleasure, is the origin perhaps of this derived sense.

14. Dacus et Aethiops.] These were auxiliaries in Antonius’ army at Actium, Aethiops standing for Egyptian. See Introd.

20. In patriam populumque] Bentley, in one of the longest of his notes, proposes ‘inque patres’ for ‘in patriam.’ But the words as they stand are those of a common formula.

21. Motus doceri gaudet Ionicos] The Ionian was a voluptuous sort of dance with which the Sicilians in particular were familiar, using it at the festivals of Diana. τὸ εἰς Ἰωνικόν Ἀρτιμέτε ὄρχειντο Σκιλλήται μάλιστα (Pollux, quoted by Turnebus Adv. iv. 21). In the following line the MSS. vary between ‘fingitur artibus,’ ‘fingitur artibus,’ and ‘frangit artibus.’ The first reading is (among others quoted by Laminbus and Cruquius and Bentley) that of Orelli’s oldest Berne and Zürich MSS. It is that of the Venetian copy of Landinus (1483); (except that ‘fingitur’ is by a misprint ‘figitur,’) and Laminbus, Bentley, and most modern editors have adopted it. ‘Artibus’ must be a very old reading, for Porphyry, who with the other Scholiasts preferred ‘artibus,’ gives a note to caution readers against ‘artibus.’ “Arturus legendum; quia non venit unominativo artes sed artus.” Nevertheless it has been pointed out by Laminbus, that ‘fingitur artibus’ for ‘fingitur artus’ is a very unusual and hardly admissible construction. ‘Frangit artibus’ is open to the same objection. The true reading, I believe, lies between ‘fingitur artibus’ and ‘frangit artibus.’ The latter has no authority, and I am not therefore disposed to adopt it on my own; but the expression is a legitimate one, and the word ‘frangit’ comes nearer to the Greek. of Aristophanes (Thesm. 163), which it is not improbable Horace may have had in mind. Speaking of the combination of music and poetry, he says of the great lyric poets that they ειτυροφθαρον τε και διεκλάντη ἱωνικῶς.—The function of teaching to dance was performed by slaves, Pantomimi, whom Ovid (A. A. iii. 351) calls "artifices lateris, scenae spectacula," and Seneca "mancipia pantomimorum" (Ep. 47). Tibullus passed a decree that they should never appear in public except on the stage (Tac. Ann. i. 77), which explains Ovid's expression.

23. Jam nunc] The meaning of 'jam nunc' is sufficiently marked in A. P. 43:

"Ordinis haec virtus erit et Venus, aut ego fallor, Ut jam nunc dicat jam nunc debentia didi,"

'Nunc' is 'now,' and 'jam' gives intensive force to 'nunc.' 'Jam jamqua' expresses 'what is expected every moment' (Key, L. G. 1450, e.), but has not happened yet. The commentators mix up 'jam nunc' and 'jam jam,' as if they were synonymous. So Orelli, on C. ii. 1. 17, explains 'jam nunc minaci,' &c., thus "fingit se jam jam vel ante lectam Asini curam in medias res abreptum esse." Horace says directly a girl has grown up she is trained by lascivious teaching and turns her thoughts to unchaste pleasures. The expression 'de tenero ungui' is taken from the Greek ἢ ἀπαλῶν ὄνυχων, which signifies 'from tender years,' when the nails are delicate, and such is the meaning here; but it does not contradict 'matura' as some suppose: the expression will apply to a girl in the earliest stage of womanhood. I do not follow Orelli's punctuation. Cicero, in his sixth letter to Lentulus, says, "praesta t eum qui mihi a teneres ut Graeci dicunt unguiculis es cognitus." The Greeks appear from Cicero's statement to have used the phrase proverbially, but it is only found in an Epigram of Automedon in the Anthology (Br. ii. 207), in which the writer probably had regard to Horace's ode, as Mitsch. observes:

τὴν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἀσίης ὅρχυστρίεα, τὴν κακο-τίχνας σχήμασιν ἢ ἀπαλῶν κυνιμένων ὄνυχων, aíνων οὖν ὅτι πάντα παθαίνειν, ὅτι ἀν βάλλειν
tάς ἀπαλαζ ἀπαλῶς ὃς καὶ ὃς χέρας.

26. Inter—vina.] The same form occurs in Epp. i. 7. 28; 'ad vina' in C. iv. 5. 31.

27. Intermissa] This word occurs no where else. 'Intermissa' and 'improvisa' have thus got into some MSS. in place of the true reading. 'Inconcessus' is used by Virgil and Ovid, and Horace uses 'interdicta.' Orelli contradicts himself. He here treats 'impermissa' as 'interpolatio': but in his V. L., on iv. 7. 10, where 'imperitura' has got into one of his MSS. for 'interitura,' he says this makes it very doubtful which is the true reading here, 'impermissa' or 'intermissa.'

29. Sed jussa coram] The connivance of the husband at the wickedness of the wife is touched by Juvenal in his first Satire (56, sqq.). Metals appear to have been the chief articles imported from Spain, with red lead and those stones which were polished into mirrors, whatever stones those may have been. See Plin. N. H. iii. 3.

32. Dedecorum] Bentley's interpretation of this as 'res pro persona' is hardly worth noticing (see his note on i. 37. 9, sub fin.). Forcellini gives no other instance of 'pretiosus' in an active sense, 'one who gives a large price.' Ulpian's definition of 'magister' is this: "Magistrum navis accipere.
Sed rusticorum mascula militum
Proles, Sabellis docta ligonibus
Versare glebas et severae
Matris ad arbitrium recisos
Portare fustes, sol ubi montium
Mutaret umbras et juda demeret
Bobus fatigatis, amicum
Tempus agens abeunte curru.
Damnosa quid non imminuit dies?
Aetas parentum pejor avis tuit
Nos nequiores, mox daturos Progeniem vitiosiorem.

debemus cui totius navis cura mandata est †
(Dig. 14. 1. 1. § 1). ‘Institor’ was a shop-man †‘qui tabernae locove ad emendum vendendumvre praeponitur; quique sine loco ad eundem actum praeponitur” (Dig. 14. 3.
18). The latter therefore was only an agent, and was usually a slave. The ‘magister’ might be a degree higher, but he was usually a person who received wages, though the ‘magister’ might also be owner; or the owner might allow him part of the tonnage to trade on his own account, as is common now, and he might be rich, which the ‘institor’ could not, except by robbing his employer. There seems to be opposition between ‘institor’ and ‘magister,’ and the indiscriminate prostitution of these women to any coarse fellow, for low wages or high, seems to be intended. The ‘magister’ of a Spanish trading-vessel, even if he were rich, must have been generally a low sort of person.

34. Infecit aequor] See C. ii. 12. 3. n.
and on ‘dirum,’ which Bentley admits here,
and see the verse before that. ‘Cecidit’ is used with some latitude.

41. sol ubi] There are not many poets who could incidentally have expressed in so few words, and so graphically, the hour of evening, for I am inclined to understand that time to be meant, and not noon as some suppose. Comp. Epp. i. 16. 7:

“Laevum decedens curru fugiente vaporet.’
and Virg. (Ec. ii. 67):

“Et sol crescentes decedens duplicat um-bras.”
The last stanza is a very solemn and comprehensive conclusion to these six stirring and instructive odes.

CARMEN VII.

The idea of this graceful ode is that of a young girl lamenting the absence of her lover, who is gone on a trading voyage to the Euxine. The names, as usual in these compositions, are foreign. Gyges is Lydian. The time is winter. The lover is supposed to be on his voyage home and detained on the coast of Epirus, whither he had been driven by the southerly winds which prevailed at that season. He is waiting for the spring to return home. There is great simplicity and beauty in this ode. Orelli reckons it among Horace’s best. Whether it is original or a free copy from the Greek we cannot determine.
ARGUMENT.

Weep not, Asterie; Gyges is faithful and will return with the spring a rich man. He has been driven to Oricum and is weeping with impatience for thee. Chloë his hostess is trying to seduce him, and frightens him with stories of rejected women's revenge. But he is deaf to her seductions. Beware in thy turn of Enipeus thy gallant neighbour. Shut thy doors and listen not to his songs.

Quid fleas, Asterie, quem tibi candidi
Primo restituent vere Favonii
Thyna merce beatum, Constantis juvenem fide,
Gygen? Ille Notis actus ad Oricum
Post insana Caprae sidera frigidas
Noctes non sine multis
Insomnis lacrimis agit.
Atqui sollicitae nuntius hospitae,
Suspirare Chloën et miseram tuis
Dicens ignibus uri,
Tentat mille vafer modis.
Ut Proetum mulier perfida credulum
Falsis impulerit criminius nimis
Casto Bellerophonti
Maturare necem, refert.

2. Favonii] See C. i. 4. 1. Favonius, according to Pliny (ii. 47), blew 'ab occasu aquinoctiali,' that is, due west. It would therefore be a favourable wind for a vessel coming down the Adriatic, and not very unfavourable for sailing up the west coast of Italy. It would be in her teeth as she tried to make the straits of Messina. But Horace's winds are not more studied than his places and persons. The lover is waiting till the weather changes and the winds are mild and favourable, and that is all Horace means. The Favonii are called 'candidi' as Notus and Iapyx are each called 'albus' (C. i. 7. 15; iii. 27. 19).

4. fide,] According to Aulus Gellius, who has devoted a chapter to the subject (ix. 14), the older forms of genitives of this declension were four, 'es,' 'ei,' 'i,' and 'e.' Most of the MSS. have 'fidei,' one of Bentley's 'fidi,' a few 'fide,' which is generally adopted now. "Munera laetitiamque dixit" is Heyne's reading of Aen. i. 636. But in Georg. i. 208 he reads 'die' for the genitive. See Heyne's and Wagner's observations on those passages. Thynus and Bithynus are used indiscriminately by Horace.

5. Oricum] This was a town in Epirus, situated at the top of the bay formed by the Acrocorianian promontory. See Aen. x. 136: 'Oricia terebintho.' The constellation of the great Alcmene rises at the beginning of October.

13. mulier perfida] Antea or Steno- baea. Smith's Dict. will give all particulars of the stories of Proetus and Peleus here referred to. Some writers make Astydamia, others Hippolyte, the wife of Acastus, who, out of revenge for her rejection of her, induced her husband to expose Peleus to destruction. Joseph's virtue has its parallels in Grecian fable. Juvenal refers to them, and adds,

"—— Mulier saevisissima tunc est Cum stimuli odio pudor admovet." (S. x. 328.)

On 'tentat' (v. 12) see note on C. iii. 4. 71. 'Ignibus' is used as Ovid uses it (Am. iii. 9. 56), "vixisti dum tuus ignis eram." We may understand C. i. 27. 16,

"Non erubesceindis adurit Ignibus", in the same way, i.e. the flame put for the Narrat paene datum Pelea Tartaro,
Magnessam Hippolyten dum fugit abstinenens;
Et peecare docentes
Fallax historias movet.
Frustra: nam scopulis surdior Icari
Voces audit adhuc integer.
At tibi
Ne vicinus Enipeus
Plus justo placet cave;
Quamvis non alius flectere equum sciens
Aequus conspicitur gramine Martio,
Nec quisquam citus aequus
Tusco denatat alveo.
Prima nocte domum claudet neque in vias
Sub cantu querulae despice tibiae,
Et te saepe vocanti Duram difficilis mane.

person who causes it. 'Impello' is used with the infinitive mood by Tacitus (Ann. xiii. 54 ; xiv. 60). The common construction is with 'ut,' as (Epp. ii. 2. 51)—
"— impuls audax
Ut versus facerem."

20. Fallax historias movet.] Most MSS. have 'monet.' Forcellini takes no notice of this use of 'movere,' and in this place he reads 'monet.' 'Mentionem movere' occurs in Livy; 'catus movere' in Virgil; 'carmen movere' in Ovid. 'Historias movere' is therefore a legitimate expression, and more forcible than 'mouere.' In Ovid (A. A. iii. 651) the common reading is 'Quid juvat ambas praeciptaque parva movere?' where Burmann has adopted 'movere,' after the editio princeps, the Aldine, and nine MSS., observing that the words are often confused. 'Monet' and 'mouere' are easily confounded. Bentley proposes 'pellax' for 'fallax' without authority. The word occurs only once, 'pellacis Ulixii' (Aen. ii. 90), where many MSS. have 'fallacis.' The reading 'pellacis,' quoted by Bentley from Georg. iv. 443, is satisfactorily shown by Wagner to be wrong. The word is admitted into the text of Lucretius (v. 1062) by Lachmann and other editors:—
"Nec poterat quemquam placidi pellacis ponti

Subdola pellicere in fraudem ridentibus undis." But, if that reading be correct, the word seems to have been irregularly coined from 'pellacic' for the occasion. It therefore has the sense of attraction, which in the above passage of Virgil has no place. The proper form of the adjective from 'pellacic' is 'pellax,' the crude form being 'pellic-' It is doubtful whether 'pellacia' any more than 'pellax' is a word belonging properly to the Latin language.

21. Frustra:] A complete and very comprehensive sentence. It occurs below (C. i. 13. 6). Some persons join the word on with the last line, which weakens its force.

25. Flectere equum] This was to wheel the horse round in a small circle:
"Sive fercis equi lactantia colla recurvas Exiguo flexos miror in orbe pedes," says Phaedra to Hippolytus (Heroid. iv. 79, sq.). Tacitus (Germ. vi.) says the German horses were not taught like the Roman 'variae gyros.'

28. denata] This word is used nowhere else. Compare C. i. 8. 3, sqq.; iii. 12. 7.

29. Neque in vias] This use of 'neque' for 'neve,' in connexion with the imperative mood, is not usually noticed in the grammars. It is confined to the poets.
CARMEN VIII.
A.U.C. 729 (?)

This ode was composed on the anniversary of Horace's accident with the tree (C. ii. 13), and is supposed by Franke (p. 158, sqq.) to have been written A.U.C. 729. His argument is very long, and rests chiefly on the allusions in the fifth and sixth stanzas. The Parthians were invaded that year by a Scythian army to restore Phraates (C. i. 26, Introduction). In that year Augustus brought to an end his expedition against the Cantabri (C. 4, Introduction), and during his absence he assumes that Maecenas was governor of the city, as he had been on former occasions (Tac. Ann. vi. 11). He places in that year the expedition of Lentulus against the tribes of the Danube (C. ii. 9. 23), here represented by the Dacian king Cotison. The only authority on that subject is Florus (iv. 12), who does not give any clue to the date. The whole argument appears to be full of doubt. Lentulus' was not the only expedition against the northern tribes. No mention is any where made of Maecenas being employed as here supposed on the occasion in question, nor does Horace say he was or even imply it: v. 17, "Mitte civiles super urbe curas," might have been written to any public or thoughtful man in Rome on such an occasion. The quarrels of the Parthians and the subjection of the Cantabri are the two points that have most weight, and from those I should be inclined to adopt Franke's date (rather than others that have been proposed), which fixes those of ii. 13; ii. 17, and furnishes an approximation to that of i. 20, as the introductions to those odes will show.

ARGUMENT.
Wondrest thou, learned friend, what this sacrifice means on the Kalends of March, and I a bachelor? On this day I was delivered from death, and it shall be a holiday. Come, Maecenas, a hundred cups of my oldest wine to the health of thy friend. Away with anxiety. The Dacian has fallen, the Mede is divided against himself, the Cantabrian is in chains and the Scythian has unstrung his bow. Be here the private gentleman; never mind the people; enjoy thyself and unbend.

Martiiis caelebs quid agam Kalendis,
Quid velint flores et acerra thuris Plena miraris, positusque carbo in Caespite vivo,
Docte sermones utriusque linguae?
Voveram dulces opulas et album
Libero caprum prope funeratus Arboris ictu.

1. Martiiis caelebs] The Matronalia or feast of married persons in honour of Juno Lucina, when husbands made presents to their wives, and offered prayers for the continuance of happiness in their married life, was celebrated on the 1st of March. See Ovid, Fast. iii. 229, sqq. Hence Juvenal (ix. 53) : "Munera foemineis tractas secreta Kalendis," i.e. the Kalends of March. See also Martial's epigram to Galla (v. 64) :—

"Scis certe, puto, vestra jam venire Saturnalia Marias Kalendas.
Tunc reddam tibi, Galla, quod dedisti."

5. Docte sermones utriusque linguae?] Cicero writes his treatise de Officiis for the benefit of his son Marcus, "ut par sit in utriusque orationis facultate," by which he means not only the Greek and Latin languages, but the knowledge of things as viewed through both a Greek and Roman medium. Martial, commending his friend Maevius, whose only fault was being a poet (a very great one he admits), compliments him, as

"Jucundus, probus, innocens, amicus, Lingua doctus utraque." (x. 76.)

The words therefore express a man well read in the literature of Greece and Rome. Such an one, say the commentators, would be more likely than another to notice the seeming anomaly of Horace, the bachelor, engaged in religious exercises on the day of the Matronalia. Elsewhere he addresses his patron as 'Maeenias docte' (Epp. i. 19. 1).

Bentley finding 'sermonis' in most of the MSS. and the old editions, and in Acron's commentary, and objecting to the two genitives 'sermonis' and linguae, proposes to read 'Cilni' for the latter word. But 'sermonis' may be supposed to stand for the accusative, as 'is' often does. Bentley thinks the person addressed ought to be named before the thirteenth verse; therefore he prefers, though he does not adopt, 'Cilni.' He has met with no followers in that suggestion, as far as I know.

7. Liberum capram prope funeratum] This last word is not found in any other writer earlier than Pliny. He and others after him use 'funerum' for 'to bury.' Horace here attributes to Liber the deliverance he had before attributed to Mercury, Faunus, and the Muses successively (see C. ii. 17. 28, n.).

10. dimovebit] See C. i. 1. 13, n. The majority of the MSS. here are in favour of 'di' as it happens. If it had been otherwise, it would have made no difference, for the MSS., as before observed, are unsafe guides in respect to these compounds. 'Dimovebit' is, I think, undoubtedly right.

11. Amphorae fumum] The 'amphorae' were kept in the apotheca in the upper part of the house, to which the smoke from the bath had access, as this was thought to hasten the ripening of the wine and to improve its flavour, just as Madeira wine is improved by being kept in a warm temperature. The amphora being lined with pitch or plaster, the smoke could not penetrate so as to affect the flavour of the wine by making it smoky. Horace does not mean that; and, though Tibullus speaks of smoky Falernian (ii. 1. 27), he only means the amphora:

"Nunc mihi fumosos veteris proferte Falernos Consulis, et Chio vincula solve cado."

Ovid applies it to the amphora (Fast. v. 517):

"Quaque puer quondam primis diffuderat annis Prodit fumoso condita vina cado."

But, if the amphora was badly corked or lined, the smoke would penetrate and spoil the wine: whence Martial abuses the funaria of Marseilles, and of Munna, a wine-merchant there, in particular (x. 36):

"Improba Massiliae quiviquid funaria cogunt,
Accipit aetatem quisquis ab igne cadus,
A te, Munna, venit: miseris tu mittis
amicis
Per freta, per longas toxica saeva vias:
Nec facili pretio, sed quo contenta Falerni
Testa sit aut cellis Setia cara suis.
Non venias quare tam longo tempore
Romam
Haec, puto, causa tibi est, ne tua vina bibiab."
Sume, Maecenas, cyathos amici
Sospitis centum et vigiles lucernas
Perfer in lucem; procul omnis esto Clamor et ira.

Mitte civiles super urbe curas:
Occidit Daci Cotisionis agmen,
Medus infestus sibi luctuosis
Dissidet armis,
Servit Hispanae vetus hostis orae
Cantaber sera domitus catena;
Jam Scythaes laxo meditantur arcu Cedere campis.

“—— cujus patriam titulumque senectus
Delevit multa veteris fulgine testae.”

13. amici Sospitis] This is a Greek construction, which occurs again in C. iii.
19, 9, 10. See Theoc. xiv. 18:

—— ἐδέξατε ἑαυτοῦ ἄρατον
ὡτίνος ἡθαν ἐκαστος ἐν μόνῳ ὡτίνος εἰπήν.

Horace’s request may amount to this, ‘pray that my life may be prolonged a hundred years;’ according to that of Ovid (Fast. iii.
531, sqq.):

“Sole tamen vinoque calent, annoque pre cantur
Quot sumunt cyathos, ad numerumque
bibunt.
Invenies illic qui Nestoris obibat annos,
Quo sit per calices facta Sibylla suos.”

14. vigiles lucernas Perfer] The preponderance of authority is in favour of ‘perfer.’ Orelli’s Zürich and some other MSS. have ‘profer.’ Forcellini, who gives no significahon of ‘perfero’ that would suit
this passage, quotes from Cicero (de Fin.
iii. 22. 76), “beatam vitam usque ad illum
a Cyro exstructum rogum protulisset,” which is precisely the same; but Orelli says ‘pertulisset’ is the proper reading, and so Ernesti has it, but says the other would do.
It is impossible to decide the question upon its merits, and the MSS. are not safe guides in such a matter. The abbreviations for ‘per’ and ‘pro’ are nearly the same, as observed by Mr. Long on Cic. Divin. in Q.
Caecil. c. 12. The objection taken to ‘profer’ is that ‘in lucem proferre’ means ‘to bring to light.’ But in this place there could be no confusion. In C. iii. 21. 23 we have ‘vivaeque producent lucernae,’ where ‘vivae’ corresponds to ‘vigiles’ here. Virgil uses ‘ferre’ uncompounded in Aen. ix.
338: ‘Aequasset nocti ludum in lucemquo tulisset.”

17. Mitte civiles] See Introduction respecting the historical allusions in this and the next stanza.

19. sibi] This word is so placed that it may depend on ‘infestus,’ ‘luctuosis,’ or ‘dissidet.’ I prefer the first. Bentley with little authority makes these adjectives change cases.

22. catena;] See above (C. ii. 13. 18, n.).

23. Scythaes] Franke supposes these to be the Scythians who had helped Phraates.
Orelli and Dillenbr. imagine them to be the Geloni and other trans-Danubian tribes.
I believe Horace meant no more than generally to say that the enemies of Rome were no longer disturbing her.

26. Parce privatus] This I take to mean no more than I have expressed in the Argument, not ‘cum sis privatus,’ as Orelli says, referring to Maecenas’ refusal to accept senatorial rank (C. i. 20. 5, n.). Bentley opposes ‘privatus’ to ‘populus,’ and explains ‘since you have no cause to be anxious about public affairs do not be too anxious about your own,’ and this may be the meaning. I am not certain of my own interpretation, but I feel sure Orelli’s is wrong.
In the next verse there is a contest in the editions and MSS. between ‘cape’ and ‘rape.’ Bentley defends the former because it is not usual to snatch a gift, but only to take it quietly. His arguments will not often bear being translated into English. Orelli’s MSS. all have ‘cape;’ but they strangely omit the conjunction at the end of the verse, transferring it to the preceding line, where it is not wanted; but there it appears in all the MSS. except one of Bentley’s, and all the editions till Laminbus’ second edition.
CARMINUM III. 9. 167

Neglegens ne qua populus laboret 25
Parce privatus nimium cavere:
Dona praesentis cape laetus horae et Linque severa.

CARMEN IX.

This is an elegant trifle ("an incomparable dialogue," Buttmann calls it), showing the process of reconciliation between two lovers, in which the desire for peace appears in the midst of pretended indifference, and mutual jealousy is made the means of re-union. The subject could hardly have been more delicately handled. Whether the treatment of it is original or not, it is impossible to say. It is just such a subject as one might expect to find among the erotic poetry of the Greeks. One of Buttmann's remarks with reference to this ode is well worth quoting. "The ancients had the skill to construct such poems, so that each speech tells us by whom it is spoken; but we let the editors treat us all our lives as schoolboys, and interline such dialogues after the fashion of our plays with the names. To their sedulity we are indebted for the alternation of the lyrical name Lydia with the name Horatius in this exquisite work of art; and yet, even in an English poem, we should be offended at seeing Collins by the side of Phyllis." Such offence the officiousness of editors has already obtruded upon the readers of that poet; and the practice, which justly offends the good taste of this discerning scholar, had probably its origin among Horace's very earliest transcribers. The objection to the practice is, that, like other unauthorized interpretations, it takes away from the artistic character of Horace's poems, and substitutes for it a supposititious reality at variance with the passionless tone of the works. As works of skill they are very elegant: as works of feeling they must always rank low.

ARGUMENT.

While thou didst love me better than all the world, no prince was happy as I.
While Lydia was dearest to thee of women, the name of Ilia was not so noble as mine.
Chloé the sweet singer is my queen: for her I would gladly die.
Calais loves me and I love him: for him I would gladly die.
What if the old love were to unite us again, if Chloé were cast off and turned from my door, and I opened it to Lydia again?
Though Calais is handsome, and thou art fickle and passionate as the stormy sea, I would live and die with thee.

DONEC gratus eram tibi
Nec quisquam potior brachia candidae
Cervici juvenis dabat,
Persarum vigui rege beatior.
Donec non alia magis
Arsisti neque erat Lydia post Chloën,
Multi Lydia nominis
Romana vigui clarior Ilia.
Me nunc Thressa Chloë regit
Dulces docta modos et citharae scienis,
Pro qua non metuam mori
Si parcent animae fata superstiti.
Me torret face mutua
Thurini Calaïs filius Ornyti,
Pro quo bis patiar mori
Si parcent puero fata superstiti.
Quid si prisca redit Venus
Diductosque jugo cogit aëneo,
Si flava executur Chloë
Rejectaeque patet janua Lydiae?
Quamquam sidere pulchrior
ILLE est, tu levior cortice et improbo
Iracundior Hadria,
Tecum vivere amem, tecum obeam libens.

5. alia] Some MSS. have 'aliam,' which Bentley adopts, thinking it more likely the copyists would have omitted the 'm' in consequence of the same letter coming immediately afterwards, than that they should have inserted it. Orelli thinks just the reverse. Either construction is correct (see C. ii. 4. 7, u.). On "multi nominis," see C. i. 36. 13.

12. Si parcent animae] Cic. ad Fam. (xiv. 14): "Vos meae carissimae animae quam sapissime ad me scribite." Since 'metuam' here and 'patiar' below (v. 15) are the present subjunctive, 'parcent,' following those words, should, in strict Latinity, be 'parcant.' But the same construction occurs above (C. iii. 3. 7):—

"Si fractus illabatur orbis, Impavidum ferient ruinae,"

where, however, some MSS. have 'illabatur.' Why Chloë should be a Thracian, and Ornytus a Sybarite (Thurium was formerly Sybaris) is not worth questioning. The reading Cressa is properly rejected as harsh, and Ornithi, which could only be derived from ὃρνιθος, of which the penult is long. Both seem to have got into the Scholiasts' text only through the error of transcribers. "Cressa, Thracia," is Acron's note in Ascensius' text.

17. prisca] Forcellini gives other instances of this use of 'priscus,' where 'pristinus' is more usual. 'Deductos,' the reading of the oldest Berne and one Leipzig MS. quoted by Jani, could only be taken with 'jugo,' and signify 'withdrawn from the yoke,' which might be admitted by a double construction of 'jugo' with 'deductos' and 'cogit.' I have given the common reading, but the other hardly deserves Orelli's strong condemnation.

19. executur] Bentley understands 'janna' from the next line, following Acron, who says, "Excititur: pro expellitur." Orelli says it is a metaphor taken from a horse that throws its rider. The English "cast off" expresses the meaning best. On the meaning of 'improbus' as a word expressing 'excess,' see below (C. iii. 24. 62).
CARMEN X.

This is supposed to be sung by a lover under the window of his mistress, who on a cold night refuses him admission. It is what the Greeks called _παρακλαυσθένον_, such as that supposed one of which a fragment is given in C. i. 25. This species of serenade was so common among the Greeks, that we may suppose Horace had some poem of the sort in his mind when he wrote this. The thirteenth ode of the fourth book is nominally connected with this; but as there is no necessity for supposing, nor any likelihood, that Horace wrote this from his own experience, so neither is it likely that he wrote that to taunt in her decline the girl who is supposed to reject his addresses here. There is something ludicrous in Janis's distress at the virulence with which Horace could find it in his heart to attack a woman he had once been so fond of.

ARGUMENT.

Were Scythia thy dwelling-place, Lyce, this inclement night should move thee to pity me. Hear how the wind howls: see how the snow lies freezing. Venus loves not pride: the rope may break and the wheel run back; though nothing bends thee, neither presents, nor prayers, nor these wan cheeks of mine, nor thy husband's faithlessness, though thou be hard as the oak and cruel as the serpent, yet as a goddess have pity! Flesh and blood will not stand this for ever.

Extremum Tanain si biberes, Lyce,
Saevo nupta viro, me tamen asperas
Porrectum ante fores objicere incolis Plorares Aquilonibus.
Audis quo strepitu janua, quo nemus
Inter pulchra satum tecta remugi at Ventis, et positas ut glaciet nives Puro numine Juppiter?

1. _Tanain si biberes._] This is the way of speaking adopted in C. ii. 20, 20, and iv. 15. 21. For 'porrectum,' Bentley reads 'projectum' here and in two other places (Epod. x. 22. Sat. ii. 3. 112), with no authority, but relying, as he always does, on the use of the word by other writers. 'Incolis Aquilonibus' are the north winds that have their home in Scythia.

5. _nemus._] Small trees were sometimes planted round the impluvium of a Roman house. 'Remugiatis ventis,' 'echoes back to the woods their howling.' Orelli, who takes 'ventis' to be the ablative case, quotes from Virgil 'gemitu nemus omnem remugit' (Aen. xii. 722). But even if 'gemitu' is the ablative, and not the dative (as it may be), in that place, we have one ablative in this passage already, 'streptius.' Bentley changes 'ventis' into 'sentis' without authority. It is easy to supply 'vides,' or 'sentis,' or any other word more appropriate than 'audis.' One verb of sense is often made to serve for two or three. But Horace says elsewhere 'incinare meridiem sentis' (iii. 28. 5); therefore, says Bentley, 'sentis' is the true reading here, than which reasoning nothing can be less convincing. For those who will not admit 'sentis' for 'ventis,' Bentley suggests 'en' for 'et,' and 'audi' for 'audis.' For 'satum,' which is the true reading of the Berne, Zürich, Blandinián, and other old MSS., others have 'situm;' and such was Porphyrión's reading, and the common one, till Bentley edited 'satum' after Cruquius' Scholiast. Bentley substi-
Ingratam Veneri pone superbiam,
Ne currente retro funis eat rota.
Non te Penelope difficilem procis
Tyrhenus genuit pares.
O quamvis neque te munera nec preces
Nec tintus viola pallor amantium
Nec vir Pieria pellice saucius
Curvat, supplicibus tuis
Parcas, nec rigida mollior aesculo
Nec Mauris animum mitior anguibus.
Non hoc semper erit liminis aut aquae
Caelestis patiens latus.

tutes 'duro' for 'puro,' which latter is an epithet well suited to a clear frosty night.
Again, 'limine' is said by Lambinus to have existed in some of his MSS. Turnebus once adopted, but afterwards discarded it.
Scaliger defends it (Ausi. Lect. p. 64), but Bentley says it arose out of another various reading 'limine' (Canter, Nov. Lect. iv. 2), from which he draws fresh support for his reading 'duro,' quoting Ovid (Rem. Am.
508), "Neclatus in duro limine pone tuum."

He might have added (Epod. xi. 22), "Limina dura quibus lumbos et infregi latus."

Aristotle (Probl. xxv. 18) answers the question, why it is colder in clear weather than in cloudy, in a way of his own: διὰ τὴν aιθριακῆς αἰθριακῆς αἰθριακῆς αἰθριακῆς, κ.τ.λ.

10. Ne currente retro funis eat rota,]
'Let the wheel turn back and the rope with it,' is Orelli's interpretation, applying 'retro' to both 'currente' and 'eat.' The metaphor in that case is taken from a rope wound round a cylinder, which being allowed to run back, the rope runs down and the weight or thing attached goes with it. The application of the proverb to a coquette who continues her pride till she loses her power is obvious.
The passage has caused a great deal of dif-culty, and no two interpreters are entirely agreed as to the meaning of the words. I see no objection to Orelli's interpretation, and think it the best of those I have seen Turnebus takes 'funis' for 'funalis equus,' and 'rota' for the chariot-wheel; and he understands the words to mean, 'lest the rope-horse should start back while the coach is going on, and so you be thrown out and killed.' He quotes Ausonius (Epitaph. Her. xxxv.):—

"Pegasus hic dexter currat tibi; laevus Arion
Funus; et ad quartum det tibi Castor equum."

But the proper reading there seems to be 'funalis; quartum;' and 'funis' will hardly bear this meaning. The 'funalis equus' was one of those which were not under the yoke, but attached by traces, either as leaders or by the side of the yoke-horses.

15. Pieria pellice] A Macedonian strumpet, just as Chloë in the last ode was a Thracian, and on the same principle. Nearly all Horace's women of this character are represented as Greeks. 'Curvat' is no where else used in this sense.

19. aquae Caelestis] He repeats the phrase (Ep. ii. 1. 136), "Caelestes implorat aquas." There is some intentional bathos in this threat of the despairing lover to the mistress he had just addressed as a goddess.
The common inscription Ad Mercurium, adopted by Bentley and others, is plainly wrong, and calculated to mislead. The inscription should be Ad Testudinem, if anything; for Mercury disappears after the first two verses. The miracles alluded to, except Amphion's, were those of Orpheus, and of the lyre in his hands not Mercury's, which Orelli not perceiving contradicts himself. The ode is of the same class as the two last. We have no means of tracing the original of it if it is a copy, and there is no clue to the date.

ARGUMENT.

Mercury, who didst teach Amphion to move stones, and thou, lyre, once dumb now welcome at feast and festival, tune me a strain to which even Lyde, though she be free as the young colt, must attend. Thou charnest tigers, woods, streams, and hell's bloody sentinel, and Ixion, and Tityus, and the daughters of Danaë. Let Lyde hear of their crime and punishment, and how one was merciful and spared her young husband's life, saying, "Rise up; begone, lest the sleep of death overtake thee. They have sprung upon their prey. My heart is not as their heart. I will do thee no harm. Let my father do with me as he will, yet go thou while night and love protect thee. Farewell, and when I am gone engrave a word of sorrow on my tomb."

Mercuri,—nam te docilis magistro
Movit Amphion lapides canendo,— Tuque testudo resonare septem
Callida nervis,
Nec loquax olim neque grata, nunc et Divitum mensis et amica templis,
Dic modos Lyde quibus obstinatas
Applicet aures,
Quae velut latis equa trima campis
Ludit exsultim metuitque tangi,
Nuptiarum expers et adhuc protervo
Cruda marito.
Tu potes tigres comitesque silvas
Ducere et rivos celeres morari;
Cessit immanis tibi blandienti
Janitor aulae

10. exsultim] This word is not found elsewhere. The words ἁπαξ λεγόμενα in Horace will be found to be "allaborare," "tentator," "exsultim," "inaudax," "immetata," "faustitas," "bellonus," "applorans," "inemori," "prodocere," "emetere," "laeve," "insolabiliter," "defingere," "vepallidus." The index will enable the reader to find their places. It does not follow because we have no other examples of these words that Horace had none.
Cerberus, quamvis furiale centum Muniant angues caput ejus atque
Spiritus teter saniesque manet Ore trilingui.
Quin et Ixion Tityosque volu
tRisit invito, stetit urna paullum
Sicca dum grato Danai puellas Carmine mulces.
Audiat Lyde scelus atque notas
Virginum poenas et inane lymphae
Dolium fundo perceuntis imo,
Seraque fata
Quae manent culpas etiam sub Orco.
Impiae,—nam quid potuere majus?—
Impiae sponsos potuere duro Perdere ferro!
Una de multis face nuptiali
Digna perjurum fuit in parentem
Splendide mendax et in omne virgo
Nobilis aevum,
Surge, quae dixit juveni marito,
Surge, ne longus tibi somnus unde
Non times detur; socerum et scelestas
Falle sorores,

17. Cerberus, quamvis] A number of German scholars (Orelli names ten, among whom is Buttman) have rejected this stanza as spurious, the description being considered tame, and the second verse in particular unworthy of Horace. This way of arguing overthrows all authority, and makes genuineness a matter of taste and opinion. Allow that the stanza is none of the best. I do not think the ode itself equal to many others. Certainly more than one verse is prolix and feeble, judged by Horace's usual standard, and the length of the ode on such a subject seems to me a defect, though the scene at the end is pleasing. But others may think differently, and if all thought alike the ode would still be Horace's. Bentley would mend 'ejus atque,' which especially offends him, and is, as any one may see, not very harmonious or strong, by substituting 'ex-atque,' which some may think better and others worse; but there is no reason to suppose this reading had any existence till Bentley invented it; and, although

"—halitus exit Ore niger Stygio," occurs in Ovid (Met. iii. 75), 'spiritus exit' is only used to signify the breath taking leave of the body, which Bentley himself perceiving confesses he wishes Horace had written 'halitus' instead of 'spiritus.' Is this criticism? The passage may be compared with C. ii. 13, 33, sqq. Against those who object to 'ejus' is aptly quoted a still less poetical line of Virgil's, the authenticity of which no one doubts any more than its inelegance:—

"Quis mihi reddat eum vel co me solvat amantem." (Aen. iv. 479.)

See note on C. iii. 2, 32.

31. potuere] This would be expressed by ἐκάλησεν in Greek. In a more familiar passage 'possum' occurs with the same kind of meaning (Epp. i. 5. 1): 'Si potes Archaiscoal conviva recumbere lectis,' 'if you can make up your mind.'
Quae velut nactae vitulos leaenae
Singulos eheu lacerant: ego illis
Mollior nec te feriam neque intra Clastra tenebo.
Me pater sacvis oneret catenis
Quod viro clemens misero peperci ;
Me vel extremos Numidarum in agros
Classe relget.
I pedes quo te rapiunt et aurae
Dum favet nox et Venus, i secundo
Omine et nostri memorem sepulcreo Scalpe querelam.

37. Surge, quae dixit. Ovid has borrowed all but the words of Horace in Hypermnestra's letter to Lynceus, one of the most touching of his poems,—

"Surge age, Belida, de tot modo fratibus
unus:
Nox tibi ni properas ista perennis erit."
(Her. xiv. 73, sq.)

43. nec—neque. Bentley says that Horace always varies these conjunctions when the metre will let him, not putting 'nec—nec,' or 'neque—neque,' if he can help it. Here he has good MSS. for and against his assertion. In the first line of the next ode, however, the MSS. are nearly all against him.

---

CARMINUM III. 12.

CARMEN XII.

This ode represents a girl lamenting to herself over a love she must not indulge. The majority of editions have supposed that the poet is himself addressing Neobule, and Lam- binus says, "haec odo est παραινετική σευ προρητική, id est ad suadendum et exhortandum," the meaning of which is not very clear. The way I understand the first stanza and its connexion with the second may be seen from the Argument. Some suppose that Neobule is contrasting her own condition with that of others. 'Miserable are the women who cannot indulge in love and wine; for thee, Neobule, it is otherwise.' I do not quarrel with that interpretation, but prefer the other. There is a fragment of Alcaeus (58 Bergk) that may have belonged to a poem which furnished the materials of this ode. Some have assumed it to be a free translation from Alcaeus' poem. There is nothing more to judge from than this fragment, which runs thus: ιμη δειλαν, ιμη παισαν κακοτάτων πειδήχοισαν, which line, as far as it goes, is in favour of the interpretation I have given.

ARGUMENT.

Poor women! we must not love, we must not drown care in wine, or a cruel guardian scolds us to death. Alas! Neobule, thou canst not spin nor work for love of Hebrus, so beautiful as he bathes in the waters of Tiber, a horseman like Bellerophon, unsurpassed in the combat and the race, in piercing the flying deer or catching the lurking boar.
Miserarum est neque amoris dare ludum neque dulci
Mala vino lavere, aut examinari metuentes
Patruae verbena linguae.
Tibi qualum Cythereae puer ales, tibi telas Operosaque Minervae studium aufert, Neobule, Liparai nitor Hobri,
Simul unctos Tiberinis humeros lavit in undis,
Eques ipso melior Bellerophonte, neque pugno
Neque segni pede victus;
Catus idem per apertum fugientes agitato
Grege cervos jaculari et celer alto latitantem
Fruticeto excipere aprum.

3. Patruae] Compare (Sat. ii. 3. 88)
"ne sis patruus mihi." On the form lavere,' see C. ii. 3. 18, n.

4. qualum] My wool-basket. This appears to be imitated from Sappho (619 Bergk), χρυσεία μάτερ, οὔτοι χύναμε κρίκην τον ιστον
πόθερ δαμίσσα παιδος βραδενάν ὑ'Oρο-διταν.
The name Neobule is found in one of Ar-chilochus' fragments (67 Bergk). Hebrus' birth-place is mentioned to give morer cality to the person. Lipara, it must be admitted, was an odd place to choose.

7. Simul] 'Soon as' is an early English equivalent for 'whenever,' and 'simul' bears that sense here. The last syllable of Bellerophonte is long as from the Greek.

11. alto] There is another reading 'arto' which Laminus and others adopt. It appears among other MSS. in the oldest Blandinian; but Cruiquius reads 'alto,' and so did his Scholiast and Acron. Dillembr.
prefers 'arto' because it is opposed to apertum,' but so is 'alto.' Either would do; 'arto' would correspond to Homer's

ον οχυρονα τυκινι κρίηετο μίγας σίν.
( Odyssey. xviii. 439.)

CARMEN XIII.

The situation and title of the fountain, the name of which is used in this ode, is sufciently proved by a bull of Pope Pascal II., a.d. 1103, first brought to notice by Capmartin de Chaupry in his work on Horace's country-house (vol. iii. pp. 364, 538), and given more fully by Pea. There was a monastery dedicated to the Virgin at Bantia (C. iii. 4. 15), over which the bull appoints a certain abbot, and over "omnia quae ad illud (coenobium) pertinent—videlicet ecclesiam S. Salvatoris cum aliis ecclesiis de Castello Bandusii,—eccle-siam S. Anastasiae apud Acheruntiam cum ecclesias ad eam pertinentibus; ecclesiam SS. Martyrum Gervasii et Protasii in Bandusino fonte apud Venusiam." De Chaupry made a journey to the spot, which he was able satisfactorily to himself to recognize in a town called Palazzo, about six miles from the site of Venusia. Acron says that Bandusia was the district in which Horace's farm was situated, and some commentators following this statement have identified the 'fons Bandusiae' with the small river Digentia (Licenza) in the Sabine hills. This De Chaupry sufficiently disproves. Laminus adopts the Scholiast's statement as well as his way of spelling the name 'Blandusiae,' which the above-named document sufficiently proves to be wrong, though most editors have adopted it.
The ode is an address to a fountain, a common subject enough, and we need only suppose that the name was suggested to Horace by the recollections of his childhood, without imagining him really on the point of offering sacrifice, or being in the neighbourhood of his birth-place when he wrote. It has something of the nature of an epigramma or inscription, and is among the choicest of Horace's small pieces.

ARGUMENT.

Fair fountain of Bandusia, thou art worthy of my libation and of the kid that shall fall for thee to-morrow and dye thy cold stream with his blood. Thee the summer's heat pierceth not; cool is thy water to the flocks and herds. Thou too shalt be placed among the fountains of fame when I sing of the oak that hangs from the rock whence thy babbling waters spring.

O fons Bandusiae, splendidior vitro,
Dulci digne mero non sine floribus,
Cras donaberis haedo
Cui frons turgida cornibus
Primis et venerem et proelia destinat;
Frustra: nam gelidos inficiet tibi
Rubro sanguine rivos
Lascivi suboles gregis.
Te flagrantis atrox hora Caniculae
Nescit tangere, tu frigus amabile
Fessis vomere tauris
Praebes et pecori vago.
Fies nobilium tu quoque fontium,
Me dicente cavis impositam ilicem
Saxis, unde loquaces
Lymphae desiliunt tuae.

1. splendidior vitro,'] On the use of glass by the ancients, which was long a matter of dispute, but is now generally allowed to have been brought by them to great perfection, see Smith's Dict. Ant., art. 'Vitrum.'

6. Frustra:] See above (C. iii. 7. 21, n.).

8. atrox hora Caniculae '] From its diminutive form Canicula is taken by some for the constellation Canis Minor, known by the Romans as Antecanis, and by the Greeks as Πρωκυφων, because its rising precedes that of the Canis Major by a few days (in July). See C. iii. 29. 18. But Canicula is another name for the well-known star of the first magnitude in the head of Canis Major, called by the Greeks Σείρως. See Pliny (N. H. ii. 47), "Ardentissimo aestatis tempore exoritur Caniculae sidus, Sole primam partem Leonis ingredientem."
HORATII FLACCI

CARMEN XIV.
A. U. C. 729 or 730.

This ode has been animadverted upon pretty severely, and even rejected as spurious, because unequal to the occasion it was written for. It may not be one of Horace's best. But it was evidently only a private affair. It was composed at the close of the Cantabrian war, A. U. C. 729, when Augustus' return was expected, or on his return the following year. He was detained by illness at Tarracena. Franke gives, from Norisius, a fragment of an inscription which makes it appear probable that Augustus recovered his health and returned in the summer of 730, in which year C. Norbanus Flaccus was consul:

NORBANO FLAC. COS.
EID. JVIN (ID. JUN).

ARGUMENT.

Caesar is returning a conqueror from Spain, O ye people, he who but just went forth like Hercules to the field. Let his chaste wife and sister go forth to offer sacrifice with the matrons, while the young soldiers and their brides stand reverently by. I too will keep holiday; for I am safe while Augustus is lord of the world. Bring flowers, boy, and ointment, and my best old wine, and go bid Neaera come; if the churlish porter refuse thee, come away; I have no mind for strife, though I might not have borne as much in the heyday of my youth.

Herculis ritu modo dictus, o plebs,
Morte venalem petiisse laurum
Caesar Hispana repetit penates
Victor ab ora.

Unico gaudens mulier marito
Prodeat justis operata sacris,
Et soror clari ducis et decorae
Supplice vitta

1. o plebs,] 'Plebs' and 'populus' are used synonymously (C. i. 2. 18, sq.), and either word stands for the common formula 'populus plebisque Romana,' as, among other places, Cic. in Verr. ii. 5. 14: "Mihi Floram matrem populo plebique Romanae ludorum celebritate placandam." Nothing can be in worse taste than the idea of Klotz (Lect. Ven. p. 317), followed by Gesner, Jani, Tate, that Horace meant to oppose the plebeians, who were anxious when they heard of Augustus' illness, to the patricians who were delighted.

2. Morte venalem] This is an expression like that of Aeschines (c. Ctes. 77. 26, Reiske), αἰματος ἱστιν ἡ ἀρετή ὁμια. I see no objection, as Orelli does, to extending the example of Hercules to both clauses. As Hercules braved death, so did Augustus, and like Hercules he is returning from Spain victorious.

5. Unico gaudens] Livia was never suspected of infidelity to her husband, though she has been suspected, probably without just reason, of hastening his death. But that which appears to have been the first cause of dissension between her and Augustus, the succession of Tiberius, was not yet thought of. Horace therefore need not be accused of bad taste or gross flattery for what he here says. Dillenbr. interprets 'unico' 'amato, caro,' and the same in "Satis beatus
CARMINUM III. 14.

Virginum matresjuvenumque nuper Sospitum. Vos, o pueri et puellae Jam virum expertae, male ominatis Parcite verbis.
Hic dies vere mihi festus atras Eximet curas; ego nec tumultum Nec mori per vim metuam tenente Caesare terras.

unicis Sabinis’ (C. ii. 18. 14), as if ‘unicus’ had the force of ἁγανηρὸς, as that has of ‘unicus,’ ἁγανηρὸς enim præter quem alius non datur, ut eum philosophorum præcepse oculum monocoli ἁγανηρὸν dixit” (Heinsius, Exercit. Sacr. in Marc. i. 11). I do not agree with Dillenbr. Plautus (Cnptiv. i. 2. 47) says, “Tibi enim unicum, mihi etiam unico magis unicus”; and Catullus (73. 9), “Quam modo qui me unum atque unicum amicum habuit.”

6. justis operata sacrās.] The MSS. vary between ‘sacris’ and ‘divis.’ The latter is the reading followed by all the Scholiasts, and nearly all the editors till Bentley. It seems to have been that of Cruquius’ oldest Blandinian MS. and of Orelli’s Zürich, and others of weight, while the Berne and many others have ‘sacris,’ which Bentley defends. Dillenbr. supports the Scholiasts and reads ‘divis,’ thinking that ‘sacris’ is more likely to have crept in from a gloss than ‘divis.’ It is hard to say which is right. I have followed Orelli. For other examples of ‘operor’ in this sense see Forcellini. Ladies of birth appear to have been distinguished on these occasions from freedwomen by a wreath, which explains that of Tibullus (i. 6. 67),—

“Sit modo casta doce, quamvis non vita ligatos
Impediat crines nec stola longa pedes.”

The persons forming the procession are supposed to be the wife and sister of Augustus, and the mothers of the soldiers who had returned and of their young wives, who are represented as looking on reverentially at the thanksgiving sacrifice.

9. juvenum] This and ‘pueri’ both mean the soldiers, as ‘virginum’ and ‘puellae’ both mean their wives. Cunningham conjectures and Fea adopts ‘expertes’ for ‘expertae’ in order to distinguish between ‘puellae’ and ‘virginum.’ Dillenbr., comparing the other passages in which ‘pueri’ and ‘puellae’ come together (C. iii. 1. 4; iv. 1. 25. S. i. 1. 82; ii. 3. 130), thinks the words are a formula for all the youth of Rome, and that ‘virum expertae’ means that they had experienced the virtues of Augustus. What he says of ‘pueri’ and ‘puellae’ will not be found true; and his way of accounting for Horace having written ‘expertae,’ whereas the masculine would be required for his interpretation, will not satisfy many, neither is it very intelligible. ‘Virum expertae’ is clearly equivalent to ‘nuper virgines nuptae’ (C. ii. 8. 22).

‘Maior ominatis’ may be pronounced as one word, as ‘maleolens,’ ‘suaveolens,’ &c. ‘Nominatis,’ which Landinus and many since him have adopted, is a mere correction. Bentley proposes ‘inominatis.’ All the Scholiasts have ‘omnatis,’ and the oldest of the Blandinian MSS. had the same.

14. eximet] Orelli’s B has ‘exiget,’ but all his other MSS. have ‘eximet,’ and I do not find the other reading quoted by Jani or Fea. In C. iv. 15. 18, the MSS. vary more, though the majority and best have ‘eximet’ there likewise. Orelli makes this distinction, that ‘exigere’ is more appropriate to express the violent expulsion of a good thing, as in the above passage; ‘eximet,’ which he has here, for the quiet removal of an evil: but he is almost inclined, out of deference to his MS. B, to contradict himself, and read ‘exiget’ here. ‘Eximet’ is a better word I think in this place, and ‘exiget’ in the other.

— tumultum Nec mori per vim] ‘Tumultus’ and ‘vis’ are well-distinguished terms. When some would have softened the terms of the decree of the senate against M. Antonius by substituting the word ‘tumultum’ for ‘bellum,’ Cicero told them they did not know the meaning of the words: “Potest enim esse bellum sine tumultu, tumultus esse sine bello non potest. Quid est enim tumultus nisi perturbation tanta ut major timor oriatur? unde etiam nomen ductum est tumultus. Itaque majores nostri tumultum Italicum, quod

X
I pete unguentum, puer, et coronas
Et cadum Marsi memorem duelli,
Spartacum si qua potuit vagantem Fallere testa.
Die et argutae properet Neaerae
Murrheum nodo cohibere crinem;
Si per invisum nodo janitorem
Fiet, abito.
Lenit albescens animos capillus
Litium et rixae cupidos protervae;
Non ego hoc ferrem calidus juventa Consul Planco.

erat domesticus; tumultum Gallicum quod
erat Italiae finitimus; praeterea nullum nominabant. Gravius autem tumultum esse quam bellum hinc intelligi licet quod bello vacationes valent tumultu non valent."
Again, Cicero says (in Verr. ii. 4. 23),
"Scuta si quando conquerantur a privatis
in bello ac tumultu, tamen homines invit:
dant, etsi ad salutem communem dari sentiant." Tumultus, therefore was a public affair, "a sudden rising or hostile demonstration," as Mr. Long says on the above passage. 'Vis,' 'violence,' was either 'publica' or 'privata,' and the distinction between the two will be found on referring to the article 'Vis' in Smith's Dict. Ant.
Horace, says he, is not afraid of losing his life by any popular insurrection and so forth, or by the hand of an assassin or private malice.

18. Marsi memorem duelli.] The Marsic or Social War continued from a.u.c. 663 to 665, and the Servile War, headed by Spartacus, from 681 to 683. Therefore the wine Horace wanted would have been sixty-five years old at least. There seems to have been something remarkable in the vintage of that period so as to make it proverbial;
for Juvenal, one hundred years afterwards, speaking of the selfish gentleman who keeps his best wine for his own drinking, says,—
"Ipsae capillato diffusus consule potat Calcitamque tenet bellis socialibus uvam."
(S. v. 30, sq.)
The 'cadus,' 'testa,' and 'amphora,' were all names for the same vessel.

22. Murrheum.] I know no way of settling the orthography of this word. 'Murr-heum' is Bentley's; 'Myrheum' that of Lamninus and others. Forcell. gives them all, and does not decide. 'Cohibere' is the reading of all the MSS. Bentley prefers his own conjecture 'cohibente.'

23. Consule Planco.] L. Munatius Plancus was consul with M. Aemilius Lepidus a.u.c. 712, at which time Horace was in his twenty-third year.—This use of the imperfect subjunctive is sufficiently common to have saved Dillenb. his forced interpretation, "non ego hoc ferrem si esset calidus juventa qua vigui Consul Planco."

CARMEN XV.

This ode combines with the lyric something of the spirit of the Epodes. It is impossible to say why Horace chose so often this same subject, but he always handles it very sharply. (See C. i. 25; iv. 13.) There are not wanting, of course, those who suppose he wrote under the influence of his own disappointments, and who find particular periods of his life suitable for the composition of each. This too has accordingly had different dates assigned it. But I need not trouble the reader with such discussions.
ARGUMENT.

Put a stop to thy intrigues; for thou art old and poor, a cloud among bright stars, ready to drop into thy grave. What becometh thy daughter becometh not thee, Chloris. She may go and besiege the young men’s doors: she is in love and cannot help it. But do thou go spin; music and flowers and wine are not for thee.

Uxor pauperis Ibyci,
Tandem nequitiae fige modum tuae
Famosisque laboribus:
Maturo propior desine funeri
Inter ludere virgines
Et stellis nebulam spargere candidis.
Non si quid Pholoën satis
Et te, Chlori, decet: filia rectius
Expugnat juvenum domos,
Pulso Thyias uti concita tympano.
III. cegit amor Nothi
Lascivae similem ludere caprace:
Te lanæ prope nobilem
Tonsae Luceriam, non citharæ decent,
Nec flos purpureus rosae
Nec poti vetulam faæce tenus cadi.

1. pauperis] He means to say a poor man’s wife should be thrifty and mind her work, especially if she be old. For ‘fige’ some MSS. have ‘pone,’ which Orelli says is a gloss.

6. Et stellis nebulam] An old woman in a company of girls would be like a cloud in a starry sky. On the elegy of Tibullus mentioned before (C. i. 33. 7.) Heyne has the following note, which Buttmann calls incomprehensible (unbegreiflich): “Pholoë inter claras ejus eotia puellas etiam ex Horatio nota est ubi, C. i. 33. 7, aspera puella Cyrum fastidit alium mollem puerum, et ii. 5. 17 est ea Pholoë fugax. Chloridis eam filiam fuisse idem Horatius colligere jubet nos, iii. 15. 7, 8.” The first of these Pholoës is a virtuous girl who would scorn the advances of a profligate like Cyrus. The second is a timid girl as her title ‘fugax’ shows. She is also coupled with a young Chloris, as handsome as herself. The Pholoë of this ode is the wanton daughter of a wanton old mother, Chloris by name. But Heyne and others confound all these persons. Such, as Buttmann has very well shown, are the inconsistencies of the matter-of-fact school of interpreters.

10. tympano.] There are two good woodcuts, one from a painting at Pompeii, the other from a fictile vase, representing the use of the tympanum in Smith’s Dict. Ant. (sub v.).

14. Luceriam.] This was a town of Apulia, now called Lucera, in the neighbourhood of which was one of the largest tracts of public pasture land.

16. vetulam] Many good MSS. have ‘vetula,’ and in support of that reading, which some editors have adopted, is quoted Catullus (xxvii. 1): “Minister vetuli, puer, Palerni.” But ‘vetula’ would be without force here. Porphyrian, however, read ‘vetula.’ The ‘m’ may have dropped out in the usual way from the omission of the mark over the ‘ā.’
CARMEN XVI.

Horace here dwells on his favourite theme,—contentment and moderation,—which he is able to illustrate by the example of Maecenas as well as his own. The ingenuity which has discovered the occasion that gave rise to this ode will hardly throw any new light on the meaning of it, which is very plain. Whether therefore Horace's friends had urged him to make more than he had done of his opportunities with Maecenas for the purpose of enriching himself or not may very well remain doubtful. I confess the idea would not have occurred to me. The French editors suppose it to be an ode of thanks to Maecenas for the gift of the farm, which it certainly is not; and one editor, J. F. Schmid, suspects Horace meant gently to hint to his patron that he should be glad of an extension of his liberality, a species of tippowia which it is to be hoped does not represent the principles of the person who suggests this notion. There is no clue to the date of the ode further than that it was written after Horace came into possession of his farm.

ARGUMENT.

A stout prison and savage watch-dogs might have kept Danaë from harm; but Jove and Venus smiled, for they knew that the god need but change himself to gold, and the way would be clear before him. Gold penetrates through guards; gold shall burst rocks; thereby fell the house of Amphìraus; thereby the Macedonian won cities; thereby stern admirals are ensnared. And as it grows the desire for more grows too. A high estate I dread. Maecenas, thou good knight, the more a man denies himself the more the gods will give him. I fly from the rich to the contented, and am more independent than any poor rich man in the world. My stream, and my little wood, and my trusty field, are a happier portion than all Africa. I have no honey of Calabria, nor wine of Formiae, nor Gaulish fleece, yet poverty doth not pinch me; and if I wanted more thou art ready to give it. My small income will go further by the restricting of my wants, than if I had all Lydia and Phrygia for my own. Who ask much lack much. It is well with him who has enough.

Inclusam Danaén turris aënea
Robustaque fores et vigilum canum
Tristes excubiae munierant satis
Nocturnis ab adulteris,
Si non Acrisium virginis abditae
Custodem pavidum Juppiter et Venus
Risissent, fore enim tutum iter et patens Converso in pretium deo.

1. Inclusam Danaén] The story of Danaé, Acrisius' daughter, is sufficiently well known. The fable of the shower of gold has here its simplest explanation. Compare the chorus of Soph. Antig. (944, sqq.):

εἴτε καὶ Δανάης ὀφράνυν φῶς ἀλλάζαι εἶμι ἐν χαλκοῦτοις ἀνδραῖς, κ.τ.λ.

'Tristes excubiae' is like Ovid's 'tristis custodia servi' (A. A. iii. 601). On the construction with 'munierant,' see C. ii. 17. 26, n.

6. Custodem pavidum] Acrisius shut up his daughter lest she should bear a son who should cause his death as the oracle had threatened. For 'risissent,' Bentley prefers 'risisset,' in accordance with his rule
Aurum per medios ire satellites
Et perrumpere amat saxa potentius
Ictu fulmineo: concidit auguris
Argivi domus ob lucrum
Demersa exitio; diffidit urbium
Portas vir Macedo et subruit aemulos
Rages muneribus; munera navium Saevos illaquent duces.

noticed in C. i. 24. 3. But the MSS. do not vary. 'Fore enim' is an elliptical form of the obliqua oratio, in translating which 'they said,' or 'they knew,' must be supplied. 'Pretium' has reference to the corruption of the guards, the price at which they were bought; and Francis, who renders 'transformed to gold,' gives too much weight to the authority of Dacier, who says "'pretium' est ictu un synonyme de l'or," and so translates it. Ovid applies the bribe to Danaë herself:

"Sed postquam sapiens in munera venit adulter Praebuit ipsa sinus et dare jussa dedit."

(Anm. iii. 8. 33.)

10. amat Used as φιλεί, like "consciare amant" (C. i. 3. 10), and "amet quavis adversgere" (S. I. 4. 87). 11. concidit auguris Argivi domus] The story is that of Amphiaraurus, who

Δλέτι ἐν Θήβαις γυναιῶν ἐνεκα δόρων,

(Odys. xx. 247.)

and of his wife Eriphyle—

ΰ χρυσὸν φιλοῦ ἀνδρὸς ἰδίεστο τρήμεντα.

(Odys. xi. 327.)

Eriphyle, bribed by her brother Polyneices, induced her husband to join the expedition against Thebes, where he fell, leaving an injunction with his sons to put their mother to death, which Alcmeon did, and like Orestes was pursued by the Erinyes of his mother, and was finally put to death in attempting to get possession of the gold necklace with which she had been bribed. 'Exitio,' and not 'excidio,' or 'excidio,' is no doubt the true reading, though Dacier says it is "'bien moins beau et moins poétique,'" while 'demersa excidio' 'est élégamment et fortement dit." Most persons will consider that 'excidio' with 'demersa' would be an incongruous expression. Acron reads 'exitio.' Landinus, Ascensius, and Crucius, among the editors I have seen, have the same. Lambinus thinks it is not to be despised, though he adopts 'excidio,' and Bentley adopts and defends 'exitio,' but in doing so writes as if he had the merit of restoring it from the MSS. against the judgment of the editors. There is a gap here in B. The Zürich has 'exitio,' and so had all the Blandinian.

14. Portas vir Macedo] Plutarch, in his life of Paulus Aemilius (c. xii.), says it was Philip's gold, not Philip, that won the cities of Greece. And Cicero (ad Att. i. 16) says, "Nunc est expectatio comitiorum: in qua omnibus invitis tradit noster Magnus Auli filium; atque in eo neque auctoritate neque gratia pugnat, sed quibus Philippi omnia expugnavisse dicebat in quae modo asselius onustus auro posse ascendere." Juvenal, following the general report, calls Philip "callidus empor Olynthi" (xii. 47), and Valerius Max. (vii. 2. 10), "mercator Graeciae."

15. munera navium Saevos illaquent duces.] This is supposed to refer to Menas, otherwise called Menodorus, the commander of Sex. Pompeius' fleet, who deserted from him to Augustus and back to Pompeius, and then to Augustus again. He was rewarded beyond his merits. He was a freedman of Cn. Pompeius, and Suetonius (Octav. 74) states that Augustus made him 'ingenuus:' "Valerius Messalla tradit neminem unquam libertorum adhibuit ab eo (Octaviano) coenae excepto Mena, sed adsero in ingenuis et post probitam Sex. Pompeii classem." And Appian, in his seventeenth book (quoted by Cassanbon on Suet. l. c.), says, Μητρόδωρον ἱλάθηναι ἰλεύθερον ἰδέες ἀπερήμων ἀντ' ἀνελευθηρόν. It should be observed, however, that a man could only be 'ingenuus' who was born free, and that all the emperor could do was to confer the rights of 'ingenuitas,' which was sometimes done (see art. 'Ingenuus,' Smith's Dict. Ant.). According to Servius, Virgil assigns him his reward (Aen. vi. 612, sqq.):

"—— Quive arma secuti
Impia nec veriti dominorum fallere dextras,
Inclusi poenam expectant."
Crescentem sequitur cura pecuniam
Majorumque fames. Jure perhorruit
Late conspicuum tollere verticem,
Maecenas, equitum deces.
Quanto quisque sibi plura negaverit,
Ab dis plura feret: nil cupientium
Nudus castra peto et transfuga divitum
Partes linquere gestio,
Contemptae dominus splendidior rei,
Quam si quidquid arat impiger Apulus
Occultare meis dicerer horreis,
Magnas inter opes inops.
Purae rivos aquae silvaque jugerum
Paucorum et segetis certa fides meae
Fulgentem imperio fertilis Africae Fallit sorte beatior.

quotes only one other instance of 'illaque' from Prudentius, and one of the passive participle from Cicero. 'Irretio,' as Orelli says, is the more common word of the same meaning.

18. Majorumque fames.] Bentley, after proposing to alter 'majorum' into 'majors,' or else 'pecuniam' into 'pecunias,' in order that both may be of the same number, comes to the right conclusion at last, that 'majorum' has no connexion with 'pecuniam,' but is of the neuter gender, as in Theocritus (xvi. 65), aitì òtì πλεγένων ἔχει(μόρος αὐτόν. With 'tollere verticem' compare C. i. 18. 15; and on 'equum deces' see C. i. 20. 5, n.

21. Quanto quisque sibi] This sentiment approaches as near as possible to the fundamental rule of Christian ethics. The accuracy of the picture in the next verses must not be insisted on too closely. It would imply that Horace, a wealthy Epicurean, had thrown up his riches in contempt, and gone over to the ranks of the Stoics, as Cicero says (ad Fam. ix. 20), "in Epicurum nos adversarii nostri castra con- jecimus." But, as Horace never was rich, he never could have acted the deserter on these terms, though he changed his opinions. As noticed before (C. ii. 6. Introduction), Horace may sometimes be supposed to put general maxims in the first person without strict application to himself. 'Nudus' signifies one who has left every thing he had behind him. 'Contemptae,' Bentley supposes to mean that for which he (Horace) had a contempt. He means that the rich man with fine houses had a contempt for his little property. 'Contentae' is the reading of a few MSS., and is either the origin or fruit of Acron's note, "compositae et mediocris." It is meant for 'straitened.'

26. arat impiger] To avoid the lengthening of the final syllable in 'arat,' some editions, supported by a few MSS. (pauci codices, ut e meis Alt. 1. Lips. 3.—JAN) have 'non piger.' But the licence may be admitted in the caesural place, and nearly the whole weight of MS. authority is in favour of 'impiger.' 'Occultare,' 'to hoard,' which was commonly done to raise the price. 'Mei' is emphatic, as 'proprio horreo' (1. 1. 9).

29. Purae rivos aquae] The small river Digentia is that which Horace alludes to. On 'certa fides' see C. iii. 1. 30, n. 'Fallit beatior' is a Greek construction, λανθάνει ὑπέκεφεν ὅν. Propertius has the same (i. 4. 15):—

"Quo magis et nostris contendis solve res amores Hoc magis adducta fallit eterque fide."

'The more you try to loosen our affection, the more we each of us, imperceptibly to you, interchange the assurance of fidelity.' Lucan also (vi. 64. 63) has the same construction twice:—

"Prima quidem surgens operum structura, fesellit

CARMINUM III. 16.

Quamquam nec Calabrae mella ferunt apes
Nec Laestrygonia Bacchus in amphora
Languescit mihi nec pinguia Gallicis
Crescunt vellera paseuis,
Importuna tamen pauperies abest,
Nec si plural velim tu dare deneges.
Contracto melius parva cupidine
Vectigalia porrígam,
Quam si Mygdonis regnum Alyathei
Campis continuum. Multa petentibus
Desunt multa: bene est cui deus obtulit
Parca quod satis est manu.

Pompeium, veluti—
Unda Caledonios fallit turbata Britannos."

Horace says, as I understand him, 'Mine is a happier lot than his who has all Africa for his possession, though he knows not that it is so.' The construction is like "sensit medios delapesus in hostes" (Aen. ii. 377). I do not agree with Orelli that 'sorte' means 'capital.' I do not see how that meaning can be applied here. Bentley interprets 'imperio' and 'sorte' with reference to the proconsul; 'fulgentem' he changes to 'fulgente,' and at 'fallit' understands 'homines.' Porphyrian interprets 'fulgentem,' &c., rightly: 'Quia sibi clarus videtur quis latissimas multasque habet in Africa possessiones.'

33. Calabrae—apes] See C. ii. 6, 14, n. 'Laestrygonia amphora (used like 'Sabina diota,' which was the same sort of vessel, C. i. 9, 7), 'an amphora of Formian wine.' The inhabitants of Formiae supposed it to be the same as the Laestrygion mentioned by Homer (Odys. x. 81),— iβδομαγη δ' ικύμεθα Λάμυν ειπε ποτιλιθεόν, τηλεπολον Λαεστρυγονιν.

See Introduction to the next ode. Ovid (Met. xiv. 233):—

"Inde Lami veterem Laestrygonis, inquit, in urbem Venimus."

The Scholar on Lycephon (Cassandra, v. 956) says, Λαεστρυγονίς ού νῦν Λεωντίνων, and Acron in his note raises a doubt whether 'Laestrygonia amphora' is 'Formiana an Sicula;' but Pliny (N. H. iii. 5) writes, "Oppidum Formiae, Homiae dictum, ut existimavere antiqua Laestrygonum urbs." And Cicero, writing to Atticus (ii. 13), says, "Si vero in hanc τηλεπολον veneris Λαιβυργονιν quem fremitus hominum! quam

irati animif quanto in odio nostro amicus

Magnus!' 'Languescere' means 'to lose its strength by keeping.' The Formian wine is mentioned C. i. 20. 11. The pasture-lands in the basin of the Po (Gallicia pascua) were very extensive and rich.

33. Nec si plural velim] Compare Epod. i. 31: "Satis superque me benignitas tua Ditavit." In what follows he says, "I shall make my small means go farther by keeping my desires within bounds, than if I were to join Lydia with Phrygia (and call them mine)." There was a Mygdonia in Mesopotamia, and Bithynia is said to have been called by that name of old. The Mygdonia of Asia Minor (part of Macedonia was also so called) was not very clearly defined, as Strabo says (I. 12). That Horace identifies it with Phrygia appears from C. ii. 12, 22, "Aut pinguis Phrygiae Mygdonias opes," Claudian (in Eutrop. ii. 1) speaks of the ruins of Troy as "Mygdonii cineres," "Alyattoi" is the genitive of 'Alyatteus,' another form of 'Alyattes' (king of Lydia), as Achilles -ei of Achilles, Ulyxeus -ei of Ulyxes. Bentley has the merit of establishing this reading, to which Tan, Faber made an approximation in 'Alyattii,' seeing that 'Halyatti,' the reading of all former editions, had no meaning, though the editors supposed it to mean Croesus, the son of Alyattes. I do not find from the editors that there is any various reading 'Alyattei,' but that is now generally adopted.

42. Multa petentibus] The same sentiment in different words appears below (C. iii. 24. 63):—

"Crescunt divitiae, tamen

Curtae nescio quid semper abest rei."

'Bene est' occurs again in Epp. i. 1. 89:—

"Jurat bene solis esse maritis."
CARMEN XVII.

The short ode, C. i. 26, and this ode were addressed to the same person, L. Aelius Lamia (see Introduction to C. i. 26). The language of the former ode has led to the inference that Lamia was a young man of desponding disposition, and this that he was proud and vain-glorious,—a sort of criticism impertinent and unreasonable as it seems to me. What is clear is no more than that Lamia was a young man of good birth, being of the Aelia gens, who were plebeians, but of old standing. Like other families the Lamiae were perhaps glad to trace their origin to a fabulous hero, and believed their founder to be Lamus, king of the Laestrygonians, and builder of Formiae, from whence they must have migrated to Rome (see last ode, v. 33, n.). Horace had evidently an affection for the young man Lamia, whose father was a friend of Cicero’s, and died rich. It is not improbable the ode was written at his house in the country, whether at Formiae (“quod valde probable,” says Jani, I don’t see why) or elsewhere. It has no particular merit, and could have cost Horace little labour. He must have written many such that have never been published, and these two odes were probably included in the collection out of compliment to Lamia. But there is not the least reason why Horace should be supposed not to have been the author of the ode; and though it might do very well, perhaps better, without the verses 2—5, which some editors would strike out (Jani says, “haud dubie spurii sunt,” and has a long excursus to prove it), but no MSS. omit, it is the very worst species of criticism that endeavours to bring, by corrections, omissions, and additions, the received text into conformity with some standard which is presumed to represent the mind and style of the author. If this system were not so common, especially among the commentators on Horace, old and new, it would seem superfluous to say a word about it. Lamia had a brother Quintus, who died early, to the great grief of Lucius (see Epp. i. 14. 6). There was one of this family, according to the Scholiasts Acron and Porphyrian, who wrote comedies; but there is no reason to suppose it was Horace’s friend. In two passages Juvenal alludes to the Lamine as a family of distinction (S. iv. 154) :

"Sed perit postquam cerdonibus esse timendus Coeperat; hoc nocuit Lamiarum caede madenti."

(vi. 384) :—

"Quaedam de numero Lamiarum ac nominis Appi Et farre et vino Janum Vestamque rogabant," where they are associated with the family of the Appii, though the reading of the MSS. varies, and ‘alti’ is now received. Tacitus (Ann. vi. 27), mentioning the death of this Lamia, says his ‘genus’ was ‘decorum.’

ARGUMENT.

Aelius, ennobled with the blood of Lamus (for like all the Lamias thou derivest thy birth from him who founded Formiae and ruled on the banks of the Liris), a storm is coming, get in the wood while it is dry: to-morrow the servants shall have holiday, and thou wilt do sacrifice to thy genius.

AELI vetusto nobilis ab Lamo, (Quando et priores hinc Lamias ferunt
Denominatos et nepotum
Per memores genus omne fastos,

4. memores—fastos.] These were the Consulares, as Acron says, in which only family records and genealogies, not the Fasti this Lamia would appear, and that after
CARMINUM III. 17.

Auctore ab illo ducis originem
Qui Formiarum moenia dicitur
Princeps et innantem Maricae
Litoribus tenuisse Lirim Late tyrannus) cras foliis nemus
Multis et alga litus inutili
Demissa tempestas ab Euro
Sternet, aquae nisi fallit augur

Horace wrote. He was consul A.D. 3 (Clinton, F. H.). Orelli adopts the form 'fastos' in preference to 'fastus,' as being, he says, more ancient. 'Fastibus' occurs in Lucan (x. 187); and Priscian (vi. 14) says, that both forms have been found by him in this passage of Horace. The words occur again in C. iv. 14: 4: "Per titulos memoresque fastos."

5. ducit This is the reading of all the MSS. Heinsius proposed to read 'ducit,' to be governed by 'genus,' and Bentley warmly supports that reading. But there is no necessity to desert the MSS. What Horace says is nearly as follows, 'Since, as it is reported, your early ancestors declared they were descended from Lamus, and the same tradition has come down through their successors in the annals of the family, no doubt you draw your origin from that distinguished source,' in which there is nothing more than a little jocular irony, which would amuse Lamia, whether it pleased his family pride or not. That the pronoun 'tu' ought to appear in opposition to 'priors' is no argument against 'ducit.' The poets, both Latin and Greek, often omit the personal pronoun, even when it is wanted for emphasis, as in C. i. 1. 35, "Quod si me lyricis vatisbus inseris," where Maecenas is emphatically addressed; and in C. iv. 2. 33, "Concines majore poeta plectro Caesarem," where Julius Antonius is opposed to Horace himself. 'Quando et' sufficiently makes the opposition here.

7. Maricae litoribus ] This means the shore of Minturnae on the borders of Latium and Campania, where the nymph Marica was worshipped (see Dict. Myth.).

12. aquae—augur] See below, C. iii. 27. 10, "Imbrium divina avis imminentum;" and Ovid (Am. ii. 6. 34), "pluviae graculus auctor aquae," where it appears Heinsius proposed to substitute 'augur' for 'auctor.'

13. Dum poies] Bentley, from three of his oldest MSS., introduced this reading for 'potes,' that of former editions. He says it is "sine dubio ab Horatii incude: unde enim bonis illis Libraris numnum tam rarae notae?" And he quotes Virgil (Aen. iii. 670):—

"Verum ubi nulla datur dextra adfectare potestas Nec potis Ionios fluctus sequare sequendo."

To Bentley's three MSS. Vanderburg has added a fourth, also of the tenth century, "et exstitit haud dubie in pluribus aliorum etiam cod. sed neglectum fuit," says Jani, because he likes a word "tam exquisitum et ruram." I have followed Orelli in adopting 'potis,' but the matter is doubtful.

14. cras Genium mero Curabiz] 'Genium curare' is δίσαξ λέγόμενον 'Placari' and 'indulgere' are the usual words. Mitsch says, that "any man of politeness will instinctively see that Horace means politely to offer himself as a guest at Lamia's table," on which Orelli says that such politeness is a matter "de qua vehementer dubitare licet." The commentators have with their usual accuracy done their best to determine whether Lamia was going really to offer sacrifice to his genius, or whether Horace only meant him to do so; and also whether 'curare' can have reference to a sacrifice, or whether it does not rather mean that Lamia was going to keep his birthday next day; to which again it is objected that this could not be, as blood was not shed in sacrifice on birthdays; of which statement another satisfactorily disposes (see C. iv. 11. 8, n.). I may venture to leave the reader to exercise his own judgment on the question.

16. operum solutis.] This construction, like "desine querelarum" (C. ii. 9. 17), and other expressions there quoted, is similar to the Greek, πόνοι λαυμένοις. On these constructions Prof. Key says (L.G. § 940, and note), "occasionally verbs of removal or separation have a genitive of the 'whence' in old writers and in poetry." "The legal language here, as in so many cases, retained
HORATII FLACCI

Annosa cornix. Dum potis aridum Compone lignum: eras Genium mero Curabis et poreo bimestri Cum famulis operum solutis.

traces of the old construction, as in 'liberare tutelae.'" So Cicero says (de Legg. ii. 20), "1s per aec et libram haeredem testamenti solvit." "Me omnium jam laborum levas" is a like construction quoted by Mr. Key from Plautus.

CARMEN XVIII.

It was usual to offer sacrifice to Faunus at the beginning of spring, though the Faunalia did not take place till the Nones of December. (See C. i. 4. 6 and i. 17.) This ode is very elegant, especially the picture of rustic security and cheerfulness in the last two stanzas. The confusion of the Greek Pan with the Latin god Faunus has been noticed before and is well known.

ARGUMENT.

Faunus, come with mercy to my fields and depart gentle to my young lambs, for I sacrifice and pour libations to thee at the fall of the year. When thy Nones come round the old altar smokes with incense; the flocks sport in safety, the oxen are at rest, and the village is gay; the wood sheds its leaves, and the clown smites his enemy, the earth, in the dance.

FAUNE, Nympharum fugientum amator,
Per meos fines et aprica rura
Lenis incedas abeasque parvis
Aequus alumnis,
Si tener pleno cadit haedus anno,
Larga nee desunt Veneris sodali
Vina craterae. Vetus ara multo Fumat odore,

3. incedas abeasque] Faunus was not a stationary divinity. He was supposed to come in the spring and depart after the celebration of his festival in December. From 'parvis alumnis' we may suppose this ode was written in spring. The word occurs below (C. iii. 23. 7).

5. Si tener pleno cadit haedus anno,] 'Si' is not hypothetical, and the true reading is 'cedit,' not 'cadet.'—I have not followed the usual punctuation of this passage, which makes 'fumat' depend upon 'si,' with a comma at 'craterae,' and a period at 'odore.' Horace claims the protection of Faunus for his lambs in the spring, on the ground of his due observance of the rites of December, which he then goes on to describe. 'Pleno anno' means at the end of the year, when the Faunalia took place (see Introduction). Horace here makes the wine-cup the companion of Venus, as he made 'Jocus' in C. i. 2. 34. See also C. i. 30. 5, sqq. He uses both forms, 'crater' and 'cratera.' 'Vetus ara' may be an old altar Horace found on his farm when he came into possession of it.

9. Ludit herboso] The festivities of December in Horace's pleasant valley would Ludit herboso pecus omne campo,
Cum tibi Nonae reudente Decembres;
Festus in pratis vacat otioso
Cum bove pagus;
Inter audaces lupus errat agnos;
Spargit agrestes tibi silva frondes;
Gaudet invisam pepulisse fossor
Ter pede terram.

He describes another which seems to correspond to the rustic dance in the text:

"Yet is there one of most delightful kind
A lofty jumping or a leaping round:
Where arm in arm two dancers are entwined
And whirl themselves with strict embraces bound,
And still their feet an anapaest do sound.
An anapaest is all their music's song
Whose first two feet are short and third is long."

These were the "courantoes" and "lavoltaes" of the Elizabethan age, in which our modern dancers may perhaps trace something of their art.—"Fosor" is put generally, I imagine, for a labouring husbandman, who may be supposed to have no love for the earth that he digs for another.

CARMEN XIX.

The impetuosity and liveliness of this ode are remarkable. It would be difficult to find in any language, I think, a poem more expressive of the freedom suited to the occasion for which it was composed,—a supper in honour of Murena's installation in the college of augurs. In regard to this person see C. ii. 2, and 10. Telephus is no doubt a fictitious name, though Acron calls him a Greek poet and a friend of Horace, being led to that information as is common with commentators, old and modern, only by the ode itself, to which undue reality is given. The name occurs in two other odes (i. 13 and iv. 11), and efforts have been made to prove the person to be the same in each case. In the first of these he is a "puer furens" with "cervix roses" and "cerea brachia," with whom Lydia is passionately in love. Here he is a bookworm given to antiquarian and historical researches, and in the fourth book he is still young enough to be a rival of the poet with Phyllis his last love. "Modern commentators have filled up the details of the (Scholiast's) picture. Telephus is made out to be a Greek youth of rank, is fond of antiquarian studies, and when he is once buried in them is hardly to be torn away from his books, with more of the same idle babble. Those good old scholars, Gerard Vossius and Fabricius, never dreamt of any thing of the sort, else they would not have failed to enrich their literary histories, in which they carefully stick in every name they can pick up, with that of this Telephus. But it looks rather ill that this well-bred learned Greek, who lived on such intimate terms with Horace, is never heard of in any other place. The best information about him may be gleaned from the other two odes. Telephus is a poetical name which Horace uses when it suits his purpose, as here, for instance, when he wanted such an one to give an air of individuality to an ode beginning with the humorous reproof, ‘You tell us a great deal about the race of Codrus and of Aeacus, and about the Trojan War, but as to how, where, and on what we are to dine to-day, you don’t say a word.’ This is Buttmann’s opinion, and I think any sensible man who reflects on the subject, without preconceptions of reality in his mind, will agree with him. At any rate a very slight groundwork of truth would be enough for the part that Telephus bears in this ode, and on such questions conjecture and time are thrown away. Of the date we can only say it was written before a.v.c. 732, for the reasons stated C. ii. 10. The season was winter (v. 8), and the day was the first of the month (probably of the year).

Dillenbr. supposes the ode to have arisen out of the following scene. On a cold dull winter evening Horace is sitting in a room with some friends. They are talking and drinking without much spirit, till at last the dulness of the conversation turning upon dry points of history, through the prosy pedantry of some one of the party, Horace can bear it no longer, and bursts out with the contemptuous language with which the ode begins; then calls his friends to drink, and sets them the example. It is easy to adapt such a scene to the ode; but there can be little doubt, I think, that it is one on which Horace bestowed more than average pains, though there is no ode in which the “ars celare artem” is more conspicuous. It is impossible to suppose it the work of a moment, as Dillenbr.’s very neat adaptation would require us to suppose. He thinks the ode is one of the early ones, as more akin to the fire of youth than the sobriety of later life, to which remark I attach no importance.

ARGUMENT.

Talk not of Codrus, and Inachus, and Trojan wars: tell us what we may get a cask of Chian for, who will give us bath and house-room, and at what hour we may dine to-day. A cup, boy, to the new moon, another to midnight, and a third to Murena the augur; three and nine or nine and three; the rapt poet loves the nine; pure the Graces forbid. Let us be mad: bring music, scatter roses, let old neighbour Lycus and his young ill-sorted partner hear our noise and envy us. Rhode runs after thee, Telephus, with thy beautiful hair and bright face: as for me, I am wasting with love of Glycera.

Quantum distet ab Inacho
Codrus pro patria non timidus mori
Narras, et genus Aeaci
Et pugnata sacro bella sub Ilio:

1. Quantum distet ab Inacho, &c.] The number of years between Inachus, first king of Argos, and Codrus, the last king of Athens, is said to be eight hundred; but that it was a question not worth discussing was Horace’s opinion, and with the means we have of determining it perhaps the same opinion may be held now. On what authority Inachus is said to have been contemporary with Joseph I do not know, but so I find it is stated by Böckh (Manetho, p. 193) in Orelli’s note on this passage. The late Mr. Gutzlaff, in his History of China, tells us how “the wise prince Te-ke” was chosen successor to the throne “by the unanimous voice of the people and the mandarins,” and how he made an harangue to his court and marched against a refractory prince, with a fine army well equipped, in a year which the Jewish chronology puts before Quo Chium pretio cadum
Mercemur, quis aquam temperet ignibus,
Quo praebente domum et quota
Pelignis caream frigoribus, taces.
Da lunae propere novae,
Da noctis mediae, da, puer, auguris
Murenæ: tribus aut novem Miscentur cyathis pecula commodis.

the dispersion of mankind, and Ta-on the august was reigning at Pekin while Noah was floating in the ark.

4. sacro—sub Illo: This is Homer’s epithet, τροιγιαν προλήθην.

5. Chium—cadum: This is the same form of expression as “Laestrygonia amphora,” “Sabina dota;” and the vessels were all the same. Compare Tibullus (ii. 1. 27):

“Nunc mihi famosos veteris proferte
Palernos
Consulis, et Chio solvite vincla cado.”

On the Chian wine see Sat. ii. 8. 15. The best foreign wines were Thasian, Lesbian, Chian, Sic-corian, Cy-prian, and Clazomenian.
Only the second and third are mentioned by Horace, who puts them together in Epod. ix. 34. They were mild wines. Lesbian he speaks of as “innocens” (C. i. 17.
21.).

6. Quis aquam temperet ignibus: This is equivalent to “who can give us a bath?” So Cicero, writing to Pæ tus, with whom he was going to dine (ad Fam. i. 16, sub fin.), says, “ego tibi unum sumptum affe-ram quod balneum calcarias oportet.” Dillenbr. supposes Horace to be proposing an ερανος or symbola, each person contributing in kind to the entertainment. I do not take that view of his words.

7. Pelignis frigoribus: Cold as bad as the Peligni know, who inhabited a high part of the Apennines in the Samnite territory.

“Quota” means at what hour we may sup.
Bentley tells us Horace might have said “quotus,” as he does in Epp. i. 5. 30. He thinks that word would have been equally good. I do not.

9. Da lunae propere novae: The scene is suddenly shifted to the supper-table. On the construction with the genitive see above (C. iii. 8. 13). Turnebus gives the right interpretation of “lunae novae.” It means the Kalends, which was a feast day. (Compare iii. 23. 2, “nascente luna.”) The months of Numa’s calendar being lunar, the association of the new moon with the first day of the month remained after the calendar was altered. A cup for midnight does not appear to have any other meaning than an excuse for another toast. “Dicetur merita Nox quoque naenias,” he says below (C. iii.
28. 16).

11. tribus aut novem Miscentur cyathis: The cyathus was a ladle with which the drink was passed from the mixing bowl to the drinking cup. The ladle was of certain capacity, and twelve ‘cyathi’ went to the sextarius. Horace therefore says in effect, “let the wine be mixed in the proportion of three cyathi of wine to nine of water, or of nine of wine to three of water.” He says also the poet under the inspiration of the Muses likes the stronger proportion;
but the Graces (in other words, good breeding and good temper) forbid the wine to be drunk pure, lest it lead to intoxication and strife. “Tres supra” means the three over the largest proportion of nine, and which,
if added, would make the drink ‘merum.’
I need not set forth all the interpretations that have been offered for this passage. The above is Orelli’s, and seems to me to be the true one. He held a different opinion at one time, and his Excursus may be consulted by those who are not satisfied with the explanation here given. There were different ways of drinking healths. One way was to drink as many cups as there were letters in the name. Some interpret this passage as meaning that the poet drank nine cups to the Muses, while others to the Graces drank but three, according to their number. This explanation Orelli does not give; but I like it best after his own. It requires us to render “tres supra” ‘above three,’ which I do not like. “Miscentur” means that such is the usual practice, and there is no necessity to change it to “mis-center,” as Bentley has done, following Rut-gersius. “Commodis,” fit and proper ‘cyathi,’ that is, bumpers. “A proper man” is totus teres atque rotundus,” in whom no-	hing is wanting. The Muses are ‘impares’ as being nine in number. “Attonitus” is equivalent to ερανος. On “ nudis” see C. i. 30. 5, n.
Qui Musas amat impares
Ternos ter cyathos attonitus petet
Vates; tres prohibet supra
Rixarum metuens tangere Gratia
Nudis juncta sororibus.
Insanire juvat: cur Berecyntiae
Cessant flamina tibiae?
Cur pendet tacita fistula cum lyra?
Parcentes ego dexteras
Odi: sparge rosas; audiat invidus
Dementem strepitum Lycus
Et vicina seni non habilis Lyco.
Spissa te nitidum coma,
Puro te similem, Telephe, Vespero Tempestiva petit Rhode:
Me lentus Glycerae torret amor meae.

18. Insanire juvat:] This is a repetition of C. ii. 7. 28: "Recepto dulce mihi furere est amico." Berecyntus was a mountain in Phrygia, where Semele was worshipped. Compare Catullus (lxiv. 265), "Barbaraque horribili stridebat tibia cantu," where, according to the common application of the word, 'barbara' is equivalent to Phrygia or Berecyntia. Euripides also (Bacchae, 127) speaks of ἡδονή φρυγίων αὐλῶν πνεύματι. Compare C. iv. 1. 22, sqq.:

"— lyraeque et Berecyntiae
Delectabere tibiae
Mixtis carminibus non sine fistula."

The 'fistula' corresponded nearly to the Greek 'syrinx,' and what we call the Pan-dean pipe: the 'tibia' was a sort of flageolet. For particulars of these instruments see Smith's Dict. Ant., Articles Syrinx and Tibia. I do not understand Orelli's note on 'fistula': "propriam pastorum; b. l. ut videtur unius calami auctoris soni." Winter roses were cultivated at great trouble and expense.

24. non habilis Lyco.] The oldest of the Blandinian MSS. had 'hali,' and that reading Rutgersius must have followed when he interpreted 'vicina' thus: "quae intacta neque alter quam vicina cum vicino cum Lyco marito degit;" as Juvenal (vi. 509),

"— vivit tanquam vicina marito.
Hoc solo proprior quod amicos conjugis odit."

But 'vicina Lyco' is not necessarily his wife. "Quem Lycum quare in transitu carpsert Horatius non apparebit," says Estré, on the matter-of-fact principle. Lyco need not be hurt. He was no more than a name.

CARMEN XX.

There can be very little doubt that this ode is imitated from the Greek, though Dillenbr. denies it, as he generally does. It represents in heroic language a contest between Pyrrhus and a girl not named for the affections of the handsome Nearchus. The last two stanzas furnish a striking groupe for a picture. The passion of the jealous girl, and the conscious pride of the beautiful boy, are happily painted.
ARGUMENT.

As well rob the lioness of her whelps, Pyrrhus. That girl will rush to the rescue of her lover, and like a coward and thief thou shalt quit the field after a hard-fought battle, in which he shall stand like Nireus or Ganymede, the umpire of the fight.

\[\text{Non vides quanto moveas periculo,} \]
\[\text{Pyrrhe, Gaetulæa catulos leaenae?} \]
\[\text{Dura post paullo fugies inaudax} \]
\[\text{Proelia raptor} \]
\[\text{Cum per obstantes juvenum catervas} \]
\[\text{Ibit insignem repetens Nearchum,} \]
\[\text{Grande certamen tibi praeda cedat} \]
\[\text{Major an illi.} \]
\[\text{Interim, dum tu celeres sagittas} \]
\[\text{Promis, haec dentes acut timendos,} \]
\[\text{Arbiter pugnae posuisse nudo} \]
\[\text{Sub pede palmam} \]
\[\text{Furtur, et leni recreare vento} \]
\[\text{Sparsum odoratis humerum capillis,} \]
\[\text{Qualis aut Nireus fuit aut aquosa} \]
\[\text{Raptus ab Ida.} \]

3. \textit{inaudax} \] This word, which is not found elsewhere, is a direct translation of ἁρολύμος.

5. \textit{per obstantes} i.e. 'when, like the lioness bursting through a host of huntsmen, she shall rush to the rescue of Nearchus more beautiful than all (insignem).'

8. \textit{Major an illi.} Orelli, who seldom departs from the MSS., has in this instance done so, adopting an emendation which he calls "sagacem ac facilimam," and which Dillenbr. approves, and "tantum non recept," 'major an illa,' which is due to the simultaneous sagacity of Peerkamp and Haupt. The former has deserved but little of Horace, and has not, I think, increased his claims by this suggestion. 'Major an illa' would mean, 'or whether she is superior;' 'major an illi,' 'rather to thee or to her.' The Greek could not be mistaken if it ran πότερα ἡ λεία σοι μετίζων ἠς ἔτεικυ, where μετίζων would be equivalent, not to λιας μετίζων μίρος, but to μᾶλλον.

Cicero (ad Qu. Frat. iv. 13) says, "Sit lictor non suae sed tuae leuitatis apparitor; majoraque praefarant fasces illi ac secures dignitatibus insignia quam potestatis." Probably Horace found μετίζων in the original he copied from in some such combination as I have supposed. 'Certamen' has no regular government. The construction, however, is quite intelligible without supplying 'est' or 'erit,' as some propose.

11. \textit{Arbiter pugnae} Nearchus is represented as standing in doubt to which of the combatants he shall yield himself, with his naked foot upon the palm of victory, looking like Nireus,

\[\text{ος κάλλιστος ἀνήρ υπὸ Ἰλιον ἠλθεν} \]
\[\text{τῶν ἄλλων Δαναῶν μετ’ ἄμυμον Πηλιών} \]
\[\text{ποιεθα} \]
\[\text{II. ii. 673}, \]
\[\text{or like Ganymede. The difference between the perfect and the present, the one as representing a complete, and the other a continuing action, is here clearly marked. (See C. i. 1. 4, n.) 'Furtur' a little disturbs the character of the description as a painting, whether we interpret with Dillenbr., who supposes a real story to be the subject of the ode, and has no faith in a Greek original; or with Orelli, who understands it to mean the remarks of the spectators looking on at this scene as it might be represented on a stage or in a picture. The latter does not satisfy me, and the word is one of which it is difficult to fix the exact meaning. I cannot help thinking this too savours of a pretty literal copy, and indicates a composition not flowing from the mind of the writer, and therefore liable to some confusion, though to him it was plain enough.}
The history of L. Valerius Messalla Corvinus, of his learning and eloquence, and the origin of his double cognomen, under both of which he appears in Horace's poems, are fully given in Smith's Dict. Biog. The date of this ode, which is addressed to the testa containing the wine intended for Messalla at a supper to which he has invited himself at Horace's house, cannot by any sort of evidence be even conjectured. Dillenbr. says it was a song composed extempore at a party at which Messalla was symposiarch. In such extemporaneous effusions Dillenbr. puts more faith than I can; but the ode may have been recited at the supper-table, and composed for the occasion it professes to have been composed for.

ARGUMENT.
Thou amphora, who wast filled at my birth, whether thy mission be one of sorrow or joy, of strife or love or sleep, come down, for Corvinius would have my better wine. Learned though he be, he will not despise thee, for neither did old Cato. Thou dost soften the inflexible, and open the heart, and bring back hope, and give strength and courage to the humble. Liber, Venus, and the Graces shall keep thee company till the dawn of day.

O nata mecum consule Manlio,
Seu tu quereelas sive geris jocos
Seu rixam et insanos amores
Seu facilem, pia testa, somnum,
Quocunque lectum nomine Massicum
Servas, moveri digna bono die,
Descende, Corvino jubente
Promere languidiora vina.

1. O nata mecum] Horace was born A.U.C. 689, when L. Manlius Torquatus and L. Aurelius Cotta were consuls, in which year the amphora addressed is here said to have been filled. (See above, C. iii. 8. 12, n.) 'Testa,' which signifies properly any 'vas coctile,' was used to express the 'dolium' as well as the 'amphora.' Here it obviously means the latter. In Epod. xiii. 6, Horace had before referred to this wine: 'Vina Torquato move consule pressa meo.' 'Pia testa' Dacier renders 'aimable bouteille.' The force of the epithet is more easily felt than described. 'Gentle cask' is Francis's translation, and I know no better, for the meaning is to be derived from its connexion with 'facilem somnum.' Bentley shows an over-nice discernment in putting a comma after 'pia,' in order to bring out this connexion more clearly. Jahn (in whose judgment Orelli always places great faith) says Horace calls the testa 'pia,' because it was contemporary with himself. That does not bring us much nearer to the meaning.

5. Quocunque—nomine] 'On whatever account.' Orelli quotes Varro (De Re R. i. 1. 6): 'Item adveneror Minervam et Verrem quam unius procuratio oliveti, alterius hortorum, quo nomine Rustica Vinalia instituta.' On the technical meaning of 'nomen' signifying an entry in an account, see Mr. Long's note on Cic. in Verrem, ii. 1. 36. The derived sense of the word as used here is better illustrated by Cic. de Am. c. 25: 'Multis nominibus est hoc vitium notandum,' i.e. on many accounts or in many particulars. Forcell. gives other examples. 'Lectum,' which Forcellini interprets 'selected,' rather applies to the
CARMINUM III. 21.

Non ille, quamquam Socraticis madet
Sermonibus, te negleget horridus:
Narratur et prisci Catonis
Saepe mero caluisse virtus.
Tu lene tormentum ingenio admoves
Plerumque duro; tu sapientium
Curas et arcanum jocos
Consilium retegis Lyaeo;
Tu spem reducis mentibus anxiis
Viresque, et addis cornua pauperi;
Post te neque iratos trementi
Regum apices neque militum arma.

193
gathering of the grape from which the wine was made. Massic wine was from Mons Massicus in Campania. The word ‘descende’ is used because the apotheca was in the upper part of the house. (See above, C. iii. 8. 11, n.) For the same cause ‘deripe’ is used (C. iii. 28. 7). ‘Dignus’ is used sometimes by the later prose-writers with an infinitive. In Horace’s day and by Cicero they used it only with the relative pronoun in construction with a verb. An instance of the later use from Pliny will be found in Forcell. Orelli quotes Seneca (de Benef. i. 1. 10), “dignus est decipi.” ‘Languidiora’ corresponds to ‘languescit mili’ above (C. iii. 16. 33). For ‘lectum nomine,’ Bentley proposes ‘factum nomine,’ “hoc est, quacunque potestate praeditum; compellat enim testam tanquam Dea quaepiam fuerit. Et justa ni fallor metaphora est; et ad audacem Flacci indolem accommodating.” He anticipates the rejection of his emendation because it is an emendation, but thinks if any MS. were to exhibit his reading it would be received by acclamation. Orelli’s B has ‘numine,’ and one or two others; but, though Orelli calls it ‘speciosa lector,’ he adds that it is ‘non tamen vera,’ and there are no signs of the acclamation Bentley expected; when ‘factum’ makes its appearance, editors may perhaps desert the received reading.

9. madet] This word would hardly have been used for ‘imbuitur’ in this sense on any other occasion, though Martial says (i. 40), “Cecropiae maditus Latiaeque Minervae Artibus,” Pliny (Epp. iii. 12. 1) copies the expression ‘Socraticis sermonibus,’ which Orelli supposes had passed into proverbial use. Speaking of a supper, he says, “Sit expedita; sit parca: Socraticis tantum sermonibus abundet.” For ‘neglectet,’ the reading of the Scholiasts and nearly all the MSS. and editions, Bentley prefers the present tense.

11. Narratur et prisci Catonis] Plutarch, in his life of Cato Uticensis, says he drank a great deal of wine in the latter part of his life, and Seneca says the same. Some editors therefore have supposed Horace means to refer to him. But he is not alluding to the intemperate use of wine, and ‘prisci’ can only apply to the elder Cato, as in ‘priscis memorata Catonis atque Cethegis’ (Epp. ii. 2. 117). “Prisci: antiquioris, non Uticensis” (Acron).

13. Tu lene tormentum ingenio] ‘Thou appliest a gentle spur to the usually ungenial temper.’ ‘Duro ingenio’ does not, I think, as Bentley says, signify the genius that finds it hard to express itself, but the reserved temper whose sympathies are not easily drawn out, as in Terence (Phorm. iii. 2. 12), “Adeon ingenio esse duro te atque inexorabili.” ‘Sapientium’ Dillenbr. supposes to be said ironically,-signifying the Sir Oracles, “who therefore only are esteemed wise for saying nothing.” I think it has a more serious and kindly meaning, and applies to the philosophical and thoughtful (as ‘sapientia’ is put for philosophy, C. i. 34. 2), who have little to do with mirth till they are brought out of themselves by cheerful company. It is said that in his odes Horace always uses the termination ‘ium’ for the genitive plural of nouns ending in ‘ens,’ and for participles the termination ‘tum.’ But the instances of either are not numerous enough to determine a rule, and the so-called nouns are usually participles, as ‘sapiens’ is. Ovid most probably had this passage of Horace in his mind when he wrote the following verses (A. A. i. 237, sqq.):—
HORATII FLACCI

Te Liber et, si laeta aderit, Venus
Segnesque nodum solvere Gratiae
Vivaeque producunt lucernae, Dum rediens fugat astra Phoebus.

"Vina parant animos faciuntque caloribus aptos,
Cura fugit multo diluiturque mero.
Tunc veniunt risus, tunc pauper cornua sumit,
Tunc dolor et curae rugaque frontis abit.
Tunc aperit mentes aevi rarissima nostro
Simplicitas, artes excutiente deo."

19. Post te] "Quis post vina gravem militiam aut pauperiem crepat?" (C. i. 18. 5.) As to 'spices,' see C. i. 34. 14.
22. Segnesque nodum solvere Gratiae

As Horace represents the Graces naked, "nodium" cannot signify the zone, as some commentators say. It seems to mean the bond that unites them. They are always represented with their arms intertwined. Acron says, "Segnesque nodum solvere—hoc est quae nodum non solvunt quo connexae sunt. Propterea hoc dictum est quia qui fida inter se gratia junguntur nunquam resolvuntur ab amicitia fide, unde et ipsae Gratiae conjunctis inter se manibus finguntur." As to the next line, see C. iii. 18. 14.

CARMEN XXII.

Horace on some occasion thought fit to dedicate a pine in his garden to Diana, and his commentators have suggested various reasons and occasions for his doing so. One thinks it may have been when he first had possession of his farm, which enables him to fix the date of the ode; another that he had had an escape from the attack of a boar pig; the French editors have settled it was on the arrival of news that one of his mistresses had been safely delivered of a child; "for the ode," says Dacier, "has all the air of a thanksgiving," which suspicion Jani does not deny to his judgment 'valde arridet,' while all other conjecturers, in his opinion, 'multa nugantur.' Whether his 'nugae' surpass the 'nugae' of others or not, the reader will judge for himself. But it may safely be pronounced to be the idlest sort of trifling which thus attempts to fix causes from such impenetrable data, and turns the edge of a pretty trifle like this by forcing it into matter of fact. How long the child born on this memorable occasion survived its birth, or how many such the numerous mistresses of the poet (une de ses maitresses!) bore him, we are not informed by the sagacity of Sanadon and Dacier. The dedication of trees to particular divinities was not uncommon. Fea quotes an inscription in which T. Pompeianus Victor vows a thousand large trees to Silvanus: Tu me meisque reduces Romam sistito daque Itala rura te colamus praeside ego jam dicabo milles magnas arbores.

ARGUMENT.

Diana, who protectest the mountains and woods, and deliverest women in childbirth, to thee I dedicate this pine, and will offer thee the sacrifice of a boar.

_Montium_ custos nemorumque, Virgo,
Quae laborantes utero puellas
Ter vocata audis adimisque leto,
Diva triformis,

1. Montium—nemorumque,] See C. i. 21. 6, and C. S. 1. Diana shared with Juno the attributes of Lucina, the divinity that brings children to the birth, as explained
Imminens villae tua pinus esto,
Quam per exactos ego laetus annos
Verris obliquum meditantis ictum Sanguine donem.

on v. 13 of the Secular Ode. Diana was ‘Diva triformis’ as being Luna in Heaven, Diana on Earth, and Hecate in Hell; whence Virgil speaks of “Tergeminamque Hecaten tria virginis ora Dianae” (Aen. iv. 511), alluding (as Horace does) to the statues of the goddess with three faces set up where three roads met, so that she could look down all three at once, from which she was called Trivia. Compare Ovid (Fast. i. 141): “Ora vides Hecates in tres vertentia partes, Servet ut in ternas compita secta vias.”

6. Quam per exactos ego laetus annos]
The antecedent to ‘quam’ is implied in ‘tua.’ ‘Per exactos annos’ means ‘every year,’ not necessarily ‘at the end of the year,’ as some commentators say.

CARMEN XXIII.

Phidyle (from φίδυς) is, according to Jani, “villica haud dubie seu procuratrix in fundo Sabino Horatii:” to whom Horace wrote this ode, says Dacier, because she complained that she was not allowed by her master to offer fine enough sacrifices. Let us rather assume that Horace, wishing to embody the principle that any offering to Heaven is acceptable according to a man’s means (see note on v. 20), put it into the form of an address to the plain and pious Phidyle, a person of his own creation, bringing a humble offering to her Lares with doubts as to its acceptance, or lamenting that she could not for her poverty offer a worthier sacrifice. This explanation lies on the surface, and I do not see any other that the ode is capable of.

ARGUMENT.

My humble Phidyle, lift thy hands to heaven, and bring the Lares but incense, fresh corn, and a sucking-pig, and they shall protect thy vines and fields and lambs. Herds and flocks fed on Algidus or Alba, these are for the pontifices: do thou but crown thy gods with rosemary and myrtle, for it is the clean hand and not the costly sacrifice that comes with acceptance to the altar.

CaelO supinas si tuleris manus
Nascente Luna, rustica Phidyle,
Si thure placaris et horna
Fruge Lares avidaque porca,

1. supinas] The clasping of the hands in prayer does not seem to have been usual with the ancients. ‘Sup-inus’ and ἔπιτοσ contain the same element, and both Nec pestilentem sentiet Africum
Fecunda vitis nec sterilem seges
Robiginem aut dulces alumni
Pomifero grave tempus anno.
Nam quae nivali paseitur Algido
Devota querces inter et ilices
Aut crescit Albanis in herbis
Victima pontificum secure
Cervice tinget: te nihil attinet
Tentare multa caede bidentum
Parvos coronantem marino Rore deos fragilique myrho.

signify 'upturned.' The 's' in the Latin word corresponds to the aspirate of the Greek, as in 'silva' and ἕλη. Compare Aesch. (P. V. 1005): γυναικόμιος ύπτισματιν χερών. As to 'nascente Luna' see C. iii. 19, 9, n. The prose form of 'hornus' is 'hornitinus.' 'Alumnus' occurs above (C. iii. 18. 4). The epithet may have been copied from Lucretius (ii. 1160), "Ipse dedit dulces fetus per tabula laeta."

10. Devota] In the oak woods of Mount Algidus (in Latium) and the pastures of Alba were fed swine and cattle, especially for sacrifice. 'Securim' (v. 12) is the reading of many MSS. Orelli's Zurich and one of his Berne MSS. have 'securis.' Bentley prefers the singular for euphony, and because 'victima' is the singular number. Most persons will decide in favour of 'securis,' and 'securim' would require 'pontificis' on Bentley's showing.

18. Non sumptuosa blandior hostia] 'If the hand be innocent that touches the altar, not with sumptuous victim more welcome doth it appease the angry Penates than with pious meal and cracking salt.' Bentley strangely makes 'hostia' the nominative case, in which he follows the Schollast Porphyrian. Acron saw better than Bentley could not have read, or must have forgotten his note, when he says, 'utereque Scholiastes nominativi casus esse monerunt.' The production of the final 'a' in 'sumptuosa' is not indefensible, but it is no defence to say, as Bentley says, that Martial has (v. 69, 3), "Quid gladium demens Romanae stringis in ora?' for 'sta' is a very different combination from 'bl,' and Horace would not have taken this licence even with those letters. The real defence has been given above (C. iii. 5. 17, n.). But we need not trouble ourselves about the matter, for 'hostia' is no doubt the ablative case. Bentley supposes 'immunis' to mean 'empty,' without an offering, in which he follows what Laminus partly approved. It signifies 'pure.' It does not occur elsewhere in this sense without a genitive. In the sense Bentley supposes it occurs twice in Horace (see Index). 'Mollibit,' an older form for 'molliet,' and one which Horace never uses nor any author of the Augustan age, was the received reading till Bentley adopted 'mollivit,' from many of the best MSS., which reading is noticed by Cruquius, and was contained in one of his Blandian MSS. There can be no doubt it is right, for, besides other considerations, the aoristic perfect is wanted to correspond with 'tetcigit,' and it gives the best sense. When Bentley however argues that if Horace had written 'mollibit' some at least of the grammarians would have noticed such an unusual form, he overlooks Acron, whose note is, "mollibit: placabit." Cunningham, out of opposition to Bentley, proposes 'mollirit,' for which there is some authority.

20. Farre pio et saliente mica.] This means the salted meal-cake offered in sacrifice. The Roman practice and the Greek were different. The oblio and obacentra were the entire grain of barley mixed with salt. The grain was not pounded by the Greeks; by the Romans it was, and the salt kneaded with it. So "Dant fruges manibus salinas" (Aen. xii. 173). The cracking of the salt was a good omen. See Tibullus (iii. 4. 9):

"At natum in curas hominum genus omina noctis Farre pio placant et saliente sale."

Socrates was the first among the ancients who took the view here given of the gods and their offerings. His opinions are related by Xenophon (Memor. i. 3. 3): θυσίας
CARMINUM III. 24.

Immuns aram si tetigit manus,
Non sumptuosa blandior hostia Mollivit aversos Penates
Farre pio et saliente mica.

197
Horatii

Intactis opulentior
Thesauris Arabum et divitis Indiae
Caementis licet occupes
Tyrrhnenum omne tuis et mare Apulicum,
Si fict adamantinos
Summis verticibus dira Necessitas
Clavos, non animum metu,
Non mortis laqueis expedies caput.
Campestres melius Scythae
Quorum plaustra vagas rite trahunt domos
Vivunt, et rigidi Getae
Immetata quibus jugera liberas
Fruges et Cereerum ferunt,
Nec cultura placet longior annua,
Defunctumque laboribus
Aequali recreat sorte vicarius.
Ille matre carentibus
Privignis mulier temperat innocens,
Nec dotata regit virum
Conjux nec nitido fidit adultero.

1. Intactis] Cn. Pompeius, Marcellus, and others had entered Arabia Petraea; but Arabia Felix which is here referred to had not yet been invaded. The disastrous expedition under Aelius Gallus did not take place till a.u.c. 729, which was probably after the composition of this ode. See C. i. 29, Int., and compare Propertius (ii. 10. 15, sqq.):

"Inde quin, Auguste, tuo dat colla triumpho Et domus intactae te remit Arabiae."

India and Arabia are again coupled Epp. i. 6. 6: "Quid (censes) maris extremos Arabas ditantis et Indos?"

3. Caementis licet occupes] This is explained by C. iii. 1. 35.

6. Summis verticibus] This has been variously explained. Bentley supposes it to mean the heads of the nails, "when Fate drives in the nails to the heads." His note on these lines is one of his worst. He prefers 'dura' to 'dira,' but does not adopt it in his text, though he says he should not mind doing so or care for all the MSS. and editions put together. "They so generally confound the two words," he says, "that it is remarkable they should show such a depraved and perverse unanimity in retaining the worst of them here." Some take Horace to mean that Fate, by driving her nails ("clavos trabales," i. 35. 18) into the roof of the house, puts an end to the work and declares that the master's work is done. Such is the meaning Orelli gives, and he supposes Horace to have got the idea from some Greek poet. It is very obscure. The Scholiasts throw no light upon it. Cruquius' Commentator takes 'verticibus' for the human head: "in vertice sicquidem familiar est ictus ad mortem vicinitate cerebri." I like this interpretation the best.

12. Immetata] This is διπαξ λεγόμενον. Virgil assigns to the golden age this freedom from enclosures:

"Ante Jovem
   Ne signare quidem aut partiri limite campum
   Fas erat." (Georg. i. 125, 6.)

'Liberas' means 'common property.'

14. Nec cultura placet] The habits of the Suevi as described by Caesar (Bell. Gall. iv. 1) are here assigned to the Getae. "They had 100 districts (pagi)," says he, "each of which supplied annually 1000 soldiers, who served a year and were then relieved by others, who in their turn served a year and were relieved. Those who stayed at home cultivated the fields. They had no
Dos est magna parentium
Virtus et metuens alterius viri
Certo foedere castitas;
Et peccare nefas aut pretium est mori.
O quisquis volet impias
Caedes et rabiem tollere civicam,
Si quareret Pater urbiunm
Subscribe statuis, indomitam audeat
Refrenare licentiam,
Clarum postgenitis; quatenus, heu nefas!
Virtutem incolu men odimus, Sublatam ex oculus quaerimus invidi.

enclosures and occupied the same ground only for one year."

[8. temperat] ‘holds her hands from,’
‘parcit.’ With ‘nec dotata,’ &c. compare Plautus (Men. v. 2. 16): "Ita istsae solent quaes viros subservire sibi postulant, doti fretae,“ and again (Aulul. iii. 5. 61.):
"Nam quae indotata est ea in potestate est viri:"
Dotatae maclant et malo et dammo viros.”
Juvenal has not overlooked this evil:
"Optima sed quae Cesennia teste marito?
Bis quingenta dedit," &c.
(S. vi. 136.)
The Greek comic poets had many allusions to the same subject. See in particular a long fragment of Alexis in Athenaeus (i. 558), and Anaxandrides in Stobaeus:
πένθες—τὴν γυναικα πλουσιαν
λοβων ἵξει ἔσποιναν οὐ γυναικι ἐτι.
Some have affirmed that the maximum of a wife’s portion allowed by the laws was ‘bis vingenta’ or ‘decies centena,’ a million of staterces, which opinion is perhaps founded on such passages as the above, and Juv.
S. x. 335:

"—et ritu decies centena dabuntur Antiquo;"
and Martial’s Epigram (ii. 65):
"Illa, illa diues mortua est Secundilla,
Centena decies quae tibi dedit dotis?
Nollem accidisset hoc tibi, Saleiane." Martial condictes with his friend, not because he had lost his wife, but because he must now give back her ‘dos’ (see Smith’s Dict.
Ant. Art. ‘Dos’), which law perhaps enchanced the natural tendency rich wives have to rule their husbands. The above notion about the legal limits of the ‘dos’ has no good foundation, but Lipsius (on Tac. Ann.
ii. 86) says it was the usual amount among wealthy people, which may also be doubted.
‘Nec fidit’ means she does not trust her paramour to shield her with his influence from her husband’s anger.

21. Dos est magna parentum] ‘An ample portion for wives is their virtue and that chastity which, living in unbroken bonds, shrinks from any other man than the husband.” Plautus again supplies a like passage (Amphitr. ii. 2. 207):

"Non ego illam domet mi esse duco quae
osos dicitur,
Sed pudicitia et pudorem et sedatum cu-pidinem,
Deum metum, parentum amorem, et cogna-tum concordiam.”

25. O quisquis] Bentley divides this into ‘O quis quis.’ He gives no heed, he says,
to all the MSS. and editions, and charges them with a wicked conspiracy (prava consipriatio) in retaining ‘quisquis.’ The copyists he calls ‘obesi,’ and of his own reading
he says it is "elegantissima," and adds
"mirificum vim et affectum sententiae.”
Most readers will think it entirely destroys the dignity and simplicity of the passage.
‘Pater urbiunm’ is not a title found elsewhere, but is analogous to ‘Pater patriae’ which Augustus received A. u. c. 752, and ‘pares coloniae’ which appears in an inscription in Orelli’s collection (605). With ‘refrenare licentiam’ compare C. iv. 15.
9 sqq.:

"—ordinem
Rectum evaganti frens licentiae Injecit."

‘Postgenitis’ does not occur elsewhere.
30. quatenus] Forcellini gives other instances of this sense, ‘quandoquidem.” See
S. i. 1. 64; 3. 76. The sentiment is repeated
Quid tristes querimoniae
Si non supplicio culpa reciditur?
Quid leges sine moribus
Vanae proficiunt, si neque fervidis
Pars inclusa caloribus
Mundi nec Boreae finitimum latus
Durataeque solo nives
Mercatorem abigunt, horrida callidi
Vincunt et facere et pati
Virtutisque viam deserit arduae?
Vel nos in Capitolium
Quo clamor vocat et turba faventium,
Vel nos in mare proximum
Gemmatis et lapides aurum et inutilis,
Summi materiam mali,
Mittamus scelerum si bene poenetet.
Eradenda cupidinis
Pravi sunt elementa, et tenerae nimis
Mentes asperioribus
Formandae studiis. Nescit equo rudis
Haerere ingenuus puer Venarique timet, ludere doctior, and illustrated in the first epistle of the second book, vv. 10, sqq.

35. Quid leges sine moribus Tacitus has echoed these words: "Bonae leges minus valent quam boni mores." (Germ. 19.) See C. iv. 5. 22, n.

39. Durataeque solo Bentley proposes "gelu" for "solo," and has proved that other writers have used "duratus" with "gelu" and "frigore," which was unnecessary. Against all the MSS. and editions no careful editor would adopt "gelu." On the "mercatores" see C. i. 31. 12, n. The enterprise of these men and the effects their visits had on uncivilized people are illustrated by the passing notice they get from Caesar (B. G. i. 1). Speaking of the Belgae he says, "Horum omnium fortissimi sunt Belgae: properea quod a cultu atque humanitate Provinciæ longissime absent, minimeque ad eos mercatores saepe comminant, atque ea quae ad effeminandos animos pertinent important."

44. deserit Again Bentley forsakes the MSS. and reads "deserere." He admits that "deserit" is tolerable if the reader be not very fastidious. "Sed vide quam melius sic concipi possit, 'virtutis viam deserere arduae?" for, says he, it is not poverty which leaves the way of virtue, but she bids men do so. But when men do so poverty does it in their person, according to a mode of speech the readers of Horace are familiar with: see in particular C. i. 35. 21, sqq. n.

54. Formandæ Bentley conjectures and adopts "firmandæ," and adds "aioaffirmoque sic ab Horatii manu fuisse scriptum." Horace might have written "firmandæ" if he had pleased; but we have no good reason (Bentley's are not worth discussing) for supposing that he did so, against the evidence of the MSS., Scholiasts, and editions, which till Bentley all had "formandæ." He has however convinced his adversary Cunningham, and Gesner likes the emendation. "Formo" occurs in the same sense, Epp. ii. 1. 128:
Seu Graeco jubeas trocho
Seu malis vetita legibus alea,
Cum perjura patris fides
Consortem socium fallat et hospitem
Indignoque pecuniam
Heredi properet. Scilicet improbae
Crescent divitiae; tamen
Curtae nescio quid semper abest rei.

“Mox etiam pectus praeceptis format amici.”
For other instances see Index.

57. Seu Graeco jubeas trocho] On the use of the trochoes see Smith’s Dict. Ant., where will be found engravings of three gems illustrating the practice very clearly. The hoop was of metal, and it was guided by a rod with a hook at the end, such as boys commonly use now.

58. vetita legibus alea,] There were laws at Rome, as there are with us, against gaming, which practice was nevertheless very prevalent among all classes in the degenerate state of the empire and the republic. Juvenal complains that young children learnt it from their fathers (xiv. 4):

"Si damnosa senem juvat alea ludit et haeres Bullatia, parvoque eadem movet arma fritillo."

Martial has many references to this vicious habit, which had scope allowed it at the Saturnalia:

"Dum blanda vagus alea
Incertis sonat hinc et hinc fritillis
Et ludit popa nequiore talo."

(Epp. iv. 14. 7, sqq.)

Cicero charges M. Antonius with pardoning one Licinius Lentulica, who had been condemned for gaming, and with whom Antonius, who, if we are to believe Cicero, was a great gambler, had been in the habit of playing: "Hominem omnium nequissimum qui non dubitaret vel in foro alea ludere legem quae est de alea condemnation in integrum restituit." (Phil. ii. 23). See Dict. Ant. art. ‘alea.’

60. Consortem socium ‘Consortes’ sometimes stands for ‘coheirs’: ‘Sors et patrimonium significat, unde consortes dicimus’ (Festus sub v.). He also explains ‘disertiones’ as ‘divisiones patrimoniorum inter consores.’ The word bears this meaning in Cic. in Verr. ii. 3. 23: ‘Quum ex agris tres fratres consortes perfugissent,’ and in Livy, xli. 27: ‘Censoris frater et quidem consors.’ Bentley understands the word in this sense here, following Dacier, and proposes to insert ‘et’ between ‘consortem’ and ‘socium.’ There is no MS. authority for this reading, and the meaning of ‘consors’ is not confined to co-heirship. ‘Consortem socium’ seems to mean the partner whose capital was embarked with his own. The Romans held it to be a very serious offence for a man to cheat his partner. Cicero (pro Rosc. Am. c. 40) says "in rebus minoribus fallere socium turpis simum est." And again, ‘recte igitur maiores eum qui socium sefellisset in honorum vironum numero non ptnarunt haberi opertere.’ Also, in his speech for Roscius the player, he says (c. 6), ‘aeque enim perfidium et nefarium est fidem frangere quae continet vitam, et puppillum fraudare qui in tutelam pervenit, et sociam fallere qui se in negotio conjuxit,’ which last words seem to explain ‘consors.’ Horace couples these two last crimes in Epp. ii. 1. 123:

"Non fraudem socio puerove incogitat ulam Pupillo."

Cicero (de cl. Orat. c. 1) unites in another sense Horace’s two words: ‘Socius et consors gloriosi laboris.’ If Bentley had thought of this passage, he would have inserted ‘et’ ‘vel centum codicibus invitatis.’ ‘ Hospites ’ is the reading of many good MSS., and Bentley adopts it. There is more uniformity in the singular.

62. improbæ] This is one of the most difficult words to which to assign its proper meaning. Forcellini gives three or four separate heads with quotations illustrative of each, under any one of which most of the examples in the others might be classed. Orelli has quoted instances (on C. iii. 9. 22) in which it is applied to labour, a jack-daw, a man, a mountain, a tiger, winter, and the Adriatic Sea. He might have added others: see Index. It implies ‘excess,’ and that excess must be expressed according to the subject described.
CARMEN XXV.

A. U. C. 724 (?).

This ode reads at first like an introduction to one on a larger scale in honour of Augustus, but we need not suppose that such a sequel ever was composed. The occasion, to judge by the enthusiasm of the language, may have been the announcement of the taking of Alexandria A. U. C. 724.

ARGUMENT.

Bacchus, whither dost thou hurry me? In what woods or caves shall I sing of Caesar added to the gods, a new and noble strain unheard before? As the sleepless Euiad looks out from the heights upon the sacred hills and rivers of Thrace, so do I love to wander by the river-side and in the silent grove. O thou lord of the Nymphs, no vulgar strain will I sing. I will follow thee, for the danger of thy company is sweet.

Quo me, Bacche, rapis tui
Plenum? quae nemora aut quos agor in specus
Velox mente nova? quibus
Antris egregii Caesaris audiar
Aeternum meditans decus
Stellis inserere et consilio Jovis?
Dicam insigne recens adhuc
Indictum ore alio. Non secus in jugis
Exsonnis stupet Euias
Hebrum prospiiciens et nive candidam
Thracen ac pede barbaro
Lustratam Rhodopen, ut mihi devio

2. quae nemora] Some MSS. have 'quae in nemora,' but the preposition before 'specus' governs both nouns. Dillenbr.'s distinction between 'specus' and 'antrum' is unintelligible to me: "specus dicitur de solitudine ac vastitate loci; antrum de divino poecarum deversorio." 'Spec-us' seems to contain the same root as δπι-ος, the original meaning of which is unknown. The derivation of δωρπος is equally uncertain. Etymology therefore gives us no help.

5. meditans] I take 'insere' after 'audiar.' Some may prefer its being governed by 'meditans.' This word, which is the same as μεταμητα, signifies 'to revolve in the mind,' and often expresses the giving utterance to that which the mind has conceived. Here I think it has the same meaning as Virgil's "musam meditatis avenas," "meditaris arundine musam." Again Dillenbr. has an arbitrary distinction between 'recens,' 'that which has never been heard before,' and 'indictum,' 'that which has never been spoken before.'

7. Dicam insigne] 'Aliquid' or 'carmen' must be supplied.

9. Exsonnis stupet Euias] The Bacchanal catches inspiration by looking out from the hill-tops upon the haunts of the god, and so the poet turns aside from his wonted path to the river-banks and groves where Bacchus is found. The picture of the Euiad looking out with silent awe through a moonlight winter's night upon the quiet plains of Thrace, and drawing inspiration from contemplating the scenes that her deity frequents, is very beautiful. Bentley, with Ripas et vacuum nemus
Mirari libet. O Naïadum potens
Baccharumque valentium
Proceras manibus vertere fraxinos,
Nil parvum aut humili modo,
Nil mortale loquar. Dulce periculum est,
O Lenaee, sequi deum Cingentem viridi tempora pimpino.

a want of taste for which he appears to me
pre-eminent among critics, objects to 'exsonnis,' for why should Bacchanals be sleepless? Do they not sometimes sleep?
See what Euripides says (Bach. 682), τούθον ἐπὶ πᾶσας αὐτικῶς παρείπησεν: therefore 'Eidonis,' not 'exsonnis,' is what Horace wrote. But if they sometimes sleep they probably sometimes are kept awake,
and so Horace represents one of them here.
And 'exsonnis' is not the mere ornamental epithet Bentley would make it appear, but highly descriptive, which 'Eidonis' is not, nor is it wanted at all.—For 'ut mihi,' Bentley reads 'ac,' which has some MS.
authority, though not much apparently.
Horace has 'aeque ut' (C. i. 16. 7—9),
and other writers have 'pariter ut,' 'non minus ut' (Prop. i. 15. 7), 'perinde ut,' which are not the same certainly as 'non secus ut.' Of this there seems to be no other instance, but I believe 'ut' to be the reading
here and to be used in preference to 'ac,' because that word occurs in the line before. Some would put a full stop before
'ut,' and make it a particle of exclamation.
The Scholiast did not-understand it so.
11. pede barbaro] Orelli interprets this of the 'wild' troops of Maenads celebrating the orgies of Bacchus. For 'ripas,' which has the best authority, and that of all his own MSS. (a few others have 'rupes,' which Lambinus adopts, but it seems to have come from C. ii. 19. 1: "Bacchum in remotis carmina ripibus.") Bentley reads 'rivos,' which has no authority at all, both here and at iv. 2. 31, saying that 'ripas' cannot stand alone without the name of the river of which they are the banks, which assertion any schoolboy can correct. See, for instance, C. iii. 1. 23:
"Fastidit umbrosamque ripam."
14. Naïadum potens Baccharumque] These are the Nymphs mentioned C. ii. 19.
3. Horace, in his description of the strength of the Nymphs (Dryads), had perhaps in his mind Euripides' description (Bacch.
1108):—
ai ὑστα μυριαν χερα
προιθεσαν ιλατη καζανησαν ευθονος.
For 'O Lenaee, sequi deum,' Bentley proposes 'Te, Lenaee, sequi ducem,' saying there is ambiguity in the sentence as it stands, as to whether 'cingentem' applies to the follower or the god. But the ambiguity is not removed by his emendation, and Horace sufficiently explains his own meaning in C. iv. 8. 33: "Ornatus viridi tempora pimpino Liber.'

CARMEN XXVI.

This ode represents a successful gallant's first refusal, and his mortification and wrath at his defeat. To apply it to Horace, or to assume from the opening, as Franke does (following the Scholiasta) that he was getting into years, and about to abandon lyric poetry, or that Chloë is "illa hand dubie de qua i. 23; iii. 9, 9," or any other Chloë whatever, is to mistake the character and scope of the ode, in my opinion. If any of Horace's compositions are purely fanciful, this may be pronounced to be so.
Till now I have fought and won. Now I hang up my arms to Venus. Here, here hang my torches, my bars, and my bow. O thou queen of Cyprus and of Memphis, do but once lay thy rod upon the proud Chloë.

Vixi puellis nuper idoneus
Et militavi non sine gloria;
Nunc arma defunctumque bello
Barbiton hic paries habebit,
Laevum marinae qui Veneris latus
Custodit. Hic hic ponite lucida
Funalia et vectes et arcus
Oppositis foribus minaces.
O quae beatam diva tenes
Cyprum et Memphin carentem
Regina, sublimi flagello
Tange Chloën semel arrogantam.

1. idoneus] Orelli's interpretation, 'when I was of an age to love,' quite alters the true meaning, I think. The words would be suitable to a youthful lover under the chagrin of a first disappointment. Ovid says love is a warfare, "Militiae species amor est, discedite segnes" (A. A. ii. 233). "Militat omnis amans et habet sua castra Cupido" (Am. i. 9. 1). The arms this lover proposes to hang up in the temple of Venus on the left wall, as being most propitious (see Cic. Divin. ii. 39. 82: "Nobis sinistra videntur, Graias et barbaria dextra, melior,"—but see also next ode, v. 15, n.), are the torch that lighted him to his mistress, the crowbar that broke open her door, and the bow and arrows which, I suppose, he carried as emblems of his passion. The last two words, 'et arcus,' Bentley would change into 'securesque,' because we hear that young rakes carried hatchets to break down their mistresses' doors if necessary, but we have no authority for their carrying bows and arrows, and probably they did not; but Horace makes his hero hang up his bow, and that is all we know about it. All the MSS. agree, and the old commentators take no notice of the word. Orelli quotes a gloss in the MS. of Queen's College, Oxford, on 'arcus:' "quibus janitores terrerent."

10. Memphin] Herodotus (ii. 112) speaks of a temple at Memphis to Ξείνη "Αφροδιτη, built by Proteus on the occasion of Paris and Helen being driven upon the coast of Egypt, according to a local legend, which makes him think that Helen herself was the Ἀφροδίτη in question. Where Horace got his notion it is not easy to say.
CARMEN XXVII.

The length of this ode is more imposing than the subject of it, which appears to be a journey to Greece (v. 10) proposed to be taken by a lady of Horace's acquaintance, whom he pretends to deter from her purpose, by reciting the dangers she will have to encounter and the fate that waits upon female obstinacy, as illustrated by the story of Europa, which story occupies two-thirds of the ode and thrusts Galatea and her journey from the scene altogether. I do not see the difficulty of the ode that has arrested most of the editors. The length of the digression is simply a way with Horace (as in the story of Regulus, C. iii. 5, and of Hypermnestra, iii. 11), and Pindar took the same liberty with greater freedom. It is a peculiarity which imitators of Horace will do well to note, for if skilfully managed it would relieve the tameness of many an ode which, professing to be an imitation of this author, has little but his rhythm and a few of his phrases to sustain the resemblance.

By similar arguments Propertius (i. 8) deters Cynthia from going to sea, and Ovid Corinna (Am. ii. 11). The Scholiast on Homer (II. xii. 307) says the story of Europa was treated by Bacchylides, whose poem has not come down to us, nor any part of it, but was probably, as Orelli says, in Horace's hands. The Scholiast's account of the story is just that of the present ode. It would be difficult to find a more touching picture than Horace has drawn of a young girl suddenly torn from her childish amusements, transported far from the security of her home, and left forlorn among strangers, knowing no tie but that of her father's love, to which she instinctively turns with longing and self-reproach: her fault had been giving way to a foolish impulse, but she sees her crime through her fears, which magnify it greatly by pointing to its probable issue, so that she looks upon her idle curiosity as nothing less than madness (v. 36). There is also great skill in the last stanzas, in which we have, first, the derisive laughter with which Venus and her son (whose bow is now unstrung because it has done its work, the Scholiast says) break in upon the unhappy girl; then the ironical prophecy in which her own words are used against her; and, lastly, the serious consolation and congratulation with which they announce her good fortune, and bid her rise to it. The pain arising from her complaint is thus relieved, and we are left with the conviction that she is reconciled to her destiny and proud of it.

ARGUMENT.

Let the wicked go on their way with evil omens. I do but pray for thee that the storm may be averted. Be happy go where thou wilt, and remember me, Galatea. Fear not those idle omens: but see the rising storm: I know the dangers it portends. May they fall upon my enemy rather than on thee. It was thus Europa left her girlish task and crossed the sea by night, but feared not till she stood on the shore of Crete. Then she cried out in anguish, "Alas! my father, a daughter's name I have abandoned; love is swallowed up in madness. What an exchange is here! Many deaths do I deserve to die. Am I awake, or is it a dream? Was it better to cross the sea than to gather young flowers at home? Oh that I might avenge myself on that monster once too dearly loved. Shame on me that I left my home; shame that I delay to die. Let me go naked among lions and perish by tigers, rather than waste away in a lingering death. Vile girl, thy father taunts thee: why dost thou not die? Here thou mayest hang by thy girdle, or dash thee on the rocks, or into the stormy waves, unless thou wouldest yield thyself a barbarian's slave."—Then came Venus and her son, and laughed mischievously, and said, "Cease thy wrath when the monster shall come back to give thee thy revenge. What, knowest thou not that thou art the spouse of Jove? Away with sighs. Bear thy noble destiny, for one half the world shall take its name from thee."

Impios parrae recinentis omen
Ducat et praegnans canis aut ab agro Rava decurrens lupa Lanuvino Fetaque vulpes.
Rumpat et serpens iter institutum
Si per obliquum similis sagittae
Terruit mannos: ego cui timebo
Providus auspec,
Antequam stantes repetat paludes
Imbrium divina avis imminentum,
Oscinem corvum prece suscitabo
Solis ab ortu.
Sis licet felix ubieunque mavis,
Et memori nostri, Galatea, vivas,
Teque nec laevus vetet ire picus
Nec vaga cornix.

1. parrae] What this bird was, or whether it is known in these islands, is not, I believe, determined. Forcellini gives all that is known about it from the ancients. 'Ravus,' if it is akin to \(\chi\alpha\rho\omicron\sigma\pi\omega\upsilon\); as Forcellini and others say, belongs properly to the colour or appearance of the eyes. Horace applies it to a wolf or a lion (Epod. xvi. 33), in the latter case imitating perhaps Homer's \(\chi\alpha\rho\omicron\sigma\pi\omega\upsilon\ \lambda\omicron\nu\omicron\upsilon\) (Odysseus xi. 611). But what does Homer mean? Etymology does not help us, for \(\chi\alpha\rho\omicron\sigma\pi\omega\upsilon\), except in a derived sense, can only mean glad-eyed, and there is nothing in the colour of a wolf or a lion corresponding to that notion. The wolf is represented as running down from the hills of Lanuvium, because that town was near the Appia Via leading to Brundusium, where Galatea would embark. 'Rumpat,' not 'rumpit,' as Bentley reads after Graevius' MS., is I believe the reading which the sense requires. Bentley appears to have mistaken the meaning of the passage. The image of the snake shooting across the road recalls Jacob's prophecy in respect to his son Dan: "Dan shall be a serpent by the way; an adder in the path that biteth the horse's heels, so that his rider shall fall backwards" (Gen. xlix. 17).

7. ego cui timebo] 'For my part, on behalf of her for whom I am anxious, like a far-seeing augur, before that bird (the crow) which tells of the coming storm shall go back to his stagnant pool, the croaking raven with my prayers I will call up from the East,' which would be an omen of good weather, and the crow flying to the marsh of bad. Lucretius speaks of these birds as those which "—— aquam dictunet et imbris Possere et interdum ventos aurasque vocare." (v. 1084.)

'Oscines aves' were birds whose omens were taken from their note, as 'praepetes' from their flight.

13. Sis licet felix] There is a tenderness apart from familiarity in these two stanzas which gives much reality to the ode: but to speak of it as addressed to "one of his mistresses" destroys that reality at once. There is nothing of passion in this or any other part of the ode, such as we find in the elegies of Ovid and Propertius, noticed in the introduction. 'Vetat' is the reading of Laminibus and Bentley after one of the Vatican MSS. But 'vetet' is required by the sense and the reading of nearly every MS. besides. The woodpecker was a bird of ill omen. But why should 'laevus' convey that meaning? and why should 'dexter' signify 'propitious,' when Cicero says just Sed vides quanto trepidet tumultu
Pronus Orion. Ego quid sit ater Hadriae novi sinus et quid albus Pecet Iapyx.
Hostium uxor puerique eaceos
Sentient motus orientis Austri et Aequoris nigri fremitum et trementes Verbere ripas.
Sic et Europe niveum doloso
Credidit tauro latus et seatentem
Belus pontum mediasque fraudes Palluit audax.
Nuper in pratis studiosa florum et Debitae Nymphis opifex coronae
Nocte sublustri nihil astra praeter
Vidit et undas.
Quae simul centum tetigit potentem
Oppidis Creton: Pater, o relicitum
Filiae nomen pietaque, dixit, Victa furore!

21. Hostium uxor. So in C. i. 21. 13, sqq., he prays Apollo to turn away war, famine, and pestilence from his country to her enemies the Parthians and Britons. Such diversion is common with the poets, as Virgil (Georg. iii. 513), "Di meliora pias erroremque hostibus illum!" and Propertius (iii. 8. 20), "Hostibus eveniat lenta puella meis;" and Ovid (A. A. iii. 247), "Hostibus eveniat tam foedi causa pudoris." The Romans used 'pueri' for children of either sex. 'Oriens' is not usually applied to a wind, but Horace so applies it, and there is no necessity to substitute 'Haedi' or 'astri' for 'Austri.' 'Astri' appears in the Zürich MS., but probably only from an error of the pen. Bentley suggests, 'facili mutatione,' 'gementes' for 'trementes,' because, though the shore may be said to shake with the lashing of the waves, this could only be perceptible to those who were on it, not to those at sea.

28. Palluit. So 'expalluit' (Epp. i. 3. 10) and 'contremuit' (C. ii. 12. 8) are used transitively. So likewise Pers. (S. i. 124), "Iratum Eupolidem praegrandi cum sene palles." Id. v. 184, "recnitique sabbata palles." In v. 26 Bentley changes 'et' into 'at,' saying there is opposition between the two members of the sentence; but there is not; 'palluit' is a consequence of 'credidit.'

33. centum—Oppidis. See Epod. ix. 29. The description is taken from Homer's Kρητην εκατόμαλιν (II. ii. 649). Europa's speech is that of one just awake to her real position after the terror of her voyage, and the departure of her companion; left alone in a strange land with the consciousness of her folly first coming upon her. She begins distractedly, 'Father, alas! I have forfeited a daughter's name, and love hath given place to madness.' I do not like Orelli's notion, that 'nomen' is equivalent to 'necessitudo,' and 'filiae' the dative of the agent. 'Filiae nomen' come too close together for this interpretation. The Scholiasts separate 'victa' from 'pictas,' as if it were Unde quo veni? Levis una mors est
Virginum culpae. Vigilansne ploro
Turpe commissum, an vitiiis carentem
Ludit imago
Vana quae porta fugiens eburna
Somnium ducit? Meliusne fluctus
Ire per longos fuit an recentes Carpere flores?
Si quis infamem mihi nunc juvenenum
Dedat iritates lacerare ferro et Frangere emitar modo multum amati Cornua monstri.
Impudens liqui patrios Penates,
Impudens Orcum moror. O deorum
Si quis haec audis, utinam inter errem
Nuda leones!
Ante quam turpis macies decentes
Occupet malas teneraque sucus
Defluat praedae, speciosa quaero Pascere tigres.

'dixit victa furore,' but see Introd. 'Unde' implies, not that she was so distracted that she had forgotten from whence she had come, but 'What an exchange have I made! So dear a home for this strange place!' It is all very natural and beautiful. 'Una mors' is perhaps an imitation of Sophocles' (Antig.
308) oú υμίν 'Αλώς μοῦνος ἀρκίσειν.
Propertius repeats the words (iv. 4. 17):
'Et satis una malace potuit mors esse puelle.'
For 'virginum' Markland, for 'vitiis' Bentley, proposes the singular number. The corrections are unnecessary.

41. porta fugiens eburna] This is the well-known image of Homer (Odyss. xix.
562),— δοξά γάρ τε πώλαί ἀμενηνών εἰσιν ὄνει-ρῶν
οὲ μὲν γάρ κεράσσα τετείχαται οἷ τ' ἀλι-φαντι
τῶν οἷ μὲν κ' ἔθωσε διὰ πρασοῦ ἀλι-φαντος,
οἴ β' ἑλαφιώτατα ἔπι ἀκράντα φέροντες' οἷ
δὲ διὰ ξεστῶν κεραίνον ἔθωσε θῆρας, o'o β' ἵππα κράινονα βρωτῶν ὅτι κέν τις ιθηται.

Virgil's imitation is also well known (Aen.
vi. 894, sqq.) : "Sunt geminae Sommi por-tae," &c.

48. Cornua monstri.] 'Tauri' is the reading of nearly all the earliest editions.
But Bentley adopts 'monstri,' which is supported by all the Blandinian MSS., and the oldest Berne, and many others of the best repute. The Zürich has 'tauri.'

49. Impudens liqui] 'I had no shame when I left my father's house. I have no shame or I should not hesitate to die,' either because she deserved to die, or because her chastity was in danger. 'Orcum moror' is equivalent to 'dubito mori,' like Ovid (Heroid. ix. 146): "Impia quid du-bitas Deianira mori?" but it is an unusual form. Seeing nothing but death before her, she prays to be killed at once rather than die a lingering death by hunger, and go down to Hades robbed of her beauty. I find by Orelli's and Dillenbr.'s notes that this stanza has been abused, and its omission proposed, because it is said to be unnatural, which appears to me very much opposed to the fact. The language is natural, whether viewed with reference to the horrors of a lingering death, or to the pride of a young girl in her good looks.
It is also Greek, and from the Greek it is probably imitated. See Soph. Ant. 817,
sqq.:—

οὐκοῦν κλεινὴ καὶ ἐπαινὸν ἔχουσα'
ic τὸδ' ἀπίρχει κεύθος νεκύων,
Vilis Europe, pater urget absens:
Quid morti cessas? Potes hac ab orno
Pendulum zona bene te secuta Laedere collum.
Sive te rupes et acuta leto
Saxa delectant age te procellae
Crede veloci, nisi herile mavis
Carpere pensum
Regius sanguis dominaeque tradi
Barbarae pellec.—Aderat querenti
Perfidum ridens Venus et remisso Filius arec.
Mox ubi lusit satis: Abstineto,
Dixit, irarum calidaeque rixae
Cum tibi invisus lacera nda reddet Cornua taurus.

oũtē φθίμασι πληγείσα νόσοις oũtē ξίφων ἐπίμειρα λαχοῦδ', ἀλλ' αὐτόνομος Ἴσασα μόνη ἐὗρ θνατῶν Ἄτλαν καταβίσαν.

60. Laedere collum. 'Laedere' corresponds to λωβασθαί in Soph. Ant. 54, πλεκταισιν ἀφάναισι λωβασθαὶ βιον. Lambinus says he finds in some of his MSS. secuta e-lidere collum,' and Bentley adopts that reading, 'sed frusta, ut fere omnia quae in Horatio conatus est vir caeterna ingeniosus et doctus,' as he himself says somewhere of Dan. Heinsius. Several heroines, as the commentators show, ended their lives in this unromantic way.—Antigone, Jocasta, Phaedra, Amata; and the tragedians have no stronger expression for suffering than that it is enough to make one hang one's self. The chorus, for instance, in Euripides' Alcestis (229) says—

άρ άξια και σφαγῆς τάς, και πλην ἴ βρόχῳ ἐιρήν οὐρανίῳ πε-λάσσαι,

on which Monk has brought forward several parallel passages.

61. Sive te rupes] As to 'sive,' see i. 6. 19, n. 'Acuta leto,' sharp to kill, whose sharp edges are fatal. It is not quite clear whether we are to suppose Agenor (Europe's father) to propose the choice of all these forms of death, or to speak any of these words or all of them. The editions are generally pointed so as to lead to the conclusion that 'vulis Europe' are the words of the girl addressing herself, and her father's imaginary invective to end with 'quid morti cessas.' Orelli thinks that the rest cannot 'ullo modo' be assigned to Agenor. As a matter of taste I prefer supposing the whole to be the language of Europa addressing herself, as I have taken it in the Argument, but the question is not worth discussing. Europa puts the words into her father's mouth, or she uses them against herself, because she thinks he will reproach and reject her, so that it comes to the same thing either way.

66. Aderat quaerentibus See Introduction.

69. Abstineto, irarum] This is a Greek form noticed before (C. ii. 9. 17). 'Esse nescis' Orelli thinks signifies 'you know not how to be,' or how to act as the spouse of Jove, because 'acire' does not commonly govern the infinitive mood. It appears to me to do so here nevertheless: 'Ambiguum utrum hoc dicat: nescis te conjugem Jovis esse; an nescis te gerere conjugem Jovis' (Acron). Not admitting the irony in 'invisus,' which he thinks would be 'illepida,' 'Venusino nostro indigna,' Bentley proposes to change 'cum tibi invisus' into 'jam tibi injussus,' quoting Virgil (Georg. i. 55),

"-------------
injussa virescunt Gramina,
"
and Epod. xvi. 49—

"-------------
injussae veniant ad mulctra capellae,
" which prove that Horace and Virgil use this word 'injussus' and that is all.

76. Nomina] The plural is thus used
UXOR INVICTI JOVIS

Esse nescis:
Mitte singultus; bene ferre magnum
Disce fortunam; tua sectus orbis Nomina ducet.

for the singular in C. iv. 2. 4, and Ovid (Tr. i. 1. 90): "Icarus Icaris nomina fecit aquis," "Sectus, diversus: eo quod una pars orbis Europae nomen accepit, altera Asia dicta est" (Acron). Varro (de Ling. Lat. v. 31) says "Divisa est caeli regionibus terra in Asian et Europam." Horace seems to give Europe half the world and the other parts the rest. He is not speaking with exactness. So the chorus in Soph. Trach. 98, asks,

πότι μοι πόθι παῖς
ναϊει πορ'- ἡ ποντίους αὐλῶνας ἦ δισσιαίς ἀπείροις κλίθες;

CARMEN XXVIII.

Who was Lyde? A gentlewoman, noble, honest, and learned, also very grave and severe, but a friend (in an honourable sense) of Horace, says one; Horace’s ‘villica,’ says another; his mistress, says a third; a musician, a dancer, a prostitute; and so the commentators differ, as well they may, when they try to fix the character and position of one who may be any body or nobody at all. This ode must have been written some years after the eleventh of this book, because then Lyde was but a young thing and chaste; now it is clear she had been in the habit of entertaining Horace her lover, and had given him a supper at more of these annual festivals of Neptune than the present. So says Dacier. Lyde was the same person as Pyrrha (C. i. 5), says Grotefend; as Lydia, says another German of less note. But did Horace dine with Lyde or Lyde with Horace on this memorable 23rd July? The critics are as little agreed upon that point as on the other, and we may therefore assume that Horace, "qui n’aime pas la presse," stayed at home, eat a quiet dinner, wrote an ode, calling on an imaginary Lyde to drink his health in a poetical cup of Caecuban wine, and to join him in an amoebean address, that was never sung, to the divinity of the day and the other gods usually honoured on such occasions. What little is known of the Neptunalia may be learnt from Smith’s Dict. of Antiq.

ARGUMENT.

Lyde, bring out the best Caecuban, and take wisdom by storm, for what can I do better on Neptune’s holiday? The noon is past, make haste. Let us sing; I of Neptune and the Nereids, you of Latona and Diana; both of us together of Venus, and we will not forget a song for Night.

FESTO QUID POTIUS DIE
Neptuni faciam? Prome reconditum
Lyde strenua Caecubum
Munitaeque adhibe vim sapientiae.

2. faciam?] Bentley would read ‘facias,’ because Horace is not advising himself but Lyde, and dining with her; on which grounds, "vel centum codicibus invititis," he will have ‘facias.’ ‘Reconditum’ is explained by (C. ii. 3. 8) "Interiore nota Falerni." ‘Strenua’ is put instead of the adverb. "Strenua: cita" (Acron).
Inclinare meridiem
Sentis ac, veluti stet volucris dies,
Parcis deripere horreo
Cessantem Bibuli consulis amphoram.
Nos cantabimus invicem
Neptunum et virides Nereidum comas;
Tu curva recines lyra
Latonom et celeris spicula Cynthiae;
Summo carmine quae Cnidon
Fulgentesque tenet Cycladas et Paphon
Junctis visit oloribus;
Dicetur merita Nox quoque nenia.

4. Munitaeque adhibe vim sapientiae.] This has something of the heroic in it: 'lay siege to wisdom in her stronghold.' "Tu iene tormentum ingenio admoves" (C. iii. 21. 14) is generally quoted, but there is not much resemblance: the metaphors are different and the objects are different. It might be supposed 'munitae' was an ornamental epithet, and an adaptation of καλλίπυργον σφιαν (Aristoph. Nub. 1024), but it corresponds more to Cicero's 'Is sapientia munitum pectus egregium gerat' (Divin. i. 22). Porphyrian says, 'Gracci aient vim sapientiae adhiberi per vinum:' where he got his information we cannot tell.

8. Bibuli consulis] M. Calpurnius Bibulus was Consul with Julius Caesar a.u.c. 695. Dillenbr. suggests that the name is chosen by way of a pun upon 'bibo.' See C. iii. 8, 12, n.

14. Fulgentes] See C. i. 14, 19. For Paphon Bentley reads 'Paphum,' to avoid the rhyme with 'Cnidon.' But Horace rather studies this figure, ὀμωρίλευτον, and he is not likely to have written one name in the Greek fashion and the other differently. On 'oloribus' compare Ovid (Met. x. 717):

"Vecta levi curru medias Cytheraeae per auras Cypron olornis nondum pervenerat alis."

16. Dicetur merita Nox] See C. iii. 19, 10. 'Nenia' is here a sort of lullaby. See Index.

CARMEN XXIX.

That this ode was written a.u.c. 729 has been confidently assumed by Franke from the allusions in vv. 25—28. It would be hard to show that the same names might not have been introduced in the same way at other times, and I have not sufficient confidence in this date to adopt it. It is not clear, as stated before (C. iii. 8, Introduction), that Maecenas had charge of the city or any specific responsibilities during Augustus' absence in Spain, and there is nothing in the language of this ode to lead necessarily to such a conclusion. There is a great deal of tenderness towards Maecenas in this as in the other private odes that are addressed to him. It is clear that he appreciated the sound sense of Horace, and allowed him full scope for expressing it; which he has done in this ode, in a manly and at the same time feeling way, with great poetical taste and an admirable selection of words, of which there is not one thrown away or out of place. It is an invitation from the poet to his patron pressing him to pay him a visit at his farm.
ARGUMENT.

Come, Maecenas; the wine, and oil, and the flowers are ready. Stay not for ever gazing from a distance at the pleasant fields of Tibur, buried in the magnificence and the uproar, the wealth and the smoke of the city. The rich man often likes to sup at the poor man's table. The days of drought are come back; the shepherd seeks the shade, the flock seeks the stream, not a breath is on the river-banks: but thou art distracting thyself with imaginary dangers. Heaven has wisely hidden the future from man, and does but smile at his fears. Live for the present; all else is like the stream that now flows in peace, now is swollen to a flood and sweeps all with it to the sea. He lives happy who lives to-day and leaves to-morrow to Heaven, seeing that Jove himself cannot undo what is done. As to Fortune she is fickle, and changes from day to day. If she stays with me I am glad, if she flies I am resigned. If the storm rages I have no merchandize to fear for, and can put out into any sea with safety in my little bark.

TYRRHENAE regum progenies, tibi
Non ante verso lene merum cado
Cum flore, Maecenas, rosarum et Pressa tuis balanus capillis
Jamudum apud me est. Eripe te morae;
Ne semper udam Tibur et Aesulae Declive contempleris arvum et Telegoni juga parricidae.
Fastidiosam desere copiam et Molem propinquam nubibus arduis;
Omitte mirari beatae
Fumum et opes strepitumque Romae.
Plerumque gratae divitibus vices,
Mundaeque parvo sub lare pauperum
Coenae sine aulaeis et ostro
Sollicitam explicuere frontem.

1. Tyrrena regum progenies.] Compare C. i. 1. 1. 'Verso' is equivalent to 'movere' in "moveri digna bono die" (C. iii. 21. 6). The 'balanus' was an oleaginous nut of some kind, and is here put for the oil expressed from it.
2. Eripe te morae.] On this use of the dative see Key's L. G. 978.
3. Ne semper udam] The MSS. vary between 'ne,' 'nec,' and 'non.' Orelli prefers the abrupt form, which Dillenbr. says is 'ingratum.' I rather agree with Orelli, though 'nec' would do very well. Horace uses it in prohibitions (C. i. 9. 15; 11. 2; iii. 7. 29). It appears that Maecenas was sighing for the country all the time he was detained at Rome. Telegonus, son of Ulysses and Circe, was the reputed founder of Tusculum and Praeneste. One of the legends of Ulysses' death attributes it to this son. Aesula was probably a town between Praeneste and Tibur, but no traces of its site remain, and Pliny says that it no longer existed in his time (iii. 5). See Cra-mer (It. ii. 66).
4. Molem] This signifies Maecenas' palace on the Esquiline hill at Rome. It is mentioned in Epod. ix. 3.
5. Omitte] This is the only instance in this book of an iambus at the beginning of the third verse. It occurs four times in the first book and twice in the second. It does not occur in the fourth.
6. aulaeis et ostro] The meaning of 'aulaeis' is explained in Sat. ii. 8. 54: "Interea suspensa graves aulae ruinas fecere," where Porphyrian tells us it was usual to spread tapestry to catch any dust that might fall from the ceiling. 'Aulaeis et ostro' may form one subject, or 'ostro' may mean the coverings of the couches.
Jam clarus occultum Andromedae pater
Ostendit ignem, jam Procyon furit
Et stella vesani Leonis,
Sole dies referente siccos:
Jam pastor umbrae cum grege languido
Rivumque fessus quaerit et horridi
Dumeta Silvani, caretque
Ripa vagis taciturna ventis.
Tu civitatem quis deceat status
Curas, et Urbi sollicitus times
Quid Seres et regnata Cyro
Bactra parent Tanaisque discors.
Prudens futuri temporis exitum
Caliginosa nocte premit deus, Ridetque si mortalis ultra Fas trepidat. Quod adest memento
Componere aequus; cetera fluminis
Ritu feruntur, nunc medio aequore
Cum pace delabentis Etruscum
In mare, nunc lapides adesos
Stirpesque raptas et peceus et domus
Volventis una non sine montium
Clamore vicinaeque silvae,
Cum fera diluvios quietos

16. Sollicitam explicuere frontem] This expression is repeated in Sat. ii. 2. 125: "Explicitui vino contractae seria frontis."
17. Andromedae pater] Cepheus, a northern star below Ursa Minor, rises the beginning of July. Procyon, a star of the first magnitude, in the constellation Canis Minor, and called 'Ante Canem' by Cicero (Orat. de N. D. ii. 44), rises about the same time, and the Sun enters Leo: see above, C. iii. 13. 8. n. 'Stella' is not commonly put for 'sidus,' the constellation.
25. Tu civitatem] See Introduction. As to 'regnata,' see C. ii. 6. 11. The Seres represent indefinitely the farthest Eastern nations known to the Romans (see C. i. 12. 56). The Bactrians were formerly part of the Persian empire, and were at this time partly subject to the Parthians and partly to a Scythian race, the Tochari. Bactra was their capital. The meaning of Horace plainly is, that Maecenas should not trouble himself about improbable dangers. Bentley's emendation, 'discors' for 'disors,' has justly been disregarded by all editors.
34. aequore] Orelli and Cunningham are the only editors, as far as I have seen, who have taken 'aequore' into the text. The common reading is 'alveo,' which is contained in the greater number of MSS., and some of the best, among others B. It was the reading of the Scholiasts. Some have 'aequore' superscribed, others have 'aequore' in the text with 'alveo' superscribed. Fea pronounces 'aequore' absurd. I cannot see why. If one of the words is an invention, as it must be, the transcribers are more likely to have put in the commoner word 'alveo' from a marginal gloss than the reverse. Virgil has 'viridesque secant placido aequore silvas' (Aen. viii. 90). The next line describes well, to my ear, the quiet flow of a river.
37. Stirpesque raptas] This passage alone disproves the statement of Servius (on Aen. xii. 208) that 'stirps' is used in the feminine gender only with reference to human beings. He says Horace employs it here 'usuaptive.' I do not know what he means.
Irritat amnes. Ille potens sui Laetusque deget, cui licet in diem Dixisse Vixi: cras vel atra
Nube polum Pater occupato
Vel sole puro; non tamen irritum
Quodcunque retro est efficiet, neque
Diffinget infectumque reddet
Quod fugiens semel hora vexit.
Fortuna saevo laeta negotio et Ludum insolentem ludere pertinax
Transmutat incertos honores,
Nunc mihi, nunc alii benigna.
Laudo manentem; si celeres quatit
Pennas resigno quae dedit, et mea
Virtute me involvo probamque
Pauperiem sine dote quaero.
Non est meum si mugiat Africis
Malus procellis ad miserar preces
Decurrere, et votis pacisci
Ne Cypriae Tyriaeque merces
Addant avaro divitias mari:
Tunc me biremis praesidio scaphae
Tutum per Aegaeos tumultus
Aura feret geminusque Pollux.

43. cras vel atra] Compare C. ii. 10. 15: "—Informes hiemes reduct
Juppiter, idem
Summover." On 'diffingit' see C. i. 35. 39. 'Vexit' is employed unusually for 'avexit.'

49. Fortuna saevo] The caprice of Fortune, represented as a coquette transferring her favours from one favourite to another, and delighting to trifl with the happiness of men, is the lowest Epicurean view of life and the world's government. But Horace writes conventionally. He has just assigned to the Father of all the ordering of men's lives. Orelli mentions a coin of Claudius in which a woman is represented sitting, holding with her right hand a horse by the rein, and in her left bearing a 'cornu copiae,' the inscription being FORTVNAE MANENTI. Compare C. i. 34. 18. Horace uses 'si' where other writers would use 'sin'; as Bentley observes on Epod. i. 6.

54. Resigno] This is equivalent to 'rescribo' in a money sense, 'to pay back.' See Forcell. on both words. 'Mea virtute me involvo' is not well explained by "certum praesidium cum mihi paro" (Orelli, after the Scholiasts). It is rather a picture of self-satisfaction than of a man taking shelter in his virtue. He wraps his cloak of virtue complacently about him, and sits down in contented indifference to the proceedings of Fortune, as if she had nothing to do with him, and unites himself to poverty as to a bride without a portion. This supposes a confusion of images, but I cannot explain the expressions otherwise.

62. biremis—scaphae] A two-oared boat, ἰλάρης δικώπου. 'Biremis' is not so used elsewhere, but for two banks of oars.

64. feret] Bentley prefers 'forst.' There is very little authority for the subjunctive; I prefer the future. See above, C. iii. 9. 12. n. 'Geminusque Pollux' is an elliptical way of expressing 'Pollux cum gemino fratre.' See C. i. 3. 2.
CARMEN XXX.

Whether this ode was written as the Epilogue of the third book, or of the three first published together, must be determined by the data discussed in the general introduction prefixed to the odes. It expresses a conviction, which time has ratified, that through his odes Horace had achieved an immortal name. The same just pride had been shown by poets before him; as by Sappho, in a poem of which the first line only has been preserved, μνάσασθαι τινά φαμι καὶ ὄστερον ἀμμίων (16 Bergk); and by Ennius, in the well-known lines—

"Nemo me lacrumis decorét nec funéra fletu Faxit. Cur? volito vivu' per ora virum," which words Virgil has made his own (Georg. iii. 9). Propertius (iii. 1), Ovid (Met. x. 871, sqq.), and Martial (x. 2. 7, sqq.), have all imitated Horace very closely. There is no extravagance but much dignity in the language of Horace, and I see no real resemblance between the tone of this ode and C. ii. 20, with which it is compared (see Introduction).

ARGUMENT.

I have built myself a monument which storms shall not destroy, nor Time himself. I shall not die but live in freshness of fame so long as the world endures. It will be said on the banks of my native river that I, a humble man made great, was the first to fit the Graecian strain to the lyre of Italy. Put on the bay that thou hast earned, my Muse.

Exegi monumentum aere perennius
Regalique situ pyramidum altius,
Quod non imber edax, non Aquilo impotens
Possit diruere aut innumerabilis
Annorum series et fuga temporum.

Non omnis moriar, multaque pars mei
Vitabit Libitinam: usque ego postera
Crescam laude recens dum Capitolium
Scandet cum tacita virgine pontifex.

Dicar qua violens obstrepit Aufidus
Et qua pauser aquae Daunus agrestium
Regnavit populorum, ex humili potens,

2. situ] This word is no where else used in this sense that I can find. It here signifies the building and not the site of it. What follows seems to be imitated from Pindar (Pyth. vi. 7, sqq.) —

3. impotens] This word is equivalent to 'impotens sui,' not 'valde potens' as the Scholiast says.

7. usque] In this sense of 'continually' 'usque' only occurs in poetry, and is always Princeps Aeolium carmen ad Italos
Deduxisse modos. Sume superbiam
Quaesitam meritis et mihi Delphica Lauro cinge volens, Melpomene, comam.

joined to a verb. What follows means while the Pontifex Maximus ('Vesta sacerdos,' Ov. Fast. iii. 639) shall, on the Ides of every month, go up to the Capitol to offer sacrifice to Vesta, her virgins walking silently in the procession, as they did, while the boys sang hymns in honour of the goddess. With a Roman this was equivalent to saying for ever.

10. Dicar qua violens obstrepit Aufidus]
'Violens' is not a common form of 'vio-Ientus.' It occurs again Epp. i. 10. 37, and in Persius (Sat. v. 171), "nunc ferus et vi-Iens." The editors try to get from these words a meaning I do not see how they will bear, as if Horace meant to say, as he says elsewhere, "Ego, longe sonantem natus ad Aufidum, dicar." The words of Acron which Orelli quotes are ambiguous. 'Dicar prin-ceps Aeolium carmen ad Italos modos de-duxisse qua Aufidus obstrepit," which seems to mean, not 'ibi natus qua,' as Orelli says, but 'ad modos Italiae qua,' and that may be Horace's meaning. But the order of the words rather favours that I have given in the Argument. Horace says, in the former verses, that he has wrought a work for all time, and here he seems, according to the plain interpretation of the words, to take pleasure in the thought that he shall be remembered in connexion with his native place. But if this interpretation be objected to on the ground that Horace never appeared to take any great interest in his birth-place (though the references in C. iii.
4. 9; iv. 9. 2, and his address to the fountain of Bandusia show he had not forgotten it), either we must suppose him to mean Italy in general, for which Daunia stands in C. iv. 27), or the words must be translated thus: 'It shall be said that I who in that place where the Aufidus roars, and where Daunus, poor in streams, ruled over his rustic people, from a man of low degree became great, was the first to adapt the Aeolian verse to Italian measures.' 'Obstrepere' is used absolutely again Epod. ii.

27. See Forcell. Apulia was not well watered.

12. Regnavit[ This word, though it is used in the passive voice (see last ode, v. 27) here only has a noun after it. Horace gives it the genitive in imitation of apXIV. He wrote with his mind full of Greek constructions and words, and took the liberty of using them very freely. Forcellini does not notice this passage, and therefore it may be presumed he only knew of the reading
'regnavit,' which appears to have been the reading of Acron, though it is not certain.
Porphyrius (who says there was a river Daunus, which there was not) writes expressly "adnotanda elocutio per genitivum fugurata est." All Lambinus' MSS., several of Bentley's and Cruiquius' (but not the Blandinians), and many others, including two of Orelli's later Berne, and nearly all the editions till Lambinus, had 'regnavit.'
But 'regnavit' is in the oldest Berne and Blandian, and several more mentioned by Jani; a verb also is wanted, and 'regnavit' is not likely to have been invented by the transcribers in so unusual a construction.
'Pauper' takes a genitive in S. i. 1. 79;
ii. 3. 142.

ex humili potentia.] This Bentley and some others (Sivry, Meinecke) apply to Daunus, because he was a private person, and from that condition became king of Apulia. But this makes the words a mere incumbrance without meaning. Bentley never can believe that so humble a man would boast so largely. I do not know what the meaning of the ode is, if a proud and legitimate self-complacency be not seen in every part of it. Horace uses the expression 'potentium vatun' in the eighth ode of the next book (v. 26). He considered Alcaeus and Sappho as his chief models in lyric poetry, which he sums up in the formula 'Aeolium carmen' here and in C. iv. 3. 12. 'Delphica lauro' is the 'laurea Apollinari' of the next book (C. iv.
2. 9).
Q. HORATII FLacci

CARMINUM

LIBER QUARTUS.

CARMEN I.

A.U.C. 739.

It is clear that Horace, after the publication of the first three books of his odes, laid aside that style, or wrote in it only occasionally. So far as his lyrical compositions expressed, if in his case they ever did, any real passion, growing years and bodily infirmity would naturally turn him from writing odes. So far as his poems were mere imitations of the Greek, we can understand his getting tired of that style as he grew older, and turning to the more original and serious task which employed him in the Epistles. Of the lighter sort, therefore, we find but few in this book, and those probably inserted to make up a sufficient volume. But his severer style he had not lost, and none of his earlier compositions surpass the moral and historical odes of this book. Why he should have written the first it is not easy to say. It was composed apparently 'invita Minerva,' and except the smoothness of its rhythm it has little to commend it. Nobody will read it and believe that the man was in love who wrote it, still less that he was influenced by a drizzling affection for the boy Ligurinus mentioned at the end, and in C. 10 of this book. Perhaps he found a Greek ode that took his fancy and imitated it, and then published it to fill his book, not as a prologue to it, as many of the chronologists say,—for what is there in the ode that bears that character? The fifth verse says it was written when he was about fifty, which age he attained on the 10th December, A.U.C. 739. A fragment of Alcman (20 Bergk)—

\[ έρος με άι άυτε Κύπρειδος έκαστ \nγλυκές κατείβων καρδιάν ιαίνει—\]

seems to be part of an ode which this of Horace might be imitated from. So likewise one of 1bycus (2 Bergk)—

\[ έρος άυτε με κυνίοσιν υπό βλεφάροις τακίν άμμαν δερκόμενος \nκηλήμασι παντοδαποῖς ἰς ἀπειρα ἐκτυνά Κύπρειδι βάλλει; \nἡ μάν τρομῶν νῦν ἐπερχομέναν, κ.τ.λ.\]

I do not associate the ode with C. iii. 26 for the reasons there stated. But there is so much resemblance between this and C. i. 19 as to confirm me in the opinion that they are both imitations.

ARGUMENT.

Art thou at war with me again, Venus? spare me, for I am old. Go to the young. Go to Paullus, for he is noble, handsome, clever. Give him the victory, and he will give thee in return a marble statue in a shrine of citron, with incense, music, and dancing in his home by the Alban lake. I have no longer a heart for love and wine, and yet, Ligurinus, why do I weep and dream of thee?
2. Rursus bella moves? The Scholiast Acron says this ode is an allegorical address to Venus praying her not to compel him to write any more love poetry, which notion is generally adopted. I think it is a mistake.

3. Non sum qualis eram Epp. i. 1. 4. He here calls Cinarca good, because she is dead; elsewhere he calls her ‘rapax’ (Epp. i. 14. 33). It seems likely this name represents a real person, whether she appears under another name elsewhere or not, and that Horace had an affection for her. In the thirteenth ode of this book (v. 22) her death is mentioned with feeling, and there is a reality in the references to her in all the places where she is alluded to, which cannot be connected with fiction. She was associated in all probability with Horace’s early days. Κινώρα signifies, some say, a wild rose thorn (εὐνόσβατος); κυνόρα, an artichoke.

5. Mater saeva Cupidinum. Repeated from i. 19. 1. Horace here does not copy himself I believe, but some Greek original. I do not know what Orelli means when he says “versicus hic consulto repetitur.” ‘Flectere’ is a metaphor taken from the breaking in of a horse.

9. in domum So Livy (xl. 7), “Quin comissatum ad fratrem imus.” Here ‘comissabere’ is equivalent to ‘comissatum ibis,’ and therefore the reading ‘in domum’ is correct. But ‘in domo’ has the authority of the two oldest Berne and other MSS., and is the reading of Lambinus and most of the older editors. ‘In domum,’ however, is less likely to have been invented than ‘in domo,’ and in the whole of the passage the idea of motion is contained, as in ‘abi,’ ‘ales,’ ‘quareas.’ ‘Purpureis’ (which Acron rightly interprets ‘nittidis, pulchris’) savours of the Greek, and κυμάσων ποτι τάν Ἀμαρούλλισα (Theoc. iii. 1) shows that Horace has here adopted a Greek idiom. Κώμωυ χρῶσθαι τος ἀλλήλως occurs in Herodotus (i. 21). The Paullus Maximus here mentioned is called by the Scholiasts “nobilis et desertus adolescens et voluptuosus,” which is plainly a mere notion of their own derived from the ode itself, and shows that they at least knew nothing about him. Paullus Fabius Maximus was a favourite with Augustus, and consul A.U.C. 743. If therefore he be the person meant, he is called ‘a boy’ in joke, though it does not follow that he was of the full consular age in 743; that rule fell into disuse after the civil wars, and was never strictly observed again. But he had a son who was a great friend of Ovid’s, and who was about twenty at this time, and some editors (Torrentius, Jani, Orelli, and others) think he is the youth Horace alludes to (see Ovid, ex Ponto, i. 2. 1). He could only have been beginning his advocate’s career, if this be the person, which I am inclined to doubt. ‘Torrere jecur’ is like Theocritus’ ὄπτεῦμενος ἐν ἀροδίης (vii. 55).

14. solicitissim non tacitus reis Compare C. ii. 1. 13, where he calls Pollio “Insigne moestis præsidium reis.”

16. Late signa feret This is what the Et quandoque potentior
Largi muneribus riserit aemuli
Albanos prope te lacus
Ponet marmoream sub trabe citrea.
Illic plurima naribus
Duces thura, lyraeque et Berecyniae
Delectabere tibiae
Mixtis carminibus non sine fistula;
Illic bis pueri die
Numen cum teneris virginibus tuum
Laudantes pede candido
In morem Salium ter quatient humum.
Me nec femina nec puer
Jam nec spes animi credula mutui,
Nec certare juvat mero
Nec vincire novis tempera floribus.
Sed cur heu, Ligurine, cur
Manat rara meas lacruma per genas?
Cur facunda parum decoro
Inter verba cadit lingua silentio?
Nocturnis ego somniis
Jam captum teneo, jam volucrem sequor
Te per gramina teneo, jam volucrem sequor
Campi, te per aquas, dure, volubiles.

Scholiasts mean when they say (v. 2, n.) "ἀλληγορικῶς ad Venerem scribit," with which expression Jani need not therefore quarrel. He mistakes its meaning. The idea corresponds to "militavi non sine gloria" (iii. 26. 2).

17. Et quandoque] i.e. ‘whenever with your aid his charms shall beat the rich presents of his rival, he shall set you up in marble under a citron roof by the shore of one of the Alban lakes,’ of which there were two close together, the Albanus (Albano) and Nemorensis (Nemi), and on one of these it appears Fabius had a house. The reading ‘Cypria’ must have arisen from ‘trabe Cypria’ (i. 1. 13). It has no place here, though Gesner adopts it. ‘Largi’ is a better reading than ‘largis.’ Horace does not usually put the epithet next to its noun. As to ‘Berecyniae,’ compare C. iii. 19. 20. ‘Lyrae’ and ‘tibiae’ are in the dative case after ‘mixtis.’ Bentley after Cruquius adopts the ablative, which appears in some MSS., and among others the oldest Blandinian.

26. ter quatient humum.] See C. iii. 18. 16. On the first few days of March, during the festival of Mars, the Salli, his priests, went in procession through the city singing and dancing, from whence they are said to have derived their name, ‘Jam dederat Salii (a saltu nomina ducunt)”’ (Ovid, F. iii. 387). The practice, according to Livy, was instituted by Numa (i. 20), “per urbem ire canentes carmina cum tripudii sollemnique saltatione jussi sunt.” See Epp. ii. 1. 66.

35. The last syllable in this line is cut off.
CARMEN II.
A.U.C. 738.

The fortunes of Iulus Antonius, son of the triumvir, his rise and tragical end, do not concern this ode. He was a man of letters and a pupil of L. Crassitius, a grammarian who kept a school at Rome, to which many sons of the noble families were sent (see Dict. Biog. Crassitius). He received therefore a good education, and we have it on the authority of the Scholiasts that he wrote an heroic poem on the fortunes of Diomed, in twelve books, besides some prose works. Acron says that his poem was excellent; but, as it is not likely he ever saw it, his testimony is not worth much. (See Heyne, Exc. Aen. x. 243.) Horace pays him the compliment of saying that he could celebrate Augustus' victories much better than himself, but this he said to Maecenas (C. ii. 12. 11); and, though from that passage and this we may believe that Maecenas wrote prose and Antonius poetry, the quality of either and the subjects cannot be inferred from any data Horace has given us. The Scholiasts write the name 'Julius,' but 'Iulus' is the correct form. Because we know nothing of Antonius' poetical powers except from this ode, and because of the distance between the two names, 'Iule' (v. 2) and 'Antoni' (v. 26), some critics have changed 'Iule' into 'Ille' (Peerlkamp. in loco Eichstadt. Paradox. Horat. i. p. 9), and supposed 'Antoni' to mean Antonius Rufus, who is mentioned by Acron (on A. P. 289) and Comm. Cruq. as one who wrote comedy; but the existence of such a person is very doubtful, though Suetonius mentions a grammarian of that name, and Ovid speaks of one Rufus who wrote lyric poetry after the manner of Pindar (Ex Pont. iv. 16. 27, sqq.):

"Et qui Maecanium Phaeacida vertit; et una Pindaricae fidicen tu quoque, Rufe, lyric."

But there is no reason to suppose his name was Antonius. In A.U.C. 737 the Sigambri, with two other German tribes, crossed the Rhine and laid waste part of the Roman territory in Gaul. They defeated the legate Lollius, and this disaster was sufficient to induce Augustus (Dion Cass., 54. 19, intimates that he had other reasons, especially his personal unpopularity at Rome and his intrigues with Terentia, which is mere gossip) to go in person to Gaul, which he did, and at his approach the Germans withdrew into their own territories, and giving hostages obtained peace. The defeat of Lollius had caused great consternation at Rome, and the news of the barbarians' subjection was hailed with proportionate joy. Augustus did not return for two years to Rome, having meanwhile restored order in Germany, Gaul, and Spain; but it is probable this ode was written in the expectation of his return and while the news respecting the Sigambri was still fresh, that is to say, about the end of A.U.C. 738. Augustus' return to Rome was expected long before it took place (see C. 5 of this book). The general impression derived from the ode is that Antonius had pressed Horace to write a poem in honour of Augustus' victory in the style of Pindar's ἐπινίκια, and that he very wisely declined, though his friend Titius (Epp. i. 3. 10) was more bold, and Rufus above mentioned was so too.

ARGUMENT.

Whoso would rival Pindar must expect Icarus' fate. His numbers roll like a swollen river. His is the bay, whether he tune the dithyramb or sing of gods and heroes, of victors or of women bereaved. The swan of Dirce soars to the clouds: I am but as a bee sipping the flowers of Tibur. Thou, Antonius, shalt sing of the triumphs of Caesar, greatest and best, and of the holiday rejoicings that hail his return: and I will add my small voice to thine: and we will all sing songs of triumph and will sacrifice, thou with bulls and cows, I with a young heifer.
Pindarum quisquis studet aemulari,
Iule, ceratis ope Daedalea
Nititur pennis vitreo daturus Nomina ponto.
Monte decurrens velut amnis imbres
Quem super notas aluere ripas
Ferveb immensusque ruit profundo Pindarus ore,
Laurea donandus Apollinari,
Seu per audaces nova dithyrambos
Verba devolvit numerisque fertur
Lege solutis;
Seu deos reges canit deorum
Sanguinem per quos eccestit justa
Morte Centauri, ecce dit remenda Flamma Chimaerae;
Sive quos Elea domum reducit
Palma caelestes pugileve equumve
Dicit et centum potiore signis
Munere donat;
Flebili sponsae juvenemve raptum
Plorat et vires animumque
Aureos educit in astra nigroque Invidet Oreo.
Multa Dirceum levat aura cycnum
Tendit, Antoni, quotiens in altos
Nubium tractus.
Ego apis Matinae
More modoque

2. Iule] Virgil makes this name trisyllabic after the Greek. Gesner allows Baxter's text to stand—aemulari, I-
-ule, ceratis——
and adds this note, "utrum in duo versiculatos distrahit nomen voluerit Horatius N.L. nisi quod Graecissat." Antonius' grandmother on his father's side was Julia, one of the Caesars, though how related to the dictator is not known. As to the plural 'nomina' see C. iii. 27. 76.

10. nova . . . verba] These are what Aristotle calls ἐπίθυμα ὄνομα (Poet. 22. 14), and which he says are best suited to the dithyrambic measure.

13. regesve] The editions before Bentley had 'regescue,' but there is opposition between 'deos' and 'reges.'

19. centum potiore signis Munere] Compare Pind. Nem. v. 1: οῖκ αὐτωπόθανος εἰμί, ὅστις ὑλοσοσενό τοί ἐργαζόμενα άγάματ ἐπὶ αὐτάς βαθμίδος 'Εσταόρα. 'Egnum' is put for the rider as in A. P. 84, notwithstanding what Bentley says to the contrary.

27. apis Matinae] See C. ii. 6. 15, n. Mons Matinus was in Apulia. According to the Scholiast on C. i. 28, there was a small town at its foot of the same name. The image here employed is so common that instances are hardly wanted. But see Plat. Ion. p. 334, A. Arist. Av. 737, sqq. The passage in Plato is very like this: οἱ ποιηταὶ ἀπὸ κρηνῶν μελοφρέτων ἐκ Μουσῶν κῆτων τινῶν καὶ ναπῶν δρι- πόμενοι τὰ μέλη ἕμιν φέροντον ὡς περ μελιτταί. 'Ripas' signifies the banks of Grata carpentis thyma per laborem
Plurimum circa nemus uvidique
Tiburis ripas operosa parvus Carmina fingo.
Concines majore poëta plectro
Caesarem quandoque trahet feroces
Per sacrum clivum merita decorus
Fronde Sygambros,
Quo nihil majus meliusve terris
Fata donavere bonique divi,
Nec dabunt quamvis redeant in aurum
Tempora priscum.
Concines laetosque dies et Urbis
Publicum ludum super impetrato
Fortis Augusti reditu forumque Litibis orbum.

the Anio. Bentley changes it to 'rivos.' (See C. iii. 25. 13, n.) 'Operosa' describes, I should think, the process by which nearly all Horace's odes were produced. No great poet is more artificial, and few more skilled in concealing their art and giving it the appearance of nature. 'Fingo' corresponds to παρατησω, which word the Greeks used especially with reference to the making of honey. Bentley joins 'plurimum' with 'nemus.' It belongs to 'laborem.' He rather wishes to substitute 'foreum.'

33. Concines] The pronoun though emphatic is omitted, which is not uncommon. (See C. iii. 17. 5.) Concines' sounds better than 'tu canes,' and it has particular force in expressing a chant in which many voices are joined.

34. feroces] The Sigambri had earned the epithet of cruel by their treatment of the Roman officers who, having gone to collect their tribute, were taken by them and hanged. See Introduction.

35. sacrum clivum] Martial mentions this ascent (i. 71. 5.):

"Inde sacro veneranda petes Pallatia clivo."

Becker, on the walls of ancient Rome, says it was a slope in the Appia Via from the Forum to the arch of Titus. He is quoted by Orelli, who also refers to the statement of Bunsen on the Roman Forum (Annali dell' Inst. viii. 238): "Le 'clivus sacer' montait au Palatin longeant à l'extrémité du Forum le flanc droit du sanctuaire de Vesta." Fca, who appears to have given great attention to the subject, has the following note on Epod. vii. 8: "As one entered the Sacra Via opposite the amphitheatre of Flavius between the temples of Pax and Venus, where now stands the church of New St. Mary, he descended gradually to the temple of Antonine and Faustina, and then ascended gradually to the arch of Septimius Severus. (This road, he says, he saw in 1809 when an excavation was being dug in front of Antoninus' temple, about 9 feet deep and laid with flint.) Passing from the Gate of Triumph over the Campus Martius, the Velabrum, Circus Maximus, and the spot where now stands the arch of Constantinus, the victors went in procession down this 'via,' with the prisoners before their chariots, to the site of Severus' arch, and thence the prisoners were dismissed to the prison hard by called Tullianus, while the victors ascended the Capitoline hill, bending to the left, till they arrived at the Capitol." He then refers to Cic. in Ver. ii. 30: "At etiam qui triumphant, eoque diutius vivos hostium duces reservant ut his per triumphum ductis pulcherrimum spectaculum fructumque victoriae populus Romanus percipere possit, tamen, quum de foro in Capitolium currum flectere incipiant, illos duci in carcerem jubent, idemque dies et victoribus imperii et victis vitae finem facit."

37. Quo nihil majus] This flattery is repeated Epp. i. 17. Augustus' kindness to Horace, according to Suetonius' life, was unbounded, merited the word
Tum meae si quid loquar audiendum
Vocis accedet bona pars et, O Sol
Pulcher! o laudande! canam, recepto Caesare felix.
Teque dum procedis, io Triumphe!
Non semel diceamus, io Triumphe!
Civitas omnis dabimusque divis
Thura benignis.
Te decem tauri totidemque vaccae,
Me tener solvet vitulus relictua
Matre qui largis juvenescit herbis
In mea vota,
Fronte curvatos imitatus ignes
Tertium lunae referentis ortum,
Qua notam duxit niveus videri
Cetera fulvus.

‘melius,’ in ‘majus’ he was not far wrong.
‘Divis bonis’ is repeated below (C. iv. 6. 1).
43. Post Augusti reditu] Orelli mentions that there are coins of the year A. u. c. appears to be an adaptation of ὀρβανὸς as it is used for instance by Pindar (Isth. iii.
26), ὀρβανοὶ ἡμῖνος.
45. loquar.] Bentley reads with several MSS. ‘loquor.’ Either will do.
48. felix.] Whether ‘felix’ refers to Horace himself or the Sun is doubtful.
The reader’s taste must determine. Orelli says it is ‘longe tenior’ if referred to the poet.
50. Teque dum procedis.] Bentley has raised difficulties about this reading which is that of far the greater part of the MSS.
and editions. ‘Triumphus’ is addressed as a divinity, as in Epod. ix. 21, and Horace says, ‘As thou marchest, we will shout thus thy name, Io Triumphe! and again, Io Triumphe!’ I see no reason for adopt-

CARMEN III.

A. u. c. 737 (?).

The impression produced by the publication of his three books of odes, which had previously been known only to a few, was such as no doubt to silence envy, and to establish Horace in the high position he here asserts as “Romanæ fidecan lyrae;” and when, after several years’ silence, he produced the Carmen Saeculare in A. u. c. 737, it was received probably with so much favour as to draw forth this ode. That is at any rate a reasonable way of determining its date, which otherwise must remain wholly unknown. The ode has all the appearance of genuine feeling, and shows how much Horace had suffered from the vexatious detractions that at one time he was subject to. Sanadon declares it is "perfectly beautiful," and Dacier says "rien de plus achevé," nothing more finished, is to be found in the Greek or Latin language. Julius Scaliger would rather have written it than have been king "totius Tarraconensis." I confess there is no ode that strikes me as more terse or more elegantly written than this. It is much less artificial than the first ode of the first book with which it is usually compared.

ARGUMENT.

He on whom thou lookest at his birth, Melpomene, derives his fame, not from the games, or from triumphs, but from the streams and woods of Tibur inspiring him with Aeolian song. They have named me the tuner of the Roman lyre, and envy assaults me no longer as it did; and to thee I owe this gift of pleasing, O Muse, who rulest the shell, and art able to give the music of the swan to the voiceless fish if thou wilt.

Quem tu, Melpomene, semel
Nascentem placido lumine videris,
Illum non labor Isthmius
Clarabit pugilem, non equus impiger
Curru ducet Achaico
Victorem, neque res bellica Deliis
Ornatum foliis ducem,
Quod regum tumidas contuderit minas,
Ostendet Capitolio:
Sed quae Tibur aquae fertile praefluunt
Et spissae nemorum comae Fingent Aeolio carmine nobilem.
Romæ principis urbiarn
Dignatur suboles inter amabiles
Vatum ponere me choros,
Et jam dente minus mordeor invido.
O, testudinis aureae
Dulcem quae strepillum, Pieri, temperas,
O mutis quoque piscibus
Donatura cycni, si libeat, sonum,

4. Clarabit] This word occurs no where else in this sense I believe. ‘Deliis foliis’ is another way of expressing ‘laurea Apollinari, ‘Delphica lauro.’ As to ‘Aeolio carmine,’ see C. iii. 90. 13, n. ‘Testudinis aureae’ is Pindar’s χρυσίας φόρμιγγας (Pyth. 1. 1).

18. Pieri] This singular is not common. Ovid uses it (Fast. iv. 222): ‘Pieris orsa loqui.’

19. mutis—piscibus] The Greek ἔλατος ἰχθυώς is thus explained by some, but the meaning of that word is doubtful.

22. monstror digito] Pers. (1. 28), “At pulchrum est digito monstrari et dici hic est.” In Epp. i. 19. 32, he calls himself “Latinus fidicen.” ‘Quod spiro’ means that I breathe the breath, not of life, but of poetry. Compare C. iv. 6. 29: “Spiritum Phoebus mihi—dedit.” Ovid (Trist. iv. 10. 110) says, it is true, but ‘vivo’ does not represent ‘spiro.’

‘Ergo quod vivus durisque laboribus obsto Gratia, Musa, tibi?’

Totum muneri hoc tui est:
Quod monstror digito praeteruntium
Romanae fidicen lyrae,
Quod spiro et placeo, si placeo, tuum est.

20. tui est: I have departed a little from the usual punctuation here, making 'hoc' refer to the preceding verses, and joining 'quod monstror' with 'quod spiro,' &c.

---

CARMEN IV.

A.U.C. 739.

The history of this ode is easily made out. The Vindelici were a tribe whose territories lay between the Danube and the lake of Constance, comprising the greater part of modern Bavaria and Swabia, and some part of the Tyrol. The Raetii lay to the south of the Vindelici, and reached to Lake Como on the south. These tribes, whom the historians describe as very fierce and warlike, commenced a system of predatory incursions into Cisalpine Gaul, in which they appear to have practised the greatest atrocities (Dion Cass. liv. 22; Strabo, iv. 6). Augustus was at this time (A.U.C. 738—39) in Transalpine Gaul, and Tiberius was with him. Drusus, his step-son, and younger brother of Tiberius, was Quaestor at Rome, and in his twenty-third year. He was required by Augustus to take the field against the offending tribes, whom he met under the Tridentine Alps and defeated signally. But though driven from Italy they continued their attacks upon Gaul, and Tiberius was accordingly sent by Augustus with more troops to his brother's assistance, and they between them effectually humbled the tribes, whose territories were constituted a Roman province under the united name of Raetiae, Raetia Prima, or Proper, and Secunda, which embraced the possessions of the Vindelici: these also comprised several other tribes, of whom Horace particularly mentions the Genauni and Breuni. The whole of this war took place in the spring and summer of the year A.U.C. 739, and we are led to suppose from C.iv. 14. 34—38, that it was brought to a conclusion in the month of August on the anniversary of the capture of Alexandria by Augustus in the year 724 (C. i. 37, Introduction). In honour of these victories Horace composed this ode and the fourteenth of this book, the one more expressly to celebrate the name of Drusus, the other of Tiberius. The two odes therefore must historically be viewed together. Whether they were written while the wars were yet fresh, or on the return of Augustus to Rome in the year A.U.C. 741, is doubted; but I incline to think they were written at different times, and should rather, from the character of the odes themselves, infer that the first was written immediately on the tidings of Drusus' victory before his brother joined him; and that the second, which has much less spirit in it, was composed on Augustus' return and by his desire, as a supplement to the first. The popularity of Drusus and the hopes that were entertained of him would create much enthusiasm at Rome on the occasion of his successes in his first campaign, and there is a hearty and vigorous tone about the fourth ode which does not appear so conspicuously in the fourteenth. Here the praises of Drusus are uppermost in the poet's mind, there Augustus is the real theme, and Tiberius can hardly be said to bear more than the second part. Nevertheless I agree with Franke in thinking it improbable Horace would have written the fourth ode without an allusion to Tiberius, if his victories in conjunction with his brother had taken place, or been known at Rome when he composed it. There is indeed tacit reference to Tiberius in v. 28; but not more than was unavoidable in alluding to Augustus as the fountain of those virtues which appeared in Drusus. Not to have alluded to Tiberius would have been as unnatural as to have omitted a more specific morrow of his part in the war had he joined it when the ode was written. Bentley's notion that Drusus only attacked and defeated the Vindelici and Tiberius the Raeti is ridiculous. He is led to it by v. 18 of this ode and 10 sqq. of C. 14, and by the statement of Velleius (ii. 95), "Uterque divisus partibus Raetos Vindelicosque aggressi," which merely means that they divided their forces, and attacked the tribes in different quarters, as Livy (xlv. 11) says of the taking of Cassandrea, "Divisio partibus oppugnare adorsi praetor et Eumenes." The two tribes and the minor tribes connected with them were united in one league, and the idea of the Vindelici being attacked in or near the territories of the Raeti ("Raetis sub Alpibus"), while the Raeti themselves looked on and waited, as Jani says, for Tiberius' arrival, is absurd. I am surprised that Franke adopts this notion on a literal interpretation of Horace's words.

ARGUMENT.

Like the young eagle just darting on its prey, or the young lion fresh from its dam, was Drusus when he met the rude Vindelici, and made them feel what hearts could do trained under the eye of Augustus. The brave give birth to the brave. The steer and the horse have the blood of their sires, and the eagle gives not birth to the dove. But education brings out the seeds of virtue. What Rome owes to the Nerones let the Metaurus witness, and the day which saw Hasdrubal defeated and drove the clouds and the fierce African from Latium. Our strength has grown and our gods have returned from that day, and Hannibal was forced to cry, "As the deer might pursue the wolf we are pursuing those we should fly. Like the shorn oak they gain strength with every blow, as the Hydra or the monsters of Thebes. Sink them in the deep, they rise more glorious than ever, and overthrow their victor in his strength. No more shall I send messengers of victory to Carthage; fallen, fallen are our hopes, and our fortune, for Hasdrubal is gone!" The hand of a Claudius prospers, for Jove and his own sagacity deliver him from danger.

Qualem ministrum fulminis alitem,
Cui rex deorum regnum in aves vagas
Permisit expertus fidelem
Juppiter in Ganymede flavo,
Olim juventas et patrius vigor
Nido labororum propulit insciun,
Vernique jam nimbis remotis
Insolitos docuere nisus

1. Qualem] The apodosis of this long opening (which however gains power as it proceeds) is to be found in the sixteenth verse. The best way to render it will be by changing the cases in 'ministrum' and 'juventas,' 'as that bird, the minister of the thunderbolts, by the impulse of youth from its nest is driven, and by the breezes of spring is taught,' &c. Virgil calls the eagle "Jovis armiger" (Aen. v. 258), which Pliny (N. H. x. 3, 4) says is his conventional title. Pindar calls him ἀργυρὸς ὀλυμπιάς (Pyth. i. 7), ὀλύμπιας ὀλυμπιάς (Ol. 13. 21). 'Vaga' as an epithet applied to birds corresponds to the Greek ἱερόποσιος. Horace follows a legend later than Homer in the story of Ganymede (see Dict. Myth., and C. iii. 20, 10). In illustration of 'exper tus in,' Dobree (Adv. p. 40) quotes Herod. (vii. 211), ἀποδεικνύμενοι ἐν ὄνει ἑπεταμψίου ἀμφίσβαται. Also Soph. Aj. 366. 537. 1006. 1315. Thucyd. iv. 90. Plat. Alc. i. p. 56. 1.

5. Olim] See C. iii. 10. 17, n. and Index. For 'vernî' some MSS. have 'vernîs.' Scaliger quarrelled with Horace for assigning to the early spring the first flight of the eagle, which is not fledged till the beginning of autumn, and Bentley does not see how this critic is to be answered. Nevertheless he does not take 'vernî' into the text, though he thinks it the proper reading.
Venti pavanetm, mox in ovilia
Demisit hostem vividus impetus,
Nunc in reluctanttes draones
Egit amor dapis atque pugnae:
Qualemve lactis caprea pascuis
Intenta fulvae matris ab ubere
Jam lacte depulsum leonem
Dente novo peritura vidit:
Videre Raetis bella sub Alpibus
Drusum gerentem Vindelici;—quibus
Mos unde deductus per omne
Tempus Amazonia securi
Dextras obarmet quaeere distuli,
Nec scire fas est omnia;—sed diu
Lateque victrices catervae
Consiliis juvenis revictae

Horace does not require to be put on his defence for such an error, if it be so. Propulit, 'docere,' demisit, 'egit,' are used in an aoristic sense.

14. matis ab ubere] 'Ab,' like ἄρο, is used absolutely: 'fresh from the dugs of his dam, yeajust weaned from the milk of his mother.' There is no more tautology in this than may reasonably be allowed, and I see no defect in it. 'Lacte depulsum' and 'ubere depulsum' are both common phrases, of which Bentley has given a sufficient number of instances; but, thinking that one of these expressions is enough in this place, he proposes to substitute out of his own head 'mane' or 'sponte' for 'lacte,' and, though he will not contend that Horace wrote either one or the other, he is satisfied that 'sponte' is much better than 'lacte,' in which I am not aware that any editor has been so imprudent as to agree with him. Cunningham has not proved the superiority of his own judgment to that of his adversary in the three emendations he proposes, which are 'jam nocte,' 'jam jamque' (which Sanadon and some others have adopted, but which can only have reference to something immediately impeding in the future), and 'uberaum jam lacte.' Others—Gesner, John, &c.—have taken 'ubera' for an adjective, and I am surprised to find Dillenbr. of this number, taking 'jam,' with 'ubere,' and interpreting thus: 'driven (by the strong instincts within him) from his mother's milk, though it be still abundant,' that is, prematurely weaning itself from its mother.

17. Raetis] The reading of all but a very few MSS., and those, I believe, of no great weight, that of the Scholiasts, and every edition till Bentley's, is 'Raeti' ('Rhaeti' or 'Retai,' but 'Raeti' is the form which is supported by inscriptions). The Scholiasts take the two names together, as if the name of the combined people was 'Raeti Vindelici.' Other MSS. have 'et Vindelici,' but these are all modern. Dillenbr. retains 'Raeti' without inserting 'et,' and supposes an anacolouthon to arise out of the digression (18—22). Cunningham, who adopts 'Raetis,' will not allow Bentley the merit of an original conjecture, and he acknowledges that Heinsius had hit upon the same before him. But this is not worth disputing. The reading appears to me to be the true one (see Introduction). Several editors cast out the lines 18—22 as totally unmeaning, and Franke rejects them as 'ineptum glossensa.' He would have been a bold scribe that would thrust in such lines into the text. They are quoted by Servius on Aen. i. 244, and, whatever may be thought of their beauty or aptitude, they must be looked upon as genuine. The Scholiasts, pretending to interpret the lines, infer from them that the Vindelici derived their race from the Amazons. All we can gather from these verses is, that the Vindelici carried some species of battle-axe, that the Romans had felt the weight and edge of it, and that the Vindelici were counted a strange wild race whose origin and history the Romans professed to know nothing about. I have already drawn attention to the pronon-
Sensere quid mens rite, quid indoles
Nutrita faustis sub penetralibus
Posset, quid Augusti paternus
In pueros animus Nerones.
Fortes creantur fortibus et bonis;
Est in juvencis, est in equis patrum
Virtus, neque imbellem fercoces
Progenerant aquilae columbam;
Doctrina sed vim promovet insitam,
Recte cultu pectora roborant;
Uteunque defecere mores
Indecorant bene nata culpae.
Quid debeas, o Roma, Neronibus
Testis Metaurus flumen et Hasdrubal
Devictus et pulcher fugatis
Ille dies Latii tenebris
Qui primus alma risit adorea,
Dirus per urbes Afer ut Italas
Ceu flamma per taedas vel Eurus Per Siculas equitavit undas.

ness of some editors, who do not understand their legitimate province, to throw upon the dishonesty of copyists the defects they profess to find in their author (see C. iii. 11, 17. iii. 17, Introduction). 'Sed' is commonly used after digressions to recover the thread of the subject.

24. revictae] The various reading of a few corrected MSS. 'repressae,' which the Scholiast Porphyrian seems to have followed, and which Bentley has admitted into the text, is not nearly so well supported by authority as 'revictae,' and has not its weight.

Forcell. refers to Lucret. (v. 410), "Inde cadunt vires aliqua ratione revictae," and Orelli to Cic. pro Sulla (1), "perdit i civis redomiti atque victi," 'Reducatae' (I suppose for 'redactae'), 'repulsae' and other variations are to be met with, but 'revictae' is the true reading, and nobody will think it necessary to follow Bentley in changing 'faustis' into 'sanctis' without any better authority than his taste in epithets. That 're' is added to some verbs without materially changing their meaning has been shown before, C. i. 31. 12, n. The difference between 'mens' and 'indoles' is, that one refers to the head, the other to what we should call the heart, the disposition.

29. Fortes creantur] It is more than probable that Horace had in his mind Euripides' words,—

'Fortibus et bonis' corresponds to the common Greek expression which it is so difficult to render, καλοῖς κάγαθοῖς. Those words are in the ablative case. Orelli has quoted several instances of their use by Cicero. Among others, see Cic. in Verr. ii. 3, 69, "Quem ego, judices, quamvis bonum fortunem facile paterem evadere," &c., where he says he should be glad to see Verres' son turn out a better man than his father, which he thinks is possible, though (on Horace's principle) not probable. Those whom Horace is referring to are the worthies of the Claudian family, not, as Orelli rightly observes, to the unworthy father of the two youths whom Augustus had adopted, and one of whom (Drusus) was believed, not without reason, to be his own son. 'Indecorant' and 'dedecorant' (v. 36) are both supported by good MSS. The least likely form to have been invented is 'indecorant,' and (as it is consistent with analogy) I have on that account adopted it. Bentley prefers, but does not adopt it.
Post hoc secundis usque laboribus
Romana pubes crevit et impio
Vastata Poenorum tumultu
Fana deos habuere rectos;
Dixitque tandem perfidus Hannibal:
Sectamur ultra quos opimus
Fallere et effugere est triumphus.

Gens quae cremato fortis ab Ilio
Jactata Tuscis aequoribus sacra
Natosque maturosque patres
Pertulit Ausonias ad urbes,
Duris ut ilex tonsa bipennibus
Nigrae feraci frondis in Algido,
Per damna, per caedes, ab ipso
Ducit opes animunque ferro.

Non hydra secto corpore firmior
Vinci dolentem crevit in Herculem,
Monstrumve submisere Colchi Maius Echioniave Thebae.

Merses profundo, pulchrior evenit:
Luctere, multa proruont integrum
Cum laude victorem geretque
Proelia conjugibus loquenda.

38. Metaurus] See A. P. 18: "Aut flumen Rhenum." The defeat of Hasdrubal on the Metaurus is related by Livy (xxvii. 43, sqq.). How 'adorea' came to signify 'glory' is sufficiently explained by Forcell. and the passage of Pliny (N. H. xvii. 3) which he quotes.

42. Dirus] C. ii. 12. 2, n. This is the third time this epithet is applied to Hannibal, whom with reason the Romans held in greater respect than any enemy they ever had, though 'perfidia plus quam Punica' was freely attributed to him. 'Ut,' 'ever since' (Epod. vii. 19). 'Taeda' is not torches, but a forest of pines, a conflagration in which is one of the most terrific sights that the eye can witness. 'Equitavit' seems to be taken from Eurip. (Phoen. 209),— τεριφότων

υπίρ ακαρσίστων πεδίων Σικελίας Ζεύγου πυράκτων ιπτισάναρος ἐν οὐρανῷ κάλλιστον κλείσμα.

51. Sectamur ultra] 'We are pushing on and pursuing those whom to evade and to escape is the noblest triumph we can know.' There is often some difficulty in translating 'ultra.' 'Uls' is an old preposition involving the same root as 'ille,' and signifying 'on the other side of,' opposed to 'cis' (Key's L. G. 1389). 'Ultro' signifies to a place beyond, as 'ultra' at a place beyond. If 'ultra' therefore ever means voluntarily, it is not as involving the root 'vol' of 'volu,' but as implying the forwardness of the agent to do what he is not obliged or asked. (See Cic. in Verr. ii. 2. 2, Long's note.) With this speech of Hannibal may be compared the words Livy puts into his mouth (xxvii. 51).

58. Per damna.] See Livy (xxix. 3), "Illis Romanam plebem, illis Latinum juventutem praebuisse majorem semper frequenterque pro tot caesis adolescentibus subolescentem."

62. Vinci dolentem] 'Indignant at the thought of being beaten;' or 'refusing to be beaten,' as "penna metuenue solvi" (C. ii. 2.
HORATII FLACCI

Karthagini jam non ego nuntios
Mittam superbos: occidit, occidit
Spes omnis et fortuna nostri Nominis Hasdrubale interempto.
Nil Claudiae non perficient manus,
Quas et benigno numine Juppiter
Defendit et curae sagaces
Expediunt per acuta belli.

7), a wing that will not melt. "Culpari metuit fides" (C. iv. 5. 20).

65. exiit] I am surprised that such careful editors as Orelli and Jahn should on the slenderest authority adopt the barbarous word 'exiit' in this place, merely to correspond to the futures 'proruit' and 'geret.' There is better authority for the present tense in those words than for this correction. Bentley reads 'proruit' and 'gerit,' but the best MSS. have the future. Napoleon's declaration that the English were too dull to know when they were beaten was only a repetition of Hamibal's complaint.

73. perficient] There seems to be more authority for the future tense than the present which Bentley adopts, and as a prophecy in the mouth of an enemy it has perhaps more weight, and it is more in accordance with the preceding constructions. 'Acuta belli' corresponds, as Turnehus observes, to Hom. (iv. 352), διὸν Ἀργα. The same construction occurs C. iv. 12. 19, "amara curarum."

CARMEN V.

A. U. C. 740.

This ode was written after the German victories celebrated in the last ode and C. 14, and perhaps sent to Augustus in Gaul A. U. C. 740. What were the reasons for the Emperor's protracted absence we cannot tell, but we need not on that account give credit to the conjectures mentioned before (C. iv. 2, Introduction). It was perhaps the policy of Augustus to make his absence felt, and we may believe that the language of Horace, which bears much more the impression of real feeling than of flattery, represented the sentiments of great numbers at Rome, who felt the want of that presiding genius which had brought the city through its long troubles and given it comparative peace. There could not be a more comprehensive picture of security and rest obtained through the influence of one mind than is represented in this ode, if we except that with which no merely mortal language can compare (Isaiah xi. and lxv. Micah iv.). The Carmen Saeculare contains much that is repeated here. Virgil's description in his fourth Eclogue will naturally occur to the reader.

ARGUMENT.

Too long hast thou left us, our guardian; fulfil thy promise and return as the spring to gladden our hearts. As the mother for her absent son, so does Rome sigh for her Caesar. Our fields are at peace, the very sea is at rest, our morals are pure, our women are chaste, the law is strong, our enemies are silenced, each man lives in quiet and blesses thy name as Greece that of Castor or Hercules. Long mayst thou be spared to bless us, is our prayer both morning and evening.
Divis orte bonis, optime Romulae
Custos gentis, abes jam nimium diu;
Maturum redditum pollicitus patrum
Sancto concilio redi.
Lucem redde tuae, dux bone, patriae: 5
Instar veris enim vultus ubi tuus
Affulsit populo, gratior it dies
Et soles melius nitent.
Ut mater juvenem, quem Notus invido
Flatu Carpathii trans maris aequora
Cunctantem spatio longius annuo
Dulci distinet a domo,
Votis ominibusque et precibus vocat,
Curvo nec faciem litore demovet:
Sic desideriis icta fidelibus
Quaerit patria Caesarem.
Tutus bos etenim rura perambulat,
Nutrit rura Ceres almaque Faustitas,
Pacatum volitant per mare navitae,
Culpam metuit Fides,
Nullis polluitur casta domus stupris,
Mos et lex maculosum edomuit nefas,
Laudantur simili prole puerperae, Culpam poena premit comes.

1. Divis orte bonis.] Compare C. iv. 2. 33. 'Custos' is repeated in "custode rerum Caesare." (C. iv. 15. 17). 'Romulus' or 'Romuleus,' 'Dardanus' or 'Dardanius,' are used as the metre requires by the poets.
10. Carpathii] C. i. 35. 8. 'Distinet' (v. 12) is a better reading than 'detinet,' and was that of Acron, since he explains it 'separat.' 'Demovet' I prefer to 'dimovet' (v. 14), for the reason stated C. i. 1. 13, n. Lambinus first proposed 'demovet' here. As usual the MSS. vary, but most have 'di.'
18. Nutrit rura] This no doubt is the true reading. Bentley proposes 'farra,' and Tan. Faber substitutes 'prata' in the former line to avoid the repetition of 'rura.' Cunningham proposes 'culta,' but the repetition is plainly designed. 'The ox wanders in security over the fields, to the fields Ceres gives fertility.' Nothing could be less probable than Bentley's conjecture, and his reasoning is worse than his correction. Why should not the fields be said to be nourished or fostered by Ceres? The difficulty only lies in this restless corrector's own want of simplicity. Silius (xii. 375) speaks of "Arva Ceres nutrita favore." 'Faustitas' is a new name not elsewhere met with for 'Felicitas' (Acron). Velleius (ii. 89) thus describes the blessings secured by Augustus: "Rediit cultus agris, sacris honos, securitas hominibus, certa cuique rerum suarum possessio." 'Pacatum' means delivered from pirates. The commentators quote Suet. (Oct. 98), "Victores nautaeque de navi Alexandrina Angusto acclamatus per illum se vivere, per illum navigare, liberata atque fortunis per illum frui." 'Mos et lex' is the combination required in C. iii. 24. 35: "Quid leges sine moribus." On the proper distinction between 'mos' and 'lex,' see article 'Jus' in Smith's Dict. Ant. 'Laudantur simili prole puerperae' is a way of expressing chastity derived from the Greeks, as—Quis Parthum paveat, quis gelidum Seythen, 25
Quis Germania quos horrida parturit
Fetus, incolumni Caesare? quis ferae Bellum curet Hiberiae?
Condit quisque diem collibus in suis
Et vitem viduas ducit ad arbores; 30
Hinc ad vina redit laetus et alteris
Te mensis adhibet deum;
Te multa prece, te prosequitur mero
Defuso pateris et Laribus tuum
Miscet numen, uti Graecia Castoris 35
Et magni memor Herculis.
Longas o utinam, dux bone, ferias
Praestes Hesperiae! dicimus integro
Sicci mane die, dicimus uvidi
Cum Sol Oceano subest.
CARMEN VI.

A.U.C. 737.

The appointment of Horace to compose the principal ode at the Secular Games A.U.C. 737 seems to have given him much pleasure, and to have given his mind a new stimulus in favour of ode-writing. To the honour thus conferred upon him we owe, perhaps as much as to Augustus' bidding, this fourth book, of which the third, sixth, eighth, and ninth all bear marks of the legitimate pride that circumstance awakened. This sixth ode is a kind of preface to the Secular Ode, and dwells chiefly on the praises of Apollo as having been the slayer of Achilles, and thereby having preserved Aeneas to be the founder of the Roman family: and having prayed for and obtained the help of that god for the task he is going to perform, Horace turns, as choragus, to the members of his chorus, and instructs them in their duty.

ARGUMENT.

O thou, the punisher of Niobe and Tityos, and the slayer of Achilles, who shook the walls of Troy was no match for thee, but fell under thy strength as the pine-tree laid low by the axe, or the cypress by the east wind. He would have taken Troy, not by guile but by cruel force, but that Jove had granted Aeneas to thy prayers and those of his dear Venus. O Apollo, support the honour of the Roman muse. His spirit is upon me: ye virgins and boys, keep time to my song and sing of Apollo and Diana. O damsel, when a bride thou shalt look back and say, "When the age brought back its festival, I sang the pleasant song that the poet Horace made."

Dive, quem proles Niobei magnae
Vindicem linguae Tityosque raptor Sensit et Troae prope victor altae
Phthius Achilleis,
Ceteris major, tibi miles impar,
Filius quamvis Thetidis mariae
Dardanes turres quateret tremenda
Cuspide pugnax.

1. Dive,] The purpose of the ode being to invoke the assistance of Apollo for the composition of the Secular Ode, the invocation is suspended here, and not taken up again till the praises of the god have been sung, as the avenger of crime and the destroyer of Achilles (C. iii. 4. 77). The story of Niobe, the proud mother, and the lustful Tityos, will be found in the Dict. Myth. The Greek form being Νιοβη, the Latin is Niobea, not Niobaea, which is the common reading. 'Magna lingua' is a close copy of Πελαγος γερα υμνων θεου τ' ε' τυπο τοσιντικς, ως λιγωσιν, εκ Φαιδον εκεις.

The common legend assigns it to Paris, but not without Apollo's help.

6. quamvis] All Orelli's MSS. have "quamvis," and the old editors and most of the modern. Gesner and Doering, following the "better MSS." of Torrentius, have "quamquam," and so Jani and Fes. See C. i. 28. 11, n.
Ille, mordaci velut icta ferro
Pinus aut impulsa cupressus Euro, Procidit late posuitque collum in Pulvere Teuero.
Ille non inclusus equo Minervaev
Sacra mentito male feriatos
Troas et laetam Priami choreis Falleret aulam;
Sed palam captis gravis, heu nefas heu,
Nescios fari pueros Achivis
Ureret flammis, etiam latentem
Matris in alvo,
Ni tuis victus Venerisque gratae
Vocibus divom pater annuisset
Rebus Aeneae potiore ductos
Alite muros.
Doctor argutae fidicen Thaliae,
Phoebe, qui Xantho lavis amne crines,
Dauniae defende decus Camenae,
Levis Agyieu.
Spiritum Phoebus mihi, Phoebus artem
Carminis nomenque dedit poëtae.
Virginum primae puerique claris
Patribus orti,

17. captis] From the variation of the oldest MSS. in this word it has been generally given up as a genuine reading, while, in the absence of a better word, it has been usually received into the text. I do not think it would be profitable to repeat all that has been said on the subject, and have no means of suggesting a better reading.
It must be understood therefore that none of the editors defend 'captis' as if it were the word Horace wrote, and that it is only adopted for want of a better. A similar instance, in which the oldest known MSS. are supposed to be at fault, is found in Epp. ii.
2. 199. The Scholiasts give us no help in the matter. 'Victis' and 'victor' are among the various readings of the old and good MSS. for 'captis;' and, as these cannot be mere errors of transcription, it may be assumed that the real word is lost. For this reason the word 'captis' is usually printed in a different type from the rest.
21. Ni tuis victus] 'Flexus,' which Bentley adopts on little authority for 'vic-
tus,' is an evident gloss.

23. ducet] Aen. i. 423: "Pars ducere muros." The Greeks would say τοιχως ιλανεις. To follow all the senses to which this word 'ducere' is applied, and to trace them to their radical sense, is not easy.
Those who wish to attempt the task will find ample materials in the examples given in Forcellini's Lexicon.

25. Doctor argutae] Some MSS. have 'ductor' (corresponding to μονασγενης), others 'Argivae,' some both 'ductor,' and 'Argivae.' Bentley thinks 'Argivae' the best reading (as "Graiae Camenae," C. ii. 16.
38), supposing Horace meant to oppose the Greek to the Roman muse, but he does not sufficiently trust his own arguments to admit that word into the text. Jani says
'Argivae' is "haud dubie unica vera lec-tio." I have no doubt 'argutae' is right.
The river Xanthus here mentioned was in Lycia.

The Greeks gave this name (αγυνες) to Apollo as worshipped in and protecting the streets of cities.
Deliae tutela deae fugaces
Lyncas et cervos cohibentis arcu,
Lesbiun servate pedem meique
Pollicis ictum,
Rite Latonae puerum canentes,
Rite crescentem face Noctilucam, Prosperam frugum celeremque pronos
Volvere menses.
Nupta jam dices: Ego dis amicum,
Seculo festas referente luces,
Reddidi carmen, docilis modorum Vatis Horati.

31. Virginum primae] The chorus on this great occasion was chosen from noble families, as the passage shows. The Lesbian foot was the Sapphic. There is no example of this passive use of 'tutela' earlier than Horace, as far as I know. Forcellini gives none.

32. Pollicis ictum.] The beating of time by the motion of the thumb, not the striking of the lyre, as Stephens explains it, "quod dicit quasi lyram ipsam percutit."

33. Noctilcum,] 'Noctilqua is the reading of many MSS. to agree with 'face.'

39. Prosperam frugum] This and 'docilis modorum' (v. 43) are Greek constructions.

42. festas—luces,] The Secular games lasted three days and nights. Some editors separate this ode into two parts at v. 29, an arbitrary proceeding which substitutes two unmeaning fragments for an entire composition full of spirit, and complete in its design.

CARMEN VII.

That this ode is addressed to the same person as the fifth epistle of the first book is pretty certain. That person was an advocate (v. 9), and this is commended for his eloquence (v. 23); that person was busy in making money, and so was this. But who this Torquatus was we have no means of deciding. Estré (Prosop. Hor. p. 497) suggests that it may have been Aulus Torquatus mentioned by Nepos in his Life of Atticus (c. 11), as having been with the army of Brutus and Cassius at Philippi. This would give him an acquaintance with Horace, which may have ripened into friendship. In Smith's Dict. Biog. Weichert's supposition that C. Nonius Aspernas Torquatus is the subject of these invitations has, I think, too hastily been adopted. But it is all very uncertain, and not less so the date of the ode, which may have been written after the epistle, or, which I think much more probable, long before. It bears the strongest likeness to C. i. 4 (which, it may be observed, was nominally addressed to one of Horace's companions at Philippi, and therefore, if Estré's conjecture is right, to a friend of Torquatus); and supposing it to have been written, which I think not at all unlikely, about the same time as that, its not having been inserted in the first publication would be accounted for by that resemblance, and its being inserted in this was probably for the purpose of making up a fasciculus to publish according to Augustus' command. I do not know why one should go into this and such-like minute points except as it helps us to trace the progress of Horace's mind and style, which it is plain went through a great change after the publication of the three first books of the odes. I very much doubt whether he could have copied himself so exactly as he has done in these two odes if any great interval had elapsed between them. I therefore am inclined to set down this among Horace's earlier odes which he brought out of his desk for the purpose above mentioned. But others will have their own opinion, and I am not wedded to mine. It will at any rate be observed that the introduction of Torquatus' name or the omission of it would be equally immaterial to the character and scope of the ode, and that what has been said of other odes, and among them that above referred to, is equally applicable to this, namely, that the name of a friend is only introduced to give life and individuality to the poem.

ARGUMENT.

The winter is gone and the spring is returning with its green leaves, its gentler streams, and its Graces. The seasons change and remind us of our end: but the revolving year repairs its losses, while we go to the dust for ever, and we know not when it will be. What thou dost enjoy thyself is so much taken from thy greedy heir. When thou art dead, Torquatus, thy family, thine eloquence, and thy piety will not restore thee to life any more than the love of Diana could bring back Hippolytus or the friendship of Theseus Peirithous.

Diffugere nives, redeunt jam gramina campis
Arboribusque comae;
Mutat terra vices et decrescentia ripas
Flumina praeterereunt;
Gratia cum Nymphis geminisque sororibus audet
Ducere nuda choros.
Immortalia ne speres monet annus et alnum
Quae rapit hora diem.
Frigora mitescunt Zephyris, ver proterit aestas
Interitura simul
Pomifer Auctumnus fruges effuderit, et mox
Bruma recurrit iners.
Damna tamen celeres reparant caelestia lunae:
Nos ubi decidimus
Quo pius Aeneas quo dives Tullus et Ancus
Pulvis et umbra sumus.

3. Mutat...vices] This is no more than 'subit vices.' Vices' is what is termed a cognate accusative. I do not know why Forcell, should have supposed 'decrescentia' meant 'valde crescentia.' I find the same interpretation in a note in Bond's variorum edition, but whose it is does not appear. The meaning is perfectly clear—that the streams lately swollen by the winter rains or by the first melting of the snow, had subsided and no longer overflowed their banks but flowed quietly along them. See C. iv. 12. 3. Respecting the Graces, see C. i. 4. 6; 30. 5, n.

13. Damna...caelestia] I do not agree with Orelli in referring these words to the changes of the moon. 'Tamen' shows that the changes and deteriorations of the weather and seasons are intended, and 'celeres lunae' are the quick-revolving months. So Lucan (viii. 468):

——noctique rependit
Lux minor hibernae verni solatia damnii.
Quis scit an adjiciant hodiernae crustinae summae
   Tempora di superi?
Cuncta manus avidas fugient heredis amico
   Quae dederis animo.
Cum semel occideris et de te splendida Minos
   Fecerit arbitria,
Non, Torquate, genus, non te facundia, non te Restituet pietas;
Infenter neque enim tenebris Diana pudicum
   Liberat Hippolytum,
Nec Lethaea valet Theseus abrumpere caro Vincula Pirithoo.

15. pius Aeneas] Here Orelli again deserts his Berne MS., which reads with many others 'pius.' All the editors till Bentley had that word. His reasons for adopting 'pater' are, first the authority of better MSS., especially the oldest Blandinian, and, secondly, that 'pietas' occurs below (v. 24), an argument that is not worth much, and would rather tell the other way, if any thing. Neither do I think Orelli's notion, that 'pius' and 'divae' would sound too much like opposition, as if Aeneas were poor and Tullus rich, of any weight. Bentley proposes to change 'divae' into 'pauper;' because the kings of old were poor. But he has no authority, and Horace's purpose is to show that no means are sufficient to bring back the dead, not piety, nor wealth, nor power. I have on this assumption adopted 'pius' as having more meaning here than 'pater.' There is a similar verse in Epp. i. 6. 27:—

"Ire tamen restat Numa quo devenit et Ancus."

17. Quis scit] This may or may not be imitated from Euripides (Alc. 783):—

οὐκ ἔστι θυμητῶν ὡσις ἔσπεισταται τὴν αὖρον μέλλουσαν εἰ βιώσαι.

For 'summae' there are MSS., and among others the Blandinian above mentioned, which read 'vitae,' which also appears in Ven. 1483, but it is only a gloss. No copy-

ist would have invented 'summae.' 'Amico animo dare' seems to be a literal version of φίλῳ ὑψωτο εὐριδεσθαι. Simonides says,—

   —βιστρον ποιεί τίμα
   ὕψωτο τῶν ἀγαθῶν τῆς χαρίζομενος.

(85 Bergk, sub fin.)

21. splendida] This is an unusual word for such a meaning. Forcell. interprets it "praeclaram et æquam sententiam et prop batting omnibus," and I do not know that there is any further meaning in the word. It may have reference to the august character of the tribunal, as Orelli says.

25. Horace follows the Greek legend respecting Diana and Hippolytus. Ovid (Met. xv. 543, sqq.) makes him return from the dead, being brought to life by the skill of Aesculapius. See also Aen. vii. 765, sqq. The common story of Theseus and his friend is, that both having been consigned to their punishment together, Hercules went down and delivered Theseus, leaving Peirithous to his fate. I do not see why this should not be the legend Horace follows: it may be understood that Theseus pleaded for Peirithous when he was himself returning, but failed to obtain his release. Dillenbr. supposes Horace to have followed some different legend or to have altered the common one himself.
CARMEN VIII.

All that is known of C. Marcus Censorinus, the person to whom this ode is addressed, may be found in Smith's Dict. Biog. (Censorinus, 6). He was a man of birth and education, and much beloved, according to Velleius, who says of his death, "Graviter tulit civitas." Horace pays him the compliment of believing that he would esteem an ode of his more highly than any costly gifts he could offer in accordance with the common practice among friends of making each other presents (strenas) on new-year's day and other festivals. We have no means of determining when the ode was written. But see C. iv. 6, Introduction.

ARGUMENT.

If I were rich in statues and pictures, I would give such to my friends, and the best to thee, Censorinus. But I have none, and thou desirest not these. What I have I offer, verses in which thou delightest. No monuments of marble, not their own mighty deeds could enoble the Scipiones like Ennius' verses. Thine own virtues must remain obscure but for the muse. What would Aecetus or Romulus have been without her? She raises men to the skies, as she did Hercules, the Tyndaridae, and Liber.

Donarem pateras graataque commodus,
Censorine, meis aera sodalibus,
Donarem tripodas, praemia fortium
Graiorum, neque tu pessima munerum
Ferres, divite me silicet artium 5
Quas aut Parrhasius protulit aut Scopas,
Hic saxo, liquidis ille coloribus
Sollers nunc hominem ponere, nunc deum.
Sed non haec mihi vis, non tibi talium
Res est aut animus deliciarum egens. 10
Gaudes carminibus; carmina possumus
Donare et pretium dicere muneri.

5. artium, ] Though this is the only passage that Forcellini quotes for 'artes' as 'works of art,' it occurs in the same sense Epp. i. 6. 17: "Marmor vetus aeraque et artes Suspice." Also in Cic. (de Legg. ii. 2), "antiquorum artibus;" and in Virg. (Aen. v. 350), "clypeum—Didymaonis artes." This sense of 'proferre,' to produce as we say a work of art, is not given by Forcelli. Orelli quotes Tibull. (i. 10. 1), "Quis fuit horrendos primus qui protulit ense?" which however is not quite the same thing. 'Ponere' is a more common word. Persius uses it (i. 70):—

"Ecce modo heros sensus afferre videmus
Nugari solitos Greece, nec ponere lucum Artifices, nec rus saturum laudare."

Ovid (A. A. iii. 401): "Si Venerem Cous musquam posuisset Apelles." See A. P. 34: "Quia ponere totum Nesciet." Non incisa notis marmora publicis,
Per quae spiritus et vita redit bonis
Post mortem ducibus, non celeres fugae 15
Rejectaeque retrorsum Hannibalis minae,
Non incendia Karthaginis impiae
Ejus qui domita nomen ab Africa
Lucratus redidi clarius indicant
Laudes, quam Calabrae Pierides: neque 20

13. Non incisa] There is a little confusion (which however is easily seen through by those who avoid the commentators and judge for themselves) in the lines that follow. Horace means to say that the monuments raised to heroes by their country and their deeds themselves do not shed so much honour upon them as the poet’s verses do. He illustrates the deeds of heroes by the exploits of the Scipiones, and the poet’s verses by the poem Ennius wrote in praise of the Elder. It is true that, if we knew nothing of the destruction of Carthage but what is here mentioned, we might suppose that the person who destroyed it was celebrated by Ennius, and confusion would arise. But as we do not suppose Horace was ignorant that Carthage was burnt by Scipio Africanus Minor, and that Ennius died many years before that event, so neither would Horace assume such ignorance in his readers. When he says that the defeat of Hannibal by the elder Scipio and the destruction of Carthage by the younger, do not hold up their name more nobly than the muse of Calabria, who does not supply in his own mind “which was employed in doing honour to the elder?” If, as Bentley says, every boy of ten years old knows as much as this, so much the less obscurity is there in the sentence. He proposes to mend it by omitting altogether the seventeenth verse, which, he says, halts in the metre and confuses the author’s meaning. The remedy is simple; but the MSS. we possess or have any record of all contain that verse. The other remedies proposed are to change ‘incendia’ into some word which shall not be inapplicable to the conquests of the elder Scipio, and Cunningham has supposed ‘impedimenta’ to be the word, Doering ‘stipendia,’ Hermann ‘dispensia,’ none of which are at all satisfactory. That no word short of destruction (implying therefore that the younger Scipio is meant) existed in the copies of one of the Scholiasts (Comm. Crzq.) may be inferred from his note, “quia contra foedus juramento violato Romanis rebellarunt.” Others suppose that ‘incendia’ does not necessarily mean the burning of Carthage, but is only another way of expressing the overthrow of its power by the elder Scipio, or his burning of the fleet, or of the camp of Syphax. But, considering the notoriety of the final destruction of that city by fire, this would only be charging Horace with wantonly confusing his readers. And yet it would seem that the Scholiasts and the older commentators all understand but one Scipio to be referred to, and they must have understood the line therefore in some way consistent with such an interpretation. It must not be overlooked that the verse “Ejus, qui,” &c., applies to either of the Scipiones. Another remedy which is proposed is to suppose that two verses have been lost after the seventeenth, which would have explained its meaning; the ground of which hypothesis is, that odes in this measure, of which however there are but two others (C. i. 1, and iii. 30), are so written as to be capable of division into stanzas of four lines each, and this ode wants two verses to enable it to meet that rule. But the rule is arbitrary, and a precarious foundation for such an assumption as the loss of two verses, of which no traces whatever are to be found in the oldest MSS. and commentators. On the whole I see no sufficient objection to the verse to require its being omitted or branded with asterisks, though the authority of Buttmann, who thinks it spurious (Mythol. Jung, vol. ii. append. Horaz und nicht-Horaz), will have weight, as it should. But his objection is founded on the rhythm, which I hardly think can be admitted as sufficient ground. Baxter’s note is more sensible than his usually are: “Nollem Bentleius ita se turbaret quod Horatius Scipionum acta in unum fere coegerit poetici compendii studiosus. Certe vel summis poetis ejusmodi ανυστορησια lvere admodum est crimen.”

15. fugae] This is only a way of expressing his hasty departure from Italy at the summons of the Carthaginian senate.

18. nomen ab Africa Lucratus] If the Si chartae sileant quod bene feceris
Mercedem tuleris. Quid foret Iliae
Mavortisque puer si taciturnitas Obstaret meritis invida Romuli?
Ereptum Stygiis fluctibus Aeacum
Virtus et favor et lingua potentium
Vatum divitibus consercat insulis.
Dignum laude virum Musa vetat mori:
Caelo Musa beat. Sic Jovis interest
Optatis epulis impiger Hercules,
Clarum Tyndaridae sidus ab infinis
Quassas eripiant aequoribus rates,
Ornatus viridi tempora pimpino
Liber vota bonos ducit ad exitus.

20. Calabrae Pierides: The muse of Calabria, i.e. of Ennius, who was born at RADIUS, a Calabrian town. He wrote, as observed above, a poem on the elder Scipio.

25. Aeacum: The praises of Aeacus and his family are frequent in Pindar, particularly in connexion with the island of Aegina (Pyth. viii. 21, sqq. Nem. iii. 28. Isthm. vii. 23, &c.). 'Virtus et favor' are generally taken like 'lingua' as belonging to 'potentium vatum,' so that 'virtus' is 'vis ingenii, facultas poética.' I doubt the accuracy of that interpretation. I think it rather means that, though Aeacus was virtuous (and he was much celebrated for his justice), his virtue would not have raised him to the skies but for the applause won by him by the poets; the causes therefore are his virtue and the public esteem (favor), and the poet's praise that made his virtue known. The other heroes mentioned are those instanced in a former ode (iii. 3). Concerning the 'divites insulae,' see Epod. xvi. The last line is only a way of expressing the apotheosis of Liber.—Hermann has reconstructed this ode with more even than his usual boldness. Those who wish to see how he has done it will find his version in Orelli's Excursus.

CARMEN IX.

A.U.C. 737 (†).

It is singular that the ode which of all others dwells most on the moral virtues of the person addressed should be written to one whose moral character has been so much blackened as that of M. Lollius. The integrity which Horace so highly commends is that particular virtue in which, according to the testimony of the historian Velleius (ii. 97. 102), and of Pliny (N. H. ix. 35), and of the emperor Tiberius (Tac. Ann. iii. 48), he was most wanting. But he was a personal enemy of the emperor, and Velleius was Tiberius' worst flatterer. Pliny wrote what he heard, and this would come down through the medium of statements made at a time when every one was ready to abuse the most virtuous who were out of court favour. Lollius, as we have seen (C. iv. 2, Int.), was defeated A. D. C. 737 by the Sigambri, but he retained his great influence with Augustus, whom it was not easy, we may believe, to impose upon. At any rate, if he was hypocrite enough to deceive Augustus, Horace may be excused for assigning to him excellencies he did not possess. The date of the ode is not at all certain. The defeat of Lollius, which caused a great deal of alarm at Rome, very probably raised a good many voices against him, and gave an advantage to his enemies; and it is not improbable that Horace wrote this ode to meet their attacks, and to console him under his defeat. The confident tone that runs through it brings the ode under the remark made in the introduction to Ode 6 of this book.

ARGUMENT.

Think not that my verses will die: though Homer stands first among poets, Pindar, Simonides, Alcaeus, Stesichorus, Anacreon, Sappho,—these all survive. Helen was not the first woman that loved; nor Ilium the only city that has been sacked; nor the heroes of the Iliad all that have fought; but the rest have been forgotten, because they have no poet to sing of them. Buried virtue is little better than buried dulness. I will not therefore let thy labours pass unsung, Lollius, thy sagacity and uprightness, thy mind free from avarice and secure from corruption. It is not the possessor of riches that is wealthy, but the man who knows how to use the gifts of Heaven and to endure poverty, who hates corruption, and is ready to lay down his life for his country or his friends.

Ne forte credas interitura quae
Longe sonantem natus ad Auffidum
Non ante vulgatas per artes
Verba loquor socianda chordis:
Non si priores Maenonius tenet Sedes Homerus Pindaricae latent Caeaeque et Alcaei minaces
Stesichorique graves Camenae;
Nec si quid olim lusit Anacreon
Delevit aetas; spirat adhuc amor
Vivuntque commissi calores Aeoliae fidibus puellae.

1. Ne forte ["Ne circumplexe pronuntiantiandum est, i.e. ne credideris."] This note of the Scholiast is, I believe, incorrect (though Jani says it is "simplicior et probabilior ratio"), and so at any rate is Baxter's conclusion, "Forto igitur πλησιάζεται." The sentence I think is: "Lest perchance you should suppose—remember that even if Homer stands first Pindar is not forgotten." So Lamb., Cruquiis, Heins., Bentley, and most modern editors. If, as Orelli truly says, Horace feels a pride in referring to his native stream, why does he object to the explanation I have given as the most obvious of C. iii. 30. 10? Though Horace says he was born near the Auffidus, Venusia, his native town, was fifteen miles south of that river, on that branch of the Via Appia which leads from Beneventum to Tarentum. As to 'ne,' see S. 1. 2. 80, n.

8. Stesichorique graves Camenae.] The muse of Stesichorus is called 'gravis' as he chose for his subjects principally those which belonged to Epic poetry, as wars and heroes and so forth. "Magiiae, profundae; nam et ipsa bellorum scriptor," is the Scholiast's explanation of the word.
Horatii Flacci

Non sola comptos arsit adulteri
Crimes, et aurum vestibus illitum
Mirata regalesque cultus
Et comites Helaea Lacaena, Primusve Teucer tela Cydonio
Direxit arcu; non semel Ilios
Vexata; non pugnavit ingens
Idomeneus Sthenelusve solus
Dicenda Musis proelia; non ferox
Hector vel acer Deiphobus graves
Excepit ictus pro pudicus Conjugibus puerisque primus.
Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona
Multi; sed omnes iliac tumabiles
Urgentur ignotique longa
Nocte, carent quia vate sacro.
Paulum sepultae dictat inertiae
Celata virtus. Non ego te meis Chartis inornatum silebo,
Totve tuos patiar labores,

13. arsit] This governs ‘crines’ as ‘mirata’ governs the other accusatives.
See C. ii. 4. 7, n. I do not see much force in Dillenbr.’s distinction. He says ‘ardere’ being equivalent to ‘ardenter amare’ has an accusative in Virg. Ecl.
ii. 1, and adds, ‘ablativus indicat unde venit ardor.’ Laodamia writes thus to her husband of the charms by which Helen was won:

"Venerat (Paris) ut fama est multo specta-
bilis au ro,
Quique su Phrygias corpore ferret
openes:
His ego te victam, consors Ledaee, ge-melius,
Suspicor; haec Danais posse nocere puto (Or. Hor. 13. 57, sqq.);
and Hecuba upbraids Helen with the same weakness (Eur. Tro. 987):

ὴν οὖμός ὅλος κάλλος ἐκπριπίστατος,
δὸς δ’ ἰδέων νῦν νοεῖς ἐποιήθη Κόρης
ὁν γ’ ἀσεύδοσα βαρβάρως αἰσθήμαsi χρυσῶ τε λαμπρῶν ἀξιμαργώθης φέρνας.

17. tela Cydonio] Teucer is described by Homer as ἄρσισ τὸ Ἀχαϊῶν τοῦσιν (II. xiii. 313). Cydon was a town of Crete, and the Cretans were famous archers.

Compare Virg. Ecl. x. 59: “Torquere Cydonia corna Spicula.”

27. Urgentur] So C. i. 24. 5: “Ergo Quintilium perpetuos sopor Urget?” ‘Il-lacrumabilis’ is used in an active sense
C. ii. 14. 6. The idea comes from Pindar (Nem. vii. 12, sqq.):

—aι μιγάλαι γὰρ ἀλκαί
σκότον πολὺν ἐμων ἔχοντι ὑμείναι.

29. Paulum sepultae] Virtue if it be left in obscurity is in no better position than dulness (which signifies generally a gross unspriritual nature) when that too is buried;
one is on a par with the other as far as influence is concerned, for neither exercises any influence at all; and as far as his reputation goes a man may as well be buried in stupidity as have his virtues buried in oblivion. “A man that hideth his foolishness is better than a man that hideth his wisdom.” These words of the son of Sirach (Ecc. xli. 15) have some resemblance to Horace’s, and I have seen them quoted together, though I do not remember where.
But the sentiment is not the same. Any English reader will remember Gray’s lines in his Church-yard Elegy that correspond most closely to Horace’s. Bentley has furnished work for the critics by objecting to the common reading and proposing ‘in-Impune, Lolli, carpere lividas Obliviones. Est animus tibi
Rerumque prudens et secundis
Temporibus dubiisque rectus,
Vindex avarae fraudis, et abstinens
Ducentis ad se cuncta pecuniae,
Consulque non unius anni
Sed quoties bonus atque fidus
Judex honestum praetulit utili, Rejecit alto dona nocentium
Vultu, per obstantes catervas Explicit sui victor arma.

ertia' (the ablative), as if Horace meant 'inertia celata,' hidden through the neglect of the poets. But there is no need for such a conjecture. The text is much better as it stands on the authority of all the MSS. 31. silebo.] Many MSS. and editors have 'sileri,' but 'silebo' is equally well supported and reads better I think. So C. i. 12. 21: "Neque te silebo, Liber." Bentley takes more credit than he is entitled to for restoring that reading, since Lambinus and most of the earlier editors have it. His arguments in support of it have no weight, and he is wrong in supposing 'sileri' to have been a late interpretation, for Crquius' commentator, whoever he may have been, had that word before him when he wrote thus: "Non ego te: non patiar tuam virtutem silentio obscenari.'

32. Tuae tuos patiar labores] These lines seem to have reference to the unpopularity of Lollius in connexion with his defeat, which appears to be alluded to in the word 'dubiis' below. He may also have been the object of slander in respect to his personal character, which Horace here warmly defends. There seems to be no other way of accounting for the earnestness with which he declares his innocence of the vice of avarice, for instance, than to suppose that fault had been laid to his charge, as it was so freely after his death (See Introd.).

34. Est animus tibi'] Rerum prudentia' is a knowledge of the world. The Scholiasts call it 'philosophia,' and so it is, of the rarest sort, the philosophy of common sense and observation. "Cato multarum rerum usum habebat" (Cic. de Am. ii. 6) expresses the same kind of experience. 'Rectus' means 'erect,' not stooping or bowed down, as "Fama deos habuere rec-
HORATII FLACCI

Non possidentem multa vocaveris 45
Recte beatum: rectius occupat
Nomen beati qui deorum
Muneribus sapienter uti
Duramque callet pauperiem pati,
Pejusque leti flagitation timet,
Non ille pro caris amicis
Aut patria timidus perire.

be a matter of great merit and difficulty to maintain the character of an uncorrupt judex does not say much for the honesty of those who exercised the functions of judors. By referring to Cicero (in Q. Cec-cilium, c. 3), the reader will see how gravely
he states the loud and general complaints against the Senatorian order from which at that time the Judices Selecti were chosen;
but the same complaints had led to the Equites losing this privilege, and one body was as bad as the other. See S. i. 4. 123, n.

At this time the judices were selected from the Senators and Equites.

52. Non ille—timidus] He fears disgrace worse than death,—not fearful he to die for his country, i.e. but he is not fearful. No difficulty need have been raised on the substitution of 'timidus' for 'timebit,' but some MSS. have 'peribit,' and 'pericet' has been proposed. See C. iii. 19. 2: "Co-drus pro patria non timidus mori." See also
C. iii. 2. 13, n.

CARMEN X.

That this Ligurinus is a merely poetical personage I have not the remotest doubt, no more than that Horace composed the ode with a Greek original before him or in his mind. The absurdities which any other view of the case involve are numberless. The ode may have been written at any time. There is nothing to fix the date of its composition, for the fact of the same name occurring in the first ode of this book, merely for the purpose of poetical ornament, proves nothing at all. It reads more like an early composition than a late one.

ARGUMENT.

Cruel and lovely boy; when the down shall have passed upon thy cheek, and thy flowing locks have fallen, and thy soft complexion vanished, thou shalt look in the glass, and say, "Why did I not, as a boy, feel as I do now, or why with these feelings have I not the beauty I had then?"

O CRUDELIS adhuc et Veneris muneribus potens, Inesperata tuae cum veniet pluma superbiae,
Et quae nunc humeris involitant deciderint comae,
Nunc et qui color est punicceae flori prior rosae

2. pluma. This word corresponds so exactly to the Greek πτιλων, used in the sense of the early down upon a boy's cheek, that it stamps the ode as an imitation, in my opinion. The word is no where else used in this sense, which led Bentley into substituting 'bruma,' and Markland (Orell.
V. L.) 'rugs,' and some one else 'poema,' Mutatus Ligurinum in faciem verterit hispidam, 5
Dices heu quotiens te speculo videris alterum:
Quae mens est hodie, cur eadem non puero fuit?
Vel cur his animis incolumes non redeunt genac?

There will be found in this and in the only other two Sapphic odes contained in this book more deviations, in the proportion of nearly four to one, from the caesural arrangement observed in the three first books, than in all the odes of those books put together. From this and other internal evidence it has been argued that this ode is a late one, but I think the arguments are inconclusive. It is true that Horace addresses Phyllis as his last love, but not, so far as I can see, in the tone of a person now grown old, as Buttmann says. Most men wishing to please a woman vow constancy to her, and one who was obliged to confess that he had been inconstant to others would only be the more vehement in professing steadfastness to her whom he desired for the occasion to win. But I do not mean to express any decided opinion one way or the other. It is only important to bear in mind that this book was published, not to revive Horace's reputation as a writer of amatory verses, but at the desire of the emperor, who wished the praises of his stepsons to be sent forth to the world, and his own with them. The ode to Lyde, on the day of the Neptunalia (C. iii. 28), is like this and has more spirit. It is not impossible Horace may have written this as early as the other, but thought the other better, and that one of the kind was enough for publication. The form 'spargier,' which occurs no where else in the odes, gives this the appearance of a different style of composition from others; but whether this is due to design or carelessness, or to its being an early or late production, cannot be determined. It is not at all unlikely, as some commentator has supposed, that the ode was sent to Maccenas on his birthday, and was only thrown into the form of an address to Phyllis for poetical convenience.
ARGUMENT.

I have a good old amphora of Alban with parsley and ivy to make thee a crown, Phyllis; silver on my board, and an altar that waits for the sacrifice; the slaves are busy, the fire is burning, come and celebrate the Ides of April, for it is Maccenas' birthday, more sacred to me than my own. Telephus is matched already, and is no match for thee. The fates of Phaethon and Bellerophon teach thee to beware of ambition. Come, my last love, with thy sweet voice sing the song I shall teach thee; song shall drive care away.

Est mihi nonum superantis annum
Plenus Albani cadus; est in horto, Phylli, nectendis apium coronis;
Est hederae vis
Multa, qua crines religata fulges;
Rident argentum domus; ara castis
Vincta verbenis avet immolato Spargier agno;
Cuncta festinat manus, huc et illuc
Cursitant mixtæ pueris puellæ;
Sordidum flammæ trepidant rotantes Vertice fumum.

2. Albani cadus:] The wine of the Alban hills was of the better kind; and at Nasidienus' supper it was offered to the chief guest with Falernian (Sat. ii. 8. 16). Pliny (N. H. xiv. 6) places it third among the wines of Italy. Juvenal (v. 33) speaks of Albanian wine, and classes it with Setian, both of great age:—

"Cras bibet Albantis aliquid de montibus, aute
Setinis, cujus patriam titulumque senectus
Delevit multa vetricis fulagine testae."

The rich glutton drank it, he says, as a corrective of yesterday's debauch.

5. qua crines religata fulges:] 'With which, when you bind your hair, you look beautiful.' The commentators look for the future tense, but Baxter, uncorrected by Gesner, says it is "enallage temporis; fulges pro fulgebris," and some derive 'fulges' from the form 'fulgo.' It is obviously the present tense, and Horace merely says that a wreath of ivy becomes Phyllis, whenever she binds her brows with it.

8. Spargier agno:] See Introduction, sub fin. Rutgersius (Ven. Lect. c. ii.) has discussed the question whether it was usual to offer sacrifice on birthdays. Varro, in a passage quoted by Censorinus, says that the ancient Romans (majores nostri) observed the custom of abstaining from blood when they brought offerings to their genius on their birthday. But it is clear from this passage of Horace that, whatever was the custom in earlier times, victims were in his day offered on birthdays as well as any other days. Juvenal (xi. 84):—

"Et natalitium cognatis ponere lardum Accedente nova si quam dabat hostia carne;"

and Plutarch (Life of Romulus, c. 12) speaking of the Palilia, which was the feast of the birthday of Rome, says, ἐν ἀρχῆς, ὡς φασιν, οὐδὲν ἐμψυχον ἐθνον ἀλλὰ καθαρὰν
καὶ ἀναίρακτον φῶντο δεῖν τύ παραβιβίον τῆς πτώσεως ἐτῆς γενέσεως ἑστην φυλάττων, which shows that even at the Palilia the practice was no longer observed in the time of Plutarch. There is no further authority wanted than this passage of Horace to establish the fact as regards private birthday festivals: nor will Orelli's remark be admitted, that, though the passage from Varro would establish the opposite fact if Horace were keeping his own birthday, it does not follow that he might not shed blood in celebrating that of Maccenas. As to 'verbenis;' see C. i. 19. 14, n.
CARMINUM IV. 11.

247

Ut tamen noris quibus advoceris
Gaudiis, Idus tibi sunt agendae,
Qui dies mensem Veneris marinae
Findit Aprilem;
Jure sollennis mihi sanctiorque
Paene natali proprio, quod ex hac
Luce Maecenas meus adfluentes Ordinat annos.

Telephum, quem tu petis, occupavit
Non tuae sortis juvenem puella
Dives et lasciva, tenetque grata Compede vinetum.
Terret ambustus Phaethon avaras
Spes, et exemplum grave praebet ales
Pegasus terrenum equitem gravatus Bellerophontem,
Semper ut te digna sequare et ultra
Quam licet sperare nefas putando
Disparem vites. Age jam, meorum
Finis amorum—

10. Cursitant mixtæ puерis puellæ:] As Orelli says, 'pueræ' is most rarely used for female slaves. The word in use was 'ancillæ.' 'Vertice' is the top of the flame which 'flickers as it whirs the dark smoke on its crest;' a spiral flame, terminating in a column of smoke. It seems as if Horace were writing with a fire burning before him, and caught the idea as he wrote. Bentley dislikes 'trepidant,' and proposes 'crepitant,' which destroys the unity of the image altogether: moreover there is no respectable authority for the change. Some commentators make 'vertice' the roof of the house.

15. marinae] C. i. 3. 1. Venus was said to have risen from the sea in the month of April, which was therefore her month, the name of which Macrobins derives from ἀφρος: Varro more probably from 'aperio,' as the month that opens the year. See C. i. 4, Introduction. The word 'idus' is derived from 'iduare,' which signifies to divide, and this explains 'findit.' Baxter's derivation from εἰδος, 'quod plenam Lunae faciem significare videtur,' is nonsense, wherever he got it from.

10. adfluentes Ordinat annos.] 'Reckons each year as it succeeds,' "Ordinatur quicquid numero et successione constat" (Gesner).

21. Telephus is a favourite name with Horace. For what reason this is the name he chooses for youths whom maidens vainly love, does not appear; but such is the fact. 'Occupavit' signifies 'has pre-occupied' (C. ii. 12. 28).

22. Non tuae sortis] This belongs to 'juvenem,' not to 'puella.' "Si quas voles apte nube nube pari" (Ovid, Heroid. ix. 32). The stories of Phaethon and Bellerophon, with which Horace deters this young girl from aspiring to too high a connexion, will be found in the Dict. Biog.

23. grata compede] This is repeated from C. i. 33. 14.

32. Finis] See Introduction, and compare Propert. i. 12. 19:—

"Mi neque amare aliam neque ab hac discedere fas est;"

"Cynthia prima fuit, Cynthia finis erit."

Dacier infers from these words of Horace that he meant henceforth to transfer his affections to boys. Strange are the ideas that commentators extract from the simplest language of this author. Why is not the same nonsense drawn from the above words of Propertius? I see no difference in the spirit of them. Whether 'condiscœ modos' means 'practise some of your songs before you come,' or, 'come and learn a song that I will teach you," has been disputed, and is not easily decided. But the latter is the more pleasing notion, and the words correspond very closely to those of C. iv. 6. 43: "Reddidi carmen docilis modorum Vatis Horati," which cannot be mistaken. Doering understands it as I do.

---

CARMEN XII.

Before A.D. 735.

The commentators are much divided in their opinions as to the person to whom this ode is addressed. The old inscriptions vary, but in such a manner as to show that they have none of them any weight or authority. Torrentius mentions three MSS. which are headed "Ad Virgilium Unguentarium urbis discipitio (the common blunder for 'descriptio') Paraenetic," and he himself adopts this absurdity, derived from v. 17. The Scholiast Acron says, "Ad Virgilium negotiato rem scribit," which is a mere assumption from the opening lines and v. 25, and when he interprets "juvenum nobilium" (v. 15) as Augustus, or Maecenas, or the step-sons of Augustus, he shows he knew nothing of what he was writing about. If the question were to be decided by numbers, it would on the whole be given in favour of Virgil the poet, and the presumption is so much in favour of that notion that the onus probandi lies I think with those who deny it. Gesner says there is nothing in the ode to indicate so warm a friendship as subsisted between Horace and the poet Virgil. But the ode is at best a trifle, and an invitation to dinner is not the most inspiring subject. When Virgil was going to sea, perhaps for his health, Horace's feeling for him was shown strongly enough, which would be natural. Orelli and others object to the expression "juvenum nobilium cliens," as applied to Virgilius Maro. But, if the Scholiasts are agreed that 'juvenum' may mean Augustus and Maecenas, they at least concede the point that 'cliens' may mean Virgil the poet. Augustus is represented as a 'juvenis' in the second ode of the first book, v. 41 (where see note). The difficulty that arises out of v. 25, 'pone—studium lucri,' Orelli himself disposes of when he says that it is evidently a joke; for, though he also says that such a joke levelled at such a man would be very flat, this can hardly be determined till we know the point of it. We need not assume with Stephens (Diatr. iv. p. 76) that Horace means by 'studium lucri,' 'mercaturam bonarum artium' (Cic. de Off. iii. 2), or the expectation of payment for his verses. If there be a joke, Virgil understood it, whoever Virgil was; but be he who he may we do not understand it, so that nothing is gained by this argument. I have not seen all that has been said upon the subject, which has been discussed in separate treatises and in all commentaries, and which must always remain matter of opinion founded upon very slender data; but my own judgment is in favour of supposing the ode to be an early one addressed to P. Virgilius Maro, the poet, not to "some relation or client of his," nor to "the grandson of C. Vergilius, the praetor and friend of Cicero," nor to "a physician of the Nerones," nor to a trader, nor to a perfumer. The pastoral images and description in the three first stanzas have always appeared to me particularly suited to an ode addressed to Virgil the author of the Bucolics, and I observe Doering makes that remark. Taking the two odes in honour of Drusus and Tiberius as the leading feature of this book, and their publication as the chief object of its publication, I can easily understand old compositions and new ones comparatively indifferent being inserted to make up what after all would be but a small volume. I neither assent to nor differ from the dates given by those who assign an early period to the composition of the ode; but I differ, as every one must, from Bentley, who assigns all the odes of this book to a period long subsequent to Virgil's death, but yet supposes him to be here addressed. As Gesner says of the great critic, "sua vineta caedit." If any body were to affirm that no Virgil or invitation is really to be found in the ode, and that it is a mere composition from the imagination or the Greek, I should not quarrel with him, only I should still believe that it was composed before the death of the poet, A.U.C. 735, with Virgil's name added to give it a real character.

ARGUMENT.

The spring is come, the frost is fled, the stream flows gently, the swallow has built her nest, the shepherds are piping to Pan in the fields, and the days of drought have returned, Virgil. Bring me a box of nard and I will bring thee in return some generous Calenian from Sulpicius' cellar. If my bargain please thee make haste, lay aside business and, remembering that thou must die, relax while thou mayest into folly for a time.

Jam veris comites quae mare temperant
Impellunt animae lintea Thraciae;
Jam nec prata rigent nec fluvii strepunt
Hiberna nive turgidi.

Nidum ponit, Ithy flebiliter gemens,
Infelix avis et Cecropiae domus
Aeternum opprobrium, quod male barbaras
Regum est ulta libidines.

1. temperant.] This is explained by C. i. 3. 16, see note. The Thracian winds are here the north-east winds of spring. Their effect is very differently described by Sophocles (Ant. 586), but the effect of a north-east wind on the eastern coast of Greece would be very different from the western coast of Italy. Columella (xi. 2. 21), quoted by most of the commentators, speaks of northerly winds called Ornithiae, which blew for about thirty days from the 20th February. But northerly winds prevailed throughout the spring, and continued into the middle of summer, their quality changing as the season advanced. Lucreius speaks of them in the height of summer:—

"Inde loci sequitur Calor aridus, et comes una Pulverulenta Ceres, et Etesia flabra Aquilonum" (v. 740, sq.);

where he calls them "Etesia flabra," because that name was given to all kinds of periodical winds. These were the winds which, according to one of the theories Herodotus contradicts (ii. 20), caused the overflowing of the Nile: η ἔτερη μὲν λέγει τοὺς ἑπτάσιας ἄργιους εἰς αἰτίους πληθέων τὸν ποταμὸν, κωλυόντας ἐς θάλασσαν ἐκρίειν τὸν Νείλον.

3. nec fluvii strepunt.] This explains C. iv. 7. 3. The time is not quite the beginning of spring when the snows melt and the rivers are swollen, but after they have subsided, which soon takes place.

5. Nidum ponit.] The story of Proene, daughter of Pandion, king of Attica (Cecropia), turned into a swallow, may be learnt from the Dict. Myth. It is gracefully introduced here to give ornament to a common fact and sign of spring. Horace elsewhere introduces the swallow with the west wind (Epp. i. 7. 13). The swallow and not the nightingale is probably here meant, though Doering and Dillenbr., on account of flebiliter gemens, suppose Philomela to be intended. It is not easy to decide. One version of the story changes
HORATII FLACCI

Dieunt in tenero gramine pingoium
Custodes ovium carmina fistula,
Delectantque deum cui pecus et nigri
Colles Arcadiae placent.
Adduxere sitim tempora, Virgili;
Sed pressum Calibus ducere Liberum
Si gestis, juvenum nobilium cliens,
Nardo vina merebere.
Nardi parvus onyx eliciet cadum
Qui nunc Sulpiciis accubat horreis,
Spes donare novas largus amaraque
Curarum eluere efficax.
Ad quae si properas gaudia, cum tua
Velox merce veni: non ego te meis
Immemem meditor tingere pocius,
Plena dives ut in domo.

Philomela into the swallow, and Proce, the mother of Itys, into the nightingale. A third version makes Philomela the mother of Itys. See Hom. (Odys. xix. 518): ἄνων—παῖς ἀλοφυρωμένη Ιγυλαν φίλον, which version Ovid seems to follow (Am. ii. 6. 7. sqq.):

"Quid scelus Ismarii quereris, Philomela, tyrami?
Expleta est annis ista querela suis.
Alitis in rarae miseri diverte funus.
Magna sed antiqua est causa doloris Itys."

slayer of Itys (Ecl. vi. 79):

"Quas illi Philomela dupes quae dona pararit
Infelix sua tecta supervolitaverit alis?"

In short the legend is more varied than almost any other. I have already had occasion to observe how little accuracy was studied by the poets on such matters (C. iii.
4. 50. n.). Fænous a sepulchral inscription which represents no doubt the grief of the nightingale (Fabretti, p. 233. n. 612):

"Surge. Refer. Matri. Ne. Me. Notesque. Diesque.
Mater. Ityn."

8. Regum] The lust of kings as exemplified in one of them, Tereus. Some might be disposed to take 'male' with "barbaras,' as 'rauci male' (S. i. 4. 66), and other places (see Index); and I am not so confident as other editors that it belongs to 'ultra.'

0. Dieunt] C. iii. 4. 1. 'Delectante'
(y. 11) is a various reading adopted by Gesenius without much authority, and Bentley reads 'nigrae' with no authority at all.

15. juvenum nobilium cliens.] Any attempt to determine who these were, until it is settled whom the ode is addressed to,
is useless. See Introduction. Catullus, inviting a friend to his house, says, if he will bring the supper, good and plentiful, with a fair damsel, wine, and good spirits, he will give him a box of ointment so delicious that when he smells it he will pray the gods to make him all nose. Respecting the ointment expressed from the 'nardus,' whether that name belonged to a shrub or a root,
the reader may consult Schleusner's Lexicon and the commentators on John xii. 3.
Mark xiv. 3. There we learn that a pound was worth upwards of 300 denarii, which sum was equivalent to more than 10l.
stirling. The 'onyx' was another name for alabaster (see Forcell. 'alabastrites'), of which, as we find in the New Testament as well as here and elsewhere, boxes were made for ointments. 'Sulpicia horrea' were famous wine-cellars which originally belonged to one of the Sulpician family, and,
according to the Scholiasts, continued to bear the name of Galba, the cognomen of a branch of that gens, in their day. There are inscriptions extant in which mention is CARMEN IV. 13.

Verum pone moras et studium lucri,
Nigrorumque memori, dum licet, ignium
Misce stultitiam consiliis brevem:
Dulce est desipere in loco.

made of the 'horrea Galbiana.' Horace, professing to have no good wine of his own, says he will buy a cadus of Calenian (C. i. 20. 9). 'Amara curarum' is a Greek construction, but not uncommon in Horace, as "acuta belli" (C. iv. 4. 76); "corruptus vanis rerum" (S. ii. 2. 25); "abdita rerum" (A. P. 49). As to 'merce,' see C. i. 31. 12.

CARMEN XIII.

All that need be said on this ode has been said in the Introductions to C. iii. 10 and 15.

ARGUMENT.

My prayers are answered, Lyce. Thou'rt old and wouldst captivate still; but love abides only on the fresh cheek, and runs away from the withered trunk, and from thee, with thy black teeth, and wrinkles, and grey hairs. Try and hide thine years with purple and jewels, but the tell-tale records betray thee. Where is the girl that I loved only next to Cinara? whom fate carried off too soon, while it left Lyce to grow old, that her lovers might laugh at her decline.

AUDIVERE, Lyce, di mea vota, di
Audivere, Lyce: fis anus, et tamen
Vis formosa videri
Ludisque et bibis impudens
Et cantu tremulo pota Cupidinem Lentum sollicitas. Ille virentis et Doctae psallere Chiae
Pulchris excubat in genis.

1. Audivere, Lyce;] Whether there is so much bitterness and derision expressed in the mere verbal composition of this ode as Dillenbr. has discovered, or whether, for instance, the cacophony of the first stanza in particular is not rather the fruit of carelessness than design, may be doubted. Its tone however is sufficiently taunting, and it may easily be believed that more than one person may have been stung by it.
HORATII FLACCI

Importunus enim transvolat aridas
Quercus, et refugit te quia luridi
Dentes, te quia rugae
Torpant et capitis nives.
Nec Coae referunt jam tibi purpurae
Nec clari lapides temporæ, quae semel
Notis condita fastis
Inclusit volucris dies.
Quo fugit venus, heu, quove color? decens
Quo motus? quid habes illius, illius,
Quae spirabat amores,
Quae me surpuerat mihi,
Felix post Cinarum, notaque et artium
Gratarum facies? Sed Cinarum breves Annos fata dederunt,
Servatura diu parem

Chia is a proper name, Baxter’s note therefore, “tacetur Chiaæ puellæ nomen,” should have been corrected by his editor Gesner.
‘Delia’ and ‘Lesbia’ are formed in the same way.

8. executat in genis.] This is a close imitation of Sophocles (Antig. 782).—

9. ardas Quercus.] This corresponds to C. i. 25. 19, ‘ardas frondes;’ as to ‘luridi,’ see C. iii. 4. 74, n. ‘To’ is dependent on ‘refugìt’ and ‘torpant’ in both instances. ‘Capitis nives’ Quintilian (viii. 6. 17) quotes as an instance of far-fetched metaphor. It has found its way into most languages, however. But Quintilian is only referring to the rhetorical style.

13. Coae] The transparency of these Coan vestments is noticed S. i. 2. 101, where see note.

14. carì] This, not ‘carì, is the reading of the greater number of MSS. and of the Scholiasts. Bentley, I think with bad taste, prefers ‘carì.’ The precious stones of the costlier sort most in use by Roman women were pearls (margaritae) and eme-rails (smaragdi). They were chiefly worn in necklaces, and as ear-drops and rings;
and libertinae distinguished for their beauty could make a great display of jewels received as presents from their admirers.

15. Notis condita fastis] Horace means to say that the days she has seen are all buried, as it were, in the grave of the public annals (as Acron says), and there any one may find them, but she cannot get them back. It is a graphic way of identifying the years and marking their decease, to point to the record in which each is distinguished by its consuls and its leading events.
‘Notis’ merely expresses the publicity and notoriety of the record by which the lapse of time is marked.

18. illius, illius.] This word is very emphatic, as in “quantum mutatus ab illo Hectore” (Aen. ii. 274). On ‘surpuerat’ compare “unum me surpice morti”
(Sat. ii. 3. 228) C. i. 36. 8, n.; S. i. 5. 79, n.
Regarding Cinarum, see C. iv. 1. 3, n.; and for the form ‘nota artium gratarum’ compare ‘notus in fratres animi paterni’ (C. ii. 2.
6). ‘Parem temporibus’ is not well explained by Orelli, “donec effecta sit par.”
It means rather that Lyce and the crow go on together getting old and never dying.
‘Vetulae’ is a contemptuous form of ‘annosa’ used elsewhere (C. iii. 17. 13).
Martial speaks of an old woman who had survived all the crows (x. 67). She was the dughter (he says) of Pyrrha, and Nestor’s stepmother, an old woman when Niobe was a girl, grandmother of Laertes, nurse of Piram, and mother-in-law of Thyestes.

23. Delapsam] The form ‘delapsam’ is found in many MSS., as usual, but few editors have adopted it, and ‘dilapsam’ is plainly the word which expresses the crumbling of a burnt-out torch. The idea is very original. The contrast in ‘fervidi’ is obviously intended.
Cornicis vetulae temporibus Lycen,
Possent ut juvenes visere servidi
Multo non sine risu
Dilapsam in cineres facem.

CARMINUM IV. 14. 253

CARMEN XIV.
A.U.C. 741.

The circumstances under which this ode was written, and its probable date, are given in the Introduction to C. 4 of this book, to which the reader is referred. The common inscriptions which make it an address in honour of Augustus sufficiently describe the spirit of it, though its professed purpose is to celebrate the part that Tiberius took, with Drusus, in the victories over the German tribes.

ARGUMENT.

With what honours shall we perpetuate thy virtues, O mightiest of princes, whose strength the insolent Vindelici have felt? With great slaughter Drusus cast them down from their heights, and Tiberius drove them before him, as the south wind drives the waves, or the swollen Anfidus lays waste the corn,—a sealess victory; and thou didst lend thine armies thy counsels and thine auspices. 'Twas fifteen years from that day when Alexandria opened her gates to thee, that Fortune brought this glory to thine arms. All nations bow down to thee, from the east to the west, from the north to the south, O thou guardian of Italy and Rome!

Quae cura patrum quaeve Quiritium
Plenis honorum muneribus tuas,
Auguste, virtutes in aevum
Per titulos memoresque fastos
Aeternet, o qua sol habitabiles
Illustrat oras maxime principum?
Quem legis expertes Latinae
Vindelici didicere nuper

2. Plenis honorum muneribus] Orelli and others make 'plenis' absolute, signifying 'sufficient'; 'honorum' being dependent on 'muneribus.' I prefer taking the words as they stand. 'Aeternare' is a word which had probably become almost obsolete in Horace's time. It is not found in any other author, except in a fragment of Varro. Many words that Horace uses, and no other extant writer, were probably common enough before the age of Cicero. 'Habitabiles oras,' like ἡ οἰκουμήνῃ so commonly used by Plutarch and the writers of the New Testament, signifies the Roman world.

7. Quem—didicere—Quid Marte posses.] This construction is not uncommon in Terence and in Plautus (Asin. i. 1. 45), "verum meam uxorem, Libane, scis quals siet?" and (Eun. iv. 3. 15), "Ego illum nescio qui fuerit," and other places. With the Greek poets nothing is more common, as in Sophocles (Trachin. 429):—
Quid Marte posses. Milite nam tuo Drusus Genaunos, implacidum genus, Breunosque veloces, et arces
Alpibus impositas tremendis
Dejectit acer plus vice simplici;
Major Neronum mox grave proelium
Commisit immanesque Raetos
Auspiciis pepulit secundis,
Spectandus in certamine Martio,
Devota morti pectora liberae
Quantis fatigaret ruinis;
Indomitas prope qualis undas

Scholiasts to be right, though the words are not free from difficulty. As to the construction 'plus vice,' see C. i. 13. 20.

17. Spectandus—Quantis] This seems imitated from the Greek idiom ἄθραμσος ὁιός.

20. Indomitas prope qualis] Bentley proposed 'indomitus' because the warlike Raetians could not properly be compared to the untamed waters. One MS. has been found to support him. The wonder is in such a case that there are not more. Besides the support given to 'indomitas' by the MSS., it may be observed, that the fourth verse of the Alcaic stanza is frequently constructed with a noun and its adjective in the first and last place, and corresponding in their last syllables. In this ode we have vv. 12, 16, 20, 36, 52, answering to this rule or habit. 'Prope' has no particular force. Peerlkamp says it weakens the sentence, and Orelli says there is some truth in that censure. Horace, whose ear was familiar with the language of the Greek tragedians, copied their σχεδὸν τι (a common phrase in comparisons) without being conscious that it weakened his verse, if it does so. He repeats the phrase 8. ii. 3. 268. The setting of the Pleiades, at the beginning of November, was reckoned as the commencement of winter; they therefore are said to burst the clouds (scindere nubes), which poured down rain upon the earth. Jani and others interpret the passage as referring to the rising of the Pleiades in May, when their approach dispels the last clouds of winter, and the south wind blows its last storm. Gesner (with whom Doering agrees) supposes Horace to mean that Tiberius was like the winds, 'veris comites quae mare temperant' (C. iv. 12. 1), the waves being the enemies of Rome. But this destroys the comparison obviously contained in the whole passage between the might of Tiberius and of other headlong things rushing to the work of destruction. I do not know what he means by his note on 'ignes,' "forte historia est ad quam alluditur." For 'per ignes' Bentley proposes 'per enses,' without any authority. 'Ignes' is a good word, and used by others in the same sense; as Sil. Ital., "per medios ignes mediosque per enses." (xiv. 175); "per medias volitare actes mediosque per ignes." (xv. 41). Or. Met. viii. 76: "Ire per ignes per gladios ausim." The Scholar (Comm. Cruq.) sufficiently explains 'per ignes' by "per medium pugnae fervorem, per medium ardorem belli." 25. [tauriformis] This is taken from the Greek ταυρόμορφος, applied to the Cephison by Eurip. (Ion. 1261). The only other Italian river that was represented under this form was the Eridanus, of which Virgil says (Georg. iv. 371, sqq.)—

"Et gemina auratus taurino cornua vultu
Eridanus, quo non alius per pingua culta
In mare purpureum violentior effluat amnis."

He was therefore represented not only with horns, but with gilded horns. It is remarkable that, although this feature is attributed to several rivers by the poets (to the Rhine by Ovid, Trist. iv. 2. 22, and to different Greek streams, especially Achelous their type, who lost one of his horns while contending with Hercules), none of them are so represented in the ancient works of art that have survived. Horace has probably invented this description of his native river by way of magnifying its importance, and ranking it with the greater streams. Whence this conception of a bull as representing the form of a river-god may have arisen it is not easy to say, but probably from the branching of so many large streams at their mouths, though that would not apply to the Eridanus. The Aufidus, which now is called Ofanto, is invariably described by Horace as a boisterous stream; and so Silius describes it, who had less interest in magnifying its importance:—

"Sanguineus tumidas in campos Aufidus undas Ejectat redditique frerens sua corpora ripis." (x. 320.)

But the character of such streams varied greatly at different seasons of the year.

28. meditatur] This is the oldest and most authorized reading, and that of the Scholars, one of whom, Porphyry, finds fault with it. 'Meditatur' is the reading of many MSS., and some editors have adopted it; Bentley among others. His reasons have no weight at all, as any one will acknowledge who reads them. They are not worth repeating. The Scholars' objection, that 'meditatur' denotes a suspended action rather than one in progress, bad as it is, is better than any of Bentley's; but it would apply equally or more to 'minitatur,' and the fact is that 'meditari' denotes an act as well as the premeditation of it, like the Greek word to which it is akin, μελετάω. See C. iii. 25. 5, n. It does not, therefore, necessarily imply any pause between the threat and the accomplishment of the threat in this instance. I do not think therefore that Orelli has hit the true force of the word, when he says it is "sine dubio longe ποιητικώτερον," because it expresses the silent and trembling expectation with which men are looking for the coming desolation.

31. metendo] Horace (like Virgil, Aen. x. 513: "Proxima queaque metit gladio") gets his word from Homer (Il. xi. 67), of δ'
HORATII FLACCI

Te copias, te consilium et tuos
Praebente divos. Nam tibi, quo die
Portus Alexandrea supplex
Et vacuum patefecit aulam,
Fortuna lustro prospera tertio
Belli secundos reddidit exitus,
Laudemque et optatum peractis
Imperis decus arrogavit.
Te Cantaber non ante domabilis
Medusque et Indus, te profugus Seythes
Miratur, o tutela praesens Italie dominaeque Romae.
Te fontium qui celat origines
Nilusque et Ister, te rapidus Tigris,
Te beluosus qui remotis
Obstrepit Oceanus Britannis,

33. te—Praebente divos.] See C. i. 7. 27, n. Augustus had the 'auspicium,' and his steppons were his 'legati,'
34. quo die] See C. i. 37, Introduction; iv. 4, Introduction. It is not improbable there may have been some representation of Alexandria Supplex in Horace's day, such as the well-known figures of Judaea Capta and Judaea Restituta on medals of Vespasian and Hadrian. We do not hear of Augustus having caused such a medal to be struck; but, as he had a triumph for the capture of Alexandria, such a commemoration of the event may very well have taken place. On the reverse of a medal of Hadrian Alexandria is represented as a matron reclying with three ears of corn in her hand, and the same number springing out of her foot; while her left arm rests upon a cup with a vine-branch springing out of it, and a bunch of grapes hanging over its side.
40. Imperis decus arrogavit.] 'Claimed for the wars carried on under thy imperium the glory thou didst desire,' Attempts have been made to fix other meanings on 'arrogare' here, and in Epp. ii. 1. 35; but this ordinary sense of the word suits both passages. What follows is a compendious review of the successes of Augustus, all of which have been noticed in these odes. Before the present ode was written the Cantabri had been finally subdued by Agrippa; the Parthians had restored the standards of Crassus and M. Antonius; the Scythians had sent to ask to be taken into alliance; the distant nations of Asia had done the same (see C. S. 55, sq.); the successes of Lentulus had checked the inroads of the tribes of the Danube (ii. 9. 23); Egypt had long been a tributary province; Armenia (Tigris) had been ceded by the Parthians; Britain, though only threatened, had sent tokens of submission. Augustus was just returned from Gaul and Spain, where he had put down the last efforts of rebellion, having also driven back the German tribes, whose success against Lollius had thrown a stain upon the arms of Rome (see C. 2 of this book, Introduction).
45. Te fontium qui celat origines] This applies only to Nilus. I am not aware that it was ever said of the Ister. The ancient representations of the Nile exhibit him as covering his head with his robe, or with the waters flowing from under his robe; while the Ister is exhibited with his urn in a medal of Trajan, on whose column he is represented as rising out of his stream to do homage to Rome.
47. beluosus] This word does not occur elsewhere in any classical writer. It reduces to the form of an adjective 'seatentem beluis' (C. iii. 27. 26). It corresponds to πολυνοφρίμως of Aeschylus, πολυχέντης of Theocritus, and Homer's μεγάχενς.
49. Te non paventis funera Galliae] Caes. de B. G. vi. 14: "In primis hoc voluit persuadere (Druidae) non interire animos sed ab aliis post mortem transire ad alios, atque hoc maxime ad virtutem excitari putant, metu mortis neglecto."
CARMINUM IV. 15.

Te non paventis funera Galliae
Duraeque tellus audit Hiberiae,
Te caede gaudentes Sigambri
Compositis venerantur armis.

CARMEN XV.
A.U.C. 741.

This ode appears in early times to have been read as part of the fourteenth. The Scholiast Porphyrius says, "Quidam separant hanc odon a superiore, sed potest illi jungi quoniam hic landes dicuntur Augusti." This is a poor reason, and there can be little doubt the odes were written separately, though probably about the same time, on the return of Augustus to Rome, A.U.C. 741. In consequence of the mention made in v. 9 of the closing of the temple of Janus, a later date is assigned to the ode, namely, A.U.C. 745, when it is affirmed (but without sufficient reason, as Franke has shown) that the temple was closed, for the third time during the life of Augustus. But as it had been closed twice before and Horace does not specify the particular time, but merely affirms what might have been said with equal truth any year after 725, this argument proves nothing. If we may assume, as has been assumed throughout this book, that it was published, as Suetonius says, for the sake of the odes in honour of Augustus' step-sons, then it is highly improbable that the publication was delayed for four years, and there is nothing in this ode which might not have been written on his return, but much reason to suppose it was. All that is here said of the subjection of the world and the universal peace was said in effect at the close of the fourteenth ode; but it was natural that, if Horace had received the emperor's commands to publish another book of odes, he should conclude it with one addressed to Augustus himself, reviewing the blessings of his reign which at this time had been crowned by a series of successes by which universal peace was established.

ARGUMENT.

When I would sing of wars Phoebus checked me with his lyre. Thy reign, O Caesar, hath brought back our lost honour, with plenty and peace and order and the means by which our name and strength have become great. Under thy protection we fear no wars at home or abroad; the North and the East obey thy laws, and we with our wives and children will sing of the heroes of old, of Troy, and Anchises, and of Venus' son.

Phoebus volentem proelia me loqui
Victas et urbes increpuit lyra,
Ne parva Tyrrenenum per aequor
Velâ darem. Tua, Caesar, aetas

2. increpuit lyra,] This is explained by "Haec ego cum canerem subito manifestus Apollo Movit insuratae pollice fila lyrae."
HORATII FLACCI

Fruges et agris rettulit uberes
Et signa nostro restituit Jovi
Derepta Parthorum superbis
Postibus, et vacuum duellis
Janum Quirini clausit, et ordinem
Rectum evaganti frena licentiae
Injecit, emovitque culpas,
Et veteres revocavit artes

‘Increpuit lyra’ therefore signifies, ‘checked me by touching the strings of his lyre, and leading me to a strain more fitted to my muse.’ That Doering, after having given and adopted this explanation, should have changed his mind and followed the Scholiasts and those after them who join ‘lyra’ with ‘loqui’ is very surprising. His judgment generally directed him better than this. In a matter of taste second thoughts are not often so good as the first, which are directed by instinct. The other metaphor is common enough. See Virgil (Georg. ii. 41): “Pelagoque volans da vela patenti;” and Ovid (Tr. ii. 329):—

“Non ideo debet pelago se credere si qua Audet in exiguo ludere cymba lacu.”

Prop. (iii. 9. 3):—

“Quid me scribendi tam vastum mittis in aequor?
Non sunt apta meae grandia vela rati.”

4. Tua, Caesar, aetas] The abruptness with which this is introduced is worth remarking. A longer preface would have weakened the ode.

5. Fruges et agris] This is a repetition of C. iv. 5. 17, sqq.

7. Derepta] There is the usual conflict of MSS. between ‘direpta’ and ‘derea, but see C. iii. 5. 21, n. As the standards were quietly and voluntarily sent to Augustus by Phraates, Horace’s language is somewhat exaggerated. The recovery (in 734, C. i. 26, Introduction; iii. 5) of the standards lost by Crassus was one of the greatest causes of rejoicing that ever happened at Rome. Without it the restoration effected by Augustus, and of which Horace here gives a compendious picture, would have been wanting in one of its chief features; the honour as well as the peace of Rome was restored. These praises are repeated from or in (for we cannot say which was written first) Epp. ii. 1. 231, sqq. See also Epp. i. 18. 56.

9. Janum Quirini] This is the reading of all the MSS. The usual form appears to have been ‘Janus Quirinus,’ as appears, among other examples, from Suet. (Octav. c. 22), “Janum Quirinum—ter clausit;” and Macrobius (Sat. i. 9), “In sacris quoque invocamus Janum Geminum, Janum Patrem, Janum Junonium, Janum Consivium, JANUM QUIRINUM, Janum Patuleium et Clusivium.” There is no instance I believe of Janum Quirini but this, and the temple of Janus having been built, according to tradition, by Numia and not Romulus, there is much in favour of ‘Quirinus.’ All that is against is the want of harmony arising out of ‘um’ thrice repeated, and the authority of the MSS., to which I yield with some hesitation, I admit, in this case. Bentley’s argument, that if ‘Janus’ could be called ‘Janus Junonius,’ he might as properly be styled ‘Janus Junonis;’ and so, if he was rightly called ‘Janus Quirinus,’ therefore he might be properly called ‘Janus Quirini,’ has no weight. ‘Janus Quirini’ can only mean ‘Janus of Romulus,’ whereas ‘Janus Quirinus’ means ‘Janus called Quirinus,’ which I take to be a substantive, and a name given him as Janus of the Quirites. The latter is a proper description, the former is against history. All the MSS. but one appear to be in favour of the form ‘clausit,’ not ‘clausit.’ In the above passage of Suetonius they vary; but Fea, quoting the inscription on the monumentum Ancryanum, and which it would seem that Suetonius copied, contems that he must have written ‘clausit,’ which appears twice over in that inscription.

10. evaganti] This no where else appears with an accusative case, wherefore some copyists have changed it into ‘et vaganti,’ which is very meagre. The most respectable name by which it is supported is Rutgersius. ‘Evadere’ and ‘exiro’ are used with an accusative repeatedly. (See Forcoll. and compare C. iii. 24. 29.) ‘Artes’ is rightly explained by the Scholiast Aercon by ‘those virtues in which the discipline of life is placed, as prudence, justice, fortitude, and temperance,’ ‘Emovit’ and ‘amovit’
Per quas Latinum nomen et Italae
Crevere vires famaque et imperi
Porrecta majestas ad ortus
Solis ab Hesperio cubili.
Custode rerum Caesare non furor
Civilis aut vis exiget otium,
Non ira quae procuditenses
Et miser as inimicat urbes.
Non qui profundum Danubium bibunt
Edicta rumpent Julia, non Getae,
Non Seres infidive Persae,
Non Tanaï prope flumen orti.
Nosque et profestis lucibus et sacrís
Inter jocosì munera Liberi
Cum prole matronisque nostrís, Rite deos prius apprecatí,

both have authority from MSS., and the editors vary in their preference. 'Emovit' is the word Horace adopts elsewhere. Some MSS. have 'ortus,' and others 'ortum.' That the question cannot be decided by the repetition of the final 's' may be seen by any one who examines Horace's style carefully. The arguments on the other side have not much weight than this, which is Bentley's, and it is always better to acknowledge the uncertainty of a reading than to refine upon it one way or the other. This is what Dillenbr. has done, I think, in this and some other instances, though his edition appears to me in the main as judicious as any that has been published.

17. 'furus Civilis aut vis] 'Civilis' belongs to 'furus,' and 'vis,' which is a technical word, means here 'personal violence.' 'Ira' applies to foreign quarrels. See C. iii. 14. 14, n. 'Inimico' is another word which Horace probably found in use by writers of a former day. Later writers have taken it from him. See Forcell. (I have not the edition of that dictionary in which 'inimicat' is explained, as Orelli says, 'hostium loco habet.' It plainly means 'sets at enmity.') 'Apprecatí' (v. 28), 'remixo' (v. 30), are also words first found in Horace.

18. 'exigel] The MSS. and editors here again are divided between 'eximet' and 'exiget.' Later editors prefer the latter, and it appears to me more forcible and appropriate. (See C. iii. 14. 14, n.)

21. 'qui profundum Danubium bibunt] The German tribes, particularly the Vinelici lately subdued. 'Edicta Julia' can only mean here the laws of Augustus laid upon them at their conquest, though in its technical sense the word 'edicta' would not apply. The rules of a governor published in his province were his 'edictum,' and these people were not in a province. Horace therefore does not use the word in its legal sense (see Mr. Long's Exc. on the 'Edicta Magist.' Cie. in Verr. p. 156; sqq.). A good deal is said by the commentators about the 'Juliae leges de adulteris,' &c. which have nothing to do with this place. The Getae lay towards the mouths of the Danube, while the Daci were situated to the west of them, on the same or south side of the river.

23. Seres—Tanaï] See C. iii. 29. 27, n. The Seres and Indi are not much distinguished by Horace (see C. i. 12. 56), and, when he is referring to the East, their names are generally associated with the Parthians, more for the sake of amplification than with historical or geographical accuracy. The Roman armies had not yet even crossed the Tigris. But when Augustus was in Syria, we are informed by Suetonius, ambassadors came from the far East to ask his protection and alliance.

25. lucibus] This word is used for 'diebus' by Ovid. (Fast. iii. 397):—

'His etiam conjux apicati cincta Dialis Lucibus impexas debet habere comas.'

The singular is more common.

29. Virtute functos] This is a concise way of expressing 'virtutis munere functos,' as in Cicero (Tusc. i. 45): "Nemo parum Virtute functos more patrum duces
Lydis remixto carmine tibiis
Trojamque et Anchisen et almae Progeniem Veneris canemus.

diu vixit qui virtutis perfectae perfecto functus est munere."

more patrum] Cic. (Tusc. i. 2) tells us that in the Origines of Cato it is stated that it was the custom of old to sing songs at their meals upon the virtues of great men.
Valerius Maximus (ii. 1. 10) refers to the same custom: "Majores nostri in conviviis ad tibias egregia superiorum opera carmine comprehensa pangebant, quod ad eas imitandas juventutem alsciorem redderent." The practice may have been partially revived in Horace's day. The conclusion of this ode recalls C. iv. 5. 31, sq.

30. Lydis] Plató (de Rep. 3. 10, p. 398, E) tells us that the Lydian and Ionian melodies were best suited to delicacy and feasting, the Dorian and Phrygian to war;
and Aristotle (Polit. vii. 8. 7) that they (the Lydian) were most suitable to the tender age of boyhood, as harmonizing the mind and training it to good. There is no particular force, however, here in the word
'Lydis.' It should be observed, that when
'tibia' appears in the plural number (C. i.
1. 32; Epod. ix. 5) it has reference to two of these instruments played by one person.
Their pitch was different, the low-pitched tibia being called 'dextra,' because it was held in the right hand; the high 'sinistra,' because it was held in the left. The pipes used by the Lydians themselves are called by Herodotus (i. 17) αὐλὸς ἀντρόφιος and αὐλὸς γυνακιῆς, as representing the voices of a man and a woman respectively.
This interpretation has been doubted, however, and it is the opinion of some that the pipes were so called as being played one by a man and the other by a woman. (See Mr. Blakesley's note on the above passage.)
The family of Anchises, the grandfather of Iulus, are mentioned here, because Augustus belonged to the Julian family, of which Iulus was the reputed founder.
Q. HORATII FLACCI

CARMEN SECULARE.

When Augustus had completed the period of ten years for which the imperial power was at first placed in his hands (A.U.C. 727—737), he determined to celebrate his successes at home and abroad by an extraordinary festival, and he took as his model the Ludi Tarentini or Taurii, which had in former times been observed as a means of propitiating the infernal deities, Dis and Proserpina, on occasions of great public calamities. It does not appear that this festival ever was held at regular intervals. How therefore the name Ludi Seculares arose is not clear: but as it was now for the first time given it was probably convenient to have it believed that the games were no more than the observance of a periodical solemnity. The Quindecimviri were ordered to consult the Sibylline books, and they reported, no doubt as they were desired, that the time was come when this great national festival should be repeated, and the details of it were laid down as from the commands of the oracle in a set of hexameter Greek verses, composed of course for the occasion, and which have been preserved to us by the historian Zosimus, whose account of the festival is transcribed in the article Ludi Seculares in Smith's Dict. Ant., and need not be repeated here. The verses may help the reader, and they will be found at the end of the ode.

Since Dis and Proserpina were the divinities chiefly invoked in the ancient games, the question arises, Why were Apollo and Diana the leading deities on this occasion? If it be admitted that the festival was observed as a matter of convenience and not from any religious feeling, it is not difficult to understand that the older precedents were only generally adopted, and the deities most in fashion were as a matter of course substituted for the obsolete Dis and Proserpina. Augustus considered himself especially under the protection of Apollo, and the attributes assigned in the olden time to the infernal deities, as the originators and averters of physical evils, had by this time been transferred to Apollo and his sister as representing the sun and moon, as Mitscherlich has observed. Orelli on this point quotes with approval some remarks of Jahn on Virg. Ecl. iv. 10 to this effect: that a notion commonly existed among the Greeks, and also among the Etruscans and Romans, that the universe was moving in a cycle the completion of which would measure one great year of the world; that this year was divided into 10 months or ages (saecula), the length of which was not defined but was declared from time to time, as they were completed, by prodigies sent from heaven. This accounts for the irregular celebration of the Secular games at Rome. The Sibylline books, he goes on to say, declared which divinity especially presided over each month; Saturn presided over the first and Apollo the last, Diana over the last but one, as in the civil year she claimed November as her own particular month. This is the reason why these divinities were worshipped rather than others, because on the appearance of the comet at the death of Julius Caesar it was announced by the soothsayer Volcatius that the ninth (Diana's) month was passing away and the tenth was then beginning. This account evidently has reference to the great Platonic year, which, when complete, is to bring all the heavenly bodies back to their original relative places. That the Magnus Annus was generally believed in is certain. Virgil refers to it in his fourth Eclogue: "Magnus ab integro saeclorum nascitur ordo" (v. 5), "incipient magni procedere menses" (v. 12). Cicero discusses it in his treatise de Nat. Deorum (ii. 20): "Quarum (i.e. of the planets) ex disparibus motionibus magnum annum mathematici nominaverunt; qui tum efficitur quum solis et lunae et quinque errantium ad eandem inter se comparationem, confectis omnium spatiis, est facta conversio. Quae quam longa sit magna quaestio est. Esse vero certam et definitam necesse est." The statements of the ancients vary from 40,000 to nearly 26,000 years. The last corresponds to the period calculated for the precession of the equinoxes, with which, however, the Magnus Annus of the Greeks and Romans had nothing to do. It is represented on the reverse of a medal of Hadrian in the form of a man in a loose robe, with a globe and Phoenix in his left hand, and his right raised over his head. He is surrounded by an oval ring to distinguish him from the figures of Eternity, represented in a circle. The inscription is Saeculum Aureum. What amount of credit is due to all the details of Jahn's explanation, which are derived chiefly from the statements of Servius on the 4th Eclogue of Virgil and from Censorinus, I cannot say. But, without resorting to such explanations as the above, it would have been very surprising if Augustus, having resolved to celebrate a great festival in honour of his own successful career, had not made Apollo the principal feature of it, and had called upon Pluto to bless his country, in preference to that god to whom he allowed himself to be likened and whom his flatterers assigned to him as his father. Horace appears to have been much pleased at being chosen as poet-laureate of the occasion (see C. iv. 6, Introd.). The ode was sung at the most solemn part of the festival, while the emperor was in person offering sacrifice at the second hour of the night on the river side upon three altars, attended by the fifteen men who presided over religious affairs. The chorus consisted of twenty-seven boys and twenty-seven girls of noble birth, well trained no doubt for the occasion (C. iv. 6). The effect must have been very beautiful, and no wonder if the impression on Horace's feelings (for in all probability he was present) was strong and lasting. Attempts have been made to distinguish the parts assigned to the respective choruses. But there do not appear to me to be any conclusive or very probable data on which to found an accurate division, in which therefore, as might be expected, the editors do not agree. I have endeavoured in the argument to show all the divisions of the ode by its subjects. In judging of the character of the ode as a poetical composition, it must not be forgotten that it was written for a peculiar and solemn occasion and to be set to music, in both which points it differs from most of the other odes of Horace; and, judged with reference to those objects, it may be pronounced superior to laureate odes in general. For rhythm it appears to me the best of all the Sapphic odes.

The perusal of this introduction and the following argument, of the Sibylline verses (the instructions of which are closely followed), and of the description from Zosimus above referred to, will save the necessity for so long a commentary as would otherwise be necessary.

ARGUMENT.

Apollo and Diana, hear the prayers we offer you in obedience to the Sibyl's commands (1—8).

O sun that rulest the day, thou lookest upon nothing mightier than Rome (9—12). Ilithyia, protect our mothers and their children, and prosper our marriage law, that so in the cycle of years this our festival may come again (13—24).

And ye, Parcae, who do prophesy truly, let our future fates be as the past. Let the earth and air give strength to our flocks and fruits (25—32).
CARMEN SECULARE. 263

Hide thy weapon, Apollo, and hear thy suppliant boys (33, 34), Queen of the stars, O Moon, hear thy maidens (35, 36), Since Rome is your handiwork and at your bidding Aeneas brought his remnant to these shores (37—44).
Ye gods, give virtue to the young and peace to the old, and power and sons and glory to the family of Romulus (45—48).
Grant Anchises' noble son his prayers, for his victories shall be tempered with mercy (49—52).
Humbled is the Mede, the proud Scythian and the Indian (53—56); Peace, plenty, and all the virtues have returned to our land (57—60).
May Phoebus the augur, the prince of the bow and of song, the physician who favourably regardeth his Palatine temple and the fortunes of Rome and Latium, ever extend our blessings to another and still happier lustre (61—68).
May Diana who inhabiteth the Aventine and Algidus hear our prayers (69—72).
We will go home believing that our prayers are heard, the choir of Phoebus and Diana (73—76).

Phoebe silvarumque potens Diana,
Lucidum caeli decus, o colendi
Semper et culti, date, quae precamur
Tempore sacro,
Quo Sibyllini monuere versus Virgines lectas puerosque castos
Dis quibus septem placuere colles Dicere carmen.

Alme Sol, curru nitido diem qui Promis et celas aliusque et idem
Nasceris, possis nihil urbe Roma Visere majus.
Rite maturos aperire partus
Lenis, Ilithyia, tuere matres,
Sive tu Lucina probas vocari
Seu Genitalis.

Diva, producas subolem patrumque
Prosperes decreta super jugandis
Feminis prolisque novae feraci
Lege marita,

1. silvarumque potens] Compare C. iii. 22. 1. 'Lucidum caeli decus' applies to both deities.
9. Alme] This epithet is to be taken in its proper sense as derived from 'ało.' 'Sun the nurturer.'
13. Rite maturos] 'O thou whose office it is gently to bring babes to the birth in due season.' 'Rite' means 'according to thy province and functions.' Eλκεθυία, the Greek name for Here and Artemis, or more properly, in the plural number for their attendants when presiding at the delivery of women (which name is said to contain the root of λθεθην, but that seems doubtful) is represented by the Latin 'Lucina,' 'quae in lucem profert,' which title also was given indiscriminately to Juno and Diana. The title 'Genitalis' does not occur elsewhere in this sense, but appears to be a version of Certus undenos decies per annos
Orbis ut cantus referatque ludos
Ter die claro totiesque grata
Nocte frequentes.

Vosque veraces cecinisse, Parcae,
Quod semel dictum est stabilisque rerum
Terminus servat, bona jam peractis Jungite fata.

Fertilis frugum pecorisque Tellus
Spicea donet Cererem corona;
Nutriant fetus et aquae salubres Et Jovis aurae.

Condito mitis placidusque telo
Supplices audi pueros, Apollo:
Siderum regina bicornis audi,
Luna, puellas:

the Greek \textit{Ger\textsuperscript{}}e\textit{aV\textsuperscript{}}\textit{a\textsuperscript{}}\textit{\mu\textsuperscript{i\textsuperscript{}}}\textit{\lambda\textsuperscript{}}\textit{\mu\textsuperscript{i\textsuperscript{}}}, which was applied to Aphrodite as well as Artemis and her attendants. Bentley contends for the Greek form being retained, and considers ‘Genitalis’ a corrupt reading for ‘Genityllis’: “locum esse corruptum et contaminatum existimo, vel potius certo scio.” If Horace had written ‘Genityllis’ it would have been another way of expressing the same name; but as ‘Genitalis’ cannot be objected to as the Latin form of that word, and all the MSS. have it, there is no reason for altering it. ‘Eileithnia’ could not be represented by any equivalent in Latin; it is therefore no proof that Horace used the Greek form in the one case that he did so in the other, as Bentley affirms. Besides which it would seem that the Latin names are purposely introduced in contrast to the Greek. ‘Producas’ here signifies ‘to rear’ as in C. ii. 13. 3. Respecting the ‘lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus’ referred to in the fifth stanza, the reader may get all the information he wants from Mr. Long’s article in Smith’s Dict. Ant. ‘Lex Julia et Papia Poppaea.’

25. \textit{veraces cecinisse.} A great deal of difficulty has been raised respecting the meaning of this stanza, and the reading, which in the MSS. varies between ‘dictum est’ and ‘dictum’ without ‘est,’ ‘servat’ and ‘servet.’ Bentley has increased the trouble of commentators in attempting to lighten it by the substitution of ‘stabilis per aerum’ for ‘stabilisque rerum’ and omitting ‘est.’ The great majority of MSS. read ‘est’ and ‘servet,’ the meaning in that case being made plain by supposing ‘stabilis—servet’ to be parenthetical: ‘ye Parcae who tell truly what has once been determined (and may the fixed order of events preserve it so),’ not as Dill. explains, ‘ye Parcae who truly prophesy, add good destinies to those that we have known, according to that which has once been declared and which may,’ &c. ‘Veraces cecinisse’ cannot properly stand alone, particularly with ‘quod’ immediately following. But ‘servat’ (which seems, however, to have but little authority from the MSS.) appears to be the simpler reading, for ‘quod’ does not in this case, as Bentley states, require the subjunctive mood. Supposing ‘servat’ to be the reading, Horace merely states a fact, that the Parcae truly foretold the destined greatness of Rome which, once for all decreed, the course of events was daily confirming. I agree with Orelli in preferring this reading, which Lambinus also preferred, though he adopted ‘servet.’ ‘Semel,’ in the sense of ‘once for all’ (\textit{kath\textsuperscript{}}\textit{\u{a}nu\textsuperscript{}}\textit{\tau\textsuperscript{i\textsuperscript{}}}\textit{\i\textsuperscript{}}), is common enough. The Parcae could not but be true exponents of the decrees (fata)

21. \textit{Certus undenos} The notion that the Secular Games were celebrated every 110 years, which seems to have been the length of a saeculum as measured by the Etruscans, was a fiction invented probably at this time. There is no trace or probability of their having been so celebrated either before or after Augustus. They lasted three days and nights. They were celebrated by Claudius a.d. 47, and again by Domitian a.d. 88.
Roma si vestrum est opus, Iliaque
Litus Etruscum tenuere turmae,
Jussa pars mutare Lares et urbem
Sospite cursu,
Cui per ardentem sine fraude Trojam
Castus Aeneas patriae superstes
Liberum munitit iter, daturus
Plura relictis:
Di, probos mores docili juventae,
Di, senectuti placidae quietem,
Romulae genti date remque prolemque
Et decus omne!
Quaeque vos bobus veneratur albis
Clarus Anchisae Venerisque sanguis,
Impetret, bellante prior, jacentem
Lenis in hostem!

of Jove, since to them their execution was entrusted. That was their province. There may be some inconsistency in asking them to give good fates to Rome, since they could only execute ministerially ‘quod semel dictum est.’ But such confusion is common.

33. Condito mitis placidusque telo] On the promontory near Actium there was a statue of Apollo with his bow bent and a fierce aspect, which was an object of terror to the sailors who approached the coast. See Virg. (Aen. iii. 274, sq.):

“Mox et Leucatae nimboa cacamina montis Et formidatus nautis aperitur Apollo.”

And again on the shield of Aeneas (viii. 704) the same figure is represented:—

“Actus haec cernens arcum intendebat Apollo Desuper: omnis eo terrere Aegyptus et Indi;
Omnis Arabs, omnes verteant terga Sabaei.”

To this god Augustus paid his devotions before his battle with M. Antonius, and to him he attributed his success. “Vincit Roma fide Phoebi” (Propert. iv. 6. 57). Accordingly, on his return to Rome, he built a temple to Apollo of Actium on Mons Palatinus (v. 65. C. i. 31. Epp. i. 3. 17), and set up a statue (executed by Scopas) of that god, but in a different character, the bow being laid aside and a lyre substituted for it in one hand, and a plectrum in the other. (“Citharam jam poscit Apollo Victor, et ad placidos exuit arma choros,” Prop. iv. 6. 69, sq.) He was clad also in a long flowing robe. Propertius was present at the dedication of the temple, and gives a description of it (ii. 31); the last object he mentions being the statue of Apollo as above described:—

“Deinde inter matrem deus ipse, interque sororem, Pythius in longa carmina veste sonat.”

This change of character is what Horace alludes to.

35. regina bicornis] In a relief on Constantine’s arch Diana, as the moon, is represented in her chariot drawn by two horses, and with a small crescent on her forehead, which is a common way of representing her on gems and medals. In the above group Hesperus is flying in front of her.

42. Castus] C. iii. 2. 30, where the correlative term is used: “Neglectus incesto addidit integrum.” Aen. vi. 661: “Quique sacerdotes casti.”

45. docili juventae,] Bentley substitutes ‘docilis’ and ‘senectuti’ for ‘docili’ and ‘senectuti,’ putting ‘mores,’ ‘quietem,’ ‘rem,’ and ‘prolem’ all in one category, as the boons to be given ‘Romulae genti.’ He says this arrangement is ‘melior, redundior, et elegantior’ than the common one. I do not think many will agree with
HORATII FLACCI

Jam mari terraque manus potentest
Medus Albanasque timet securest,
Jam Scythaet responsa petunt, superbist Nuper, et Indi.
Jam Fides et Pax et Honos Pudorquest
Priscus et neglecta redire Virtust
Audet, apparequc beata plenoc Copia cornu.

submission and petitions for friendship.
This word is used for the replies of the gods, and here perhaps expresses the majesty of Augustus delivering his will as that of a god, like Virgil (Ecl. i. 45): “Hic mihi resonsum primus desit ille petenti.” But ‘resonsum’ is also a technical term for the answer of a jurisconsult to a client, or a superior to an inferior, as of the emperor to the governor of a province.

57. Jam Fides et Pax] This group occurs nearly in the same combination in C. i. 24. 6. The figures are variously represented on medals, &c. ‘Fides,’ which represents honesty, good faith, and is called in the above place ‘justitiae soror,’ appears on a medal of Vespasian as a matron with long robe, very erect figure, holding out a ‘patera’ in her right hand, and carrying a ‘cornu copiae’ in the other. ‘Pax’ usually carries a caduceus and olive-branch in one hand, and sometimes corn in the other. ‘Honos,’ which has nothing to do with what they call honour in the sense of honesty (‘fides’), but represents Gloria in her good character (for she had a bad, as vain glory, C. i. 18. 15), is exhibited on the reverse of a medal of Titus as a man advanced in years, with one foot upon a globe, with a cornu copiae in one hand, and the other leaning upon a spear. On another medal he is side by side with Virtus, whose natural companion he is. For Virtus is most usually represented in a military character as Fortitude, a female figure with helmet and a spear, and with her foot like that of Honos resting on a globe. But, though these types symbolically represented Virtus, the name embraced all moral courage and steadfastness in well-doing, with which military courage was closely associated in the mind of a Roman. ‘Pudor’ or ‘pudicitia’ expresses conjugal fidelity, and is exhibited (on a medal of Herennia Etruscilla in the Grand Duke’s collection at Florence) as a modest matron, seated, and drawing her veil half over her face. Juvenal speaks of her especially as having left the earth at the Augur et fulgente decorus arcu
Phoebus acceptusque novem Camenis,
Qui salutari levat arte tessos
Corporis artus,
Si Palatinas videt aequus arces
Remque Romanam Latiumque, felix
Alterum in lustrum meliusque semper
Proroget aevum.
Quaeque Aventinum tenet Algidumque,
Quindecim Diana preces virorum
Curet et votis puerorum amicas Applicet aures.

close of the reign of Saturn, or, as he sarcastically puts it, when Jove began to wear a beard (vi. 16). But all these virtues are said to have left the earth with Astraea at the close of the golden age, and their return is intended to represent the return of that age.

60. Copia cornu. Copia, whose horn was most properly the symbol of Fortune (C. i. 17. 14, n.), but was also given to many other divinities, as Fides, Felicitas, Concordia, Honos, &c., was herself represented under the forms of Abundantia and Anonna. As the first, which was the most general form of Plenty, she is exhibited on a medal of Trajan seated on a chair made of two 'cornua copiae': as Anonna, which character was confined to the supply of corn, a medal of Antoninus Pius represents her as standing with a 'cornu copiae', in her left hand, and some corn in her right; with a basket of corn on one side, and a ship's heak (symbolizing the foreign supply of that article) on the other.

61. Augur et fulgente decorus arcu] This seems to contradict the prayer in v. 33; but the bow of Apollo did not always inspire dread. He is sometimes represented with this unstrung at his back, and the lyre and plectrum in his hands (C. ii. 10. 19); and it is uncertain whether he did not so appear in the statue above referred to. In some ancient relievii and paintings Apollo is represented as seated in the midst of the nine Muses, who are all paying attention to him. Ausonius wrote an inscription (Idyll. xx.) for a group of the Muses executed in his time, in which Apollo appeared in the midst. After recounting the Muses and their attributes severally, he adds:—

"Mentis Apollineae vis has movet undique Musas:
In medio resedens complectitur omnia Phoebus."

Such a group is seen on a sarcophagus in the Giustiniani palace at Rome, given in Montfaucon's collection, vol. i. Pl. 60. 1. Apollo's attribute as the Healer is one of the oldest that was attached to him, and is most commonly exhibited in his statues and other representations. It is symbolized by the serpent which always attends the figures of Salus, Aesculapius, and others connected with the healing art. In Apollo's case this is often taken for the serpent Python, even when there is nothing but mildness in the face and attitude of the god. Ovid (Rem. Am. 76) addresses him as "Carminis et medicae, Phoebe, repertor opis;" and again he makes him say:

"Inventum medicina meum est; opiferque Dicor, et herbarum subjecta potentia nobis." (Met. i. 521.)

65. Si Palatinas videt aequus arces.] See above, v. 33. n. 'Aras' is the reading of some MSS. and editions, but 'arces' is better. I understand 'felix' to agree with 'aevum,' and 'videt' to govern 'arces' 'rem' and 'Latium.' It is common with Horace to put an adjective and its substantive at the two extremes of a period. According to some 'felix' belongs to 'Latium,' and also to 'rem;' and 'proroget felix Latium' is equivalent to 'proroget felicitatem Latii.' Orelli takes 'felix' with 'lustrum.' Bentley takes it so likewise, but goes farther, and putting 'Si Palatinas—Latiumque,' in a parenthesis, makes 'aevum' the object after 'prorogat,' and takes all the adjectives with 'lustrum,' as though the meaning were 'Apollo is advancing the age into another happy, and even a happier lustre.' He prefers the indicative to the subjunctive. Many good MSS. have it so, but most editors prefer the suppletive form, and I think they are right. Bentley is consistent,
CARMEN SECULARE.

Haec Jovem sentire deosque cunctos
Spem bonam certamque domum reporto,
Doctus et Phoebi chorus et Dianae Dicere laudes.

and reads ‘curat’ and ‘applicat’ in the next stanza, for which he has apparently about the same amount of MS. authority.
69. Quaeque Aventinum] Diana had a temple on Mons Aventinus and on Algidus (C. i. 21. 6). From this stanza it has been assumed by some that the sacred commissioners (the ‘quindecimviri’) took part in the singing, which is not very probable.

Their number, which was originally two,
and was increased to ten about 150 years after the establishment of the Republic, was raised to fifteen either by Sulla or Julius Caesar. ‘Puorum’ includes the whole choir of boys and girls.
75. Doctus] C. iv. 6. 43: “docilis modorum Vatis Horati.”

---

ZOSIMUS (lib. ii. c. v.).

'Alla' opotaan mikiostos 'ekh xronos avthrapoia
Zwys, ei's k'twv ekat'v deka sklyon odxov,
Miympo, o' rwmaia, kai ou' mala l'hsai avto'n Meuniothai tache panta. Theosei mi'n abanastoi
'Rizven in Pediw par'a Therdrsou ap'leton ouv,
"Ostopo stiastatan, Nv' h'mika goiai ep'tlbf
'Helio' evphautoi 'enf' f'as"' evth' ou' r'zenv
'Iepa poutogonos Miderais arnos ti kai agyas.
Kvania d' etp tais' Eileuthias aristaibai
Paiotokwos sthexos, ou' b'ems. Auvth de Gaiv Pldbomene' goiros te kai de' ep'frito mieliana.
Zalwv toi yraoi de' Didos par'a b'mwond agstwv
"Hmati, mh'" etp kysti' theoisi gi' arg ophrwniosi
'Pieriou piletai thwv trp'wos"' ou' de kai avtwos
'Ireiwv' damalh' de b'dos emas' aglaon' Hr'es Dexasth' ngos par'a sev. Kai Phioxos 'Aplloivv, Oste kai 'Hilos kielh'keita, iass' e'dhiw
Ou'mata Ahtoidh's kai aiw'deinov te Lav'tnoi
Paiwvsws kou'ros ko'fresi te ngos evon
Athavatos' xovis de' korya xorov autai e'xov
Kai xovis pai'wov arvon staxvus, all' gvnovs
Pawont' Zwontwv, ois' afvtha'kis eti fvtlh.
AI de ga'mon zeuglasi e'dmi'neita h'mati ke'ins
GvG'Hr'es par'a b'wvond asiodom evrswai
Daimona laissthswan. 'Lpas' de l'umata do'nai
'Anvrasov 'h'ed gnavxai, m'lsta de' therlur'fesi.
Pawntes d' i' oukos ferostwv, bassa komvein
'Estoi b'dmus xvnitoan aparchiminovs bid'oi,
Daimosa meilh'xovos l'dmata kai makarosein
Ofranieis' ta de' pawnta thnsthavromenena kiswv,
Ofrha te' therlur'fsei kai anvrasov evroisiwv
Evth' poyrwnves mevmpinivos. "H'mati o' evto
Nv'eta t' euposth'frea theop'petous Kat'w th'kous
Pamplh'th'xei aguros' stoudhe de' gelwai mevmpinh.
Tauinti tou ei' freoi e'xan de' mevmpinovs evai,
Kai soi pawata x'wv' Ialai kai pawata Lavtiv
Alev upo ekper'psois upauchivovn ygunvev e'zei.
Q. HORATII FLACCI

EPODON

LIBER.

CARMEN I.

A.U.C. 723.

When Augustus had determined on the expedition against M. Antonius and Cleopatra which led to the battle of Actium, A.U.C. 723, he summoned, as we learn from Dion Cassius (50. 11), the leading senators and men of Equestrian rank to meet him at Brundusium, for the benefit of their counsel and (the historian says) to keep the Equestrians from mischief, and also to show the world the harmony to which he had brought men of all orders at Rome. Whatever the motives may have been, the fact may be accepted. Maecenas obeyed this summons and went to Brundusium, but was sent back by Augustus to watch over the peace of the city and the affairs of Italy, with what particular powers, or under what title, history does not inform us, nor is the question material here. The Scholiasts (Acron and Comm. Cruq.) state that Maecenas had had the command of the fleet, or part of it, as tribune, given him by Augustus. But there is no credit to be attached to such statements, which are often taken (as this may be), like the inscriptions invented by grammarians, from incidental names and allusions in the odes themselves. He appears to have accompanied the expedition to Sicily against Sextus Pompeius A.U.C. 718, and, on referring to the article 'Maecenas' in Smith's Dict. Biog., it will be seen that the writer is of opinion this Epode was written on that occasion. This opinion is quite new, and I believe the general opinion to be correct. The language of affection in this Epode is too strong for the short acquaintance Horace had then enjoyed with Maecenas; also, there is evidence of the Sabine farm having come into Horace's possession when he wrote it (v. 31). But that this did not occur till after the publication of the first book of Satires is certain, and it is generally referred to A.U.C. 720. The opinion of the same writer that Horace actually accompanied Maecenas on this expedition to Sicily is noticed elsewhere (C. iii. 4. 26, n.). It is very possible that Maecenas may have had the offer of a command on the expedition against M. Antonius, and that both he and Horace believed he was going on that service, until on his arrival at Brundusium Augustus thought fit to send him back to discharge more important duties at Rome. Horace, supposing him to be going on this expedition, wished to accompany him, but Maecenas would not allow it (v. 7), which gave occasion for this Epode.
ARGUMENT.

Thou art going into the midst of danger, Maecenas, to share the fortunes of Caesar. Shall I stay at home at ease, or meet the danger with thee, on whose life my happiness depends? I will go with thee whithersoever thou goest. To what end shall I go? As the bird fears less for her young when she is near them, so shall I fear less for thee if I go with thee, and I go to win thy love not thy favours. Thy love hath given me enough. I seek not wide lands or fine houses and cattle, and gold to hide or to squander.

Ibis Liburnis inter alta navium,
Amice, propugnacula,
Paratus omne Caesaris periculum
Subire, Maecenas, tuo.
Quid nos, quibus te vita si superstite
Jucunda, si contra gravis?
Utrumne jussi persequemur otium
Non dulce ni tecum simul,

1. Liburnis] These were light vessels that took their name from the ships used by the Liburnians, a piratical tribe on the Illyrian coast. Augustus employed them in his expeditions against Sex. Pompeius, and they were of great use at Actium (C. i. 37. 30). It is disputed whether ‘inter alta propugnacula’ refers to Antonius’ ships or Caesar’s. I have no doubt the former are intended. Horace is speaking of the danger Maecenas is going to encounter, and I do not know that that could be better described than by contrasting the light galleys of Caesar’s fleet with the heavy ships of the enemy; and though there may have been, and of course were ships of larger size in the fleet (as Dillonbr. says, taking the other view of the sense), the danger would not have been described by mentioning them. ‘Ibis inter’ may not be a proper phrase for describing an attack upon the enemy’s fleet, but it may do very well for contrasting the size of the ships on either side. I do not see how the danger would have been adequately described by representing Maecenas as sailing in a light vessel among the larger ones giving his orders, as some have explained it. Such a description would have diminished the picture of danger, and only represented the honour of the command. Propertius represents Caesar’s fleet only by the Liburnian part of it:—

“Ausa (Cleopatra dared) Jovi nostro la-trantem opponere Anubim — Baridos et contis nostra Liburna sequi”

(iii. 11. 41—44), where he speaks contemptuously of her fleet for his own purpose, but all writers on the battle of Actium describe the ships of M. Antonius and Cleopatra as of enormous size. Like those of Caesar, the Egyptian vessels were fitted with towers (‘propugnacula’), from which the men fought. Wood-cuts representing such ships will be found in Smith’s Dict. Ant. art. ‘Ships.’

4. *Subire—tuo.] ‘Tui,’ to agree with ‘Caesaris,’ has been suggested. ‘Tuo periculo,’ ‘meco,’ ‘suoi,’ ‘nostro,’ are all one as common as the other, and without the posssessive pronoun ‘periculum’ is used in the ablative case in ‘summo periculo,’ ‘minimo periculo,’ &c. (see Forcell.), where the ablative is an ablative of cost, and is not to be explained by supplying ‘cum.’ Whether a note of interrogation should be put after ‘tuo’ is a matter of taste. Bentley thinks it more pathetic. It appears to me less simple and manly.

5. *si superstite] The old Venetian edition of 1483, and all the editions after that till Bentley’s that I have seen, have ‘sit.’ But the Scholiast Porphyrian read ‘si,’ saying “bis posuit particularis ‘si,’ semel abundat.” Torrentius, reading ‘sit,’ notices the reading ‘si’ in one of his MSS., which has a note in the margin, ‘si abundat.’ Another MS. has ‘sic.’ Bentley mentions six MSS., which have ‘si,’ and Orelli eleven more. Two of Orelli’s best, and others referred to by Bentley, have no word between ‘vita’ and ‘superstite,’ which appears as if some syllable supposed to be redundant had been purposely omitted,
An hune laborum mente laturi decet
Qua ferre non molles viros?
Feremus et te vel per Alpium juga
In hospitalem et Caucasum,
Vel Occidentis usque ad ultimum sinum
Forti sequemur pectorare.
Roges tuum labore quid juven meo,
Imbellis ac firmus parum?
Comes minore sum futurus in metu,
Qui major absentes habet;
Ut assidens implumibus pullis avis
Serpentium allapsus timet
Magis relictis, non, ut adsit, auxili
Latura plus praesentibus.
Libenter hoc et omne militabitur
Bellum in tuae spem gratiae,
Non ut juvencis illigata pluribus Aratra nitantur mea,

though the metre suffered. All Orelli's therefore, which are MSS. of great weight in his estimation, are directly or indirectly in favour of 'si.' Orelli supposes the construction to be compounded of 'te superstite' and 'si superstes mihi eris.' After weighing the opposite opinion well, I prefer adopting that word which gives the only regular construction, and which has abundant MS. authority. Cruquius reads 'sit,' and notices no various reading. We may suppose therefore that the Blandinian MSS. had that word. But the reading is not free from doubt. The punctuation by which some editors try to make the sense plain renders it hopelessly confused. Doering, for instance, and Mitscherlich point thus:—

"Quid nos? quibus te, vita, si superstite, Jucunda, si contra, gravis."

It would be hard to imagine a greater abuse of commas.

12. In hospitalem—Caucasum] This is repeated from or in C. i. 22. 6.

16. firmus parum?] This is generally supposed to refer to Horace's state of health, which was never good; but I think it is only taken from the Greek ἀνάλυκε, which goes commonly with ἀποτόλεμος (as Doering says). In the next line Bentley reads 'sim' on the conjecture of Heinsius, "ut respondet τῷ juven," which I do not understand. "Sum futurus" is a direct answer to the supposed question.

19. Ut assidens] 'As the bird that sits upon her unflaged brood is more afraid of the serpent's stealthy approach if she leave them, and yet, supposing she were with them, she could give no more help though they should be under her wing.' 'Relictis' I take with Dacier to be the ablative absolute. For 'ut adsit,' Bentley reads 'uti sit' with a few MSS. But it does not make very good sense. The objection to the tautology in 'ut adsit' and 'praesentibus' need not weigh against the received reading. See Ter. (Adelphi. iii. 3. 39): "Non quia ades praesens dico hoc." Tb. (iv. 5. 34): "Cum hanc sibi videbit praesens praesentem eripi."

23. militabitur Bellum] The Scholiast says of this, "Nove et eloquenter dixit." 'Eleganter et novo' is Baxter's version, 'audaciter et noco' Dillenburger's. But Plautus has the same expression (Pers. ii. 2. 50): "At confidencia illa militia militatur multo magis quam pandere." See also C. iii. 14. 4: "bella pugnata," which expression is repeated Epp. i. 16. 25. 'In spem,' 'looking to the hope,' is used where we should say 'in the hope.' 'Mea' and 'meis' (v. 26) are both supported by authority; the latter was generally adopted till Bentley edited 'mea,' rightly observing that the possessive pronoun ought to be joined with the nearer substantive, and that the two adjectives 'meis' and 'pluribus' agreeing with 'juvencis' are bad. The editors generally understand Horace to be alluding to the rewards of service in the field. He appears rather to be impressing on Maecenas that he wishes to follow him not for his bounty but his love.

27. pascuis.] Several MSS. have 'pascua,' which Torrentius prefers, though all his MSS. have 'pascuis.' I do not see much force in Bentley's objection that with 'pascua' we should have three lines all ending alike, 'sitatur mea,' 'mutet pascua,' 'tangat moenia,' and I have some difficulty in choosing. I have followed the later editors. 'Mutet' is used in the manner so frequently found in Horace. See C. i. 17. 2, n. Varro (de Re Rust. ii. 1. 16) says, "Greges ovium large abiguntur ex Apulia in Samnium aestivatum, atque ad publicanum profintur ne si inscriptum pecus paverint lege censoria committant," where 'inscriptum' means 'unregistered,' it being required that the cattle put to graze on the public lands should be registered with a view to the payment of the tax (scriptura). See Cic. in Verr. Act. ii. 1. ii. c. 70, Long's note. The plains of Calabria were very hot ("non aествuosae grata Calabriae armenta," C. i. 31. 5), and to these the woody hills of Lucania formed a pleasant contrast in summer.

29. Neque ut] The older editions have 'nec.' 'Nor that I may have a white marble villa near the walls that Telegonus built, the walls of Tusculum on the hill.' He says he does not want a villa at Tusculum where there were many handsome houses besides that of Lucullus. See Cic. de Legg. iii. 13. The ancient Tusculum, Fea says, was built on the top of the hill of which the modern town, Frascati, is built on the slope. Fea says he has frequently seen the ruins of the old town, which was destroyed A.D. 1181 in the civil wars. 'Circularca' is explained by C. iii. 29. 8, n. Bentley conjectures 'supini' for 'superni,' referring to 'Tibur supinum,' C. iii. 4. 23. But there is no variation whatever in the MSS., and supposing that what Bentley says were true, that 'superni' could only be used relatively, we may imagine that the higher part of the town ("superius Tusculum," as Gesner says) was more agreeable than the lower. But the word is used absolutely, as may be seen by various examples quoted by Forcell. It is extraordinary that the explanation of Lambinus should have found favour with so intelligent an editor as Doring, 'that the buildings on my farm should be extended and reach to Tusculum,' which was fifteen miles off. Lambinus says he speaks in an hyperbole, as he certainly would if that were his meaning. Many editors have adopted that notion and the Scholast Poephryion gave it birth; but his words though obscure do not convey that meaning, "Circaea tangat moenia: Tusculum intelligendum. Sensus est autem ut neque in Tuscolo possideam villam quae ibi aedicifia habeat usque ad ipsam urbem." Others after Acron (Turnebus, xii. 14) think of a villa and farm reaching from Tusculum to Circaei in Latium, taking 'villa Tusculi' together.

31. Satis superque] This expression occurs again Epod. 17. 19. The sentiment is repeated C. ii. 13. 12; iii. 16. 38.

33. Chremes] The allusion is perhaps to a character in some play of Menander's.

34. perdam nepos.] This is a more agreeable reading than the common one 'ut nepos.' It has the authority of Orelli's B, but beyond this I find no authority for Dil-lenbr.'s statement, 'sic antiquissimi codices.' 'Ut' is not omitted by any editor earlier than Orelli, and the question is not raised by any earlier commentator that I have seen. The Scholast Poephryion had 'ut' in his copy, and the oldest known MS., the Blan-dinian of Cruquius, must have had it, or he would have noticed the omission. Nevertheless it is probable that Horace wrote 'perdam nepos,' and that the second 'ut' was inserted by copyists to correspond to the first. The same construction occurs in S. i. 1. 101.
CARMEN II.

Horace, meaning to write on the praises of the country, put his poem (whether as an after-thought or not may be open to conjecture) into the shape of a rhapsody by a money-getting usurer who, after reciting the blessings of a country life and sighing for the enjoyment of them, resolving to throw up his business and persuading himself that he desires nothing so much as retirement and a humble life, finds habit too strong for him and falls back upon the sordid pursuits which after all are most congenial to him. Some may perhaps think that this little bit of satire is the chief object for which the poem was written. My impression is that it was commenced (whether in imitation of Virgil, Georg. ii. 458, sqq., as Franke supposes, or of some poem of Archilochus as Lachmann, or not in imitation of any thing which is more probable) as a " laudatio vitae rusticae" (which is the tenor of most of the inscriptions), and that the last four verses, which have been called clumsy, were added to give the rest a moral. At any rate the greater part of the speech must be admitted to be rather out of keeping with the supposed speaker. We should not expect, for instance, to hear a city usurer talk about an hereditary farm, the dangers of the soldier and the sailor, and the cares of love. The last difficulty is got rid of by Doering and others, who interpret ' amor' (v. 37) as the love of money, which that editor says "vix dubitari potest," though the word 'habendi' "paolo licentius omitit." This I am quite sure is wrong; and I think we must allow that Horace was more intent upon his description than on maintaining an accurate consistency between the circumstances of the speaker and the sentiments he utters. But, however this may be, the picture is very beautiful and the moral very true. In the most sordid minds more genial impulses will sometimes arise: but the beauties of nature and the charms of a peaceful retirement are, like virtue itself, only attractive in the distance and at intervals to minds that have grown addicted to the pursuit of gain for its own sake. To such minds domestic and innocent pleasures offer no lasting gratification, and the picture of rustic enjoyment on the one hand, and of the jaded but still grasping usurer struggling for a moment against his propensities on the other, affords a wholesome lesson for many. In respect to the date, it can only be conjectured that Horace had tasted the enjoyments he describes so graphically, and was in possession of his farm. But even that is uncertain. Franke, thinking that Horace must have had before him Virgil's second Georgic (458, sqq.), which some say was not published till A. u. C. 724, attributes this ode to 724 also, in which his friend Lachmann informs him he seems "nimis subtiliter ignorabilia rimatus esse." There is a fragment from the comedy Νήσως attributed to Aristophanes (344, Dind.), which is very like this ode. Whether Horace ever saw it or thought of it when he was writing it is impossible to say. It runs thus:

ω μόρε μόρε, ταῦτα πάντ' εἰν τῷ δ' εἰν' οἰκεῖν μὲν εἰν ἄγρᾳ τωτὸν εἰν τῷ γηδ鲪 ἀπαλλαγόντα τῶν κατ' ἀγορὰν πραγμάτων, κεκτημένον ζευγάριον οἰκήσαν βοῶν. ἔπειτ' ἀκοθεῖν προβατῶν βληχωμένων τρυγός τε φωῖν ὡς λεκάνην ὑθομένης, ὰφον τε χρήσθαι σπινθείασ τε καὶ κίχλαις καὶ μὴ περιμένειν εἰ ἄγοράς ἱχθύδια τραγαία, πολυνίμητα, βεβασανοσύνην ἰπ' ἱχθυνοπώλου χυρὶ παρανομωτάτη.

The reader may also compare Ovid, Fast. iv. 691, sqq., and Martial, iii. 58.
ARGUMENT.

Happy is the man who lives on his farm remote from the troubles of the city and the dangers of war and of the sea. He trains his vines, or watches his flocks, or grafts his trees, or stores his honey, or shears his sheep, or brings offerings of fruit to Priapus and Silvanus, or lies in the shade or on the soft grass where birds are singing and streams are murmuring; or hunts the boar, or lays nets for the birds and hares, and herein forgets the pangs of love. Give me a chaste wife who shall care for my home and children, milk my goats, prepare my unbought meal, and no dainties shall please me like my country fare, as I sit and watch the kine and oxen and labourers coming home to their rest at even. So said Alphius the usurer, and determining to live in the country he got in all his money, but soon repented, and put it out to usury again.

Beatus ille qui procul negotiis,
Ut prisca gens mortalium,
Paterna rura bobus exercet suis,
Solutus omni fenore,
Neque excitatur classico miles truci,
Neque horret iratum mare,
Forumque vitat et superba civium
Potentiorum limina.
Ergo aut adulta vitium propagine
Altas maritat populos,
Aut in reducta Valle mugientium
Prospectat errantes greges,
Inutilisque facie ramos amputans
Feliciores inserit,
Aut pressa puris mella condit amphoris,
Aut tondet infirmas oves;
Vel cum decorum mitibus pomis caput
Auctumnus agris extulit,
Ut gaudet insitiva decerpens pira,
Certantem et uvam purpurae,
Qua muneretur te, Priape, et te, pater
Silvanus, tutor finium!
Libet jacere modo sub antiqua ilice,
Modo in tenaci gramine.
Labuntur altis interim ripis aquae,
Queruntur in silvis aves,
Fontesque lyphis obstreput manantibus,
Sonnos quod invitet leves.
At cum tonantis annus hibernus Jovis
Imbres nivesque comparat,
Aut trudit acres hinc et hinc multa cane
Apros in obstantes plagas,

note, "Vel sic usurpatum eam habet potes-tatem, ut transitum paret ad alia; cum res-spicit ad praegressa." But in that instance there is no apodosis: it is an elliptical way of expressing what the speaker has to say.
Here 'vel' is followed by 'ut gaudent'; the only thing to observe therefore is that 'vel' has here a copulative force and not a dis-junctive, as "Silvius Aeneas pariter pietate vel armis Eregius" (Aen. vi. 769). 'Et' would have made the sentence too much of a climax, especially with the exclamation
'ut gaudent.' 'Gaudet decerpens' is after the Greek idiom ἐριστῶν ἔδειατ. In v. 18
Lamb., Cruquius, and others read 'arvis' for 'agris.' But the first of these words belongs only to arable land, while 'agris' represents any lands whatever.

22. Silvane, tutor finium!] Silvanus here only is called the protector of boundaries, which province bequeathed to the god Terminus. Virgil calls him the god of corn-Myth. 'Silvanus.'
24. tenaci] This is merely a redundant epithet. Grass, especially short turf grass, which is here meant, binds the soil and tenaciously adheres to it, both of which ideas seem to be included in this word, from which most of the editors attempt to extract more than it will yield, in order to make it suit the occasion. 'Interim,' as we say 'the while.' Some of the oldest MSS. read 'rivis' for 'ripis' in v. 25. But this confusion is very common, and the only editors I have seen that adopt it are Torquemus and Foa, who contend for that reading very strongly. The former quotes
C. ii. 3. 11: "Qua (quid) obliquo laborat Lympha fugax trepidare rivo," Bentley contradicts his own theory by advocating
'ripis' (see C. iii. 25. 13, n.). 'Altis
ripis' are rocky overhanging banks, not, as Bentley and Gesner say, banks rendered high by the subsiding of the stream in summer, in which there is no poetry. 'Obstreput' is used absolutely, as C. iii. 30.
10. Some (thinking a dative case required after 'obstreput') understand 'illi,' some
'avisus,' and Markland prefers to change
'fontes' into 'frondes,' and make 'lyphis'
the dative case, as in Propert. (iv. 4. 4):
"Multaque nativis obstrepet arbor aquis."
'Lymphis' is what is called the ablative absolute.

levi somnum suadebit inire susurro." The Scholiast of Cruquius says upon this, "Ve-teres omnium animalium voces praeterquam hominum querebam dicebant," where in Torrentius' copy some one has substituted 'suum' for 'hominum.' 29. annus] This is used for the season of the year, as in Virgil (Ecl. iii. 57), "formosissimus annus." See Forcell.
31. Aut trudit acres] There is a description in a simile of Statius (Achill. i.
459, sqq.) of this way of hunting wild beasts.
The hunters encompassed some large space (generally the foot of a wooded hill) with strong nets, which they gradually drew into a more and more narrow circle, while dogs and beaters with torches were set to drive the beasts into a given spot, where they were attacked and slain; or else they were driven down to the nets with which they were entangled or stopped, unless they contrived, as they sometimes did, to break through them, which would give occasion for a chase in the open plain (See C. i. 1.
23). Statius says, in illustration of the gathering of the Greeks at Aulis on their expedition against Troy,—

"— Sic curva feras indago latentes
Claudet et admotis paulatim cassibus arcat.
HORATII FLACCI

Aut amite levi rara tendit retia,
Turdis edacibus dolos,
Pavidumque leporem et advenam laqueo gruem 35
Jucunda captat praemia.
Quis non malarum quas amor euras habet
Haec inter obliviscitur?
Quodsi pudica mulier in partem juvet
Domum atque dulces liberos,
Sabina qualis aut perusta solibus
Pernicis uxor Apuli,
Sacrum vetustis exstruat lignis focum
Lassi sub adventum viri,

illae ignem sonitumque parent, diffusae linquant
Avia, miranturque suum decrescere montem;
Donec in angustam ceciderunt undique val-lem,
Inque vicem stupuere greges, socioque
timore
Mansuescunt; simul hirtus aper, simul ursa, Iapuque
Cogitur, et captos contentnit cara leones.”

Plutarch, in his life of Alexander speaks of toils twelve miles long. The poets, Latin and Greek, used the feminine gender in speaking of hunting-dogs, as mares are more often mentioned than horses for the race. ‘Amites’ were forked stakes on which the nets were stretched. ‘Plagae’
were the strong nets mentioned above;
‘retia’ were finer ones for birds and fish;
‘retia rara’ were those with wider meshes than fishing-nets, and therefore used only for birds. ‘Edacibus’ represents their depredations on the corn, which I mention because Doering applies it to their greedy seizure of the bait. The next line is said by its numbers to represent the rapid course of the hare and crane. If so, Doering contrives to annihilate the poet’s purpose by his punctuation,

“Pavidumque leporem, et advenam, laqueo,
grum,
Jucunda, captat, praemia,”

by which it is intended I suppose to show that ‘laqueo’ represents the instrument of capture, and is not to be taken with the word that goes before it as if Horace meant to say that the crane was ‘advena laqueo,’ an error not likely to occur very readily.
If Doering is not misrepresented by his English editor, superfluity of punctuation was a great defect with him. I do not see that the sound in this line represents the sense. It rather halts than flies.
‘Laqueo’ may be pronounced as a dissyl-labile.

39. in partem] ‘On her part.’ The Greeks said in μίατι. ‘In partem’ occurs in Plautus (Asin. iii. 3. 89), “Age sis tu in partem nunc jum bunc delude.”

41. perusta solibus] Theoc. (x. 26):

42. Pernicia] ‘Pernix’ signifies patient, steadfast, being compounded of ‘per’ and ‘nitor.’ (Servius on Virg. Georg. iii. 93.)

43. Sacrum vetustis] The fire-place was sacred to the Lares. The wood must be old that it might not smoke like that which plagued the travellers at Trevicium
(S. i. 5. 80):

“The lacrymoso non sine fumo,
Udos cum foliis ramos urente camino.”

The ‘focus’ was either a fixture of stone or brick, in which case it was synonymous with ‘caminus,’ or it was movable and made of bronze, and then it was called ‘foculus.’
In either case it was a wide and shallow receptacle for wood or charcoal, the smoke of which found its way out by apertures at the top of the room, or, in some rare instances, as modern scholars have established, by chimneys (see Becker’s Gallus, Sc. ii. Exc. i., on the Roman House, sub fin.). ‘Sacrum et,’ ‘sacrumque,’ with ‘juvans’ for ‘juvet.’ (v. 39), have been proposed in order to connect this line with the preceding; but these readings have no authority, and the EPODON LIBER, 2.

Claudensque textis cratibus laetum peceus
Distenta siccet ubera,
Et horna dulci vina promens dolio
Dapes inemptas apparat:
Non me Lucina juverint conchylias
Magisque rhombus aut scari,
Si quos Eois intonata fluctibus
Hiems ad hoc vertat mare;
Non Afræ avis descendat in ventrem meum,
Non attagen Ionieus
Jucundior, quam lecta de pinguissimis
Oliva ramis arborum

cense does not require them. The connection is clear enough. Statius has imitated Horace (Silv. v. 1. 122):—

"— velut Appula conjux
Agricolae pari, vel sole infecta Sabino,
Quae videtemeritiam prospectantibus
Tempus adesse viri, propere mensusque torosque
Instruet exspectatque sonum reudentis aratri."

Horace may have remembered the passage in Eurip. Elec. 71, sqq. On the meaning of 'sub' with the accusative case, which
"in phrases of time signifies immediately after" (see Key's Lat. Gr. 1374, e.), Professor Key translates "Sub adventum regis" (Livy) "upon the approach of the king, as soon as it was announced." 'Sub adventum viri' is not in anticipation of her husband's arrival; but as soon as he has made his appearance, weary with his day's work, she puts wood on the fire and gets up a cheerful blaze.

47. horna — dolio] Poor wine of that year, which had not been bottled for keeping, but was drunk direct from the dolium.
Like the other parts of this description,
this is meant to convey the notion of primitive simplicity. The wine of the year is generally drunk now in and about Rome.

49. inemptas] Georg. iv. 132:—

"— seraque revertens Nocte domum dapibus mensas onerabat inemptis."

Martial mentions the oysters from the Lucrine lake (xiii. 82):—

"Ebræa Baiano veni modo concha Lucrino: Nobile nunc sitio luxuriosus garum."

And Juvenal (Sat. iv. 140) says of his Epicure, that he could distinguish at the first taste whether his oysters were brought from Circei, from the Lucrine, or the British coast, 'Rutupino fundo.' Rutupiae was a port on the coast of Kent, now called Richborough, close to Sandwich, where three sides of a Roman inclosure still remain, the wall being twenty feet high in parts.

51. intonata] This participle occurs no where else in extant writers; but it is not likely Horace invented it. It represents the noise of the wind rather than of the clouds, as Virgil (Georg. i. 371) says,
"Urrique Zephyrique tonat domus.
Duentzer renders it as a passive participle,
'sent thundering;' but it is more likely an old deponent form. The 'scarus,' whatever that fish may be, is said by Pliny to have abounded most in the Carpathian sea.
The storm therefore must come from the east that should drive it to the coast of Italy. What bird is meant by 'Afra avis' we cannot tell, nor does Varro help us by saying that the Greeks called them μελαγυικιας, since it is uncertain what those birds were. Colmella (viii. 2) distinguishes them, saying the Roman bird had a red crest, the Greek a blue. The African pheasant is a bird of remarkably beautiful plumage and very rare, but I believe that it is only found at present on the southern coast of Africa; and, whatever bird the Roman writers refer to, it was less remarked for its beauty than its delicacy. Martial (iii. 58. 15) speaks of 'Numidicae guttatae' speckled, which seems to be the same bird, and answers to the appearance of the guinea-fowl, which fowl also corresponds to Varro's description, 'Gallinae Africaneae sunt grandes, variæ, gibberæ' (De R. R.
iii. 9. 18). Juvenal mentions it as a delicacy (Sat. xi. 142, sq.):—

"Nec frustum capreae subducere, nec latus Afræ
Novit avis noster tirunculus."
Aut herba lapathii prata amantis et gravi
Malvae salubres corpori,
Vel agna festis caesa Terminalibus,
Vel haedus ereptus lupo.

Has inter epulas ut juvat pastas oves
Videre properantes domum,
Videre fessos vomerem inversum boves
Collo trahentes languido, Positosque vernas, ditis examen domus,
Circum renidentes Lares!
Haece ubi locutus fenerator Alphius,
Jam jam futurus rusticus,
Omnem redigit Idibus pecuniam,
Quaeerit Kalendis ponere.

The ‘attagen’ is usually said to be the moor-fowl. Martial says it was one of their most delicious birds (xiii. 61):—

"Inter sapores furrit altum primus Iconcarum gustus attagenarum."

It is repeatedly mentioned by Aristotle.
Pharos, in his History of Animals, numbers it among κοινωνεις δραμάω, birds which do not fly high.

57. Aut herba lapathii Both the ‘lapa-thus’ and the ‘malva’ were gently pur-gative. See Sat. ii. 4. 29 and Mart. x. 48.
7:—

"Exoneratras ventrem mih viilica malvas Autilit."

59. caesa Terminalibus] The Terminalia took place in the early spring (23 February), about the time of lambing, and lambs were offered to Terminus. Plutarch says that sheep rescued from the jaws of the wolf were thought to be better flavoured than others. The thirsty would eat them for economy. That is the idea Horace means to convey. Martial introduces the same dish to make a plain meal (x. 48.
13):—

"—— Una ponetur coenula mensa Hoedus inhumani raptus ab ore lupi."

Porphyron explains Horace’s meaning by saying "factus gratior ex perdito."

61. ut juven] See v. 19, "ut gaudet."

65. vernas, ditis examen domus.] "Tur-baque vernarum saturi bona sigma coloni" (Tibull. ii. 1. 23). ‘Verna’ was a slave born in the owner’s house. There was a hearth near which the images of the Lares were placed, in the centre of the ‘atrium’, the entrance-room, and round it the slaves had their supper. Columella (R. R. xi. 1.
19, quoted by Cruquius) says: ‘Consuescat (vulgaris) rusticos circa Larem domini fo-cumque familarem semper epulare.’ Martial (iii. 58. 22) has:—

"Cingunt serenum lactei focum vernae Et larga festos iucet ad Lares sylva,”

which favours the notion that ‘residents’ means shining by the light of the fire, although Orelli says it does not. ‘Cheerful’ is the sense. Rutgerius refers the word to ‘vernas,’ and Doering partly approves. It includes both ‘Lares’ and ‘vernas.’ The sense derived from Juvenal’s description (xii. 68), ‘simul acer nitentia cera,” does not suit this passage.

67. Haece ubi locutus] Mancinelli, who was an acute as well as learned man, supposes Horace to mean, that on hearing him declaim upon the charms of the country the usurer determined to be a farmer, and he understands ‘sum’ after ‘locutus.’
Though no doubt he is wrong, he saw that a good deal of the language and sentiments of this ode was unsuited to Alphius. H.
Stephens notices the same interpretation.
An usurer of this name is mentioned by Columella (de R. R. ii. 7. 2, quoted by all the Commentators) as an authority on the subject of bad debts. ‘Redigere’ (not ‘religere,’ as the Scholiasts and some of the older editors have it) is the technical word for getting in money out on loan, and ponere for putting it out, as καταβάλλων, βάλλων, τιθιμαι. The settling days at Rome were the Kalenda, Nones, and Dies. See Cicerone, Div. in Q. Caecil. 17; also in Verr.
act. ii. l. 1. c. 57). ‘Nemo Rabonio molestus
est neque Kalendis Decembribus neque Nonis neque Idibus.’
CARMEN III.

Between a.u.c. 718—721.

Horace here vents his wrath against some garlick he had eaten the day before at Maecenas’ table, and which had disagreed with him. He seems to imply that Maecenas had played off a practical joke upon him, and the whole Epode is full of humour and familiarity. This leads to the supposition that it was not written very early in their acquaintance, while from the last two verses it has been justly inferred that it was written before Maecenas was married to Terentia, or in love with her, since the notion suggested by Acron (not as his own however), that Terentia is there alluded to, is out of the question. But, for reasons that will be stated in Epod. xiv., Introduction, it is probable that Maecenas was married, or in love with his future wife, in a.u.c. 721. This ode was therefore written in all probability some time between 718 and 721.

ARGUMENT.

If a man has murdered his father, only make him eat garlick. Oh, the bowels of those country folk! What poison have I got in me? Was a viper’s blood in the mess, or did Canidia tamper with it? Sure with such poison did Medea anoint Jason and his intended bride. Apulia in the dog-days never burnt like this, nor the coat on Hercules’ shoulders. If thou dost ever take a fancy to such stuff, Maecenas, mayst thou ask for a kiss and be refused!

Parentis olim si quis impia manu
Senile guttur fregerit,
Edit cicutis allium nocentius.
O dura messorum ilia!
Quid hoc veneni saevit in praecordiis?
Num viperinus his cruo
Incocctus herbis me fefellit? an malas
Canidia tractavit dapes?

1. Parentis olim] He uses the same illustration in cursing the tree that nearly killed him (C. ii. 13. 6).
3. Edit] The old form of the present subjunctive was ‘edim,’ ‘edis,’ ‘edit.’ It occurs again (Sat. ii. 8. 90). Cicero uses this form, and Plautus frequently.
4. O dura] Horace perhaps remembered Virgil’s line (Ecl. ii. 10):
   “Thestyliis et rapido fessis messoribus aestu Allia serpyllumque herbas contundit olen-
   tes.”
5. praecordiis?] This is sometimes put for the intestines, as in Sat. ii. 4. 26. (See Forcell.)
7. fefellit?] C. iii. 16. 32, n.
8. Canidia] This is one of the few names of which we may be pretty sure that it represents a real person. The Scholiasts on this place, and Sat. i. 8. 24, say that her real name was Gratidia, and that she was a Neapolitan seller of perfumes. She is mentioned always as a witch; but I do not know why Buttmann says Horace describes her every where as a woman grown old amid her intrigues, and so derives her fictitious name from ‘Canus,’ which observation Estré commends. Franke also calls her “anlis mulier.” But this contradicts the notion, which Buttmann himself adopts, that she was a “former mistress” of Horace’s. He was not more than twenty-eight or twenty-nine (some say twenty-six) when he wrote against her first (either in Epod. v. or Sat. i. 8), and he was twenty-four when he arrived in Rome. Unless
HORATII FLACCI

Ut Argonautas praeter omnes candidum
Medea mirata est ducem,
Ignota tauris illigaturum juga
Perunxit hoc Jasonem;
Hoc delibutis ulta donis pellieem
Serpente fugit alite.
Nec tautus unquam siderum insedit vapor
Siticulosae Apulieae,
Nec munus humeris efficacis Herculis
Inaritus aestuosius.
At si quid unquam tale concupiveris,
Jocose Maecenas, precor
Manum puella savio opponat tuo Extrema et in sponda cubet.

therefore he became enamoured of her in her old age, she could not have been an old woman when he gave her this name. The boy in Ep. v. 98 is made to curse her and her fellows, and to predict that they will be stoned for a set of wicked old women, and Priapus describes her with false teeth (S. i. 8. 48); but these need not be taken literally. In Ep. xvii. 47, Horace says she is not an old woman; and there is no reason to suppose she was, though most probably she was not young. It is impossible, from Horace's poems, to gather the cause of his anger against this woman or his connexion with her. If Gratidia was her real name, the fictitious one was framed on the principle noticed C. ii. 12, Introduction.

9. praeter omnes] Orelli directs us to take these words with 'candidum,' not with 'mirata est.' I prefer taking them with the latter. Horace assigns opposite qualities to the poison in Medea's hands. It protects Jason and destroys Creusa (or Glaucus) his betrothed. (See Epod. v. 63.)

15. insedit vapor] 'Vapor' is equivalent to 'calor,' the effect to the cause (see Forcell. for examples, and also of 'efficax'). 'Siderrum vapor' is the heat of the dog-days. Compare Ep. xvi. 61: "Nullius astri Gregem aestuosa torrent impotentia." The arid unwatered character of Apulia has been noticed before (C. iii. 30.11). South of the Aufidus there was not a stream till you reached the Galaesus near Tarentum. This caused the arrangement mentioned by Varro in the passage quoted on Ep. i. 27. The northern part of Apulia was better watered, and was consequently very fertile.

17. Nec munus humeris] i. e. the garment smeared with the blood of Nessus, given by Deianira to Hercules. See Epod. xvii. 31.

21. savio opponat tuo] The editors generally have 'savio,' and not 'suavis.' Forcell. makes them both the same word, and says they were from 'suavis.' Jahn, in loco, denies this, and says 'saviun' means 'a lip.'
CARMEN IV.

All the positive information we can derive from this ode in respect to its purport and date is, that it contains a vehement invective against some person of low birth and contemptible character, who gave himself airs and disgusted the people of Rome; he was also a military tribune. The approximate time is fixed by the last lines, which show that it was written while Augustus was preparing or carrying on war against Sextus Pompeius, who had enlisted in his service pirates and slaves, as we learn from Dion and the other historians. (See below, ix. 10.) To bring us nearer to the exact date, it has been argued (first by Masson in his life of Horace) that, inasmuch as in the second expedition of Caesar against Sex. Pompeius there were enlisted in his fleet a great body of slaves, it is not probable that Horace would have used language of contempt which would apply as much to Augustus' as the enemy's force. It must therefore have been written, if this assumption has any weight, before that armament was formed, which was A.U.C. 717. In 716 there deserted to Augustus, Pompeius' lieutenant Menas or Menodorus (C. iii. 16. 15. n.), and it was in consequence of the advantage gained by this man's defection that Augustus declared war against Pompeius, in which war he sustained two severe defeats; after which he suspended operations for a twelvemonth, and during that period it is said with confidence this Epode was written. It is also stated by all the Scholiasts that Menas is the subject of this lampoon. The greater number of modern critics doubt their accuracy, and the name 'Velius Rufus' occurring in one or two inscriptions that name has been fixed upon instead of Menas', though no attempt is made to identify him with any historical character. The objections raised to Menas being the person alluded to are: 1. That Horace would not have failed to notice the treachery as well as the pride of this person. But that argument, which is Gesner's, has no great force. Horace meant to attack the swaggering airs of the man, which were more offensive to the citizens than his betrayal of Pompeius, by which they had gained and which could not have been noticed without offending Augustus. 2. That Menas had been so short a time in Rome that he could not have been possessed of large landed property, and having charge of the fleet would have had no opportunity of making himself unpopular in the manner here described. But no length of time was wanted for these objects. He had no doubt made himself rich before he betrayed his trust, having had plenty of opportunities for doing so, and probably he did not sell his conscience and his trust for nothing. He had had time to invest his money, become a favoured guest of Augustus, and have his head turned; and a very few exhibitions of himself in the character here described would be enough to call forth this short lampoon. 3. That Menas was not an eques. But he was elevated to that rank by Augustus, as we learn from Dion (xlvi. 45); and at any rate, if he had but the regulated income of an eques, he had the privileges of that order at least as regards a seat in the theatre. 4. It is affirmed that Menas could not be called a 'tribunus militum,' inasmuch as he who had been under Pompeius the governor of two large islands (Sardinia and Corsica), as well as admiral of his fleet and commander of three legions, would have held a higher post under Augustus, who had received and continued to treat him with great respect. But it is a matter of history that Menas' desertion of Augustus and return to his old master arose out of his discontent with the rank given him by the former, and it is hard to say what that rank may at any given time have been. It was always subordinate; and, though we learn he rose to be legatus to Calvisius Sabinus the chief admiral, he may at first only have been a military tribune, which post however would at once give him equestrian rank ex officio (see S. i. 6. 25, n.). 5. It is said we do not know that Menas ever was flogged; but that he was once a slave (he was a freedman of Pompeius Magnus) was enough to give rise to such an assertion in a satire of this kind, whether it was known to be true or not. Thus I do not think there is sufficient internal evidence to impugn the unanimous statement of the Scholiasts; and though it must be admitted that, without their authority, no ingenuity would have discovered that Menas was the subject of the Epode, and notwithstanding the appearance of another name the forgery of which it is difficult to account for, in one or two inscriptions, it does not seem that a case has been made out against that which until recently has been the opinion generally received on the authority of the Scholiasts. The MSS. with inscriptions bearing the name of Vedius are four in number: one of Kirchner's best is inscribed "ad quendam tribunum inimicum poetae;" which title any one would naturally affix to the poem who had no clue to the person intended but such as itself affords. But the vast majority of MSS., of which Fea has cited a large number, are headed with inscriptions to the effect that Menas is the person attacked, though the copyists had so little respect for these titles that they were content to take merely the substance of them, since no two MSS. exactly agree in the words. I need not repeat that none of the inscriptions can with any probability be supposed to have been affixed by Horace himself.

ARGUMENT.

I hate thee, thou whipt slave, as the lamb hates the wolf and the wolf the lamb. Be thou never so proud, luck doth not change the breed. See, as thou swaggerest down the road how they turn and say, "Here is a scoundrel who was flogged till the crier was tired, and now he has his acres, and ambles on his nag, and sits among the equites, and snaps his fingers at Otho and his law. What is the use of our sending ships to attack the pirates if such a rascal as this is to be military tribune?"

Lupis et agnis quanta sortito obtigit,
Tecum mihi discordia est,
Hibericis peruste funibus latus
Et crura dura compede.
Licet superbus ambules pecunia,
Fortuna non mutat genus.
Videsne, Sacram metiente te viam
Cum bis trium ulnarum toga,

1. sortito] In virtue of their condition. 'Sors' is the condition which choice, accident, fate, or nature (as here) has assigned. See notes on C. i. 9. 14; S. i. 1. 1.
3. Hibericus — funibus] These were cords made of 'spartum,' usually said to be the Spanish broom. It was made into ropes especially for ships' rigging. The Scholiast Acron and Cruquius' Commentator both suppose Horace to allude to a time when the subject of his abuse had served in Spain. Mancinelli takes that view too. If it were so, it would suit Menas very well, for he was in all probability with Sex. Pompeius in that country before he obtained his freedom. 'Hibericus funibus' might be very well used without any such allusion, since the material of which cords were made was known to come from Spain; but, if the person had ever been there, the point would be forcibly felt. It may be added, in favour of the theory which makes Menas the hero, that the mention of Spanish ropes seems to imply that the person had suffered on board ship, if not in the country itself, since, as Pliny tells us, ropes of spartum were especially used in ships, and the only way to give point to the epithet is to suppose it had reference to Spain itself or to the fleet. In the army they flogged with vine twigs. This gives a colouring to the observation of Mancinelli: "'Hibericus funibus' ostendit eumuisse Pompeii remigem in Ibéria."
7. metiente] See Forcell. Here 'metiri viam' is perhaps rather more emphatic than it is in other instances, as showing the man's strut and swagger. Acron quotes happily, "Stabili gressu metitur littora cornix" (Lucan, v. 550). The Via Sacra, on the position of which see below v. 8, was crowded with public buildings, and was a favourite lounge. See S. i. 9. 1.
8. trium] Bentley was the first, I believe, to adopt this reading from the conjecture of Barthius. The MSS. have either 'ter' or 't,' which latter may stand for
EPODON LIBER, 4. 283

Ut ora vertat huc et hue euntium
Liberrima indignatio?

Sectus flagellis hic triumviralibus
Praeconis ad fastidium

Arat Falerni mille fundi jugera
Et Appiam mannis terit,

Sedilibusque magnus in primis eques
Othonem contempto sedet!

Quid attinet tot ora navium gravi
Rostrata duci pondere

Contra latrones atque servilem manum
Hoc, hoc tribuno militum?

'trium' as well as for 'ter.' 'Bis ter' is not Latin. 'Huc et huc,' 'hinc et hinc,' (Epod. ii. 31; v. 97) are poetical ways of expressing what in prose is expressed with 'ille,' 'illinc' in the second place. The Romans of this period used 'ulna' as an equivalent for 'cubitus'; therefore 'bis trimum ulnarum' must be understood to have reference to the width of the 'toga,' not the length, which was much greater, about three times the height of the wearer from the shoulder to the ground. The effect of so wide a 'toga' would be to give a broad imposing appearance to the man's person, which I mention, because some suppose Horace to mean that his 'toga' swept the ground as he walked. Compare S. ii. 3. 163: "Latus ut in Circo spatiere." The shape and adjustment of the 'toga' are fully discussed in Becker's Gallus (Exc. on the Male Attire); and in a note from a French writer, appended by the translator, it is said that when stretched out it formed an elliptic curve, which is very probable: "une courbe qui n'était pas tout à fait circulaire mais un peu elliptique."

9. verat] This the Scholiasts interpret 'turns away in disgust;' but it rather implies that the passengers turned to one another, and turned to look at the coccomb and point at him.

II. Sectus] This is supposed to be the language each man holds to his neighbour. The 'triumviri capitales' had the power of summarily punishing slaves. The place was usually at the Maenia column. It does not necessarily overthrow the Scholiast's theory (v. 3) that here the punishment is laid in Rome. If either were true, both might be. But the argument from 'Hibernicus' (see Introd.) is not strong. A crier stood by while floggings were going on, and kept proclaiming the offender's crime. So Plato lays down, in the Laws, ii. p. 917 D, that the swindler shall be flogged at the rate of one blow for each drachma while the crier declares his crime.

13. Arat Falerni] The Falernian hills were covered with vines, but the vineyards were ploughed between the trees and sown with corn. The Appian road leading into Campania would be passed and repassed by the parvenu as he went to and from his estates. 'Tero' is equivalent to τριής, which is used in the same connexion.

15. eques] See Introduction. If the person was a military tribune, he had equestrian rank; and, if of one of the four first legions, he had a seat in the Senate, and wore the 'latus clavus.' See note on S. i. 6. 25. If he had an income of 400,000 sesterces, he could, under the law of L. Roscius Otho (passed A.U.C. 687), take his place in any of the fourteen front rows in the theatre, and laugh at Otho, whose purpose was to keep those seats for persons of birth. See Juv. iii. 153, sqq., and the Scholiast thereon, and Epp.i. 1. 62, "Roscia, dic sodes, &c.

17. ora] Bentley proposes 'aera,' but does not take it into the text. Sanadon proposes 'ora aerata.' But, though the expression 'ora navium rostrata' is new, it is very intelligible, and need not be altered. A fragment of Anacreon has been preserved in Athenaeus, iii. 533, E. (20 Bergk), which in some respects is so like this Epode that it seems probable Horace remembered it as he was writing. He describes a person named Artemon, who had risen from the lowest poverty and was now carried about like a fine lady in his litter:

— ἕαθη γ' Ἐφυσαύλη μέλει
ὁ περιφόρητος Ἀρτέμων κ.τ.λ.
πολλά μὲν ἐν δοῦρι τῆθει αὐχίνα, πολλά
ο' ἐν τρόχῳ,
πολλά δὲ νότον σκυτήρι μάστιγι θωμικθεῖς, κ.τ.λ.

νῦν ὅ ἐπιζάψει σατινίων, κ.τ.λ.
CARMEN V.

There is so much likeness between this singular ode and part of the eighth Satire of the first book, that it is generally supposed they were written about the same time, or about A.U.C. 721. A scene is represented in which the unfortunate woman Canidia (Ep. 3. 8, n.), so unmercifully satirized by Horace for a succession of years, is the chief actress. She is passionately in love with one Varus, whom she calls an old sinner but whose heart she is resolved to win. To this end she resorts to magical philters, for the composition of which, in company with three other witches, she gets a boy of good family, strips him naked and buries him up to his chin in a hole, in order that there with food put before him he might wither away in the midst of longing, and so his liver might form, in conjunction with other ingredients, a love-potion to be administered to the faithless Varus. What could have put such a scene into Horace’s head it is hard to say; but in treating it as one that actually happened, and that at Naples (from v. 43), Porphyria and those who have followed him show more simplicity than judgment. That the scene does not even profess to be laid at Naples is clear from the dogs of the Suburra (58) and the vultures of the Esquiline hill (100) being introduced.

ARGUMENT.

"Tell me, by the gods, by thy children, if Lucina hath ever blessed thee, by this purple toga which should protect my childhood, tell me what meaneth this horrid scene. Why look ye at me so sternly?" As these words drop from the trembling and naked child, Canidia bids them bring branches from the tombs, a screech-owl’s wing and eggs steeped in frog’s blood, poisonous herbs of Thessaly and Hibernia, and bones snatched from the jaws of a hungry bitch, to burn in the magic flames. Sagana meanwhile sprinkles waters of Avernus over the chamber, and Veia digs a pit where the boy must stand buried to the chin that his marrow and liver may dry up and become fit ingredients for the potion. Folia too is there charming stars and moon from the sky. Then Canidia bursts forth, saying, "Night and Diana avenge me on my enemies. Give me such an ointment to smear the old man with that the dogs may bark at him as he goes to his vile haunts. But what is this? How did Medea succeed while I fail? I know every herb. I have anointed his bed. I see, I see. Some charm more skilled has set him free. No common potion therefore, no hatchet pottle will I prepare for thee, Varus: the skies shall sink below the sea if thou burn not with love for me." Then the boy breaks out into cursing, and says, "The destiny of man is unchangeable. I will curse you, and my curse no sacrifice shall avert. My ghost shall haunt you by night, and tear your flesh, and rob you of sleep. Men shall stone you, and wolves and vultures shall tear your unburied carcases, and my parents shall live to see it."

At, o deorum quidquid in caelo regit
Terras et humanum genus,
Quid iste fert tumultus? aut quid omnium
Vultus in unum me truces?

1. At, o deorum] ‘At’ is the same word as ‘ad,’ and is not always or usually an adversative particle. It is contained in ‘atque’ and ‘autem,’ neither of which is necessarily that force, but are used to open
Per liberos te, si vocata partubus
Lucina veris affuit,
Per hoc inane purpurae decus precor,
Per improbaturum haec Jovem,
Quid ut noverca me intueris aut uti
Petita ferro belua?
Ut haec trementi questus ore constitit
Insignibus raptis puer,
Impube corpus quale posset impia
Mollire Thracum pectora,
Canidia brevibus implicata viperis
Crines et incomptum caput
Jubet sepulcris caprificos erutas,
Jubet cuppressus funebres,
Et uncta turpis ova ranae sanguine,
Plumamque nocturnae strigis,
Herbasque quas Iolcos atque Hibernia
Mittit venenorum ferax,
Et ossa ab ore rapta jejunae canis
Flammis aduri Colchieis.
At expedita Sagana per totam domum
Spargens Avernales aquas
Horret capillis, ut marinus asperis Echinus aut currens aper.

sentences and carry on the meaning of a discourse. When 'at' is used at the opening it expresses abruptness, and is as though the speaker were only continuing a sentiment previously conceived, but not expressed. "It denotes a sudden emotion of the mind, and is employed in sudden transitions of speech" (Key's Lat. Gr. 1445, d.). See S. ii. 2. 40, n. Quidquid deorum] Livy uses the same expression more than once, ii. 5; xxiii. 9. See also S. i. 6. 1:
"Non quia, Maecenas, Lydorum quicquid Etruscos Incoluit fines ——"
5. Per liberos te], \'Te\' is addressed to Canidia. Though Torrentius thinks it far-fetched to suppose there is any double meaning in what follows, a doubt is certainly implied of the woman's fertility. The charge is retracted in Ep. xvii. 50, sqq. 7. purpurae decus] The 'toga praetexta,' the sign of nobility and of childhood, which should have turned his persecutors from their purpose but did not. Cic. (in Verr. ii. 1. 58): "Vestitus enim (the 'toga praetexta' worn by the young Junius) neminem commovebat is quem illi mos et jus ingenuitatis dabat." In addition to this 'toga,' children of free parents wore a small round plate of gold ('bulla') suspended from their neck. Both were laid aside on the assumption of the 'toga virilis' (usually about 15), and the 'bulla' was presented as an offering to the Larcs (see Dict. Ant.). Dacier quotes Quint. (Declam. 340): "Ego vobis allego etiam ipsum illud sacrum praetextarum quo sacerdotes velantur, quo magistratus; quo infirmitatem pueritiae sacrum faciimus ac venerabilem." Pliny calls the 'praetexta' 'majestas pueritiae' (ix. 36). 'Odia novercalia' were proverbial. (See Tac. Ann. xii. 2).
6. Per improbaturum] Comp. C. i. 2. 19.
12. Insignibus] That is his 'praetexta' and 'buli.' 'Impube corpus' is in apposition with 'puer.'
21. Iolcos atque Hibernia] Iolcus was a Abacta nulla Veia conscientia
Ligonibus duris humum Exhauriebat ingemens laboribus,
Quo posset infossus puer
Longo die bis terque mutatae dapis
Inemori spectaculo,
Cum promineret ore quantum exstant aqua
Suspensa mento corpora;
Exsucca uti medulla et aridum jeur
Amoris esset pocolum,
Interminato cum semel fixae cibo Intabuisisset pupulae.

town of Thessaly, and Hiberia a region
east of Colchis and south of the Caucasus, now part of Georgia. See C. ii. 20. 20.
Elsewhere in Horace Hiber and Hiberia have reference to Spain.
Flames of Colchis mean magic flames,
such as Medea prepared.
25. expedita] This answer to the description of Canidia herself given Sat. i. 8.
23:—
"Vidi egomet nigra succinctam vadere palla Canidiam." Sagana is there again introduced in her company (see note).
26. Avernales aquas] So Dido in her pretended magical ceremony sprinkled "la-tices simulatos fontis Avernii" (Aen. iv. 512).
28. cursus aper.] Bentley has substituted ' Laurens' on the conjecture of Heinsius, and produces of course many instances in which Laurentian boars are mentioned. But the more common he makes that epithet appear the less probable it becomes that it would have been universally overlooked by the copyists and Scholiasts.
As Sagana is represented running about furiously, the rushing of a boar is not a bad simile. If Bentley had ever seen a wild hog bursting from a jungle, and then tumbling along the open plain faster than dog or rider can follow him, he would not have quarrelled with the illustration. The Schol-liast Acron gives, either as a comment or a various reading, 'furens.'
29. nulla — conscientia] Unconscious or careless of the horrible suffering the child was to endure. Though she groaned, it was only with the labour. We are to understand that the transaction was going on, and the grave being dug in the open court, the 'impluvium.' The nature and purpose of the boy's torture are sufficiently explained in the introduction and argument.
33. Longo die bis terque] 'Longo' belongs to 'die,' not to 'spectaculo.' On every weary day food was to be put before him, and changed two or three times, that his soul might yearn for it like Tantalus, and its longings might be worked into the spell that was to inflame the heart of Varus.
'Inemori' is not found any where else.
The ordinary form is 'immori,' which appears in Ven. 1483. 'Bis terque' signifies 'frequently;' as in Martial (vi. 60):
"Attractit prope se manu negantem Et bis terque quaterque basiavit."
'Bis terre' (which was the common reading till Bentley edited the other) means 'rarely.'
Bentley is wrong in saying that all the editions since the fifteenth century have 've.'
That of Ascensius of 1519 has 'que,' and Manciellini in his commentary has the same.
The Scholiast Porphyrius so read it.
37. Exsucce] Till Lambinus, on the authority of one or two MSS., introduced
'exsucta,' the editions all had 'exerta' or
'exsucta.' The Scholiasts read 'exsucta,' which is plainly out of place. There are more various readings on this word in the MSS. than on any other in Horace. They are recapitulated by Foa: 'exusta,' 'ex-secta,' 'exsecta,' 'exsecta,' 'extracta,' 'exsucta,
'exsucta,' 'exsecta,' 'exsecta,' 'exsecta,'
'exsucta,' 'exsecta,' 'exhuausta,' 'exsucta,' exsucta,' 'exsucta.' He adds 'exsucce,' and adopts it with Cunningham and Sanadon. I find in the margin of H. Stephens' edition 'ex-secta.' Bentley prefers 'exsucta.' 'Exsucta' and 'exsucce' appear to me the most likely readings. The latter is used by Seneca and Quintilian. Juvenal has "ossa vides regum vacuis exsucta medullis" (viii. 90).
If there is any difference, 'exsucce' seems better suited to describe the dry state of the Non defuisse masculae libidinis
Ariminensem Foliam
Et otiosa credidit Neapolis
Et omne vicinum oppidum,
Quae sidera excentata voce Thessala
Lunamque caelo deripit.
Hic irresistum saeva dente livido
Canidia rodens policem
Quid dixit aut quid tacuit? O rebus meis
Non infideles arbitrae,
Nox et Diana quae silentium regis
Arcana cum fiunt sacra,
Nunc, nunc adeste, nunc in hostiles domos
Iram atque numer vertite!
Formidolosis dum latent silvis ferae
Dulei sopore languidae,
Senem, quod omnes rideant, adulterum
Latrent Suburanæ canes
Nardo perunctum, quale non perfectus Meae laborarint manus.—

marrow, while the participle 'exsucta' better suits the bones from which the marrow has been exhausted, as in the verse of Juvenal.

39. Iterminato This word, compounded of 'inter' and 'minor,' is a stronger way of expressing 'interdicto.' It is the insertion of a threat instead of a plain command. Forcell gives examples from Plautus and Terence. "As soon as his eye-balls fastened on the forbidden food should have wasted away." Sat. ii. 1. 24: "Ut semel icto Accessit fervor capiti." Mitscherlich takes 'semel' with 'fixae,' as if it meant the eyes fastened on the food and never removed.

41. Folia of Ariminum (an Umbrian town) represents some woman of unnatural lewdness well known at Naples and its neighbourhood, where, Horace means to say, when this story was told every body believed she had had a hand in it. This is the most obvious way of explaining the passage without supposing the scene to be laid at Naples, which, as shown in the Introduction, it cannot be.

43. otiosa So Ovid calls it: "in otia natam Parthenopen" (Met. xv. 711).

45. Quae sidera excentata This faculty of witches is sufficiently well known. Virg. (Ecl. viii. 69): "Carmina vel caelo possunt deducere Lunam." Tibull. (i. 2. 43): "Hanc ego de caelo ducentem sidera vidi." Plato speaks of τάς τήν σελήνην καθαίρουσας, τάς Θαλαίδας (Gorg. p. 513, A). And Strepsiades' ingenious device for avoiding the payment of interest for his debts was to get a witch to bring down the moon from the sky and then lock her up, that there might be no more months bringing pay-day round (Arist. Nub. 749, sqq.).

55. Formidolosis The MSS. vary between this and 'formidolosae.' As the word bears both an active and a passive meaning, it is not clear which Horace wrote. If applied to the woods, it is equivalent to 'horridis,' as Virg. (Georg. iv. 468), "Caligantem nigra formidine lucum;" and the oldest MSS. have it thus. The other reading would also admit of the same active interpretation, though in connexion with 'latent' it is generally interpreted by those who adopt it as equivalent to 'timidi.' In that case 'ferae' must mean the weaker class of animals, and not beasts of prey, which is common enough.

57. Senem, quod omnes rideant, She here prays that the dogs may bark at Varus as he goes to the brothels of the Suburra, so that all may turn out and langh at the vile old man scented with the richest per-
HORATII FLACCI

Quid accidit? Cur dira barbarae minus Venena Medaeae valent?
Quibus superbam fugit ulta pellicem,
Magni Creontis filiam,
Cum palla, tabo minus imbutum, novam
Incendio nuptam abstulit.
Atqui nec herba nec latens in asperis
Radix fefellit me locis.
Indormit unctis omnium cubilibus
Oblivione pellicum.—

Ah ah! solutus ambulat veneficae Scientioris carmine.
Non usitatis, Vare, potionibus,
O multa fleturum caput,
Ad me recurre s, nec vocata mens tua
Marsis redabit vocibus:

fumes, such as even she, Canidia, had never made. She knows that these are his haunts, and wonders why her drugs (which she calls the drugs of Medea, as imitating those) take no effect upon him: when she suddenly breaks out with the exclamation, "Ah! ah! I see, some stronger spell is at work; but I will find one that is stronger than any." The greatest difficulty has been made with vv. 69, 70, which are certainly capable of various renderings. Orelli says she had smeared the couch he slept on with drugs, to make him forget all women but herself, taking 'unctis' with 'oblivione.' My own opinion is divided between this interpretation and the following: 'he is sleeping on his drugged couch, in forgetfulness of all women,' including herself, as if she suddenly had seen him in that position. I incline on the whole to Orelli's version. Those who are not satisfied with either of these interpretations will find a new one in nearly every commentator they may consult. The Scholiasts' notion that Canidia was a seller of perfumes has a little more show of foundation (in v. 69, 60) than the same as applied to Virgilius (C. iv. 12, Introduction); but it is in all probability derived from this passage only. Acron's reading, 'suburbanae,' in v. 58, shows the caution with which the Scholiasts are to be followed. In v. 60 the oldest MSS. vary between 'laborarint' and 'laborarunt,' and it is hard to decide between them. Both have an appropriate sense: the one declaring that she never had wrought, and the other that she never could have wrought, such ointment. 'Quale' is equivalent to 'eujusmodi.' The Suburra, according to Nardini (Rom. Ant. iii. 6, quoted by Cramer, It. i. 369), was a street leading from the Esquiline to the Viminal. It was one of the most populous and profligate parts of the city. Propertius (iv. 7. 15) describes it as the resort of thieves:

"Jamme tibi exciderunt vigilacis furtu Suburrae, Et mea nocturnis trita fesestra dolis?"

and Martial of prostitutes (vi. 66):—

"Famae non nimium bona puellam Quales in media sedent Suburra." A

One of the four ancient divisions of Rome was called Suburana, but this differed from the later Suburra, which was not one of the quarters formed by Augustus.

62. Venena Medaeae] She speaks as if she had been actually using the drugs of Medea.

63. fugit ulta pellicem.] See Epod. iii. 14. 71. Ah ah!] Bentley 'Aha!'

73. Who Varus may have been we cannot tell. See C. i. 18, Introduction. Some ancient inscriptions call him 'Alfius Varus.'

76. Marsis — vocibus:] That is, by common spells or charms, such as have been learnt from the Marsi, and were usually practised (Epod. xvii. 29). Gallius says (xvi. 11): "Marsis hominibus—vi quadam genitali datum est, ut serpentum virulentorum domitores sint et incontinentibus herbarumque succis faciant medelarum miracula." Virgil has (Aen. vii. 758): "Marsis quasitae in montibus herbarae."
Maius parabo, maius infundam tibi Fastidienti pocusum,

Priusque caelum sidet inferius mari,
Tellure purrpecta super,

Quam non amore sic meo flagres uti
Bitumen atris ignibus. —

Sub haec puer jam non ut ante mollibus
Lenire verbis impias,

Sed dubius unde rumperet silentium
Misi Thyestes preces:

Venena magnus fas nefasque non valent
Convertere humanam vicem;

Diris agam vos; dira detestatio
Nulla expiatur victima.

Quin ubi perire jussus exspiravero
Nocturnus occurram Furor

86. Thyestes preces:] Curses such as Thyestes might have imprecated on the head of Atreus. The opening sentence of the boy's speech is variously interpreted. Lambinious proposed, and many scholars have adopted, the following version: namely, "Witchcraft can overthrow the great principles of justice, but cannot overthrow (or change) the condition or fate of men;" where 'valent' is understood in the first clause. In support of the construction are quoted Tac. Ann. xii. 64: "Agrippina quae filio dare imperium, tolerare imperi-tantem nequibat." Ib. xiii. 56: "Deesse nobis terra in qua vivamus, in qua moriamur non potest;" and Plaut. Amphit. i. 300: "Tuae si quid vis nuntiare (sub. sinam) hanc nostram adhuc non sinam;" which no doubt exactly represent the case as these interpreters view it. But I do not see the sense which by this construction is brought out of Horace's words. Orelli makes 'fas nefasque' the subject, and supposes the boy to say that appeals to justice and the laws of Heaven are of no avail to turn the course of witchcraft (or the hearts of witches); so he resorts to curses. The words 'humanam vicem' he renders 'more modoque hominum,' which he explains by 'humanis sensi-bus.' But what he means is not clear. It would be better if this view of the construction were adopted to render 'humanam vicem' 'on behalf of men,' or 'of humanity,' as (Cic. Epp. ad Fam. i. 9) "nostram vicem ultus est ipsa sese." (See Epod. xvii. 42, n.) I do not see why 'venena' should not stand for 'veneficas,' like 'sce-lestus,' as Fea says, but which Dillenbr.
says cannot be. Bentley acknowledges he can make nothing of the sentence; and, as the corrections he suggests do not please himself, they need not be repeated here.
The Scholiasts throw no light upon the subject with their explanations, and I feel very doubtful about the meaning. The words may be translated as they stand:
"Witchcraft or the great powers of right and wrong cannot change the fate of men;"
i.e. nothing can, whether it be good or bad;
and though that interpretation does not satisfy me, I prefer it to the others, because it is the least strained with reference to the collocation of the words. The omission of a copula between 'venena' and 'magnum' is no argument against this version. The only other explanation that coincides at all with the order of the words is that which makes 'magnum fas nefasque' an exclamation: "Witchcraft, by the mighty laws of heaven! cannot change the destiny of man."
To this interpretation Orelli pays no more attention than to say "prorsus imperite nuper interpres quidam fas nefasque promera exclamatione habuit." It had occurred to me as a possible solution of the difficulty; and, notwithstanding Orelli's opinion, I think it may take its place among the more plausible of the many explanations that have been offered. Orelli has given every other that has been suggested, in his excursus on the passage.

90. Nulla expiatur victima.] See C. i.
28. 34.

91. Nocturnus occurram Furor] He Petamque vultus umbra curvis unguibus,
Quae vis deorum est manium,
Et inquietis assidens praecondiis
Pavore somnos auferam.
Vos turba vicatim hinc et hinc saxis petens
Contundet obscoenas anus;
Post insepulta membra different lupi
Et Esquilinae alites;
Neque hoc parentes heu mihi superstites
Effugerit spectaculum.

threatens to haunt them at night by his ghost in the shape of madness, with sharp claws tearing their faces, and sitting like a nightmare on their breast. ‘Diror’ is no where else personified, as far as I am aware.
Though the Furies were called ‘Dirae,’ they are not meant by ‘Diris’ above, nor are they intended at all. ‘Diris’ means ‘curses.’

94. Quae vis deorum est manium.] The spirits of the dead were to their surviving kindred divinities, ‘Dii Manes.’ They had their sacred rites secured them by the laws (see Cic. de legg. ii. 9), and their annual festival, Feralia. In the early period of Rome they were identical with the Lares,
the deities who protected each homestead,
and whose hearth was in every hall.

100. Esquilinae alites:] On the Campus Esquilinus malefactors of the lower sort were executed, and their bodies left for the vultures and jackalls to devour. Compare
Ep. xvii. 53, and S. i. 3. 8, n.

CARMEN VI.

The Scholiast Porphyriion says of this ode that it is directed against some man who was given to attacking virulently unoffending persons. Acron says his name was Cassius, and that he was a slanderous poet. Compounding these statements, and amplifying them from his own head and the language of the ode, Cruquius’ Scholiast makes Cassius to be Cassius Severus, an orator of great celebrity and bitterness, who was banished by Augustus, and after remaining in exile for twenty-five years died a beggar A.D. 32, more than sixty-three years after the composition of this ode. This Scholiast’s authority is destroyed by his own description of Severus, who, he says, was very abusive and attacked the best of men, but was easily appeased by filling his belly and plying him with money, for which reason Horace compares him to a dog, &c. This is the language of a mere compiler, and is worthy of no credit. The silence of Porphyriion, and the positive statement of Acron that the Cassius of this ode was a poet (which we have no authority for supposing Severus was), as well as the extreme youth of Severus at the time it was written, are all opposed to the notion that he is the person attacked; and moreover so far from being the coward Horace describes, Severus boldly attacked men of influence, and suffered for doing so;
and as to his avarice, it was through persisting in the course his nature inclined him to,
of indiscriminate abuse, that he came to destitution and died in that condition. Although therefore Comm. Cruq. has been followed by all the editors till the present century and by some late commentators; and though Weichert has done his best to support this opinion, I do not think he has succeeded. It may be allowed that Acron had some ground—we know not what—for calling the man Cassius, and if so the notorious orator would occur to the copyists and those by whom the inscriptions were framed, who were as ignorant as we are of the real Cassius. Estré has, with his usual exactness, given all the authorities from whom the life of Cassius Severus has been compiled, among whom not one, it appears, makes any mention of his being a poet. Kirchner supposes Maevius to be meant, and Grotfeind Bavius. But if a name is retained I think it should be Cassius, it being admitted that the man is otherwise unknown, and that perhaps Horace, writing when he was young, gave him more consideration than he deserved in composing this satire upon him.

ARGUMENT.

Why snarl at innocent strangers, dog, and run away from the wolf? Attack me if thou darest. I am ever ready to hunt the prey, while thou dost but bark and turn aside to fill thy belly. Beware! for I have lifted my horns even as Archilochus and Hipponax lifted theirs. If I am attacked, think'st thou I will stand like a child and cry?

Quid immerentes hospites vexas canis
Ignavus adversum lupos?
Quin huc inanes, si potes, vertis minas
Et me remorsurum petis?
Nam qualis aut Molossus aut fulvus Lacon,
Amica vis pastoribus,
Agam per altas aure sublata nives
Quae cumque praecedet fera:
Tu cum timenda voce complesti nemus
Projectum odoraris cibum.

Cave, cave: namque in malos asperrimus
Parata tollo cornua,
Qualis Lycambae spretus infido gener
Aut acer hostis Bupalo.
An si quis atro dente me petiverit
Inultus ut flebo puer?

6. Amica vis pastoribus.] Lucretius (vi. 1221), speaks of 'vida canum vis,' and Virg. (Aen. iv. 132), 'odoras canum vis.'

It does not, therefore, express 'praesidium et custodiam gregibus,' as Orelli says, but rather seems to signify 'a pack,' or something of that sort. Whatever the Molossian and Laconian dogs were, they were more used for hunting than for watching sheep, and were loved by shepherds because in packs they destroyed the wolves and beasts of prey. (See Georg. iii. 405, sqq.)

13. Lycambae — Bupalo.] Archilochus attacked Lycambes, who after promising him his daughter Neobule in marriage retracted his promise, so sharply that he is said to have hanged himself; and the same fate was supposed to have befallen Bupalus and Athenis, two sculptors, who turned the ugly features of Hipponax into ridicule. The Scholast Acron has confounded these two stories, and makes Hipponax attack Bupalus for refusing him his daughter in marriage.

16. Inultus ut flebo puer?] The construction is 'inultus flebo ut puer.'
This ode is referred by Franke, Kirchner (p. 22), Mitscherlich, and others, to a.u.c. 722, when the last war between Augustus and M. Antonius broke out. Orelli, on the other hand, refers it to the beginning of the war of Perusia, a.u.c. 713-14, to which period Epode xvi. belongs. Dillenbr. refers it, without assigning any particular reasons, to the year 716, when Augustus was going against Sex. Pompeius. There is very little, if any, internal evidence as to the date. None of the chronologists give any good reason for their opinions, and the reader must judge for himself.

ARGUMENT.

Whither run ye to arms?—hath not blood enough of Romans been shed? 'Tis not to burn the walls of Carthage, or humble the Briton, but that the Parthian may rejoice in seeing Rome fall by her own hand. The beasts do not war upon their kind. Is it madness, or force irresistible, or wickedness that drives you? They are dumb: they answer not. 'Tis even so: the blood of Remus is visited on the destinies of Rome.

Quo, quo scelesti ruitis? aut cur dexteris
Aptantur enses conditi?
Parumne campis atque Neptuno super Fusum est Latini sanguinis,
Non ut superbas invidae Karthaginis
Romanus arces ureret,
Intactus aut Britannus ut descendaret
Sacra catenatus via,

2. conditi?] Swords which were lately sheathed.

7. Intactus] See C. iii. 24. 1. What Horace means to say is, "the blood that has been spilt in these civil wars has been shed not for the destruction of Carthage, as in the war that Scipio led, or that the Briton might be led in chains, as he was by Julius Caesar, but for the destruction of Rome herself." 'Intactus' means 'untouched' till Julius Caesar invaded them and carried away prisoners, many of whom walked in his triumph. The first time after Caesar's expeditions that a Roman army invaded Britain was in the expedition of Claudius, a.d. 43.

8. Sacra catenatus via,] See C. iv. 2. 35, n. Perhaps I can make the course of the procession still more clear to the reader. It commenced (according to the account given in that note) at the Porta Triumphalis at the foot of the Mons Capitolinus on the north, and passed out of that gate into the Campus Martius which lay between it and the river. After making the circuit of the Campus it entered the city again by the Porta Carmentalis, at the south extremity of the Mons Capitolinus, where it entered the Velabrum, the space between that hill and Mons Aventinus. Crossing the Velabrum it passed by the Circus Maximus, which lay between the last-named hill and Mons Palatinus, round which it wound to the left till it reached the spot where afterwards was built the arch of Constantine, on the eastern side, opposite the spot where Vespasian built the Amphitheatre that bore his name, Amphitheatrum Flavianum, or, as it is now usually called, the Colosseum. Keeping still to the left the procession came to the Templum Veneris, adjoining which was the Templum Romae. Here the Via Sacra commenced and continued past the Templum Pacis, near to which stands the Church of Sta Maria Maggiore. There a slight descent commences leading to the Templum Faustinae and that of Antoninus Pius (according to Fea, but the situation of EPODON LIBER, 7.

Sed ut secundum vota Parthorum sua
Urbs haec periret dextera?
Neque hic lupis mos nec fuit leonibus
Unquam nisi in dispar feris.
Furorne caecus, an rapit vis acerior,
An culpa? Responsum date.
Tacent et albus ora pallor inficit
Mentesque perculsae stupent.
Sic est: acerba fata Romanos agunt
Scelusque fraternae necis,
Ut immerentis fluxit in terram Remi Sacer nepotibus cruer.

that Temple seems to be very uncertain. Then the procession passed through the Forum till it reached the spot where was afterwards built and still stands the arch of Septimius Severus, close to which, under the east side of the Mons Capitolinus, was the Carcer Tullianus or Mamertinus, the great prison built, as tradition said, by Servius Tullius. At the above spot the captives were taken off to this prison, as C. Pontius the Samnite general was, and usually strangled at once. The procession then having arrived near the gate it started from, wound its way up the Mons Capitolinus till it reached the Capitol. If this description (with the help of which any map of the city will enable the student to follow the triumphal procession) be correct, and if the whole circuit of the Campus Maximus was traversed, the distance passed over must have been not less than six miles. The part of the road which Horace (C. iv. 2. 33) calls the 'Sacer clivus,' is the above-named declivity between the Templum Pacis and the Forum.

12. Unquam] Some of the old editions have 'nunquam.' So it is in that of 1483, where for 'dispar' we have 'disparibus,' showing a careless copyist, and therefore not to be trusted. That the same reading should have been found by Bentley in the edition of 1490 is not wonderful, since it is a mere reprint of the other, and that of the Florentine edition of the previous year, which Fea says has the same reading. It was easily perpetuated as being at the first glance more intelligible. But there is no MS. authority for 'nunquam,' and the only objection to 'unquam' is the somewhat redundant character of the word 'feris,' which Orelli excuses on the score of the author's youth, but Dillenbr. and others think a striking beauty, as giving emphasis to the word, as if it meant 'fierce as they are.' 'Genus,' said by Lambinus to be the reading of very many MSS., is an evident gloss. Compare a beautiful passage of Juvenal (Sat. xv. 159, sqq.): 'Sed jam serpentum major concordia... convent urcis.' Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xii. 22): 'Neque enim unquam inter se leones aut inter se dracones qualia homines inter se bella gesserunt.' 'Dispar' signifies an animal of another species. Cicero (Tusc. v. 3) uses the same word: 'Atque enim quaeque suum tenens munus, quin in disparis animantis vitam transire non possit, manet in lege naturae.'

13. Furorne caecus,] This is the reading of most MSS. Bentley from two or three has 'caecos,' which is a good reading too, as (Sat. ii. 3. 44) 'caecum agit.' Aen. ii. 356: 'Quos improba ventris Exeget caecos rabies.' I do not think there is much reason to prefer either of these readings to the other, and therefore go with the majority of MSS. 'Vis aerior' seems to be an absolute expression (not comparative with 'furor'), and equivalent, as Lambinus says, to θησυβια, θεσακα; and it is so explained by Gaius with reference to such a visitation of God as a storm, earthquake, and so forth (Dig. 11. 25. 6): 'Vis major, quam Graeci θησιβια, id est, vim divinam appellant, non debet conductori damnos esse.' Horace means some irresistible force.

19. Ut immerentis] 'Ut' signifies 'ever since,' as C. iv. 4. 42, and elsewhere. See Key's L. G. 1457. 1. Horace here fetches his reasons from a distant source, more fanciful than natural. He wrote more to the purpose afterwards, C. i. 2; ii. 1.
CARMEN VIII.

Rogare longo putidam te seculo,
Vires quid enervet meas!
Cum sit tibi dens ater et rugis vetus
Frontem senectus exaret,
Hietque turpis inter aridas nates
Podex velut crudae bovis.
Sed incitat me pectus et mammae putres,
Equina quales ubera,
Venterque mollis et femur tumentibus
Exile suris additum. 5

Esto beata, funus atque imagines
Ducant triumphales tuum,
Nec sit marita, quae rotundioribus
Onusta baccis ambulet.
Quid, quod libelli Stoici inter serieos
Jacere pulvillos amant:
Illiterati num minus nervi rigent,
Minusve languet fascinum?
Quod ut superbo provoces ab inguine,
Ore allaborandum est tibi. 10

15

20
CARMEN IX.

The date of this ode is not to be mistaken. It was written when the news of Actium was fresh, in September, a.u.c. 723, immediately before the 37th of the 1st Book. It is addressed to Mæceenas, and it is impossible to read it and suppose he had just arrived from Actium, where some will have it he was engaged. As to Sanadon, he thinks Horace wrote to Mæceenas while he was still on the other side of the water, than which nothing can be more absurd.

ARGUMENT.

When shall we drink under thy tall roof, Mæceenas, to Caesar the conqueror, as late we did when the son of Neptune lost his fleet and fled,—he who threatened us all with the chains his slaves had worn? Will our sons believe it? Romans have sold themselves to serve a woman and her ennuchs, and the luxurious gauze hath fluttered among the standards of war. But their allies deserted to our side, and their ships skulked from the fight. To Triumph! bring forth the golden chariot and the sacrifice. So great a conqueror never came from Africa before. The enemy hath changed his purple for mourning, and hath fled to Crete or the Syrtes, or knoweth not whither to fly. Bigger cups, boy,—Chian, or Lesbian, or Cæcuban,—we will drown our old anxieties for Caesar in wine.

Quando repustum Caccubum ad festas dapes
Victore lactus Caesare
Tecum sub alta—sic Jovi gratum—domo,
Beate Mæceenas, bibam
Sonante mixtum tibiis carmen lyra,
Hac Dorium, illis barbarum?
Ut nuper, actus cum freto Neptunius
Dux fugit ustis navibus,

3. sub alta—domo.] This was the house built by Mæceenas on the Campus Esquilinus. See Introduction to S. I. 8.

6. barbarum?] Phrygian, for which this was a common equivalent as opposed to Graecian. So (Epp. i. 2. 7) "Graecia barbarie lento collisa duello." Aen. ii. 504: "Barbarico postes auro spoliisque superbi." Catull. (lixv. 265): "Barbaraque horribili stridebat tibia cantu." See C. iii. 19, 18, n.; and iv. 15. 39, n, on the plural 'tibiis.'

7. nuper.] This was nearly six years before, when Sextus Pompeius was defeated by Agrippa off Naucobus on the coast of Sicily, a.u.c. 718, when his fleet was burnt and he himself obliged to fly to Asia. Horace says he threatened to fasten upon the free citizens those chains which he had taken from the fugitive slaves who formed a large part of his force. Sextus appears to have boasted that Neptune was his father and the sea his mother: δὲ ἐὰν Ημώνοις οὐδ' ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐνδυμασίας ναυανίοις ἐπιχείρεσιν ἡκεῖν ἀλλ' ἃνθε μόνον βαλάσασα καὶ Ποσείδων καὶ ἢδε αὐτῶν φαίσματο καλίσθησαι (Appian. B. C. v. 100). "Is tum occupata Sicilia servit et fugitivisque in numerum exercitus sui recipiens, magnum modum legionum effecerat, quonque Menam et Mancretam, paternos libertos, praefectos classium, latrocinias et praedationibus infestato mari, ad se exercitumque tuendum rapto utebatur, cum eum non depuderest vindicatum armis ac ductu patris sui mare infestare piraticis sceleribus" (Vell. Patere. ii. 73). In his life, in Smith's Dict., will be seen an engraving of a coin, on the reverse of which is Neptune standing on a Minatus Urbi vincla, quae detraxerat
Servis amicus perfidis.
Romanus,—eu, posteri negabitis—
Emancipatus feminae
Fert vallum et arma miles et spadonibus
Servire rugosis potest,
Interque signa turpe militaria
Sol adspicit conopium.
At hue frementes verterunt bis mille equos
Galli, canentes Caesarem, Hostiliumbleque navium portu latent Puppes sinistrorum citae.

column erected on a war galley. See Epod.
iv. 19, and Introduction.

12. Emancipatus] There is no variation in the MSS. here, but the sense would seem to require 'mancipatus.' 'Mancipat-frion' is the form by which a person who was not 'sui juris' was transferred to the 'potestas' of another, as in the case of adopt-tion. 'Emancipare' seems to be the proper term to express the making a person 'sui juris' by the act of 'mancipatio'; but 'man-cipo' and 'emancipo' are often confounded in the MSS.' (Long's note on Cic. de Senect.
c. xi.: 'Si nemini mancipata est'). See also, by the same author, art. 'Mancipium,' Smith's Dict. Ant. Here, however, we must take 'emancipatus' as the true reading, and it can only signify 'sold into slavery.' There may be a shade of difference in the meaning of the words which it is not easy to trace.
The instances quoted by Orelli from Plautus (Bacchid. i. 1. 58), 'tibi me emancipo,' and Cicero (Phil. ii. 21), 'venditum atque emancipatum tribunatum,' are very suspicious: in each case 'emancipo' follows a word whose last letter is 'e.'

16. conopium.] A gauze musquito curtain. Some MSS. have 'conopeum,' and so Lambinus and Cruquius. The Greek is κωνόπειον, and according to analogy it would be written κωνόπιον if they wished to shorten the penult, as κρύπειον, κρύ-πιον, &c., on which grounds Bentley says that it should be written 'conopium' or 'conopeum,' according as the penult is short or long. It is long in Juvenal (Sat.
vi. 80): 'Et testudineo tibi, Lentule, conopeo.'
In Propert. (iii. 11. 45) it is short: 'Poedaque Tarpeio conopio tendere saxo.'

17. At hue] The MSS. vary so much that the true reading is very difficult to determine. The greater number of MSS., and all the older editions, have 'ad hunc,'
which is the reading followed by the Scho-liasts Acron and Porphyrius, though Bentley, by not quoting the latter correctly, makes him favour his reading, 'ad hoc.'
'Ad hunc' is rendered ' against him,' that is, Antonius, who has not been mentioned but is sufficiently implied in the preceding verses. But 'ad hunc' will not bear this meaning, or at any rate the sentence would be most obscure. Orelli and Dillenbr., deserting the MSS., adopt the conjecture of Fen, 'at hoc,' and join 'hoc' with 'frementes.' It appears to me to give but a lame sentence, and I prefer following good MSS. to adopting this conjecture. 'At hue' were the words Cruquius' commentator had before him, and Cruquius found them in two of his MSS., and in others as a various reading. Orelli mentions others that have the same. 'Huc,' as Cruquius and his Scholiast remark, means 'to our side,' as Velleius (ii. 84) says, 'Hinc ad Antonion nemo, ilinc ad Caesarem quoti-die aliquid transfigiebat.' 'Frementes' will then go with 'equos,' to which it apppears naturally to belong. 'Hoc frementes,` 'canentes Caesarem,' sounds awkward, and the idea is strained. Horace only means to say that part of the enemy's force deserted to Caesar,—a fact which was no doubt in every body's mouth at the time. For the expression 'canentes Caesarem' compare Virg.
(Aen. vii. 598): 'Ibant aequati numero regemque canebant.' The 'Gauls' were cavalry of Galatia (or Gallogracia) under Deiotarus their king, and his general (who afterwards succeeded him) Amyntas. See Juv. (vii. 16): 'Altera quos nudo traduxit Gallia talo.'

20. sinistrorum citae.] The meaning of these words is very obscure, and I believe we require to know more than we do
Io Triumphe, tu moraris aureos
Curris et intactas boves?
Io Triumphe, nec Jurgurthino parem
Bello reportasti dercem,
Neque Africanum, cui super Karthaginem Virtus sepulcrum condidit.

of Roman nautical terms in order to understand them. They refer, it would appear, to the desertion of Antonius' naval force, as the foregoing refer to his troops. Some of his ships either did not enter the battle or quitted it and took shelter in some neighbouring harbour. Whether Horace means to be so precise as to say that that harbour lay to the eastward of Actium, as Bentley supposes, I think doubtful, though there are plenty of harbours in the Ambracian Gulf to which they may have fled. The Scholiasts and nearly all the old commentators understand 'sinistorsum' to mean 'towards Alexandria,' and the flight of Antonius and Cleopatra to be meant; but it was not known whether Antony had fled when the messenger came to Rome and this ode was written. I believe the meaning of the words, as I said, is impenetrably obscure, from our ignorance of their nautical phrases; but if any will take 'sinistorsum' as signifying literally 'to the left,' it must be understood that the deserting ships made their escape from the scene of action into the gulf, and there remained till the battle was over. Bentley, without acknowledging that Heinsius had preceded him with the same notion, supposes 'sinistorsum citae' may be equivalent to πρύμνην κρυφασθαι, 'to back water.' Something of that sort, connected with flight, I have no doubt it means. Whether Horace exactly states what he had heard, and whether the information was precisely correct, we cannot tell. He wrote while the tidings were fresh, and probably gave only popular reports. The defection of the Galatians is mentioned by Plutarch (Ant. 63). Servius gives the number 2000, but he probably only copied Horace's statement. 'Citae' is the participle of 'cieo.'

21. Io Triumpeh.] Triumphus is personified, as in C. iv. 2. 49.

aureos currus] Philostratus, in his life of Dion, the sophist, says, the Emperor Trajan used to take him up by his side on the gilded chariot used by conquerors in their triumphs. The form of the chariot is described by Zonaras (vii. 21) as that of a round tower: τὸ ἐς δὴ ἄρμα ὀβετ ς ἀγνισθήριον, ὡς ἲμαρ, ἀλλ' εἰς πόργον περιφερόστε κρώτον ἡξιωματο (quoted by Turrnebus, ii. 10). Four horses, which on special occasions were white, were used for drawing the triumphal chariot. Heifers that had not been under the yoke were offered in sacrifice at the close of the procession. Scipio Africanus Minor triumphed in A. U. C. 608, and Marius in 650.

25. cui super Karthaginem] All that is here said about Scipio's tomb is that his valour built him one on the ruins of Carthage, which is no more than a repetition of C. iv. 8. 17. Acron's story, that the Romans, by command of the oracle, built a tomb to Scipio at the mouth of the Tiber looking towards Carthage, is no doubt a fabrication; and Turrnebus' note, "cuius sepulchro oversae Carthaginis titulos subscriptus est," if it were true would have nothing to do with Horace's words. No doubt the conquest of Carthage was, as he says, "titulo res digna sepulchri" (Juv. vi. 230). But Horace is speaking of a tomb of renown, in which Scipio's memory is enshrined, not his body. Bentley has a long note here, the substance of which is this: 'Africanum' may mean either the elder or younger Scipio; if the elder is understood, we must suppose that 'sepulumcharum' means Ennius' poem (see C. iv. 8. 17, n.), which was to him a tomb or monument 'surpassing Carthage;' but if the younger is meant, then he proposes to change 'cui' into 'quo,' that we may have 'quo super,' 'on whose behalf,' and the tomb his valour built him was Carthage. He proves that Statius (Sylv. ii. 7) calls Lucan's Pharsalia "Pompeio sepulchrum;" and in an epigram in the Anthology, Hector claims Homer's poem as his tomb. No one can deny that 'quo super' may mean 'on behalf of whom,' and that Carthage might be called Scipio's tomb, as Salamis is Themistocles' in another epigram. But why the reading of all the MSS., which is 'cui,' should be abandoned for 'quo,' it is difficult to tell. It yields a very good sense. I think it refers to the younger Scipio, which gives the most obvious meaning: The reference to Ennius' poem would Terra marique victus hostis punico
Lugubre mutavit sagum.
Aut ille centum nobilem Cretam urbibus
Ventis iturus non suis, 30
Exercitatas aut petit Syrtes Noto,
Aut fertur incerto mari.
Capaciores affer huc, puer, scyphos
Et Chia vina aut Lesbia.
Vel, quod fluentem nauseam coeruleat,
Metire nobis Caecubum:
Curam metumque Caesaris rerum juvat Dulci Lyaeo dissolve.

be too obscure. The application to the elder is as old as Cruquius’ Scholiast.

27. Terra marique] There was no land engagement; but all Antonius’ forces, when he deserted them, laid down their arms. ‘Punicum sagum’ is called by the Greek writers φοινικός. So Plutarch (Brut. c. 53): τὸν ἐν Βροτόν ὁ Ἀντώνιος ἀνεφύν ἐπιθυμώσαντας, τὸ μὲν σώμα τῇ πολυτελεστάτῃ τῶν ἑαυτοῦ φοινικίδων περιβαλέν ἔκλεισεν, ὡστερον ὁ τῆς φοινικίδα εκείμενην αἰσθητόν ἀπέκτεινε τὸν ὑφέλωτα. The Sagum was properly the cloak worn by the common soldier on service; but qualified as it is here by ‘punicum,’ ‘purple,’ it can only mean the paludamentum, or officer’s military cloak. Horace says the enemy has changed his purple cloak for a black one in token of mourning and shame for his defeat. It is to be observed that though M. Antonius is clearly the person uppermost in the writer’s mind, he only uses the general expressions ‘hostis,’ ‘Romanus’ (v. 11). ‘Mutavit’ signifies as elsewhere, ‘has taken in exchange.’

29. centum — urbibus] See C. iii. 27, 33, n. ‘Ventis non suis’ means ‘unsavourable winds.’ Ovid (Met. iv. 373): “Vota suos habuere deos.” ‘Metire’ is equivalent to ‘miscere.’ The wine and the water were mixed in regular proportion with the cytthus (C. iii. 19. 12).

33. The transition here is as abrupt and expressive as in C. iii. 19. 9.

CARMEN X.

All that is known or has been conjectured about Maevius will be found in his life in Smith’s Dict. Biog. He is most popularly known through Virgil’s familiar line, “Qui Bavium non oedit amet tuae carmina, Maevi” (Ec. iii. 90). It appears that he went or meditated going to Greece, and Horace took a different leave of him from that he took of his friend Virgil on a like occasion (C. i. 3). Attempts as usual have been made to give the ode a date, but with as little success as might be expected.

ARGUMENT.

Bad luck go with the stinking Maevius. Blow, ye winds, and shatter his ship; no friendly star peep forth in the sky: let him be driven as the Greeks were by Pallas for the crime of Ajax. Oh, how the sailors will sweat; and thou wilt turn deadly pale, and cry like a woman, and fall to thy prayers! Let me only hear the gulls are feasting upon thy carcass, and I will offer a goat and a lamb to the storms.
Mala soluta navis exit alite
Ferens olentem Maevium:
Ut horridis utrumque verberes latus,
Auster, memento fluctibus!
Niger rudentes Eurus inverso mari Fractosque remos differat;
Insurgat Aquilo quantus altis montibus
Frangit timentes ilices;
Nec sidus atra nocte amicum appareat
Qua tristis Orion cadit;
Quietiore nec feratur aequore,
Quam Graia victorum manus,
Cum Pallas usto vertit iram ab Ilio
In impiam Ajacis ratem!
O quantus instat navitis sudor tuis,
Tibique pallor luteus
Et illa non virilis ejulatio
Preces et aversum ad Jovem,
Ionius udo cum remugiens sinus
Noto carinam ruperit!
Opima quodsi praeda curvo litore
Porrecta mergos juveris,
Libidinosus immolabitur caper
Et agna Tempestatibus.

17. illa] He speaks as though he heard the man crying.
CARMEN XI.

Supposing that Inachia (v. 6) were admitted to be the same as the Inachia of the next ode (which is very doubtful, for the name is fictitious, and the person is most probably fictitious too), we should be at liberty to say that at least two years elapsed between the composition of that ode and this; but as neither contains any certain evidence of its date, this comparison even then would be of no value for determining when they were written. Franke compares Sat. ii. 3. 325, where Damasippus charges Horace with "Mille puellarum, puerorum mille furores," with his own excuse for writing so little in this ode, "Amore, qui me praeter omnes expetit Mollibus in pueris aut in puellis urere" (vv. 3, 4); and from this infers they were written about the same time. But the Satire appears to have been written at the end of a.u.c. 721; wherefore he infers the Epode was written in that year; which however is not very convincing. I can see nothing in the ode but a specimen of that species of composition to which Horace first betook himself in imitation of the Greek amatory writers. The metre is artificial and difficult of adaptation to the Latin language, and the last that any writer in that language would resort to for the expression of passion, though in the Greek it is very expressive and tender. I do not believe therefore that this ode can be identified with any precise period of Horace's life; and to imagine him deeply in love with some young Lycus is quite foreign to the view I take of Horace's love poems. The name Lyciscus is probably formed from Lycus, Alcaeus' favourite boy (C. i. 32. 11).

ARGUMENT.

Pettius, I am so smitten with the heavy hand of love, who makes me above others his victim, that I cannot write as I used. 'Tis two years since I gave up Inachia. Ah! what a byword was I then! How I sighed in company and poured out my complaints to thee when wine had opened my heart! "Has the poor man's wit no chance against the rich man's purse?" My wrath is kindled: I cast my modesty and my sighs to the winds; I will contend with such rivals no more." Thus did I boast; but my feet carried me still to her cruel door. And now boasting that I have no woman to fear, Lyciscus has caught my heart; nor can counsel or raillery deliver me, nor aught but some new flame.

Petti, nihil me sicut antea juvat
Scribere versicullos amore percussum gravi,
Amore qui me praeter omnes expetit
Mollibus in pueris aut in puellis urere.

1. Petti,] This name is not found elsewhere. It may nevertheless be a real name; for it does not savour of a Greek origin, though one editor (Sivry) has derived it from μηρος, which is not probable. Fabricius (according to Fea) says he has found the name in inscriptions. The name is introduced, I believe, to give an air of reality to the ode, which I conceive to be a fiction throughout. Some MSS. have 'Pecti,' the two forms being easily interchanged.

2. The MSS. vary between 'percussum' and 'percussum;' and though Bentley argues strongly for the latter, it is not a matter to be decided with certainty. 'Percussum' would signify 'pierced' (as by lightning, Orelli says, which he considers too strong and out of place), 'percussum,' 'struck.' Who shall say which of these two Horace wrote? Cruquius' Scholiast reads 'percussum;' his editor prefers 'percussum.' The other Scholiasts are silent.
EPODON LIBER, 11.

Hic tertius December, ex quo destiti
Inachia furere, silvis honorem decuit.
Heu me, per Urbem—nam pudet tanti mali—
Fabula quanta fui! Conviviorum et poenitet,
In quis amantem languor et silentium
Arguit et latere petitus ino spiritus.
Contra lucrum nil valere candidum
Pauperis ingenium? querebar applorans tibi,
Simul calentis inverecundus deus
Fervi diore mero arcana pronomat loco.
Quodsi meis inaestuat praecondii
Libera bilis, ut haec ingrata ventis dividat

Virgil has (Geo. ii. 476) "ingenti percussus amore," where also the MSS. vary, and in most other places of the same kind. In this dilemma I have followed many judicious editors who prefer 'percussus;' but if others prefer 'percussum,' as Lamb., Cnq., Gesn., Dillenbr., Mitsch., and others of good judgment, they will not go far wrong. See C. i. 7. 11. 'Me' is governed by 'expetit,' not by 'urere,' as Dillenbr.'s note would lead us to suppose, comparing "certat tollere" (C. i. 1. 8). 'Expetit—urere' is a Greek construction; 'quem urat' is the regular Latin. Bentley prefers 'aut pueris' to 'in pueris,' but assigns no good reason. He does not adopt his own conjecture, nor does any one else. This use of 'in' is not very common. It occurs Ov. Met. iv. 234; "Neque enim moderatus in illa Solis amor facrat." 6. Inachia.] This is another of those names from the Greek which Horace invariably adopts in his merely poetical compositions, such as I believe this ode to be (see Intro.). 'Inachiam' is a reading quoted by one of the editors, and is supported by the double construction with 'ardere;' but the MSS. are nearly all in favour of the ablative.

honorem decuit.] This expression is used by Virgil, who either borrowed it from Horace, or from some common original (Georg. ii. 404): "Frigidus et silvis Aquilo decussit honorem." Some of course will have it that Horace copied Virgil, and therefore that this ode was written after the publication of the Georgics, which is fixed too confidently in A.D.C. 724. See C. i. 17. 16: "Ruris honorum opulenta."

Conviviorum et poenitet,] Bentley conjectures 'ut poenitet,' which has no authority, but is a good reading, and if there were any MSS. in its favour I would adopt it. 'Arguit' (v. 10) is the praeterperfect tense.

11. Contra] Many MSS. and old editions (not Venet. 1483) have 'contraque,' and that was the reading of Acron and Porphyrian, not of Comm. Cnq. 'Contra' is the better reading. "Can it be that the honest genius of the poor man has no influence against gold?" 'Ne' might be omitted, but then it would be a mere exclamation "to think that," &c. 'Applorans' is not found elsewhere, except in Seneca. (See Forcell.)

13. inverecundus deus.] When Horace means to discourage brawling over wine, he calls Bacchus 'verecundus' (C. i. 27. 3). The best works of art represent this god as young and effeminately beautiful, with long hair like Apollo, as the emblem of eternal youth. It is a coarse modern notion to represent him as a jolly round-faced boy, or a drunken sot. This character belongs to Silenus, who is always drunk. "We have readily retained that idea of this attendant of Bacchus in our northern drinking part of the world, and so have mixed up the youth of Bacchus with the plumpness and sottishness of Silenus; and to finish all, instead of an ass we set him usually astride a tun" (Spence, Polyemetis, p. 131, fol. edit.). I may take this opportunity of adding to the note on C. ii. 19. 30, that Bacchus had horns assigned him as the son of Jupiter Ammon, called Corniger, and that Alexander took this emblem because he too affected to be the son of Ammon, and brother of Bacchus. "Eodem nempe quo frater Bacchus instituto; cui ideo cornua adscribit Diodorus (lib. iii. p. 206) quod Cornigeri Ammonis esset filius" (Spanheim de Numism. Dissert. vii.). ἢ βουάστρο ἐ η καὶ Fomenta vulnus nil malum levantia,
Desinet imparibus certare summotus pudor.
Ubi haec severus te palam laudaveram,
Jussus abire domum ferebar incerto pede
Ad non amicos heu mihi postes et heu
Limina dura, quibus lumbos et infrigi latus.
Nunc gloriantis quamlibet mulierculam
Vincere mollitie amor Lycisci me tenet,

'Alizandros "Ammonos iiidos tinai kai kerafidos anompattebui proo twv agamagopoiwv (Clem. Alex. Protrept. p. 30).
The horns which are so generally ascribed to Bacchus by the poets are very rarely met with on his statues,—possibly, as Spence suggests, from their being small, and his head crowned with ivy or vine leaves.

15. Quodsi meis] These lines are not easy. He means to say that his wrath has got the better of his love and modesty; and he will cast his complaints to the winds, and cease to contend with rivals that are unworthy of him. This supposes the common reading 'inaestuat' to be wrong, which I believe it is. Doering and Gesner have 'inaestuat.' The two later Borne MSS. of Orelli also have 'inaestuat,' and it appears to me that that is the proper word. The other could only be rendered as a hypothetical threat (as Cruquius says) that if he could only get up his wrath sufficiently to cast his complaints away, he would abandon Inachia; which does not appear very good sense. 'Si' is not hypothetical, but affirmative, and the whole is a positive resolution made one moment and broken the next; otherwise the inconsistency of the lover's conduct is lost. 'Fomenta' means 'sights' and 'complainings' with which grief is sought to be relieved. Lambinus, Turnebus, and others take 'fomenta' for 'alimenta,' thoughts which foster love and sorrow; but that is disproved by the words that follow: 'vulnus nil malum levantia.' Such ineffectual remedies are elsewhere called 'frigida curarum fomenta' (Epp. i. 3. 26).

'Fomenta' are there glory and such like rewards. 'Libera bilis,' 'unrestrained wrath,' as above (Ep. 4. 10), 'liberrima indignatio.' 'Imparibus' signifies his rivals who are beneath him in mind though his betters in fortune. With the exception of 'imparibus' and 'fomenta,' Turnebus (Adv. xxv. 20) gives the usual acceptance of the passage: 'Fomenta—si virili quadam ira in praecordiis aestuante dimiserit, praesertim ingrata nec vulnus amoris levantia— me,' inquit, 'paulo inverecundius geram, nec ita pudenter summittam amicae, sed eam aspernabor desinamque sectari imparem neque redamantem.' "Desinet certare summotus pudor' is equivalent to 'desinam certare summo pudore.' 'Imparibus' is the dative case. See C. i. 1. 15, n. 'Inaestuat' is not used elsewhere, but Horace is free in his use of prepositions in composition, after the manner of the Greeks. 'Palam' is used both as an adverb and a preposition (see Forcell.). 'Laundaveram' is equivalent to 'jactaveram,' which use Forcell. does not notice.

20. incerto pede] With steps that would go one way and are forced to go another. Some have interpreted 'incerto' 'reeling' from the effects of wine, destroying the effect of the whole passage, in which the poet obviously represents himself as making fine boasts before his friend, but striving in vain to keep them when he leaves him. So Tibull. (ii. 6. 11):

"Magna laquo; sed magnifice mihi magna locuto
Excultuat clausae fortia verba fores.
Juravi quotides reditum ad limina nunquam!
Cum bene juravi pes tamen ipse redit.'"
Unde expedire non amicorum queant
   Libera consilia nec contumeliam graves,
   Sed alius arder aut puellae candidae
   Aut teretis pueri longam renodantis comam.

CARMEN XII.

Quid tibi vis, mulier nigris dignissima barris?
   Munera quid mihi quidve tabellas
Mittis nec firmo juveni neque naris obesae?
   Namque sagacius unus odoror,
Polypus an gravis hirsutis cubet hicute in alis,
   Quam canis acer ubi lateat sus.
Qui sudor vietis et quam malus undique membris
Crescit odor, cum pene soluto
Indomitam properat rabiem sedare; neque illi
   Jam manet humida creta colorque
Stercore fucatus crocodili, jamque subando
   Tenta cubilia tectaque rumpit!
Vel mea cum saevis agitat fastidia verbis:
   Inachia langues minus ac me;
Inachiam ter nocte potes, mihi semper ad unum Mollis opus. Pereat male quae te Lesbia quaerenti taurum monstravit inertem,
   Cum mihi Cous adesset Amyntas,
Cujus in indomito constantior inguine nervus
Quam nova collibus arbor inhaeret.
Muricibus Tyriis iteratae vellera lanae
   Cui properabantur? Tibi nempe,
Ne foret aequales inter conviva, magis quem
   Diligeret mulier sua quam te.
O ego non felix, quam tu fugis ut pavet acres
   Agna lupos capreaeque leones!
CARMEN XIII.

This ode is like the ninth of the first book,—a convivial song written in winter. A political allusion is extracted from v. 7 as from v. 9 of the other ode, and in either case we may suppose it possible that the troubles of the times are included in those anxieties which were to be left to the gods. But this proves nothing as to time, except that they were both written before the close of the civil wars, which is certain as respects this ode, and very probable as to the other. There can be little doubt of the subject as well as the metre being imitated from the Greek. The reference to Achilles reminds us of C. i. 7, and the allusion to Teucer. There is a fragment of Anacreon (6 Bergk) which bears some likeness to the opening of this Epode:

\[
\begin{align*}
\mu\acute{e}z \mu\acute{e}n & \, \delta\acute{e} \, \Pi\sigma\alpha\delta\acute{e}\nu\acute{w}n \\
\varepsilon\sigma\tau\eta\kappa\varepsilon \nu \varepsilon\varphi\lambda\eta \, \delta' \, \upsilon\omega\rho \\
\ast \ast \ast & \, \beta\alpha\rho\delta' \, \dot{\alpha}\gamma\rho\iota\iota \\
\chi\epsilon\mu\omega\nu\varepsilon & \, \pi\alpha\tau\alpha\gamma\epsilon\sigma\sigma\iota\nu.
\end{align*}
\]

ARGUMENT.

The tempest is raging, let us make merry, my friends, while we are young, and leave the rest to the gods who will give us a good turn yet. Bring ointment and music, as Chiron taught his great pupil, saying, "To Troy thou must go and not return; while there drunken care in wine and song, which are grief's pleasant comforters."

Horrida tempestas caelum contraxit et imubes
Nivesque deducunt Jovem; nunc mare, nunc silvae Threicio Aquilone sonant: rapiamus, amici, Occasionem de die, dumque virent genua

1. contraxit] This word is only to be explained by observing the different aspect of the sky when it is closed in with clouds, and when it is spread out in all its breadth and cloudless. A frowning sky is a notion easily understood, and common to all languages.

"Tum pater omnipotens fecundis imbribus aether Conjugis in gremium laetae descendit."

3. rapiamus, amici, Occasionem de die,] This is explained by C. iii. 8. 27: "Dona praesentis cape laetus horae." 'Die' means the present day as opposed to to-morrow, not, as some take it, 'from this stormy day.' Bentley proposes 'amice' for 'amicì' because of v. 6; but 'tu' refers to the sym-posiarch. Fea, following Cruqiius, supposes the ode to be addressed to one person, and the storm to be a figurative way of expressing the state of public affairs, which is absurd. He and some others make 'amicì' the nominative case.

4. dumque virent genua] See C. i. 9, 17, n. The commentators quote Pliny (N. H. xi. 45): "Genibus hominum inest quaedam religio observatione gentium: haec

supplies attingunt, ad haec manus tendunt, haec ut aras adormant; fortasse quia inest ipsis vitalitates." But these last words have no meaning. What vitality is there in the knees more than in any other part? The strength of an active man lies very much in his legs, and so they are put for his strength, as in the 147th Psalm (v. 10): "He delighteth not in the strength of the horse: he taketh not pleasure in the legs of a man:" and the knees are a chief part of the legs,
Et decet, obducta solvatur fronte senectus.
Tu vina Torquato move consule pressa meo.
Cetera mitte loqui: deus haec fortasse benigna
Reducet in sedem vice. Nunc et Achaemenio
Perfundii nardi juvat et fide Cyllenea
Levare diris pectora sollicitudinibus;
Nobilis ut grandi eecinit Centaurus alumnio:
Invictae, mortalis dea nate puer Thetide,
Te manet Assaraci tellus, quam frigida parvi Findunt Scamandri lumina lucubris et Simois,

therefore γούνατα λύνεις is used for κτείνεις.
The expression θεῶν ἐν γούναι κύραι (Odysseus i. 267), which Dillenbr. quotes, and which the Scholiast explains ἐν θεῶν ξύναι ἑστὶ, does not appear to have any bearing upon this passage. It rather seems akin to that expression of Solomon (Proverbs c. vi. v. 33), "The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." But, however this may be, 'dum virent genua' means merely 'while our limbs are strong and we are young.' See Theoc. xvii. 70, where Wuestemann has collected various examples. Dacier says truly the tottering of the knees is one of the first signs of old age.
5. obducta—fronte] 'Clouded brow.'
So Juvenal (S. i. 1, 2):—
"Scire velim quare toties mihi, Naevole, tristis Occurras fronte obducta."...

Eur. (Phoen. 1307), ἄλλα γὰρ Κρονοτά
λεύσατο τὸν ἑαυτὸ συννεφῆς—στίχοντα.
'Senectus' is nowhere else used in this sense of 'melancholy,' though 'senium' is not uncommon. See Forcelli, who does not notice this use of 'senectus.' 'Tu' is the master of the feast. Sex. Manlius Torquatus was consul A.D.C. 689, when Horace was born. Compare 'O nata mecum consule Manlio' (iii. 21. 1).

8. in sedem] The commentators quote the words of Augustus' edict (Suet. Octav. 20): "Ita mihi salvam ac sospitem Rem Publicam sistere in sua sede licet.'

Achaemenio] Suet. 1463, and nearly all the editions till Bentley's, with Comm. Cruq. and many MSS., have 'Achaememia.' But 'nardin' is the word, not 'nardus,' as in Epod. v. 59: "Nardo percutum quale non perfectus—"
9. fide Cyllenea] The lyre invented by Mercury, born on Mount Cyllene in Arcadia. 'Diris,' not 'durus,' is the reading of the oldest editions and nearly all the MSS. Bentley prefers the latter.

11. Centaurus] Cheiron, the instructor of Achilles. Orelli has collected a large number of places in which this subject is mentioned. Whether Horace took what follows from any story or not it is impossible to determine, as in the similar episode of Teucer in C. i. 7.

grandi] Juvenal (vii. 210) describes Achilles as a big boy at school, "Metuens virgae jamgrandis Achilles Cantabat patris in montibus;' but 'grandis' has not that meaning here, though some have supposed it has.

13. frigida] This is an adaptation of Homer's description (II. xxii. 151): 'η δ' ἐτίρη θεῖα προρεῖ εἰκώτα χαλάζῃ Ἡ χύνει ψυχιᾷ.' 'Domus Assaraci,' 'proles Assaraci,' are common in Virgil. Assaracus was great-grandfather of Aeneas. Homer took a more heroic view of the dimensions of the river Scamander, which was μέγας ποταμός βαυθύνης (II. xx. 73). Bentley suggests 'proni' for 'parvi,' others have proposed 'pravi' (that is, 'tortuous'), 'puri,' 'flavi,' 'tardi.' But the MSS. do not vary.

15. subtemine] 'The woof of the web.' 'Certo subtemine' means only by an unalterable destiny. There is no need of Bentley's alteration to 'curto,' nor of taking 'certo subtemine' with 'Parcae,' as if it were the adverb of quality, signifying the 'Parcae' whose woof of destiny is unalterable. See Catull. 64. 326, &c.: 'Currite ducentes subtemina currite fasti.' 'Mater caerulea' means Thetis, not the sea, as Com. Cruq. supposes.

18. alloquium] If the true reading is without any conjunction, 'alloquium' would appear to be in apposition with 'vino cantuque.' There is no other instance of 'alloquium' being used otherwise than with reference to conversation. But Horace may have followed, after his custom of imitating the Unde tibi reeditum certo subtemine Parcae
Rupere, nec mater domum caerula te revehet.
Illic omne malum vino cantuque levato,
Deformis aegrimoniae dulcebus alloquiis.

Greeks, the use of παραμύθιον, παρηγορία, which were applied in a derived sense to any thing that gave relief to sorrow. Otherwise we must introduce a conjunction somewhere, and I should prefer it at the end of the previous verse to the place where Bentley proposes to place it, after 'aegrimoniae,' which he supposes to depend upon 'malum.' In that case 'alloquiis' would merely mean 'conversation,' unless, as Bentley suggests, Horace meant it in a worse sense, as 'lenes sub nocte susurri,' which I do not believe. But I do not think a conjunction is wanted.

CARMEN XIV.

That Maecenas was not married, or engaged to be married, in A.U.C. 720, is inferred from the fact that in a letter written in that year to Augustus by M. Antonius he taunts him with carrying on an intrigue with Terentia (Suet. Octav. 69, quoted by Franke). Kirchner (Qu. Hor. p. 28) supposes Maecenas did not marry till he had built his house on the Campus Esquilineus, A.U.C. 721-22. His domestic happiness was not of long continuance. But he could hardly have come to the end of it when Horace wrote this ode, in which allusion is plainly made to Terentia and her husband's affection for her (supposing them to have been married at the time, and not merely betrothed, as Kirchner imagines). These data leave a wide space for the composition of the ode. The object of it is to excuse Horace for his indolence in not having finished a poem, or volume of poems, he had long promised. It is generally assumed that this 'carmen olim promissum' was the book of Epodes we now possess. If so, the ode was not written long before the publication of the volume: for if it had long been promised and was anxiously expected (as Bentley says), we can hardly suppose that after being stirred up by his patron, and with the leisure he must have had at his farm, Horace would have kept Maecenas and all his friends in further suspense for any length of time, especially when we consider that the work was not an Aeneid, but a mere collection of comparative trifles, some of which must have been written early, and of which but few could have cost their author any particular amount of thought. Now one of these odes at least (C. ix.) was written as late as 723, being composed immediately after the battle of Actium, and the first is almost universally allowed to have been written just before that battle. The book therefore, under this explanation of 'promissum carmen,' was not published at the earliest till towards the end of A.U.C. 723, and thus the ode apologizing for its delay could not have been written much before then. Franke assigns two odes (2 and 17) to the following year 724, while this apology he places in 721-22. In this case Horace must have gone on dawdling with his book at a very slow rate, which under the circumstances it is difficult to account for.

After all it is doubtful whether 'promissum carmen' means this book of Epodes. Doering considers it certain that it was a single poem. (See note on v. 8).
ARGUMENT.

Thou killest me, my noble Maecenas, asking again and again if I have drunk the waters of Lethe. It is love, it is love that keeps back the verses I have promised, such love as Anacreon wept in his flowing numbers for Bathylus the Samian. Thou too feelest the flame, and if thou art more blessed than me be thankful. Thou lovest the most beautiful of women: I am in torment for a strumpet.

Mollis inertia cur tantam diffuderit imis
Oblivionem sensibus,
Pocula Lethaeos ut si ducentia somnos
Arentes fauce traxerim,
Candide Maecenas, occidis saepe rogando:
Deus, deus nam me vetat
Inceptos, olim promissum carmen, iambos
Ad umbilicum adducere.
Non aliter Samio dicunt arsisse Bathyllo
Anacreonta Teium,
Qui persaepe cava testudine flevit amorem
Non elaboratum ad pedem.

1. imis—sensibus,] So Virgil (Ecl. iii. 54: "Sensibus haee imis (res est non parva) reponas."

2. traxerim,] This is the earliest instance of this use of 'traho.' 'Duco' is more common (C. i. 17. 22; iii. 3. 34; iv. 12. 14.) Ovid and later writers use 'traho' (see Forcell.) The Greeks used σφω and έκω commonly in this sense. 'Candide' seems to signify 'generous,' 'true.' It is used familiarly.

3. Ad umbilicum adducere.] The several sheets of parchment on which the contents of a book were written were joined together, and at the extremity of the last was fastened a stick on which the whole was rolled like our maps; and in the same way, at the extremities of this roller, were knobs which were called 'cornua' or 'umbilici.' The former word is obvious enough. The latter belongs more properly perhaps to the shape that the ends of the roll would take when these knobs were wanting; but it was also applied to the knobs themselves, and so 'ad umbilicura adducere' is to bring a volume to the last sheet. Mart. (iv. 91. 1):

"Ohe jam satis est; ohe libelli Jam pervenimus usque ad umbilicos."

Fea's remark, "umbilici vocabantur quia in media parte libris erant," quoted without contradiction by Orelli and Dillenbr., conveys no meaning. 'Carmen,' for a volume of 'carmina,' is an expression which raises a very natural doubt as to Horace's meaning here. 'Ad umbilicura adducere' seems to refer to a volume, 'carmen' to a single poem; but the former might be taken in a derived sense, 'ad finem adducere,' as reasonably as the latter in a collective sense. See Introduction. Lucretius (vi. 966) speaks of his first book as 'primum carmen,' but that was an entire poem. Whether 'olim' belongs to 'inceptos' or 'promissum' is open to doubt. Bentley does not strengthen his opinion that it belongs to 'promissum' by referring to A. P. 46: "Hoc spernat promissi carminis auctor." The objection to taking it with 'inceptos,' if 'carmen' means the book of Epodes, is, that that would imply that the different odes were written to form part of a volume, whereas they must have been written at intervals and without reference to their collective publication.

4. Bathyllo] C. ii. 4. 7, n. Anacreon's verses were full of passionate addresses to boys. The name of Bathylus does not occur in any of the fragments that have come down to us; but it is mentioned by others besides Horace, and he is known to have been one of Anacreon's chief favourites.
Ureris ipse miser: quodsi non pulchrior ignis
Accendit obsessam Ilion,
Gaude sorte tua; me libertina neque uno Contenta Phryne macerat.

He was a graceful performer on the flute, which accomplishment, we learn from Maximus Tyrius (quoted by Orelli), Anacreon took delight in praising. One of the odes falsely attributed to Anacreon (16 Bergk) is addressed εις νεώτερον Βάθυλλον and from that we also learn that he was a Samian, ἵνα τὸς Σάμου ποιήσῃ Γράφει Φοίβον ἐκ Βάθυλλον. Anacreon, being driven from his native town Teos in Ionia, lived many years at Samos under the protection of Polycrates. There is a very graceful eulogy of Anacreon by Critias (Socrates' disciple), of whose verses a few fragments have been preserved. The fragments of Anacreon that remain indicate that easy style which Horace describes, and make us lament that the prophecy of Critias has not been realized. Few literary losses are so much to be regretted as the loss of the true Anacreon's poems.

13. Ureris ipse miser:] See Introduction. The Scholiasts all affirm that Terentia is here alluded to, and there can be little doubt of it. There was a dancer, or pantomimus, named Bathyllus, who was a freedman of Maecenas, and of whom he was very fond. Tac. (Ann. i. 54): "Indulserat el ludicrro (histrionum) dum Maecenati obtinebat effuso in amore Bathylli." Juv. vi. 63: "molli saltante Bathyllo." To this person some have most improperly referred the words of Horace, supposing Anacreon's Bathyllus to have been introduced with reference to this player. For 'quodsi' Orelli prefers but does not edit 'quando,' which he finds (in a corrupted form 'miser do q non') in his MS. B. 'Quodsi' appears to me much better, and all the other MSS. have it. 'Quo si' has been proposed; but, if that had been the original reading, it is very unlikely to have been changed so universally into 'quodsi,' which is a common word in Horace.

CARMEN XV.

This is probably a composition from the Greek, and I should think a pretty close imitation. It is addressed to an imaginary Neaera by the poet in his own person. He complains of her deserting him for a wealthier rival. Horace introduces the same name in a much later ode (iii. 14. 21), and it is used throughout the third book of Elegies commonly attributed to Tibullus. The ode is in Ovid's style, and worthy to have been written by him. By the same argument that is applied to Epode xi. (see Introduction) Franke and Kirchner assign to this the date a. u. c. 721. I need not repeat how widely such notions in my opinion depart from the true character of Horace's love poems.

ARGUMENT.

Remember that night when the moon was in the sky, and thou didst swear fidelity to me, saying that so long as the sheep feared the wolf, and storms vexed the winter's sea, and Apollo's locks floated in the breeze, our mutual love should last. Thou shalt rue my firmness, Neaera. Flaccus will bear no rival. Let thy faithlessness drive him to wrath and he will seek a true heart elsewhere. Let him once learn to hate thy beauty and he will be its captive no more, when grief shall have settled in his soul. And thou, whosoever thou art, that boastest thyself in my sorrow, be thou rich in flocks and fields, and let Pactolus run gold for thee; be thou wise in the secrets of Pythagoras and of form more beautiful than Nireus; yet shalt thou weep for her love transferred to another, and my turn to laugh shall come.

Nox erat et caelo fulgebant luna sereno
Inter minora sidera,
Cum tu magnorum numen laesura deorum
In verba jurabas mea,
Artius atque hedera procera adstringitur ilex,
Lentis adhaerens brachiis:
Dum pecori lupus et nautis infestus Orion
Turbaret hibernum mare,
Intonsosque agitatet Apollinis aura capillos,
Fore hunc amorem mutuam.
O dolitura mea multum virtute Neaera!
Nam si quid in Flacco viri est,

2. Inter minora sidera,] ‘Sidus’ properly signifies a collection of stars, a constellation; but here it is equivalent to ‘stella,’ which in its turn appears for ‘sidus’ in C. iii. 29. 19. In C. i. 12. 47: it is also a single star, and the moon is represented as she is here: ‘Miicat inter omnes Julium sidus, velit inter ignes Luna minores.’

3. laesura] ‘Laedere’ is applied to injury by word or deed, to fraud (‘laesa fides’) or slander, or violence done to the person, or damage of any kind. It applies to high treason, whereby the majesty of the sovereign power is violated, and to perjury, as blaspheming the name of God. Compare Ovid (Heroid. ii. 43):

> “Si de tot laesis sua numina quisque deorum
Vindicet, in poenas non satis unus eris.”

The offence however of lovers’ perjury was not supposed to weigh very heavily (see C. ii. 8. 13, n.). The Dii Magni were twelve in number: Jupiter, Minerva, Juno, Neptune, Venus, Mars, Vulcan, Vesta, Apollo, Diana, Ceres, and Mercury.

4. In verba jurabas mea,] This is the usual way of expressing the oath of obedience taken by soldiers, the words being dictated to the men. Hence the phrases ‘conceptis verbis jurare,’ ‘conceptis verbis pejerare.’ ‘Jurare in verba’ was conventionally applied to any oath of allegiance, and the poet says Neaera swore by the gods eternal devotion to his will. Elsewhere Horace expresses by these words the blind adherence to a particular teacher, declaring that he is “Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri” (Epp. i. 1. 14).

6. Lentis adhaerens brachiis,] ‘Lentissima brachia’ is used in a different sense in S. i. 9. 64. Here ‘lentis’ signifies ‘twining,’ as that which is soft and pliant.

7. Dum pecori lupus] ‘Infestus’ belongs to both clauses, but in the first ‘foret’ must be supplied. There is a slight irregularity therefore in the sentence. As to Orion, see C. iii. 27. 18. ‘Turbaret’ and ‘agitatet,’ which Bentley and Pea change to ‘turbarit,’ ‘agitarat,’ the second future, are required by the oblique construction.

9. Intonsosque agitatet] Long hair was the mark of youth (C. iv. 10. 4, n.), and Apollo as well as Bacchus (see Epod. xi. 13, n.) were held to be always young. Hence in all ancient representations of Apollo (of which the Belvedere is a specimen familiar in one shape or another to most readers) he has long hair either braided or flowing, in which respect he is frequently compared with Bacchus by the poets. See Ovid (Met. iii. 421): “Et dignos Baccho dignos et Apolline crines.” Also Martial (iv. 45): “Perpetua sic flore mices; sic denique non sint Tam longae Bromio quam tibi, Phoebe, comae.”

And Tibullus (i. 4. 37):

> “Solis aeterna est Phoebo Bacchoque juventa:
Nam decet intonsus crinis utrumque deum.”
Non feret assiduas potiori te dare noctes,
Et quacret iratus parem,
Nec semel offensae cedet constantia formae, 15
Si certus intrarit dolor.
Et tu, quicunque es felicior atque meo nunc
Superbus incedis malo,
Sis pecore et multa dives tellure licebit
Tibique Pactolus fluat,
Nec te Pythagorae fallant arcana renati,
Formaque vincas Nirea,
Eheu translatos alio maerebis amores:
Ast ego vicissim risero.

In the full description Tibullus (or the pseudo-Tibullus) gives of his person, in which there can be little doubt he followed paintings as well as statues well known in his day, he says,— “Intonsi crines longa cervice fluhebat, Stillabat Syrio myrtea rore comma.”

(iii. 4. 27, sq.)

Hence the expression in the text is almost proverbial, and Neaera’s vow is one of eternal fidelity. Other allusions to Apollo’s hair will be found in C. i. 21. 2, “Intonsum pueri dicite Cynthia;” C. iii. 4. 62, “Qui rore puro Castaliae lavit Crines solutos;” and C. iv. 6. 26, “Phoebe qui Xantho lavis amne crines,"

11. virtute] ‘Virtus’ here signifies moral courage, determination, and firmness. See note on C. S. 58. The name Neaera is formed from viaqua, which is used by Homer, and is said to be an irregular comparative of viqua, so that Neaera signifies ‘the younger.’

14. parem] One who is his match, equally loving and true.

15. Nec semel offensae] ‘Offensae’ is here used as the object of dislike. Horace says, ‘His firmness shall not yield to the charms of thy beauty when once he shall have learnt to hate it, and when the pain shall have entered and settled within him.’ Of this use of the passive participle ‘offensae,’ Forcellini gives several examples.

Bentley, admitting that ‘offensae’ may have this meaning, nevertheless alters ‘offensae’ into ‘offensi’; for what reason, he asks, had Horace to hate her beauty? The obvious reason, that he had been cheated by it into loving her. There is more in Bentley’s note of the same kind. No man was ever less qualified for a judge upon delicate points of taste or touches of nature. The passage he says has been corrupted by the audacity and ignorance of the copyists and the interpreters, ‘meram hic caliginem pro luce offuderunt.’ But before he reaches the end of his note new light breaks in upon him, and he will allow the common reading to stand, if only it be granted that ‘formae’ signifies figuratively Neaera herself: ‘Et tum sententia sit, ‘nec constantia mea cedit tibi, formosa Neaera, semel mihi invisa.’” Any sensible person will see that he conceives the whole point, and that the ‘audacia,’ ‘ignorantia,’ and ‘calligo pro luce offusa,’ are all on his own side. I do not find any MS. authority for ‘intravit;’ the meaning therefore is that he has not yet learned to hate, and the wound has not yet become fixed and incurable, but that if it once does so, she will seek in vain to recover his affections.

17. Et tu,] The reading of most of the old editions is ‘at tu,’ which Fea defends, ‘at enim particula adversans.’ But as ‘at’ is not an adversative particle his defence falls to the ground. Either conjunction would do, because neither of them is adversative, and an adversative particle would be out of place. ‘Et tu’ is the reading of all the oldest known MSS., and of Porphyrios and Comm. Crug.

19. sicabit] This use of the future, tense shows the truth of Forcellini’s remark, that ‘licet’ and some other words which are called by the grammarians conjunctions are in fact only verbs, after which ‘ut’ is understood. ‘Licabit’ is used below (S. ii. 2. 60), and by Ovid (Trist. v. 14. 3), ‘Detrahat auctori multum fortuna licabit.’ The Pactolus in Lydia was not the only golden stream of the ancients. The Tagus, Hebrus, Po, and Ganges, all had the same repute. What the secret learning of Pythagoras was is expressed in the epithet given him, ‘renati.’ His metempsychosis is referred to in C. i. 26. 10. As to Nireus, see C. iii. 20. 15.
CARMEN XVI.

This ode is written with great care, and was probably one of those compositions by which Horace brought himself into public notice. It has more the appearance of having been written for fame than any other in the book. I have no doubt it was written soon after Horace came to Rome at the outbreak of the Perusian war, a. u. c. 713. Some follow what they suppose to be the meaning of the Scholiast Acron, who says on the word 'Alter,' (v. 1): "quando Antonius dimicavit contra Augustum." But he may have referred to L. Antonius the consul; at any rate the language and sentiments are so different from any that Horace used or was likely to use about the time of Actium, that the ode cannot be referred to that period. The state of Rome at the time supposed is described very vividly by Appian (Bel. Civ. v. 18—49) and Dion (xlviii. 9—15). It has been supposed that the notion of migrating to the fortunate islands, which many of the commentators have taken too literally, was derived from the words of Sertorius, recorded by Plutarch in his life (c. viii.), and said by the Scholiast Acron to have been mentioned by Sallust. (If this remark be true, it seems to show that Sallust's History included some part at least of the period of Sulla, about which there has been some doubt.) When he was hard pushed by Luscus the legate of Sulla, Sertorius, falling in with some sailors who had visited or been driven to the Western Islands, and hearing from them a glowing description of their climate, is said to have conceived a desire to go and live there, and so to get rid of the troubles of his life and the never-ending wars. Sertorius' speech may have become notorious, or Horace may have heard of it; but the idea may have occurred to him independently or been suggested, as the description seems in part to have been, by Pindar's description of the Happy Islands (Ol. ii. 70, sqq.), and Hesiod's of the same (Op. et Di. 167): τείχε δέ ἐίχ' ἄνθρωπως βιοτον καὶ ἰθέ' ὀπάσας, κ. τ. λ., or Homer's description of the Elysian plains (Odys. v. 563, sqq.).

ARGUMENT.

Another age is wasting in civil wars. She whom no enemy could tame shall be destroyed by her own accursed children; the wild beast shall devour her; the barbarian shall trample upon her, and scatter the dust of her Romulus to the winds. What are we to do? Go forth like the Phocaeans, leave our homes and our temples to be the dens of beasts, and go wherever the winds shall waft us. Shall it be so? Then why delay? But let us swear:—when rocks shall swim, and the Po shall wash the tops of Matinus, and the Apennine be cast into the sea; when the tiger shall lie with the hind, and the dove with the hawk, and the herds fear not the lion, and the he-goat shall love the waves,—then we will return to our home. Thus let the nobler spirits resolve while the craven clings to his couch. For us there are those happy isles where the earth yields her harvests and the trees their fruit unbidden; where honey drops from the oak, and the stream leaps babbling from the hills; where the goat comes unbidden to the milk-pail, and udders are full, and the fold fears no beasts, and the ground bears no viper; where the rain-flood and the drought are not known; whither the venturous sail comes not; where the flock is unhurt by pestilence or heat. Jove destined these shores for the pious when the golden age had passed away, and thither the pious may resort and prosper.
Altera jam teritur bellis civilibus aetas,
Suis et ipsa Roma viribus ruit:
Quam neque finitimi valorunt perdere Marsi
Minacis aut Etrusca Porsenae manus,
Aemula nec virtus Capuae nec Spartacu acer Novisque rebus infidelis Allobro,
Nec fera caerulea domuit Germania pube
Parentibusque abominatus Hannibal,
Impia perdemus devoti sanguinis aetas,
Ferisque rursus occupabitur solum.
Barbarus heu cineres insistet victor et Urbem
Eques sonante verberabit ungula,
Quaeque carent ventis et solibus ossa Quirini,
Nefas videre! dissipabit insolens.
Forte quid expeditat communiter aut melior pars
Malis carere quaeritis laboribus:

1. Altera] The last being that of Sulla.
2. Suis et ipsa] Porphyrian quotes Livy, Pref.: "jam magnitudine laboret sua," and the commentators have gone on quoting those words ever since. But Livy's meaning and Horace's are not the same. What Horace says may be true of any state that turns its arms against itself. Livy's words belong only to one that aims at universal dominion, and falls under the weight of its burthen. The practice of quoting passages for the sake of a little verbal similarity can do no good and often misleads.
3. Porsenae] Though Niebuhr contends that the penultimate syllable of this name is long, it is here short, and is so used repeatedly by Silius (B. P. viii. 391. 480; x. 434). The lofty language and tone held by the Campanians after the battle of Cannae—how they expected that Hannibal, when he withdrew to Carthage, would leave Rome a wreck and the power over Italy in the hands of Capua, and demanded as a condition of their assistance that Hannibal should always be a Campanian,—is related by Livy (xxiii. 6). As to 'Spartacus' see C. iii. 14. 10. The Allobroges, whose country lay on the left bank of the Rhone, between that river and the Isère, had ambassadors at Rome at the time of Catiline's conspiracy praying for redress for certain grievances. These men were tempered with by the conspirators, and promised to forward their designs, which, soon repenting, they betrayed, and became the principal witnesses against the conspirators (Sall. Cat. 41; Cic. in Catil. iii. 2—4). This explains Horace's meaning. Two years afterwards these people, having broken out in war and invaded Gallia Narbonensis, were defeated by C. Pompeius, governor of that province. Their restlessness is mentioned by Caesar (B. G. iv. 5).
4. Parentibus] This I understand literally as "bella matribus detestata" (C. i. 1. 24). Orelli and Dillenbr. take it without doubt for the Romans of a former day, 'our fathers.' Doering takes it in the other sense.
5. Barbarus] This has been referred to the Egyptians, and taken as evidence of the ode having been written in the last war with M. Antonius, which is not worth attending to. 'Insistere' is followed by the accusative case sometimes; Forcell. says when it implies motion, as 'insistere viam,' and which peculiarity is found in the Greek καθίζουμαι; but that signification is not very marked in this passage, which he does not quote. It more usually governs the dative case, or is followed by the ablative after 'in.' See Aen. vi. 563: "Sceleratum insistere limen." Ezekiel's prophecy against Tyre declares that Nebuchadnezzar "with the hoofs of his horses shall tread down all her streets" (xxvi. 11); and Jeremiah explains: "At that time they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem out of their graves, and they shall spread
Nulla sit haec potior sententia, Phocaeorum
Velut profugit exsecrata civitas
Agros atque Lares patrios habitandaque fana
Apris reliquit et rapacibus lupis,
Ire pedes quocunque feren, quocunque per undas
Notus vocabat aut protervus Africus.
Sic placet? an melius quis habet suadere?—Secunda
Ratem occupare quid moramur alite?
Sed juremus in haec: Simul imis saxa renarint
Vadis levata, ne redire sit nefas;
Neu conversa domum pigeat dare lintea, quando
Padus Matina laverit cacumina,
In mare seu celsus procurretit Apenninus,
Novaque monstra junxerit libidine
Mirus amor, juvet ut tigres subsidere cervis,
Adulteretur et columba miluo,
Credula nec ravos timeant armenta leones,
Ametque salsa levis hircus aequora.
Haec et quae poterunt reditus abscindere dulces
Eamus omnis exsecrata civitas,
Aut pars indocii melior grege; mollis et exspes
Inominata perprimat cubilia,
Vos quibus est virtus muliebrem tollite luctum
Etrusca praeter et volate litora.
Nos manet Oceanus circumvagus: arva, beata
Petamus arva divites et insulas,
Reddit ubi Cererem tellus inarata quotannis
Et imputata floret usque vinea, them before the sun: they shall not be gathered nor be buried; they shall be as dung on the face of the earth." Horace does not take account of the apotheosis of Romulus, which he himself refers to elsewhere (C. iii. 3. 16). Porphyrian, on the authority of Varro, says the tomb of Romulus was behind the Rostra.

15. expedita] This belongs to 'care';
'what may be our best course, that we may be set free from these wretched sufferers,' where the Greeks would express or (more commonly) understand ὑπερτείνεται. The story of the Phocaeans abandoning their city when Harpagus was besieging it, and declaring that they would not return till a bar of iron they threw into the sea should float, is told by Herodotus (i. 165). It must have been familiar to educated men, and the form of oath may have become proverbial. 'Exe-crata' is used in a middle sense, 'binding themselves under a curse,' ἐπιγάντων ἰσχυράς κατάρας. So 'agros' is governed by 'profugit,' not by 'excrata.' "Praecuntibus excrable carmen sacerdotibus jure jurando adacti" (Liv. xxxi. 17).
23. Sic placet?] 'Placete?' the usual formula. The poet fancies himself addressing a meeting of the citizens. 'Habet suadere' is another Greek construction, πείθειν ἐκεῖ.
33. ravos] C. iii. 27. 3. n. This is the reading of the oldest MSS., the Berne and Blandinian. Many have 'fulvos;' others
'saevos;' Lambinus, 'fulvos.' "Levis hircus amet," "the goat become sleek, and love."
Germinat et nunquam fallentis termes olivae,
Suamque pulla fies ornat arborem,
Mella cava manant ex ilice, montibus altis
Levis crepante lynpha desilit pede.
Illie injussae veniunt ad muletra capellae,
Refertque tenta grex amicus ubera;
Nec vespertinus circumgemit ursus ovile,
Neque intumes cit alta viperis humus.
Pluraque felices mirabimur: ut neque largis
Aquosus Eurus arva radat imribus,
Pinguia nec siccis urantur semina glebis,
Utrumque rege temperante caelitum.
Non huc Argoo contendit remige pinus,
Neque impudica Colchis intulit pedem.
Non huc Sidonii torserunt cornua nautae
Laboriosa nec cohorts Ulixei.
Nulla nocent pecori contagia, nullius astri
Gregem aestuosa torret impotentia.
Juppiter illa piae seerevit litora genti,
Ut inquinavit aere tempus aureum;
Aere, dehinc ferro duravit secula, quorum
Piis secunda vate me datur fuga.

51. vespertinus] See C. i. 2. 45. Georg.
iii.: "Nocturnus obambulat." 52. intumes cit alta] Doering thinks the true reading is 'alma' or 'atra,' but 'alta' is a suitable word to accompany 'intu-mescit.'
65. 'Quorum' depends on 'fuga.' Bentley suggests 'quo nunc' as a conjecture.
Vv. 63, 64, Doering transposes to 53, 54,
to complete the picture; but he admits they are not quite in their place there, and redundant any where; so he supposes them to be from another hand, though not unworthy of Horace's. I do not doubt their genuineness.
CARMEN XVII.

This Franke considers to be the latest of the Epodes, written with the ironical purpose of making peace between the poet and Canidia, whom he had so unmercifully lampooned, before the publication of the poems in which she figures. Certainly the recantation is not less severe than the distiches. I do not think it necessary or feasible to assign it a date, and am not disposed to agree with those who from v. 23, "Tuis capillus albus est odoribus," infer that this Epode was not written, and therefore the book was not published, till Horace was advanced in years, or till after the composition of C. iii. 14 (A.U.C. 729 or 730), because there he says his hair is beginning to turn grey. If his hair was perfectly black it would only enhance the satire of the above assertion. The whole subject of this quarrel (as might be expected) is so obscure that it is useless to offer any conjectures upon it; but no one, I think, can read this Epode and suppose that the affair was altogether fictitious. There is too much vigour and genial humour in these verses to admit of such a notion. Admitting therefore the existence in some shape of Canidia, I only deprecate the inferences derived from a too literal interpretation of particular expressions, as noticed in the former odes referring to this same woman (Ep. iii. 8, n.; v. Introd. &c.).

ARGUMENT.

I yield, I yield; I pray thee by Proserpine, by Diana, by thine own mighty spells, Canidia, cease thy charms; stay, stay thy wheel. Achilles had compassion upon Telephus, and healed him. He was entreated and gave back the body of Hector, and the matrons of Troy anointed him for burial. Circe restored the companions of Ulysses. Surely I have been punished enough, O thou that art loved of sailors and of hucksters! The complexion of youth is gone from me; my hair is white; I rest not day or night, and sighs give me no relief. I now believe what I once denied, that Sabine spells are shaking my breast, and my head is splitting with Marsic charms. What wouldst thou more? O sea and earth, I am on fire, like Hercules with Nessus' blood, and Aetna's everlasting flame. As a crucible filled with Colchian drugs thou wilt burn till I shall be consumed, and my ashes scattered to the winds. What death or what penalty awaits me? Speak, and I will offer a hundred oxen, or praise thy chastity in lying song. The brothers of Helen were entreated and gave the poet back his eyes; and do thou, for thou canst, loose me from my madness. Indeed thou art not debased by thy parents' sins; thou dost not scatter the new buried ashes of the poor; thy heart is kind, thy hands are pure, thy son is thine own, and thy births are no pretence. Why waste thy prayers upon ears that are deaf as the rock lashed by the waves? To think thou shouldst publish and laugh with impunity at our mystic rites, and fill the town with my name! What profit then have I of the skill I have learnt? Thus shalt thou live with strength ever renewed for fresh endurance, as Tantalus vainly seeks to be at rest, Promethesus to be delivered from his vulture, and Sisyphus to plant his stone on the top of his mountain. Thou wilt seek death in every form, and it shall not come. I will bestride thee, and spurn the earth in my pride. What! must I, who can move images, bring down the moon or raise the dead,—I, the mingler of love-charms,—must I see my spells of no avail for such as thee?
HORATII FLACCI

1. Jam jam] The repetition denotes haste and eagerness, 'see, see I yield.' They are said 'dare manus' who give their hands to the chains of a conqueror. The phrase is common enough. See Virgil (Aen. xi. 568): "neque ipse manus feritate desisset," Caesar (B. G. v. 31): "tandem dat Cotta permutos manus; superat sententia Sabini." Cicero uses it repeatedly. The speaker invokes Proserpina and Hecate as the divinities with whom the witch has most communication.

4. Per atque libros] This position of 'atque' is peculiar to the poets.

5. Refixa] This word, which gives the only true sense here, has given place in some respectable MSS. to 'defixa', which has no suitable meaning. Virgil says (Aen. v. 527): "Caelo ceu sape re fixa Transcurrunt crinemque volantia sidera ducunt."

7. solve, solve turbinem] All the MSS. have 'solve;' Labumin has 'volve,' without authority. 'Turbo' is a wheel of some sort used by sorceresses: ρόμβος is the Greek name for it; and Theocritus introduces the witch Símætha using it, and saying (ii. 30):

χῶς εὔνειον οὐδε ρόμβοις ὅ χάλκεος ἵππ' Ἀφροδίτης
ός κέινος εὔνειτὸ ποτ' ἀμετρηπα θόρυβαι.

Ovid also (Am. 1. 8. 7): "Seit bene quid gramin quid torte concocta rhombo Licia," and Propertius (iii. 6. 26): "Stamina rhombi ductur ille rota," and Martial (xii. 57):

"Cum secta Colcho Luna vapulat rhombo."

Threads of various colours arranged artificially were spun round the wheel, and formed a magical web supposed to involve somehow or other the affections or fortunes of him who was the object of the spell. 'Retro solvere' means to relax the onward motion of the wheel, which will then of itself roll back. 'Volve' is too obvious an emendation, and not required.

8. Movit nepotem] How Telephus, the king of Mysia, was wounded and afterwards healed by Achilles (the son of Tethis, and so grandson of Nereus), is told in the life of Telephus in Smith's Dict. Biog. He opposed the Greeks on their way to Troy. Propertius refers to the story (ii. 1. 63):

"Myus et Haemonii juvenis qua cuspidie vulnus Senserat, hac ipsa cuspidie sensat opem."

See also Ovid (Trist. i. 1. 90, sqq.):

"Namque eas vel nemo, vel qui mihi vulnera fecit, Solus Achilleo tollere more potest."

11. Unxere] This is the reading of the greater number of MSS., including the Blandinian; also of Cruquius' Scholiast, who says, "unxere—sepeliere." There is also good authority for 'luxere,' and Bentley warmly defends it; he has no doubt whatever it is Horace's word, "ab auctore profectum esse nullus dubito." Labumin has a long note in its defence, but in his second edition has 'unxere' in deference to the MSS. Bentley says any common person might have thought of 'unxere,' of 'luxere,' "nemo nisi apprime eruditus."

I agree with most modern editors in thinking 'unxere' has more meaning here than 'luxere.' It is Horace's purpose to show that Achilles, moved by the entreaties of Priam (II. xxiv. 510), gave back Hector's body, which he had threatened the dogs should devour (II. xxii. 182). 'Unxere' would show that the body had been returned, which 'luxere' would not. That Homer does not mention the fact that the Trojan women anointed Hector's body is an Postquam relietis moenibus rex procidit
Heu pervicaeis ad pedes Achillei.
Setosa duris exuere pellibus 15
Labiorosi remiges Ulix&
Volente Circa membræ; tune mens et sonus
Relapsus atque notus in vultus honor.
Dedi satis superque poenarum tibi,
Amata nautis multum et institoribus. 20
Fugit juvenitas et verecundus color
Reliquit ossa pelle amicta lurida;
Tuis capillus albus est odoribus;
Nullum ab labore me reclinat otium;
Urget diem nox et dies nocem, neque est 25
Levare tenta spiritu praecordia.
Ergo negatum vincor ut credam miser
Sabella pectus increpare carmina.

dile argument. Horace only makes them do what the Greeks did for Patroclus (II. xviii. 350) καὶ τότε ἔξλοβαν τε καὶ ἡλευγαν λίπ ἔλαπρος. ‘Homicadam’ is a literal version of ἀνδροφόνον, the well-known epithet for Hector. The rhythm of the line in which it occurs is without a precedent in Horace.

16. Laboriosi] This epithet is repeated from the last Epode (v. 60). In the next verse most editors since Bentley have followed his example, and given the Latin rather than the Greek termination to Circe’s name. Bentley founds his adoption of this form (which had before been so corrected by Broukhusius on Propert. ii. 7. 18) on the statement of Valerius Probus, whose authority, as he justly says, is of great weight, as being far anterior to any known MSS. of Horace. Probus says (p. 1446): ‘E’ nomina terminata Graeca sunt, ut Danae, Euterpe, Circe, Agave. In genitivo ‘es,’ in accusativo ‘en;’ hujus Danaes, hanc Danaen, Abalitium enim, quia Graecum est, non habent, et convertuntur. Sic ex e’ litera ‘a’ facit et dicitur ‘Circa,’ unde est illud Horatii, ‘volente Circa.’ Bentley adds, that in the Epodes, Satires, and Epistles, Horace uses the Latin forms, and in the Odes only the Greek, which might be expected.

18. Relapsus] This is the reading of most MSS. Three of the Berne have ‘relatus,’ which is Lambinus’ reading and Cruquius’. Bentley says the MSS. are apt to vary between the compounds of ‘lapus’ and ‘latus.’ Except the preponderance of MSS. authority, I do not see much reason for preferring either to the other.

19. tibi, Amata] Bentley thinks that by inserting ‘o’ between these words the sentence ‘quae prius languida et bulaca erat novas vires novamque juncturam acquirit.” The quiet irony in the sentence gives it its best force. I do not think Bentley’s expletive would add to it. “Hoc urbanissima contumelia dict.” (Porph.) (Compare C. iii. 6. 30, n.) Bentley proposes to change ‘ossa’ to ‘ora,’ quoting Julius Scaliger: ‘Quis dicit colorem reliquisse ossa? Non igitur debuit dicere ossa amicta pelle sed reliquisse pellam amicientem ossa;’ and adding, ‘nihil hac censura justius clariusve dici potest;’ and going on to prove that men’s bones do not blush, or if they do it is a disease which has escaped the notice of the profession, and more of the same sort. The MSS. all agree, and we may suppose the poor man to say that he is nothing but skin and bone and has lost his colour. Whether Horace does not sufficiently express this by the words as they stand, plain men may judge. On v. 23 see Introduction.

24. ab labore] This preposition is used like ἀνθ, ‘after,’ and ‘est’ in the next verse like ἠτι for ἠτιν.

28. Sabella] The Sabine, Pelignian, and Marsican women had credit above others for witchcraft. See S. i. 9. 29: ‘Namque instat fatum mihi triste, Sabella Quod puero cecinit divina mota anus urna.” See below, v. 60, and Epod. v. 76. ‘Increpare: dirumpere, sive incitare’ Caputque Marsa dissilire nenia.
Quid amplius vis? O mare, o terra, ardeo,
Quantum neque atro delibutus Hercules
Nessi cruore, nec Sicana fervida
Vires in Aetna flamma; tu donec cinis
Injuriosis aridus ventis ferar
Cales venenis officina Colchis.

Quae finis aut quod me manet stipendium?
Effare; jussas cum fide poenas luam,
Paratus expiare, seu poposceris
Centum juvencos, sive mendaci lyra
Voles sonari: Tu pudica, tu proba

(Acron). It is not easy to get a good word that literally renders 'increpare' here. 'Nenia' is used for a charm, as in Ovid (A. A. ii. 102): "Mixaetque cum magica nenia Marsa sonis." (Fast. vi. 142): "Neniaque in volucres Marsa figurat anus." It is also used by Horace for a night-song (C. iii. 28. 16; Epp. i. 1. 63); for the melancholy poetry of Simonides (C. ii. 1. 38); and in its proper sense of a dirge for the dead (C. ii. 20. 21). Cicero (de Leg. ii. 24): "Honoratorum virorum laudes in contione memorentur casque etiam cantu ad tibiicumem prosequantur, cui nomen nenia." 31. Quantum neque atro] See Epod. iii. 17.

33. Vires] Forcellini interprets this, with Lambinus and Cruquius, 'nunquam intermoriens, sed perpetuus vigens igiubus,' and I am inclined to adopt that interpretation rather than that of Orelli and Dilenbr., who explain it by the sulphurous green flame issuing from the mountain. I doubt whether there is any thing in the colour of the flame to authorize such an epithet, and Bentley makes the same remark. Orelli quotes the authority of his Zürich and oldest Berne MSS. for 'vires,' and Lambinus found it in his oldest MSS.: in the others was 'urens,' which he calls 'lounge ineptissimum.' No doubt it arose out of 'vires,' and is so far a confirmation of that reading. Cruquius' Scholast had 'vires,' and he interprets it ' aestuans,' which means nothing, but it shows what was his reading. Bentley prefers 'urens,' which Lambinus mentions as resting only on conjecture, but which has since been found in a few MSS. of no great weight. Like some other emendations it is too easy to be admitted against the vast majority of MSS. 'Furere' is commonly applied to flames, but that only makes it less likely that such a word should have been superseded by one so unusual as 'vires.' 35. Cales] Bentley would change this into the third person; to do which he is obliged to change 'tu' into 'tua,' to the great detriment of the verse, and introducing the possessive pronoun where it is not wanted. There is no doubt he is wrong. The received reading is as old at least as Porphyrian, who says 'ipsam mulierem officiinam venenorum diserte dixit,' and so we must take it till some better emendation than Bentley's is offered.

36. stipendium?] Forcellini explains this as 'quaevis multa aut poena,' and quotes Catullus (64. 173): "Indomito nec dira ferens stipendia tauro Perifus in Creteam religasset navita funem;" but there the word comes more under the sense of 'tributum,' of which he gives several instances, the reference being to the tribute or sacrifice of one hundred youths paid yearly to the Minotaur. As an equivalent for 'poena' I do not find that 'stipendium' is used elsewhere. It is possible it may name 'service,' which is its military sense. I have used the word 'penalty' in the argument, but the meaning is doubtful. 'Quae finis' means 'what death?' (See C. ii. 18. 29, n.) Captives led in triumph were always put to death. See Ep. vii. 8, n.

39. Centum juvencos,] This is the reading of the MSS., but Bentley prefers 'juvencis,' as in C. i. 4. 11 he preferred 'agna' and 'haedo.' I prefer the accusative in both places. 'Sono' is used as an active verb only by the poets, after the manner of ἕξτετυ. The satire of what follows is very amusing. In his plea for forgiveness he repeats his offence, implying that to call her chaste he must lie, which however he is willing to do. The following words are the substance of what he promises to say in her Perambulabis astra sidus aureum.
Infamis Helenae Castor offensus vicem
Fraterque magni Castoris vieti prece
Adempta vati reddidere lumina.
Et tu, potes nam, solve me dementia,
O nec paternis obsoleta sordibus,
Neque in sepulcris pauperum prudens anus Novendiales dissipare pulveres.

praise, placing her, like Ariadne and other virtuous women, among the constellations.

42. Infamis Helenae] The story of Stesichorus losing his sight as a punishment for a libel on Helen, and recovering it after writing an apology and recantation, has been referred to before (C. i. 16, Introduction). Other writers attribute the restoration to Helen herself, Horace to her brothers. The story is mentioned, besides Plato (quoted in the above place), by Isocrates (Helen. Encom. c. 29), Chrysostom (Orat. ii. p. 77), Pausanias (iii. 19), Suidas (sub verbo), Lucian (Ver. Hist. ii. 15). Other writers refer to Stesichorus' recantation or pahnode, as it is called, most of whom are mentioned in Bergk's note on the only fragment of it that has been preserved, and which has been given before. There can be no doubt Horace was well acquainted with the whole poem. Why he should have given a different version of the story from that of others who must also have known it does not appear. The poem must have contained a prayer to the Dioscuri. Much has been written on the subject by modern scholars, some of whom are mentioned by Estré. Acron attributes the blinding and the restoration to the brothers, but he evidently only follows Horace, while professing to explain him. Instead of 'vicem,' nearly all the MSS. appear to have 'vices.' Dacier prefers 'vicem,' which he says is found "dans quelques manuscrits," but he does not mention which they are. Bentley knew of only one, which is quoted by Torruntius, but on the authority of that one he adopts 'vicem,' I think rightly. Fea mentions four other MSS., but no diligence is sufficient to trace Fea's MSS., for he gives a very imperfect list of them. He opposes 'vicem' very sharply, and nearly all the editors read 'vice.' 'Vice' and 'prece' form an ill-sounding ἔμοιοτίκευον. Professor Key (Lat. Gr. 917, n.), referring to the independent use of 'vicem,' says it is perhaps the equivalent in form and meaning of the German 'wegen.' It occurs repeatedly in Livy, as Bentley has shown. There is a like usage in χάριν and μοίραν, which occur together in a fragment of Simonides (τερί γυναικῶν, 103. Fr. 6 Bergk):

άνήρ ε' άταν μάλιστα θυμήδειν δοκή
καρ' οίκον θεόν μοίραν ή ανθρώπων χάριν.

45. potes nam.] This is a common formula in entreaties both in Greek and Latin. Of what follows Porphyrian says, "urbanissime obscura dictur ironia: in contratrum namque accipienda haec: quis enim sic laudet qui simpliciter agit? 'o quae non es sordidi generis! nec ossa humanae ad maleficissima colligit' et reliqua." This sufficiently explains the spirit of the passage (see Argument), and what is meant by 'novendiales dissipare pulveres.' It appears, if we are to believe the old commentators, to have been the practice to bury the ashes nine days after death. Servius (on Aen. v. 64) says the body was kept at home seven days, on the eighth it was burnt, and on the ninth buried, and then he quotes this passage. Cruquius' Scholastic says as much, with a little variation as to the time of burning, which, he says, was on the third day; and this is more probable, at least as regards the poor, who could not afford the ointments necessary to preserve their dead any time (see Becker's Gallus, Exc. on the 'Interment of the Dead'). Heyne, on the above passage of Virgil (which refers to the games instituted in memory of Anchises), and on v. 762 of the same book, may be consulted. Sacred ceremonies appear to have been observed (but we cannot suppose this was general) for nine days in honour of the dead (see besides Virgil, L. c., Stat. Theb. vi. 238, sqq.). But this has nothing to do with Horace's meaning. He means to say that the witch dug up the ashes of the dead immediately (not nine days, as Forcellini says) after their burial, while they were fresh and better suited on that account for magical ceremonies. The ashes of the poor are fixed upon, says Cruquius' commentator, because they were not watched as the rich man's were. 'Novendiales' usually signifies 'of Tibi hospitale pectus et purae manus,
Tuusque venter Pactumius, et tuo
Cruo rubros obstetrix pannos lavit,
Utcunque fortis exsilis puerpera.
Quid obseratis auribus fundis preces?
Non saxa nudis surdiora navitis
Neptunus alto tundit hibernus salo.
Inultus ut tu riseris Cotyttia
Vulgata, sacrum liberi Cupidinis,
Et Esquilini pontifex venefici
Impune ut Urbem nomine impleris meo!
Quid proderat ditasse Pelignas anus, nine days' continuance,' but it cannot have that meaning here. Hector was buried after nine days (II. xxiv. 784):—

'Obsoleta' is applied in an unusual sense. It usually signifies that which is gone to decay (out of use), as clothes, houses, faded pictures, &c. (see Forcell.), and so it comes to mean generally that which is spoilt and worthless. See C. ii. 10. 6.

50. Tusque venter Pactumius.] In Epod. v. 6 it is insinuated that Canidia is childless, that the children she pretends to have are not hers, and her childbirths are a fiction, perhaps to extract money from her lovers on whom her pretended children were affiliated. Here the libel is withdrawn, but in such a way as to leave it untouched, for in the last line he insinuates that her travail is at least not very difficult. 'Venter' is used by the law-writers to signify the child in the womb, or a woman with child. ("De Venter in Possessionem Mitteno," Dig. 37, tit. 9.) Quintilian also (Declam. 177): "Illa igitur prior damnavit ventrem suum: victurus autem fuit illa si ego adultream non occidisset." Tacitus uses 'uterus' for the child after birth (Ann. i. 59; xv. 23). See Forcell. under both words. The name 'Pactumius' appears as 'Partumeius' in some MSS., which Bentley calls "malae notae codices." Fea quotes many more, and defends the reading strongly. Laminus adopts it, Turnebus, Torrentius, Dacier, and others. Ascensius too, much earlier than any of them. But the Scho-} tury knew nothing of that word, which is founded on a filthy notion unworthy of being entertained, though its defenders think it a clever joke. 'Pactumeius' is a Roman name, as Bentley has shown from the jurists and inscriptions. Ven. has 'pactum ejus,' and that I suppose to be the reading of all the editions descended from the same stock and bearing Landinus' commentary: but it will neither scan nor construe, and is only an argument for 'Pactumeius,' though Dacier says that name has "ni grâce ni sene."

56. ut tu riseris] 'Ut' is an exclamation of scorn. 'To think that you should.' It is generally taken as a question by the editors, and followed by a note of interrogation. It occurs again (S. ii. 5, 18): "Utne tegam spurco Damae latus!" The festival in honour of Cotys or Cotytta was of Thracian origin, and transferred to Corinth and other Greek states with all its impurities. It found its way into Sicily, whence one of the priestesses of that goddess comes to be mentioned by Theocritus (vi. 40): ταύτα γαρ ἀ γραί με Κοτυτταιοίς ἔξειδεαν. The festival was never introduced into the Italian States, and was unknown at Rome except to the learned (see Smith's Dict. Ant. art. 'Cotytta,' and Dict. Myth. art. 'Cotys'). The rites of this goddess, like other works of darkness, professed secrecy, as Juvenal says (ii. 91):—

"Talia secreta coluerunt orgia taeda Ceeropiam solitii Baptae lassare Cotytta."

On the connexion of the title Baptae with the worship of Cotytta, the reader may consult Buttman's Mythol. vol. ii. art. 19, 'Ueber die Kotytta und die Bapte.'

58. Et Esquilini pontifex venefici] She charges him with thrusting himself upon the orgies as if he were the priest who alone Velociusve miscuisse toxicum?
Sed tardiora fata te votis manent:
Ingrata misero vita duenda est in hoc Novis ut usque suppetas laboribus.
Optat quietem Pelopis infidi pater,
Egens benignae Tantali semper dapis,
Optat Prometheus obligatus aliti,
Optat suppetas laboribus.
In monte saxum; sed vetant leges Jovis.
Voles modo altis desilire turribus,
Modo ense pectus Norico recludere, Frustraque vincla gutturi neetes tuo of men might attend them. As to the Campus Esquilinus, where the witches held their midnight meetings, see Ep. v. 100, and

S. i. 8. 8.

60. Quid proderat ditasse] 'What good then did I get by spending money upon the old Pelignian witches (i.e. to teach me my craft), and mingling for thee a more quick and potent draught? But, though it be quick and potent, yet the death that awaits thee shall be slower than thou wouldest have it.' There is another reading, 'Quid proderit' and 'Si tardiora,' supported by good MSS., and the first of the two by the authority of Porphyrius, who says the sense is uncertain; but he inclines to render it thus:
'What will it profit thee to have paid the witches for antidotes more quick and powerful than my charms? But,' &c. He had the reading 'sed.' I am not aware that 'proderat' appears in any edition before Bentley's; but it has good MS. authority, and if the witch be speaking of herself the imperfect is preferable with 'sed.' Fea retains 'proderit' and 'si,' and makes 'votis'
the witch's prayers. 'What will it profit me . . . . if a death awaits thee slower than I would have it?' For that sense we should have 'maneant.' The old editions, Ven. and Ascensius, 'follow the Scholiast in reading 'sed.' Lambinus and the editors of his day have 'si.' I prefer the reading and interpretation I have given, which is that of Bentley and Orelli, and now of Dillenbr., who has been converted. 'In hoc,
'for this purpose.'

64. laboribus.] The MSS. vary between 'laboribus' and 'doloribus.' The former is the stronger word of the two, and was probably the reading of the Scholiasts, one of whom (Cruq) explains 'suppetas'
'sufficias ad novos dolores et labores perferendos et poenas.' 'Labores' is the word elsewhere used for the punishment of Tantalus (C. ii. 13. 26), and I think it has been properly restored to the text. Ascen-sius has it, but none I believe between him and Bentley. 'Infidus' and 'infidi' both have support from the MSS. But the latter has the best, according to Torrentius, Bentley, and Orelli. Fea's references I cannot follow, but he reads 'infidus.' The old editions have 'infidus,' and I know of none but Torrentius' that has 'infidi' till Bentley's. As father and son each earned the epithet, it is not easy to judge in this conflict of authority to which of them it should be given. The poets of the Augustan age, in relating the punishment of Tantalus, refer only to that legend according to which,
standing in the midst of water, with fruit-trees over his head ('benigna dapes'), he is not able to reach either. The other story, followed by Findar and the Greek poets, of a great stone suspended over his head and ever threatening to fall on him, the Roman poets do not allude to. But Cicero does, and only to that (de Fin. i. 18; Tusc. Disp.
iv. 16). In the Babarini Palace at Rome there is a relieve containing a very striking group of the three sufferers, Ixion, Sisyphus, and Tantalus, in which the last is represented with a stream of water pouring from his hands, which are joined and raised to his mouth. The expression of pain and disappointment approaching to despair is admirably represented, to judge by the engraving given by Spence. In the same group Sisyphus is represented as carrying a huge stone on his shoulders up a steep mountain, which seems to agree with Ovid's expression: "Acolden saxum grave Sisyphon urget" (Met. xiii. 26). There is however but one story about Sisyphus' punish-

Y
Fastidiosa tristis aegrimonia.
Vector humeri tunc ego inimicis eques,
Meaqui terra cedet insolentiae.
An quae movere cereas imagines,
Ut ipse nosti curiosus, et polo
Deripere lunam vocibus possim meis,
Possim crenatos excitare mortuos
Desiderique temperare pocula, Plorem artis in te nil agentis exitus?

ment, which Horace refers to (C. ii. 14. 20) as a ‘longus labor.’ Nor is he inconsistent in respect to Prometheus, whom in C. ii. 13. 37, 18. 35, he places in Tartarus. The story, as related prophetically by Hermes in Aeschylus’ play (P. V. 1016, sqq.), is, that the Scythian rock on which Prometheus was first bound by Hephaestus was struck down, with him upon it, by Zeus into Hades, and that he was brought thence after a long time (μαχρν μήκος εκπελευηες χρόνων) to undergo upon earth the punishment awarded to Tityos in hell, of having his liver devoured by an eagle.

72. gutturi nectes tuo] Authority seems in favour of ‘innectes.’ But nevertheless Orelli edits ‘innectes’ with Bentley, who says Horace, if he had written ‘innectes,’ would have said ‘vindis’ and ‘gutter.’ gutturinnectes might easily, as Orelli says, be read ‘guturi innectes;’ but he is not sure which Horace wrote, and is not much inclined to desert his best MSS. B and the Zürich. Dillenbr. has ‘innectes.’ The steel of Noricum (Carinthia and Styria) is mentioned elsewhere (C. i. 16. 9).

74. Vectabor humeris] She threatens to besstride his shoulders in triumph, and to spurn the earth in the presence of vengeance. I doubt the correctness of Forcellini’s interpretation of ‘insolentiae,’ which Orelli adopts: ‘novis ausis, insolitis ac novis viribus, quibus ulciscar et deprimam omnes.’

76. movere cereas imagines,] To give life to waxen images made to represent an absent youth, and inspired with the tenderness or the pain he should feel. In S. i. 8. 30, such an image is introduced (see note), and the witch in Theocritus (ii. 28) melts a waxen image, and says:

ως τακονθ’ υπ’ Πρωτος δ’ Μονεως αυτικα

Δήρις,

which Virgil has imitated in his eighth Eclogue (v. 80):——

“Limus ut hic durescit, et haec ut cera Liquescit
Uno oedemque igni, sic nostro Daphnis amore.”

And Hypsipyle says of Medea (Ovid. Heroid. vi. 91):——

“Devovet absentes simulacrae cerea figit, Et miserum tenues in jecur urget acus.”

78. Deripere] The variations of the MSS. in the last lines are numerous. There is as usual ‘diripere’ for ‘deripere,’ of which the latter alone can be admitted; and ‘possim’ for ‘possim.’ Most of the MSS., and all the old editions of the thirteenth century, have the subjunctive, which is alone right. ‘Poculum’ is the reading of some MSS. of weight, and of all the editions I have seen, till Bentley introduced ‘pocula.’ I see no particular reason for preferring either; one reason which weighed with some, though I see no force in it, is removed by the reading ‘exitus’ for ‘exitum,’ which was supposed to jingle with ‘poculum.’ The plural ‘exitus’ appears in Orelli’s three Berne MSS., and is the reading, among others, of Torrentius, who has ‘habentis’ for ‘agentis.’ ‘Nullum habentis exitum’ is Lambinus’ reading; ‘Nil habentis exitum’ that of the Venetian (1483). ‘Nil valentis exitum’ is that of Sanadon and others; ‘nil agentis’ of the three Berne and Zürich and others. This is a common expression of Horace’s, and it appears to me the most suitable reading here, with at least as good authority as any other.
Q. HORATII FLACCI

SATIRARUM

LIBER PRIMUS.

SATIRE I.

The professed purpose of this Satire, or that with which Horace seems to have begun, may be gathered from the first two lines. Discontent with the condition that Providence has assigned them; disappointment with the position many years' labour and perhaps dishonesty have gained them; envy of their neighbours' circumstances, even if they worse than their own; dissatisfaction in short with what they have and are, and craving for something they have not and are not,—these are features common to the great majority of men. For this vice of discontent the Greeks had the comprehensive name μημημημεία. It affords a wide field for satire, and could only be touched lightly, or in one or two of its many parts, in the compass of one short poem. It will be seen that after propounding the whole subject in the shape of a question to Maecenas, Horace confines himself to one solution of it, and that, it must be admitted, not the most comprehensive (see notes on vv. 28. 108). Nor has he managed the connexion between his question and the only answer he gives it with very great skill. Avarice is the only reason he assigns for the universal disease, and any one will see that hereby he leaves many untouched who are as culpably restless as the avaricious, but not in their sordid way. However, when he is upon this subject he writes, as he almost always does, with elegance and truth, and this is among the most popular of Horace's Satires.

The chronologists extract a date from the verses 114, 115:

"Ut, quum carceribus missos rapit ungula currus, Instat equis auriga suos vincentibus, ———"

which are a little like the three last verses in the first Georgic of Virgil:

"Ut, cum carceribus sese effudere, quadrigae
Addunt in spatia, et frustra retinacula tendens
Fetur equis auriga, neque audit currus habenas."

These verses Horace is said to have imitated; and as this Georgic is supposed to have been published A.U.C. 719, the Satire could not have been written before that year. But even if 719 be correctly assigned as the date of the first Georgic, which there are no sufficient arguments to prove, it is not at all impossible that the above verses are imitated by both poets from some common original, as Orelli suggests. The likeness is not great.

The Satire is put first in the order of this book, not as an introduction as some say (of which it bears no signs), but because it is addressed to Maecenas.
ARGUMENT.

Maccenas, why is it that no man is content with his own lot, but every one envies his neighbour? The weary soldier envies the trader; the trader on the stormy deep envies the soldier; the jurisconsult, impatient of his early client, envies the countryman, who dragged up to town by a law suit, envies the inhabitants of the town. There is no end to the instances. Well, suppose some god were to offer them their wish, and bid them change places,—they would refuse it! What hinders the wrath of heaven from visiting these murmurers, and the ears of Jove being closed against them for ever? But to be serious (though truth may be told in jest), the toiling ploughman, the cheating host, the soldier, the venurous trader, pretend their only object is to secure a provision for old age, like the ant provident of the future. But she retires when the winter comes, and enjoys her store; while winter and summer, fire, sword, and waves obstruct not your pursuit of wealth. What is the use of treasure which you hide like a coward in the ground? “Oh, but if you take from it you will soon reduce it to nothing.” Be it so; but if you do not, what charms has the pile of coin? If you thresh thousands of bushels of corn, you cannot eat more than me. The slave that carries the bread eats no more than he who carries none. Live within the bounds of nature, and a hundred acres are as good as a thousand. “But it is so pleasant to take what you want from a huge heap!” Nay, I do not see why my baskets are not as good as your barns, if I can take as much from my store as you from yours. You might as well prefer to draw a cup of water from the swollen Asopus rather than the little stream by your side; but so you may find that your life is the penalty of your greediness, while another gets his water clear and keeps his life from drowning. But most men think they never can have enough. The more you have, say they, the more you will be thought of. Now what is to be done with a man of this sort? You can only leave him in the misery he prefers; as the miser at Athens, when the people hissed him, said, “Never mind; I look at my money-box when I get home, and applaud myself.” Tantalus catches at the retreating waters—why smile? Change the name, and the story belongs to you. Even thus you gloat over your money as you would gaze at a lovely picture, but you dare not use it. What is the use of money? To buy the necessaries of life. To lie awake and tremble for thieves, is this your happiness? Save me from such happiness! “But if you are rich you have anxious friends to nurse you in sickness.” Nay, you have not one. Your wife and children, your neighbours, and all the town detest you. How should it be otherwise? You prefer your money to them. Suppose you were to bestow a little pains in keeping the affections of your kindred—a blessing nature has given you at no cost of yours—would it be all labour? In short, cease your getting: having more than enough, enjoy what you have got, and remember the fate of Ummidius the miser. “Well, but what does all this mean? am I to be a spendthrift like some we know?” Nay, this is only to bring opposite extremes into comparison: all things have their limits, on either side of which right cannot stand. So I go back to what I began with—that greedy men are always dissatisfied, and envying others; and instead of comparing themselves with those who are poorer, are always hastening to overtake some one ahead of them, like the driver in the chariot race; so that few retire from life as satisfied guests from a banquet, acknowledging with thankfulness the blessings they have enjoyed. But enough, or you will say I have ransacked Crispinus’ desk.
Qui fit, Maecenas, ut nemo quam sibi sortem
Seu ratio dederit seu fors objecerrit illa Contentus vivat, laudent diversa sequentes?
"O fortunati mercatores!" gravis annis Miles ait multo jam fractus membra labore.

Contra mercator, navem iactantibus Austris:
"Militia est potior. Quid enim, concurruritur: horae

1. quam sibi sortem] See note on C. i. 9. 14, as to 'sors' and 'fors.' These two are opposed as effect and cause, and the condition and that which produces it. 'Fors' and 'ratio' are opposed as accident and design,—that which a man cannot help, and that which he carves out for himself.

2. illa[ suffix several MSS. which have 'ulla' for 'illa,' and he adopts that reading as 'elegantius et plenus vulgato,' quoting Cicero in Verr. Act. ii. 1. 5, c. 3: 'Neque ego ullam in partem disputo,' where he says ' ullam' is for 'alterutram.' But it is not so: Cicero means he in no way disputes the fact. 'illa' is better than 'ulla' in every way, particularly, as Orelli says, as referring to 'quam.'

3. laudet] This sense of 'laudare,' 'felicem praedicare,' μακαριζειν, is not given by Forcellini. It is repeated below, v. 9, and in v. 169, where it occurs in combination with, and as equivalent to, 'probare.' Heindorf quotes two places in Silius (i. 393): 'Felix hen! nemorum et vitae laudandus opacae;' (iv. 260) 'laudabat leti juvenem.' So Cicero (de Am. c. vii.) says, 'Ex quo illorum beata mors videtur, horum vita validaibus.'

[laudet diversa sequentes?] This is briefly expressed for 'sed quisque laudet,' as Heindorf remarks. The irregularity is almost imperceptible; the absence of a nominative is so little felt in such a position that any language will allow of its omission. See Plato (Rep. ii. p. 366, b): των γε ἄλλων οὔτεις ἐκὼν ἔκαις ἄλλ' ὧδε ἀνανοίγος—ψέμι το ὀξείων ἐδώτων ὑπὸ δρα. Cíc. de Or. ii. 14: 'Nemo extulit eum verbis qui ita dixisset, ut qui adissent intelligenter quid dixissent, sed contemnisset eum qui minus id facere putissent.' In the transition from negative to positive statements, the positive element which is contained in the former is often carried on in the mind so as to affect the latter, as in those sentences which are coupled by 'nee' and 'et,' oitē and τε. 'Nemo vivit' is 'quisque non vivit.' Every one must be conscious of this in the language of common life.

4. gravis annis] I see no reason for adopting, with Orelli, Jahn's limitation, "Significat poeta non annos vitae sed annos militiae." Virgil says (Aen. ix. 246): 'Hic annis gravis atque animi maturus Aletes,' And 'gravis' is one of the commonest words applied to old age, as any one knows who has read Cicero's treatise; and βαρίς is equally common in the same connexion. That Augustus' soldiers got their discharge before they were fifty is nothing to the purpose. A hard-worked soldier would feel the advance of age sooner than a man of peace and ease. Horace, in his own campaigning, had heard many a veteran no doubt grumbling at his condition; and if he wrote 'annis,' he meant age, not service. Lucan puts such complaints into the lips of Julius Caesar's soldiers (v. 273, sqq.):

"—— Finis quis queritur armis?
Quid satis est, si Roma parum? jam respice canos, Invalidasque manus, et inanes cerne lacertos.
Usus abest vitae: bellis consumptimus aevum."

'Armis' is a conjectural reading which some editors have adopted, and Heindorf says it is specious (schmeichelt!), but it is not general enough to be admitted, and the MSS. are unanimously against it.

7. quid enim, concurreit:] I have not inserted the usual note of interrogation after ' enim.' 'Quid' and 'quid enim' are each used as introductory to something that illustrates, or explains, or accounts for what has just been said. They introduce an example, or they carry on the flow of an argument, or something of that sort. It is not difficult to see how that conventional sense may have become connected with the word 'quid,' but to explain it by an ellipse, as 'quid est enim quod contradici quaeat? nonne concurruritur?' (Heindorf) and so to point the words as to indicate that meaning, even if that explanation were correct, which I doubt, is no more desirable than to break up any other sentence and reduce it to its possible elements. Any language would be Memento cita mors venit aut victoria laeta."
Agricolam laudat juris legumque peritus,
Sub galli cantum consultor ubi ostia pulsat. 10
Ille datis vadibus qui rure extractus in urbem est
Solos felices viventes clamat in urbe.
Cetera de genere hoc, adeo sunt multa, loquacem spoil by such a process. (See above, C. ii. 18. 23, n.) What Orelli says, that in Cicero the formula 'quid enim' is always followed by another question, only shows how little necessity there is for interrupting the sentence as he does, by an interrogation after those words. Fea's reading, 'quid ni?' which was suggested to Lambinus by a friend of his, and which he liked, but supposed it to want authority, which has since been supplied by four of Fea's MSS., is as bad as possible. Acron has the following note "quid enim: quare non: et est comicum," from which it is inferred his reading was 'quidni.' Whether that be so or not, the reading is a bad one. 'Horae momento' is a common phrase in Livy and other writers. Horace has below 'punctum mobilis horae.' 'Punctum' is perhaps a little more precise than 'momentum,' which signifies the progress of time, though conventionally its smallest division. Pliny draws a distinction between them (Paneg. iv. c. 56): "quod momentum, quod immo temporis punctum aut beneficio sterile aut vacuum laude?"

8. Memento cita mors venit) Lambinus, on the authority of four of his MSS., but against all the best, reads 'momento aut cita;' and Bentley follows him, saying, that without the disjunctive particle the reading is "omino sum plane et infaustum." Heindorf puts in the particle, but I think it is better omitted. It gives too much precision to the sentence, considering the position of the speaker, as Reisig observes.

9. juris legumque peritus,) "Jura dabat legesque viris" (Aen. i. 507). "Haec nos juris, legum, urbiun societati devinixit" (Cic. de N. D. l. ii. c. 59). On the distinction between 'legen' and 'jus' see Smith's Dict. Ant., article 'Jus,' and Mr. Long's Excursus on Edicta Magistratum (Cic. in Verr. p. 165). Cicero (de Orat. i. 48) thus defines a jurisconsultus: "Sin autem quaeraretur quisnam jurisconsultus vere nominaretur, eum dicerem qui legum et consuetudinis ejus qua privati in civitate uteretur, et ad respondendum et ad agendum (Ernesti has 'scribendum') et ad cavendum peritus esset; et ex eo genere Sex. Aclium, M. Manilium, P. Mucium nominarem. The same M. Manilius he says (in the same treatise, lib. iii. c. 33) he has seen "transverso ambulamentem foro, quod erat insignis cum qui id faceret facere civibus omnibus consili sui copiam; ad quos olim et ita ambulantem et in solio sedentes domi sic adiabatur, non solum ut de jure civili ad eos, verum etiam de filia collocenda, de fundo emendo, de agro colendo, de omni denique aut officio, aut negotio, referretur." The same he says was the practice of P. Crassus, Ti. Coruncanius, and Scipio, all Pontifices Maximi, who gave their advice on the Jus Pontificium and matters not only of law but of private interest, on questions human and divine. At the time Horace wrote, the Jus respondendi, whatever it meant (see Puchta, i. 559. 1st ed. Inst, and art. 'Jurisconsultus,' Smith's Dict. Ant.), was not established, and the number of those who gave legal advice was probably large, but they were always distinct from the professors or teachers, 'advocati,' and others, who were paid for their services, and from 'oratores,' though the 'consultus' sometimes combined with his calling as such that of the 'orator' or 'patronus,' which is included in the word 'agere,' used by Cicero above. If we are to believe this statement of Horace, and another to the same effect (Epp. ii. 1. 109),

"Romae dulce dieu fuit et solenne reclusa.
Mane domo vigilare, clienti promere jura," and that of Cicero (pro Muren. c. 9), "Vigilas tu (that is, Sulpicius Severus) de nocte ut tuis consultoribus respondes; ille (that is, Lucullus) ut eo quo intendit cum exercitu perveniat; te gallorum, illum buccinarum cantus excusiscat,"—we must suppose that these learned persons, who gave their 'responsa' gratuitously, sacrificed their own convenience to the anxiety of their clients, and received them at a very early hour in the morning. On 'laudat' see v. 3, n.

11. datis vabitibus] The term 'vades dare,' or more exactly 'promittere,' is explained clearly in Mr. Long's note on Cic. in Verr. Act. ii. 13, c. 15. 'Vades' were sureties provided by the defendant, to se-Delassare valent Fabium. Ne te morer, audi Quo rem deducam. Si quis Deus, “En ego,” dicat, 15 “Jam faciam quod vultis: eris tu, qui modo miles, Mercator; tu, consultus modo, rusticus: hinc vos, Vos hinc mutatis discidite partibus: Eia! Quid statis?” nolint. Atqui licet esse beatis. Quid causae est merito quin illis Jupiter ambas 20 Iratus buccas inflet, neque se fore posthac Tam facilem dicat votis ut praebat aurem? Praeterea ne sic, ut qui joculoria, ridens Percurram (quamquam ridentem dicere verum Quid vetat? ut pueris olim dant crustula blandi Doctores, elementa velint ut dicere prima); Sed tamen amoto quaeamus seria ludo. Ille gravem duro terram qui vertit aratro, cure his appearance before the praetor at a time agreed upon between the plaintiff and himself. If he did not appear, he forfeited the amount of the ‘vadimonium’ or agreement, and his ‘vades’ were liable to pay it if he did not. (See S. 9, n.). The person here represented, therefore, is the de-defendant in an action going up reluctantly to Rome, to appear before the Praetor according to his agreement. ‘Ile’ is as if the man were before us.
does not occur elsewhere, there is no reason to suspect the word or alter it. The intensive force of ‘de’ is well added to ‘lasso.’ It corresponds to καρδα, which has the same force. By making ‘adeo sunt multa,’ parenthetical, the construction is plain. Who Fabius was, it is impossible even to conjecture with probability. Acron says of him that he was a Roman ‘eques’ of Narbo, who wrote some books on the Stoic philosophy; that he was of Pompeius’ party, and that he often disputed with Horace, whence he calls him ‘loquax,’ which looks very like an invention derived from the text. Porphyrian and Cruiquis’ Commentator both tell the same story,
and the former gives him the cognomen Maximus. Supposing him to be the Fabius we meet with below (2. 134), all the additional knowledge we get of him is, that he was a man of loose character; and one of the Scholiasts (Comm. Crui.) there calls him a ‘jurisconsultus,’—probably invented, Estré says, from the word ‘judice,’ though no two words could be much more different in meaning. But there is nothing certain by which the two can be identified.
15. Si quis Deus,] This is not a Roman way of speaking, but Greek, είς ταύς τις.
‘En ego’ does not belong to ‘faciam,’ but is absolute: ‘Here am I.’ ‘Eia’ is an exclamation of haste, ‘Away!’ ‘Nolint,’ ‘they would not’ (οὐκ ἔθλαοι ἑν), is the apodosis to ‘si quis Deus.’ Compare S. ii.
7. 24: ‘Si quis ad illa deus subito te agat,
usque recusas.’ A small number of MSS.
and editions have ‘nolunt,’ which is clearly wrong. ‘Atqui’ is another form of ‘atquain,’ and ‘quin’ represents ‘qui,’ with a negative particle added.
but not very reverential representation of passion. Heindorf quotes Dem. de F. L.
p. 442: εἰς τὰς ἄγορας πορεύεται θομάδα
τῶν καθιε ἀρχί τῶν αὐτῶν, ἵσα βαίνων
Πυθαλλί, τὸς γνίδους φυσώς.
27. Sed tamen amoto] ‘Sed,’ ‘sed ta-men,’ ‘veruntamen’ are often used, and especially by Cicero, not to express opposition but after a parenthesis or digression, as here and C. iv. 22. See for another instance among many, Cic. in Verr. (ii. 3 2): ‘Atque ego plus oneris habeo quam qui cesteros accusarunt (si id onus appellationum quod cum laetitia feras et voluptate) veruntamen hoc ego amplius suscepi quam ce-teri.’
23. Ille gravem] The cause of that discontent which was spoken of at the begining is here traced to the love of money, each man thinking that his neighbour is getting it faster than he is, and wishing therefore to change places with him. But Horace does not mean that to be the only solution of the universal discontent. That would be absurd, and one at least of his own examples would contradict his theory, the jurisconsultus, who did not pursue his laborious vocation for pay. He therefore shifts or limits his ground a little, and dwells upon that which he supposes to be the most prevalent cause of discontent; and with his ground he changes his examples. There is no reason, therefore, to suspect the reading ‘perfidus hic caupo,’ which has caused the critics a vast deal of trouble ever since Markland first suggested that it was wrong. Before that, the commentators were all satisfied to take Horace as they found him. Orelli has given nine different conjectural readings, not one of which seems to me to have any merit. Fea has found in a few MSS. the word ‘campo’ for ‘caupo,’ but that is not surprising. There are no other variations in the MSS. or Scholiasts, and this gives no sense at all. ‘Nauta’ and ‘mercator’ here are the same person, the trader navigating his own ship. (See C. i. 28, 23, and Intr.). ‘Perfidus caupo’ appears again in ‘cauponibus atque malignis’ (S. i. 5. 4). ‘Per omne Audaces mare qui currunt’ is repeated from C. i. 3, 9, sqq.

32. cibaria: This word, which is generally used for the rations of soldiers or slaves, is used here ironically for the humblest provision that can be made for the latter years of life, as if that was all that these men set before their minds.

33. haud ignara ac non incaua futuri: Experience tells her that times will change, and instinct teaches her to provide against that change; she knows what is coming, and provides accordingly. This is what Horace means; but the ant is torpid in the winter, and lays up no store in her house for that season, though no error is more common than to suppose she does. These animals work hard during the warmer months of the year, but the food they gather is consumed before the winter. ‘Quae’ is opposed to ‘quam te.’ ‘now she.’ ‘Inversum annum’ is compounded of the two notions ‘inversum caelum’ and ‘mutatum annum.’ The sun enters Aquarius in the middle of January. Virgil uses the word ‘contristat’ (Georg. iii. 279): ‘unde nigerrimus Auster Nascitur, et pluvio contristat frigore caculum.’ The MSS. are divided between ‘sapiens’ and ‘patiens.’ The Scholiasts too are divided. Acron had ‘patiens,’ and interpreted it ‘contenta,’ while Porphyrian’s reading, and that of Cruquius’ Commentator, was ‘sapiens.’ The editions before Lambinus I believe, with scarcely any exceptions, have ‘patiens.’ He restored ‘sapiens,’ which Cruquius found in all his MSS., and I have no doubt it is the right word. It suits the context, and corresponds to what Horace says elsewhere (C. iv. 9, 45):

> Nece possidentem multa vocaveris Recte beatum; rectius occupat Nomen beati, qui deorum Muneribus sapienter uti — callet.

The question at issue is not one of patience, but of prudence in the pursuit and the use of wealth, both of which, according to the vulgar error, the ant is famous for. She is one of the “four things which are little upon the earth, but they are exceeding wise”—the ants, the conies, the locusts, and the spiders. (Prov. xxx. 24, sqq.).

39. ignis, mare, ferrum: This is a Furtim defossa timidum deponere terra?

"Quod si comminuas vilem redigatur ad assem."

At ni id fit quid habet pulchri constructus acervus?

Milia frumenti tua triverit area centum,

Non tuus hoc capiet venter plus ac meus: ut si

Reticulum panis venales inter onusto

Forte vahas humero, nihil plus accipias quam

Qui nil portarit. Vel die quid referat intra mere proverbial way of speaking, common to all languages. No obstacles are too great for a man who has a selfish purpose to serve, if he has set his heart upon it. The second person is used to give force to the language. The self-deceiver is confronted with his own illustration.

42. "Furtim" Heindorf and Orelli say this belongs only to 'defossa.' I rather doubt it. 'Defossa deponere terra' cannot be taken too closely together, as Dillenbr. justly remarks.

43. "Quod si comminuat" The miser is supposed to interrupt, and say, "but if you were to take from it, it would soon dwindle to a pastrty 'as.'" Bentley and others put a comma after 'quod,' and make the same person speak the whole. Though 'quod' is always the neuter of the relative, whether it be translated 'that,' 'because,' or 'but,' here it is "used to connect a new sentence with what precedes" (Key's L. G. 1454, i) and is not connected with 'pondus' as its antecedent.

45. "Milia frumenti" 'Modiorum' must be supplied. As to 'millia,' 'mille,' see S. ii. 3, 197, n. On 'area,' see C. i. 1, 18, n. 'Triverit,' 'suppose that it threshes.' On this concessive use of the subjunctive, see Key's L. G. 1227, b. The practice of putting a note of interrogation in such sentences as this is exploded. The older editions generally have it. See Cic. in Verr. Act. ii. 1. 3, c. 2: "Furem aliquem aut rapacem accusaris: vitanda tibi semper erit omnis avaritiae suspicio," &c., with Long's note and Heindorf's on this passage. Similar constructions are S. 10. 64: "Fuerit Lucilius inquam Comis et urbanus; fuerit limator—sed ille," &c. S. 3. 15: "Decies centena dedises—quinque diebus nil erat in loculis." Epp. i. 1. 87: "Lectus genialis in aula est; Nil alt esse prius melius, nil coelibe vita." Epp. i. 6. 29: "Vis recte vivere: quis non?" v. 31, "virtutem verba putes ut lucum ligna: cave ne portus occupet alter." Horace uses 'hoc' for 'propter hanc rem' in other places. S. i. 3. 93:

"Minus hoc jucundus amicus Sit mihi?"

9. 7, "Hic ego, Pluris hoc mihi semper eris." See the passage of Cicero quoted on v. 25. Labminus says that 'hoc' is to be taken εἰκετεύω, "by so much," "verbi gratia, pilo et similibus." I do not agree with him. 'Plus ac' (rather than 'quam,' which was the reading of all the editions except Bersmann's till Bentley, but with little or much less MS. authority) occurs again S. i. 6. 130, "victurum suaviss ac si." S. i. 10. 34, "non ligna feras insanius ac si." S. i. 10. 59, "Mollius ac si quis." S. ii. 3. 270, "Nihil no plus explicit ac si Insanire paret." Cicero likewise uses 'ac' with the comparative (Ad Att. xii. 2), "Diutius abfuturus ac nollem." See Key's L. G. § 1439. 'Plus quam' occurs immediately below. The scene that follows is that of a rich man's household preceding him to the country, a pack of slaves (venales), some carrying provisions and particularly town-made bread in netted bags (reticula), and others with different burthens, and some with none at all. The man who carried the bread would not get any more of it on that account when the rations were given out, but all would share alike.

49. "Quid referat—viventi," This is a very natural construction, and I do not understand Orelli's difficulty about it. 'Referat' is 'rem fert' (Key's L. G. 910), and the construction 'mea,' 'tua,' &c., 'referat,' is no more, as Professor Key shows, than a corruption of 'meam,' 'tuam,' &c., 'rem fert.' So 'magni referat' is 'rem magni fert,' 'it brings with it a matter of great price,' and 'referat viventi' signifies 'it brings something that concerns him who lives,' that is, it affects him, and 'quid referat' is 'wherein does it affect him?' The bounds of nature can only be explained relatively. Artificial wants are natural wants in some conditions of life, but this second nature also has its limits, which there are few that do not transgress who can. The man who can live upon the produce of an hundred acres might live upon fifty and still Naturae fines viventi, jugera centum an Mille aret? "At suave est ex magno tollere acervo."

Dum ex parvo nobis tantundem haurire relinquas, Cur tua plus laudes eumeris granaria nostris?

Ut tibi si sit opus liquidi non amplius urna,

Vel cyatho, et dicas, "Magno de flumine malim

Quam ex hoc fonticulco tantundem sumere."

Eo fit Plenior ut si quos delectet copia justo Cum ripa simul avulsos ferat Aufidus acer.

At qui tantuli eget quanto est opus is neque limo Turbatam haurit aquam neque vitam amittit in undis.

At bona pars hominum decepta cupidine falso, "Nil satis est," inquit; "quia tanti quantum habecis sis."

satisfy the wants of nature, though in some conditions of society, in which the wants of nature become confused with the wants of fashion, he would find it hard to do so; and the fault lies in a great degree, though not entirely, with the social laws or habits which create that difficulty. The case Horace supposes is that of a man who professes to wish to live reasonably, and has greater wealth than a reasonable mode of life requires. What value, he wishes to know, has the surplus for its owner? The supposed answer (introduced as usual by 'at') sounds irrational, and even extravagant, but it is the only solution of avarice in its simple form.

53. cumeris] Acron explains 'cumeris' as a large basket of wicker-work or earthenware like a 'dolium,' in which the poorer sort kept their wheat. He says there was a third sort of vessel of smaller capacity containing five or six 'modii,' called in the Sabine language 'trimodia.' This last piece of information is not worth much.

54. liquidi] This word is used for 'aqua' by Ovid (Met. v. 454): "Cum liquido mixta perfudit diva polenta." By referring to the article 'Sextarius' in Smith's Dict. Ant., it will be found that the 'urna,' one of the Roman liquid measures, contained half an 'amphora,' or twenty-four 'sexstarii.' As observed before (C. iii. 19. 14), the 'cyathus' contained one-twelfth of a 'sexstarius.'

55. malim] All the editions before Bentley had 'mallem,' which he changed to 'malim,' not without MS. authority. Fea, Cunningham, Sanadon, Meincke, and others have the present. 'Malim' simply means 'I would rather;' 'mallem,' 'I would have done it if I could, but the time is past.' Heindorf defends 'malim.' The 'violens Aufidus' (his native river, C. iii. 30. 10) is made to represent the absent or copious stream, because it is Horace's purpose to represent a rapid river as well as a broad. Swinburne ('Travels in the Two Sicilies,' vol. i. p. 165) says of this river, which he visited in the summer of 1778, "there was but little water in it, and that whitish and muddy; but from the wideness of its bed, the sandbanks and buttresses erected to break the force of the stream, it is plain that it still answers to Horace's epithets of fierce, roaring, and violent." See C. iv. 14. 25, n.

59. tantuli eget quanto est opus,] From some unknown MSS. which Laminus says have 'quantum,' Bentley adopts that reading. All the editions before him and all other MSS. have 'quanto.' The nominative 'quantum' is admissible, as Bentley has shown (see also Key's L. Gr. § 909, note), and if the weight and existence of Laminus's MSS. were more certain, there would be something in Bentley's argument (the common one) that the copyists were more likely to change 'quantum' into 'quanto' than, vice versa, the ablative into the nominative. Heindorf has 'quantum,' but has also 'tantum habet' for 'tantuli eget,' which, as he does not notice the reading, seems like a misprint.

Quid facias illi? Jubeas miserum esse libenter
Quatenus id facit; ut quidam memoratur Athenis
Sordidus ac dives, populi comtemnere voce.

Sic solitus: "Populus me sibilat; at mihi plaudo
Ipse domi simul ac nummos contemplor in arca.

Tantalus a labris sistent fugientia captat Flumina . . . Quid rides? mutato nomine de te Fabula narratur: congestis undique saccis
Indormis inhians et tamquam parcare sacris
Cogeris aut pietis tamquam gaudere tabellis.

Nescis quo valeat nummus? quem praebat usum?
Panis ematur, olus, vini sextarius, adde
Quis humana sibi dolet natura negatis.
An vigilare metu examinem, noctesque dicesque
Formidare malos fures, incendia, servos
Ne te compilent fugientes, hoc juvat? Horum Semper ego optarim pauperrimus esse bonorum.

62. tanti quantum habeas sis.] This would appear to have been a rather common proverb. Laminus quotes Plutarch (περὶ filosolouias), ταῦτα γάρ ἵστων ἢ παρα-νοῶσιν· κιρὸις καὶ φείδοις καὶ τοσσοῦτον νῶμις santōn ἀξιῶν ὅσον ἄν ἵχως, which latter words Jacobs (Lect.
Ven. p. 363) has restored thus as taken from some comic poet—

κιρὸις, φείδοις, καὶ τοσσοῦτον γ’ ἀξιῶν νῶμῖς σαυτῶν . . . . . ὅσον ἄν ἵχως.

He had better have left the last verse as it stands in Plutarch, for it is a complete iambic line. Jacobs also refers to Seneca (Ep. 115. 14), "Ubique tanti quiaque quantum habuit fuit," which is taken from a tragic poet of Greece. Two verses of Lucilus are quoted by the Scholast on Juvenal, iii. 143 ("Quantum quisque sua nummorum servat in arca Tantum habet et fidei")—

"Aurum atque ambitio specimen virtutis
ubique est;
Tantum (quantum?) habeas tantum ipse
sies tanticque habitare." 70

63. illi.] ‘Such a man as this,’ but Bentley, taking it to refer to ‘pars,’ reads ‘miseras’ on his own conjecture. Orelli quotes one MS. in its favour. The wonder there is not more. ‘Quatenus’ signifies ‘since,’ not ‘quamdiu,’ as Acron says and others following him. See C. iii. 24. 30.
The story that follows may have been picked up by Horace at Athens or invented by him.
Acron says it refers to Timon, who hating man retired to his money bags for consolation, which is nonsense, and not true;
but Laminus has repeated it.

69. Quid rides?] The miser is supposed to laugh at Horace’s trite illustration and the solemn way it is announced; perhaps, Orelli says, in imitation of some poet of the day, but I think more likely from his own head. "Commendandum est hoc pronun-tiatione" (Acron). "Venusta pronun-tiatione expromenda est" (Porph.), which sufficiently explains the joke. This version of the legend of Tantalus is the one now current, taken from Homer (Odys. xi. 592).
Pindar (Ol. i. 57) and other poets give a different one, that a stone was kept always hanging over and threatening to fall upon him. See Euripides, Orest. v. 5; Lucretius,
ii. 992, sq. See also Epod. xvii. 66, n.

71. tanquam parcere sacris] This apppears to have been a proverbial expression.
Compare Isocrates (Panath. c. 60): τῶν
μὲν γὰρ Ἐλλήνων πόλεων οὕτως αὐτῶς ἀπεχεισάτο σφέρα ἔδειομένων ἤν ὅπερ τοῖς ἐφαιδεῖ τῶς ἐν τοῖς ἱερόις ἀνακεμένων. See also S. ii. 3. 109, sq.: "Nes-cius uti Compositis metuesque velit con-tingere sacris?"

74. sextarius.] See v. 54, n. A ‘sextarius’ of wine would be quite enough for one temperate man’s consumption in a day.

79. pauperrimus—bonorum.] C. iii. 30.
11, "Pauper aquae Daunus." S. ii. 3. 142,
“At si condoluit tentatum frigore corpus, Aut alius casus lecto te adfixit, habes qui Adsideat, fomenta paret, medicum roget ut te Suscitet ac gnatis reddat carisque propinquis.”
Non uxor salvum te vult, non filius; omnes
Vicini oderunt, noti, pueri atque puellae.

Miraris, quum tu argento post omnia ponas,
Si nemo praestet quem non merearis amorem?
An si cognatos, nullo natura labore

Quos tibi dat, retinere velis servareque amicos,
Infelix operam perdas? ut si quis asellum
In Campo doceat parentem currere frenis.

Denique sit finis quaerendi, quomque habeas plus

Pauperiem metuas minus et finire laborem

Incipias, parto quod avebas, ne facias quod
Ummidius quidam; non longa est fabula: dives

“Pauper Opimius argenti positi intus et auri.” ‘Tentatum’ in the next line is the word commonly used in connexion with diseases. See Forcell.

80. At si condoluit] I do not see the necessity for understanding this ironically with Heindorf and others. It seems to be an argument urged by the avaricious man: ‘if you have money you will have anxious friends to nurse you in sickness.’ Orelli puts a (?) after ‘propinqui’s, and supposes the meaning to be, ‘if you are sick well any one nurse you and pray for your recovery? Not one.’ This is not a bad interpretation. But ‘at’ seems to be the introduction of a reply, which use it so often serves.

81. lecto te adfixit.] The old editions nearly all have this reading. Most MSS., and among them those of the Berne, have ‘affixit,’ which Laminbus and Cruiquius adopt, and the former declares the correctness of that reading is not to be doubted. He adopts the same in S. ii. 2. 79. He takes it to have the same meaning here as there, ‘illidere.’ But it is not suitable in either place. Bentley has aptly quoted Seneca (Ep. 67): ‘Ago gratias senectuti quod me lectulo affixit;’ and Cicero (in Verr. Act. ii. l. 5. c. 7): ‘Pater grandis natu jam diu lecto tenebatur.’

85. pueri atque puellae.] This, which appears to be a proverbial sort of expression, occurs again S. ii. 3. 130.

88. An si cognatos.] ‘But say, if you seek to retain and keep the affection of those relations whom nature gives you without any trouble of your own, would you lose your labour, like the luckless fool that tries to turn an ass into a racer?’ ‘Nullo labore’ cannot go with ‘retinere,’ as Dacier and others take it. The position of the words forbid it, and ‘operam perdas’ would have no meaning. ‘Sine labore tuo’ is Porphyrian’s explanation, and ‘gratuitos’ is Acron’s, though he notices the other. ‘At si’ is the redundancy of the Scholiasts, of the old editions, and most MSS. ‘Ac si’ is in others, and Heindorf adopts it. Various other readings have been proposed, but ‘at’ or ‘an’ are the best. Orelli adopts ‘an’ on the authority of his two oldest MSS., those of Berne and St. Galle. With either the sentence should be pointed interrogatively.

Training an ass to run in the Campus Martius among the thorough-bred horses that were there exercised (see C. i. 8. 5; iii. 12. 8) was perhaps a proverbial way of expressing lost labour. ‘Hoc de asino proverbium aut proverbiale est’ (Porph.). ‘Amicos’ belongs to ‘cognatos’ in the way I have translated it.

92. quomque habeas plus.] This is the reading of all the MSS. Some editors have adopted ‘quoque’ on the conjecture of Muretus. Heindorf had that reading. In his last edition it is altered to ‘quomque.’ ‘The more you have you may fear poverty less,’ would be an encouragement to hoarding instead of a dissuasion. What Horace says is, ‘Since you have more than others, you should fear poverty less.’

95. Ummidius quidam;] The ortho-
Ut metiretur nummos; ita sordidus ut se non unquam servo melius vestiret; adusque Supremum tempus, ne se penuria victus Opprimeret metuebat. At hune liberta securi Divisit medium, fortissima Tyndaridarum.

"Quid mi igitur suades? ut vivam Maenius? aut sic Ut Nomentanus?" Pergis pungnentia secum Frontibus adversis componere: non ego avarum ography of this name (for which the coined name Nummidius has been substituted by some to suit the occasion, and Fufidius by others, from the next satire, v. 12) is decided by Bentley from inscriptions and a passage from Varro (de Re Rust. iii. 3), where one of this name is mentioned, who Bentley thinks may be Horace's Ummidius. He also considers that a man so rich must have been very celebrated, and would not have been spoken of as 'a certain Ummidius;' and for this and other reasons he changes 'guidam' into 'qui tam' on his own conjecture, which no MS. has sanctioned, and no editor but Fea that I am aware of has adopted. It confesses the sentence, and is not wanted. As to the notoriety of the person, if the story is true there is no reason to think the name is that of the real hero of it. The end of this worthy was that he was murdered by one of his freed-women (his mistress probably), who Horace says was as stout-hearted as Clytemnestra, the bravest of her family. 'Tyndaridarum' is masculine: 'Tyndaridum' would be the feminine form. The sons of Tyndarus, therefore, as well as his daughters, must be included, as Lambinus, Bentley, and others observe. 'Facias' is equivalent to πρᾶσαιν, 'to fare.'

97. adusque] Forcellini gives only two other instances of this word from writings of Horace's day. Virgil (Aen. v. 262), "Menelaus adusque columnas Exsulat," and Horace himself (S. i. 3. 96), "adusque Bari moenia piscosi." It is only an inversion of 'usque ad,' 'every step to.'

101. ut vicem Maenius.\] The construction is the same as "discinctus aut perdam nepos" (Epod. i. 34), where it has been proposed to insert 'ut' before 'nepos' (see note). Maenius and Nomentanus appear to have been squanderers of money and good livers, according to the obvious meaning of this passage, which the Scholiasts mistaking make Maenius a sordid fellow and Nomentanus a prodigal. They are united again in S. i. 8. 11; ii. 1. 21, where the former appears under the name Pantomus, one who lays his hands on any thing he can get, or borrows money from any who will lend it. He spent his money and turned parasite. This is in accordance with what the Scholiasts Acron and Comm. Cruq. affirm on Epp. i. 15. 26:—

"Maenius ut rebus maternis atque paternis Fortiter absorptus."

But on S. i. 8. 11 they tell a different story, and say that the real name of Pantolamus was Mallius, to which Acron and Porphyryon add Verna, whether as a description or a cognomen is uncertain. Comm. Cruq. for 'Verna' has 'Scurra.' It has been proposed accordingly to change Maenius into Mallius in the above Epistle. (Heusdius, Studia Crit. in C. Lucilium, p. 230). But we had better admit some confusion to exist in the Scholiasts' statements or text. Both Maenius and Nomentanus are names used by Luciliius for characters of the same kind, and Horace may very probably have only borrowed the names to represent some living characters whom he does not choose to point out by their own names. Nomentanus (whom the Scholiasts on this passage call L. Cassius) was the name of one of the guests at Nasidienus' dinner (S. ii. 8. 25), and the Scholiasts tell us a story of the historian Sallust hiring his cook for an enormous sum of money. Cruquius' Commentator (on the passage last quoted) says he was a 'decumanus,' one who farmed the 'decumae,' and therefore an 'eques' (see Cic. in Verr. Act. ii. 1. 2. c. 71, and I. 3. c. 6. Long's notes). He appears again S. ii. 3. 224, sqq. Seneca (de Vit. be. c. 11) compares one of this name with Apicius. Maenius the Scholiasts have confounded with him in whose honour the Maenia column was raised, C. Maenius, the conqueror of the Latins (Livy, viii. 13). Some of the old MSS. have Naevius for Maenius. Cruquius and Fea have that reading.

103. Frontibus adversis componere.\] These words go together, 'to bring face to face, and compare or match.' Some take Quum veto te fieri vappam jubeo ac nebulonem.
Est inter Tanaín quiddam scerumque Viselli.
Est modus in rebus, sunt certi denique fines,
Quos ultra citraque nequint consistere rectum.
Illuc unde abii redeo, nemo ut avarus
Se probet ac potius laudet diversa sequentes,
Quodque aliena capella gerat distantius uber
Tabescat, neque se majori pauperiorum
Tarbare comparat, hunc atque hunc superare laboret.
Sic festinanti semper locupletior obstat,
Ut, quum careeribus missos rapit ungula currus,
Instat equis auriga suos vincentibus, illum
Praeteritum temnens extremos inter euntem.
Inde fit ut raro qui se vixisses beatum
Dicat, et exacto contentus tempore vita
Cedat uti conviva satur, reperire queamus.

‘frontibus adversis’ with ‘pugnantia,’ but that would appear to mean that the man was reconciling two things at issue with one another, which is not Horace’s meaning.
104. vappam] ‘Vappa hic dicitur perditus et luxuriosus, stuitus, insulius, qui nihil sapit; a vino corrupto et evanido quod saporem perdidit. Nebulones autem vani et leves ut nebulae; nam cum sine certo consilio vitam degant nebulis sunt et umbris homini similis.” These are the clear definitions given by Cruquius’ Comment-tor.

105. Tanaín—scerumque Viselli.] All that can be said of these persons now is contained in the words of Porphyrian and Comm. Cruq. The words of the latter are “Tanais spado fuit, Maecenatis libertus; at Viselli socer herniosus;” and Porphyrian adds that some say he was a freedman of L. Munatius Plancus. He also says that Horace has conveyed under these names a well-known Greek proverb.

108. nemo ut avarus] ‘I return to that point from whence I have digressed, how that no covetous man is satisfied with himself.’ I adopt this reading with some misgiving. The hiatus is different from other hiatuses by which Orelli defends it. ‘Nemo’ appears (Fea says) in the Editio Princeps printed at Milan in 1476. It is in the Venetian edition of 1463, and some of Cruquius’ MSS., and some others referred to by Fea. The best MS. reading is ‘nemon’; which would imply that Horace had broken out again, as at the first, “can it be that no covetous man, &c.” That does not read pleasantly. But Lambinus, Bentley, Fea, Heindorf, and many others have ‘nemon’; and Heindorf argues, from the harshness of the transition, that the Satire is an early production;—a bad argument. Other readings there are, as ‘nemo ut sit avarus’ (which was that of the Scholiasts), ‘qui nemo ut avarus’; but they do not give a clear meaning. ‘Redeamus,’ or ‘redeundum,’ would get rid of the difficulty; but they have no authority. I do not agree with Dillenbr., that the fear of the hiatus in this place which has led to the above corrections is “ineptus timor.”
I do not like it at all. Horace qualifies the general assertion he made at the outset
by limiting his remark to the avaricious.
See note on v. 28; and on ‘laued’ see v. 3.

110. Quodque aliena capella] This Por-phyrian calls a proverbial saying, quoting Ovid (A. A. i. 349):

“Fertilio seges est alienis semper in agris;
Vicinumque pescusgrandius uber ha-bet.”

114. Ut, quum careeribus] See Introduction.

119. Cedat uti conviva satur.] These are so like the words of Lucretius (iii. 951), that perhaps Horace remembered them
when he wrote—

“Cur non ut plenus vitae conviva recedis,
Aequo animoque capis secum, stulte,
quiem?“
Jam satis est. Ne me Crispini scrinia lippi Compilasse putes, verbum non amplius addam.

120. Crispini scrinia lippi] Crispinus serves as a deus ex machina, and helps Horace to bring his homily to an end. But we know nothing about him. The fertility of his pen, as Estré observes, has profited him nothing. He was more anxious to write much than to write well.

"Crispinus minimo me provocat: accipe; si vis
Accipiam tabulas; detur nobis locus, hora,
Custodes; videamus uter plus scribere possit."  (S. i. 4. 14, sqq.)

The Scholiasts say he was called 'aretalogus,' and that he wrote verses on the Stoic doctrines. The word 'aretalogus' occurs in Juvenal (S. xv. 16: "mendax aretalogus"), and in Sueton. (Octav. c. 74), where Casaubon has this note: "vox est Romae nata: et ni fallor Crispino illi primum attributa haec appellatio." Suetonius introduces these 'aretalogi' along with the lower sort of actors, and it appears that they were a sort of jester, who affected to discourse upon the Stoic doctrines of virtue, and made mirth for the rich. They were kept by the wealthy to amuse them as the court fools of later days. In this character Crispinus appears in the third Satire of this book (v. 130), where he is the only attendant of the would-be 'rex.' Crispinus appears again in S. ii. 7. 45. That he may have been called in contempt 'aretalogus' is not impossible. That he was actually a person of that grade is not likely. That he wrote as a Stoic may be true, but it is only gathered probably from this passage, riches being a favourite topic with the philosophers of that sect. Bentley cannot endure the reading of all the MSS., Scholiasts, and editions, 'lippi.' Horace (says he) was himself afflicted with sore eyes, and he was not so wanting in decency as to ridicule another person for that defect. This argument against all authority is not worth discussing. The reader may refer to Cunningham, Anim. c. xi. p. 165. Persius has 'lippus' twice for the mental blindness which, as Cruquius' Commentator says, is what Horace means to charge upon Crispinus. See Pers. (S. i. 79): "Hos pueris monitus patres infundere lippos." And S. v. 77: "Vappa et lippus, et in tenui farragine mendax." Persius was an imitator of Horace.
SATIRE II.

This Satire appears to have been written on the death of Tigellius, a musician of great repute, who, as we learn from the opening verse of the next Satire, was on terms of familiar intimacy with C. Julius Caesar. The Scholiasts who call him M. Hermogenes Tigellius say that he afterwards became a favourite with Cleopatra, and then again with Augustus. Acron says Horace quarrelled with him because he found fault with the rhythm of his verses. It is probable that this Tigellius is miscalled M. Hermogenes, and that this name belongs only to another Tigellius who was also a singer mentioned in S. 3. 129; 4. 72; 9. 25; 10. 18, 80, 90. These persons had never been separated till Dacier distinguished between them. Heindorf adheres to the old opinion, which I think has been satisfactorily disposed of by Kirchner in his treatise "De Utroque Tigellio" (Quaest. Hor. p. 42, sqq.). The Tigellius of this Satire is called Sardus, a Sardinian, in the next (v. 3). It appears from the Scholiasts that he was attacked by Licinius, from whom they quote this verse: "Sardi Tigeili putidum caput venit." He was probably therefore a libertinus. Cicero had a quarrel with this person, whose influence with Caesar was such that it made him rather anxious, though he affects in some of his letters to hold the man cheap. Compare Epp. ad Fam. vii. 24. Ad Att. xiii. 49, 50, and 51. He too alludes to Licinius' verse, and calls Tigellius "hominem pestilentiorum patria sua (the climate of Sardinia was counted very bad) addictum jam dudum Calvi Licinii Hipponacteo praeconio" (Ad Fam. l. c.). The character of Tigellius is drawn cleverly in the opening verses of the next Satire.

The statement of the Scholiasts on v. 25 of this Satire, that some supposed (so Porph. and Comm. Cruq. put it; Acron says at once "Maecenatem tangit") that, under the name Malchimus, Horace means to satirize Maecenas, seems to me unworthy of the least credit. But it has had warm defenders, and upon this assumption the date of the Satire is fixed, both Kirchner and Franke placing it in a.u.c. 714, in order to allow sufficient time between the composition of the libel, and the introduction of Horace to his patron. I will not trouble the reader by going into the argument, except to say that, if the libel was keen enough to offend, it is as improbable Horace would have published as that he would have written it, after his introduction to Maecenas; and if (as appears to me) there is nothing to offend in the verse, it was as probably written after as before their acquaintance began. But I do not believe Maecenas had any thing to do with the verse at all. An early date must be assigned to the Satire, because it certainly preceded the 4th, and that again was composed before the 10th of this Book. Whether the coarseness of the ideas and language, and the want of artistic arrangement and connexion, may not be an argument for an early date, deserves consideration. (See Introduction to S. 4.) It is without exception the coarsest of all Horace's Satires, and, with reference to the point it professes to turn upon, the least to the purpose. I can trace no connexion between the text which is contained in v. 24 ("fools trying to avoid one class of vices run into their opposites") and the licentious language and advice contained in the latter half of the Satire, which in brief amounts to this: 'do not let a false ambition lead you into intriguing with married women, but make yourself happy with prostitutes.' The examples which appear to be to the purpose are not so in reality. Tigellius, we may be sure, did not give his money to harlots and impostors in order to avoid the character of a miser; nor did Fufadius drive hard usurious bargains, cheat young men with good expectations, and deny and torment himself, in order to avoid the charge of extravagance. If one man wore his tunic down to his ancles it was because he was slovenly or effeminate;
if another tucked his up so as to expose his person, it was because he was an immodest fellow; the man who smelt of perfumes was a coxcomb; and he who stank like a goat was dirty and offensive by nature or habit, or both. It was not in either case because the man was trying to avoid the opposite extreme. Each man follows his own taste and propensities, whether it be in such cases or in the quality of his amours; and the instances in no way bear out the promise of the text. It is difficult, indeed, to see how they grow out of it at all.

Ambubaiaarum collegia, pharmacopolea, Mendici, mimaee, balatrones, hoc genus omne

1. Ambubaiaarum collegia.] The reduction of Syria to the condition of a Roman province (A.U.C. 589), while it opened to the Romans the trade of the East, was the means of introducing into Italy many evils from the same quarter; among others, the class of women known by the above name, of whom Acron and Comm. Crucq. say that they were so called in the Syrian language, from an instrument of music they played upon: “et enim lingua eorum tibia sive symphonia ambubaia dicitur.” These women, whose profession was that of prostitutes, Horace speaks of jocularly as if they had formed themselves into colleges or clubs such as at this time were very common in Rome, some sanctioned by law, others not. (See art. ‘Collegium,’ in Smith’s Dict. Ant.) Juvenal refers to these women in his third Satire (v. 62, sqq.):

“Jam pridem Syrus in Tiberim defluxit Orontes, Et linguum, et mores, et cum tibicine chordas Obliquas, nec non gentilia tympana secum Vexit, et ad Circum jussas prostare pul- las.”

Pharmacopolea,] These were itinerant dealers in nostrums and vendors of medicines, who were to be seen in the forum and all places of public resort. They do not appear to have got much custom. M. Cato, in his speech against M. Caelius, inveighs against him as an inveterate talker, and says he was so greedy of speech that he would hire people to listen to him; and that you rather heard than listened to the man, like a ‘pharmacopola’ who could make his voice heard, but no sick person ever thought of putting himself into his hands. (Gellius, N. A. i. 15.) Cicero (pro Cluent. i. 4) makes mention of one L. Clodius, of Anema, who practised this trade. Such persons may now be seen in the streets of Paris with a cart and horse and a man to make music. They will stop at fit places, make their music or their speech, give advice, hand out pills and other medicines, receive their money, and move on.

2. Mendici.] This word includes beggars of all sorts, of whom a great variety appeared as religious mendicants, priests for instance of Isis or of Cybele (known by the Greeks under the title of μητραγόραι) and Jews, who made gain of their law, inventing charms perhaps from it, and persuading the foolish to purchase phylacteries. Juvenal mentions this class of beggars in his sixth Satire (v. 543, sqq.): “Araeam Judaeae trenses mendicat in aurem Interpres legum Solymarum.” There were also fortune-tellers in abundance all over the town. See C. i. 11, Introd. Street musicians were as common and as discordant at Rome as among ourselves. Of jugglers likewise there were swarms, and many other sorts of impostors.

Mimaee,] The regular actors at Rome, as in Greece were men; but the dancing and pantomimic parts were sustained also by women. Horace mentions one of this class named Arbuscula (S. i. 10. 76), who was a celebrated ‘mima’ in Cicero’s time (Ad Att. iv. 15, written A.U.C. 790): “quaeris nunc de Arbuceula. Valde placuit. Ludi magnifici et grati.” As might be expected, they were persons of loose character, as the woman Origo mentioned below (v. 55), and the before-mentioned Arbucula, and the woman Cytheris, whom M. Antonius carried about with him under the name of Volumnia ( Cic. ad Att. x. 10; Phil. ii. 24).

Balatrones,] The meaning and etymology of this word are hopeless lost. Crucquius’ Scholiast gives three different derivations; from Servilius Balatro (mentioned S. ii. 8. 21), who, as Forcellini observes, more probably got his name from the species than the species from him; ‘a balatu,’ from an affected ridiculous way of speaking, which is against prosody; ‘a blatiendo,’ from their senseless babble; and some he says read ‘barathrones,’ as from ‘barathrum,’ because they were glutinous livers who devourd their substance, according to Ho-Maestum ac sollicitum est cantoris morte Tigelli. Quipe benignus erat. Contra hic, ne prodigus esse
Dicatur metuens, inopi dare nolit amico
Frigus quo duramque famem propellere possit.
Hune si perconteris avi eur atque parentis
Praeclaram ingrata stringat malus ingluvie rem,
Omnia conductis coëmens obsonia nummis,
Sordidus atque animi quod parvi nolit haberi,
Respondet. Landatur ab his, culpatur ab illis.
Fufidius vappae famam timet ac nebulonis,
Dives agris, dives positis in fenore nummis:
Quinas hic capiti mercedes exsecat atque race's expression "barathrunque macelli" (Epp. i. 15. 31). It is not necessary to go so far back as the age of the Scholiasts to get at least as good guesses as the meaning as these. Festus derives the name from 'blatea,' which he says signifies mud that sticks to the shoes in dirty weather. (See Forc.lli.) There are no means of arriving at a nearer interpretation than that of the Scholiasts, who say Horace means profligate and abandoned persons in general. See note on S. ii. 3. 166.

6. propellere] The greater part of the MSS. favour this reading, as Bentley admits, though he reads 'depellere.' I think 'propellere' is the least likely of the two to have been substituted. Cicero (de Finibus, iv. 25) says, 'Vacemus an crucie-mur dolore; frigus famem propulsare nee possimus;' and Tacitus (Ann. xiv. 24):
"Carne pseudum propulsare famem adact,' which comes very near to 'propellere,' as Bentley admits. Ven. (1463) has 'propell-ere.' Nearly all the editions of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries have the other word. There is not much to choose between them. Orelli's three Berne and St. Galle MSS. have 'propellere.'
6. ingrata stringat malus ingluvie rem
"Ingrata: sine gratia: quia quiquid ei proestiteris gratiam tibi habere non potest.
Ingluvies autem dictur voraxitas grossa.
(Acron.)' An ungrateful belly is an insatiaable one. So Lucretius uses the word (iii.
1016):
"Deinde animi ingrata natum pascere
semper,
Atque explere bonus rebus satiareque nun-quam."
'Stringat' is variously interpreted. Forcellini says it is 'paullatim absumere.' Orelli adopts the interpretation of Cruquius' Schol-liast, who says the metaphor is taken from the stripping of trees of their leaves. But 'stringere' means 'to grasp,' and Horace says this man put all his estate in his belly.
9. conductis—nummis.] This is not a common use of 'conductus,' for 'foenori sumptus.' Juvenal has it (S. xi. 46):
"Conducta pecunia Romae Et coram domnis consumitur." The opposite term to 'conducere,' 'locare,' is only once found in this connexion (Plaut. Mostell. iii. 1. 4):
"locare argenti nemini nummum quo
'Animi parvi' corresponds to 'inopis pusil-lisque animi' in S. 4. 17.
12. Fufidius] Of this person the Schol-liasts tell us nothing but what the Satire tells, that he was 'avarus quidam foenerator.' What resemblance Orelli can see between this person and the Fufidius referred to by Cicero in his speech against Piso (c. 35) it is hard to imagine. The words 'vappa' and 'nebul'o have been explained above (S. 1. 104).
14. Quinas hic capiti mercedes exsecat
He contrived to squeeze out of the principal of the money he lent interest at 60 per cent. by the year,—that is, 5 per cent.
by the month, which was five times the legal rate. 'Centesima,' or 1 per cent. by the month, was the regular rate of interest at this time; and 'quinas' means 'quinas centesimas.' Verres lent public money on his own account to the 'publicani' in Sicily
'bini centesimas,' which was double the usual rate (Cic. in Verr. ii. 3. 70). That was bad enough. Juvenal (ix. 7) mentions a man who was ready to give 'triplicem usuram,' but found no one foolish enough to trust him. Fufidius contrived to get this enormous interest ("sanguinolentas
SATIRARUM I. 2. 339

Quanto perditior quisque est tanto acrius urget; 15
Nomina sectatur modo sumpta veste virili Sub patribus duris tironum. Maxime, quis non, Juppiter! exclamat simul atque audivit? At in se
Pro quae estu sumptum facit hic. Vix credere possis
Quam sibi non sit amicus, ita ut pater ille Terenti
Fabula quem miserum gnato vixisse fugato
Inducet non se pejus cruciaverit atque hic.
Si quis nunc quaerat, Quo res habe pertinet? illuc:
Dum vitant stulti vitia in contraria currunt.
Maltinus tunicis demissis ambulat; est qui usuras,' as Seneca says, Benef. vii. 10) out of men of loose lives, and young persons under age. Persons under twenty-five were protected by the 'lex Plaetorla' (not 'Laettorla,' as the Scholiasts and others have it) from the consequences of their own act if they were enticed into any engagement of this oppressive kind. Suetonius, in a fragment preserved in Priscian, says of this law, 'vetabat illa minorem annis xxv stip-pularl'; but that can only mean that it gave such persons power of escaping from fraudulent transactions into which they had been trepanned, and punished those who had cheated them; for the power of making contracts was possessed by every Roman citizen after he had attained the age of puberty. (See Smith's Dict. Ant., art.

'Curator.') As to 'nomina' see C. iii. 21. 5.
'Nomina sectatur,' &c. means that he seeks to get into his books boy about fifteen or sixteen whose fathers were strict with them, and did not allow them so much pocketmoney as they wished for. He was a bold man to begin with them so early, for at any time till they were twenty-five they might claim the protection of the above-mentioned law. 'Tiro,' which in military language signified a recruit, and therefore one who was not under seventeen, was applied also to youths who had lately taken the 'toga virilis,' which act was called 'tirocinium ferti,' the boy's introduction to public life.
18. At in se Pro quae estu] And yet he (or his friends) will say that he spends his money largely in proportion to his gains.
Not so, says Horace; you would scarcely credit the way in which he pinches himself.
20. pater ille] Menodenus in Terence's play Heautontimorumenos.
25. Maltinus] I do not feel competent to decide upon the orthography of this name. The MSS. and editions vary between three, Maltinus, Malthinus, and Malchinnus.

Of these the first is the only historical name, having been the surname, according to Justin (xxxvii. 3), of Manlius, who went as ambassador to Mithridates. This is of no great importance, for Horace did not confine himself to real names, though Madvig (Opusc. 74) says he did. The oldest Berne MS. has Maltinus, and Orelli adopts it. The Scholiasts had Maltinus, which is Heindorfl's reading. Judging from Fea's list and Bentley's assertion, the majority of MSS. have Malchins. That is the reading of Ven. (1483) and nearly all the earliest editions. Bentley adopts it against Malthus, which was the common reading at that time. He derives it from Malchus, which was an eastern name, or a corruption of one. The Scholiasts unanimously say that the name is derived from malalt&acgr;
and that Horace alludes to Maecenas because he was said to wear his tunic long, a sign of effeminacy as it was generally regarded; but in his case it was, says Acron, to hide varicose veins with which he was troubled. That Maecenas was spoken of as effeminate in his habits is sufficiently well known, and the circumstance of his wearing long tunics is mentioned by Seneca
(Ep. cxiv. § 6): "Hunc esse qui solutis tunics in urbe semper incessit? nam etiam quum absentis Caesaris partibus fungeretur signum a discincto petebatur;' and by the unknown author of the elegy on his death:—

"Quod discinctus eras animo quoque, carpitum unam,
Diluitur nimia simplicitate tua.
Sic illi vixere quibus fuit aurea virgo,
Quae bene praecinctos postmodio pulsa
fugit.
Invide, quid tandem tunicae nocuere
solutae?
Aut tibi ventosi quid nocuere sinus?"

z 2
Inguen ad obscoenum subductis usque facetus;
Pastillos Rufillus olet, Gargonius hircum.
Nil medium est. Sunt qui nolint tetigisse nisi illas Quarum subsuta talos tegat instita veste;
Contra alius nullam nisi olenti in fornice stantem.
Quidam notus homo cum exiret fornice, "Macte Virtute esto," inquit sententia dia Catonis.
Nam simul ac venas inflavit tetra libido
Huc juvenes aequum est descendere, non alienas

Cicero charges Verres with the same effeminacy: "Quum iste cum palio purpureo talarique tunica versaretur in convivis muliebris, non offendeabant homines" (Act. ii. i. 5, c. 12). A great deal has been written upon the identification of Maecenas with this person (whatever the name may have been), and of Agrippa with the opposite character in the next verse. But either notion appears to me equally improbable. See Introduction. The idea of Maecenas being the strutting coxcomb of Horace's Satire is incredible (see below, v. 64). The tunic was worn down to a little below the knees by civilians not entitled to wear the 'latus clavus;' women wore it down to the ankles; military officers not so low as the knee (see Quintil. xi. 3. 138). 'Facetus' is what we might call 'fine.' Plautus applies it to dining as Horace to dressing (Mostell. i. 1. 41):—

"Non omnes possunt olere unguenta exotica
Si tu oles,
Neque tam facitis quam tu vivis victibus."

27. Pastillos Rufillus olet. 'Pastillus' is a diminutive of 'panis,' and signifies a small roll; whence in a derived sense it came to mean small balls of perfume of some sort. Horace quotes this verse of his own in S. 4. 92 of this book, as showing the harmless quality of his satire. Who Rufillus and Gargonius (which name appears as Gargones in the old editions; may have been we cannot tell. Bentley identifies the latter with a person of the same name mentioned by the elder Seneca in his book Suasoriorum (c. vii.) as an indifferent orator. That they were persons of some note Orelli infers from the fact that Horace's ridicule of them had made him enemies, as appears from the passage quoted above from the fourth Satire. But it does not appear that in that place Horace means more than to illustrate the inoffensive character of his satirical writings, nor can Orelli's inference I think be sustained. Rufillus is probably only a diminutive of the common name Rufus, invented for this fop, though we meet with the name Rufilna in Tacitus (Ann. iii. 36).

29. Quarum subsuta] The ordinary dress of the Roman ladies was an under tunic without sleeves, called 'intusium;' over this they wore another tunic called 'stola,' at the bottom of which ran a flounce, 'instita,' called by one of the Scholiasts (Com. Crug.) 'tessinissa fasciola' (which description of its width, however, has been disputed. See Becker's Gallus, Exc. 'on the dress of the women'). The 'stola' was longer than the person, and after forming several folds under the breast, fell to the feet. 'Instita veste subsuta' is for 'instita subsuta vesti.' The same Scholiast says the 'instita' was called by the Greeks πιπειδον. Out of doors the women wore a 'palla' corresponding to the male 'toga.' See S. 8. 23, n.

31. Macte Virtute esto. In this phrase (for examples of which see Forcell.) 'macte,' the vocative of 'mactus' ('magis auctus') is put where the nominative would be more regular, and 'virtute' is the ablative of the means. 'May thy virtue prosper thee!' (see Key's L. G. 1004). 'Sententia dia Catonis' is equivalent to 'Cato divino sapiens.' Compare S. ii. 1. 72: "Virtus Scipiaedae et mitis sapientia Laeli," and C. i. 3. 36, n. Acron tells this story: that Cato (the elder) was passing the door of a brothel, when a young man (who, according to Horace was 'notus homo,' a man of rank or standing in some way) came out: when he saw Cato he tried to get out of his way, but the censor called to him and commended him; but afterwards seeing him, often issuing from the same place, he said, "Adolescens, ego te landavi tanquam interdum huc venires non tanquam hic habi- tares." The reason of his commendation is explained in the two next verses on very loose principles of chastity.
Audire est operae pretium, procedere recte
Qui moechos non vultis, ut omni parte laborent;
Utque illis multo corrupta dolore voluptas,
Atque haec rara, cadat dura inter saepe pericla.
Hic se praecipitem tecto dedit; ille flagellis
Ad mortem caesus; fugiens hic decidit acerem
Praedonum in turbam; dedit hic pro corpore nummos;
Hunc perminxerunt calones; quin etiam illud
Accidit, ut quidam testes caudamque salacem
Demeteret ferro. Jure omnes; Galba negabat.
Tutor at quanto merx est in classe secunda,
Libertinarum dico, Sallustius in quas
Non minus insanit quam qui moechatur. At hic si
Qua res, qua ratio suaderet, quaque modeste
Munifico esse licet, vellet bonus atque benignus
Esse, daret quantum satís esset nec sibi damno
Dedecorique foret. Verum hoc se amplectitur uno,

36. Cupiennius] This person is identified by the Scholiasts with one C. Cupiennius Libo of Cumae, a favourite of Augustus, without any probability. The name, according to them, and in the old editions, was Cupennius. Lambinus and most editors after him have Cupiennius. As to "albi," see v. 63, n. 33.
38. Qui moechos non vultis.] Most of the MSS., and editions have the dative "moechis." But the accusative is found in the following verses of Ennius, quoted by the Scholiasts, from which these are closely imitated:—
"Andire est operae pretium procedere recte Qui rem Romanam Latiumque augescere vultis."

46. Jure omnes; Galba negabat.] 'Every one else said they richly deserved it: Galba said nay.' This person, whom the Scholiasts call a "jurisconsultus," is by most modern interpreters, following Torquemius (to whom Weichert, quoted by Orelli as the author of the notion, was indebted for it), identified with A. Galba, a parasite of Augustus of loose character, of whom Plutoarch tells a well-known anecdote in regard to Maecenas' partiality for his wife (Erot. c. 16). Having little regard for his own honour as a husband, he thought, Horace says, that the retribution described in the preceding verses was more than the crime deserved. This man is apparently the Galba mentioned by Juvenal (S. v. 3 sq.):—
"Si potes illa pati quae nec Sarmentus iniquas Caesars ad mensas nec vilis Galba tulisset."
The name therefore seems to have become proverbial.
47. classe secunda.] Servius Tullius divided the men into classes, and Horace does the same with the women, as Torquemius says. He is wrong however in referring 'tutor' to the legal consequences of adultery arising out of the 'lex Julia de adulteris,' which was not in existence when this Satire was written.
48. Sallustius in quas] On Sallustius Crispus, see C. i. 2. What Horace says of him is this: If he chose to be liberal to that extent that his means and good sense would suggest, without any extravagant munificence, he might give to the needy and not injure or disgrace himself, that is, he would gain credit by it; whereas he is content to pride himself on this one merit, that he does not meddle with married women. 'Hoc' (v. 54) is 'on this account,' and 'se' is governed by each of the three verbs.
Hoc amat et laudat: "Matronam nullam ego tango."
Ut quondam Marsaeus, amator Originis ille,
Qui patrium mimae donat fundumque laremque,
"Nil fuerit mi," inquit, "cum uxoribus unquam alienis."
Verum est cum mimis, est cum meretricibus, unde
Fama malum gravius quam res trahit. An tibi abunde
Personam satis est, non illud quidquid ubique
Officit evitare? Bonam deperdere famam, Rem patris oblimare, malum est ubicunque. Quid inter Est in matrona, ancilla, pecesene togata?
Villius in Fausta Sullae gener, hoc miser uno
Nomine deceptus, poenas dedit usque superque
Quam satis est, pugnis caesus ferroque petitus,
Exclusus fore cum Longarenus foret intus.
Huic si mutonis verbis mala tanta videntis Diceret haec animus: "Quid vis tibi? namquid ego a te Magno prognatum deposeo console cunnum Velatumque stola mea cum conserbuit ira?"
Quid responderet? "Magnus patre nata puella est."

55. Marsaeus, amator Originis] Origo, the mima, is referred to above (v. 2, n.). Of Marsaeus, her lover, we know nothing even from the Scholiasts. As Estré observes, the name is not Latin. It appears to be a fictitious name.

62. oblimare,] Forcellini derives this from 'lima,' and renders it to waste or wear away. The word does not occur in this sense elsewhere. Its more probable derivation is from 'linus,' and its signification is to bury in the mud. 'Ubicunque' means 'wherever you do it.'

63. ancilla pecesene togata? ] While women of birth wore the 'stola' and 'instita' mentioned above (v. 29), freedwomen wore the 'stola' without the 'instita,' and 'meretrixes' wore a 'toga' instead of a 'stola,' which explains the text. 'Ancilla' is a female slave, and I do not think Orelli is right in taking it with 'toga.' There are three persons, the 'matrona,' the 'ancilla,' and the 'toga' or 'meretrix.' Cruiquius' Scholiast relates that ladies divorced for adultery were compelled to exchange the 'stola' for the 'toga,' the only difference between them and common prostitutes being that they wore a white, while the latter wore a dark-coloured 'toga.' This is confirmed by v. 36, and Martial, ii. 39:

"Coccina famosae donas et Ianthina moechar.
Vis dare quae meruit munera? mitte togam."

Also "matrisque togatae filius" (Mart. vi. 64. 4). See Becker's Gallus (1.c. on v. 29).

64. Villius in Fausta Sullae gener, ] The preposition is here used as in Tacitus (Ann. iii. 24), "D. Silanus in nepiti Augusti adulter." Fausta was the daughter of Sulla, and a woman of infamous character, like her mother Metella (see S. ii. 2. 239, n.). The husband of Fausta was Annius Milo, and the Scholiast Acron says that Villius is put for Annius, as Malchinius for Maecenas (see above, v. 23), Licinia for Terentia (see C. ii. 12, Introduction). But, as Bentley rightly observes, Horace is not speaking of husbands here. He adds also, that if any name were to be supposed concealed under Villius it would be Fulvius, for Macrobius (Sat. ii. 2) relates that Fausta had a lover of that name. Ciceró (Ad Fam. ii. 6) speaks of one Villius, an intimate friend of Milo's. Horace calls him ironically Sulla's son-in-law, because of his intimacy with his daughter. Longarenus may be any body. The Scholiasts' notion that Milo was meant is absurd. 'Fore' is the ablative of 'foris.'
At quanto meliora monet pugnantiique istis
Dives opis natura suae, tu si modo recte
Dispensare velis ac non fugienda petendis
Immiscere. Tuo vitio rerumne labores
Nil referre putas? Quare ne peoniteat te Desine matronas sectarier, unde laboris
Plus haurire mali est quam ex re decerpere fructus.
Nec magis huic inter niveos viridesque lapillos (Sit licet hoc, Cerinthe, tuum) tenerum est femur aut crus Rectius, atque etiam melius persaepae togatae est.
Adde huc quod merceem sine fucis gestat, aperte
Quod venale habet ostendit, nec si quid honesti est
Jactat habetque palam, quaerit quo turpia celet.
Regibus hic mos est: ubi equos mercantur opertos
Inspiciunt, ne si facies ut saepe decora
Moll fulta pede est emptorem inducat hiantem,
Quod pulchrae clunes, breve quod caput, ardua cervix.
Hoc illi recte: ne corporis optima Lycei
Contemplere oculis, Hypsaea caecior illa
Quae mala sunt speces. O crus! o brachia! Verum Depugis, nasuta, brevi latere ac pede longo est.
Matronae praeter faciem nil cernere possis,
Cetera, ni Catia est, demissa veste tegentis.
Si interdicta petes, vallo circumdata (nam te Hoc facit insanum), multae tibi tum officient res,
Custodes, lectica, ciniflones, parasitae,
Ad talos stola demissa et circumdata palla,
Plurima quae inuideant pure apparere tibi rem.
Alter a nil obstat: Cois tibi paene videre est
Ut nudam, ne crure malo, ne sit pede turpi;

81. This part of the Satire is rather obscure, partly from the variation of the MSS. I hope I shall not be considered over fadditious if I decline entering upon the merits of the several readings. The passage may very well be left in the obscurity in which we find it.

86. Regibus] See note on C. i. 4. 14. In some MSS. this line is the beginning of a new satire.

91. Hypsaea caecior illa ] To this woman Porphyryon gives the name Placia, or, as it should be, Plota or Plantia. We know no more of her than what the text tells us, that she was blind. Of Catia Cruquius' Scholiast tells us an anecdote in confirmation of her shameless impurity, which appears to have been proverbial, as Hypsaea's blindness seems also to have been.

98. ciniflones, ] These persons' business was to heat the women's curling irons, and they were otherwise called 'cinerarii.' The name is compounded of 'cinis ' and 'flare.' 'Parasitae' were what we should call 'toadies,'—women who made themselves agreeable to ladies of wealth, and attached themselves to them as companions.

Metiri possis oculo latus. An tibi mavis
Insidias fieri pretiumque avellier ante
Quam mercem ostendi? "Leporem venator ut alta
In nive sectetur, positum sic tangere nolit," Cantat et apponit: "Meus est amor huic similis; nam Transvolat in medio posita et fugientia captat."
Hiscine versiculis speras tibi posse dolores Atque aestus curasque graves e pectore pelli?
Nonne cupidinibus statuat natura modum quem,
Quid latura sibi quid sit dolitura negatum,
Quaerere plus prodest et inane abscondere soldo?
Num tibi cum fauces urit sitis auroa quavis
Pocula? num esuiriens fastidis omnia praeter
Pavonem rhombumque? Tument tibi eum inguina, num si
Ancilla aut verna est praesto puer impetus in quem
Continuo fiat malis tentigine rumpi?
Non ego: namque parabilem amo venerem facilemque.
Gallis, hanc Philodemus ait sibi quae neque magno
Stet pretio neque cunctetur cum est justa venire.
Candida rectaque sit; munda hactenus ut neque longa
Nec magis alba velit quam dat natura videri.
Haec ubi supposuit dextra corpus mihi laevum
Ilia et Egeria est: do nomen quodlibet illi,
Nec vereor ne dum futuo vir rure recurrat,

105. Leporem venator] These four lines are taken from an epigram of Callimachus, which appears to have been a popular song:—

110. Gallis, hanc Philodemus ait] The Galli, or priests of the Galatian Cybele, whose worship was introduced into Rome from Pessinus during the second Punic War (Liv. xxix. 11, 14; Juv. ii. 116; vi. 513; Ovid Fast. iv. 361), were eunuchs. The construction is "Hic Philodemus ait Gallis, hanc sibi." Philodemus was a Greek and an Epicurean. He lived at Rome on terms of great intimacy with L. Piso, against whom there is an oration of Cicero. Philodemus wrote poetry, and some of the epigrams in the Anthology are his. Cicero describes him (in Platin. c. 28) as "ingeniosum hominem atque eruditum." "Est autem hic (he continues) non philosophia solum sed etiam litteris, quod fere ceteros Epicureos negligere dicunt, perpoptum. Poema porro facit ita festivum, ita concinnum, ita elegans, nihil ut fieri possit argutos." He charges Philodemus with having corrupted the mind of Piso.
Janua frangatur, latret canis, undique magno
Pulsa domus strepitu resonet, vepallida lecto
Desiliat mulier, miseram se conscia clamet,
Cruribus haec metuat, doti deprensa, egomet mi.
Discineta tunica fugiendum est ac pede nudo,
Ne nummi percant aut puga aut denique fama.
Depredi miserum est; Fabio vel judice vincam.

129. vepallida] On this Bentley has a long note and edits 'ne pallida,' which spoils the rapid accumulation of images from which the passage derives its expression. So does that of Acron, 'vae pallida,' adopted by Fea. 'Ve' in composition seems to have the force of 'male.' See Forcell., 'Vesclus.' Gellius (v. 12) says it has the force 'augendae rei et minuendae,' which force 'male' has; as in 'male laxus calceus' (S. i. 2. 31), 'male raurus' (4. 66), it strengthens, while in 'male sanus' it takes away the force of the adjective. Persius (S. i. 97, 'vegrandi subere coctum') is quoted in support of 'vepallida;' but the reading and sense are both doubtful there: 'praegrandi' appears in some editions and MSS., and 'vegrandi' may mean small, even if that be the reading. 'Vepallida' has the support of the best MSS., and is a legitimate word.

130. conscia] The 'ancilla' who was privy to her mistress' adultery. Torture by breaking the legs was not unusual in the case of slaves. 'Deprensa' means the mistress caught in her crime, who feared for her portion, of which she was liable to lose a considerable part: one-sixth might be retained by the husband, and two-sixths for the children; but not more than three-sixths could be taken away, if (which is doubtful) this law existed when Horace wrote. If not, we do not know the particulars of the law that then affected such cases; but that adultery involved the forfeiture of part of the 'dos,' is clear from the text. (See Ulpian. Fr. Tit. de Dot. vi. 12).

134. Fabio vel judice vincam.] As to Fabius, see note on the fourteenth verse of the last satire.
SATIRE III.

Horace appears to have brought enemies upon himself by the last Satire, and perhaps by others, which have not been published. His amiable temper was not very well qualified for that sort of writing, and we may infer from the present poem that he wished to clear himself from the imputation of a censurable spirit, and so to set himself right with Maecenas and his friends. The connexion between the two Satires is seen in the opening of this, in which Tigellius is again introduced and the peculiarities of his character described, for no other reason, as it would seem, but to serve as a text for the discourse that follows, on the duty of judging others charitably as we wish to be judged ourselves. In the course of his remarks on this subject Horace comes across two of the Stoic absurdities: one that all faults are alike (v. 96, sq.), which he meets by the Epicurean absurdity that expediency is the foundation of right; and the other that every wise man (that is, every Stoic) is endowed with all the gifts of art and fortune from the skill of the mechanic to the power of a king. With a jest upon this folly the Satire closes.

The character of Tigellius is happily described (“Not one, but all mankind’s epitome”), and a tone of good feeling runs throughout the Satire. The language is genial, and the sentiments amiable. The style is Horace’s own, as we may suppose. That of Lucilius, it is clear, was more after the fashion of the second Satire, in which his freedom of speech and licentious language appear to me to be aimed at without the power which he possessed of giving them point and severity. No one who reads this Satire would wish to see Horace in the disguise of the other.

If there is between the two the connexion above supposed, the third Satire must have been written at no great distance of time after the other. But it appears from v. 63 that he was now well acquainted with Maecenas, though not on the terms of intimacy which afterwards grew up between them. On these grounds it seems probable that the Satire was written about the end of a.u.c. 716, as Kirchner supposes.

ARGUMENT.

Singers have all one fault—that they will never sing to their friends when they are asked, and never leave off when they are not. This was the case with Tigellius, the most inconsistent man in the world. Caesar himself could not induce him to sing unless he chose; when the fit was on him he would keep it up from the first course to the dessert; one moment in a hurry, another absurdly slow; now with 200 slaves, now with but ten; one while talking big, another all humility; one while content with a little, another squandering millions; up all night, snoring all day.

But what, have you no faults? Yes, but perhaps not so bad as his. And yet I am not like Maenius, who, while he exposed his neighbour’s faults, coolly declared he made excuses for his own. Why should a man be blind to his own defects and have an eagle’s eye for his fellows? He may presently find them turning the tables upon him. Your friend we will say is a little hasty, and sensitive, and perhaps not very polished; but he is a good man, and kind to you, and a man of genius within. In short, examine yourself, and see what faults nature or neglect have sown in your own breast before you pass judgment on others.

Let us think of this, how the lover overlooks or even loves the deformities of his mistress. So let us err in friendship and not be too fastidious; even as the fond father finds pretty names for his ugly boy's defects. Let the close be called thrifty; the silly man who is a little too prone to boast, say he is anxious to please; the rude and off-handed, let him be natural and manly; the passionate, high spirited;—this is the way to make friends and to keep them. But we do just the reverse, turning virtues into defects. An honest man is a driveller; the slow and sure is a hog; the prudent and cautious, a liar and a fox; the unsophisticated, a fool.

What rashness thus to establish a rule which must react upon ourselves. All have their faults; he is best who has fewest. Let my friend weigh my good with my bad, and I will do the same by him. If he would not have his great deformities offend my eye, let him learn to overlook my little ones: who would have indulgence must show it.

In short, since the defects of fools, according to your Stoic theory, cannot be got rid of, it is reasonable we should judge others as we judge ourselves, and visit each fault with no more than its due censure. The man who should hang his slave for eating the remnants of his fish must be mad; but he is not less mad who for some trifling fault hates his friend. Because a friend breaks my old-fashioned dish, or helps himself before me at table, am I to love him the less for that? What if he were to commit theft, or embezzlement, or fraud? They who declare that all faults are alike, are refuted by common sense, experience, and expediency. Expediency is the parent of justice: therefore men when they were in their first rude state fought like beasts for their food; but when they got civilized expediency taught them to make laws, which every one must admit were framed to put down injustice. Nature cannot draw the distinction between right and wrong; nor will any argument convince us that a petty theft is as bad as sacrilege. Let us visit each fault then with its proper meed of punishment; that is, let us not use the scourge where the whip is only due; for I have no fear of your reversing this and substituting the whip for the scourge, though you do say you would cut up all vices alike if men would but make you king.

But are you not a king? Is not the wise man rich and handsome, a cobbler and a king? Don't you know what your founder Chrysippus said? "The wise man never made himself a shoe in his life, yet is the wise man a cobbler." How is this? Why just as Hermogenes is the best of singers, even when his lips are closed, and Alfinus continued to be a clever shoemaker after he had changed his trade and shut up his shop; even so the wise man is the best and only workman, and a king. And yet thou king of kings, the little boys mob thee and pluck thy beard! To make a long story short: while your kingship goes down to a cheap bath with no body-guard but Crispinus the blockhead, my friends shall make allowance for my faults, and I will make allowance for theirs, and I shall live as a subject more blest than you or any other king.

Omnibus hoc vitium est cantoribus, inter amicos
Ut nunquam inducant animum cantare rogati,
Injussi nunquam desistant. Sardus habebat Ille Tigellius hoc: Caesar, qui cogere posset, Si peteret per amicitiam patris atque suam non Quidquam proficeret; si collibisset ab ovo

6. ab ovo Usque ad mala] "Ovum enim initium coeae erat quippe quod a gustu statim a balneis offerebatur" (Acron). This corresponds with what Cicero says, writing to his friend Paetus (Ad Fam. ix. 20). He tells him he has taken to a better style of living, "Quem virum? non enim quem tu es solitus promulside conficere. Integram famem ad ovum affero. Itaque usque ad assum vitulinum opera perducitur." The "promulside," otherwise called 'gustus,' with which Cicero says his appetite used to be satisfied, preceded the regular meal, and consisted of things calculated to provoke the appetite, of which a list is given in the eighth Satire of the second book, v. 8, sq., where however eggs are not mentioned. These things were eaten with a draught of 'mulsum' (S. ii. 2. 15, n.) sometimes before they sat down, or even before they left the bath. So Martial (xii. 19) says,—

"In thermis sumit lactucae, ova, lacertum."—See Becker's Gallus, Exc. 'The Meals.'

. 7. citaret, Io Bacche! This use of 'citare,' 'to shout,' is not common. Forcellini does not notice this passage, and only quotes Cic. de Orat. i. 59; 'Citare Paenanem aut Nomionem.' Bentley says 'citare Io Bacche' is not Latin, and asks where we shall meet with such a phrase as 'citare cantilenam.' He overlooked the above passage of Cicero. He conjectures and adopts 'iteraret,' quoting C. ii. 19. 12, 'lapsa cavis iterare melia.' There were convivial songs among the Greeks to which they gave the name ιόβακχοι. Several fragments of such songs by Archilocus have been preserved in Athenaeus and elsewhere (see Bergk's Poet. Lyr. p. 490, sqq.). The final syllable in Bacche is lengthened, and should properly be pronounced as the singer might be supposed to pronounce it. The caesural place in the verse is not enough to account for the lengthening of the syllable, as Orelli says it is. 'Io Bacchae' is found in some MSS., being introduced evidently to save the metre. Such was the cry of the Baccanals in Euripides' play, v. 576,— ιό, κλέιτ' ιμασ κλέιτ' αδεάς, ο βάκχαι, ιό βάκχαι.

The strings in the tetrachord, from which the low notes proceeded, were uppermost as the player held it in his hand, and the notes of the voice which corresponded with these are expressed by 'summa voce.' For the same reason the high notes would be those which harmonized with the lowest of the strings. The 'summa chorda' was called in Greek ἰσαρη, and the 'ima' ψη. I understand 'chords' to be the dative case, the literal translation being 'that voice which is the lowest (where for the above reason those notes are called the lowest which we should call the highest), and that echoes to the four strings.'

11. Junonis sacra ferret;] This refers to the 'canephoreus,' damsels who carried the basket of sacred instruments on their head at sacrifices. Those of Juno are mentioned here; but the practice was observed at all sacrifices. A woodcut from an antefixum in the British Museum, representing two girls carrying the basket, will be found with other information in Smith's Dict. Ant. art. 'Canephoreus.' See also Cic. in Verr. ii. 4. 3, Long's note. Cicero (De Off. i. 36) uses the same illustration, "ne tarditibus utamur ut pomparum ferculis similis esse videamur."

11. habebat saepe ducentos,] Bentley substitutes 'alebat' for 'habebat;' but though 'alere servos' and βοικιών ὄκταρας are expressions in use, there is no reason for deserting the MSS. Ten slaves were a very small household for a rich man, and Tigellius was rich. In respect to the number of slaves usual in wealthy houses, which in primitive times was small, but latterly grew to an extraordinary number, see Becker's Gallus Exc. 'on the Slave Family.'

12. modo reges atque tetrarchas,] 'Modo,' as an adverb of time, signifies 'now,' or some time not far from the present. It is the ablative of 'modus,' 'measure,' and 'modo' is within measure, and therefore its sense is confined to limited quantities. Compare the use of 'modo' and 'admodum' in Terence (Hec. iii. 5. 8): "Advenis modo? Pam. Admodum," 'Are you coming now?' —Just now.' 'Modo' thus comes to have the meaning of 'nunc,' and to be used in the same combinations, as here 'nunc reges —loquens; nunc, sit mihi mensa tripes' would have the same meaning; and likewise in S. 10. 11:—

"Et sermone opus est, modo tristi, saepe jocoso;
Defendente vicem, modo rhetoris atque poetae;
Interdum urbani."

See Key's L. G. 794, and Mr. Long's Excursus on 'Non modo,' appended to his Omnia magna loquens; modo, "Sit mihi mensa tripes et Concha salis puri et toga quae defendere frigus Quamvis crassa queat." Decies centena dedisses

Huic parco paucis contento, quinque diebus Nil erat in loculis. Noctes vigilabat ad ipsum Mane, diem totum stertebat; nil fuit unquam Sie impar sibi.—Nunc aliquid dicat mihi: "Quid tu? Nullane habes vitia?" Immo alia et fortasse minora.

Maenius absentem Novium cum carpeter, "Heus tu," Yridam ait, "ignoras te, an ut ignotum dare nobis Verba putas?" "Egomet mi ignosco," Maenius inquit.
Stultus et improbvs hic amor est dignusque notari.

edition of Cic. in Verrem. Tetrarchas were properly governors of a fourth part of a province or other territorial division; but the title was not so limited in practice. It was a title originally confined to the petty princes of Asia Minor; the Romans gave it to different members of Herod’s family who succeeded to the Syrian part of his dominions. Describing the troops assembled at Pharsalia, Lucan says (vii. 226):

"Sicci sed plurima campi
Tetrarchae regesque tenent magnique tyranni, Atque omnis Latio quae servit purpura ferro."

and Cic. (pro Mil. 28. 76): "Omitto socios, exteras nationes, reges, tetrarchas."

13. mensa tripes] This was the simplest and most old-fashioned shape, and the tables were small, only suited to a person dining by himself or with one or two companions. The wealthy Romans were very extravagant about their tables. See S. i. 2. 4, n. The salt-cellar was usually, except among the poorest sort, of silver, and an heir-loom. It stood in the middle of the table, and had a sacred character. See C. ii. 16. 14: "paternum Splendet in mensa tenui salinum." Porphyrian says the poor eat their salt out of a sea-shell. 'Puri' only means 'clean.' The Scholiasts' explanation 'non conditi,' 'sine condimentis,' is not intelligible to me.

13. Decies centena] 'Ten millions of sesterces,'—a common way of expressing the largest number. On the construction, see above, S. 1. 43, n. 'Erat' is used in an uncommon way. ἕν Ἀδρίον would be the Greek equivalent. It is a loose conversational way of speaking.

20. Immo alia] Orelli says 'immo' here expresses wonder at a man asking a question on a matter where there is no doubt. I do not see how that meaning can be got from it. Professor Key has given the precise interpretation of it here (L. G. 1429): "'Immo' seems to have signified properly an assent with an important qualification." This explanation is borne out by the etymology of the word, which is compounded of 'in' and 'modo.' (The subject is fully discussed in Mr. Long's note on Cic. Verr. ii. 1. 1). The qualification is found in 'et fortasse minora,' which some editors have corrupted into 'haud fortasse minora,' destroying the sense and turning it into cant. A man does not qualify himself for a censor by proclaiming that his own faults are as bad as those he is blaming. 'At' for 'et' is unauthorised and unnecessary. The qualification it conveys is contained in 'immo.' The correction is Baxter's, and arose out of the Scholiasts' paraphrase (Comm. Cruq.): "confiteor me habere vitia sed fortasse minora." Horace means to say he admits he has his faults, and is not so selfish and foolish as Maenius (see S. 1. 101 of this book), who reviled the man Novius behind his back, and, when told to look at his own faults, said he made excuses for himself which he would not make for others. Novius may be anybody: we know nothing about him. Whether he has any connexion with the Novius mentioned in the sixth Satire of this book, v. 40, the plebeian tribune, or the usurer in v. 121 of the same Satire, it is impossible to say. 'Dare verba' means to give words in the place of facts, to deceive.

24. improbvs] See C. iii. 24. 62, n. 'Amor' means 'self-love.' 'Pervideas' in the next line has been altered by Bentley,
Cum tua pervides oculis mala lippus inunctis,
Cur in amicorum vitis tam cernis acutum
Quam aut aquila aut serpens Epidaurus?
At tibi contra Evenit, inquirant vitia ut tua rursus et illi.
Iracundior est paulo, minus aptus acutis
Naribus horum hominum; rideri posit eo quod
Rusticius tonso toga defuit et male laxus
In pedo calcus haeret; at est bonus ut melior vir
Non alius quisquam, at tibi amicus, at ingenium ingens
Inculto latet hoc sub corpore. Denique te ipsum Concute num qua tibi vitiorum insectorit olim

on the authority of one MS., to 'pervides,' which Rutgersius had conjectured without knowing there was this authority. He quotes a MS. of Acron as having 'providae,' which Fea found in two Vatican MSS. The received text of the Scholiasts give 'pervides.' The sense in which 'pervides' is understood is that of 'practervideres,' παραβαθινεῖν, 'to look over,' in support of which the following verses of Menander are quoted from Plutarch:

τι ταλλότριον, αὖθρωτε βασκανώτατε,
κακον δενδρεῖκε, τὸ δ' ἵδουν παραβλέπεις;

But there is no authority for that use of the word 'pervides.' The reading of nearly all the MSS. and editions, 'pervides' gives the best sense, 'while you see through your own faults as well as a bear-eyed man might do.' Bentley would like to read 'cum tua videre,'—a very unfortunate suggestion. He also changes 'mala' into 'male,' upon little authority, and that construction occurs often enough in this Satire: we do not need to add another example. The MSS. and editions are nearly unanimous in reading 'mala.' Fea mentions 'pervides mala' as the reading of Hildebert at the end of the eleventh century. (Mor. Phil. Oper. 996.)

27. serpens Epidaurus?] The serpents of Epidaurus (on the Sinos Saronicus) were proverbial, in consequence of Aesculapius having been conveyed from that place, where above others he was worshipped, to Rome, in the form of a serpent, to avert a pestilence. (See Liv. Epit. lib. xi.)

29. iracundior est paulo.] Horace is illustrating here the tendency of those quick-sighted critics of their neighbours' characters to magnify the faults they find. The first instance is of a man who is sensitive under (not suited for) the sharp judgment of the men of that day ('horum hominum'), men who had the keenness of a bloodhound's scent in finding out defects, and no delicacy in proclaiming them. So I understand, minus aptus,' &c. with the Scholiasts. Orelli interprets it differently: that the man, by being somewhat hasty, gave a handle to these Pharisees. In respect to the next instance of a person of slovenly habits, Acron says 'hic dicitur pulsare Virgilium qui indecori corporis et habitus fuit.' He had no doubt met with that statement, which is repeated by Cruquius' Scholast, but how much reliance is to be placed upon it cannot easily be determined. Weichert supports it. Madvig (Opusc. p. 60) rejects it. 'Rusticius' belongs to 'tonso,' and 'de- fuit' is absolute, 'hangs down.' 'Male' belongs to 'laxus.' (See v. 45, and C. i. 17, 25, n.). To be slipshod (μικρ' τοῦ ποδός ὑπονύματα φορείν, Theophr. Char. 4) has always been the proverbial characteristic of a sloven. 'Neo vagus in laxa pes tibi pelle natet'' (Ovid, A. A. i. 516). 'At' is repeated in the same way as here by Cicero, in his eighth letter to Cælius (Ad Fam. ii. 15): 'Puerum, inquiex? At quaestorem, at nobilem adolescentem, at omnium fere exemplum.' In Verr. ii. 5, 1: "at est bonus imperator, at felix," ii. 3, 4: 'at sermone, at literis, at humanitate ejus delectatmini.'

34. hoc sub corpore.] The reading of Lambinus, Torrentius, and others supported by a few respectable MSS. 'pectore,' is justly condemned by Bentley.

35. concutæ.] The metaphor is probably derived from the shaking of a cloak, or any thing of that sort, to see if there is anything hid in it. Orelli calls this "imaginem desumptam ab eo qui furem concutit," that is, it means 'to search,' as suspected persons are searched by the police. 'Excuto' is used in that connexion in Plautus (Aulul.
iv. 4. 18): "Di me perdant si ego tui quicquam abstuli: agecum Excedum pal-

hun." See also Phaedrus (Fab. v. 16):

"—— Sic porcelli vocem est imitatus sua Verum ut subesse pallio contendenter Ex et uti iuberent."

37. Neglectis urenda füre] This, as Oreelli says, has the appearance of a proverb. Virgil calls the fern "curvis invisam aratris."

38. Illuc praeventur. ] Before we go further let us first turn our attention to this, namely, how lovers are blind to the faults of their mistresses." Forcell. supplies many examples of this use of 'praeventere.'

Balbinus and Hagna are persons unknown. The former is a Roman name. A person so called was included, we are told, in the description of Octavianus and M. Antonius (Appian. iv. 50), and this person has, without any authority, been identified with the man of this Satire. (Spohn in Jahn's 2nd Edit. in Horace, p. 253.) I am surprised Orelli should quote this opinion without reproving it. Another of the same name is mentioned by Cicero (Ad Att. xiii. 21). Estré suggests that Hagna may have made up to Balbinus by her money for the ugly defect in her nose, which is a libel on the worthy lover, the blindness of whose affection is held up to imitation. Bentley has shown sufficiently from inscriptions and etymology that Hagna, derived from ἁγνή, cannot properly be written 'Agna,' which is the reading of many of the old editions. The first syllable of 'polyrus' is always long, though derived from πολύς. πολύς, the Aeolic form, πωλός, being followed rather than the Attic.

42. nomen virtus possusset] The Romans used 'ponere nomen,' after the Greek ὑψωμα τῷ βιοῖναι. Venus had the epithet 'paeta' applied to her. Ovid (A. A. 661): "Si paeta est Veneri similis, si flava Minervae."

Both these words passed into cognomens, which Pliny mentioning, observes that man is the only animal that squints (N. H. xi. 37. 55). 'Pullus,' 'Varus,' 'Scaurus' were also cognomens. Sisyphus was the name of a dwarf kept by M. Antonius. "Sisyphus M. Antonii triumviri pumilio fuisse dicitur intra bipedalem staturam ingenio tamen vivax" (Porphyrius). Cruqui's Scholiast adds a story about his de-lighting Antonius and Cleopatra by his dexterity in handling a boat, which looks very like a blunder from the word 'velificari,' which is used for 'flattering' and 'doing homage,' and so forth; but never (as a deponent verb) in the sense in which this story-teller uses it. The reader may judge for himself. If it be, as I suppose, that the commentator's original merely told how the little man paid court to his master and mistress (ut ipsis velificaretur), it is a curious specimen of the way in which Scholiasts' ancedotes are manufactured. He says "ipee (M. Antonius) Sisyphum appellabat ob ingenii calliditatem; hic aliquando in Alexandro mari cum, inspectantibus Antonio et Cleopatra, in scapha velificaretur cum equalibus, tanta dexteritate antevertist alios ut eis quidem esset delectatam alis vero ad-mirationi." Torrentius believes Sisyphus to be the true reading in that passage of Suetonius (Octav. c. 43): "Adolescentulum Lucium honeste natum, exhibuit: tantum ut ostenderet quad-crat bipedali minor, librarum septendecim ac vocis immensa." Dwarfs were kept by the rich to amuse them and play to them, for they were generally instructed in music. Propertius introduces such an one at the supper he describes in the eighth elegy of the fourth book dancing grotesquely to the sound of the flute:—

HORATII FLACCI

Si cui filius est, ut abortivus fuit olim
Sisyphus; hunc varum distortis eruribus; illum
Balbutit seaurum pravis fultum male talis.
Parcius hic vivit, frugi dicatur. Ineptus
Et jactantior hic paulo est, concinnus amicis
Postulat ut videatur. At est truculentior atque
Plus aequo liber, simplex fortisque habeatur;
Caldior est, aeres inter numeretur. Opinor
Haec res et jungit junctos et servat amicos.
At nos virtutes ipsas inermimis, atque Sincerum cupimus vas incrustare. Probus quis

"Nanus et ipse suos breviter concretus in artus Jactabat trunci ad cava buxa manus."
(v. 41, sq.)

See also Sueton. Vit. Tib. c. 61 (? 62). That 'varus' is a soft term for those who have bent legs, and 'scaurus' for one whose ankles are rickety, we may gather from this passage, not from the dictionaries. No one would like to have a child either 'varus' or 'scaurus' according to Forcellini's definitions. Celsus defines 'varus' as one whose foot turns in; and Heindorf says it represents the shape of the letter V. From this word is derived 'praecavari,' 'to shuffle.' Rutgers has a long argument (Lect. Ven. p. 312) to show that for 'illum' (v. 47) should be written 'Hillum,' to represent one Hirrus, supposed to be derided by Cicero when he says (Ad Fam. ii. 10): "de te quia quod sperabam: de Hillo (balbus enim sum) quod non putaram." Bentley has sufficiently refuted this wild notion, and has also humorously enough exposed the folly of Dacier's proposal to read 'scaulum' for 'scaurum,' to represent the lispings of the fond parent, like Alcibiades, in Aristophanes' play (Vesp. 45)—

οὐκ ἡ δ' ἡ τέθνε κεφαλῆν κόλακος ἕχουσιν, where Alcibiades' peculiarity is made the means of creating a laugh against Theorus by changing κόλακος into κόλακος. But no joke at all can be made out of 'scaulum.' Lucretius describes the blindness of lovers much as Horace does those of fathers (iv. 1156, sqq.).

Ineptus] This word signifies want of what the French know well by the name of 'tact.' Cicero thus defines the word (de Or. ii. 4): "qui aut tempus quid postulet non videt, aut plura loquitur aut se ostentat—aut denique in aliquo genere aut inconcinnum aut multus est, is ineptus dicetur." Such a man's failing is to be softened down, Horace says, into a wish to make himself agreeable to his friends. 'Truculentor' means coarse and approaching to brutality in his behaviour.

56. Sincerum cupimus vas incrustare.] 'We are ready and even anxious to foule the clean vessel.' This is the original meaning of 'sincerus.'

57. multum est demissus homo:] 'De- missus' is used in a bad sense. Bentley says this passage is a rock of bad name for the shipwreck all interpreters have made upon it. "Scopus interpretum omnium naufragis infamis." I am afraid he must be admitted to have shared the common fate. His reading is—

"— probus quis

Nobiscum vivit, multum demissus homo ille:
Tardo ac cognomen pingui damus."
SATIRARUM I. 3.

Nobiscum vivit, multum demissus homo: illi Tardo cognomen pingui damus. Hic fugit omnes Insidias nullique malo latus obdit apertum,
Cum genus hoc inter vitae versetur ubi aeris
Invidia atque vigent ubi crimina, pro bene sano
Ac non incauto factum astutumque vocamus.
Simplicior quis et est, qualem me saepe libenter
Obtulerim tibi, Maecenas, ut forte legentem
Aut tacitum impellat quovis sermone molestus,
Communi sensu plane caret, iniquimus. Eheu,
Quam temere in nosmet legem sancimus iniquam!
Nam vitis nemo sine nascitur; optimus ille est
Qui minimis urgetur. Amicus dulcis ut aequum est doubt of its belonging to the latter, and it strengthens the common interpretation—

'a very abject man.' Compare v. 147 of this Satire, "multum celor atque fidelis."
"Multa simili metuenti" (S. ii. 5. 92).
Lambinus, with some authority, inserts "est' before 'demissus.' It does not appear in the best MSS., but is understood. Heindorff's interpretation of 'et' after 'pingui' is unauthorized and awkward. The dative 'pingui' is correct, as " cui nunc cognomen Iulo Additur" (Aen. i. 267). It is the common construction, in prose as well as poetry, to put the name in the dative. Cicero (in Verr. ii. 4. 53) has "cui nomen Arethusa est;" but there Professor Key (L. G. 984, note) thinks "we should probably read Arethusaest, i.e. Arethusae est." This seems to imply that the other construction would be wrong, but it is used sometimes. Some MSS. have 'pinguis' in the text.

50. malo] This is masculine: he lays himself open to no malignant person, gives him no handle. 'Hoc' is like 'horum hominum' (v. 30). Bentley adopts and defends 'versemur,' the reading of the oldest Blandian MS. But the other is at least as good a reading, and better supported. I believe the above MS. is the only one that has 'versemur.' In connexion with what follows, the commentators quote Livy (xxii. 89): "Pro cunctatore segnem pro cauto timidum, affinges vicina virtutibus vitia, compellabat." By 'simplior' Horace means 'unsophisticated:' one who in the simplicity of his feelings may perhaps sometimes obtrude himself upon those he likes, thinking he must be welcome because he is himself pleased to meet them. He says he has often acted in that way with Maecenas. This Satire therefore was not written very early in their acquaintance.

63. Simplicior quis et est,] See Introduction.

65. impellat] Forcellini gives no other instance of 'impellere' in the sense of 'interpellare,' but gives it that sense here. Lambinus reads 'appellet;' Cruquius 'appellem;' Bentley conjectures 'impeadiat,' at the same time calling Lambinus' conjecture ingenious and learned. The Scholiast's interpretation is 'interpellat;' the reading of every MS. is 'impellat,' and I do not feel inclined to adopt Bentley's emendation or his explanation of the received reading, which, for the benefit of those who have more scruple than himself in deserting the MSS., he tells us must mean nudging your friend with your elbow, or pushing him, to draw his attention. The instrument is plainly not 'cubito' or 'manu,' as he suggests, but 'sermone,' and the meaning is that he breaks in upon one when reading or meditating with some irrelevant talk. Some MSS. says Fea have 'modestus.' He does not name them. He separates 'moestus' from the preceding words, and reads "Molestus! Communi sensu plane caret, iniquimus." 'Common sense,' for which the Greeks had the expression ὁ ἐκ τοῦ νόος, is so called, not as being exercised upon common every-day things, but as being supposed to be common property, and not confined to the learned.

67. legen sancimus] 'Sancire legem' is properly to give full effect to a law by inserting a penalty for the breach of it. See Cic. de Am. c. 13: "Haec igitur prima lex amicitiae sanctatur."
Cum mea compenset vitii bona; pluribus hisce
(Si modo plura mihi bona sunt) inclinet, amari
Si volet: hac lege in trutina ponetur eadem.
Qui ne tuberibus propriis offendat amicum
Postulat ignoscet verrucis illius; aequum est
Peccatis veniam poscentem reddere rursus.
Denique, quatenus excidi penitus vitium irae Cetera item nequeunt stultis haerentia, cur non Ponderibus modulisque suis ratio utitur, ace res
Ut quaeque est ita suppliciiis delicta coeret?
Si quis eum servum patinam qui tollere jussus
Semoses pisces tepidumque ligurierit jus
In cruce suffigat, Labeone insanior inter

70. Cum mea compenset vitii bona:] There is a strife here among the commentators. The Scholiasts interpret ’cum’ as a preposition. Some editors take it as a conjunction. Bentley, Heindorf, Orelli, and Dillenbr. follow the Scholiasts, I think with good reason. Pea, Meineke, Duentzer are on the other side. The last says with much confidence that Horace would have put the substantive next to ’cum’ if he had meant it for a preposition; but he probably preferred bringing together the words that are opposed to one another, ’vitii’ and ’bona.’ There is no more abruptness arising out of the absence of a conjunction between ’bona’ and ’pluribus’ than the character of the discourse renders natural. Heindorf takes ’hac lege’ with ’amari si volet.’ I do not see any particular objection to that punctuation; but the common way is at least as good. ’Compensare’ is a legal term. ’Compensatio’ is a ’set-off.’ See Smith’s Dict. Ant.

72. trutina] This word applies equally to the ’libra,’ a balance with two scales (’lances’), and to the ’statera,’ or steel-yard, both of which were in common use among the Romans. ’In trutina ponetur eadem,’ he shall be weighed in the same balance, is another, but not very exact way of saying, he shall be tried by the same standard, his character shall be estimated in the same way.

74. ignoscet] The MSS. vary between the future indicative and the present subjunctive. Perhaps the future is more after Horace’s style.

76. quatenus excidi penitus] ’Inasmuch as’ (C. iii. 24. 30) the vice of passion and all other vices that cleave to us fools cannot be entirely eradicated.” All were fools with the Stoics, as with most other sects, who were not wise after their fashion.

81. ligurierit jus] Orelli follows the analogy of other words formed like this (which has the same root, ’lig,’ as ’lingo’) and having the termination ’-urio.’ Most of the editions, and all the MSS., are said to have two ’r’s;’ and Heindorf, on their authority, adopts that way of spelling the word. Mr. Long (Cic. in Verr. ii. 3. 76) prefers the single ’r.’ ’Pisces patinarii’ were boiled fish served up with sauce in an open dish. See Plautus (Asin. i. 3. 26, sqq.):

“Quasi piscis itidem est amator lenae: nequam est nisi recens
Is habet succum, is suavitatem, eum quovis pacto condias
Vel patinarium vel assum; voces quo pacto lubet.”

82. In cruce suffigat.] Cicero has the expressions ’in crucem sublatum’ (Verr. ii. 5. 3), ’ad palum alligatos’ (Ib. c. 6), which have the same meaning. In the latter place he has the construction ”damnatis crucem servis fixeram.” See Mr. Long’s note on the first of the above passages, and Dict. Ant., art. ’Crux,’ for an account of the punishment by crucifixion.

Labeone insanior] The Scholiasts unanimously speak of ’Labo’ as M. Antistius Laboe, a lawyer of eminence, who had attacked Augustus very freely, and was therefore set down as a madman by Horace to please his patron. Marcus Laboe was the son of Quintus, and both were eminent jurists. The father was of the party of Brutus and Cassius, was present at Philippi, and put himself to death after the battle. Tacitus (Ann. iii. 75) writing of the year A.U.C. 775, about sixty years after Sanos dicatur. Quanto hoc furiosius atque Majus peccatum est: paulum deliquit amicus,
Quod nisi concedas habeare insuavis, acerbus:
Odisti et fugis ut Rusonem debitor aeris,
Qui nisi cum tristes misero venere Kalendae
Mercedem aut nummos unde unde extricat, amaras
Porrecto jugulo historias captivus ut audit.
Commixit lectum potus mensave catillum
Evandri manibus tritum dejicit, ob hanc rem

the composition of this Satire, says that in that year died Capito Atius and Labeo Antistius, two rival lights of their age. If, then, he is the person Horace means, it could not have been for his boldness of speech towards Augustus that he calls him mad, for he could at the outside have been but a youth when this Satire was written.
Either, therefore, some other Labeo is intended, or some other mad freak of M.
Antistius Labeo. From the way the name is introduced, one might suppose it was proverbial. I cannot think with Weichert (Lect. Ven. p. 33, sqq.), Orelli, Estré, and others, that Marcus is probably called mad because he beat his servant violently on some occasion for a small offence. What Horace says is, that if a man were to do so,
he would be called by all sane men more insane than Labeo, who must therefore have had the reputation of being mad, perhaps from his recklessness or something of that sort. What sense would there be in saying that if a man beat his servant cruelly for a trifling offence he would be held more mad than Labeo, who did the same thing?
I do not think the younger Labeo is meant at all; and if his father be the person, there must have been some reason which we do not know that induced his contemporaries to call him a madman. But it is just as probable that some one else of the same name is intended, wherein I agree with Fea. Spohn (Jahn’s Horace, edit. 2, p. 253) suggests C. Atinius Labeo, who was tribune of the plebs about a.u.c. 635. (Liv. Epit.
59.) But it is impossible, I think, to say who is meant. Bentley has a long note to show that it is not probable M. Atinius Labeo should be the man, and suggests ‘Labieno’ for ‘Labeone,’ referring to one of that name who for his virulence was called Rabienus by his contemporaries.
He is mentioned by Seneca in the preface to the fifth book of his ‘Controversiae.’

84. paulum deliquit amicus.] ‘Say your friend has committed a fault so small that if you do not excuse it you must be looked upon as harsh; you hate him in your bitterness, and run away from him.’ ‘Concedo’ is used in this way by other writers (see Forcell.). Bentley would prefer ‘quois’ for ‘quod,’ referring to the next Satire, v. 140, ‘cui si concedere nolis.’ But he does not say why Horace should adopt the old form
here and the later there.

86. Rusonem] The editions and MSS. vary in respect to this name. Nearly all the old editions have ‘Drusonem,’ because Porphyrian, according to the text of As-censius, calls the person ‘Octavius Drusus, a usurer and writer of histories, to which he obliged his debtors to listen, which was the worst punishment they could suffer.’ Other variations are ‘Riso,’ ‘Roso,’ ‘Rioso’ (Ascens.), ‘Ruffo,’ ‘Truso.’ Cruquius first approved of ‘Ruso,’ but Bentley claims the merit of restoring that name. Philostratus (Vit. Polemonis) mentions one Varus, who followed the same calling as Ruso, and made a stipulation with his debtors that they should, besides paying interest, listen to his recitations of his own writings. Acron interprets ‘historias’ by ‘contumelias’ in one place, but contradicts himself within a few lines, calling Ruso ‘historiarum malum scriptorem.’ The text of these Scholiasts is very corrupt. ‘Historias’ I suppose to mean tales or narratives of some sort. See
C. iii. 7. 20.

87. tristes Kalendae] See note on
Epd. ii. 70.

90. catillum Evandri manibus tritum] The Scholiasts, spoiling the joke, have referred to a celebrated engraver and statuary (see Smith’s Dict. B.ii. Aulanius Evander) as the Evander of this place, who is clearly the old king and ally of Aeneas. Porphyrian professes to quote from certain writers who had written on the subject of Horace’s characters; so that there must have been a good deal of attention paid to that subject at a very early period. Compare S. ii. 3. 21, n.
Aut positum ante mea quia pullum in parte catini
Sustulit esuriens, minus hoc jucundus amicus
Sit mihi? Quid faciam si furtum fecerit, aut si
Prodiderit commissa fide sponsumve negarit?
Quis paria esse fere placuit peccata laborant
Cum ventum ad verum est; sensus moresque repugnant
Atque ipsa utilitas, justi prope mater et acqui.
Cum prorepserunt primis animalia terris,
Mutum et turpe pecus, glandum atque cubilia propter
Unguibus et pugnis, dein fustibus, atque ita porro
Pugnabat armis quae post fabricaverat usus,
Donec verba quibus voces sensusque notarent
Nominaque invenere; dehinc absistere bello,
Oppida coeperunt munire et ponere leges,
Ne quis fur esset, neu latro, neu quis adulter.
Nam fuit ante Helenam cunnus tetricrim bell
Causa, sed ignotis perierunt mortibus illi,
Quos venerem incertam rapientes more ferarum
Viribus editor caedebat, ut in grege-taurus.
Jura inventa metu injusti fateare necesse est,
Tempora si fastosque velis evolvere mundi.

95. commissa fide] This is a form both of the genitive and dative. See C. iii. 7. 4: "Constantis juvenem fide." 96. Quid paria esse fere] This common doctrine of the Stoics is noticed by Cicero (de Fin. iv. 19) and condemned on the principles of common sense and truth, as here.
"Laborant," they are in a dilemma.
In making expediency the parent of justice,
or something like it ("prope''), Horace follows an Epicurean notion. One of Epi-curus's dogmas appears to have been that justice was nothing by itself, but merely a social compact by which men bound themselves to abstain from injuring one another.
(Diog. Laert. x. 150.) Narrow and subjective as this view of the case may be, it is not worse than that which, under the san-tion of a popular name, has been long taught for moral philosophy at one of our principal universities. The Stoics affirmed that Justice had an objective existence, and she was held to be the daughter of Zeus.

102. usus.] Here this signifies 'need.' It generally occurs (in this sense) in combination with 'est' or 'venit.' "Verba nominaque' conventionally embraces all the parts of speech, like the Greek ἰδνατα καὶ ῥήματα. 'Notae' are symbols, as in shorthand writing for instance; and this line may perhaps be most accurately rendered,
'till they invented language whereby they could give a symbolical form to the sounds of their voice and to their feelings.' 111. Jura inventa metu injusti] If this be admitted, as of course it must be, then Injustice, and if so Justice, was anterior to any laws or social compact, express or implied; so that the doctrine above laid down falls to the ground; and that justice of which expediency is said to be the mother turns out to be nothing more than magistrates' justice,—the justice of statutes, which may be just or unjust. The philosophy that would visit all offences, great and small, with the same condign penalty, is absurd; but he who affirms that lying is lying, theft is theft, lust is lust, in whatever form or degree, or in whatever person it appears, says no more than that fire is fire, or water is water, whether we take a volcano or a rushlight to represent the one,
an ocean or a bucketful to represent the other.

112. evolvere] This word, which signifies 'to read,' is taken from the unrolling of a parchment 'usque ad umbilicam.' See Epod.
xiv. 6, n.
Nee natura potest justo seccernere iniquum, Dividit ut bona diversis, fugienda petendis; Nee vinct ratio hoc, tantundem ut peccet idemque Qui teneros caules alieni fregerit horti Et qui nocturnus sacra divum legerit. Adsit Regula peccatis quae poenas irroget aequas, Ne sectica dignum horribili sectere flagello. Nam ut ferula caedas meritum majora subire Verbera non vereor, cum dicas esse pares res Furta latrociniis et magnis parva mineris Falce recisurum simili te, si tibi regnum Permittant homines. Si dives qui sapiens est, Et sutor bonus et solus formosus et est rex, 114. bona diversis,] 'Bona' means things which it is good to have and to get, not virtues, but the gifts of fortune and such like. 115. Nee vinct ratio hoc,] 'Nor will any logic prove this.' 'Vincere causam' is an ordinary expression for winning a cause. 'Idem' is explained by 'tandemdem,' the same in degree of guilt. Bentley thinks the next verse will be more pleasant and rhapsodical if 'infregerit' is substituted for 'fregerit:' and he does not remember to have seen 'frangere flores,' while Ovid (Met. x. 10) has 'liliaque infringat,' the verse requiring it. We may trust the unimpeachability of the MSS., whose reading I think 'dulcer et numerosior' than Bentley's. For examples of 'legere' in the sense of robbing, see Forcell. 119. No sectica dignum] The epithet 'horribili' belongs to 'flagello,' which was a severer instrument than the 'sectica,' and was sometimes constructed with horrible cruelty, and fatal in its application (see last Satire, v. 41). The 'sectica' had but one thong, of leather (see art 'Flagrum' in Smith's Dict. Ant.). 'Ferula' was a switch usually from the vine. The Latin derivatives from σκέπος are short in the first syllable, and some have supposed the existence of a σκέπος with the u short. But this is doubtful. There are other instances (as 'anchora' from ἀγκύρα, 'crēpida' from κρῆπις, &c.) in which the quantity of the Greek vowel is changed in the Latin. 120. ut ferula caedas] The rule in respect to verbs of fearing is that 'the Latin inserts a negative where the English has none, and vice versa' (Key's L. G. 1186, note), i. e. 'vereor ne' means 'I fear it will,' 'vereor ut,' 'I fear it will not.' There appears at first to be a deviation from the rule here; but the position of 'ut' makes it independent of 'vereor.' 'For that you should beat,' or 'as to your beating with a switch one who deserves to undergo a severer flogging, of this I have no fear.' 122. Furta latrocinii s] This is not strictly a technical distinction, nor is 'latrocinium' a technical term. All robbery was 'furturn,' whether attended with violence or not; but Horace means to distinguish between thefts without violence and robbery with violence ('rapina'). See articles 'furturn' and 'bona rapta' in Smith's Dict. Ant. Cicero distinguishes 'furturn' from 'rapina' (in Verr. ii. 5. 13). 125. et est rex,] This notion of the Stoics is expressed again Epp. i. 1, 107. Plutarch alludes to it in his treatise peri Εὐθυμίας, c. 12: ἀλλ' ἐμοί τοῦτο μὲν Στοικός ὀφείλει παίζειν ὅταν ἄκοισας τόν σοφόν παρ' αὐτὸν μὴ μόνον φίλομον καὶ ἔκοιναν καὶ ἄνδριν καὶ ῥήτορα καὶ στρατηγόν καὶ ποιητήν καὶ πλοῖον καὶ βασιλεία προαγορεύομεν, αὐτῶς ἐλεόντων ἀξίωσι τοῖτων καὶ τοῦτο τοῦτο τῶν ὁμάχων ἀνώνυμων. The absurdity of the doctrine, if such it may be called (it has no foundation in the reported opinions of Zeno, Cleanthes, or Chrysippus, being the invention of their followers) consists, not so much in the statement that the wise man's intelligence contains in itself the germ of all practical knowledge, and that such knowledge is power, as in the limitation of wisdom to the pale of a sect, and the attempt to give a practical application to a notion of this kind. The later Stoics looked to Chrysippus as the founder of their philosophy; but he adhered, with little essential deviation, to the doctrines taught him by his master Cleanthes, and Cleanthes was a devoted disciple of Zeno. For the life of Chrysippus the reader may consult the Dict. Biog. “In-quiet” means that some Stoic says this, including from ‘non nosti’ to ‘sapiens,’ and after ‘qui?’ to ‘sic rex’ (v. 133). What he means to affirm in reply to the taunt ‘cur optas quod habes? ’ is, that a man may be, in the Stoic sense, a king, and yet not be in a condition to exercise authority, as an artisan or a singer may still be great in his calling even when he has laid aside the practice of it.

127. crepidas — soleas] ‘Crepida’ (κρηπίδας) was a low shoe or slipper taken from the Greeks and worn in undress: ‘solea’ was a plain sandal fastened over the instep by a strap, and worn by men as the ‘sandallium’ was worn by women. Gellius (xiii. 21) makes the ‘crepida’ and ‘solea’ identical, which they evidently were not in Horace’s day at least. “Omne ferme id genus quibus plantarum calces tantum infima teguntur, caetera prope nuda et tertibus habebis vincia sunt, ‘soleas’ dixerunt, nonnunquam Graeca voce ‘crepidulas,’ — ejusque calcamentii suores ‘crepidarios’ dixerunt.” The ‘succus’ was not materially different from the ‘crepida,’ and the ‘Gallica,’ adopted from Gaul, was like the ‘solea.’ None of these were walking-shoes (‘calcei’) fit for wet or dirty roads, but were ordinarily worn only in the house.

129. Hermogenes] It has been stated in the Introduction to the second Satire that this person has been confounded with Tigellius whose death is mentioned in that satire, and whose character is described at the beginning of this. Hermogenes is also called Tigellius in S. 4. 73; 10. 80, 90. But as he is always spoken of as alive, it is impossible he can be Caesar’s friend, Tigellius the Sardinian, to whom, as observed before, there are no grounds for giving the name Hermogenes, though the Scholiasts give it him. Hermogenes Tigellius was a teacher of music (S. 10. 90), and (whether ironically or not it is not easy to say) Horace calls him a first-rate singer here, and implies as much in S. 9. 25. But he had a contempt for him in other respects, as appears from S. 4. 73; 10. 17 (where he calls him a coccus), and 10. 79 (where he introduces him with a fool for his friend or parasite). He may have had some private pique against him.

130. Alfenius vafer,] I have adopted the orthography of this name which Orelli says is found in an inscription respecting P. Alfenius, who was consul a.d. 2. He is called Alphinius by Clinton (F. H. a.d. 2). Acron says on this passage, “Urbane sat is Alfenum Varum (Varum?) Cremonensem deridet: qui abjecta sutrina quam in municipio suo exercuerat Romam venit: magistrorum usus Sulpicio jurisconsulto ad tantam pervenit scientiam ut et consulaturn geret, et publico officio fingatur.” Porphyrius has nearly the same words, and Comm. Cruq. has compounded the two, only changing ‘Alfenum vafrum’ to ‘Alfinum Varum,’ and giving Sulpicius the name of Marcus. Estré (p. 187), agreeing with Weichert (Lect. Ven. pp. 45, sqq.), thinks there is nothing improbable in the Scholiasts’ statements. They appear to me to be compounded of different elements, one of which is the passage before us. The Scholiasts, it is obvious, occasionally give as information that which they appear only to have gathered from the text. That the disciple of Sulpicius, who died a. u. c. 710, was not the consul of a. u. c. 755, we may be pretty sure. I have little doubt the jurist, the consul, and Horace’s ex-sutor (most probably a different person from either of them), have all been dragged in to make up the story of the Scholiasts. It should be said however that the jurist is reported by Pomponius to have held the consulship. But no consul of that name appears till the above Publius, who is with more probability supposed to have been the jurist’s son than the jurist himself. In Cruquius’ oldest Blan- dinian MS. ‘sutor’ in v. 132 appeared as a corrected reading for ‘tornor,’ the original word. Cruquius likes ‘tornor’ better than ‘sutor,’ and quotes Alexander ab Alexandre Genial. Dier, lib. vi., who says that Al-
Est opifex solus, sic rex. Vellunt tibi barbam
Lascivi pueri; quos tu nisi fuste coœrces
Urgeris turba circum te stante miserque
Rumperis et latras, magnorum maxime regum.
Ne longum faciam: dum tu quadrante lavatum
Rex ibis neque te quisquam stipator ineptum
Praeter Crispinum sectabitur, et mihi dulces
Ignoscent si quid peccaro stultus amici,
Inque vicem illorum patiar delicta libenter,
Privatusque magis vivam te rege beatus.

Alfenius practised the trade of a barber till he took up the study of the law. Bentley prefers and edits 'tensors.' Here relies partly on a MS. of Aeron, in which 'tonstrina' appears instead of the 'sutrina' of the above passage.
He says there are no other means of deciding Alfenius's trade, but he had rather for Horace's sake it should be taken to have been a barber's, lest he should be convicted of repeating himself unnecessarily.
From 'erat' it has been inferred that Alfenius was dead when the satire was written.
It merely means, that though he threw up his trade, he still continued to be a 'sutor' or 'tensors,' whichever is right. Cunningham, Sanadon, Foa, Meineke, all have
'tensors.'

133. Vellunt tibi barbam] The Romans of this period did not usually wear beards.
But those who affected philosophy let theirs grow, and were hoisted and insulted by the boys in the streets for doing so (see S. ii. 3.
17).

137. dum tu quadrante lavatum] In the vestibule of the public baths of Pompeii was found a box, stated by Sir W. Gell to have been for receiving the bathers' fee.
'Quadrante lavari' (Juvenal, S. vi. 447) was an expression equivalent to taking a public bath, because a 'quadrans' was the ordinary fee paid by each visitor. But it may be inferred from Horace's words that they who paid this sum were not the richer sort of bathers; for he seems to say, 'while you, a fine king as you are, go and bathe for a quadrans.' The rich may perhaps have paid more and had more privacy and better bathing and attendance. The 'quadrans,' which was the fourth of an 'as,' and therefore the 64th part of a 'denarius,' after the reduction of the 'as' to 1/4 of that coin, was of the value of about half a farthing of our money, taking the value of the 'denarius' at 8½d. Some interpret 'nec pueri credunt nisi qui nondum aere lavantur' (Juv.
S. ii. 132) as signifying that children
art. 'Baths,' where it is said 'the price of a bath was a quadrant, the smallest piece of coined money (but were not the 'sextans' and 'uncia' pieces of coined money?) from the age of Cicero downwards.' As Becker says, Juvenal rather means children who have not yet been sent to the public baths (Gallus, Exc. on the Baths). The Romans were great bathers. If bathing could be made for our poor a 'res quadrantaria' (Seneca, Ep. 86), the public health in large towns would be much benefited.

139. Crispinum] See S. i. 1. 120, n.
The body-guards of kings were called 'stipatores' (see Porcell.). Horace therefore uses the word ironically in that sense. For 'et mihi,' some MSS. have 'at mihi.' 'Et'
is better; it joins 'ignoscent' with 'patiar' and 'vivam.'
SATIRE IV.

Here again Horace is at pains to defend himself from the charge of malevolence. That this charge was loudly brought against him is clear; and the second Satire of this book may have gone a long way towards making him enemies. But he must have written many more pieces than that, for he speaks of 'mea scripta' (v. 23), 'meos libellos' (v. 71). It is probable his other Satires were in the same strain as the second, which appears to have been published as a specimen of the style he here defends, but which he thought fit to abandon, for there are no other Satires of that kind. Independent of the above, Horace here shows something of an author's soreness in respect to the neglect his poems had met with, compared with others which he believed to have less merit; and though he attributes it entirely to the jealousy and fears of the multitude, every man apprehending that he may be attacked next, it is clear that he puts it down in some measure to a false taste which preferred a wordy flowing style to the terseness and accuracy of his own. The poems of Lucilius were popular in spite of the looseness of their composition, and many defects which a depraved taste had come to regard as merits. (See note on v. 6.) The virulence of Lucilius's Satires did not affect Horace's generation, who could afford to admire them, but had no liking for verses that came home to themselves. Horace began his career as a satirical writer with Lucilius for his model, and the second Satire is a specimen of the style resulting from that imitation. It sat uneasily upon him. Lucilius he found, with all his power and his merits, was not the model for him, and he was probably taunted with coming short of the vigour of his original, and this perhaps by the persons who were loudest in charging him with a malignant temper. He had therefore to set himself right in respect to Lucilius, and this he does both here and elsewhere (S. 10 and li. 1) with much good temper, candour, and forbearance. He has also to contrast his own pretensions with those of the Crispinuses and Fanniuses of the day, as well as to quiet the apprehensions of his friends, and disarm the malignity of his enemies, and these are the objects of the Satire. Everybody must admire the way in which he takes occasion, from the necessity of self-defence, to pay a tribute of grateful affection to his father's memory, and it would be difficult to find a more pleasing picture of paternal solicitude and sound sense, as applied to a boy's education, than Horace has drawn in the latter part of this Satire.

About the date, Franke says it must have been written before A.U.C. 716, when Asinius Pollio first introduced the practice of regular recitations of their works by authors. He says Horace would not have treated the reciters so contemptuously if their practice had come into fashion through the example of his friend Pollio. As I have said on v. 73, I do not think the practice alluded to by Horace has any thing to do with Pollio's practice; and as to Fannius' books and bust having been deposited, as some have said, in the library built by this same Pollio in A.U.C. 715, there is not the remotest reason to believe it. Franke says Horace could not at this time have been on good terms with Augustus, or he would not have mentioned "acerba irissione" Petillius Capitolinus (94, sqq.), who was a friend of his. But the only bitterness in Horace's words is in the sneer which he puts into the mouth of Petillius' friend and condemns. In short, the Satire appears to me to contain no clue to its date; but it evidently concerns Horace's early reputation, and so must be placed early, and not very long after S. 2, which he quotes in v. 92.
ARGUMENT.

Great was the liberty wherewith those worthies of the old comedy set their mark upon the vicious, and them Lucilius has copied; a man of wit and perception, but a harsh versifier; caring less for the quality of his verses than the quantity; full of words and full of faults, which he was too lazy to avoid. As to your quantity, I care not for that; and when Crispinus challenges me at great odds to try which of us can write quickest, I decline the invitation, and thank heaven that I am a man of quiet temperament and few words. He may go on puffing and blowing like a pair of bellows, but that is not in my way.

(v. 21.) Fannius gets a testimonial from his admirers, while no one will read what I write (and I am too nervous to recite it in public), because men do not like to have their faults exposed, and there are few who are not open to blame. Take any man out of a crowd, he is avaricious or ambitious or lecherous, or he dotes upon fine plate or fine statues; or is running about the world to make his fortune. All such are afraid of verses like mine, and hate those who write them. "Take care of him; he is dangerous; all he cares for is to get up a laugh and amuse the old women and children at the expense of his friends."

(v. 38.) Now let me say a word in reply. In the first place I do not profess to be a poet. Six feet in a verse which otherwise is mere prose, this does not make a poet, but genius, inspiration, and sublime language. And this has led some to question whether comedy is poetry, seeing that the language and ideas are all those of common life. There are your fathers, for instance, scolding their sons, just as you may hear every day; moreover you may shuffle the words as you please in true poetry without altering the sense, but that is not the case with Lucilius' language and mine (you must read it as you would prose, or you make nonsense of it).

(v. 63.) But this question I may discuss elsewhere. My present purpose is to show that you have no reason to be afraid of this sort of writing. There are your informers who go about and are the terror of all rogues: the honest man may despise them. But, even supposing you are the rogue, I am no informer. I have no desire to have my books thumbed by the vulgar, or to read them to any but my friends, and that only when prest. There are many I grant you who bawl their verses in the forum and in the public baths, but they are mere blockheads. "But we know you love to annoy, and do it with malicious intent." How can you charge me with this? Nay, the man who slanders his friend behind his back, or fails to defend him from the slander of others, who aims only at being called a wit, who invents falsehoods and blabs secrets, that man is a scoundrel; let every honest citizen avoid him. I have often been at table when one of the company has amused himself with breaking his wit upon the guests, not sparing the host himself when he gets warm; now this man you look upon as a funny fellow, while for my innocent satire I am called malignant, sarcastic, and so forth. When your friend Petillius is mentioned you defend him after your own fashion, that is, you damn him with a sneer, the veriest poison, which shall never be found, if I know myself at all, in any thing I may write.

(v. 103.) If I have spoken a little too freely of others I may be pardoned on this ground: my excellent father always taught me by examples. If he would have me live frugally, he would say, "Look at the misery to which our friend Albius' son and Barrus have reduced themselves by their extravagance." When he would keep me from bad women, "Take Sectanus for a warning." "See what scandal attaches to Trebonius." "Wiser men may teach you by precept and theory, my care shall be to watch over your practice till you are able to take care of yourself." If he would have me do something that was right, he would take one of the judices and say, "There is an example for you."
On the other hand, if he would prevent me from doing something wrong, he would say, "Can you doubt about its impropriety when you see the disgrace it has brought upon so and so? As the intemperate are checked by seeing their neighbour carried to the grave, so young persons are often kept from crime by the shame it brings upon others." Such was the training that has made me what I am, free from grave faults, if not from venial, and even these will diminish with time and reflection, which I practise every day. When I have leisure I put my thoughts into writing, which is one of my little sins; for which sin, if you will not make allowance, I shall bring all my pack to help me, and we shall make a convert of you whether you will or no.

Eupolis atque Cratinus Aristophanesque poëtae,
Atque alii quorum comicæ praesca vivorum est,
Si quis erat dignus describi quod malus ac fur,
Quod moecheus foret aut sicarius aut aliqui
Famosus, multa cum libertate notabant.

1. Eupolis atque Cratinus Aristophanesque] These three represent the Old Comedy, of which they were the acknowledged leaders. See Quintilian (x. 1): "Queros ejus auctores: Aristophanes tamen et Eupolis Cratinusque praecipui," and Persius (S. i. 123):

"— Audaci quicunque aflatne Cratino Iratum Eupolidem praegrandi cum sene palles."
The vigour and boldness of Cratinus' writings is described by Aristophanes (Knights, 526, sqq., and elsewhere), who was about seventy years his junior, though they were rivals the year before Cratinus' death, B.C. 453, when he won the first prize, and Aristophanes the third with the Clouds. The satire of Eupolis was also very unsparring, as we learn as well from other notices as from the story (true or false) that Alcibiades had him thrown overboard at sea for lampooning him. The other writers of the Old Comedy, whom Horace alludes to with respect, are very little known to us. Their names, with those of the writers of the Middle and New Comedy, may be found in Clinton (F. H. v. ii. pp. 36—47), and a few are noticed in Donaldson's Greek Theatre (pp. 106—114). The distinction was invented by the Alexandrine grammarians. The old ended with Aristophanes. The middle was supported chiefly by Eubulus, Antiphanes, Anaxandrides, and Alexis, and lasted over about fifty years of the fourth century B.C. Of the New Comedy, which the Romans imitated, the principal writers were Philemon, Menander, Diphilus (see Prol. Adelphi), and Posidippus, who was the last of the Greek comic poets, and died about B.C. 230. Schlegel (Dram. Lit. Lect. vii.) denies the existence of a Middle Comedy, with which question we are not concerned here, but need only observe that Horace fixes on the Comedia Prisca, because the subsequent phases of the Greek Comic Drama were not of the same personally satirical cast, the license granted to the old writers having been taken away by law. The new comedy was like our own, using the language of daily life to show in an amusing way the manners of the day, the follies of society, and the lighter infirmities of human nature; while the old dealt in invectives against social, political, or individual vices dressed up in grotesque language and images. It is to the language of the New Comedy that Horace refers in this satire, when he puts the question whether a comedy is or is not a poem. Between his own writings and the Old Comedy there is little or no analogy. The words 'poetae' and 'vivorum' are used emphatically, as below in S. 10. 16: "Illi scripta quibus comedia prisa viris est."

5. multa cum libertate notabant.] Cicero (de Repub. iv. 10) says that to the Greeks "fuit etiam lege concessum ut quod vellet comedia de quo vellet nominatum dicerc." All he could mean was, that during the period of the Old Comedy, the law did not interfere with this liberty, except upon two occasions (only one of which occurred during the time Aristophanes was writing), when psephisms were passed prohibiting the introduction upon the stage of living characters as objects of satire by name,—a restriction of no great force, since the substitution of a feigned name, slightly altered from the Hinc omnis pendet Lucilius, hosce secutus
Mutatis tantum pedibus numerisque, facetus, Emunctae naris, durus componere versus.
Nam fuit hoc vitiosus: in hora saepe ducentos
Ut magnum versus dictabat stans pede in uno.
Cum fluoret lutulentus erat quod tollere velles;

true, would make the allusions equally intellligible and more ridiculous. Neither of these psephisms lasted more than a couple of years. See S. i. 6. 14, n., on 'notare.'

6. Hinc omnis pendet Lucilius] 'Hinc' means 'upon them,' as 'unde' is elsewhere used with reference to persons. What Horace says of Lucilius in brief is this: that his whole strength was laid out on the satirizing of vice in the persons of living characters; that he especially imitated here-in the writers of the Old Comedy, only changing their metre; that he was funny and acute, but harsh in his style of verification; wordy and sometimes vulgar, in consequence of the haste with which he wrote and his impatience of the trouble of correcting. Familiar as Horace must have been with Lucilius' writings, this description may be taken as a correct one. It bears accuracy on the face of it as far as it goes, for the criticism touches only the surface, and the critic could not be mistaken, and is not to be supposed to have lied. In fact he says below (S. 10. 3) the most idolatrous admirer of Lucilius could not deny the truth of his statement, that his style was uncouth. He there also adds that Lucilius loved to mix up Greek words with his own language (v. 20), that he was good tempered, not-withstanding his satirical vein (v. 53), and again that he was very unreserved and frank (S. ii. i. 30—34). This is valuable testimony as to the character of Lucilius and his writings; and as other writers have neither added much to it nor successfully impugned it, and since the fragments of Lucilius that have come down to us are too short to form a very accurate opinion upon, but in some points at least (such as the absurd mixture of Greek and Latin) bear out Horace's statements, we may consider this satire and the others as useful contributions to the history of Roman literature.

7. Mutatis tantum pedibus] The writings of Lucilius appear to have been very early divided by the grammarians into thirty books, of which two-thirds were written in hexameter verse, and the rest in the iambic and trochaic measures.

8. Emunctae naris] "Significat sapientem quin e contrario munogosum stultum appellamus" (Acron). Porphyrian takes the words with 'versus,' and explains them to signify "elegantcs et deceteus;" the error there fore of Faccoliat and noticed by Oreali was not original. 'Munogosus,' Acron's word, is not found in the lexicons. 'Emunctae naris' is one who has his nose well wiped, and is therefore no driveller. Phaedrus explains it in his description of Aesopus, (l. iii. f. 3, v. 14):—

"Aeopbus ibi stans naris emunctae senex, Natura nunquam verba cui poterit dare."

'Emungere' is used by the comic writers for 'cheating,' as among other places (see Forcell.) in the fragment from the Epicerium of Caecilius quoted by Cicero de Am.

26:—

"Hodie me ante omnes comicos stultos senes
Versar is atque emunxeris lautissime."

"To wipe a man's nose for him, is to imply that he is a driveller who cannot do it for himself, and hence it means to 'outwit' and to 'cheat' him" (Long in loco). Others explain 'emunctae naris' as 'keen scented,' like a hound.

10. versus dictabat] See S. 10. 92, n. The words 'stans pede in uno' mean 'with the utmost facility,' or 'standing at ease,' as we might say. Heindorf compares the expression with the Greek proverbial phrases ὁμοῖοι ποιεῖν, ἐκ ναῦν ποιῆν, ἀμφότεροι ἀμφότεροι, meaning with all one's might; the first of which is quoted by Quintilian as a rustic saying (xii. 9, fin.): "Itaque in his actionibus omni, ut agricolae dicunt, pede standum est." Others explain 'stans pede in uno' to mean within the time a man could stand on one foot.

11. Cum fluoret lutulentus] 'Lutulentus' is explained by Acron as "sordidus; cui contrarium luculentus," which explanation combines two notions, dirtiness and obscurity. Lucilius may have imitated the obscenity of the old comedians; and in this, as in other respects, his verse may have been like a muddy stream. The word, no doubt, com-
Garrulus atque piger scribendi ferre laborem, Scribendi recte: nam ut multum nil moror. Ecce, Crispinus minimo me provocat: "Accipe, si vis Accipiam tabulas; detur nobis locum, hora, Custodes; videamus uter plus scribere possit."

"Di bene fecerunt inopis me quoque pusilli Finxerunt animi, raro et perpauca loquentis. At tu conclusas hiccinis folliisaurus, prehendit defects of taste as well as style. "Erat quod tollere velles" is oddly interpreted by the Scholiasts "ex quibus sunt nonnulla quae velis inde excerpere et pro tuis habere" (Porph.). "Erat quod velles imitari" (Acron). Cruquius Scholiast gives the same interpretation. Heindorf adopts that notion, which would not otherwise have been noticed here. Quintilian did not so understand the words when, differing with Horace he says (x. 1. 93): "Ab Horatio dissentio qui Lucilium flere luteum et esse aliquid quod tollere possis putat," where he uses the word 'possis' for 'velles,' quoting from memory. Horace's word 'velles' fixes the meaning of 'tollere' to 'remove,' even if the whole context did not do so. 'You would wish for the credit of the author to remove it.'

12. piper scribendi ferre laborem] 'Piper ferre' is a Greek construction common in the odes, but not so in the language of the Satires. (See C. i. 1. 18, n.) In C. iv. 14. 22, we have 'impiger' in the same construction: "Impiger hostium vexare tarnas."

14. Crispinus minimo] See S. i. 1. 120, n. "Minimo me provocat" Porphyrian interprets thus: "Sensus ex proverbiali con-suetudine ducit; solemnus enim dicere minimo me digito provocat cum volumus quem intelligi tantum valere minimo digito quantum alius totis viribus." Acron and Comm. Cruq. have the same idle talk. The proverb is probably their own invention. Erasmus, however, in his book of Proverbs, takes it up as meaning a contemptuous sort of challenge; and Lambinus also follows the Scholiasts: Cruquius does not. Bentley quotes a Scholium which gives the right sense. "Minimo provocare dicuntur ii qui in responsione (sponsione) plus permittant (promittant) quam exigant ab adversario." 'He offers me the greatest odds' is the meaning according to this interpretation, which Bentley adopts, as far as concerns the wager, but substitutes as his own conjecture 'nummo' for 'minimo,' as signifying that Crispinus was so poor he could only stake a sesstertius. I do not see any point in such an allusion to the man's poverty. His confidence of victory is the matter Horace means to illustrate. The MSS. are unanimous in favour of 'minimo,' and the Scholiasts and editors are equally so; and, if that reading be right, the interpretation above given must be right too. I do not see the connexion between this passage and 'nummo te addicere' (S. ii. 5. 109), which Bentley quotes in support of his alteration, and on the strength of which Orelli considers it a plausible conjecture.

15. Accipiam tabulas:] Here Bentley follows the reading of some MSS. which have 'accepie jam,' and he cannot help wondering that nearly all the editors should have taken up 'accepiam:' 'jam' he thinks exhibits the eagerness of the challenger, and his fear lest Horace, if he let him go on this occasion, should slip out of the contest altogether. For all this the passage affords no warrant. There is no eagerness or haste,—nothing more than a polite challenge to see which could write most verses in a given time. 'Take tablets if you please, and I will take them too.' The omission of the personal pronoun to express antithesis is nothing in familiar talk where there could be no mistake. 'Custodes' are umpires to see there is no foul play.

18. raro et perpauca loquentis.] Lam-binus, against all the MSS., introduced the reading 'loquentem,' which Bentley has adopted, and others after him. The received reading is very natural, and I see no occasion for altering it. 'The gods have done me a kindness in making me of a poor and unpretending disposition that speaks but seldom, and very little at a time.' This is intelligible. It is Horace's reply to the challenge, which he declines.

19. At tu conclusas] Persius imitates this S. v. 10:
Usque laborantes dum ferrum molliat ignis,
Ut mavis imitare.” Beatus Fannius ultro
Delatis capsis et imagine; cum mea nemo
Scripta legat volgo recitare timentis ob hanc rem,
Quod sunt quos genus hoc minime juvat, utpote plures
Culpari dignos. Quemvis media erue turba:

“Tu neque anhelanti coquitur dum, massa camino,
Folle premis ventos nec clauso murmure raucus;” &c.

21. Beatus Fannius] This is a doubtful passage. This Fannius is spoken of in another place (S. i. 10. 80) as a contemptible person and a parasite of Hermogenes Tigellus (S. 3. 129, n.). What the Scholiasts say of him is this: that he had the cogno-men Quadratus: that he was a poet full of words and folly; that the Senate made him a present of some ‘capsae’ (book-boxes) and a bust of himself; that when he was dying he desired his books and book-cases to be burnt publicly; otherwise, that he was a writer of Satire, and childless, and that certain persons, hoping to be remembered in his will, got his busts and his books deposited in the public libraries, to which honour his own merits did not entitle them. Wherever all this came from, it is of no value at all for determining Horace’s meaning in this passage. Lambinus follows the Scholiasts so far as to suppose that Fannius was honoured by a spontaneous present (‘ultra;’ see C. iv. 4. 51, n.) on the part of the “populus sive senatus” of a set of book-boxes and a bust, as a mark of public respect. And Turenbus says, “Fannium nescio quem poetaem cujus libros Romani et armario et capsae, ipsum imagine donant, praecelcum praedicit.”
But who ever heard of such a thing? and who was this Fannius that he should have been thus distinguished? It appears pro-able, from Horace’s words, that Fannius had his admirers, as rant and emptiness will always have, and that they made him a present, by way of a testimonial as it is called, of a set of handsome ‘capsae’ and a bust. The ‘capsa’ was a round box suited to hold one or more rolled volumes. The larger sort was called ‘scrinium.’ (See Smith’s Dict. Ant.) Neither ‘capsae’ nor ‘scrinia’ are to be confounded with ‘ar-maria,’ which were cupboards, not boxes,
but also used for books, though not confined to that purpose any more than ‘capsae’ were. What the Scholiasts say about Fannius’ bust having been placed in the various public libraries is not inconsistent with usage. Asinius Pollio built a library a.p. c. 715, or thereabouts, and placed in it portraits and busts of various distinguished men, and the practice was thenceforward observed not only in the public libraries, but in those of private persons. Martial, writing to his friend Avitus, sends him an inscription for his own bust, which Avitus was going to put with others in his library:

“How tibi sub nostra breve carmen imagine vivat,
Quam non obscuris jungis, Avite,
viris.” (ix. 1.)

23. volgo recitare timentis] See note on v. 73. The usage which leaves the personal pronoun to be inferred from the possessive is common both in Greek and Latin. (See C. iii. 22. 6.) Compare Arist. Plut. 33:

τὸν ἰμῶν μὲν αὐτοῦ τοῦ ταλαίπωρον σχέδον ἡδὴ νομίζου ἐκτεταξεθαί βιὸν, and Ovid (Heroid. v. 45): “Et fleti, et nostros visisti flentes ocellos.” ‘Timeo’ and ‘meteo’ do not govern an infinitive mood in the prose writings of Horace’s

day. ‘Veroor’ is used in that construction.
Torriens asks why Horace’s works should not be read because he was afraid to recite them in public? Was it because the multitude follow popular applause which is drawn forth by public display? The reason Horace gives is the same that deters him from reciting his poems, that no one likes to see any more than to hear his own vices exposed. People are not at all fond of ‘genus hoc,’ this satirical sort of writing, because most are open to blame. He has particular classes, or persons perhaps, in his eye, when he says ‘sunt quos’ (C. i. 13. n.); but he speaks otherwise generally. That Horace wrote many pieces which have not been preserved, appears to me clear from this passage and v. 71, sqq. See Introduction.

25. Quemvis media erue turba:] Orelli, who adopts ‘erue,’ does not give the MS.
authority for it. Fea quotes several MSS.
in its favour; Bentley but three. The
HORATII FLACCI

Aut ob avaritiam aut miseram ambitione laborat.
Hic nuptarum insanit amoribus, hic puerorum;
Hunc capiti argenti splendor; stupet Albius aere;
Hic mutat merces surgente a sole ad eum quo
Vespertina tepet regio, quin per mala praecess.

Scholiasts had ‘elige,’ and that is the reading of Ven. 1463. The earliest edition that has ‘erue’ appears to be that of Aldus (1501), from which time all the editors, I believe, adopted it till Talbot returned to the old reading, which Bentley adopts, but considers it may be a gloss, and substituted for ‘arripe,’ which he proposes. Three of the Blandian MSS. had ‘eripe,’ which he thinks supports his conjecture. Sanadon adopts ‘arripe,’ though its author does not. It is difficult to decide. ‘Erue’ is an unlikely word to have been coined, and ‘elige’ would form a good gloss upon it. ‘Erruem’ would signify ‘digging out,’ or bringing out something hidden, as in Lucret. (v. 279):

“Si unumquidvis paulatim protrahit aetas
In medium, ratioque in luminis eruit oras.”

But it may bear the simple meaning of ‘extrahere.’ The true reading, in my opinion, lies between ‘erue’ and ‘elige,’ and I am rather inclined to agree with Stephens, who says (Diatr. ii. p. 59), ‘pro ‘erue’ quidam codd. habent ‘elige’ quod e glossa sumptum videri potest.”

26. Aut ob avaritiam] There is a change of construction or an ellipse here which has led some later editors to change ‘ob’ into ‘ab’ with the ablative. There is no MS. authority for ‘ab avaritiae’; for though Marcilius (ap. Bentley) edits it “tanquam ex membranis,” such assertions are always to be suspected where the MSS. are not named, and are unsupported, as here. Bentley adopts ‘ob,’ and is quite indignant: “indignandum plane—quod edictores toties admonit pur merum et scabiei impune adhuc prodire patiuntur,” where the ‘pus et scabies’ is the received reading. “Labore ob’ every one will see is an unusual construction, but the reading of all the MSS. is not on that account to be rejected. The sentence begins with one form of expression and ends with another: that appears to be all. Orelli quotes Tacit. (Hist. ii. 50): “non noxa neque ob metum;” and Livy (xxxvii. 39): “non tam ob recencia ulla merita quam originum memoria.” For ‘misera’ some MSS. quoted by Orelli and Fea have ‘miser,’ but the principal MSS. and editions have ‘misera,’ and ‘ambitio’ generally had an epithet of a strong kind applied to it. Horace has ‘prava,’ ‘inani,’ ‘mala,’ ‘miser,’ and Cicero (de Off. i. 26) says, “Miserrima est omnino ambitio honorumque contentio.” The practice therefore seems to have been habitual, which, if we consider the evils that arose out of personal ambition, and the eagerness with which places of honour were sought at all times of the Republic, is not surprising.

28. Hunc capiti argenti splendor;] Cups and other vessels curiously wrought in silver and Corinthian brass, and very costly (such as Juvenal describes, S. i. 76, “Argentum vetus, et stantem extra pocula caprum”) were among the many objects of extravagance at Rome. The exaggerated admiration of the persons Horace alludes to, for such works of art, might be comparatively harmless if it did not lead them into dishonest ways of acquiring them, and beggar their families, as Albius did, of whom the Scholiasts tell us nothing. His son is mentioned below (v. 108) as living in want through his father’s extravagance. Cruquius reverses this, and supposes the father to be suffering for the son’s extravagance, the father being no other than the poet Albius Tibullus, and to have suffered in his property through his son’s extravagance, in respect of which misfortune Horace wrote the Epistle i. 4, to comfort him. This is mere trifling: though Tibullus mentions himself that his patrimonial estate had been reduced (i. 1. 19, sq.), and some persons have assumed that it was through his own extravagance. ‘Stupet,’ with the ablative, occurs below (S. 6. 17): “Qui stupet in titulis et imaginibus;” and an equally strong word is used in the same connexion in S. ii. 7. 95: “Pausiana torpes insane tabella.”

surgente a sole, &c.] This has been taken variously from mean to sunrise to sunset, as “Dives et importunitas ad umbram solis ab ortu” (Epp. ii. 2. 185), or from east to west (“ad ortum Solis ab Hesperio cubili,” C. iv. 15. 15), which seems to be the true meaning. ‘Mutare merces’ can hardly be applied to any but a mercator. See Persius (Sat. v. 54):
Furtur uti pulvis collectus turbine, ne quid
Summa deperdata metuens aut amplet ut rem.
Omnes hi metuunt versus, odere poëtas.

"Foenum habet in cornu; longe fuge: dummodo risum
Exeuti at sibi non hic cuiquain parcert amico ;
Et quod cuoque semel chartis ille verit omnes
Gestiet a furo redente seire lacuque Et puerus et anus." Agedum, pausa accipe contra.
Primum ego me illorum dederim quibus esse poëtis

"Mercibus hic Italus mutat sub sole recenti Rugosam piper et pallentiam grana cumini."

'Mala' means dangers and hardships.

34. Foenum habet in cornu;] "Romae antem videmus hodie quoque foenum velut ansulam factum in cornulo bovis" (Porph.).
A law of the XII tables gave an action to any man who was injured by a vicious animal: "Si quadrupes pauperium fecisse dicatur" (Dig. 3. tit. 1), where "pauperies
est damnun sine injuria faciens datum."
It became customary, therefore, that any ox or other animal of vicious propensities should be marked in such a way as to warn passengers, and enable them to get out of its way. Hence the proverb "he has a wisp of hay on his horn."
Plut. (Crassus, c. 7) says, Σεινύνος πρὸς τὸν ti ἐπάντα τι ἐς μώνον ως σαράντι τον Κράσσουν, χόρτον ἵξειν φηνοι ὕπτι τοῦ κήσατος. He adds in another place (Quaest.
Rom. p. 281) ὃ μην ἀλλ' ὑπετοῦν ἱλιθή
πάλιν ὅτι Κράσσου Κάσσαρ ἀφρόηι τὸν χόρτον, ἀντίστατα γὰρ αὐτὸς πρῶτος ἐπὶ τῆς πολιτικῆς καὶ κατεφθάνησα. In illustration of the proverb he quotes a fragment of Sophocles:——

οὐ ἐς σφαδαίζεις πῶλος ως εφορβία, γαστῆρ τε γὰρ σου καὶ γνάθος πλήρης——

'Dummodo risum excutiat sibi' corresponds almost in words with Aristotle's description of the bufoon (Nic. Eth. 1. iv. c. 14): ὃ ἐς βωμόλαχος ἠτίμων ἱπποῦ τοῦ γέλαου καὶ οὕτοι ιαυτὸ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἄλλων ἀπέχθειον οἱ γέλωτα τοιχεῖαι. ' Furnus ' is the bakehouse to which the lower sort of people, old women and children, carried their bread to be baked. ' Lacus ' were tanks distributed in all parts of the city, into which water was conveyed from the aqueducts, and to which poorer persons resorted who could not afford to have water laid on at their houses. See Terence (Adelph. iv. 2. 45):
"Apud ipsum lacum est pistrilla" (a corn-mill). See articles 'Castellum' and 'Aqua Ductus,' in Smith's Dict. Ant.

38. Agedum;] 'Dum,' as an enclitic, signifies 'a while,' 'agedum,' 'come a moment.' (See Key's L. G. 1448, d.).

39. Primum ego me illorum 'Primum means 'in the first place, before I begin, let me dispose of the fallacy which classes writers like myself among poets (the word assumed above, 'Omnes hi metuunt versus, odere poëtas,' v. 33). This question occupies twenty-four verses, after which he returns to the main point, which is the odium attaching to writers of Satire. In this line 'poetas' appears in all the MSS.
and editions till Bentley, who restored the ture reading 'poëtis,' N. Heinsius having, without Bentley's knowledge, done the same. The Scholiasts found 'poetas,' and Porphyry on S. 6. 25, "Quo tibi, Tilli, Sumere depositum clavum fierique tribuno?"
where the MSS. vary between the dative and accusative, adopts the former case, but says the latter would have been the simpler construction. The Scholium of Cruquius' Commentator, on the passage just quoted, is ' tibi Tribuno ' dixit eleganter et figure ut supra ' dederim quibus esse poëtis ';
which remark is attributed by Bentley and Orelli to Acron, but does not appear in Ascensius' text of that Scholiast. It is more probably from another hand; for the remark contradicts the commentary of both these Scholiasts on the passage before us, where the reading 'poëtis' is expressly assumed. Nevertheless I believe the dative to be right, since all the known MSS.
agree against it. Like instances are S. i. 1.
19: "atqui licet esse beatis;" i. 2. 51:
"munifico esse licet;" A. P. 372: "Medio-cribus esse poëtis Non Di non homines non concessere columnae."
Heindorf has
'poetas.'—Examples of 'excipere' in the sense of ' excipere ' will be found in Forcell.
The expression 'conclude versum ' is repeated below (S. 10. 59: "si quis pedibus quid Claudius sensis," "Sermoni: quoti-
HORATII FLACCI

Excerptam numero: neque enim concludere versum
Dixeris esse satis; neque si qui scribat uti nos
Sermoni propria: putes hunc esse poëtam.
Ingenium cui sit, cui mens divinior atque os
Magna sonatunum, des nominis hujus honorem.
Idecirco quidam comoedia necne poëma
Esset quasivere, quod acer spiritus ac vis
Nec verbis nec rebus inest, nisi quod pede certo
Differt sermoni sermo merus. At pater ardens
Saevit, quod meretrice nepos insanus amica
Filius uxorem grandi cum dote recuset,

diano” (Porph.), which word is supplied in Cic. (Orat. 20): “Video visum esse nonnullis Platonis et Democriti locationem, etsi abest a verum, tamen quod incitatius feratur et clarissimis verborum luminibus utatur, potius poëma putandam quam comini corum poëtarum, apud quos, nisi quod ver-siculi sunt, nihil est aliquid quotidiani dissimilile sermone.” Hence the name ‘Ser-mones’ given to the Satires and Epistles.
Si qui’ is the reading of some of the Vatican MSS., one of the Berne, and two of Bentley’s. The editions and most MSS.
have ‘quis.’

43. as Magna sonatunum,] This form does not appear elsewhere in this word. Cicero uses ‘praestatura,’ and Sall. (Jug. 47) ‘juvaturas.’ Priscian (l.c. ii.) quotes ‘sonatunum’ as irregular. Horace has ‘intonata’ in Epod. ii. 61. The attributes of a poet Horace considers essential, are genius, inspiration, and dignified sentiments, and language suited to high subjects. See Virg. (G. iii. 294): “Vix, venenranda Pales, magno non uere sonandum.” Lambinus quotes from Petronius Arbiter the following sensible remarks on this subtect: “Multos, inquit Eumolpus, juvenes carmen decepit: nam ut quisque versum pedibus instruxit, sensumque teneriore (tentiore?) verborum ambitu intextus, putavit se Heliconem venisse. Sic forensibus minis-terius exerciti frequenter ad carminis tran-quilitatem tanquam ad portum faciliorem confugerunt credentes facilius poëma exstrui posse quam controversiam umbrantibus sententiosis pictam. Ceterum neque generosior spiritus sanitatem amat, neque coneci-pere aut edere partum mens potest nisi ingenti flumine literarum inundant.”

45. Idecirco quidam] In reference to this certain persons have raised the question whether a comedy was or was not a poem:
“utrum comoedia esset poëma necne esset” (see Key’s L. G. 1423). This is a gram-marian’s question, and depends upon the definition assumed for a poem, in which however imagination is generally supposed to have a conspicuous place, and this would exclude the comedies of Plautus and Terence, and their Greek originals of the new comedy, from the title of poetry. But the same rule would exclude much more that has passed for poetry, with less pretension to the name than Horace’s Satires or the Heautontimorumenos. ‘Quidam’ signifies the grammarians of Alexandria, who are also referred to by Cicero in the extract given in a late note (v. 38), “video visum esse nonnullis,” &c.

48. Differt sermoni] ‘Discrepare,’ ‘dissidere,’ ‘distare,’ ‘differre,’ Horace uses with the dative (see C. i. 27. 5, n.), but the two last also with the ablative and ‘ab.’ “It must not be supposed, however, that ‘from’ can in any way be the signification of the dative” (Key’s L. G. 978, n.), which remark Professor Key applies to the analogous construction in use by the poets with verbs of taking away.

At pater ardens] Demea in the Adelphi and Plautus’s Teuropides are instances in point. ‘At,’ which usually in such places introduces an objection, here seems to be the remark of one who supposed, that the fury and ranting of the enraged father in the comedy might be supposed to partake of the fire of poetry. But Horace disposes of the objection very easily. Any father who had such a son as Pomponius for instance (of whom we know nothing more), a dissolute youth, would probably storm at him in much the same terms that the man on the stages uses. It was the aim of the New Comedy, which the Roman writers followed, to put real life upon the stage by means of a plot natural and probable, and to represent men and women as they were Ebrius et, magnum quod dedecus, ambulet ante
Noctem cum facibus. Numquid Pomponius istis Audiret leviora pater si viveret? Ergo
Non satis est puris versum perscribere verbis,
Quem si dissolvas, quivis stomachetur eodem
Quo personatus pacto pater. His ego quae nunc, Olim quae scripsit Lucilius, eripias si
Tempora certa modosque, et quod prius ordine verbum est
Posterius facias, praeponens ultima primis,
Non ut si solvas "Postquam Discordia tetra Belli ferratos postes portasque refregit"
Invenias etiam disjicta membra poëtae.
Hactenus haec: alias justum sit necne poëma,
Nunc illud tantum quaeram, meritone tibi sit Suspectum genus hoc scribendi. Sulcius acer Ambulat et Caprius rauci male cunque libellis,
Magnus uterque timor latronibus; at bene si quis
Et vivat puris manibus contemnatis utrumque.
Ut sis tu similis Caëlir Birrique latronum,
Non ego sum Capri neque Sulci: cur metuas me?
Nulla taberna meos habeat neque pila libellos, seen and heard every day, in which it differed essentially from the Old Comedy, a mere vehicle for political satire. (See above, v. 1, n.).
54. puris—verbis.] This is a common expression for plain language free from any mixture of tropes or other ornament. See Terence (Héaut. ProI. 44):—
"Si quae laborio sae est ad me curritur:
Si lenis est ad alium defertur gregem.
In hac est pura oratio."
and in Gellius (xiii. 28) Quadrigarius the historian is mentioned as a man "modesti atque puri ac prope quotidiani sermonis."
So Cicero (in Verr. ii. 4. 22) speaks of "purum argentum," plate with the ornamental work taken off. 'Pura' is a various reading for 'pulchra' in A. P. 99: "Non satis est pulchra esse poëmata; dulcia sunto."
60. Postquam Discordia tetra] The Scholiasts imply that this is a verse of Ennius, but they do not say from what poem it is taken: "Non c endemic gravitatem invenies quam in Ennii versus et Pacuvii soluto" (Acron). Virgil (Aen. i. 294) has "claudentur belli portae." As to the position of 'non' see S. 6. 1.
63. alias justum sit necne poëma.] The question is not resumed, though we may perceive that Horace does not consider that his arguments have quite settled it. (See Argument.)
65. Sulcius acer Ambulat et Caprius.] These persons are said by the Scholiasts to have been public informers or 'causidici,' ("all actores volunt fuisse causarum," Acron), and to have made themselves hoarse with roaring in the Courts. The 'libelli' they carried were their note-books. 'Ambulat' signifies their strutting through the streets with the consciousness that men were afraid of them. The palmy days of the 'delatores' had not yet come, but they were sufficiently abundant in Horace's time.
Caélius and Birrus (Byrrbius, Birrus) are said by Acron to have been profligate youths, meaning probably that they were young men of fortune who had run through their money and had taken to robbing.
'Ut sis,' 'say that,' which requires the indicative in the next verse, where the greater part of the MSS. and editions have 'non ego sim.' 'Sulcius' is variously written 'Sulgium,' 'Fulgium,' 'Fulcius,' 'Vulgius,' 71. Nulla taberna meos habeat] The 'taberna' was sometimes under a porticus,
Quis manus insudet volgi Hermogenisque Tigelli:
Nec recito cu quam nisi amicis, idque coactus,
Non ubivis coramve quibuslibet. In medio qui Scripta foro recitent sunt multi quique lavantes:
Suave locus voci resonat conclusus. Inanes
Hoc juvat, haud illud quaerentes, num sine sensu, Tempore num faciant alieno. "Laedere gaudes,"

in which case the titles of the books for sale within were hung upon the columns ('pilae') in front. Horace alludes to this when he says (A. P. 372): "Mediocribus esse poetis Non Dii, non homines, non concessere columnae," which means that indifferent poets would not be patronised by the booksellers. Martial advises his friend Lupercus to go and buy a copy of his Epigrams at the shop of one Atrectus, which he describes thus:

"Contra Caesaris est forum taberna,
Scriptis postibus hinc et inde totis,
Omnes ut cito perlegas poetas."

(i. 118)

The price of his book he says was five 'denarii' (about three and sixpence). How much he had then published does not appear. Becker (Gallus, Exc. on the Booksellers) assumes that it was the first book, containing 119 Epigrams, which he implies would be very cheap at that price; but as this Epigram is one of the 119, Becker must be mistaken. 'Habeat' expresses a wish. On Hermogenes Tigelius, see S. 3. 129, n.

73. Nec recito cu quam] Some MSS., known only to Lambinus, had 'nec recitum,' which Bentley adopts to maintain uniformity in the verbs 'sim,' 'habeat,' and 'recitum.' All other known MSS. have 'nec recito,' excepting four of Lambinus', which had 'non recito,' the received reading in his day. From one Oxford MS. (Magdalen) Bentley reads 'quicum' for 'cu quam,' the reading of all the other MSS. The example said to have been set by Pollio (C. ii. 1, Introduction), of reading his works to a circle of friends for their criticism and amusement before they were published, may have already begun to be imitated by other writers. The practice grew to be an intolerable nuisance in the course of time, as we gather, among others, from Persius (S. i. 15, sqq.), Juvenal (i. 1, sqq.; vii. 40; xiii. 32), Martial (ii. 27, &c.). Persons who had money and dabbled in literature inflicted their productions upon their clients and others whom they bribed to listen and applaud them. The author of the Dialogue de Oratore, attributed to Tacitus (c. 9), speaks with contempt of one Saleius Bassus, a poetaster, mentioned by Juvenal (vii. 80), who went about praying people to listen to his recitations, and went to the expense of hiring and preparing a room for the purpose. But if Pollio was the originator of this practice, as he is said to have been, it could hardly yet have grown into the system it afterwards became, even if it had any systematic existence at all. What Horace goes on to complain of are silly fellows spouting their own verses in public places (the forum and the baths) to chance acquaintances, or even strangers, and annoying the neighbours while they gratified themselves. I do not think Orelli is right in associating this passage with the recitations above referred to, or in saying "qui vel in medio foro, id est dempta hyperbola coram maxima auditorum corona carmina recitaret." I think Horace means literally in the forum. Orelli supposes a knot of friends assembled on the 'schola' round the 'labrum' for the purpose of listening to the self-satisfied reciter. The 'scholae' were spaces for people to sit or walk on round the baths generally, not merely round the 'labrum,' which was a bath of small dimensions attached to the principal hot-baths (see Becker's Gallus, Exc. 'on the Baths'). On these 'scholae' people walked about, and conceited authors could tease their acquaintance and the strangers that were compelled to listen to them, and in the act of bathing they could do the same. Seneca (Ep. 57) speaks of the annoyance of one "cui vox sua in balneo placet."

77. haud illud quaerentes.] 'Illud' is thus used commonly to introduce something about to be mentioned. See Key's L. G. 1106.

78. Laedere gaudes, Inquit.] Horace has said that even if he does write or recite it is only in a private way, and no one therefore need he afraid of him. He now Inquit, "et hoc studio pravus facis." Unde petitum
Hoc in me jacis? Est auctor quis denique eorum Vixi cum quibus? Absentem qui rodit amicum;
Qui non defendit alio culpante; solutos
Qui captat risus hominum famamque dicacis;
Fingere qui non visa potest; commissa tacere
Qui nequit; hic niger est, hunc tu, Romane, caveto.
Saepe tribus lectis videas coenare quaternos,
E quibus unus amet quavis adspergere cunctos
Præter eum qui praebet aquam; post hunc quoque potus,
Condita cum verax apertis praecordia Liber.
Hic tibi comis et urbanus liberque videtur,
Infesto nigris. Ego si nisi quod ineptus
Pastillos Rufillus olet, Gargonius hircunm, Lividus et mordax videor tibi? Mentio si qua
De Capitolini furtis injecta Petilli

disposes of the charge of writing with malicious intent. The editions till Bentley's all have 'inquis.' Two MSS. of Torren- tius, which he calls 'vetustissimi codices,' had 'inquis,' and that is the usual formula, even when the second person has preceded or follows, as Bentley has shown by several examples. 'Studio' is used adverbially, 'of set purpose in your malignity you do it.'

80. Est auctor quis denique eorum] The commentators take 'quis' variously as an interrogative or an enclitic. The Scholiasts take it in the former sense. Heindorf and Orelli in the latter. It is not easy to decide. Doering leaves it an open question. As to 'auctor,' see C. i. 28. 14, n.

84. commissa tacere Qui nequit.] This, which is too commonly softened into a weakness, the inability to keep a secret, Horace very justly marks as one of the most prominent signs of a mischievous character. See C. iii. 2. 25, n. On 'Romane,' see C. iii. 6. 2, n.

86. Saepe tribus lectis] This would be an unusually large party at one table. Three on each 'lectus triclinaris' was the usual number when the table was full. Respecting the arrangement of the guests, see Becker's Gallus, Exc. on the 'Triclinium,' and the article on that subject in Smith's Dict. Ant. See also S. ii. 6. 20, n.

87. E quibus unus amet] Some of Fea's MSS. and three quoted by Orelli, have 'imis' for 'unus,' and Fea adopts it, quoting Epp. i. 18. 10, "imi derisor lecti," and Petronius (c. 38), "Vides illum qui in imo imus recumbit?" But this does not prove that Horace could have said 'imus conviva' to represent any one individual of the four who were reclining on the 'imus lectus.' The received reading is followed by all the editors I believe but Fea. 'Avet' was the received reading, and that of all the editions I have seen, as well as of the Scholiast Porphyrian, till Bentley adopted 'amet' from one of Croquius' Blandinian MSS., and I have no doubt that is the right word, in the same sense as "umbram hospitalentis consociare amant" (C. ii. 3. 10): "Quavis: qua ratione vis" (Acron). 'Qui praebet aquam' is used for the host "qui aquam temperat igibus." See C. iii. 19. 6. n. On 'verax Liber,' see C. i. 18. 16. A fragment of Alcaeus (56 Bergk) runs cino̊c ὥ φιλοι παῖ καὶ ἀλέθεα, which the Scholiast on Plato (p. 377, Becker) speaks of as a proverb. Theoricus (29. 1) uses Alcaeus' words, adding λυθαι. "In vino veritas" is the well known Latin equivalent. Compare A. P. 434: "Reges dicuntur multis urgere culullis Et torquere mero quem perspexisse laborant." And Epp. i. 18. 38: "Commissumque teges et vino tortus et ira." 5. 10: "Quid non ebrietatis designat? operta recludit."

92. Pastillos Rufillus olet,] This verse is quoted from a former satire (2. 27), only to show the innocent subjects with which Horace's satire dealt.

94. De Capitolini furtis] Petullius Capitolinus cum Capitolii curam aget
Te coram fuerit, defendas ut tuus est mos.

"Me Capitolinum convictore usus amicoque
A puero est causaque mea permulta rogatus
Fecit, et incolunmis laetor quod vivit in urbe;
Sed tamen admiror, quo pacto judicium illud
Fugerit."  Hic nigrae succus loliginis, haec est Aerugo mera.  Quod vitium procul afore chartis
Atque animo prius, ut si quid promittere de me
 Possum aliud vere, promitto.  Liberius si
Dixerò quid, si forte jocosius, hoc mihi juris
Cum venia dabis: insuevit pater optimus hoc me,
Ut fugerem exemplis vitiorum quaeque notando.
Cum me hortaretur, parce, frugaliter, atque
coronae subreptae de Capitolio causam dixit, absolutusque a Caesar est" (Porphyrioum).  "Cujus amicus erat," adds
Cruquius' Schollast, who says he was called Capitolinus from his imputed offence.  But this was probably a cognomen of the Pet-tilia gens.  Lambinus mentions having seen at Rome a silver coin, having on the reverse a representation of the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, and the name of Petil-lius.  On the obverse was Jupiter's head with Capitolinus round it.  Such a coin is represented in the notice of this person in Smith's Dict. Biog.  The story of the crown is very likely to have been invented.
That he was tried on some serious charge and acquitted, and that the verdict did not escape scandal, is clear from the context.
See also S. 10. 26.  The nature of the accusation, notwithstanding the precise story of the Scholiasts, must remain a matter of doubt.  We may also gather that he was a person of influence from v. 97, which he must have been if he was acquitted, or supposed to have been acquitted, through the corruption of the jury.  There is sarcasm in 'sed tamen admiror,' &c., which Horace calls 'succus loliginis,' the dark secretion of the cuttle-fish, black and malignant.
"Aerugo mera," nothing but copper-rust that eats into character and destroys it.
Compare Martial (x. 33. 5): —

"Ut tu, si viridi tinctos aerugine versus Forte malus livor dixerit esse meos,
Ut facias, a nobis abigas."

102. "Ut si quid" There is a little obscurity in the construction, but the sense is plain.  'I promise, as I truly can, if I can promise of myself aught else with truth.'

'Promitto, ut vere possum si aliud quid vere de me promittere possum.'

104. hoc mihi juris] 'So much liberty as this'— 'hoc ius' would not do.
105. insuevit pater optimus hoc me,] 'suscesco' and its compounds have an active as well as a neuter signification, taking usually an accusative of the person and dative of the thing, which order is inverted in Virg. (Aen. vi. 833), "Ne, pueri, ne tanta animis assuiscete bella." See Forcellini for examples, and below, S. ii. 2. 109:
"Pluribus assueris mentem corpusque superbos." I am not aware of any instances of a double accusative after 'suscesco' except this, and I do not know why Horace should have written 'hoc' instead of 'huic,' or
'me' instead of 'mi,' like Virgil's construction above.  Lambinus alters the received reading into 'insuevit pater optimus hoc mi,' and for 'insuevit' there is some MS.
authority.  But it is not likely to be the right word here.  If any alteration were made I should prefer leaving 'insuevit' and altering 'me.' If 'me' is retained, the construction is that of the Greeks, who said ἴθι µητίν τι τύα.  Bentley is clearly wrong in rendering 'hoc' with 'fugere.'
Its position is against that construction, and moreover it gives no sense.  Orelli applies 'notando' to Horace himself.  'My excellent father accustomed me to this, that I should avoid, by means of examples, each particular vice by noting it (as it came before me);'
but 'notando' seems to have more of the technical sense, and applies to the father, who taught his son to avoid vices, by branding them in each instance by means of examples. See S. i. 6. 14, n., on 'notare.'
Viverem uti contentus eo quod mi ipse parasset:

"Nonne vides Albi ut male vivat filius, utque Barrus inops? Magnum documentum ne patriam rem Perdere quis velit." A turpi meretricis amore Cum deterreret: "Scetani dissimilis sis."

Ne sequerem moechas concessa cum venere uti
Possem: "Depressi non bella est fama Treboni," Aiebat. "Sapiens vitatu quidque petitu
Sit melius causas reddet tibi: mi satis est si
Traditum ab antiquis morem servare tuamque,
Dum custodis egens, vitam famamque tueri
Incolunem possum; simul ac duraverit aetas Membra animumque tuum nabis sine cortice." Sic me

Formabat puerum dictis; et sive jubebat
Ut facerem quid: "Habes auctorem quo facias hoc;"

Unum ex judicibus selectis objiebat;

108. quod mi ipse parasset: Horace's father had lived a life of frugal industry, and in addition to any 'peculium' he may have laid by as a 'servus,' he made enough money by his occupation of 'coactor' (S. 6. 86) to purchase a farm of no great value at Venusia, to pay for his son's education at Rome, and enable him to continue it at Athens.

109. Albi ut male vivat filius] See above, v. 28, n. The MSS. and editions vary between the forms Barrus, Bartus, Barus, Varus, Rarus, Bains, of which the last is said to be most common. Estré follows Bentley in reading Barus. This person, at any rate, of whom nothing is known, is to be distinguished from the coxcomb in the sixth satire (v. 30). But though Bentley edits Barus, he proposes the emendation 'ut qui panis inops,' or 'farris inops,' out of his own head,—plainly an attempt to improve Horace. That a proper name was there in the time of the oldest of the Scholiasts, Acron, appears from his note: "Mira urbanitate dum quasi ostendit quomodo se pater suis monitis monere solitus esset interea multos percutit." Scetanius (otherwise Sectorius) is not more known than Barrus. Trebonius was the name of a plebeian gens of some distinction, but which of them Horace alludes to it is impossible to say. Even the Scholiasts are silent. He appears to have been the hero of some notorious bit of scandal, and to have paid a severe penalty for his vice.

110. Sapiens vitatu quidque petitu] Horace's father had no mind to refine upon the foundation of morals, nor any pretension to a philosophical view of these matters. He knew that right was right and wrong was wrong, and followed the beaten track, and would have his son do the same. Horace expresses the same below, S. 6:—

"—— Quid multa? pudicum,
Qui primus virtutis honos, servavit ab omni
Non solum facto verum opprobrio quoque turpi."

The whole of the passage there should be compared with this. The older Horace was no doubt a plain sensible man.

121. Formabat] This is Horace's usual word for education. C. i. 10. 2: "Qui feros cultus hominum recentem Voce formasti." See C. iii. 24. 54, n.

123. Unum ex judicibus selectis] It was the duty of the Praetor Urbanus annually to select a certain number of persons whose names were registered in the Album Judicum Selectorum, and from whom were chosen by lot the 'judices' for each trial. It is uncertain whether at this time, or by a subsequent 'lex' of Augustus, their functions were extended to civil as well as criminal proceedings. The number of these 'judices' varied. By the 'lex Servilia Glabria Repetundarum' it was fixed at 450. The law that was in force at the time Horace refers to was the 'lex Aurelia,' by which the Judices Selecti were made eligible from the Senators, Equites, and Tribuni Aerarii. The changes that took place in respect to the Judices, and the frequent Sive vetabit: "An hoc in honestum et inutille factum Necne sit addubites, flagret rumore malo cum Hic atque ille? Avidos vicinum funus et aegros Exanimat, mortisque metu sibi par cere cogit;
Sic teneros animos aliena opprobria saepe
Abserrent vitiis." Ex hoc ego sanus ab illis Perniciem quaecunque ferunt, mediocribus et quis
Ignoscas vitiis teneor; fortassis et istinc
Largiter abstulerit longa aetas, liber amicus,
Consilium proprium; neque enim cum lectulus aut me
Porticus excepit desum mihi. "Rectius hoc est:
Hoc faciens vivam melius: Sic dulcis amicus
Occurrat: Hoc quidam non belle: numquid ego illi
Imprudens olim faciam simile?" Haec ego mecum Compressis agito labris; ubi quid datur oti
Illudo chartis. Hoc est mediocribus illis
Ex vitiis unum; cui si concedere nolis
Multa poëtarum veniat manus auxilio quae shifting of the judicial power between the Senate and the Equites, are stated very clearly in Mr. Long's Excursus on the 'Judicia' (Cic. in Verr. p. 45). Horace's father, as plain men are wont, looked up with reverence to the body in whom were vested such high functions; but the office was not an enviable one, nor always most purely exercised. See C. iv. 9. 39, n. As to 'auctor,' see above, v. 60.

124. An hoc in honestum] Heindorf says 'an' is here put for 'utrum,' and opposed to 'necem.' His editor Wüstemann corrects him, and properly joins 'an' with 'addubites.' 'Avidos' signifies intemperate, as in C. i. 18. 11.

129. Ex hoc ego sanus] Horace says that owing to his father's training (ex hoc) he had been kept in a sound and healthy state, and preserved from those vices which in their worst form bring destruction, but which in a moderate degree may be overlooked. He implies that in this venial form he is liable to these faults; but even from that smaller measure time, the candour of friends, and reflection, will deduct a good deal. The sentence is a little irregular, but sufficiently intelligible. 'Consilium proprium' is the counsel a man takes with himself when he reviews his life, and is bent upon correcting the errors of it. This sort of reflection a man may pursue, if he be in earnest, either as he lies on his bed (see below, S. 6. 122, n.), or as he walks abroad, alone among crowds. By 'porticus' Horace means any one of the public porticoes, covered walks, of which there was a great number at Rome, and which were usually crowded by persons of all sorts resorting thither for exercise, conversation, or business.

137. olim] See C. ii. 10. 17, n.

139. Illudo chartis.] Forcelli interprets this as if it meant, 'I amuse myself with writing,' and quotes S. ii. 8. 62: "Ut semper gaudeat illudere rebus Humanis!" It rather means, 'I put it down in my notes by way of amusement.' As to 'chartae,' see S. ii. 3. 2, n.

141. Multa poëtarum veniat manus] I do not see why, against a large number of MSS. and the common usage of the language, Orelli insists upon reading 'veniet.' Though Horace in his odes uses the construction with the subjunctive in the first clause, and future in the second (C. iii. 3. 7), he is not likely to have done it here. Bentley proposes 'noles' and 'veniet.'—Horace, in winding up his discourse, stops the lips of his opponents with a sally of good humour, which they would find it hard to resist. He says if they will not make excuses for this little sin of his (that of taking notes of his neighbours' vices), he will bring a host of sinners (poets) as bad as himself, and, like the proselytizing Jews, Sit mihi (nam mucho plures sumus), ac veluti te Judaei cogemus in hanc concedere turbam.

you will attack them till they have made converts and poets of them all. 'Plures' signifies any number more than one, as in Epp. i. 5. 18, "Locus est et pluribus umbris." "Mutilo plures sumus" means 'there are many besides me.'

SATIRE V.

In the year A.U.C. 714, after the taking of Perusia by Augustus, M. Antonius prepared for war, which was averted by an arrangement made through the mediation of Maecenas on the part of Augustus, and of Cocceius and Pollio on the part of Antonius, and by the marriage of Octavia, Augustus' sister, to Antonius. But that this was not the occasion of the journey recorded in this Satire is certain, because Horace was not introduced to Maecenas till the beginning of A.U.C. 716. The same objection, among several others, is fatal to the theory which connects the journey with the spring of the year 716. At that time M. Antonius arrived at Brundusium with his fleet at the request of Augustus, who had asked him for help against Sex. Pompeius; but not finding Augustus there, he very soon took his departure. This is the date adopted, among many others, by Heindorf. It has been disposed of by Kirchner (Quaest. Hor. 656, sqq.) in a way that cannot be answered. In the spring of the following year 717, Antonius brought over an army to Italy, and a fleet of 300 ships (Appian, v. 93; Dion Cass. 48. 54; Plut. Ant. c. 35): τέκ τίνων διαβολῶν παραξυνθεὶς πρὸς Καίσαρα, says Plutarch. He pretended, Dion says, to come for the purpose of helping to put down Sex. Pompeius, his real object being rather to see what was going on than to take any active part. He came to Brundusium, but the people would not let him come into the harbour (according to Plutarch), and he therefore went on to Tarentum. Negotiations were carried on between the two rivals (Caesar being at Rome) through agents employed by both, but without effect, till Octavia undertook to mediate between her husband and brother, and was finally successful in reconciling them. It has been supposed, with every probability, that the mission which Horace accompanied was sent by Augustus to meet Antonius on his expected arrival at Brundusium on this occasion, i.e. in the spring of A.U.C. 717. That the season was not winter may be inferred from v. 14, where Horace speaks of being disturbed by the gnats and frogs. That it was not summer is probable from the party requiring a fire at Trivicum (v. 80). Appian (I. c.) states expressly that Antonius arrived at Brundusium ἵππος ἀρχεμίνοι, which corresponds with the above facts.

Horace started from Rome with only one companion, Heliodorus the rhetorician (v. 2), and these two travelled together three days and one night, about fifty-six miles, till they reached Tarracina or Anxur, where by appointment they were to meet the official members of their party. These were Maecenas and Cocceius, who had been employed in negotiating the first reconciliation between Augustus and Antonius, and Fonteius, an intimate friend of the latter. Three days afterwards they met at Sinussa Horace's three most intimate friends, Plotius Tucca, Varus, and Virgil, one of whom, Varus, kept them company only for six days, and left them, for reasons which are not mentioned, at Causium (v. 93). The rest of the party went on together till they reached Brundusium, seventeen days after Horace had left Rome. The route they took was not the shortest or the easiest, which lay through Venusia and Tarentum. They preferred taking the north-eastern road which strikes across the country from Beneventum, and, reaching the coast at Barium, continues along the shore till it comes to Brundusium. They were evidently not pressed for time, and probably took the road they did because it passed through Canusium, whither one of the party was bound. Maecenas made his journey as agreeable as under the circumstances it could be, by taking with him such companions; and they all appear to great advantage in Horace's good-humoured diary. There was no restraint between the patron and his friends, and their affection for him and one another it is very pleasant to contemplate.

Since if the occasion above supposed be that on which the mission was sent, they could not have met Antonius at Brundusium, their journey could not have ended there: Maecenas at least, and his official companions, must have gone on to Tarentum. Whether Horace accompanied them is uncertain. I think probably he did not; but that Maecenas, hearing that Antonius had come to Brundusium, and passed on to Tarentum, made all haste to reach that place. I think it likely, however, that Horace took the opportunity of his return to Rome to visit his native town and its neighbourhood. Kirchner (Qu. Hor. p. 39, sq.) thinks that it was on this occasion he wrote the ode to Archytas (i. 28), and that to the fountain of Bandusia (iii. 13); that he visited Septimius (C. ii. 6), and renewed his acquaintance with Ofella (S. ii. 2). Probably Horace took more than one journey to Tarentum, with which when he wrote his ode to Septimius he appears to have had very pleasant associations. He seems to have had in mind, as the Scholiasts say, the description by Lucilius of a journey he took to Capua, of which three or four verses only have been preserved (see note on v. 6).

Egressum magna me excepit Aricia Roma
Hospitio modico ; rhetor comes Heliodorus,

1. Egressum magna me excepit Aricia] They left Rome by the Porta Capena, between Mons Aventinus and Mons Caelius in the southern quarter of the city. The reading 'except' is correct, and has the support of the best MSS. 'Accept,' 'cepit,' are various readings, of which, after Lambinus and Cruquius, Bentley has adopted the first. Aricia (La Riccia), one of the most ancient towns of Latium, was sixteen miles from Rome. It was situated on the side of a hill sloping down to a valley called Vallis Aricina, through which the Appia Via passed. This part of the road is still in good preservation. The citadel was placed on the top of the hill (Strabo, v. p. 239), and on that spot stands the modern town. Aricia was a considerable town in Horace's time, and for some centuries after. Cicero calls it "municipium — vetustate antiquissimum, splendore municipum hon- nestissimum" (Phil. iii. 6). Its neighbourhood to Rome, and accessible position, contributed to its prosperity, which was assisted by its association with the worship of Diana Aricina, who had a temple among the woods on the small lake (Lacus Nemoensia), a short way from the town, probably on the site of the modern town Nemi. The wealthy Romans had villas in the neighbourhood.

By 'hospitio modico' Horace means an indifferent inn; but 'hospitalium' is not the Latin for an 'inn,' which was called 'caupo,' or 'taberna,' or 'diversorium,' and its keeper 'caupo.' The inns at the different stages on the great roads were never very good, the chief reason being that travellers of any importance usually found friends at the principal towns who entertained them.

2. rhetor comes Heliodorus,] Horace jocularly exaggerates the merits of this Greek. Nothing is known of him from other sources. The reading 'linguae' for 'longe,' adopted by Gesner among others, makes nonsense. Heliodorus was a Greek, and might well know his own language, as Lambinus observes. 'Appii Forum' was thirty-nine miles from Rome, and was so Graecorum longe doctissimus; inde Forum Appi, Differtum nautis cauponibus atque malignis.
Hoc iter ignavi divisimus, altius ac nos Praecinctis unum; minus est gravis Appia tardis.
Hic ego propter aquam, quod erat deterriment, ventri called by Appius Claudius, surnamed Caeceus, who in his censorship (A.D. 441) constructed the Via Appia and the great aqueduct which bore his name. Some ruins of this town are said by Wallkenaer still to exist. Its modern name is Borgo Lungo. "Differtum nautis: plenum, sc. his qui in Pompinian paludibus navigabant. atque malignis: deest hominibus" (Acron).

This interpretation is followed by many of the commentators. Orelli and others think Horace means that the Via Appia was less fatiguing to the slow traveller than to the quick; that it was a rough road, over which the slower you went the less unpleasant was the journey.—There is a reading 'nimis' adopted by Fea upon the same understanding. This road was constructed with a foundation of large squared blocks of stone, over which was laid a coating of gravel, until the Emperors Nerva and Trajan laid it with silex according to an inscription found on a mile-stone in the neighbourhood of Forum Appii, and noticed by De Chaupy (iii. 391): "IMP. CAESAR NERVA AUG. GERMAN. PONTIFEX MAX. TRIB. POTESTATE COS. III. P.P. VIAM A TRIPUNTIO AD FORUM APPI EX GLAREA SILICE STERNENDAM SUA PECUNIA INCHOAVIT: IMP. CAESAR NERVA DIVI NERVAE F. TRAJANUS AUG. GERM. GERMANY, TRIBUS, POTEST. COS. III. CONSUMMavit." Horace speaks elsewhere of the traveller "qui Romam Capna petit imber lutoque Adespersus" (Epp. i. 11. 11). I think with Orelli that Horace means the road was bad, and that they who took the journey leisurely escaped jolting and inconvenience.

In one of the verses of Lucretius' Satire mentioned in the Introduction he says, "Praeeters ommes itiner est labosus atque lutosum." 7. Hibic ego propter aquam.) "Hodie in Foro Appii viatores propter aquam quasi ibi deterriment est manere vitam. Dicit ergo Horatius se ibi coequare noluisse ne necessis haberet bibere" (Porphyrian.) At Appii Forum they were to embark at night in a boat that was to carry them by canal to Terracina. A party were waiting at the same inn to go with them, and Horace waited with impatience till they had done supper. These he means by 'comites.' This canal, which was constructed by Augustus in his attempt (A. P. 65) to drain the Pompeian marshes, is referred to by Strabo (v. 6): Πλησιόν τῆς Τάφρακινος βασιλεύτων ἐπὶ τῆς Ρώμης παραβέβληται τῷ ὀδῷ τῇ 'Απνη' ὁδὼν ἐπὶ πολλοὺς τόπους πανερυθρών τῶν ἑλείων τε καὶ τῶν ποταμίων ὑδασιν πληθὺ πᾶλιν μὲν νῦκτωρ, ὥστε ἐμβάνται ἀφ' ἐσπεράς κυβαίνουν πρωίας καὶ βαδίζειν τὸ λουτρὸν τῷ ὀδῷ (τῇ 'Απνη'), ἀλλὰ καὶ μὲν ἡμέραν ῥυμούλκει.
Indico bellum, coenantes haud animo aequo Exspectans comites. Jam nox inducere terris Umbras et caelo diffundere signa parabat;
Tum pueri nautis, pueris convicia nautae
Ingerere. Huc appelle! Trecentos inseris: ohe
Jam satis est! Dum aes exigitur, dum mula ligatur, Tota abit hora. Mali eulices ranaeque palustres
Avertunt somnos, absentem ut cantat amicam
Multa prolatus vappa nauta atque viator
Certatim. Tandem fessus dormire viator,
Incipit, ac missae pastum retinacula mulae

Σ' ἵματον. There are still traces to be seen of this canal, which was nineteen miles long, and was called 'in consequence Decenovium. It is also mentioned by Lucan (iii. 85): "Et qua Pomptinas via dividit uda paludes." Nero, projecting a junction between the Lake Avernus and the Tiber, enlarged this canal (Tac. Ann. xv. 42).
The road may have been defective hereabouts, as it was the general practice of travellers to exchange it for the canal, and to make the journey by night, as Strabo informs us in the above passage.

9. Jam nox inducere terris] This is a parody of the heroic style, unless it be taken from some poet, as Ennius.

12. Huc appelle!] "Put in here and take us on board!" cries the servant.
"How many more? — you'll swamp the boat!" says the boatman. The bank is crowded; the passengers all want to be attended at once. They rush on board, and the boatman, afraid of his craft upsetting, or wanting to take as few as he can for his money, tries in vain to keep them out. This is one way of taking the words, which Orelli prefers. It presumes that the boat was hired by the party, and that they divided the cost among them. But 'dum aes exigitur' seems to mean that the fare was collected from each passenger, in which case the boatmen would have an interest in taking as many as they could get, and only the passengers would complain of being crowded. The collection of the fare and putting-to the mule being accomplished Horace goes on board. The boat starts, and he lies down to sleep, disturbed much by the mosquitoes and the croaking of frogs. The boatman and one of the passengers (Heindorf calls 'viator' the driver of the mule, but he is plainly wrong), half drunk, sing maudlin songs till the one drops off to sleep, and the other, having a mind to do the same, stops the boat, turns the mule out to graze, lays himself down, and snores till the dawn of day, when one of the passengers wakes, starts up in a passion, and falls foul of the boatman and the poor mule, who is put-to again, and a little after ten o'clock they reach their destination, which was a temple of Feronia, about seventeen miles from the place where they embarked. Virgil mentions it (Aen. vii.
799):

"— quis Jupiter Anxurus arvis Praesidet et viridi gaudens Feronia luco."

'Cerebrosus' is an old word signifying
'choleric.' Plautus uses it, and Lambinus quotes passages from Nonius and Lucilius, where it occurs. 'Dolare' is properly to trim a piece of wood with an axe, 'dolabra.'
It is only here used in this sense, 'he rough-hewed him with a cudgel.' Feronia was a goddess worshipped originally by the Sabines. There was a town and wood at the foot of Mount Soracte, which bore her name, Lucus Feroniae, and where she was worshipped. It is now called Civitella.
There was another Lucus Feroniae in the north of Etruria, now called Pietra Santa.
The Cape, which now bears the name
Monte Santo, in Sardinia, was also named Feronia after this goddess, on whose attributes and worship see Smith's Dict. Myth.
On the site of the Temple near which Horace and his party disembarked there now stands, according to Walckenaer, an old (octagonal?) tower, bearing the name Torre Ottocasia. Bentley's reading 'lavi-mur' for 'lavimus,' that of all the MSS.
and old editions, is not worth attending to.
All his quotations refer to taking the bath.
Horace says they only washed their hands and face, which would be no little refreshment after a night spent in a canal-boat.
Nauta piger saxo religat stertitque supinus. Jamque dies aderat, nil cum procedere lintrem. Sentimus, donec cerebosus prosilit unus. Ac mulae nautaque caput lumbosque saligno Fuste dolat: quarta vix demum exponimus hora. Ora manusque tua lavinus, Feronia, lympha. Milia tum pransi tria repimus atque subimus. Impositum saxis late candentibus Anxur. Huc venturus erat Maecenas optimus atque Cocceius, missi magnis de rebus uterque Legati, aversos soliti componere amicos. Hic oculis ego nigra meis collyria lippus Illinere. Interea Maecenas advenit atque Cocceius seems to have become especially intimate with Augustus without betraying his friendship for M. Antonius. According to Appian (v. 60, sqq.) it was this Lucius Cocceius who by his tact and good sense was the means of bringing about the reconciliation which took place (a. u. c. 714) between his two friends. But Lucius had, as Appian mentions, a brother, and these two have been confounded. The brother's name was Marcus; whereas Appian mentions this Cocceius expressly as Lucius. L. Cocceius, having, with Antonius, onk eia πω τὴν Καίσαρα καλείν ἵχθον, ἐς τε Λευκιάν καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους Αὐτωνίων φίλους τοῦτοις γεγενεμένοις, and when he returns to Augustus the latter chides him for delaying, σὺ γὰρ ἐφι καὶ τὸν σὸν ἀδελφὸν ἵν' ἰχθός ὑς μοι περίσσως: which makes it appear that the Cocceius who negotiated the reconciliation Appian refers to (see Introduction) was not the person whose life was spared at Perusia, but his brother. But the former is called Lucius; the negotiator, therefore, was, according to this account, Marcus. This Marcus was probably great-grandfather of the Emperor Nerva. See Dict. Biog.

25. Milia tum pransi tria repimus] Three miles further, on the top of a steep ascent, stood the town of Tarracina (Terracina), which by the Volscians was called Anxur, by which name it is always mentioned by the poets. Ovid (Met. xvi. 717) calls it Trachas, after that which Strabo (v. 233) says was its original name, Trachina, given it by the Greeks, from its rough situation ( tepaxita). The winding of the road up the hill, and the difficulty of the ascent, explains the word 'repimus.' The old town of Tarracina was built on the top of the hill, but this site was afterwards abandoned and a new town built on the plain below, close upon the shore, which is the site of the modern Terracina. It was in Horace's day, and had been for a long time, and long continued to be, a town of great importance, as it was one of great antiquity. Porphyrian mentions that in his time the ruins of the old town and its walls were standing. What that time was is quite uncertain,—not earlier, however, than the fifth century. After leaving the boat, the party lunched before they proceeded. The 'prandium' was a light meal usually eaten about noon, but sometimes earlier, as probably was the case in this instance.

27. Huc venturus erat] See Introduction. Bentley thinks 'optimus' too familiar an epithet for Maecenas, and joins it with Cocceius. For the same reason he alters 'care' into 'clare' (C. i. 20. 5). L. Cocceius Nerva was a friend of M. Antonius, and was among those whom Augustus found in Perusia when he took it (a. u. c. 713). He offered these persons no indignity, but made friends of them, and

30. nigra meis collyria lippus] 'Collyrium,' an ointment for sore eyes, was composed, according to Celsus (i. vi. c. 7), of juices expressed from the poppy and various shrubs, as the lycium, glaucion, acacia, hypocystis, &c. The etymology of the word is not known.
HORATHI FLACCI

Cocceius Capitoque simil Fonteius, ad unguem
Factus homo, Antoni non ut magis alter amicus.
Fundos Aufidio Lusco praetore libenter

32. Capitoue simil Fonteius,]  Not much is known of C. Fonteius Capito. He was deputed by Augustus on this occasion, as being a particular friend of M. Antonius, who afterwards, as Plutarch relates (Anton.
36) sent him, while he was in Syria, to fetch Cleopatra thither from Egypt. When Augustus laid down the consulship in A.U.C.
721, Capito was appointed Consul Suf cetus. He had a son who was consul with Gemanicus A.U.C. 765, with whom Heindorf confounds Antonius' friend in the text.
Orelli mentions a coin of this Capito with the following inscription:—  "C. FONTEIVS.
CAPITO. PRO. PR. = M. ANT. IMP. COS.
DESIG. ITER. ET. TERT. III. VIR. R. P. C."  The expression 'ad unguem factus' is taken from the craft of the sculptor, who tries the surface of his statue by passing the nail over it:
if the parts be put perfectly together, and the whole work well finished, the nail passes over the surface, and meets with no obstruction. "Translatio sumpta a marmorarí qui unguibus juncaturas et levitatem explorant" (Comm. Cruq.). See Persius, S. i. 64:—

"—— carmina molli
Nunc demum numero flueré, ut per leve severos
Effundat junciíra ungues."

Compare also A. P. 294: "Perfectum decies non castigavit ad unguem." Plutarch copies the expression (Symph. vi. 4, η δριμής
σφέδρα και έτον γόνος λεγομένη είσαια.
Below (S. ii. 76) the perfect man is described as—

"—— in se ipso totus, teres atque
rotundus,
Externi ne quid valeat per leve morari,"

which is like the description of the text,
though the metaphor is not quite the same.
'Non ut magis alter' is equivalent to 'quam
qui maxime' in prose.

34. Fundos Aufidio Lusco praetore]  They arrived at Tarracina about noon, and there the principal personages met them.
At Tarracina they slept, and proceeded next morning to Fundi (Fondi), sixteen miles further to the north-east of Tarracina.
Fundi was situated on the north shore of a lake, which was called after it Fundanus;
and also Amyclaeus, from an old Greek town Amyclae, the existence of which was only, traditional when Horace wrote, but is occasionally mentioned by the poets. Martial (xiii. 115) associates it with Fundi and the Caecuban vineyards, which were in this neighbourhood:—

"Caecuba Fundanis generosa coquuntur Amyelas,
Vitis et in media nata palude viret."

Fundi was one of that class of towns called 'praefectura,' which, instead of having the administration of its own affairs, was govern'd by a 'praefectus' sent annually from Rome by the Praetor Urbanus (see Smith's Dict. Ant. art. 'Colonia'). At this time the 'praefectus' was one Aufidius Luscus (not otherwise known), an upstart whom Horace calls Praetor by way of ridicule.
The officers of the other municipal towns were allowed to wear the 'toga praetexta,' the 'toga' with a purple border (Livy xxiv. 7), but the 'praefecti' were not, and yet Luscus wore them. The 'latus clavus,' the broad purple stripe down the front of the 'tonic,' was a badge that belonged only to senators. 'Prunae batillum' was a pan of hot coals "in quo ponuntur prunae in biume super mensam ne coenas friget." (Comm. Cruq.). This Scholast proper the 'batillum,' and says it is a diminutive of 'vas.' "Vas parvum, in quo pro felici hospitalium adventu incensis odoribus Jovi hospitali sacra fiebant: quod cum ex cupro esse ita tollerbet et ostentatam hospitibus quaes domum aureum, et ob hane causam vocatur ab Horatio insanus." A good deal in this explanation is without value, and the etymology is clearly wrong; but the pan of coals may have been used, as this Scholast says, for burning incense or otherwise in connexion with sacrifice. Aufidius, it appears, had been a 'scriba' or clerk, probably in the 'praetor's' office, such a situation as Horace held at this time in the 'quaestor's.'
Persons in that capacity had opportunities of pushing their fortunes if they managed well, and the honours of Luscus are spoken of as 'praemia,' rewards of service rendered to his master. Livy (xxiii. 10) mentions that one M. Anicius, praetor (as the principal officers in a few of the chief muni-cipia seem to have been called, probably by courtesy) of Praeneaste, had formerly been a 'scriba.' Full information on the terms
'scriba,' 'toga praetexta,' and 'latus clavus,' will be found in Smith's Dict. Ant.
37. In Mamurrarum]. Disgusted with the officiousness of the promoted scribe, the party move on in the course of the day to Formiae (Mola di Gaeta) about twelve miles farther, where the road, having taken an upward bend from Terracina to Fundi, goes straight down from thence to the coast, where Formiae was situated at the head of the Sinus Caetanum. Its supposed identity with the Laetagyonia of Homer has been noticed before (C. iii. 16. 34, n., and 17, Int.). As the scene of Cicero's frequent retirement and his death, it is a place of much interest, and Martial devotes one of his longest and most pleasing Epigrams to the description of its attractions (x. 30). Its wines Horace mentions more than once. He here calls it the city of the Mamurra—a family of respectability in this town, according to Porphyrian ("hic fuit familia Mamurrarum honesto loco nata"). The member of this family best known is the commander of the engineers in Julius Caesar's army. He was in great favour with Caesar, and became very rich. He spent his wealth on good living (Cic. ad Att. vii. 7), and altogether was of low repute. It does not follow from this that Horace is speaking ironically, as most commentators think. The family may have been as well known in Formiae, as that of Lamia (C. iii. 17, Int.), especially if there be any truth in the statement of Cruquius' Scholiast that they owned the greater part of the town. "Mamura senator fuit Romani qui maximam partem civitatis Formiae possidebat." He is here called a Senator. When the party got to Formiae, having travelled upwards of twenty-five miles, they were tired, and resolved to pass the night there. Licinius Murena (C. ii. 10, Int.), having a house at this place gave them the use of it; but as he was not there himself, and had no establishment probably in the house suitable to the entertainment of such guests, Fonteius Capito invited his fellow travellers to dine with him. He therefore appears to have had a house at Formiae likewise.

40. Sinuessae] Leaving Formiae next day, the party set out for Sinuessa, eighteen miles distant. Half-way they passed through the ancient town of Minturnae, on the right bank of the Liris, and three or four miles from its mouth. This town is not mentioned here, though as a half-way station the party may probably have halted there. It was very damp, and situated in the midst of marsh land. The place is mentioned Epp. i. 5. 5. The road crossed the Liris (C. i. 31. 7) at Minturnae, and went down the coast till it reached Sinuessa, the most southerly of the Latin towns. The site is now called Monte Dragone (Cramer), and in the neighbourhood are some warm springs which existed in the time of Horace, and from which a modern town has its name, Bagno or Bagnoli. Walckenaer identifies it with Sinuessa. It was on the sea, and said to have been founded on the ruins of the Greek city Sinope. Strabo (v. 234) derives its name from the Sinus Vescinus on which it stood. Plotius Tucca, to whom a Scholium edited by Scaliger (Animad. in Chronol. Eusebii) gives the praenomen Marcus, appears from the same authority to have been a native of Cisalpine Gaul. He was associated with L. Varius Rufus by Virgil, who loved them both, in the task of editing the Aeneid after his death. Nothing more is known of him, but what we gather from this passage and S. i. 10. 81, that he was one of Maecenas' friends, and on intimate terms with Horace. L. Varius, whose cognomen appears to have been Rufus, was a very distinguished poet in his day (see his life in Dict. Biog.). As an epic poet Horace places him among the first (C. i. 6. 1; S. i. 10. 43). To him after Virgil he owed his introduction to Maecenas (S. i. 6. 55), in whose company we find him at the house of Nasidienus (S. ii. 8. 21). That he was very popular with his contemporaries, and much admired by them, may be inferred from every mention that is made of him, particularly from the ninety-third verse of this Satire: "Flentibus hic Varis discidet maestus amicus." He is supposed by Weichert to have been much older than Virgil and Horace, and to be the friend alluded to by Catullus in his poem (C. x.), which in the common texts begins "Varus
Occurrunt, animae quales neque candidiores
Terra tuit neque quis me sit devinctior alter.
O qui complexus et gaudia quanta fuerunt!
Nil ego contulerim jueundo sanus amico.
Proxima Campano ponti quae villula, tectum
45 Praebuit, et parocho quae debent ligna salemque.
Hinc muni Capuae citellas tempore ponunt.
Lusum it Maecenas, dormito ego Virgiliusque;
Namque pila lippis inimicum et ludere crudis.
Hinc nos Cocceii recipit plenissima villa me meus ad suos amores," Augustus also had an affection for him, as we know,

among other sources, from Epp. ii. 1. 245, sqq.:

"At neque dedecorant tua do so judicia
atque
Munera, quae multa dantis cum laude
tulerunt
Dilecti tibi Virgilius Variusque poëtae;" on which passage Comm. Cruq. informs us that Augustus had made a present to each of these poets of a million sesterces. This is confirmed by the Parisian codex referred to in his life in the Dict. Myth., which says Varius received this sum for his Thystes.
(See C. i. 6. 8, n.) Varus and Virgil are often mentioned together by Horace, and Martial puts them all together (xii. 4, to Terentius Priscus):

"Quod Flacco fuit et Vario summoque Maroni
Maecenas atavis regibus ortus eques,
Gentibus et populis hoc te mihi, Priscus
Terenti,
Pana fuisse loquax chartaque dicet anus."

45. Proxima Campano ponti] After Sinumessa the Appia Via continued to take a southerly direction and crossed the Savo (Savone) about three miles from that town,
and just within the borders of Campania.
That river was crossed by a bridge bearing the name Pons Campanus, near which was a small house erected for the accommodation of persons travelling on public business, where there were officers appointed to supply them with ordinary necessaries. "Parrochi autem copiarum dicitur δπος του παρ-εκλητοι ab exhibere : hodie autem a copiaribus praestantur haec iii qui reipublicae causa iter faciunt" (Porph.). "Parochi genus officici quia solent peregrinis salem et ligna praebere, et significat publicum cursum" (Acron). In this house the party passed the night.

47. Hinc muni Capuae] When it reached the right bank of the Vulturinus, four miles below the Savo, the Appia Via turned, striking inland along that bank of the river, which it crossed at the town of Casilinum, where Hannibal met with stout resistance from the Romans who garrisoned
it after the battle of Cannae (Liv. xxii. 17).
This, Cramer says, is the site of the modern Capua. About two miles farther on the road, which now took a south-easterly direction, lay Capua, on the site of which is the modern village Santa Maria di Capoa.
There the party arrived 'betimes,' — in time probably for dinner, after which meal Maeccenas and others of the party went to play at ball, while Horace whose sight, and Virgil whose digestion, interfered with that amusement, went early to bed. On the mode of playing with the 'pila,' the student will find all the information he requires in Becker's Gallus, 'Exc. on the Gymnastic Exercises,' and in Smith's Dict. Ant., art.
'Pila.' Virgil is said by Donatus (Vit. Virg.
c. vi. § 10) to have had uncertain health, and to have suffered frequently either from toothache, headache, or complaints of the stomach.

50. Hinc nos Cocceii] The road, continuing in a south-east direction, passed through two small Campanian towns, Cal-latia (le Galazze) and Ad Novas (la Nova);
but the usual halting-place after Capua was the town of Caudium, which was the first Samnite town on the Appia Via, and was situated at the head of the pass called the Furcae or Faurecs Caudinæ, celebrated for the surprise and capture of the Roman army by C. Pontius in the second Samnite war, a. u. c. 433. The site of Caudium is not easily made out. Cramer fixes it at Paolisi or Cervinara, and mentions (from Praetillii's treatise on the Via Appia) that Quae super est Caudi couponas. Nunc mihi paucis Sarmenti securae pugnam Messique Cicirrhi, near Montesarchio, in its neighbourhood, various inscriptions have been found, in which the names of persons belonging to the family of Cocceius occur. At Caudium, Cocceius had a handsome house, and Horace marks its situation by saying it lay beyond the public tavern. For 'Caudi,' all Cruquis' MSS. (and he had some of the best) read 'Claudi,' and his Scholiast has this note: "qua est supra Claudii cujusdam couponas. Claudii cauponae sive tabernae oppidum est Samnii non procul a Benevento." But 'Caudi' is, I have no doubt, the right reading. The town was twenty-one miles from Capua.

51. Nunc mihi paucis] The scene that follows represents a scurrilous contest between two parasites Maecenas carried with him for the entertainment of himself and his party. The description begins with an invocation of the Muse, after the fashion of the epic poets,—an amusing parody, with which Acron says some persons of his day found fault; and from Orelli I find there are some who have done so in our own. "Nimis profecto fastidiose," he says: "suite," says the Scholiast, and most persons will agree with him. Of 'Sarmentus' we happen to know a little more than is here recorded, from the Scholiast on Juvenal, S. v. 3: "Si potes illa pati, quae nec Sarmentus iiniquas Caesaris ad mensas, nec vilis Galba tulisset?

(which Sarmentus, however, was a different person from Maecenas' parasite, though the Scholiast confounds the two; see Plut. Vit. Anton. c. 59). He says that Sarmentus was an Etrurian by birth, and originally a slave of M. Favonius (well known in the civil wars, and put to death by Augustus after the battle of Philippus). On the confiscation of Favonius' property, Sarmentus passed by public sale into the hands of Maecenas, who gave him his liberty. He then got made a scribe in the quaestor's department, and affected the position of an eques; and as he sat in the front row in the theatre this Epigram was composed upon him:

"Aliud scriptum habet Sarmentus; aliud populus voluerat:
Digna dignis. Sic Sarmentus habeat crasssas compedes.
Rustici ne nihil agatis alliquis Sarmentum alliget."

(The joke in the first line is, that whereas he had got himself one kind of 'scriptum,' i.e. the office of a scribe, the people wished he had got another, i.e. the branding of a runaway slave.) He was brought to trial for pretending to a rank he had no claim to (perhaps under the law of Otho), and got off only by the favour of the judges, and by the accuser being put out of the way. When old he was reduced to great poverty through his licentiousness and extravagance, and was obliged to sell his place as scribe. When persons taunted him with this he showed his ready wit by replying that he had a good memory; by which, according to Rutgersius (Ven. Lect. c. xvi. fin., where this man's story is told), he meant that he had no occasion to write any thing down, for he could carry it in his head. It appears that at the time Horace wrote he was free, and held his scribe's office, though he continued to attend Maecenas; for his adversary says, though he was a scribe, he was in fact only a runaway, and still belonged to his mistress the widow of Favonius (v. 66), which is only a joke that would amuse Maecenas, who had bought and manumitted Sarmentus. On the strength perhaps of what is stated by the above Scholiast, Porphyrian says Sarmentus was a Roman eques, and the same he says of Messius, but doubtless with as little foundation. When Horace says that Messius was of the noble blood of the Osci ("Messi genus Osce sunt," Porph. — 'Osci' being the nominative plural, he probably means (as Estré says) what Cicero means by "summo genere natus, terrae filius" (Ad Fam. vii. 9), and also alludes to the scar on his temple which indicated the disease called Campanian (the Campanians were of Oscan descent), of which Cruquis' Scholiast writes thus: "Hoc enim quasi a natura Campanis fere omnibus inest, ut capitis temporibus magnae verrucae innascantur in modum cornuum: quas cum incidit facie, cicatrices in fronte manent quasi notae exsectorum cornuum. In hunc ergo morbum, id est, faciei vitium, quos Campani laborant, jocatur Sarmentus." This sort of disease is called by Aristole atarvbia (de Gen. Anim. iv. 3). The Oscans also were the authors of the 'Atellanae fabulae,' which were full of broad railery and coarse wit, which may have something to do with Horace's joke. 'Cicirrhus' is a nickname from kixipprpos, which signifies, according to Hesychius, 'a cock.' With these explanations most of the allusions will be intelligible.
Musa, velim memores, et quo patre natus uterque
Contulerit lites. Messi clarum genus Osci;
Sarmenti domina exstat: ab his majoribus orti
Ad pugnam venere. Prior Sarmentus: "Equi te Esse feri similem dico." Ridemus, et ipse Messius "Accipio," caput et movet. "O, tua cornu
Ni foret exsector frons," inquit, "quid facieres, cum Sic mutilus miniteris?" At illi foeda cicatrix Setosam laevi frontem turpaverat oris.
Campanum in morbum, in faciem permulta jocatus,
Pastorem saltaret uti Cyclopa rogabat:
Nil illi larva aut tragicis opus esse cothurnis.
Multa Cicirrhus ad haec: Donasset jamne catenam
Ex voto Laribus, quaerabet; scriba quod esset,
Nihilo deterius dominae jus esse. Rogabat Denique cur unquam fugisset, eui satis una Farris libra foret gracili sic tamque pusillo.
Prorsus juvende coenam produximus illam.

58. Accipio, caput et movet.] 'Messius accepts Sarmentus' joke as a challenge, and shakes his head fiercely at him, on which Sarmentus takes him up and pretends to be alarmed. The wild horse to which Messius is likened is the unicorn, an imaginary animal described by Pliny (N. H. vii. 21):
"Asperrimam autem feram μονοκερωτην,
reliquo corpore equo similem, capite cervo, pedibus elephanto, cauda apro, mugitum gravi, uno corrno nigro, media fronte cubitorum duum eminente;'—a terrible beast enough.

60. miniteris ?] The MSS. and editions are divided between this form and the indicative. The subjunctive alone is right, and I have adopted it with Bentley and Ven.
1463. See Key's L. G. 1455, j.
63. Pastorem saltaret] That he should dance the Cyclops dance, in which the uncouth gestures of Polyphemus courting Galatea were represented. See Epp. ii. 2, 129: "Nunc Satyrum nunc agrestem Cy-clopa movetur." Ovid (Trist. ii. 510) uses
'saluto' in the passive voice: "Et mea sunt populo saltata poema saepe."

65. Donasset jamne catenam] "Urbanus
haec dicta sunt in Sarmentum qui servilibus erat natalibus, sumpta translatione a gene-rosis puérus, qui egoessi annos pucrifiam jam sumpta toga Diis penatibus bullas suas consecrabant, et ut puellae pupas" (Comm.
Crug.).

67. Nihilo deterius] The editions, till Baxter (who has 'Nilo'), have 'deterius nihil.' Bentley says that all the oldest and best MSS. have 'nihilo deterius.' He adopts it, and so does Dillenbr. and Orelli,
'nihilo' being pronounced as a dissyllable,
like "vehemens et liquidus" (Epp. ii. 2, 120). Fea quotes a great many MSS. in favour of the old reading; nevertheless I prefer Bentley's.

68. una Farris libra] The allowance of 'far' to each slave was four or five 'modii' by the month, and it was served out to them monthly, or sometimes daily (Epp. i.
14. 40). That allowance would give three pints a day, which Messius considers would be three times as much as Sarmentus could possibly require; so he could not better himself by running away. The 'far' was otherwise called 'adoreum,' and seems to have been the same as the Greek ζυμα or όλυκρα. The nature of this grain is not exactly known. That two persons, above the condition of slaves should be found in waiting on any man, great or otherwise, for the purpose of entertaining him with such low buffooney as the above, seems surprising to us; but we know that there was no personal degradation to which this class of people called 'parasites' ('diners out') would not demean themselves for the pleasure of a good dinner and the company of the great. The entertainment of these persons would serve to keep the conversation from turning upon politics, which, as the deputies from both sides were now together,
it was desirable to avoid.
Tendimus hinc recta Beneventum, ubi sedulos hospes
Paene macros arsit dum turdos versat in igni;
Nam vaga per veterem dilapso flamma culinam
Volcano summum properabat lambere tectum.

Convivas avidos coenam servosque timentes
Tum rapere, atque omnes restinguere velle videres.

Incipit ex illo montes Apulia notos
Ostentare mihi, quos torret Atabulus et quos
Nunquam erepsemus nisi nos vicina Trivici

71. Beneventum.] The Appia Via took a north-east turn from Caudium for ten miles till it came to Beneventum (Bene-vento), a very ancient town, by tradition said to have been founded by Diomed, and the name of which was originally, when the Samnites had it, Maleventum, or some name that sounded so like Maleventum to a Latin ear that the Romans thought fit to change it (for good luck) to Beneventum. In no town but Rome are there so many remains of ancient art found as in Benevento. Nearly all the walls are built of altars, tombs, columns, &c.; and the arch of Trajan, erected probably in commemoration of his construction of the road from Beneventum to Brundusium (since the same year, A.D. 114, appears on the arch that is found on the miliary columns along the road), still remains in pretty good preservation. Thither the party proceeded next day, and put up at an inn, when the host nearly set fire to his house through carelessness in roasting some indifferent thrushes for their dinner.

‘Hospes paene arsit,’ the host nearly got himself on fire, means that he nearly burnt
the house down, as the context shows.

The expression is the same as in Aen. ii. 311:
‘Jam proximus ardet Uclegen.’ The position of ‘macros’ is a little careless; and Lambinus, followed by most of the editors of his time and by Fea, transposed ‘macros’
and ‘arsit,’ on the authority of one MS., the value of which is not known. Bentley found that arrangement in another of no weight. The rest have all ‘Paene macros arsit.’

76. quos torret Atabulus] This Gellius
(ii. 22) reckons among local winds; and Seneca mentions it (Q. N. v. 17) as infesting
Apulia: ‘Atabulus Apuliam infestat,
Calabriam Iapyx, Athenas Sciron, Galliam Circius.’ Pliny likewise says (N. H. xvi.
14): ‘Flatus Apulis proprius est Atabulus:
hic si flaverit circa brunam exurit frigore arefaciens ut nullis solibus postea recreari possit.’ This may explain ‘torret,’ a word which applies to the effect of cold as well as heat. It is generally interpreted by ‘scirocco,’ a hot land wind. But it came directly off the sea from the east, and Pliny speaks of it as a winter wind. The Scholiasts all derive the name ατό τοι την ἀγνη βάλλων, which is an impossible etymology. Cruquius’ Scholiassays the vulgar corruption of the name was ‘Atabo,’ which comes near to the modern name ‘Altino.’

79. Nunquam erepsemus] This is one of the many abbreviated forms Horace uses.
See C. i. 36. 8, n., and to the examples there given add the present, and also ‘surrexe,’ ‘divisse,’ ‘evasti.’ ‘Vixet,’ in Aen. xi.
118, is a like contraction of the same tense as ‘erepsemus.’ Horace says that they would never have got out of these hills (the range that borders Samnium and separates it from Apulia) had they not found an inn at the town of Trivicum, described by Swinburne (vol. i. p. 130) as ‘a baronial town on an eminence, and still called Trevico, a marquise of the Loffredi, a family of Lombard or Norman origin,’ at which they were able to put up for the night. He means the next stage, which was twenty-four miles further on, would have been too long a journey.
Horace had been familiar with these mountains in his early childhood, for they overlooked his native town. ‘Notos’ refers to these early reminiscences. ‘Trivicum’ is not mentioned in the Itinerary of Antoninus, or the Jerusalem Itinerary. It was probably on a cross road (Cramer, ii. 230) which lay between the two branches of the Appia Via, one of which took the most direct course from Beneventum through Venusia to Tarentum and Brundusium, and the other took a more northerly course across the Apennines, near Equus Tuscus;
and then, striking directly eastward till it arrived very near the sea-coast, near Cannae, proceeded down the line of coast till it
Villa recepsisset, lacrimoso non sine fumo,
Udos cum foliis ramos urentes camino.
Hic ego mendacem stultissimus usque puellam
Ad medium noctem exspecto: somnum tamen aufert
Intentum veneri; tum immundo somnia visu
Nocturnam vestem maculant ventremque supinum.
Quattuor hinc rapimur viginti et milia rhedis,
Mansuri oppidulo quod versus dicere non est,
Signis perfacile est: venit vilissima rerum
Hic aqua; sed panis longe pulcherrimus, ultra Callidus ut solet humoris portare viator;
Nam Canusium lapidosus, aquae non ditior urna reached Brundusium. Pratilli, supported by Becker (Gallus, Sc. iv. n.) denies that the northern road was called Via Appia, which name, he says, belongs only to the direct road through Venusia. But even that he thinks doubtful, since Strabo confines the name to that part of the road which lay between Rome and Beneventum: τοντερεθίεν δή ἡγέ μέγων τῆς Ρώμης Ἀπια καλλίται (vi. 283, Cas.). Cramer says "the little town of Trivico, which appears on a height above the course of the ancient Ap-pian way, points out the direction of that road; and some ruins, which are said to be visible below it, probably represent the farm which afforded a lodging to Horace and his conjecture nothing can be less probable in my my opinion.
81. camino.] See Epod. ii. 43, n.
87. Mansuri oppidulo] It appears probable that the road on which Trivicum lay, entering Apulia about ten miles from that town, passed through or near the Apulian Asculum (Ascoli), and it is in that neighbourhood that the little town with the un-rhythmic name, at which the party stopped after Trivicum, is now generally supposed to have stood. Egnus Tuticus is the place fixed upon by the Scholiasts; but that town was nearer Beneventum than Trivicum, and,
by the shortest computation of the Itineraries, was sixty-three Roman miles from Canusium, Horace's next resting place. It may be assumed that the town, which was but a small one, and inconvenient in his time, has left no traces of its site; and of its name we must be content to be ignorant.
It was not situated on the Appia Via, which the cross road did not join till it reached (Orelli says, I do not know on what autho-
}
Qui locus a forti Diomede est conditus olim.
Flentibus hinc Varius discedit maestus amicis.
Inde Rubos fessi pervenimus, utpote longum
Carpentes iter et factum corruptius imbri.
Posterum tempestas melior, via pejor ad usque
Bari moenia piscosi; dein Gnatia Lymphis ancient ruins may be traced fragments of aqueducts, tombs, amphitheatres, baths, military columns, and two triumphal arches.

The present town stands on a height where the citadel stood, and contains not above 300 houses. "The medals of Canusium in silver and bronze have the inscriptions KA. KANY. KANYEINON, with a head of Hercules on a vase and clusters of grapes" (Cramer, Italy, ii. p. 292, n.).
A supply of good water was brought into this town by Hadrian the emperor. That Apulia was not well watered has been observed before (Epod. iii. 16, n.).
The turbid waters of the Aufusus must have been unfit for drinking. The bread of Canusia seems to be as bad as ever. Swinburne writes (i. 166): "We breakfasted at an inn near the bridge, and regretted our not having followed Horace's example in bringing a supply of bread from some other place, for what we got here was as brown as mahogany, and so gritty that it set our teeth on edge to crunch it. The friable incompact contexture of the stone with which the millers grind their corn, rather than the sand of the area where it is trodden out, can alone have perpetuated this defect in the Canusian bread for nineteen centuries.
I believe these millstones are of the soft concreted rock, which constitutes the greater part of their coast."

aquare non ditior urna] The only way of taking this regularly is, with Lambinus, to make 'ditior' agree with 'locus,' 'which place, being not richer in water (than the last) by a single pitcher, was built by brave Diomed.' So Orelli takes it. The construction is not very agreeable; but to avoid it we must suppose great irregularity. Bentley makes 'urna' the nominative, and 'ditior'
to agree with it in the sense of 'ubarier.'
He strikes out the next verse as unmeaning and unworthy of Horace.

94. Rubos] This town of the Peucetii retains its name under the form Ruvo,
and was thirty miles from Canusium.
The medals found at Ruvo have the inscriptions PY. PYBA. PYV. PYBASTEINON. They have also a head of Minerva or Jove, and on the reverse an owl on a branch. The road from Canusium was called Via Egnatia, from the town it led to. Swinburne (i. 400) describes the remains of it for twelve miles from Canosa as paved with common rough pebbles, and passing over a pleasant down.
Half way between Canusium and Rubi the Jerusalem Itinerary mentions a place which it calls 'ad Quindecimum,' and which is now identified with Castel del Monte.

95. ad usque] See S. i. 1. 97, n.
96. Bari moenia piscosi:] Barium still retains its name Bari, occupying a rocky peninsula of a triangular form about a mile in circumference. It was an important town on the coast, and a municipium. Its distance from Rubi was twenty-two miles, "a most disagreeable stony road through a vine country" (Swinburne, i. 397), and half way
there lay the town Butumtum (Bitonto).
Brass coins have been discovered at Bari, bearing, on one side a head of Jupiter crowned with laurel, on the other a figure of Cupid seated at the prow of a vessel,
and shooting an arrow, with the inscription BAP一种N. Others with a head of Jupiter and the prow of a vessel and the inscription BAP一种. Others again with a head of Pallas, and a ship, and Cupid crowning a trophy.
There must have been a harbour, it would be thought, to receive the galleys which,
from the above coins, it is evident this place possessed. But there is scarcely any
now. See Swinburne, who writes (i. 191),
"a plentiful fish supper was provided by our kind host (the Prior of a Dominican convent), anxious to support the reputation of Bari in that article. The abundance and delicacy of the fish vouch for Horace's knowledge of the peculiar excellencies of his own country."

Gnatia] This was perhaps the local way of pronouncing Egnatia. It was another sea-port town, and thirty-seven miles from Barium. Between them lay formerly, according to the Itineraries, two small forts called Turris Juliana (Torre Pelloss) and Turris Aureliana (Ripagnola), the first eleven miles and the second twenty miles from Barium. Of Egnatia nothing important is recorded. Its ruins are still in existence Iratus exstructa dedit risusque jocosque,
Dum flamma sine thura liquescere limine sacro
Persuadere cupit. Credat Judaeus Apella,
Non ego: namque deos didici securum agere aevum,
Nec si quid miri faciat natura deos id
Tristes ex alto caeli demittere tecto.
Brundusium longae finis chartaeque viaeque est.

near Torre d'Agnazzo, six miles from the town of Monopoli. "Little remains (says Swinburne) except part of the ramparts, which, near the sea, are entire as high up as the bottom of the battlements. Sixteen courses of large stones are still complete, and the thickness of this bulwark is exactly eight yards, an extraordinary breadth, which I ascertained by repeated measurements. The town seems to have been square, and its principal streets drawn in straight lines." Horace says it was built under the displeasure of the nymphs, because the water was so bad. "Want of water caused the destruction of Gnatai,—a scarcity I had an opportunity of being made sensible of. I was obliged to content myself with the water of a cistern full of tadpoles, and qualify it with a large quantity of wine that resembled treacle much more than the juice of the grape. While I held the pitcher to my lips, I formed a dam with a knife to prevent the little frogs from slipping down my throat. Till that day I had had but an imperfect idea of thirst" (Swinburne, i. 208).
The miracle Horace mentions appears to have been a cheat of long continuance, for Pliny mentions it likewise (N. H. ii. 111):
"In Salentino oppido Egnatia, imposito ligno in saxum quoddam ibi sacrum, proti-nus flammam existere." Liquefacions are a sort of miracle that have not yet lost their charm for the ignorant, or their profit for the designing. 'Lymphae' and 'Nymphae' are essentially the same word, but I am not aware of any other place in which the nymphs are called Lymphae.

100. Judaeus Apella.] The majority of the Jews at Rome were freedmen, which probably affords the best explanation of the synagogue of the Libertines at Jerusalem
mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles
(vi. 9). Apella was a common name for 'libertini.' Their creed was a superstition of the most contemptible kind in the eyes of a Roman; and a Jew was only another name for a credulous fool. The Jews returned their contempt with hatred, which showed itself in a turbulent spirit that made them very troublesome. Horace intimates that he had learnt from the school of Epicurus that the gods were too happy to mind the small affairs of this world, which he expresses in the words of Lucretius (vi. 57):
"Nam bene qui didioce deos securum agere aevum." See C. i. 34. 2, n., and the Introduction to that ode.

104. Brundusium] From this abrupt conclusion we may judge that Horace had got tired of his journal as well as his journey. Brundusium (Brindisi) was for centuries the most important town on the eastern coast of Italy, chiefly through the convenience of its position for communicating with Greece, and the excellence of its harbour. The port is double. The outer port is formed by two promontories that stretch off gradually from each other as they advance into the sea, leaving a very narrow channel at the base of the angle, which leads into the inner port. This stretches to the right and left, and between the two arms or branches lay the city.
In the old Messapian tongue Brundusium is said to have meant a deer, the name being devolved from the appearance of a stag's head fomed by this inner port. "The whole kingdom of Naples cannot show a more complete situation for trade than Brindisi.
Here goodness of soil, safety of anchorage,
and a central position are all united" (Swinb.
i. 386). Little remains of ancient Brundusium but broken pillars, fragments of common Mosaic, with a few inscriptions and coins. Its distance from Egnatia was 30 miles according to the Jerusalem
Itinerary and the Tabula Theodosiana, and 30 miles according to the Itinerary of Antoninus. There was a station named Speluncae (now Grotta Rosa) midway, where the party may have halted one night,
and which Horace, having nothing he cared to tell us about it, has passed over in silence.
SATIRE VI.

In addition to the obloquy brought upon him by his satires, Horace, after his intimacy with Maecenas had begun to be known, had to meet the envy such good fortune was sure to excite. His birth would furnish a handle for the envious, and he was probably called an upset and hard names of that sort. In this satire, which is nothing but an epistle to Maecenas, he spurns the idea of his birth being any objection to him, while at the same time he argues sensibly against men trying to get beyond their own legitimate sphere, and aiming at honours which are only attended with inconvenience, fatigue, and ill will. This satire, besides the good sense and good feeling it contains, is valuable as bearing upon Horace's life. His introduction to Maecenas is told concisely, but fully and with much propriety and modesty; and nothing can be more pleasing than the filial affection and gratitude shown in those parts that relate to his father and the education he gave him. He takes pleasure in referring whatever merits he might have to this good parent, as he did in the fourth Satire.

The Satire then may be supposed to have been written chiefly for the purpose of disarming envy, by showing the modesty of the author's pretensions, and the circumstances that led to his intimacy with Maecenas. The views of public life which it contains were no doubt sincere, and the daily routine described at the end was better suited to Horace's habit of mind than the fatigues and anxieties of office. There is not the least appearance in any of his writings of his having been spoilt by his good fortune and by his intercourse, on terms of rare familiarity, with Augustus, Maecenas, and others; and probably malignity never attacked any one less deserving of attack than Horace. There is no great vigour or variety in this piece, and its chief value is historical. Attempts have been made to fix upon a date for its composition, but when Franke says that because Horace declares he might ride to Tarentum if he liked on a mule, without attracting any notice, therefore he must lately have been at Tarentum, and must have written this Satire shortly after the fifth, and makes his calculations turn chiefly on this point, it may be inferred that there are no sufficient data for forming any thing like a definite opinion on the subject.

ARGUMENT.

Though the blood of kings flows in your veins, Maecenas, you despise not the humbly born, such as myself a freedman's son. It matters nothing to you who a man's father was, if he be but a freeman born, knowing well that King Tullus, aye and many before him, though they had no ancestors, were honest men; while Laevinus, whose forefathers expelled the Tarquins, is not worth an as, even in the judgment of a populace that stupidly worships ancestry. And we who are so far above them, how shall we judge? Allow that they prefer a Laevinus with his ancestors to a Decius who had none, and that the censor might degrade one who should aspire to the senate without being free born, that need not alter our judgment. The censor would act right if he did so; let every man keep his own place. But high and low are all willing captives following in the train of glory. What have you to do, Tillius, to resume your tribuneship and your badge? You are only drawing more envy on your head. The moment a man puts on a senator's dress, "Who is this?" says one. "Who was his father?" says another. As the fop who likes to be thought handsome makes all the girls curious to examine his features, his ancle, his foot, his teeth, his hair, so the placeman bears on all hands, "Who was his father? what was his mother? What you, the son of a slave, do you take upon yourself to put citizens to death?" "Well," says he, "but my colleague is a step lower than me." "Suppose he is; does that make you a Paullus or a Messalla? He at any rate has stout lungs, and that's what we like."

A word now about myself, the freedman's son, with which they are all taunting me now because I am a friend of yours, Maecenas, as once they did because I had a tribune's command. This they might perhaps envy me with some reason; but not the other, for you are ever careful in your choice of friends, and hate low flattery. It was not luck that brought me to your notice; Virgil introduced me first, and then Varius. I came modestly into your presence. I made no boast of birth or wealth, but told you who and what I was. You answered as usual briefly, dismissed me, and in nine months sent for me again, and admitted me to your circle. Herein I am happy, that my merit, not my birth, commended me to one so discerning. But if my faults are not great, and if my friends are attached to me, I have to thank my father for that, who would not send me to a country school but brought me up to Rome to be educated. He spared no expense: he took me to school every day himself; in short, he preserved me from vice and even the imputation of it. He would not have been ashamed if after all I had been obliged to resort to his old trade for a livelihood, and I should not have complained a bit. To him be all the praise and all my gratitude. Never let me be ashamed of such a father as that, or say, as so many do, it was not my fault that my father was not a freeman. My language and views are very different from this; for let who will reverse their lives and choose new parents to suit their pride, I am content with mine; and though others may think me mad to say so, you will judge me wise, I know, for declining a load I am not used to bear. I should have to enlarge my means; to bow to a host of people; to pay attendants to walk with me; to get more slaves and horses; to hire carriages. As it is I may ride to Tarentum, if I like, on a common mule, with my portmanteau behind, and no one calls me shabby as they do you, Tillius, most noble senator and praetor, when you go travelling with your five slaves and utensil behind you. I can go where I like by myself, about the market, and circus, and forum in the evening, and then go home to my simple meal and poorly furnished dining room, and then to bed, to sleep undisturbed. I lie till late writing and reading, and then take a stroll, or go and play till I am tired, then to bathe, and then to lunch lightly and lounge at home. Could I live more happily than this if my father and his father and all my relations had been quaeestors?

Non quia, Maecenas, Lydorum quidquid Etruscus Incoluit fines nemo generosior est te,

1. Non, quia, Maecenas,] See Key's L. G. 1403, on this position of the negative.

Lydorum quidquid Etruscus] On Maecenas' connexion with Etruria see C. i. 1.
1, n. This is not the place to discuss the question of the Lydian settlement of Etruria, first mentioned by Herodotus (i. 94) as a tradition current among the Lydians themselves. Horace and Virgil both adopted the legend, which was familiar to men of learning, and perhaps believed by many. Dionysius of Halicarnassus states that at the time he wrote his book on Roman Antiquities (which was published in the year 7 B.C.) opinions were divided on the subject; some counting the Etrurians to be indigenous, and named from τῦρος, 'turre,' and others adopting the story respecting their Lydian founder, Tyrrenhus, whom Herodotus makes the son of Atys, king of Lydia. Virgil says (Aen. ii. 761):

"Ad terram Hesperiam venies, ubi Lydium arma
Inter opima virum leni fluit agmine Tibris."

'Lydorum quidquid,' 'all the Lydians that ever inhabited,' &c., is like Epod. v. 1: "At, o deorum quicquid in caelo regit;" and Catullus (C. ix. 10), "O quantum est hominum venustiorum." So likewise Terence (Heautont. iv. 6. 6):
Nec quod avus tibi maternus fuit atque paternus
Olim qui magnis legionibus imperitarent,
Ut plerique solent, naso suspendis adunco
Ignotos, ut me libertino patre natum.
Cum referre negas quali sit quisque parente
Natus dum ingenuus, persuadès hoc tibi vere,
Ante potestatem Tulli atque ignobile regnum
Multos saepe viros nullis majoribus ortos
Et vixisse probos amplis et honoribus auctos;

"Ut te omnes Dii Deaeque quantum est,
Syre,
Cum isto invenio cumque incepto per-dant."

4. magnis legionibus imperitarent.] Because Maecenas' ancestors are commonly called 'reges,' Fea changes 'legionibus' into 'regionibus,' and he has the authority of one MS. in his favour, which he calls the "codex Chisianus." I do not know its value. But there is no objection to 'legionibus' in the sense of armies, which is the reading of all other MSS. and editions. Lucretius may have said (iii. 1040):

"Inde alii multi reges rerumque potentes Occiderunt, magnis qui gentibus imperitarunt."

But that does not prove that Horace wrote 'regionibus.' The MSS. vary in the form of the verb, some having the perfect indicative 'imperitunt,' others the perfect subjunctive 'imperitarunt.' But the imperfect seems to be required, and Bentley says that that tense, rather than the perfect, always does follow 'fuit qui,' as below, Epp. ii. 2. 128, sqq. In prose there can be no doubt the subjunctive would be required here (see Key's L. G. 1189), and the imperfect is required by the sense, which does not mean to limit the statement to one of Maecenas' ancestors, but to a succession of them. It seems from inscriptions to have been the practice of the Etrurians for men to be distinguished by the name of their mother as well as their father.

5. naso suspendis adunco] This the Greeks expressed by μυκτηρίζων. To say that it is a metaphor taken from the sagacity of the dog, as Forcellini does, is a mistake, for it is obviously taken from that instinctive motion of the features which expresses contempt. How to account for it may not be easy, though it is so common. The expression 'naso suspendere' I conceive Horace invented, unless it were a sort of slang of the day. It occurs no where else, except in Persius (S. i. 118), where it is applied to Horace and is evidently copied from him (like some other ideas of Persius), though he modifies the expression and gives it a better sense. It is repeated below, S. ii. 3. 64: "Balatro suspendens omnia naso." 'Ut' occurring twice in these two lines introduces confusion. The second means 'as for instance.'

6. libertino patre natum.] The difference between 'libertus' and 'libertinus' is, that the latter expressed generically a man who had been manumitted, the former the same man in his relation to the master who had given him his freedom. Orelli (on v. 40 of this Satire) retains the notion that 'libertinus' means the son of a 'libertus,' a meaning which, if it ever existed, did not belong to the word in Horace's time. He expressly says his father was a 'libertinus.' If so, he must have been 'ingenuus,' according to this definition; but he was not. (See Dict. Ant., art. 'libertus.') The son of a 'libertinus' born after his father's manumission, and all other persons born free, were 'ingenui;' and Horace says that Maecenas, though he would not take into his intimacy a freedman, made no enquiry as to the parentage of any one born free, but would make him his friend if he deserved it. Acron interprets 'ingenuus' as "ad moris probitatem pertinent." And some editors (Gesner among them) have followed him. I do not agree with them.

9. Ante potestatem Tulli] Horace here follows the legend which made Servius Tullius the son of a slave-girl, and himself a slave in the palace of King Tarquinius. On this account his reign was ignoble, while in true nobility it was surpassed by none of the others. Another legend (which Ovid follows, Fast. vi. 627, sqq.) makes Tullius the son of Vulcan, but his mother is there also a slave, having been taken captive at Corculum, a city taken by Tarquiniius Priscus.
Contra Laevinum, Valeri genus unde superbus
Tarquinius regno pulsus fugit, unius assis
Non unquam pretio pluris licuisse, notante
Judice quo nosti populo, qui stultus honores
Saepe dat dignis et famae servit ineptus,
Qui stupet in titulis et imaginibus. Quid oportet

12. Laevinum, Valeri genus] The Valeria 'gens' was one of the most ancient in Rome, and embraced some of the most distinguished families, among others that of Publicola, the earliest member of which mentioned in history is Valerius Publicola, the colleague of Brutus after the expulsion of the kings. The family of Laevinus was another branch of the same gens, the most conspicuous of whom were P. Valerius Laevinus, who conducted the war against Pyrrhus, and M. Valerius, who in the second Punic war was governor of Sicily. Of the Laevinus in the text we know nothing but from the text and the Scholiasts Porphyriel and Comm. Crq., who say that he was a man of most abandoned character, so bad that even the populace, who were not easily deterred from conferring their honours upon the vicious, could not be prevailed on by admiration of his high ancestry to advance him beyond the quaestorship; that is to say, he never held a curule office. Pliny (N. H. i. xxxv. c. 2, § 2) mentions the indignation of one of the Messalae (another branch of the same gens) at a bust of one of the Laevini being placed with those of his own family. It is not improbable that the man Horace mentions had brought such discredit upon the name, that it mortified the proud Messalla that their family connexion should be so paraded. 'Valeri genus' is like 'audax Iapeti genus,' C. i. 3. 21 (see note). On 'unde,' which is equivalent to 'a quo,' see C. i. 12. 17, n.; ii. 12. 7. 'Fugit' is the reading of the best MSS., including all the Blandinian and others of high authority quoted by Lambinus, Orelli, Fea, Bentley, the three last of whom have adopted it, I think rightly. Most of the older editions have 'sui;' but there is no objection to the use of the present tense: it is the historic. 'Licere' is 'to be put up for sale,' and its correlative term is 'licerii,' 'to bid for an article at a sale by auction.' 'Notare' is to set a bad mark upon, to brand, and was technically applied to the censors (see note on v. 20). 'Judice quo nosti' is an instance of attraction, which figure the Romans borrowed from the Greeks, but did not use so commonly. See Examples in Key's L. G. 1061, and add Terence, Heaut. i. 1. 35: "Sicre hoc vis? Hac quidem de causa qua dixi tibi;' and Cicero (ad Fam. v. 14): "cum scribas et aliquid agas corum con- sustei gaudeo." The editions of the fifteenth century all have 'quo,' and that is the reading of Ascensionius (1519). The edition of Aldus of the same year, and nearly all subsequent editions till Bentley, have 'quem,' for which there is no authority whatever among the MSS. now existing or known to have been collated. 'Titulus et imaginibus' were inscriptions and waxen busts recording the distinctions of any member of a family who had borne a curule office. See Polyb. vi. 53.

17. Quid oportet Nos facere] Bentley says he certainly never saw any thing "pravis et tetrissique" (epithets it is hard to understand, especially the latter) than this reading 'nos.' "Apage sodi inanem jactantium. Non cognosco nostrum tam superbum et gloriosum." He therefore proposes 'vos:' "Vos dico Augustos, Maecenates, Polliones, Messallas, &c." It is the fashion with some critics to exclaim against all manifestations of self-satisfaction, however legitimate the occasion, and to explain away and alter passages in which Horace says a word for himself. But there is neither pride nor humility here. He means to say that those who by education and profession and experience were very far removed from the common people ought to judge differently from them, and better. In this number he was quite justified in placing himself. The MSS., therefore, which are unanimous in favour of 'nos,' are not to be deserted. 'Vos' is a mere conjecture. The MSS. nearly all read 'lone longeque;' a few have 'longe la- teque,' which is the reading of all the old editions. Crucius first edited 'lone longeque,' quoting Cicero (de Finn. ii. 21): "plurimum se, et longe longeque plurimum, tribuere honestati." Ovid uses the same expression (Met. iv. 325): "Sed longe cunctis longeque potentior illis." It occurs also in Dig. iv. 4. 30: "Tendentibus curatoribus minoris fundum emptor exstiftit Lucius.
Nos facere a volgo longe longeque remotos?
Namque esto populus Laevido mallet honorem
Quam Decio mandare novo, censorque moveret
Appius ingenuo si non essem patre natus:
Vel merito quoniam in propria non pelle quiessem.

Sed fulgente trahit constrictos Gloria currus

Titius, et sex sex annis possedit, et longe longeque rem meliorem facit." The repetition is only analogous, as Bentley says, to many others in the Latin language, as 'etiam atque etiam,' 'nimium nimiumque,' 'magis magisque,' &c. After Craciuus, Baxter was the first to adopt 'longe longeque,' which Bentley edited soon afterwards, and it is now the received reading.

19. Namque esto] He goes on to show that though the value set upon titles and birth by the populace might be exaggerated, yet the other extreme is not to be allowed; and that he who seeks to push himself beyond his sphere might be justly rebuked for his presumption.

20. Quam Decio mandare novo,] P. Decius Mus, who devoted himself to death for his country at the battle of Vesuvius in the Latin war, A.D.C. 414, was the first consul of his family. He held the office with T. Manlius Torquatus in that year. After the curule magistracies were opened to the plebeians, an order of nobility sprung up among themselves based upon the holding of these offices. Those families of which any member had ever held a curule office were 'nobiles,' the rest 'ignobles,' and he in whose person such dignity was first attained was called, originally no doubt through the contempt of the patricians, but afterwards conventionally by all, 'novus homo.' The Decia gens was plebeian.

Censorque moveret Appius] The Appius who is here taken as the type of severe censorship is Appius Claudius Cæcucus, the constructor of the road and aqueduct that bore his name. He was made Censor A.D.C. 442. It was the province of the Censors, till that office was merged in the imperial power, to supply vacancies in the senate from the list of those who were eligible, who were all citizens of at least equestrian rank, of not less than a certain age (which we do not know exactly, but it was between thirty and forty), and those persons who had served in the principal magistracies. But they could also, in revising the list of senators at the beginning of their censorship, degrade those who had previously been in the senate, as well as exclude such as by their official rank were entitled to be senators. This they did at their own discretion for various offences by which 'ignominia' was liable to be incurred, or from the senator having been chosen improperly. They effected this exclusion merely by marking the name, and their mark was called 'nota censoria.' Horace, therefore, means that if he, through the favour of Maecenas or other means, sought as a freedman's son to reach the dignity of a senator, and succeeded, the censors, if they did their duty strictly, would degrade him. The censor Appius however is notorious for his laxity in having chosen for party purposes the sons of freedmen and other unqualified people into the senate. But he was harsh and arbitrary in the exercise of his office, and his name was proverbial in connexion with the censorship, which is enough to account for his appearance here.

There was no money qualification for the senate, but only one of rank. 'Movere' is the technical word for degrading a senator, and those who were degraded or not admitted were called 'praeteriti senatores' from the circumstance of their being merely passed by when the lists were made out, and their names not appearing, which would prevent them from acting. (See Dict. Ant., arts. 'Senatus,' 'Censors,' 'nota Censoria.') 'In propria non pelle quiessem' is the old story of the ass in the lion's skin.

23. Sed fulgente trahit] This verse may or may not be taken from some heroic poem. It is introduced humorously, and yet with a serious meaning. 'Let the populace set their hearts upon rank and descent, and let the censors make that their standard for the senate, yet the humble born may have their honours as well;' that is, the honours that arise from virtue and genius. The picture of Glory mounted on her car is repeated in Epp. ii. 1 177, where the epithet 'fulgente' is exchanged for 'ventoso,' fickle as the winds. As observed before (C. S. 57, n.), 'Gloria' appears in the ancient descriptions in two characters, good and bad. In the former she is represented by Honos.
Non minus ignotos generosis. Quo tibi, Tilli,
Sumere depositum clavum fierique tribuno?
Invidia accretit privato quae minor esset.
Nam ut quisque insanus nigrum medium impediti crus
Pellibus et latum demisit pectore clavum,
Audit continuo: "Quis homo hic est? quo patre natus?"
Ut si qui aegrotet quo morbo Barrus, haberi

24. Quo tibi, Tilli,] The Scholiasts Acron and Comm. Cruq. say that this person, whose name is Tullius in some MSS. and editions, was a senator, and was degraded by Julius Caesar as being of Pom-péius' party; that he was reinstated after Caesar's death, and was made a military tribune. One of Caesar's assassins was Tullius Cimber, and it has been supposed—
I do not know on what grounds—that this man was his brother. Whether or no he is different from the person mentioned below, v. 107, it is not easy to say. Estré denies, Orelli and others affirm, that he is the same. There is not much to guide us.
Each legion in the Roman army (the number varied at different times, but at Philippi
there were nineteen on each side, each legion consisting of about 6000 men, rather less than more) had six tribunes (the post Horace held in Brutus' army), who were their principal officers. The military triubes of the four first legions were entitled to sit in the senate. (See Epod. 4. 15, n.)
As to the 'latus clavus,' see note on the 34th verse of the last Satire. 'Quo,' "to what purpose." (See C. ii. 2. 9, n.)

27. Nam ut quisque insanus] The senators' 'calceus,' an out-door shoe, was fastened by four thongs, two on each side, which went spirally up to the calf of the leg (medium crus). These thongs were called 'corrigiae,' and were black. The shoe itself appears to have varied in colour.
Juvenal (vii. 192) says of Quintilianus;
"appositam nigrae lunam Subtexti alutae," where the 'aluta' is a shoe made of leather softened in a solution of alum, and its colour is black. It also bears something in the shape of a crescent 'luna' (Rupert says a buckle), which Philostratus (Vita Herod.
ii. 8) calls σαμβιδον τής εύγειμας—ἐπι-σφῆνον (it must therefore have been worn as high as the ankle) ἤχαράτων ἕπωντοις.
Martial calls it "lunata pellis" (i. 50. 31),
and again (ii. 9. 7, sq.):
"Non hesterna sedet lunata lingula planta, Coccina non laesum cingit aluta pe-dem;", where the shoe is purple or dark red. Such a shoe was the 'mulleus.' Becker supposes this to have been the invariable colour, and that Juvenal's 'nigrae' must refer, as this passage of Horace clearly does, only to the strings. (Gallus, Exc. 'Male attire.') If so, the string was of the same leather as the shoe, and passed over the 'luna,' which was perhaps on the outer side of the foot.

29. Quis homo hic est? quo] The MSS. vary between this reading and 'hic, et quo' and 'hic, aut quo.' The editors differ. The reading I have followed (after Lambinus, Orelli, and others) seems well suited to the sort of remark and question supposed.

30. quo morbo Barrus] His disease was a thirst for admiration among women.
He is said by the Scholiasts Porphyrio and Comm. Cruq. to have been a man of the worst passions, and to have committed in-cess with Aemilia, a Vestal virgin. "Certe adulteras sincerissima cupiditatem sectabatur" Porphyrio says, in a tone which shows
he had some known person in his mind.
But Aemilia was found guilty of inceast, together with two other Vestals, Marcia and Licia, a.u.c. 640. (Liv. Epit. 63.) Plu-tarch mentions the circumstance (Quaest.
Rom. 80), and says that among the persons accused was one Βούττιος Βαρρας, which Fabricius has corrected into Βατριτιος Βαρρός, Batusius Barrus, which no doubt is the correct reading. The Scholiasts in all probability had read of this Barrus, and confounded Horace's coxcomb with him. There was one of this family who was a distinguished provincial orator in Cicero's time, mentioned by him in his Brutus (c. 46). The name, therefore, is a real one, but it does not follow that Horace might not mean somebody of a different name. Orelli assumes him to be the same as the person mentioned in S. 4. 110 as reduced to poverty, and adds, "before he was so reduced he was an immoderate dandy and a licentious fellow," which is a little too dogmatical in a matter so uncertain. There is no similarity between the Ut cupiat formosus, eat quacunque puellis
Injiciat curam quarerendi singula, quali
Sit facie, sura, quali pede, dente, capillo:
Sic qui promittit cives, urbem sibi curae,
Imperium fore et Italian, delubra deorum,
Quo patre sit natus, num ignota matre inhonestus,
Omnes mortales curare et quaerere cogit.
"Tune Syri, Damae aut Dionysi filius, audes Dejicere e saxo cives aut tradere Cadmo?"
"At Novius collega gradu post me sedet uno;"
Namque est ille pater quod erat meus." "Hoc tibi Paullus
Et Messalla videris? At hic, si plostra ducenta Concurrantque foro tria funera magna, sonabit
Cornua quod vincatque tubas; saltem tenet hoc nos."
Nunc ad me redeo libertinum patre natum,
Quem rodunt omnes libertinum patre natum,
Nunc, quia sum tibi, Maecenas, convictor; at olim,
Quod mihi pareret legio Romana tribuno.
Dissimile hoc illi est; quia non ut forsit honorem
Jure mihi invidete quivis ita te quoque amicum,
Praesertim cautem dignos assumere prava Ambitione procul. Felicem dicere non hoc front benches; the other that Novius has not reached the equestrian rank which his colleague has. I incline to think that the words are only used figuratively. The early Commentators took them so, and did not think of the theatre, from which however the metaphor may be taken.

41. Hoc tibi Paullus Et Messalla] 'Paullus ' was a cognomen, which appears in several of the 'gentes'; but it is best known in connexion with the Aemilia gens, and the persons of L. Aemilius Paullus, who fell at Cannae (C. i. 12), his son the illustrious conqueror of Perseus, and the younger Scipio Africanus, son of the latter. The Messallae belonged to the Valeria gens, one of the oldest in Rome. This branch of the 'gens' were highly distinguished, but Horace introduces the name probably out of compliment to his friend Corvinus, for whom he wrote C. iii. 21. As to 'hoc,' in the sense of 'propter hoc,' see above, S. 1. 46, n.
The same person who puts the question
'tune Syri, &c.' is here supposed to rejoin, saying, that though this worthy tribune has a colleague a degree less illustrious than himself he need not think himself a Paullus; and besides, though Novius be his inferior in one way, he beats him in strength of lungs, "and that is what we like," where the speaker ironically puts himself for the people.

43. Concurrantque foro tria funera] These would be public funerals, 'funera indictiva,' at which the corpse of the decased was carried in procession from his house, with the noise of trumpets and horns and fifes; and women ('praeficae') singing dirges; and 'mimi,' dancers and stage-players, who recited passages suited to the occasion, and sometimes acted the part of merry-andrews, mixing mirth with woe;

and after these came men who represented the ancestors of the deceased, wearing masks suited to each character; and then the corpse on an open bier, which was followed by the relations and friends all dressed in black. They went thus in procession to the Forum, when the bier was set down, and one of the relations pronounced a funeral oration, after which the body was taken up again, and the procession went on with the same noisy accompaniments to the place without the city (intra-mural burials were forbidden by the laws of the twelve tables), where the body was first to be burnt and then buried. (See Beck. Gallus, Exc. 'Interment of the Dead.') The idiom
'magna sonabit' occurs above, S. 4. 43, 'os magna sonetur.'

48. Quod mihi pareret] See above, on
v. 25.

49. forsit] A few MSS. have 'forsan,' but 'forsit' is in most. The oldest editions
I have seen have all 'forsan.' Lambinus restored 'forsit,' which is compounded of 'fors sit.' Whether it occurs elsewhere, or whether the passages in which it is supposed to occur are correctly copied, is doubted.
Forcelli gives one example from Lucretius which seems genuine. Horace says it might be that people had cause to grudge him
the honourable post of military tribune, because he was not qualified for it; but no one could deny that he deserved the friendship of Maecenas, because he he was so particular in choosing only the deserving.
'Prava ambitione' means low flattery, to which Maecenas would not listen.

52. Felicem dicere] 'Felix ' is 'lucky.'
Horace means he did not owe his introduction to Maecenas to his luck, but to his friends. As to 'hoc,' see above, v. 41, n.
The MSS. vary between 'possum' and Me possum casu quod te sortitus amicum;
Nulla etenim mihi te fors obtulit: optimus olim
Virgilius, post hunc Varius dixere quid essem.
Ut veni coram singultim paucu locutus,
Infans namque pudor prohibebat plura profari,
Non ego me claro natum patre, non ego eirem
Me Satureiano vectari rura caballo,
Sed quod eram narro. Respondes ut tuus est mos
Pauca: abeo; et revocas nonzero post mense jubesque
Esse in amicorum numero. Magnum hoc ego duco
Quod placi tibi qui turpi secernis honestum,
Non patre praeclaro sed vita et pectore puro.
Atqui si vitii mediocribus ac mea paucis
Mendosa est natura alioqui recta, velut si
Egregio inspersos reprehendas corpore naevos;
Si neque avaritiam neque sordes aut mala lustra

The MSS., with the above exception, have all 'mihi te,' and the common sense of all the editors I have seen but Cunningham and Sanadon has disregarded Bentley's tirade.

55. Virgilius, post hunc Varius] See S. 5. 40, n.

59. Satureiano] A fine horse bred in the pastures of Saturium in Calabria, near Tarentum, according to Servius on Georg. ii. 197. The Scholast Porphyron says it was a place in Apulia. The lengthening of the antepenult is required by the metre. Others explain Saturi Tarenti in the above passage of Virgil from Saturus being a divinity particularly worshipped by the Tarentines. (Cic. in Verr. ii. 460.) This would make 'Sat. caballo' merely a Tarentine horse.

64. sed vita et pectore puro.] 'Not as being the son of a distinguished father, but because my life and heart were pure.' So I understand the words. Orelli says this interpretation is 'prorsus imperita,' and applies 'vita et pectore puro' to the father, 'as born of a father not distinguished, but of life and heart pure.' I do not think Maecenas considered what was the character of Horace's father, but what was his own.

68. aut mala lustra] The received reading till Bentley was 'ac.' No MS. has 'aut,' and Bentley and subsequent editors have supposed no edition had that word; but it appears in Ascensius' edition of 1519. Where he got it does not appear, for the Objiciet vere quisquam mihi, purus et insons
(Ut me collaudem) si et vivo carus amicis;
Causa fuit pater his, qui macro pauper agello
Noluit in Flavi ludum me mittere, magni
Quo pueri magnis e centurionibus orti,
Laevus suspensi loculos tabulamque lacerto,
Ibant octonis referentes Idibus aera:

Scholiasts whose commentary accompany his own have 'ac,' though Bentley says in an older copy of Acron printed at Venice in 1490, and in a MS. of his commentary in the library of the Royal Society, 'aut' appears. It is with very little doubt the true reading, for Horace repeatedly introduces 'aut' after 'neque,' twice repeated. Other passages are C. i. 23. 5; S. i. 9. 31; i. 1. 15, 2. 22. The construction with ' nec' and 'et' is of the same kind, and has been noticed before.

71. macro pauper agello] This small farm of his father's at Venusia was confiscated during the time he was with the army of Brutus and Cassius.

72. Noluit in Flavi ludum] His father, who knew the value of a good education, and formed a right estimate of Horace's abilities, would not send him to a small provincial school kept by one Flavius, where nothing but arithmetic was taught, but took him for his education to Rome, where, though Horace complains that the teaching lay chiefly in figures and the pursuits of a practical life (Epp. ii. 1. 103, sqq., A. P. 325, sqq.), there were means of acquiring a knowledge of literature and the arts for those who chose to take advantage of them. Ovid in like manner was sent from Sulmo, his native town, to Rome. (Trist. iv. 10. 16.) 'Magni,' 'magnis,' may mean 'big,' 'coarse,' contemptuously, as Persius says (S. v. 149, sqq.):

"Dixeris haec inter varicos centuriones;
Continuo crassum ridet Vulcius ingenus Et centum Graecos curto centusse lectur;"

or they may mean 'important,' as centurions and their sons might be in a small municipal town.

74. Laevus suspensi loculos] This verse is repeated in Epp. i. 1. 56. Each boy went to school with a bag, in which he carried his books and pens, and perhaps his 'calculi' or pebbles used in calculation. The manner of using them is conjecturally explained in Smith's Dict. Ant., art. 'Abacus.' 'Tabulam' is explained by Cruquius Scholastic as signifying the 'abacus' or board on which the 'calculi' were arranged and the sums performed. Acron explains it differently as 'buxum in quo meditatur scribere,' the wooden tablet covered with wax, for writing upon, which is the better explanation. These country school-boys did for themselves what at Rome was done for boys of good birth by slaves 'capsarii' (Sueton. Claud. 35).

"Quisquis adhuc uno partam colit asse
Minervam,
Quem sequitur custos angustae vernula capsae."
(Juv. x. 116, sq.)

75. Ibant octonis] This verse has caused a good deal of difficulty to the commentators. In the first place, the meaning of 'octonis Idibus' is not clear. The Scholiasts say that 'octonis' is transferred by hypallage to 'Idibus,' and that the sum these boys paid their teacher was eight asses a month, payable on the Ides. Landinus supposes the money was paid on the eighth day before the Ides of every month (which would be the day after the Nones, a. d. octavum Idus), or once a year on the Ides of every eighth month. Doering calls 'octonis' an 'epitheton ornans,' because there were eight days between the Nones and Ides. So Orelli and many others understand the word, supposing 'aera' to be the master's stipend, and this to be paid on the Ides of every month, or as others say on any one of the days between the Nones and Ides. Another interpretation has been given by C. F. Hermann, and adopted by Dillenbr. and Estré. They suppose that 'octonis mensibus' means on the Ides of eight months in the year, the four summer months from the Ides of June to the Ides of October being kept as holidays. They rely upon an epigram of Martial (x. 62):

"Ludi magister, parce simplici turbae:
Sic te frequentes audiant capillati,
Et delicatiae diligentia chorus mense,
Nec calculator nec notarius velox"
Sed puerum est ausus Romam portare docendum
Artes quas doceat quivis eques atque atque senator
Semet prognatos. Vestem servosque sequentes,
In magnu ut populo, si qui vidisset, avita

Majore quisquam circulo coronetur.
Albae Leone flameo calent luces
Tostamque fervens Julius coquit messem.
Cirrata loris horridis Seythae pellis
Qua vulputat Marsyas Celaenaus,
Ferulaeque tristes sceptra paedagogorum
Cessent et Idus dormiant in Octobres.
Aestate pueri si valent satis discunt.

From this it is inferred that it was an exception to the rule if schools were not closed during the summer months. That these months were four is not stated by Martial, and for an uninterrupted vacation any body will see that it is excessive. There are commentators (Torrentius, Zeuni, and others), who suppose that 'referentes aera' means not bringing with them their school-fee, but calculating, according to exercises given them by the master, sums of interest (which the Romans paid on the Ides). 'Referentes' they suppose to be entering in these tables. Torrentius also affirms that the schoolmaster’s stipend was paid him annually, because Juvenal says (vii. 242, sq.):

"Haec, inquit, cures et cum se vererit annus Accipe, victori populus quod postulat, aurum."

But the practice may have varied even in Horace’s time, and still more between Horace’s and Juvenal’s. In the absence of any decided authority (Martial’s is vague) as to any specific practice about holidays or day of payment, I am inclined to think ‘octonis Idibus’ must be merely a periphrasis for ‘Idibus.’ ‘Aera’ is used by Juvenal for the teacher’s fee (“Minus est autem quam rhetoris aera,”) and in that sense I take it, not with Torrentius. To assume from Juvenal (x. 117, quoted in last note) that the regular payment at one of these cheap schools was an ‘as,’ and that ‘aera’ is equivalent to ‘asses,’ is unwarranted. The ‘as’ there referred to was the Minerval, a voluntary offering presented by each scholar to his master at the Quinquatras, the festival of Minerva. The terms no doubt varied, though they must have been low at this Venusian school, and at all, compared with those of modern days.

76. Sed puerum est ausus] At what age Horace was sent to Rome he does not inform us. But it is probable he went when he was twelve years old.

77. Artes quas doceat] In the earlier days of Roman history the education of a boy was of the simplest kind, consisting chiefly of reading, writing, and arithmetic. ‘Calculator’ and ‘notarius’ continued until the time of Martial to be names for a schoolmaster; and, as observed before (v. 72, n.), the majority of boys learnt little more than the above even in Horace’s time. When Cicero was a boy the learning of the twelve tables formed a necessary part of education (Leg. ii. 29): “Discebamus enim pueri duodecim ut carmen necessarium, quasi jam nemo discit.” Freer intercourse with Greece and the Greek towns of Italy brought a more liberal class of studies to Rome, where Horace says he studied Homer (Epp. ii. 2. 41, sq.):

"Romae nutrir mihi contigisset atque doceri Iratus Grauis quantum nuciusset Achilles."

Rhetoric was a branch of study much pursued by the young Romans; poetry likewise, and the philosophy of Greece. Their studies commenced at an early age, at first under the teaching of their ‘paedagogi,’ and afterwards (till they assumed the ‘toga virilis,’ and in some cases longer) at the ‘ludi literarii,’ private schools which they attended as day scholars. The ‘paedagogus,’ whose office was of late growth at Rome and borrowed from Greece, had the same functions as the παιδαγωγός among the Greeks, and was a slave as there. He was continually about the boy’s person, and went with him to his masters. This task Horace’s father, who could have had but few slaves, and had none whom he could trust with such important duties, performed himself. Besides the ‘paedagogus,’ as observed above (v. 74, n.), other slaves went with the boy to carry his bag, &c., and to give him consequence.

79. In magnu ut populo,] The meaning of this is variously given. “As is proper in a great city like Rome,” Dillenbr. says: “so far as one could see me in such a busy crowd,” is Orelli’s interpretation of Heindorf’s. Doering is divided between the two. I am not clear upon the point, but I incline to Heindorf’s opinion. On the construction, see Key’s L. G. § 1131, note. The reading
Ex re p raeberti sumptus mihi eredert illos.
Ipse mihi custos incorruptissimus omnes
Circum doctores aderat. Quid multa? Pudicum,
Qui primus virtutis honos, servavit ab omni
Non solum facto verum opprobrio quoque turpi;
Nec timuit sibi ne vitio quis verteret olim
Si praeco parvas aut, ut fuit ipse, coactor
Mercedes sequerer; neque ego essum questus: at hoc nunc
Laus illi debetur et a me gratia major.
Nil me poeniteat sanum patris hujus, eoque
Non, ut magna dolu factum negat esse suo pars
Quod non ingenuos habeat clarosque parentes,
Sic me defendam. Longe mea discrepat istic Et vox et ratio; nam si natura jubet

of the old editions, and the received reading in Bentley's time was 'si quis.' But the Blandinian and other old MSS. have 'si qui,' which occurs above, v. 30.

86. praeco—coactor] The first of these functionaries was a crier either at auctions (one of his duties being to induce persons to attend and buy——see A. P. 419, "Ut praeco in merces turbam qui cogit emendas"), or in courts of justice, or the public assemblies. There was a 'praeco' at all punishments and executions to declare the crime of the offender (Epod. iv. 12, n.); also town-criers, who cried lost property, as with us. There were other kinds of criers, recounted in Dict. Ant. Which class Horace refers to we cannot tell. Nor is it decided what class of 'coactores' his father belonged to. There were persons employed by the 'publicani' to collect the revenue, and who were called 'coactores.' The person who collected the money bid at an auction was also a 'coactor,' and generally persons employed to collect money bore that title. It is probable that the 'coactores' of the first class made a good deal of money. Matthew the Apostle was one, and he was rich. It is generally believed that the elder Horace belonged to the second of the above classes, and some colour is given to this by the association of the word with 'praeco.' But Suetonius, or the author of Horace's life attributed to him, says that he was in the employ of the 'publicani.' Also it is questioned whether he continued his employment at Rome, or quitted it when he left Venusia, or only took to it at Rome,—a point we have no means whatever of deciding.

87. at hoc nunc] The old editions nearly all have 'ob hoc,' which has very little MS. authority, and seems clearly to be a correction of copyists, who wanted a preposition for 'hoc,' not considering the independent use of this word, which is the ablative. Acron had 'ad haec' in his copy, and mentions another reading 'ad hoc.' Bentley adopts the former in place of 'ob hoc,' which was then the received reading. Rutgersius mentions one MS. with 'ab hoc,' from which he extracts what, with most of the later editors, I conceive to be the true reading, 'at hoc.' 'At' is much wanted here, and 'hoc,' in the sense of 'propter hoc,' in the sense of 'propter hoc,' 'et qui,' is commonly used by Horace. See in this Satire, v. 41, "Hoc tibi Paulus et Messalla videris" and v. 52, "Facile dicere non hoc me possum." It is also common in Caesar. 'At hoc' is the reading of Aldus' edition of 1501, Orelli's St. Galle MS., and two mentioned by Fea in the Vatican library. All the Blandinians had 'ob hoc,' and two of the Bernae 'ad hoc.'

89. Nil me poeniteat sanum] 'I hope while I have my senses I may never be ashamed.' Horace uses this mode of expression elsewhere, as in the last Satire, v. 44, "Nil ego contulerim jucundo sanus amico." S. ii. 3. 322, "Quae si quis sanus facit sanus facit et tu." 90. dolo] Forcell. does not notice this use of 'dolus.' It is used like 'fraus' in C. i. 28. 30, "Negligis immertis nocturnam postmodum te genus fraudem committere," for a fault generally: 'dolo suo' by his own fault.

93. Et vox et ratio:] 'My language and my judgment.'
A certis annis aevum remeare peractum
Atque alios legere ad fastum quoscunque parentes
Optaret sibi quisque, meis contentus honestos
Fascibus et sellis nollem mihi sumere, demens
Judicio volgi, sanus fortasse tuo, quod
Nollem onus hau dis solitum portare molestum.
Nam mihi continuo major quaeque forat res
Atque alius plures, ducentus et unus
Et comes alter uti ne solus ruse peregreve
Exirem; plures calones atque caballi
Pascendi, ducenda petorritta. Nunc mihi curto

94. A certis annis] 'From any given period.' He means that at all times from his cradle upwards, his father had been to him all that a father could be. 'Legere ad fastum,' to choose with reference to ambition whatever parents each man might desire. Most of the editions are so pointed as to make 'quoscunque' independent of 'optaret,' and the sense to be 'optaret sibi quisque,' each man might choose for himself, or each man would choose, as Lambinus says. But 'opto' will hardly bear this sense here, and the position of 'quoscunque' makes the other the more natural construction. So Acron takes it: ‘Si fieret illi potestas eligendi a fatis quos vellet parentes contentus esset parentibus meis.’ We know nothing of Horace’s mother, whom he probably lost in very early life; but he here intimates his respect for her memory as well as his father’s.

95. honestos] Several MSS. have ‘honustos’ and ‘onustos,’ and Lambinus says that reading has older and better authority than ‘honestos.’ The Bollandian MSS. and all Cruquiüs’ others had ‘honestos.’ Torquinius denies Lambinus’ assertion, which Rutgersius defends. (Lect. Ven. c. 17.) But ‘onustos’ in all probability arose out of v. 99. The Scholiasts had ‘honestos,’ On the ‘fascis’ and ‘sella curulis,’ their nature, and the officers entitled to use them, all information may be obtained from Smith’s Dict. Ant.

96. fortasse] The Greeks used έκως in this way where a certain and not a doubtful proposition is intended.

101. salutandi plures,] This does not mean that he would have more acquaintances, but that in order to preserve his position he must sell his independence, bowing to persons he would not otherwise notice, and paying visits of ceremony early in the morning,—a trouble that Horace would feel more than most men. Other interpretations have been given, but this is obviously Horace’s meaning. He must also, he says, hire one or two persons to go about with him in the character of clients; he must buy a number of horses and slaves of the lower sort. ‘Calones’ were properly slaves who went with the army, carrying the heavier part of the soldiers’ accoutrements. But the word was also applied to domestic slaves employed on menial work. The ‘petorritum’ was a four-wheeled carriage. Gellius, who has a chapter on the subject (xv. 30), affirms, on the authority of Varro, that it was introduced from Gaul beyond the Alps. Festus says the name is derived from the number of its wheels, and the Welsh ‘pedwar,’ ‘four,’ and ‘riden,’ ‘wheels,’ make the Celtic origin of the name not improbable. (See Gronovius’ note on the above passage of Gellius.) The Aeolic form πιρόπες, and the Oscan ‘petur, ‘four,’ and the Latin ‘rota,’ show that the above is not the only etymology of which ‘petorritum’ is capable. Comm. Cruq., on Epp. ii. 1. 192, says the ‘petorritum’ was used for the conveyance of female slaves; but there is no reason to suppose it was limited to that use.

104. cutro Ire licet mulo] This Forcellini interprets, after Comm. Cruq., ‘docked.’ Orelli says this is only an English practice, and supposes it to have been unknown to the Romans. But whoever Cruquiüs’ mysterious Scholiast may have been, he was not an Englishman, nor of very modern times. He must have seen ‘docked’ horses, for no man would imagine them that had not. The interpretation ‘castrato,’ which Orelli attributes to Forcell., does not appear in the English edition of his Lexicon. Orelli interprets ‘cutro’ ‘cheap,’ as ‘Te-
HORATII FLACCI

Ire licet mulo vel si libet usque Tarentum,
Mantica cui lumbos onere ulceret atque eques armos:
Objiect nemo sordes mihi quas tibi, Tilli,
Cum Tiburte via praetorem quinque sequuntur
Te pueri lasanum portantes oenophorumque.
Hoc ego commodius quam tu, praecelare senator,
Milibus atque aliiis vivo. Quacunque libido est,
Incedo solus; percontor quanti olus ac far;
Fallacem Circum vespertinumque pererro

cum habita et noris quam sit tibi curta supellex” (Pers. S. iv. 52). Others suppose it to be a stout short-bellied animal. I do not pretend to decide; but it was an unsightly beast, whatever it was Horace meant.

105. usque Tarentum.] Along the most frequent of all the roads, the Via Appia, and to the farthest part of Italy, carrying his portmaneau behind him. Public officers could not go beyond a certain distance from Rome without the permission of the senate.

107. Tilli,] Orelli assumes that this is the person mentioned before (v. 24) as military tribune, and that he was afterwards made praetor. But I do not see why Horace should have mentioned him in the lower office at a time when he must have held a higher. He appears to have been a parsimonious person, going into the country with no company of friends, but only five slaves to attend him (see note on S. i. 3. 11), carrying a jar of their master’s cheap wine, and an utensil that ill represented the dignity of his curule chair. The Via Tiburtina left Rome by the Esquiline gate, and bore that name as far as Tibur, from whence the Via Valeria completed the communication with Aternum on the Adriatic.

111. Milibus atque aliiis] This is the reading of all the MSS. Lamblinus conjectured ‘multis,’ and Heindorf has adopted that word, considering that ‘milia’ in the plural is always a substantive. But that is not the case. See note on S. ii. 3. 197.

112. quanti olus ac far.] Horace means, as Orelli says, that he lounges in the market and talks freely to the market people, without fear of lowering his dignity or being remarked.

probably gives the right meaning of this,
saying: “Fallacem dixit propter Sarmadacos et sortilegos mathematicos, qui ad metas spectatores circumstabant et imperatos sortibus et nugis fallebant.” ‘Sarmadaci’ (or more properly ‘Sarmadaci’) is a Greek word, the origin of which is unknown; it was adopted by ecclesiastical writers. Augustin (cont. Academ. iii. 15) uses it for an impostor, while Chrysostom interprets it γελωτῶτοιος. Plautus (Paeonius, v. 5. 11) alludes to a class of cheats who frequented the Circus:—

“Itaque replebo, atritate atrior multo ut siet
Quam Aegyptii aut qui cortinam luidis per circum ferunt;”

and Cicero (de Divin. i. 58) declares his unbelief in all those impostors that pretend to prophetic and mystical knowledge, in the words of Ennius:—

“Non habeo nauci Marsum augura, Non vicanos haruspices, non de Circro
astrologos,
Non Isiacos conjectores, non interpretes sonniui.”

Juvenal says that the poorer sort of women got their fortunes told in the Circus (S. vi.
582):—

“Si mediocris erit, spatium lastrabit utrique
Metarum et sortes ducet, frontemque ma-numque Praebibil vati crebrum poppyssma roganti;”

where ‘spatium utrique metarum’ means the area on either side of the ‘spina,’ or central wall that ran down the middle of the Circus, at each end of which were the ‘metae.’ Juvenal says again, a few verses further on, in allusion to the same practice, “Plebeium in Circo positum est et in aggere fatum” (‘aggere’ is explained below, S. viii.
14, n.). This class of cheats, therefore, no doubt infested the Circus and gave it a bad name, but it was also frequented by prosti-tutes in vast numbers, who hired the vaults Saepe Forum; adsisto divinis; inde domum me
Ad porri et ciceris refero laganique catinum;
Coena ministratur pueris tribus, et lapis albus
Pocula cum cyatho duo sustinet; adstat echinus
Vilis, cum patera guttus, Campana supellex.
Deinde eo dormitum, non sollicitus milii quod eras

under the 'cavea,' and carried on their vile trade there, and was surrounded with shops established for the benefit of the spectators. The Circus Maximus was called Circus κατ’ ἑχινὴν. When there were no races or games going on, it was probably frequented as a lounge by all manner of people. I know no other way of explaining Horace's words. There could be nothing in his going to the Circus as a spectator of the games, which all did; but probably men of consequence did not care to be seen there among the vulgar at other times. The Forum was not frequented in the evening by the richer class of people, who were then eating their dinner. Horace liked to stroll out at that hour, and take his light meal afterwards, and to stop and hear what the fortunetellers had to say for themselves. Respecting these persons, see C. i. 11, Introduction.

115. Ad porri et ciceris] This Pythagorean meal of leeks, pulse, and fritters, was partly perhaps matter of choice, and partly of necessity. Horace was poor at this time, and his health was indifferent. A vegetable diet was and is much more common in Italy than with us; and probably the most luxurious of the Romans, when by themselves, frequently abstained from meat. A dish of 'cicer,' ready boiled, was sold in the streets for an as in the time of Martial (i. 104. 10): 'Asse cicer tepidum constat.' A vegetable dinner, with a great variety of dishes, is described by Martial in an invitation to a friend (v. 78). 'Laganus' is described by the Scholiasts as a flat thin cake, fried and eaten with condiments. It was sometimes fried under roast meat or fowls, so as to get their dripping, and so would be like our Yorkshire pudding. Horace had no doubt the plainest sort.

116. pueris tribus.] This number was the lowest probably that at that time waited on any person who had any slaves at all. (See above, on v. 108.) 'Lapis albus' was a small side-table of white marble. The wealthy Romans had a great variety of tables of the handsomest sort in their dining rooms for exhibiting their plate. (See below, S. ii. 4, n.; and above, S. 3. 13, n.) All the plate Horace had to show was two cups and a cyathus (C. iii. 19. 12), and these it is probable were usually empty. Fea says that 'lapis albus' does not mean a table, but a slab with holes, in which the cups (whose bottoms, he says, were round, and so not suited to standing on a plain surface) were placed. It was called by the Greeks ἐγγυθρίης (Athen. viii. 5), by the Romans 'incitiga,' a corruption of the same word. (Forcell. has given a very far-fetched derivation to this word.) This slab Fea says was supported by another below it, the upper one being called 'basis,' the other 'hypobasis,' as appears in an inscription he quotes from Gruter, which records the presentation to Hercules of 'crapiteram argyrocorinthiam. cum bassi. sua et hypobasti. marmorea.' But there is not enough in what he says to fix this meaning on 'lapis -albus,' which I should not have noticed if Orelli had not adopted Fea's explanation. The 'echinus' is a vessel no where else mentioned by that name, and it would be tiresome to the reader if I were to go through all that the commentators have said upon the subject. The Scholiasts give us the choice between a salt-cellar (in the shape of an 'echinus'), a glass bottle, a leather bottle, and a wooden bowl in which to wash the cups. This last is the explanation adopted by Heindorf. Cruquius says, 'lucus obscursus est et ipso echino spinosior.' Fea contends for the salt-cellar, thinking Horace could not omit all mention of that. (See S. 3. 14, n.) Some MSS., according to Lambinus, have 'echino,' making 'villis' agree with the following substantives. I am not aware that they are entitled to any weight, but Gesner edits 'echino.' 'Paterae' were broad flat saucer-shaped cups, and were much used in libations. 'Guttus' was a long thin-necked bottle from which wine or oil was poured very slowly, drop by drop. It was also used in libations, and these two vessels, as here joined, have reference to the practice of offering a libation at every meal to the 'lares.' See C. iv. 5, n. These were of the commonest earthenware which came from Campania. See S. ii. 3. 144.
Surgendum sit lane, obeundus Marsya, qui se Voltum ferre negat Noviorum posse minoris.
Ad quartam jaceo; post hanc vagor; aut ego, lecto
Aut scripto quod me tacitum juvet, ungor olivo,
Non quo fraudatis immundus Natta lucernis.

120. obeundus Marsya.] Horace says he goes to bed without the nervous feeling that he must be up early to go to the Forum, where a statue of Marsyas (the unfortunate rival of Apollo) was erected near the Rostra. Servius (on Aen. iv. 68, "Legiferæ Cerei Phoeboque patriique Lyaeo") says that Lyaeus was properly looked upon as the defender of liberty in cities, and that for this reason the statue of Marsyas his servant was set up in the Forum, with his arm lifted up, as a sign of the freedom and wealth of the city in which he is. According to Savigny (Vermischte Schriften, i. 40), Marsyas or Silenus was the symbol of a city having the Jus Italicum, one part of which was a free constitution of its own. It would therefore appear in the Forum as the symbol of free jurisdiction. The only representations of Marsyas that remain exhibit him either in the agony of punishment, or in the suspense that preceded it. There is a fine statue of him in the Grand Duke's palace at Florence, suspended to a tree, with his arms fastened over his head, and his feet scarcely able to touch the ground, while his face shows great pain; and there is a gem in the Massimi collection at Rome (Agostini Gemme Ant. p. ii. pl. 9), in which he is represented as tied to a tree, expecting the knife, which Apollo (said to be meant for Nero, who, Suetonius says, liked to be represented in the statues of the gods and heroes, and particularly under the person of Apollo, for he affected much skill in music) is handing to a slave. The same scene is represented a little differently in the collection of Gorlaeus (i. 111), where the poor wretch has lost his skin, and is writhing in agony, while the slave is returning the knife to Apollo. On the other side of this gem, which is engraved on both sides, are the heads of Nero and Poppaea. Gronovius considers this to be the true gem, and the other a clumsy copy. But however this may be, "a Marsyas countenance" was synonymous with dejection and ill humour. Thus Juvenal addresses Naevolus (S. ix. 1): "Scire velim quare toties mihi, Naevole, tristis Occurras fronte obducta, cenu Marsya victus."

So that, when Servius describes the statue in the Forum, (to which Martial alludes in the sixty-fourth Epigram of the second book,

"— fora litibus omnia fervent; Ipsa potest fieri Marsya causidicus,"

with his arm raised, it is probably a sign of extreme suffering; and Horace seems to indicate that his face was distorted, and ascribes it humorously to his detestation of the younger Novius, whom also, as Comm. Crq. says, he may mean to represent him as threatening with his uplifted arm. Who this younger Novius we cannot tell. The Scholiasts say he was an usurer, and intimate that he was of a family of usurers. "Marsyam alteram habere manum erectam ad depellendos Novios, quod eorum foeneratorum impudentiam non posset sustinere" (Comm. Crq.). Estré suppose him to be the person mentioned in S. 3. 21, because Maenius being a spendthrift, we may suppose Novius to have been the reverse, and so to correspond to the character of this usurer. This does not help us much.

122. Ad quartam jaceo.] This does not mean that he slept till the fourth hour, but lay in bed reading or thinking, as he says above, S. 4. 133: "neque enim cum lectulus aut me Porticus exceptis, desum mihi." The first hour he considers late enough for any man to sleep. Epp. i. 17. 6: "Si te grata quies et primam somnum in horam Delectat." Sometimes he got up early and went out to walk (S. 9); but as a general rule he remained in bed till the fourth hour, after which he got up and took a stroll, as he had done the evening before; or else, after reading and writing by himself (tacitum) and in bed, as much as he felt inclined, he anointed himself with oil and went to the Campus Martius to get some exercise. ('Lecto' and 'scripto' are obviously participles, not verbs, as some take them; nor do they go with 'vagor,' as Bentley, unnecessarily complicating the sentence, affirms.) The Romans rubbed oil on their limbs either before swimming in the Tiber (C. iii. 12. 6, "Simul unctos Tiberinis humeros lavit in undis;" S. ii. 1. 8: "ter uncti Transnantum Tiberim"), or before their more violent exercises:
Ast ubi me fessum sol acior ire lavatum
Admonuit fugio Campum lusumque trigonem.
Pransus non avide, quantum interpellet inani
Ventre diem durare, domesticus otior. Haec est
Vita solutorum misera ambitione gravique;
His me consolor victurum suavius ac si
Quaestor avus, pater atque meus patruusque fuisset.

Sanguine viperino
Cautius vitat, neque jam livida gestat armis
Brachia, saepe disco, " &c. (C. i. 8. 8. sqq.)
The parsimonious Natta, who robbed the lamps to oil himself, was probably a person of good family, that being the cognomen of the Pinaria gens, one of the oldest patrician families in Rome.

125. Ast ubi me fessum] When the sun began to get hot about noon, and Horace was tired with his game, he went to the public baths to bathe, which was usual after playing, and then took a light luncheon (see above, S. 5. 25, n.), after which he lounged at home till evening, when he went out for his stroll perhaps, and came home again to his supper, as he told us before. In v. 126 there has been made a more violent change in the text than any other that the editors of Horace have ventured upon. From the earliest of the Scholiasts till Bentley the received reading was "fugio rabiosi tempora signi," which Acron explains "nestosos dies caniculares;" Cruquius' Commentator and Porphyrius the same. It would have been better if they had explained it of the noonday sun. But Cruquius observes in his Commentary that the oldest of his Blandinian MSS. had "fugio Campum lusumque trigonem," but with marks of a doubtful reading underneath, and the received words in the margin. Bentley, seized with his usual avidity upon this reading, "Aut enim egregie fallor, aut ea sola sincere lectio est, et Venusina lucerna digna." With one exception it has been received into the text by every subsequent editor whose edition I have seen. Dillenbr. rejects it, and calls the old reading "unice vera lectio." I cannot myself see the grounds upon which the new reading has been so unhesitatingly adopted. If the other be weak, as I think it is, and this somewhat more to the purpose, that may only prove it to be a more ingenious interpolation than the other, supposing both to be invented by the copyists, which is not unlikely. F. V. Fritzsche (in Aristoph. Thesm. p. 13), quoted by Wistemann in his edition of Heindorf's Notes, and by Orelli in his excursus on this passage, says that Mavortius, the editor from whom we are said to have derived the received text of Horace, found an hiatus after 'fugio' in his copies, and absurdly filled it up with the words 'rabiosi tempora signi.' But why the copyist of the Blandinian MS. found no hiatus, and was guilty of no interpolation, the same scholar does not say. I have followed the judgment of such scholars as Gesner, Doering, Heindorf, Fea, Orelli, in receiving the new reading, which is undoubtedly nearer than the other, but without much faith in the verse having been so written by Horace. 'Lusum trigonem' was a game of ball only mentioned elsewhere by Martial. The players, as the name implies, were three in number, and stood in a triangle. Their skill appears to have been shown in throwing and catching the ball with the left hand:

"Sie palam tibi de trigone nddo
Uctae det favor arbiter coronae;
Nec landet Polybi magis sinistras."

(Mart. vii. 72.)

An unskilful player is represented as catching the ball with the right hand as well as the left:

"Captabit tepidum dextra laevaque trigonem Imputet exceptas ut tibi saepe pilas."

(Ibid. xii. 83.)

Dillenbr. doubts whether this game was known in Horace's day. It is no where mentioned earlier than Martial; and I am surprised that Becker, from whom (Gallus, Exc. 'on the Games') the above account is taken, does not refer to this passage of Horace. From the above passage of Martial, Bentley proposes to read 'nudum,' thereby (for the sake, as usual, of a mere verbal correspondence between passages that have no connexion) weakening the slender authority on which his emendation rests.

127. quantum interpellet] As much as would prevent me from going all day on an empty stomach. The prose construction would be 'interpellet quin,' or 'quominus,' or 'ne durem.'
SATIRE VII.

I do not think many persons will agree with Franke in his high estimate of this Satire, the best of its kind, he says, and yielding to none or even preferable to all others, in elegance of composition, suavity of diction, and dramatic power. He wishes to prove that it was not the earliest of the Satires, as most commentators suppose, some judging from the quality, others with more reason from the subject of it. The subject is a dispute, travestied I think without much humour, between one of the officers on Brutus' staff and a merchant of Clazomenae (a town on the gulf of Smyrna), arising it may be supposed out of some money transactions. Horace treats the matter much in the same way as the dispute got up between the two parasites for the amusement of Maceenas and his friends at Caudium (S. 5. 51, sqq.). He no doubt had some reason for disliking Rupilius, which the Scholiasts supply, whether with any sufficient authority it is impossible to say. They tell us that this man's native place was Praeneste (which may be gathered from v. 28); that he was banished from that town by his fellow-citizens; that he then served in Africa in the army of Attius Varus, proprator of Cn. Pompeius; that he was received into favour by Julius Caesar and made Praetor; that after Caesar's death he was proscribed by the triumvirs and joined the army of Brutus. Finally, that he was disgusted at Horace, a man of low birth, being made a military tribute, and continually insulted him, which indignities Horace retorted in this Satire. Persius, the Scholiasts say, was born of a Greek father and a Roman mother. Beyond this, which may or may not be true, we know nothing about him but what we gather from this Satire, that he was a wealthy man and carried on a large business of some kind at Clazomenae. Dillenbr. supposes he was employed as contractor for the supply of corn in Brutus' army, and that his dispute with Rupilius arose out of transactions connected with this business, on which, from his experience, he was employed by Persius; for Dillenbr. and others (see Spohn in Jahn's edition of Horace, ed. 2nd, p. 257) identify the hero of this Satire with P. Rupilius Munenia, the Roman 'eques' and 'publicanus,' recommended by Cicero to Crassipes the Quaestor of Bithynia (Ad Fam. xiii. 9). These theories are hardly worth mentioning in a case of so much obscurity. Comm. Crug. says Persius was a 'negotiator' at Clazomenae. But the 'negotiatores' (money-lenders) in Asia and the other provinces were not natives (as Persius seems to have been), but Roman 'equites.' They were an important class, who gave no little trouble to the governors (see Cic. ad Qu. Fr. i. i. ep. 1, c. 1), and their commercial transactions in Asia particularly were on a large scale. The dispute arose when Brutus and his army were in Asia Minor, which was in A.U.C. 711—712 (see note on v. 18). How soon afterwards the Satire was written it is impossible to say; not long, I think. It may have been made on the spot, and shown to those who would find most amusement in it, in the camp. I think this is more likely than that Horace should have reverted to such a subject after his arrival at Rome, where the scene must have been unknown or little known; when those who might have enjoyed the joke were most of them dead or in exile, and his own feeling against Rupilius must have been forgotten in the scenes that he had since gone through. The poem is a mere fragment in the dramatic style so admirably sustained in the ninth satire; but in this there is no character brought out, none of the happy touches and traits of nature which there are found in every line. Certainly no two poems could bear less evidence of being the work of the same mind, and this may be taken as some indication of the early composition of the present one; but I rest more on the circumstance that the point of the story would have been lost in a great measure any length of time after the event it refers to. Perhaps we may infer from the abruptness of the conclusion that Horace intended when he began to make a longer poem, but found his materials or his time or his spirit fail.
Proscripti Regis Rupili pus atque venenum

Hybrida quo pacto sit Persius ultus, opinor Omnibus et lippis notum et tonsoribus esse. Persius hic permagna negotia dives habebat Clazomenis, etiam lites cum Rege molestas, Durus homo atque odio qui posset vincere Regem, Confidens tumidusque, adeo sermonis amari Sisennas Barros ut equis praecurseret albis.

Ad Regem redeo. Postquam nihil inter utrumque

1. Proscripti Regis Rupili] The Rupilia gens was a plebeian family of no great note in Rome. The only one of the name who was distinguished was P. Rupilius, consul in A.D. 622, and the following year proconsul in Sicily. He was the intimate friend of Laelius and the Younger Scipio (Cic. de Amicit. 27). As to Rupilius Rex and Persius, see Introduction.

2. Hybrida quo pacto sit Persius ultus,] Acron says 'hybrida' is properly the offspring of an eagle and vulture; Porphyrius, of a low-bred dog and a hound; Pliny (N.H. viii. 53. 79) and Martial (viii. 22), of a tame sow and a wild boar. The word applies to all cross-bred animals, and was used for a man one of whose parents was a Roman and the other a foreigner.

3. Omnibus et lippis notum et tonsoribus] The apothecaries' and barbers' shops were constantly crowded with idlers, who had nothing to do but to gossip about the news of the hour. With the barbers it has been so in all ages and countries. The Romans were commonly afflicted with weakness of the eyes, and this caused the apothecary to be as much mixed up with idlers as the barber. In Plautus' play, Amphitruo says (iv. 1) he has been looking for Nauricrates in all the most frequented places:

"Omnès plateas perreptavi, gymnasia et myropolia:
Apud emporium atque in macello; in palaestra atque in foro;
In medicinis, in tonstrinis, apud omnes
nedes sacras,
Sum defessus queritando."

The expression in the text is a proverbial way of speaking, and might have been used any where. It does not prove that the satire was written at Rome, as some say.

7. Confidens tumidusque,] See C. iii. 4. 50, n.

8. Sisennas Barros ut equis] Of Sisenna and Barrus nothing is known; but it may be conjectured, from the place, that their names were proverbial for foul-mouthed abusive fellows. The plural number is used here, according to an usage common to all languages. So Aristoph. Ran. 1041: "Παπρόκλων Τενκρων θυμολένων. 1056: ἥν οὖν αὖ λέγεις Λυκεβηττός καὶ Παρ nelli." Plut. de Fort. Rom. c. 3: "Βούλεθε ἐπὶ πυθώματα τίμει ποτέ ιαν ών οὖν; Φαβρικοῖ φασιν ἐναι καὶ Κάμιλλοι καὶ Λούκιοι καὶ Κινεῖναται καὶ Μάξιμοι Φαῖδοι καὶ Κλαύδιοι Μάρετλαι καὶ Σεκιπνεῖς."

See also above, C. i. 12. 37, where Scaurus is probably put for the best of that family, M. Aemelius. 'Equis albis' is equivalent to 'fleet steeds,' according to that line of Virgil (quoted by all the Scholiasts), in which he describes the horses of Turnus "Quis caudore nives antirent, cursibus auras" (Aen. xii. 84). Plautus speaks of white horses in a proverbial way for swiftness (Asin. ii. 2. 12):—

"Nam si se huic occasioni tempus subter
duxerit
Nunquam edepol quadrigis albis indipiscet postea."

And as the horses of Jove were said to be white, this proverb connects itself with another in the Amphitruo (i. 1. 207):—

Quadrigis si nume inseeadas Jovis Atque hinc fugias, ita vix poteris ecugere infortunium."

The Scholiasts also refer the proverb in the text to the circumstance, that white horses were used in triumphal processions.

9. Postquam nihil inter utrumque Con
venit,] When they found they could not settle their quarrel privately, they went be-Convenit, (hoc etenim sunt omnes jure molesti
Quo forties quibus adversum bellum incidit; inter
Hectora Priamiden animosum atque inter Achillem
Ira fuit capitalis ut ultima divideret mors,
Non aliam ob causam nisi quod virtus in utroque
Summa fuit: duo si discordia vexet inertes,
Aut si disparibus bellum incidat, ut Diomedi
Cum Lycio Glauco, diseedat pigrior utro
Muneribus missis :) Bruto praetore tenente Ditem Asiam Rupili et Persi par pugnat, uti non Compositum melius cum Bitho Bacchius. In jus fore the praetor (v. 18). The digression that intervenes is a comparison between such disputants and the warriors of the Iliad. When men fall out, says he, they fight after the fashion of two brave heroes engaged in a deadly feud, even as Hector and Achilles, who hated each other so mortally, and were so exceedingly brave, that they could not be separated when they came together in conflict till one or other was killed; or else they behave as when two cowards meet and both are glad to give way; or as when the strong meets the weak, Diomeds meets Glaucus, and the weak gives in and humbles himself before his enemy.
11. [inter Hectora—atque inter Achillem] This repertion of ‘inter’ is not uncommon.
See Cic. Lael. c. 25: “Contio—judicare solet quid intersit inter populum eum, et inter constantem, securum, et gravem.”
And Epp. i. 2. 11:

“—Nestor componere lites
Inter Peliden festinat et inter Atriden.”

Bentley, who does not seem to have remembered this passage of Cicero or Livy
(x. 7), declares this way of speaking, with the double ‘inter,’ to be “vitioum loquendi genus et inortikov, quoque magni emerim nunquam ab Horatio prolatum.” In these words he seems to admit that, vitiou as the language is, it is Horace’s. But that does not signify. He goes on to propose ‘olim Hectora’ here, and ‘Primus Peliden’ in the other place, declaring that the copyists, surprised at finding the preposition with the latter of the two names in each case, underlined the readings he has given with the word ‘inter,’ and so it got into the text.
It is hard to say which one should admire
most in this note of his,—its perverseness or the want of taste shown in the corrections it proposes. ‘Animosum’ belongs to ‘Achillem,’ ‘atque’ being often put by Horace after the first word of its clause.

Acres procurrunt, magnum spectaculum uterque. Persius exponit causam; ridetur ab omni Conventu; laudat Brutum laudatque cohortem: Solem Asiae Brutum appellat, stellasque salubres Appellat comites excepto Rege; canem illum Invisum agricolis sidus venisse. Ruebat Flumen ut hibernum fertur quo rara securis. Tum Praenestinus salso multoque fluenti Expressa arbusto regerit convicia, durus understood, that word being used as a substantive for 'a pair,' both in the singular, as here, and Ovid. Met. xiii. 833: 'Parve columbarum demptusve cacumine nidadus;' and the plural, as Cic. Leel. c. 4: 'Ex omnibus saeculis vix tria aut quatuor nominatur paria amicorum.' So in the Epistle to Livia attributed to Ovid (v. 301), we have—

"Par bene compositum: juvenum fortissimvs alter, Altera tam fortis mutua cura viro."

The received reading in Bentley's time was 'compositus:' on the authority of one MS. of no weight be altered it to 'compositi.' 'Compositum' appears to have very good authority. Bithus and Bacchius were gladiators, according to the Scholiasts, of great repute, who after having in their time killed many antagonists finally killed each other. Acron says they are mentioned by Suetonius, but their names do not appear in his existing works. The MSS. and editions vary between 'concurrunt' and 'procurrunt.' The old editions have the former, but 'procurrunt' is the more forcible word and is now generally received. As to 'in jus,' see S. 9. 77.

22. rideetur ab omni Conventu;] 'Rideetur' is used impersonally. On the proper meaning of 'conventus,' which was a meeting, at fixed times and places, of the inhabitants of a province for the purpose of settling disputes and transacting business, and which was also applied to certain districts out of which such meetings were composed, see Long's note on Cic. in Verr. ii. 2. 13.

23. laudatque cohortem:] The official staff of a provincial governor was called his 'cohors' and 'comites.' See Epp. 1. 3. 6: 'Quid studiosa cohors operum struit.' 8. 2: 'Celso comiti scribaeque Neroni.' 14: 'Ut placet juveni percontare utque cohorti.' The lower officials, who did not belong to the 'cohors,' but were a good deal about the person of the governor,

Cicero speaks of as those "qui quasi ex cohorte praetoris appellari solent." (Ad Qu. Fr. 1. 1. Ep. 1, c. 4, where see Long's note). See Catullus (x. 10, sqq.):—

"Nec praetoribus esse nec cohorti
Cur quisquam caput unctius referret, Praesertim quibus esset irritator
Praetor nec faceret pili cohortem."

He also addresses Verannius and Fabullus as "Pisonis comites cohors inanis" (xxviii. 1). 'Comes' was retained as a title of honour during the empire, and has survived to the present day in the word 'count.'

25. canem] The 'dog-star,' as opposed to the 'stellar salubres.' 'Excepto Rege' shows that Rupilius belonged to the 'cohors,' and therefore held a post of trust about Brutus.

27. fertur quo rara securis.] Between precipitous banks covered with trees where the axe seldom comes from their inaccessible position.

28. multoque fluenti] The editors till Bentley had 'multum;' and all, with the exception of Dacier, including the Scholiasts, referred the words to 'arbusto,' with what meaning it is hard to imagine, even with their notes before one. Torrentius first brought the reading 'multo' to light from some MSS. of good character, and it has since appeared in many. Bentley quotes aptly Dem. de Coron. (p. 272), τοῦ Πυθαγόρα θρασυνομένως καὶ πολλῇ Ρίοντι καθ' ύμων οὐς ιτία.

29. Expressa arbusto] The illustration Horace chooses for the abuse which the enraged Rupilius hurls back ('regerit') upon his antagonist, is that which the vine-dresser retorts upon the passenger, who provokes him in the first instance by calling to him 'cuckoo,' but who is fain to retreat before the storm of foul language the vine-dresser returns him, still however calling as he retires 'cuckoo, cuckoo!' He was considered a tardy person who had not got his vines trimmed by the arrival of the Vindemiantor et invictus, cui saepe viator
Cessisset magna compellans voce cucullum.
At Graecus, postquam est Italo perfusus aceto, Persius exclamat: Per magnos, Brute, deos te Oro qui reges consueris tollere, cur non Hunc Regem jugulas? Operum hoc, mihi crede, tuorum est.
cuckoo, and the joke consists in the passenger telling the vine-dresser that the cuckoo was coming, and would find his trees unpruned, which was as much as to call him a lazy fellow. Lambinus aptly quotes Ausonius (Idyll. x. 161):—
"Summis quippe jugis tendentis in ultima divi
Conservitur viridi fluvialis margo Lyaceo.
Laeta operum plebes festinantesque coloni Vertice nunc summo properant, nunc de-jugo dorso
Certantes stolidis clamoribus: inde viator
Riparum subjecta terens, hinc navita labens
Probra canunt seris cultoribus: adstre-pit illis
Et rupe et silva tremens et concavus amnis."
The Greeks had a proverb to the same effect, explained by the Schol. on Aristoph. Av. 507. "The verse in Virgil, 'Hinc alta sub rupe canet frondator ad auras' (Ec. i. 57), naturally occurs, when in our walks under the rocky cliffs of Posilipo we see the peasant swinging from the top of a tree on a rope of twisted willows, trimming the poplar and the luxuriant tendrils of the vine, and hear him make the whole vale ring with his rustic ditty. A classic scholar cannot stroll under the groves of the plain without calling to mind Horace's 'durus vindemiantor,' &c., if he attend to the vine-dresser sitting among the boughs lashing raw lads and bashful maidens as they return from market with the same gross wit and rough jokes that gave such zest of old to the farces of Atella" (Swinburne, vol. i. p. 116). In 'Vindemiantor' the third syllable coalesces with the fourth. See C. iii. 4. 41, and add S. ii. 3. 245: 'Lascinias soliti impenso prandere coemptas.' i. 8. 43: "Imagine cerae Largior arserit ignis," i. 2. 21: "Neque ostrea Nee scarus aut poterit," &c.
32. Italo perfusus aceto.] 'Pus,' 'vonenum,' 'sal,' 'acetum,' are all words well chosen for describing the poisonous character of these men's malice. Plautus uses the last of these words two or three times. Bach. (iii. 3. 1): "Nunc expepiar sitne acetum tibi car acre in pector." Pseud. (ii. 4. 49): "Ecquid habet is homo aceti in pectore? Atque acidissimi."
34. qui reges consueris tollere.] It would have spoilt the Greek's joke, and lost him his cause perhaps, had it then been supposed, as some have in these days supposed, he alluded in 'reges' to the death of Caesar. It was not a subject for a jest, though Brutus might still believe he had done the state a service by the part he took in that murder. The man must be supposed to allude to him whom Brutus claimed for his ancestor, L. Junius Brutus, who helped to expel the last of the kings. The plural 'reges' does not stand in the way of this explanation. Rupilius is brought into comparison with Tarquiniius in the first line of the Satire "Proscripti Regis," &c.
SATIRARUM I. 8.

SATIRE VIII.

On the outside of the city walls, in front of Mons Esquillinus, lay the Campus Esquillinus, in which was a public burial-ground for the poorest of the people, and the Sestertium or place of execution for slaves and others of the lower sort, whose bodies were left unburied for the dogs and vultures to prey upon (see Epod. v. 100). This place, which must always have been a public nuisance and a source of malaria, was given (as some say) by a decree of the senate to Maecenas, or else purchased by him, cleared, drained, and laid out in gardens, in which he afterwards built a handsome house (see C. iii. 20. Epod. ix., xiv. Introduction, s. ii. 3. 309). His example was afterwards followed by a member of the house of Lamia, in whose gardens Caligula was buried (Suet. Calig. c. 59). The following Satire was suggested by a figure of Priapus set up in Maecenas’ garden. The god is represented as contrasting the present state of the ground with what it once was, by which a compliment is conveyed to Maecenas for his public spirit in ridding the city of such a nuisance. Priapus is also made to complain of the trouble he has in keeping the ground clear of trespassers, but more particularly of the witches, who, having formerly carried on their practices among the tombs and bones of the dead, continued to haunt the scene of their iniquity. This is introduced for the purpose of dragging in the woman whom Horace satirized under the name of Gratidia. The description is in some parts very like that of the fifth Epode, and the two may have been written about the same time. It is not very likely Horace would have maintained his warfare with this woman, whoever she was or whatever her offence, for several years. Kirchner (Qu. Hor. p. 16), because in S. ii. 3. 312 reference is made to Maecenas as engaged in building, places these two Satires in consecutive years, this being written a. u. c. 721 (see Introduction to Epod. v.). But there is not much in this argument. The clearing, draining, and enclosing of the ground must have taken some time, and it may have been several years before it was fit for living on, and no reference is made to a house in this Satire. Franke places it in a. u. c. 718. There is very little due to the date.

Olim truncus eram ficulnus, inutile lignum, Cum faber, incertus scannum faceretne Priapum, Maluit esse deum. Deus inde ego furum aviumque

1. inutile lignum] The uselessness of the wood of the fig-tree was proverbial. Hence σύκινοι ἄνδρες meant men fit for nothing. See Theoc. x. 44:—

σφίγγετ’ ἀμαλλόθεν τὰ δράγματα, μὴ παρίον τοις εἰπη’ σύκινοι ἄνδρες ἀπώλετο χ’ οὖτος ὁ μισθὸς.

Theocritus has an epigram about Priapus (4), in which he describes him thus:—

τήναν τάν λαβράν γνώθι ταί δρόμοι, αἰπόλει, κατας σύκινον εὐρῆςς ἀρτιγυφῆς ἢδανον, τρικελεῖς αὐτόφιλοι ἀνουσαν.

In this rough way all the images of this god were made, and the ancients had but little respect for him, unless it were those of the lowest sort; though in the same epigram that contains the above absurd description of the god he is prayed to for deliverance from the power of love, and Horace, who treats him so contemptuously here, speaks of him elsewhere (Epod. ii.), in conjunction with Silvans, as receiving the sacrifice due to him. No one could better have appreciated than a Roman of Horace’s way of thinking, whether in respect to this deity or any other, the ironical description of the prophet Isaiah (xliiv. 9—20), which corresponds so closely with this passage that I recommend the reader to refer to it. There is no stroke in the whole of that description
Maxima formido; nam fures dextra coërect
Obscoenque ruber porrectus ab inguine palus;
Ast importunas volucres in vertice arundo
Terret fixa vetatque novis considere in hortis.
Huc prius angustis ejecta cadaveras cellis
Conservus vili portanda locabat in arca.
Hoc miserae plebi statab commune sepulcerum,
Pantolabo scurrae Nomentanoque nepoti:
Mille pedes in fronte, trecentos cippus in agrum more severe than Horace’s "incertum scan-um faceret Priapum maluit esse deum."

Not much less in the same strain is that address of Martial (vii. 40):—
"Non hori neque palmitis beatı
Sed rari memoris, Priape, custos,
Ex quo natus es et potes renasci.
Furaces moneo manus repellas,
Et silvam domini focus reserves.
Si defecerit hoc et ipsa lignum es."
The figures of Priapus were generally busts like the Hermæ, but sometimes they were full length of the kind Horace describes.
Usually they held a sickle or a club in their right hand by way of frightening thieves, and a wisp of straw, or something of that sort, to frighten the birds. Priapus also symbolized the fertility of nature in the later mythology of the Greeks as well as the Romans. In Agostini’s collection of gems (part ii. pl. 13) there is one representing a sacrifice to Priapus, where he stands at full length on a high pedestal, with a thyrus in one hand, resting on his shoulder.
The offerings are a goat’s head and fruits,
which a woman is laying on a rude altar, while a man is bringing up a basket on his head containing more fruit and ‘phalli,’ which formed a feature in the worship of Bacchus as well as of Priapus. These two were honoured alike as presiding, the one over vineyards, the other over gardens: this accounts for the thyrus in the figure, which is a combination of the two divinities.
6. importunas volucres] Virgil applies the same epithet to destructive birds:
"Obscoenaeque canes importunaeque volu-cres" (Georg. i. 470). Crutquis explains the word thus: "Quod sine uilla Dei reverontia quovis tempore essent molestae."
The word is used with a variety of meanings, to reduce which to one character
we must know more of its etymology than Forcellini tells us on the authority of Festus.
7. Huc prius angustis] Outside of the walls in front of Mona Esquilineus lay the Campus Esquilineus, in which were buried the poorest of the people in ill-dug graves, which had the name ‘putlici,’ whether as the diminutive of ‘putel,’ or from the putrefaction of the corpses and the stench thereby occasioned, Varro hesitates to decide. The manner of their funeral is here stated with painful satire. The poor wretch is neglected by his master; and a fellow slave, out of his ‘peculium,’ goes to the expense of hiring (‘locabat’) ‘vespillones’ (common corpses-bearers, νεκροφόροι) to carry him out on a bier to the public burial-ground.
where his corpse was tossed naked into a pit into which other corpses had been tossed before. This scene could not have occurred in all its particulars very often, since every master was bound by law to bury his slave, and if any one did it for him he was entitled to recover the cost of the funeral from the master of the slave (Dig. 11. 7. 31, quoted in Dict. Ant. p. 874). The ‘vils arca’ was called ‘sandapila,’ whose narrow dimensions are referred to in an epigram of Martial (ii. 81), where he says of the stout Zoilus:—
"Laxior hexaphoris tua sit lectica licebit Dum tamen haec tua sit, Zoille, sanda-pila est."

And again, speaking of a mistress whose extravagant demands were reducing her lover to poverty (ix. 3),—
"Octo Syris suffulta datur lectica puellae: Nudum sandapilae pondus amicus erit."

Suetonius, at the end of his life of Domitian, says, “Cadaver ejus populari sanda-pila per vespillones exportatum.”

11. Pantolabo scurrae Nomentanoque nepoti:] As to these persons, see note above on S. i. 10.1. In consequence of their extravagance Priapus foretells they will come to a pauper’s funeral. We need not understand them as already dead and buried in the Esquiliae, as Comm. Cruq. says.
12. Mille pedes in fronte.] This public burial-ground was 1000 feet in breadth and Hic dabat: Heredes monumentum ne sequetur.
Nunc licet Esquiliis habitare salubribus atque
Aggere in aprico spatiari, quo modo tristes
Albis informem spectabant ossibus agrum;
Cum mihi non tantum furesque feraeque suitae
Hunc vexare locum curae sunt atque labori,
Quantum carminibus quae versant atque venenis
Humanos animos. Has nullo perdere possum Nec prohibere modo, simul ae vagis luna decorum
Protulit os, quin ossa legant herbasque nocentem.

300 in depth. 'In fronte' means facing the public road, the Via Tiburtina (6.108), or the Via Praenestina, one of which, or both, must have passed very close to it. (See Caesar, B. G. ii. 8, and Mr. Long's note).
It was usual to engrave on monuments the following letters, H. M. H. N. S., which stand for "Hoc monumentum heredes non sequitur;" or H. M. A. H. N. TRANS.
The words were sometimes given at full length. Sometimes ex t. (ex testamento) were inserted between H. and X. Lambia has given four inscriptions, copied by himself, from ancient sepulchres, of which the following he found in Rome:-

CUIMANIBUS SACRUM MARIO L. LIB. HER-METI ET DOCTIAE FASIDI MARIUS L.
LIB. FELIX PATRONIS SUIS SINE MERE-TIBUS DE SUO FECIT ET SIBI ET LIBERTIS
LIBERTASBUSBEXISIUS POSTERISQUE ERU-
RUM. ITA NE UNQUAM DE NOMINE FAMILI-
AE NOSTRAE EXEAT. HOC MONUMENTUM
HERedes NON SEQUITUR. IN FRONTE
LAT. PED. XX. ET DIG. II. IN AGR. LONG.

The others are of like import; that is to say, they specify for whose particular use the sepulchre was built, and provide against its going, with the rest of the man's property, to his heredes. Such sepulchres were called 'sepulchra familiaria,' those that were built for a man and his heirs were called 'hereditaria. Horace writes as if there were a stone set up on some part of the boundary of this burial-ground, with the subscription usual on private monuments, H. M. H. N. S., which is obviously only a satire. The words could only apply to a private place of burial. All he really means is, that a space of ground of the extent he mentions was marked off for the burial of these poor people. For other examples of such inscriptions, see Fabretti Insc. Antiq.
&c., Expir. Romae, 1699.

14. Nunc licet Esquiliis] The whole of the Esquiline or fifth region of Rome, was called Esquiliae. This from having been an eye-sore and a plague-spot became a healthy and pleasant residence. Suetonius tells us that Augustus, when he was ill, went to Maecenas' house in the Esquiliae to recruit (Octav. c. 72). The 'agger' here referred to was a raised terrace commenced by Servius Tullius, and carried by him from the Porta Collina to the Porta Esquillina.
It was continued (according to Cramer, who quotes Dion Halic. iv. 54) by Tarquinius Priscus as far as the Porta Querquetulana, being in all about twelve stadia, and about fifty feet in breadth. It thus skirted on the east the whole of the fifth or Esquiline quarter; and the sixth, which had its name Alta Semita from this great work. Here the Romans walked in cold weather to get the sun, and had a full view of the pestilent plain which Maecenas converted into a paradise. Juvenal calls it 'ventosus' (S. viii. 43). Bentley edits 'qua' in v. 15, and is followed by some editors. It is against all the MSS. and older editions, and 'qua,' in the sense of 'ex qua,' will do very well.

17. Cum mihi non tantum] 'Cum' is thus connected with what goes before.
Priapus says the locality is now made healthy, and the citizens may take their walk without being sickened with the sight of bones bleaching upon the plain, whereas his vexations still remain,—the driving away of thieves and wild animals which still frequented the spot, and yet worse the punishment and scaring away of the witches who there continued to carry on their abominable practices. We need not infer with Dacier that the place was not yet entirely changed or cleared of the bones that disfigured it,
but may suppose the witches still continued from habit to haunt the scene of their ini-quities, and that the 'fures' and 'ferae,' are the depredators that came to rob the gardens which were the god's particular care. I am not aware of any other instance of 'suetus' being used as a trisyllable.
Vidi egomet nigra succinctam vadere palla,
Canidia pedibus nudis passoque capillo,
Cum Sagana majore ululantem: pallor utrasque
Fece rat horrendas adspectu. Scalpere terram
Unguibus et pullam divellere mordicus agnam
Coeperunt; cruor in fossam confusus ut inde
Manes elicent, animas responsa daturas.
Lanae et effigies erat, altera cerea: major
Lanea, quae poenis compesceret inferiorum;

Lucretius so uses 'suevit' (vi. 854): "Qui ferri quoque vim penetrare suevit."

23. Vidi egomet nigra] The god proceeds to relate a scene that happened before the tombs were cleared away (v. 36), in which the characters introduced are the notorious Canidia of whom we have seen enough in the Epodes, and Sagana, who is associated with her in Epod. v. 25, sqq.
Their appearance and behaviour are much the same as there. The principal person is Canidia, who wears a dark 'palla,' is without shoes, and has her hair dishevelled (in Epod. v. 15 it is tangled with little snakes). The moon is up and she invokes her (Epod. v. 50), while her companion invokes one of the furies. They are both deadly pale. They grub up the earth with their nails, and pour into the hole the blood of a black lamb (black victims were sacrificed to the infernal deities), which they tear to pieces with their teeth, by which process they hope to evoke spirits of the dead
to answer their enquiries about their lovers.
Canidia has two images, one of wool and the other of wax, the first representing her-sel, the other her faithless lover, on whom she is going to wreak her vengeance. We may suppose it therefore to represent the unhappy Varus of Epod. v. Snakes and Hecate's hounds surround them, and at the height of their incantations the moon blushes with shame, and hides her face behind the tombs (great barrows formed by the burial of a number of corpses in one pit). During their rites, in which they hide the head of a wolf and the tooth of a spotted snake in the ground as a counter-charm to thwart their adversaries, the Manes which have been evoked converse with them in a melancholy sharp voice;
and just when the flames which were to melt the devoted image of wax are at their height the ludicrous catastrophe happens that puts them all to flight,— Canidia with her jaws chattering with fright, and her false teeth dropping out, Sagana with her wig flying off, and all her herbs and love-knots falling about, as they make the best of their way to the city.

25. Cum Sagana majore] The Scholiasts say that Sagana was the freedwoman of one Pomponius, and that she had a younger sister, whence she is called 'major.' It probably signifies that she was older than Canidia, as Doering says.

27. pullam] Aeneas offers a black lamb to Nox and Terra (Aen. vi. 249): "Ipse atreri velleris agrum Agnam matri Eumenidum magnaque soror Ense ferit." Tibullus uses the same word as Horace (i. 2. 61):
"Et me lustravit taedis et nocte serena Concidit ad magicos hostia pulla deos."

28. confusus] 'Poured and, stirred.'
Compare Tibull. (i. 2. 45):
"Haec cantu finditque solum, Manesque sepulchris
Elicit, et tepido devocat ossa rogo."

30. Lanea et effigies erat, altera cerea:]
The meaning of the woollen image which was to punish the warden one is not very clear. The wax was to melt, and as it melted so was the lover to consume in the fires of love, according to the witch's charm in Theocritus (ii. 28), noticed on Epod. xvii.
76.
Cerea suppliciter stabat servilibus ut quae
Jam peritura modis. Hecaten vocat altera, saevam
Alteram Tisiphonem; serpentem atque videres
Infernus errare canes, Lunamque rubentem
Ne foret his testis post magna latere sepulera.
Mentor at si quid merdis caput inquirer albis
Corvorum, atque in me veniat mictum atque caecatum
Julius et fragilis Pediatus furque Voranus.
Singula quid memorem? quo pacto alterna loquentes
Umbrae cum Sagana resonarent triste et acutum,
Utque lupi barbarm variae cum dente colubrae

32. servilibus — modis.] There was scarcely any imaginable form of cruelty to which slaves were not liable through the caprice of their owners, and this of roasting or half-roasting alive may have happened to more than one poor wretch of this class.
Tacitus (Hist. ii. 71) says of a runaway slave:
"Sumptum de eo supplicium in serv-ilem modum;" and again of a freedman of Vitellius (Hist. iv. 11): "Asiaticus malam potentiain servili supplicio expiavit." The old reading was 'utque.' 'Ut quae,' which Labinius strongly denounces, Bentley very properly, and on good authority, received into his text.

34. serpentem — Infernas errare canes.]
Snakes in her hair, round her waist, and in her hand for a whip, are insignias always to be found in the representations of Tisiphone. The infernal hounds are those that Virgil mentions as howling at the approach of Hecate (Aen. vi. 257): "Visaque canes ululare per umbram, Adventante Dea." So the witch in Theocritus (ii. 35) knows Hecate is coming by the howling of the dogs:

Ωίστρολι, ταί κόνες ἄμμιν ἀνὰ πτόλυν ἀφίονται,'

'Α θόος εἰν τριώδοις.

36. sepulcra.] See note above on v. 17.
39. Julius et fragilis Pediatus.] The connexion between these persons, Julius and Pediatus, is stated to have been of a kind not mentionable. Julius may have been a freedman of the dictator C. Julius Caesar, and the other person is said by Comm. Cruq. and Porphyryon to have been a Roman eunuch. The feminine termination is affixed to his name to indicate that he was addicted to the vilest practices, as Aristophanes (Nub.678. 680) calls Sostratus and Cleonymus 'Sostrata' and 'Cleonyma.' Of 'Voranus,' Porphyryon and Comm. Cruq.
give us the following piece of gossip:
"Aiunt Voranum Q. Lucatii Catuli libertum uisse adeo furacem ut nummos subreptos
a nummulario in calceos demiserit; a quo nummos subreptos, quidam subridens
Belle, inquit, si te non ικεκακεύεις; hoc est deriveribis tanquam aec recutad, alludens ad calceos." It so happens that we meet with this man again in another Scholium on Juvenal viii. 196, where mention is made of a farce by one Catullus (an adaptation of the Phama of Menander mentioned by Terence, Eunuch, Prol. 9), spoken of as a clever writer of plays by Martial (v. 31. 3), and by Aulus Gellius (xix. 9, where he gives some execrable verses of his by way of a song).
An old Scholast on Juvenal (S. iii. 111: "Mi-
mum agit ille Urbani qualem fugitivus scerra Catulli") says: "Q. Lutatium Catulum dicit qui Voranum servum furacissimum habuisse furtur, de quo huic postierius
'scerra Catulli.' de quo etiam illud tradituir
quum—deprehensus a nummulario esset cujus demensa nummos subtraxit in calceos sibi inferciverat, quidam jocans in eum Belle inquit si te nummularius in jus roceit, tu ei aes ablatum ex calceo abjiceres."

41. resonarent triste et acutum.] This corresponds with Virgil's description (Aen.
vi. 492), "pars tollere vocem Exiguum," Bentley, seeing no difference between the continuous action in 'resonarent' and the complete action contained in the verbs that follow, invents, against all the MSS. and the usage of the language, 'resonarint,' and affirms positively, 'sua fide et periculo,' that this is the word Horace wrote. Independently of the imperfect being required in this place, who ever heard of such a perfect as 'resonaverint'? The participles are so formed, no doubt, as "os magna sonaturum" (S. i. 4. 44); but Bentley can produce no better authority than Manilius and Prudentius for 'resonavi.'
Abdiderint furtim terris, et imagine cerea
Largior arserit ignis, et ut non testis inultus
Horrerim voces Furiarum et facta duarum:
Nam displosa sonat quantum vesica pepedi
Diffissa nate ficus: at illae currere in urbem.
Canidiae dentes, altum Saganae caliendrum
Excidere atque herbas atque incantata lacertis
Vincula cum magno risuque jocoque videres.

43. cerea The two last syllables coalesce. See S. 7. 30, n.
45. Furiarum Horace calls the two witches Furies, by a way of speaking common to all times since the decline of the reverential feeling which made the Greeks shrink from mentioning the name of these σεμναί θεαί. Before Euripides no writer would have made so free with the name of the Erinyes. He applies it to Helen (Orest. 1390, περγάμων Ἀπολλωνίων *'Ερινύν) and to Medea (Med. 1260), ἵξελ' οἶκων τάλαιναν φοινίαν τ' Ἐρινύν ὑπ' ἀλαστόρων.
48. caliendrum This is variously stated to be a wig, or a cap, or some ornament for the head. The etymology is uncertain. I have supposed the most ridiculous of the above articles to be meant.
50. Vincula These may mean love-knots or long grass woven into chains for refractory and faithless lovers.
SATIRE IX.

This Satire, which is justly popular for its humour and great dramatic power, has an historical value as showing, undesignedly but more clearly than almost any description could do, the character of Horace. It puts the man before us as in a picture.

He represents himself as sauntering alone and early on the Sacra Via, when a person he knew no more than by name, a forward coxcomb, comes up familiarly and falls into conversation with him, to his great annoyance, for he wanted to be alone and knew the fellow's character, which was probably notorious. Horace does his best to shake him off, but he is too amiable to cope with the effrontery of his companion, whose object is to get through Horace an introduction to Maecenas, with whom the poet must therefore have been known to be on terms of intimacy at the time this Satire was written. The man's vulgarity and want of tact are conspicuous throughout the scene, as I have shown in the notes; while Horace exhibits in every part good breeding and an amiable temper; and though he is tried to the utmost by reflections on his patron and his friends, he is incapable of saying a rude word, is taken off his guard continually, and is amusingly conscious of his inferiority to the man of insolence on his own ground. The effect of this picture is heightened by the introduction towards the end of the scene of Fuscus Aristius, an old friend of the poet, and a man of the world, who, like Horace, understood character, but had that sort of moral courage and promptitude which his friend wanted. The readiness with which he takes up the joke and enters into Horace's absurd position, and the despair to which his descent reduces the poet, are highly ludicrous.

If proof were wanting that the characters of men and the ways of the world are little affected by the lapse of centuries, this Satire would afford it. I look upon it as the most genial and characteristic of all Horace's productions. If we wanted to form an estimate of the man, I do not think we could go to any other part of his works with more likelihood of getting a correct one; and his powers as a moral satirist are, I conceive, feeble compared with his perception of, and ability to describe, a scene of dramatic humour like this. If he had left us only this amusing poem to judge by, his genius would have ranked high, and the goodness of his nature would have been acknowledged by all. Like our amiable poet Cowper, Horace appears as a satirist of human life and of the vices of society; but both are too gentle for that rough work, and shine most in scenes of quaint humour and inoffensive fun. As respects Horace at least, let any one read this Satire and judge for himself.

Ibam forte via Sacra, sicut mens est mos,

Nescio quid meditans nugarum, totus in illis:

1. Ibam forte via Sacra,] Horace does not mean that it was his custom to stroll on the Sacra Via, especially at that hour in the morning, about eight o'clock (v. 35); but that when he walked, his mind generally diverted itself with trifles, being of an easy turn, and having few anxieties to trouble it. On the Via Sacra, see Epod. iv. 7, n.; viii. 6, n. The reader whose ear is accustomed to the expressive abruptness of this opening will dissent from Bentley, who inserts 'unt' after 'ibam.' All Lambinus' MSS. had 'et' before 'totus.' All Cruquius' but one were without 'et.' Those two editors insert the conjunction, and some later editors do the same, including Dacier and Gesner. Turnebus says 'et' legi in antiquis exemplaribus.' Fea quotes some in the Vatican, but he rightly condemns the word as superfluous and inelegant. The old editions have no conjunction.

E C + Accurrit quidam notus mihi nomine tantum, Arreptaque manu, "Quid agis, dulcissime rerum?"
"Suaviter ut nunc est," inquam, "et cupio omnia quae vis.
Dicere nescio quid puero, cum sudor ad imos
Manaret talos. O te, Bolane, cerebri
Felicem! aiebam tacitus; cum quidlibet ille
Garriret, vicos, urbem laudaret. Ut illi
Nil respondebam, "Misere cupis," inquit, "abire;
Jamdudum video; sed nil agis; usque tenebo;
Persequar: hinc quo nunc iter est tibi?" "Nil opus est te

3. Accurrit[.] Some of the old editions have 'occurrit.' I am not aware that it appears in any modern edition. It is much less forcible.
5. Suaviter ut nunc est[,] 'Pretty well as times go;' by which, as Orelli says, he means nothing at all, not caring what he answers, but annoyed at the forwardness of his assailant. 'Cupio omnia quae vis' is a common formula of politeness.
6. Cum assectaretur: There is a pause, and they walk side by side a little way perhaps, in silence. Horace sees the man means to begin, and anticipates him ('occupat') with a civil question tanta-

11. O te, Bolane, cerebri Felicem! The meaning of 'cerebri' is seen in the adjective 'cerebrus' noticed above (a. 21); and guided by the words of Horace, no doubt, Comm. Cruq. tells us that Bolanus was έξύχελος, one who, 'nullius inepius ferebat,' put up with no man's nonseme,—a temper which, under such circumstances, the amiable Horace might very well envy. But he was too well-bred to say what he felt aloud. Bolanus was a cognomen of one at least of the families at Rone. Vettius Bolanus was appointed governor of Britain in the last year of Nero's reign (Tac. Ann. xv. 3), and Cicero had a friend of the same name. It was derived from Bola, a town of the Aequi.

Francis' translation,—

"Bolanus happy in a skull Of proof, impenetrably dull," seems to me quite beside the meaning.

14. Misere cupis, inquit, abire; Ifere the man, feeling his power, puts on all the familiarity of an intimate friend, and insists upon offering his services and attendance, and this is better expressed by 'persequar' than 'prosequar,' which however has very good MS. authority, and Bentley adopts it.

The majority of MSS. appear by Fee's account to have 'persequar,' which means
'I will follow you to the end.' In regard to the arrangement, the editions vary between 'persequar hinc quo nunc iter est

tibi?','persequar: hinc quo nunc iter est tibi?,' and 'persequar hinc quo nunc iter est tibi,' without a question. It appears to me that the man asks a question, and that Horace's reply is an evasion of it.
Circumagi; quendam volo visere non tibi notum;
Trans Tiberim longe cubat is prope Caesaris hortos."
"Nil habeo quod agam et non sum piger; usque sequar te."
Demitto auriculas ut iniquae mentis asellus,
Cum gravius dorso subiit onus. Incipit ille:
"Si bene me novi non Viscum pluris amicuum,
Non Varium facies; nam quis me scribere plures

18. Trans Tiberim—cubat is] 'Cubat' is generally taken to mean that his friend is lying sick, and I am inclined to think it can have no other meaning here. In other places where it occurs it might be supposed to derive this significatio from the context. See Sat. i. 3. 289:—

"Mater sit pueri menses jam quinque cubsantis, Frigida si puerum quartana reliquerit;"
and Epp. (ii. 2. 63):—

"— cubat hic in colle Quirini Hic extremo in Aventino, visendus uterque."

Plautus (Cas. Pro1. 37):—

"— servus qui in morbo cubat; Immo hercle vero in lecto ne qui mentiar!"

and other places usually quoted for this meaning. But I see no other sense to give the word here that is supported by usage ("He lives above a mile of ground Beyond the Tiber," which is Francis's translation, is an unexampled meaning to give the word, but many have adopted it); and moreover it is likely Horace would invent this excuse by way of shaking off his companion. In Cic. Verr. (ii. 3. 23, where, see Mr. Long's note), 'cubaret' means no more than that the man was in bed. Julius Caesar had some pleasure-grounds, which he bequeathed to the Roman people, on the right bank of the Tiber, near (says Turnebus) to the Porta Portuensis, that is, not far from the Pons sublicius. This would be a long way from the Sacra Via.

22. non Viscum pluris amicuum.] In the next satire we have (v. 83) "Fucus et haec utinam Viscorum laudet uterque;" and at the supper of Disnicius (ii. 6. 20) we have "Summus ego et prope me Viscus Thurinus, et infra Si memini Varius." On the present passage Acron and Comm. Cruq. say that Viscus was "disertus illius temporis homo," and some said he was a poet, and a friend of Horace's. Porphyrius has here the name 'Fuscum' (or, as it appears in Ascensius' text twice over, 'Tuseum'), and says he was a distinguished writer of tragedies. Here he is associated with Varius, and in the latter of the above passages a Viscus also appears in Varius' company. In the former there are two Visci and a Fuscus, and Varius just above. All this creates some doubt as to the reading here. Aristius Fuscus was one of Horace's most intimate friends (C. i. 22, Introduction), and we meet with him below (v. 61) in a very humorous character. It is perhaps better to suppose one of the Visci to be meant here, for he plainly held them both among his best friends (10. 83). As to Varius, see above on S. 5. 40.

23. quis me scribere plures Aut citius] The ignorant fellow here fastens upon the very faculty that Horace held in the greatest contempt (S. 2. 9, sq.). On Hermogenes, see S. 3. 129, n. The opportunity for interrupting the prater which Horace seized upon is not very apparent. Orelli and others say because he was determined not to listen to the praises of Hermogenes, whom he detested. I am not sure that we are not to understand that the man gives a specimen of his voice as he gives out the words 'ego canto.' But however this may be, Horace gets in a word, and, trying to resign himself to his fate, and to turn the conversation to topics too unmeaning to give a handle to the man's vanity, he asks him if his father and mother are alive: 'quis te salvo est opus' is only a formula of civility. The man who has no feeling for any one but himself, answers with indifference that he has buried them all, which gives occasion for Horace to exclaim internally, he wishes he was dead too. What follows I suppose we must understand as a quaint notion passing through. Horace's own mind,—one of those pleasantries that sometimes rise up to mock men in despair. Certainly we are not to imagine that he is speaking to his persecutor, which the whole of his conduct, and the absence of any reply, show that he is not.
Aut citius possit versus? quis membra movere Mollius? Invideat quod et Hermogenes ego canto.” Interpellandi locus hic erat: “Est tibi mater,
Cognati, quis te salvo est opus?”—“Haud mihi quisquam.
Omnes composui.”—Felices! nunc ego resto.
Confice; namque instat fatum mihi triste Sabella
Quod puero cecinit divina mota anus urna:
Hune neque dira venena nec hosticus auferet ensis
Nec laterum dolor aut tussis nec tarda podagra;
Garrulus hune quando consumet cuunque; loquaces
Si sapiat vitet simul atque adoleverit aetas.
Ventum erat ad Vestae, quarta jam parte diei
Praeterita, et casu tune respondere vadato

29. Confice; namque instat] ‘Confice,’ despatch me, finish me. It is a technical word for the transaction and completion of business. As to the Sabine witches, see Epod. xvii. 20; and on ‘urna,’ see C. ii. 3.
25, n. As Fate, so the witch shakes her urn, and the lot or name of this or that person falls out, on which she pronounces her prophecies. The Scholiasts Acron and Comm. Cruq. take ‘mota’ as the nominative case, in the sense of ‘commota,’ agitated.
I believe all the three words—‘divina,’ ‘mota,’ ‘urna’—to be in the ablative, though Bentley says that this reading is ‘ita scabrum atque horridum ut ne pro-letario quidem vati, nundum Horatio dignum sit.’ He himself agrees with Cruquius, and transposing ‘divina’ and ‘mota,’ makes the former agree with ‘anus.’ I am satisfied with the reading of all the MSS.
‘Quandocunque’ has sometimes, but rarely,
the sense of ‘alignando,’ ‘sometime or other.’ Bentley quotes two instances from Ovid, which will be found in Forcellini.

35. Ventum erat ad Vestae.] They had now had an hour’s walk, and having passed through the Forum were approaching the Tiber, not far from which, and to the west of Mons Palatinus, stood the temple of Vesta, with the Atrium Numae and Lucus Vestae attached (C. i. 2. 16, n.). It is generally stated that the temple of Vesta was close to the ‘puteal Libonis’ (see S. ii. 6. 35, n.), where the praetor held his court. But that appears to have been in the Forum, which this temple was not. Nardini places in its immediate neighbourhood the Basilica Julia, where the centumviri held their courts, in which also the praetor presided. Martial thus alludes to them (vi. 36. 4):—

“Jam clamor centumque viri densumque Coronae
Vulgar et infantii Julia tecta placet.”

If this be so, we may suppose that it was here the man had to make his appearance, or forfeit his ‘vadimonium.’ It was now past the hour when the business of the courts commenced, as Martial says (iv. 8.
2), “Exercet rauco tertia causidicos.”

36. casu tune respondere vadato] This passage has been fully explained by Mr.
Long in his note on Cic. Verr. ii. 3. 15:
“The expression ‘vadari aliquem’ means to require ‘vades,’ ‘sureties,’ of a party.
The corresponding term is ‘vadimonium promittere,’ which is said of him who gives ‘vades.’ Bentley’s correction of ‘vadatus’ for ‘vadato’ is against all the MSS. and the general usage of the word, though ‘va-datus’ is sometimes used passively, as he shows.” The same may be said of the participles of other deponent verbs (see C. i. 1.
24, n.), of which the passive sense however must be clearly made out before it can be admitted. The ‘vadatus’ therefore was the plaintiff in an action, in which the hero of this satire was defendant. He had entered into an engagement (‘vadimonium’) to appear on a certain day to answer to the action, and if he failed he would lose his case, forfeit the amount of his ‘vadimonium,’ and be liable to be arrested in satisfaction of the remainder of the debt, if that were not covered by the ‘poena desertionis’ deposited when the ‘vadimonium’ was entered into.
The amount of this was sometimes equal to the sum in dispute, sometimes only one-half. Orelli interprets ‘litem’ of the ‘poena desertionis.’ But the word is nowhere else
Debetat, quod ni fecisset perdere litem.

"Si me amas," inquit, "paullum hoc ades." "Inteream si aut valeo stare aut novi civilia jura;

Et propero quo scis." "Dubius sum quid faciam," inquit,

"Tene reloquiam an rem." "Me sodes." "Non faciam" ille;

Et praecedere coepit. Ego ut contendere durum est Cum victore sequor. "Maecenas quomodo tecum?"

Hinc repetit; "paucorum hominum et mentis bene sanæ;

Nemo dexterius fortuna est usus. Haberes

Magnus adjutorem posset qui ferre secundas,

Hunc hominem velles si tradere; dispeream ni

used in this sense. It was rather the amount claimed by the plaintiff, as in a criminal action it was the amount of damages assessed under a 'litis aestimatio.'

38. Si me amas.—hic ades.] "'Adesse' is a word of technical use to accompany a person to court, there to give him your aid and advice' (Long on Cicero in Verr. ii. 29.

39. See also Art. ii. 1. 4, c. 30). 'Hic' shows they were within sight of the court to which the speaker points. His impudence is very amusing.

39. Aut valeo stare] Orelli and others take this as equivalent to 'adesse.' I am not aware that it ever has that meaning elsewhere. Comm. Cruq., whom Turnebus follows (l. xv. c. 18), says Horace means he has not strength to stand about the court while this trial is going on. I think he only means he cannot stop, though that is also implied in 'Et propero quo scis,' which refers to his impromptu excuse in v. 18.

41. Tene reloquiam an rem.] 'Those commentators who are not aware that disjunctive questions may be put by 'ne—an,' in oblique as well as in direct constructions, put a note of interrogation after 'rem.'

But see Key's L. G., § 1423, b, and the example there quoted from Cicero:—

"Quaero eum Brutine similem malis an Antoni." Orelli has given other examples. 'Res' is technically used here and elsewhere (in legal formulas) as an equivalent for 'lis.' It need not be considered unnatural that the intrusive fellow should hesitate between losing his cause and leaving the man he was tormenting. He had an object to gain which, if he could secure it, would (he might consider) be more than a compensation to him for the loss of the suit, and he was pretty sure Horace would never give him such an opportunity again.

42. durum est] Bentley and others after him omit 'est,' which in some MSS. of good character does not appear. The Scholiasts, and all editions before Bentley, have that word, which, as Orelli says, may have dropped out of the text from having been united with 'durum,' thus 'durumst.'

The example Bentley quotes from Terence (Phorm. ii. 1. 8), "Etiamne id lex coeit? Illud durum. Ego expediad: sine," is nothing to the purpose. This is a narrative, and a very different case, as any one will see. Horace's dismay at the loss of this promising opportunity may be imagined. He gives up the battle and resigns himself to his fate, while the man pursues his advantage, and brings in that which is the chief purpose of his intrusion. He asks abruptly, "How do you and Maecenas get on together? a shrewd man, and doesn't make himself common. No man ever made a better use of his opportunities. Could you not introduce me to him? I should be very happy to play into your hands, and if I am not very much mistaken, we should soon push aside your rivals." Other interpretations have been given, and the sentences differently divided; but this appears to be Horace's meaning. "Paucorum hominum" has the same meaning as in Terence (Eun. iii. 1. 18):—

"Immo sic homo est Perpauorum hominum. Gn. Immo multorum arbitror Si tecum vivit."
HORATII FLACCI

Submosses omnes." "Non isto vivimus illic Quo tu rere modo; domus haec nec purior ulla est Nee magis his aliena malis; nil mi officit unquam 50 Ditior hic aut est quia doctior; est locus uni Cuique suus." "Magnum narras, vix credibile!" "Atqui Sic habet." "Accendis, quare cupiam magis illi Proximus esse." "Velis tantummodo: quae tua virtus, Expugnabis; et est qui vinci possit, coque Difficiles aditus primos habet." "Haud mihi deero: Muneribus servos corrumpam; non hodie si Exclusus fuero desistam; tempora quaeram, Occurrar in trivis, deducam. Nil sine magno Vita labore dedit mortalibus." Haec dum agit, ecce Fuscus Aristius occurrat, mihi carus et illum

48. Non isto vivimus illic] We may imagine the indignation with which Horace listened to the insolence of his companion. He represents himself throughout the scene as one wanting in the self-possession necessary for dealing with such a person, and here he shows it again. Instead of passing by such impertinence with contempt, or making it, as with more address he might have done, an excuse for leaving the man, he replies to him, and vehemently defends his patron and himself. His adversary’s impertinence only rises higher with this, as might be expected, and is not diminished by the ill-timed irony in ‘velis tantummodo: quae tua virtus, expugnabis,’ &c., all of which may be supposed to be said in a state of excitement only calculated to give the coxcomb courage, he keeping his temper and pretending not to see Horace’s indignation. This must have been worked up to a great height when the man, persisting in the notion that perseverance and intrigue are sure ways of access to the great man, declares he will take Horace at his word, and leave no means untried to secure not only an acquaintance, but the nearest place in Maecenas’ regard (54). All this brings out the contrast between the two characters (the one a mere man of the world, of a low sort, and the other a well-bred but not very energetic gentleman) with great force and in a very amusing way. The German commentators are a little too matter of fact in their view of the scene I think.—For ‘vivimus’ (v. 48) Bentley reads ‘vivitur’ on the authority of three inferior MSS., and quoting C. ii. 16: “vivitur parvo bene.”

But the cases are quite different, and there is more personal feeling expressed by ‘vivimus’ than by ‘vivitur.’ All the oldest and best MSS. and editions have ‘vivimus.’ Bentley also adopts, with bad taste, ‘inquam’ for ‘unquam’ in v. 50. The former word is quite out of place here; but it is not surprising that there should be this error in some MSS. ‘Sic habet’ is a literal adaptation of οὐ τως ἐχι. On the construction ‘quae tua virtus,’ see Key’s L. G. 1131.

50. deducam.] “Haec enim ipsa sunt honorabilis quae videntur levia atque communia, salutari, appeti, decedii, assurgi, deduci, reduci, consuli” (Cic. de Senect. c. 18). To attend upon a person when he leaves home is ‘deducere;’ ‘reducere’ to accompany him on his return. Great men, when they went out of doors, were usually accompanied by friends, while numbers of parasites and expectants followed their steps, and were eager to be seen by them and to be known to have been in their company. Elated with the idea of his intended success, the man becomes quite eloquent and breaks out with a sentiment worthy of the noblest ambition, like that of Sophocles (Elect. 905), πάνω τοι χωρίς οὕτων εὐνοεῖ. 61. Fuscus Aristius] See C. i. 22, Int. This part of the scene is the most humorous of any. Fuscus knows Horace’s friend well by sight and character. He was probably known and shunned as a nuisance by such as had more tact than Horace. Fuscus Seizes the joke at once. They stop and begin with the usual questions (we do not hear that the Romans thought it neces-
Et presare manu lentissima brachia, nutans,
Distorquens oculos, ut me eriperet. Male salsus Ridens dissimulare: meum jecur urere bilis.
"Certe nescio quid secreto velle loqui te Aiebas mecum." memini bene, sed meliore Tempore dicam; hodie tricesima sabbata: vin tu

sary, when they met, to tell each other it was a fine day, or that it looked as if it was going to rain, but the formula in the text was equally common; see S. ii. 4. 1, "Unde et quo Catus?" Virg. Ec. ix. 1. "Quo te, Moeri, pedes? an, quovia ductum, in urbem?") Fuscus goes on talking about nothing. Horace winks at him, twitches him by the toga, pulls him by the arm: to all which he gets no response; the arm seems not to feel, and its owner seems not to perceive, while all the time he sees the fun and laughs in his sleeve. Horace can bear it no longer. "I think you had something to say to me in private, had you not?"
"True; I remember: but I'll take a better opportunity: don't you know what day it is?—the Jews' thirtieth Sabbath! You wouldn't think of offending those good people."
"Pooh! I've no such scruples."
"Aye, but I have: I don't profess to have your strength of mind. I go with the superstitious multitude, and dare not risk such an offence. You'll excuse me. Good-morning!"
And so another excellent opportunity of escape is lost.

62. Qui pulchre nosset.] The commentators do not notice this subjunctive, and yet it is not readily explained. The meaning is, 'one who knew him well;' but I am not aware of any passage that exactly corresponds with this.

64. Et presare manu] I prefer this to 'pressare,' which Orelli edits, referring 'vellere' to the 'toga.' Bentley also reads 'pressare,' which appears in all the old editions, and was first altered by Lamblinus.

69. tricesima sabbata:] Very much has been said on these words. Orelli gives a calculation by Roeder, corrected by a distinguished divine, "eximus theologus," whose name he does not mention, which, taking in the twenty-five Sabbaths from the 1st of Abib to Tisri, the seventh month, adding thereto the αὐξήσατον δευτερόπρωτον—mentioned by St. Luke (vi. 1), and assumed to be the 15th of Nisan, which Josephus says (Arch. iii. 10. 5; xiii. 8. 4) the Jews held as a sabbath,—and the day of Pentecost, which was also a sabbath, and then adding the feast of Trumpets on the 1st Tisri, the 5th Tisri which was the regular sabbath, and the 16th which was the great day of atonement, makes this last solemn day, on which whosoever did not afflict himself should be cut off from among the people (Lev. xxvii. 29), the 'tricesima sabbata,' or thirtieth sabbath from the beginning of the Jewish sacred year. Roeder himself, omitting St. Luke's sabbath and Pentecost, and adding the regular sabbath on the 12th Tisri and the Feast of Tabernacles on the 15th, makes that the great day in question. The opinion of Scaliger was, that the Jews observed the 30th day of each month as a sabbath. Gesner and Doering, and some others, follow Scaliger. Others suppose the day of the Passover to be the sabbath in question, and by calculations try to prove that it might have been. I do not find that it is made out on any authority that the Jews had any sabbath that they called the thirtieth, and I very much doubt the fact. The utter contempt with which the Romans, especially of Horace's class, looked upon the Jewish superstitions (as they counted them), is the essence of the joke in the text. That the Jews had a sabbath of course every body knew. That they had a sabbatical year and a year of Jubilee no doubt was known to some, and that this came round every fifty years; also that they observed days and months and years with scrupulous exactness. Beyond this I should imagine Aristius Fuscus knew little or nothing of the Jews, except that they were a troublesome set of people, and lived by themselves on the other side of the Tiber, not far by the bye from where the party were standing. 'Tricesima sabbata' I believe to be a mere extemporaneous invention made to cover his retreat and tantalize his unfortunate friend. Until some more definite account is given of the matter than any I have read, I shall venture to hold the above opinion. The plural σάββατα is commonly used by the writers of the New Testament for the sabbath day. The joke, however, would have little point if it were not the fact that there were at Rome superstitious people, especially women and persons of nervous habit and of the lower orders (see S. ii. 3. 291, n.), who, being ready to be influenced by any superstition, were prepared to be frightened at the statements of the Jews, who were zealous in making prose-lytes (see S. 4. 143), and no doubt terrified some by their representation of the curses denounced upon the transgressors of the sabbath. Ovid, advising a man how to get out of love, bids him above all things go away from his mistress, and let nothing stop him (Rem. Am. 219):

"Nec pluvias vites nec te peregrina morentur
Sabbata, nec damnis Allia nota suis."

72. Huncine solem Tam nigrum surrexe] 'Huncine' is compounded of the pronoun, the demonstrative enclitic 'ce' (for 'cece,' 'behold'), and the interrogative enclitic 'ne' (Key's L. G. 239). As to 'surrexe,' see S. i. 5. 79; and Terence (Ad. iv. 2. 23), "Non tu eum rus hine modo Produxe sibas?"

74. Casu venit obvius illi Adversarius] Whether this 'adversarius' is the same person who was plaintiff in the action above referred to has been questioned. The point turns on the expression 'rapit in jus' (v. 77). 'In jus vocare' is a technical expression having reference to the first step in a civil action when both parties appeared before the praetor or other magis-tratus having 'jurisdiction,' with the view of fixing a day for the commencement of the trial. On this occasion the 'vadimonium,' above described was entered into. This first step was usually avoided by the parties arranging the day between themselves, and giving each other security for their attendance. But when the defendant was obstinate and ill-disposed, the 'in jus vocatio' was resorted to. 'In jus vocare,' therefore, being the first step, could not follow upon the neglect of the 'vadimonium' by Horace's companion; and the 'adversarius' in this case cannot be the plaintiff in the other, unless Horace is speaking loosely. But as this unprincipled fellow may very probably have had plenty of creditors, there is no reason why Horace's deliverer should not be a new one sent by Apollo to his rescue. If we are to suppose the two to be identical, then Horace means that the plaintiff, not satisfied with the forfeit of the 'vadimonium,' would go through with the action, and hurried his adversary off to the praetor, as he might do in such a case. If that be so, Horace uses a legal term in an unusual way, from want of accurate knowledge of the language of the courts. The above will be found better stated in Mr. Long's note referred to on v. 36, where the inconsistency between Orelli's views and his quotations from Plautus is also shown.

76. Licet antestari?] This word signifies the calling a bystander to witness that there was nothing illegal in the conduct of the plaintiff in such a case as the above, and that the defendant had resisted, and that force was necessary. The process was by touching the ear of the person whose testimony was asked, who could not be compelled to be a witness, but after he had consented he was bound to appear and give evidence if required. Horace was only too glad to help in the forcible removal of his persecutor, and gave his ear with all readiness. The parties begin to wrangle; a crowd of idlers of course forms round them, and Horace makes his escape. The meaning of 'in jus vocatio' and 'antestari' is sufficiently marked in a passage of Plautus (Pers. iv. 6. 8):

"S. Age ambula in jus, leno. D. Quid me in jus vocas?
S. Illi apud praetorem dicam. D. Sed ego.—S. In jus voco.
D. Nonne antestaris? S. Tuan' ego causa, carnifex, Quoiquam mortali libero aures atteram?"

The words of the XII. tables quoted here by Porphyrian are "Si in jus vocat, ni it, antestator. Igitur em capitum," A Scholast on Virg. Ec. vi. 4, "Cynthis Oppono auricularum. Rapit in jus; clamor utrinque; Undique concursus. Sic me servavit Apollo.

"Nen aures tenere et ita dicere: Memento, quod tu mihi in illa causa testis eris: quod est antestari." Pliny (N. H. xi. 103) accounts for the practice by saying the seat of the memory was in the bottom of the ear.

SATIRE X.

The line of self-defence Horace took in the fourth Satire (see Introduction, and v. 6, n.), led him into a criticism of Lucilius, which gave a fresh handle to his adversaries, who professed an admiration for that poet, but admired him for his worst faults of taste, and especially for his combination of Greek words with his mother tongue,—a practice the affectation of which no one would more instinctively feel and condemn than Horace. The occasion did not give scope for much good writing, and the satire has little merit as a composition. Somebody wishing to try his skill in imitating Horace, prefixed to this poem the following verses, which are generally, though not universally, allowed to be spurious, but which appear in the oldest existing MSS. Franke (F. H. p. 107) says they are genuine. They are discussed in an Excursus by Orelli, and in a paper by Jacobs (Lect. Ven. xi.):

"Lucili, quam sis mendosus, teste Catone
Defensore tuo, pervincam, qui male factos
Emendare parat versus; hoc lenius ille
Est quo vir melior, longe subtillior illo,
Qui multum puer et loris et funibus udis
Exhortatus, ut esset opem qui ferre poetis
Antiquis posset contra fastidia nostra, Grammaticorum equum doctissimus. Ut redeem illuc;"

ARGUMENT.

Well, I said that Lucilius' verses were rough. And who can deny it? But I gave him credit at the same time for his great wit. If allowing this I am to allow him every thing, the farces of Laberius I must call poems of great beauty. It is not enough to raise a laugh, though that has its merit; there should be terseness and variety, going from grave to gay, from the severe orator or the keen satirist to the polished wit. A mixture of humour and severity is the way to settle grave questions. This was the ground of the old comedians, whom Hermogenes and his mincing tribe never read a word of.

"Oh! but Lucilius was great in the blending of Greek words with our own." Blockheads! Is that a great thing which Pitholeon can do? "But a language compounded of the two is surely so much sweeter, like mixing Chian and Falernian wines." Now I ask you, would you apply that rule to the language of the Forum? and while our great advocates are working out their speeches with much labour in the best possible Latin, would you mix up yours with Greek? When I once thought of writing Greek verses the shade of Romulus appeared to me by night, and bade me rather carry faggots to the forest. So while Alpinus is murdering heroes in bombast, I stick to my unambitious trifles. Fundanias may write comedy, as he does better than any man living; Pollio may write tragedy; Varus bold epics; Virgil bucolics; my strength lies in that style in which Varro and others have failed, though I am not equal to Lucilius who invented it. I have no wish to rob him of the crown that is his due.

But I said the flow of his verse was that of a muddy stream, carrying with it more faults than beauties. Well, do you never find a blot even in Homer, with all your learning? Did not Lucilius find faults in Accius and in Ennius? Why may not I inquire whether it was from the nature of his mind or of his subject that Lucilius wrote clumsy verses, such as any one would write who thought more of quantity than quality, like Cassius whose books were burnt on his own funeral pile? Grant him all the wit and eloquence you please, yet if he had lived till now he would have corrected much that he wrote, and taken more pains than he did.

If you want to write well correct what you write, and look for the approval not of the multitude but of the few. You are not ambitious surely of your verses being hacked in cheap schools. If you are I am not. I look for the applause of better judges. Am I to be put out by the abuse of a vulgar rabble? Let my noble band of learned and loving friends be pleased and I want no more. Demetrius and Tigellius may go and whine to their pupils. And so, boy, let this be my valediction to them all.

Nempe incomposito dixi pede currere versus Lucili. Quis tam Lucili fautor inepte est
Ut non hoc fateatur? At idem quod sale multo
Urbem defrictum charta laudatur cadem.
Nec tamen hoc tribuens dederim quoque cetera; nam sic
Et Laberi mimos ut pulchra poëmata mirer.

3. At idem] ‘At’ denotes rather addition than opposition. It is commonly employed after a concession’ (Key’s L. G., 1445). The concession here is in ‘nempe,’ ‘You say and I admit it, still in the same satire I praised him.’
4. defrictum] This word is nowhere else used in this sense. It means to give a hard rub, as we say. There are other vulgarisms in our own language akin to this expression.
6. Et Laberi mimos] Laberius was the most distinguished writer of this particular kind of play that we know of. Particulars of his life will be found in the Dict. Biog. He died the year before the battle of Philippi, A. D. C. 711, and therefore before this Satire was written. The Roman mimes were in the time of Laberius represented in the theatres with the regular drama, and were accordingly, we may believe, of a higher order than those representations which at an earlier period bore this name, though still they appear to have been of a licentious character. They were a combination of grotesque dumb-show, of farcical representations in verse-dialogue, of incidents in low and profligate life, and of grave sentiments and satirical allusions interspersed with the dialogue. Of these, as in the Atellanæ Fabulae, the first element chiefly prevailed. That class of representation was gradually superseded by the mime, which came to be in great favour. This appears to have been the only purely Roman conception of the Drama; for though the name is derived from the Greek, the characters of the Greek and Latin mimes were essentially different. That they were very popular we know. When Ovid would excuse himself to Augustus, he writes (Trist. ii. 497, sqq.):

"Quid si scripsissem mimos obscena jocantes,
Quis semper juncti nomen amoris habent?
In quibus assidue cultus procedit adulter,
Verbaque dat stulto calida nupta viro.
Nubilis hos virgo matronaque virque
Puerque
Spectat, et e magna parte senatus adestr" and he goes on to say that Augustus himself was a great patron of these licentious representations. From a prologue written by Laberius (and preserved in Macrobius) on a famous occasion, on which Julius Caesar

Ergo non satis est risu diducere rictum
Auditoris (et est quacdam tamen hic quoque virtus).
Est hanc vitate opus, ut currat sententia neu se
Impediat verbis lassas onerantibus aures;
Et sermone opus est modo tristi saepè jocosò,
Defendente vicem modo rhetoris atque poetæ,
Interdum urbani, parcentis viribus atque
Extenuantis eas consulto. Ridiculum aeri Fortius et melius magnas plerumque secat res.
Illi scripta quibus comoedia priscæ viris est
Hoc stabant, hoc sunt imitandi; quos neque pulcher Hermogenes unquam legit neque simius iste caused him though an 'eques' to act in his own farce, and from several admirable lines gathered out of the mimes of his slave and pupil Publius Syrus, which are still extant (though the collection that bears his name probably contains many lines that are not his), we may believe that Laberius did something to raise the tone of these plays.

But, without meaning personally to dis-parage that writer, Horace might very well hesitate to call his mimes 'pulchra poemata,' since they could not even have pretended to the title of poems at all. When Schlegel therefore (Drama, Lect. viii.) and others say that Horace speaks disparagingly of Laberius' mimes, and draw inferences from this fact adverse to his own judgment, they appear to me to mistake the meaning of this passage. He gives Laberius as much praise as he gives Lucilius, and though that is qualified praise the nature of the compositions he chose to employ himself on rendered this unavoidable. There can be no doubt that his wit would have adorned a higher sphere of writing, if he had selected
it. Cicero, who writing to Cornificius (ad Fam. xii. 18) implies that he had a great dislike to the mimes of Laberius and Syrus, may very well be supposed to have been displeased at the character of the plays, while he may have appreciated the abilities of the authors.

9. Est brevitatis opus.] The want of this quality in Lucilius he condemns in S.
4. 9, seqq. 'Tristi' signifies 'serious,' 'Dedefendetne vicem,' supporting the part, like 'fungar viccis' (A. P. 304), and 'actoris partes chorus officiumque virile Defendat' (v. 193). On 'modo,' see S. 3. 12. The combination Horace commends is that of the orator sternly or gravely rebuking vice,
of the humorous satirist (poetæ) broadly ridiculing it, and of the polished wit who, instead of throwing himself with all his strength upon his victim, substitutes sarcasm for inventive, and lets his power be rather felt than seen. Of these three the gravity of stern reproof Horace estimates lowest, saying that ridicule generally settles questions of however grave importance better and more decisively than severity. 'Secare' is used in the sense of 'decidere' in Epp.
i. 16. 42: "Quo multae magnaeque secantur judice lites," Cicero (de Or. ii.
58) says, "Est plane oratoris movere risum-maxime quod tristitiam ac severum mitigat et relaxat odiosasse res saepè quas argumentis dilui non facile est joco risuque dissolvit."

'Hoc stabant,' 'stood on this ground,' as
'hinc pendet,' S. 4. 6.

iste' is said by the Scholiasts, with every probability, to mean Demetrius, whom we meet with below (v. 79) as an abuser of Horace and (v. 90) as a trainer of 'mimæ,' like Hermogenes with whom he is associated.
We know nothing more of him. The Scholiasts say he was called an ape because of the shortness of his stature and the deformity of his person. It may be doubted whether that idea was not derived from Aristophanes' description of Cleogene, Ran.
768, o πιθηκός γ' ουρας Κληγείνης δ μυρός.
His only skill was to sing the love songs of Calvus and Catullus (and to imitate them, Acron adds, probably at a guess). Horace having mentioned the great masters of Greek comedy, cannot help stepping out of his way to aim a blow at these pitiful persons, Hermogenes and his ape. It has been rightly observed that Horace does not mean to disparage the two favourite poets and

Cum versus facias, te ipsum percevor, an et cum Dura tibi peragenda rei sit causa Petilli?

Scilicet oblitus patriaeque patrisque, Latine sworn friends, Calvus and Catullus, but merely to show that it required a more vigorous taste than Hermogenes or Demetrius possessed to appreciate or even to read the writings of such men as Aristophanes and his brethren, for whom he had an unbounded admiration. Orelli thinks he means to express a poor opinion of Calvus and Catullus, towards the latter of whom he is said by some scholars to have entertained an aversion: but I cannot see why if a man were to say of a modern English coxcomb who could do nothing better than please a circle of ladies with a popular song and agreeable voice, that he could sing Moore's ballads from beginning to end but could not understand a line of Shakspeare, therefore he was disparaging that graceful song writer, between whom and Shakspeare there can be no comparison whatever, as there could not be between Catullus and Aristophanes.

20. quod verbis Graeca Latinis.] This is a new fault in Lucullus' style not before mentioned. See the note on S. 4. 6. Cicero's advice in respect to the consistency of our lives is illustrated thus: "Ut enim sermone eo debemus uti qui notus est nobis, ne ut quidam Graecae verba inculcantes jure optimo rideamur, sic in actiones omnemque vitam nullam discrepantiam conferre debemus" (De Off. i. 31). 'Seri studiorum' represents the Greek δριμαθεῖς, to whom Theophrastus devotes one of his least descriptive characters. In 'quine putetis' the interrogative enclitic is somewhat redundant, but not more than in many other instances, as S. ii. '2. 107, "Uterne Ad casus dubios fidel sibi certius?" and 3. 295. 317. Orelli says the construction is compounded of two, 'putatis ne?' and 'qui putetis?' comparing Plautus (Trucul. ii. 6. 43), "Quine etiamnum super adducas:" and Bentley quotes Terence (Adelph. ii. 3. 9), "Quin omnia sibi postputari esse prae meo commodo:" where 'putarit' is his own reading; the indicative is the ordinary.

22. Rhodio quod Pitholeonti] The Schoolmen give us no help in respect to this person. They say he was an absurd writer of epigrams, in which he mixed up Greek words with the Latin. Torrentius was of opinion, and Bentley and Weichert (Port. Lat. Rel. p. 333) of the same, that the person meant is a freedman of one Otacilius, whose name he bore (M. Otacilius Pitho-laus), of whom Suetonius, in his life of Julius Caesar (c. 70), says that he attacked Caesar in some very abusive verses, but that he took it with good temper. His name was Pitholus, but Horace might change that termination without violating the Greek usage, as Τυμόλας and Τυμό- λεως, Μενίλας and Μενίλεως, &c., are different forms of the same name. There is some probability in the conjecture, and it is at any rate impossible to name any other person with whom this man can be identified.

24. ut Chio nota si] On 'nota' see C. i. 3. 8. Here the Chian, a sweet wine, would represent the Greek as the rougher wine of Campania would stand for the less-polished Latin.

26. causa Petilli?] See S. 4. 9, n.

27. Seilicet oblitus] Against all the MSS. Bentley suggests, and Heindorf adopts, 'oblitus,' to be governed by 'mals.' The received reading, which addresses itself to the supposed advocate of a mixed language, gives just as good sense as the other, in my opinion. Bentley revives the reading of the old editions, 'Latini,' which Laminus, on good authority, since confirmed by other MSS., changed to 'Latine.' Bentley and Gesner, who follows him, can find no better explanation of 'patris Latin' than king Latinus. With 'oblitus' and 'Latine' the whole passage runs thus: "You say that the language is more elegant if it be set off with Greek. But I ask you yourself, is it only when you are writing poetry; or supposing you had on hand a difficult cause, such as that of Petillius, would you then likewise, forgetting your country and Cum Pedius causas exsudet Poplicola atque Corvinus, patrisi interniscere petita Verba foris malis, Canusini more bilinguis?
Atque ego cum Graecos facerem natus mare citra
Versiculos, vetuit me tali voce Quirinus,
Post medium noctem visus cum somnia vera :
"In silvam non ligna feras insanius ac si Magnas Graecorum malis implere catervas."
Turgidus Alpinus jugulat dum Memnona, dumque
Defingit Rheni luteam caput, haec ego ludo, Quae neque in aede sonent certantia judice Tarpa,
your birth, while our great orators Pedius and Messalla are elaborating their speeches in their pure mother tongue,—would you, I say, prefer mixing up a foreign jargon with your native language, like a double-tongued man of Canusium?" He puts the composition of verses, on such themes as Lucilius chose, on a par with the gravity of forensic speaking, and asks why if the man would not apply the rule to the latter he should do so to the former.
28. Cum Pedius causas] It is doubted whether Poplicola should be taken with Pedius or Corvinus. The son or grandson of Julia, sister of Julius Caesar, was Q. Pe-dius, who died in the year of his consulship, A.D. 711. This Pedius, therefore, could not have been the orator of the text. He had a son Quintus, of whom history says nothing but that he was the father of Q. Pedius, who was born dumb and, having been taught painting through the means of Messalla Corvinus his kinsman, became cumeliant as an artist. These are all the Pedi of this age that we know of; and if any of these was the orator, it must have been the son of Q. Pedius, and either grandson or great grandson of Julia. His family were connected by marriage with the Messallae, but there is no record of the cogno-men Poplicola belonging to any of them.
Neither is there any reason that I know of
to suppose it was borne by Messalla Corvinus, to whom Horace here alludes. (See C. iii.
21. Int.). He had a brother by adoption named Gallius Poplicola, and it was a cognomen of the Valeria gens, to which Messalla belonged, but he is never so called himself.
Acron takes Poplicola with Pedius, and says he and Messalla were brothers. Orelli
—I do not know on what authority—says that Quintius Pedius, the father of the dumb painter, adopted a brother of Mes-salla, whence he was called Pedius. Estré takes Poplicola with Corvinus, as in S. 5.
27, "Maccenas, optimus atque Cocceius;"
and below, v. 82, "Octavius, optimus atque Fuscus." I do not know how the question is to be decided, in the absence of more distinct information about Pedius. In respect to Messalla's religious reverence for his mother tongue, the Scholiasts write (the words are those of Comm. Cruq.), but Porph.
tells the same story, "a Graecis vocabulis
ita abhoruerunt ut Messalla σγουμβις πτρυν Latino 'funambulum' reddiderit, ex Te-rentio in Hecyra, ubi ait, Funambuli codem accessit expectatio;" which Estré interprets
thus; that in the place in question (Hecyra, Prov. v. 26) Terence wrote originally "Schoenobatae codem accessit expectatio," and that Messalla substituted the word 'funambuli,' which was retained in all the subsequent copies. Quintilian describes Messalla (x. 1.
113) as "orator nitidus et candidus et quodammodo praec se ferens in dicendo nobilitatem suam." And Horace speaks again of his eloquence A. P. 370. His intimacy with Horace began in Brutus' army,
and continued unbroken till Horace's death.
30. Canusini more bilinguis? As to 'Canusium,' see S. 5. 91. It was one of those Greek towns which retained longest and most purely the language of its founders,
as we may suppose from the text.
38. Quae neque in aede sonent Sp.
Maecrius (Metius the Scholiasts call him)
Tarpa was the lord-chamberlain of that day, and licensed plays before they were acted. It appears from a letter of Cicer to Marius (Ad Fam. vii. 1) that he was appointed to that duty by Cn. Pompeius, on the opening of his theatre, A.D. 699: he must therefore have discharged it for a great many years, since he is mentioned again in the Ars Poetica (v. 387), though it is not Nec redeant iterum atque iterum spectanda theatris.
Arguta meretris potes Davoque Chremeta
Eludente senem comis garrire libellos
Unus vivorum, Fundani; Pollio regum

certain from that passage that he still retained these duties. The Scholiasts give other conjectures respecting this allusion to Tarpa, but the above seems to be the true explanation. The meaning of 'aede' cannot be so readily determined. Comm. Cruq. says it was "Aedes Apollinis seu Musarum," and Bentley on Epp. ii. 2, 92, says it was either the library attached to the Palatine temple of Apollo, or the temple called 'Herculis Musarum,' rebuilt by Philip, the step-father of Augustus, and called from him 'Porticus Philippi.' But the former temple was not built till the autumn of A.U.C. 726. (C. i. 31. Int.) The latter (though this has been denied, see Estré, Prosp. p. 209) was probably the same temple, restored and beautified, as that erected to the Muses by Fulvius Nobilius, about A.U.C. 575. Temples of Apollo and the Muses are referred to by Juvenal (S. vii. 37) as the resort of poets, and there can be no doubt that other temples besides (see Ovid. Trist. iii. 1. 69) had buildings attached where men of letters assembled. In one of these, therefore, or some building especially consecrated to the Muses (for 'aedes' in the singular number cannot signify a private house, nor does the context admit of that interpretation, which Masson, Franke, and others give it) poets who had plays they wished to get represented recited them, probably in the presence of Tarpa. Comm. Cruq. says that this duty was committed to Tarpa in conjunction with five others. It had previously formed part of the functions of the aediles, and it was not till political allusions became common, and the position of affairs too critical to bear them, that this special censorship was created.

42. Unus vivorum, Fundani:] Of this Fundanius, who Horace says was the only man of the day who could write a comedy in the style of Menander and that school, nothing whatever is known, and conjectures are useless. Because he is mentioned with Pollio, who gave up arms for letters, Weichert (Poet. Lat. p. 51, n. 41) conjectures he may have been C. Fundanius, an eques who, we are informed by the author of the Bellum Hispanicum (c. 11) deserted Sext. Pompeius and went over to Augustus (see Dict. Biog.). But this is not a very good argument. He is mentioned with Pollio because the one wrote comedies and the other tragedies. Fundanius is the narrator of the scene in S. ii. 8, the supper of Nasidienus. I think it probable Horace exaggerated his merits as well as Pollio's out of affection for the men. As to Pollio, see C. ii. 1. Int., and v. 10, n. "Pollio's poetic greatness might easily dazzle the eyes of his contemporaries as to the true value of his political works," is Schlegel's opinion (Drama, Lect. viii.), and he thinks that though "we cannot exactly estimate the extent of our loss (in the tragedies of the Augustan age) to all appearance it is not extraordinarily great." 'Regum,' such as the 'sacra Pelopis domus' (C. i. 6. 8, n.), 'Pede ter percusso' refers to the trimeter iambic, the common measure of tragedy. As to Varius, see the ode last mentioned, v. 8. 11, and S. 5. 40. The derived significations of 'ducere' are so various, as observed before (C. iv. 6. 2), that it is hard to follow them. As applied to a poem it is supposed by some to be taken from the process of spinning, which receives support from Epp. ii. 1. 225: "tenui deducta poëmata filo." See S. ii. 1. 4: "Mille die versus deducti posse." Others suppose it to be applied to a poem as to a statue, to the making of which both in metals and in marble the word 'ducere' is employed. Whether Virgil had at this time published his Georgics or not is quite uncertain, from the doubt that hangs over both the date of this Satire and the publication of those poems. But at any rate Virgil had them in hand, and his friends had probably heard a great part of them recited in private. The Scholiasts say that Virgil appears to have written the Georgics and Bucolics; but they only gather this probably from the text. The Bucolics had been published some time, and they seem to have been well thought of, though until the Aeneid had made some progress we have no reason to suppose that Virgil was classed by his contemporaries with poets of the first rank. Certainly his Eclogues do not deserve a higher place than is due to polished versification, and will bear no comparison with the Idylls of Theocritus.—'Facetum' signifies 'elegant,' as in a coxcomb it would be called 'fine,' S. 2. 26.
Facta canit pede ter percusso; forte epos acer
Ut nemo Varins duet; molle atque facetum
Virgilio annuerunt gaudentes rure Camenae.

Hoc erat, experto frustra Varrone Atacino
Atque quibusdam aliiis, melius quod scribere possem,
Inventor minor; neque ego illi detrhere ausim
Haerentem capiti cum multa laude coronam.

At dixi fluere hunc lulultenunt, saepe ferentem
Plura quidem tollenda relinquendis. Age, quaes,
Tu nihil in magnó doctus reprehendis Homero?
Nil comis tragicí mutatLucuús Acci?
Non ridet versus Enni graveitate minores,
Cum de se loquitur non ut majore reprensis?

"P. Terentius Varro vico Atace in provincia Narbonensis nascitur qui postea xxxv annum
agens Graecas literas cum summo studio didicit." (See Clinton, P. H. sub an.) He was called Atacins, whether from a district or, as the Scholiasts say, a river of Gallia Narbonensis (the district is not named, but Strabo mentions the river, 1. iv. p. 181), to distinguish him from M. Terentius Varro, who is sometimes called Reatinus. The works attributed to him are named in the notice of his life in the, Dict. Biog. His attempts at satire,—in which Horace says, most probably with justice, that he had failed,—are nowhere noticed but here.
Comm. Crug. thus paraphrases Horace's words: "Hoc erat quod ego melius possem scribere quam Varro Atacinus et alii multi, qui conati sunt scribere Satyras quas non satis laudabiller ediderant." Porphyrian explains 'quibusdam aliiis' to mean Ennius and Pacuvius, which is very improbable.
Gellius (xii. 2) relates how he read to Pacuvius one of his early productions (Atreus,
a tragedy), and that the old man said,
"sonora quidem esse quae scripsisset et grandia; sed videri ea tamen sibi duriora paullum et acerbiora." Acius acknowledged it was so, but hoped to mend his style as he grew older. Gellius finishes his account of Roman authors (xvii. 2) with "Q.
Ennius et juxta Cacelius et Terentius ac
subinde et Pacuvius, et Pacuvio jam sene Accius, clariorque tunc in poëmatis eorum obrectandis Lucilius." Porphyrian has a note here, "facit autem hoc cum alias tum in terto libro et nono et decimo Satirarum."

55. non ut majore reprendis?] "Quando de se loquitur non sic dicit quasi melior sit illis poëtis," which interpretation of Acrion's
—the true one no doubt—I give because some editors, including Doering and Heindorf, make another question of this verse, and translate it thus: "When he speaks of himself, is it not as one superior to those he finds fault with?"—which is contrary to the spirit of the passage altogether. Horace seeks in Lucilius a precedent, not for commending himself, but only for noticing in a Quid vetat et nos met Lucili scripta legentes
Quaerere, num illius, num rerum dura negarit
Versiculos natura magis factos et euntes
Mollius ac si quis pedibus quid claudere senis,
Hoc tantum contentus, amet scripsisse ducentos
Ante cibum versus, totidem coenatus; Etrusi
Quale fuit Cassi rapido ferventius anni
Ingenium, capsis quem fama est esse librisque
Ambustum propriis? Fuerit Lucilius, inquam, Comis et urbanus, fuerit limiator idem
Quam rudis et Graecis intacti carminis auctor, fair spirit of criticism the poets that have gone before him.

59. ac si quis] I do not know why Orelli limits this use of 'ac' after words of comparison to the poets. It is not less employed in prose. (See S. I. 46, n.) Horace says he is at liberty to inquire whether it is not a natural consequence of Lucilius' temperament, and the character of his subjects, that he wrote verses not more polished and smooth than might be expected of a man who was content with giving his lines the proper number of feet, and took delight in string-ing together a vast number of them in the shortest possible time. 'Pedibus quid claudere senis' I understand to explain 'hoc,' contented merely with this, that is to say, comprising something (that he calls a verse,
for there is contempt in 'quid') in six feet.
Bentley puts 'hoc tantum' in a parenthesis, which is unnecessary. 'At,' which is the reading of some of the old editions and of Lambinus, and 'an' the conjecture of Dacier and Doering, are bad substitutes for
'ac,' and give no sense that I can understand.

61. Etruci Quale fuit Cassi] Of this Cassius we know nothing, and what Horace says of him is no more than a jocular invention that his writings were of so little value that they were burnt on the same funeral pile with his body, or, as he seems to mean, that there was enough of them to form a funeral pile of themselves. The Scholiasts all confound him with Cassius of Parma mentioned Epp. i. 4, 3, where see note: and many editors follow them, forgetting that Parma was not an Etrurian town, but belonged to the Boii in Cisalpine Gaul. Bentley again
'sua vineta caedit' (see C. iv. 12, Int.); for Cassius of Parma was put to death by order of Augustus after the battle of Actium (in which he took part with M. Antonius), i.e. in A.U.C. 723; whereas Bentley supposes in his chronological scheme that the first book of the Satires was finished in A.U.C.
717. Acron says his books were burnt with his body, by order of the senate; confounding him with Cassius Severus (mentioned on Epod. vi. Int.), in respect to whom we read in Suetonius (Calig. c. 16) that such a decree was passed. In this confusion of names we only see that the Scholiasts knew nothing about the Etrurian Cassius, and it is useless for us to attempt to learn more of him than that he was in Horace's opinion a specimen of that low class of poets whom he is describing.

64. Fuerit] See S. i. 1. 45.
66. Quam rudis et Graecis] Allow that he is more polished than as the inventor of a new style of writing unknown to the Greeks he appears to be, and than the mass of the older poets certainly are. What Horace means to say is, that Lucilius, from the novelty of his style, may possibly be judged unfairly; and may possess more beauties and even elegancies than are allowed him; but still there can be no doubt, if he had lived to that time, he would have corrected many expressions and gone to a good deal of trouble in polishing his verses.
The commentators have given a variety of interpretations from the Scholiasts downwards, which Orelli has collected. The above appears to be the true one. It agrees with Heindorf's explanation, and is the substance of a paper on the subject by C. F. Hermann, which Orelli quotes with approbation. The MSS. and editions vary between 'dilatus' and 'delatus,' 'dilapsus' and 'delapsus.' The first is more generally adopted. It means properly 'deferred,' had his birth been put off till now. 'De-latus' would mean, had his life been continued, brought down to the present time.
Quamque poétarum seniorum turba; sed ille,
Si foret hoc nostrum fato dilatus in aevum,
Detereret sibi multa, recideret omne quod ultra Perfectum traheretur, et in versu faciendo
Saepe caput scabervos et roderet ungues.
Saepe stilum vertas iterum quae digna legi sint
Scripturus, neque te ut miretur turba labores,
Contentus paucis lectoribus. An tua demens Vilibus in ludis dictari carmina malis?
Non ego; nam satis est equitem mihi plaudere, ut audax
Contemptis alis explosa Arbucula dixit.
Men moveat cimex Pantilius, aut crucet quod
Vellicet absentem Demetrius, aut quod ineptus

Horrell says the latter notion involves an impossibility, and therefore an absurdity, which does not follow.

72. Saepe stilum vertas] ‘Stilum vertero’ was the conventional phrase for erasing what had been written, one end of the iron pen (stilus) being broad like the end of a chisel, for the purpose of obliterating the letters made up upon the wax tablet by the sharp end, which they called ‘acumen.’

75. Vilibus in ludis] Such schools as Flavius perhaps, if poetry was ever taught there, or in those cheap schools in the back streets mentioned in Epp. i. 20, 18. The word ‘dictari’ refers to the practice of the teacher reading out a passage for the pupil to repeat after him, one of the earliest steps in education being accurate pronunciation. This is what Macrobius means when speaking of Virgil he asks, ‘nunc quia cum Marone nobis negotium est, respondes volo utrum poëtae hujus opera instituendis tantum pueris idonea judices, an alia illis altiora inesse fatesiris. Videris enim mihi its adhuc Virgilianos habere versus qualler eos pueri magistros praecendentibus canebamus’ (Saturn. i. 24). See also Martial i. 36:

‘Versus scribere me parum severos,
Nec quos praecogat in schola magister,
Corneli, quereris.’

Orelli explains ‘dictari’ here of the boy repeating what he has learnt, and in Epp. ii. 1. 71, where it is obviously said of the teacher, he explains it of his repeating the words to be taken down by the scholar and then got by heart. Comm. Crug. and many of the editors understand it here of the master. The words ‘canere,’ ‘cantare,’ which are frequently applied to the recitation of the pupil, show that the modulation of the voice was a primary consideration in teaching. To help this I have no doubt was one principal purpose of the master’s reciting to his scholars, which was done quite at the beginning, and probably before the boys could write; whence Ovid says (ex Pont. i. 2. 126), ‘Os tenerum pueri balbunque poëta figurat.’ It was a good preparation for their subsequent training under the teacher of rhetoric. It is a practice which might be more generally revived, for nothing can be worse than the way in which boys usually read or repeat their lessons in our schools.

77. explosa Arbucula] This actress has been mentioned before, S. 2. 2, n. As she, when she was bissed off the stage, said she cared nothing for the rest of the spectators, and was satisfied if she pleased the front benches (the equites), so Horace says he only wants to be read in the better sort of schools, where that class of people sent their sons.

78. cimex Pantilius] This person, if it be a real name, is quite unknown. Comm. Cruq. says, ‘nomen est vilis poëtae et malevolentis,’ which is only gathered from the text. A more contemptible animal could not have been chosen to liken the man to, whether for its odour, its skulking, or its sting. So that ditéματα κώριων, λαβρόδακεναι κόρες, seem to have been proverbial expressions for the calumnies of such people. Philost. Vit. Soph. ii. 10. 3, and Anti-phanes, quoted from the Anthology by Jacobs, Lect. Ven. p. 394.

79. Demetrius] See above on v. 18, and as to Fannius, see S. 4. 21, n. On Plotius, see S. 5. 40, and on Valgius, C. ii. 9. Int. He was consul in a.u.c. 741. Who Octa-Fannius Hermogenis laedat conviva Tigelli? Horatii one that Here belongs optimus but quibus nius xlvii. his before brother was dressed. poem posed (at 434 85. Estre di vitis Pater Int., epithet to dressed. plotius Valgius Fannius_corrected. which Vius which C. Julius Caesar Octavianus, and could not at this time be called Octavius. On Fuscus (to whom the epithet ‘optimus’ belongs), see C. i. 22. Int., and S. 9. 61, and Epp. i. 10.

83. Viscorum laudet uteque] Here Acron writes, “Visci duo fratres erant optimi poëtæ. Alii dicitur criticos fuisset. Pater corum Vibi Viscus quamvis et divitius et amicitia Augusti clarus esset in equestri tamen ordine perduravit.” Comm. Cruq. says much the same, and this is all that can be said of them. If Viscus be the correct reading in S. 9. 22. and S. i. 8. 20, the persons there mentioned may be one or other or both of these brothers.

85. tuo cum fratre,] According to Estré this was Gellius Poplicola, Messalla’s brother by adoption. He was with Brutus and Cassius in Asia Minor; but left them before the battle of Philippi, and joined M. Antonius, and commanded the right wing of his army at Actium. (See Dion Cass. xlvi. 24). If therefore this be the person Horace alludes to, his acquaintance with him began in Brutus’s camp. He was consul in the year A.D. 718. Orelli adheres to his notion (see note on v. 28) that Messalla had a brother Q. Pedius Poplicola, but he produces no evidence of the fact.

86. Vos, Bibule et Servi,] M. Calpurnius Bibulus, who was consul in A.D. 695, and through the influence of Cn. Pompeius was appointed governor of Syria in 703, when Cicero was governor of Cilicia, had four sons, of whom two were killed in Egypt while their father was in Syria; one who was made governor of Syria by M. Antonius, soon after the battle of Philippi (at which he was present), and who appears to have died in that province shortly after he went there; and one who was a little child (πατίνιον περί τοῦ, Plut. Brut. c. 13) when his mother Porcia married Brutus, which could not have been earlier than A.D. 706, when the older Bibulus died. He wrote an account of his stepfather’s life, which Plutarch made use of. This is supposed to be the person Horace alludes to. He must have been still quite young, which ever date of those that are proposed is adopted. In the Dict. Biog., this person is confounded with his third brother, and is said to have been “quite a youth” at the time of his mother’s marriage. Plutarch’s words cannot be so understood.

In the notice of Servius Sulpicius Rufus, the distinguished lawyer and friend of Cicero, in the Dict. Biog., it is said briefly that he left a son named Servius. This son is perhaps the person Horace refers to. Cicero was very fond of him, to judge by his letters to his father, in one of which he says, “Cum tuo Servio juvandissimo conjunctissime vivo, magnumque quam ex ingenio ejus tum ex virtute et probitate voluptatem capio” (ad Fam. xiii. 27. See also iv. 3 and 4, where Cicero speaks of his great literary attainments, and Phil. ix. 3. 4, 5, where his grief for his father’s death, A.D. 711, is earnestly dwelt upon). He must have been older than Horace, and very much older than Bibulus.

Furnius was also the son of a friend and correspondent of Cicero, and was a favourite with Augustus. The epithet ‘candidus’ applied to him by Horace shows that he deserved esteem. Shortly after the battle of Actium he got Augustus to take his father, who had followed M. Antonius, into favour, and his gratitude on that occasion is recorded by Seneca, de Benef. ii. 25. His words show at least that he was no mean courtier: “Hanc unam, Caesar, habeo injuriam tuam; effecisti ut viverem et morerer ingratus.” Comm. Cruq. says of him, “historiarum fide et elegantia claruit.” Deterius nostra. Demetri, teque, Tigelli, Discipularum inter jubeo plorare cathedras.
I., puer, atque meo citus haec subscribe libello.

91. Discipularum inter jubeo plorare cathedras.] Their pupils were chiefly 'mimae' (see S. 2. 2, n.), but some ladies of birth at this time learnt singing of professors, and it was not counted much to their praise. 'Jubeo plorare' corresponds to the Greek ὁμώζων κυλεύω, so common in Aristophanes; but Baxter for once has succeeded in finding a real διλογία in 'plorare,' which represents not only the above proverbial expression, but the drawing of the singing master teaching his pupils sentimental or melancholy songs. On 'cathedra,' the easy chair used chiefly by women, see Dict. Ant., where a representation is given of one from a picture found at Pompeii.

92. I., puer.] Porphyrius explains this in the following way, 'elegantor, quasi hoc ex tempore dixerit, praecipit pueru ut in librum suum illud conferat, ne pereat tam opportunum et congruens in modulatores dictum.' Authors did not write themselves, but had slaves, called 'pueri a studiis,' or generally 'librarii,' to whom they dictated. See S. 4. 10. Epp. i. 13. 49. The notion of this Scholiast is, that Horace extemporized this anathema against Demetrius and Tigellius, and then told his amanuensis to go before he forgot it and add it to the Satire as his 'subscription;' which in letters was the word 'vale,' or something civil of that sort. This interpretation may be admitted without disturbing the notion that 'libellus' signifies the whole book, including these ten Satires, though it might equally suit the present one. See Pers. i. 120. I think 'subscribe' has the meaning above given, and am inclined to take 'libello' for the Satire, not the book, which Orelli and Dillembr. take it to mean, following Bentley, who, in his preface, takes that meaning for granted. The editors are divided: Heindorf, Gesner, Doering, take it as I do, and so does Kirchner, Qu. Hor. p. 157.

EXCURSUS
ON VER. 36.
TURGDUS ALPINUS.

On this Acron says, 'Vivalium quendam poëtam Gallum tangit,' which Comm. Cruq. repeats, though his editor changes 'Vivalium' into 'rivalem.' Porphyrius writes, 'Cornelius Alpinus Memnona hexametris versibus descriptit.' From which notices Cruquius has inferred that Horace alludes to C. Cornelius Gallus, the intimate friend of all Horace's friends, and of Virgil in particular (see Ec. x.). No opinion can be more improbable than this. Out of the word 'Vivalium' (evidently corrupt) in Acron's note, Bentley has conjectured, with some appearance of probability, that M. Furius Bibaculus is the person referred to. This poet, who was born at Cremona A.D.C. 652 (see Clinton F. H. sub an.), is mentioned with respect by Quintilian (x. 1. 96), and classed with Catullus and Horace as a satirist. But Quintilian also quotes (viii. 6. 17) with disapprobation the verse of this same person imitated by Horace in S. ii. 5. 41, "Juppiter hibernas cana nive conspuit Alpes." The affection noticed in this verse, and continued perhaps in others that followed, may account for Furius's cognomen, given him probably by his contemporaries generally and therefore sufficient for them to recognize him by. Some think he is so called from his birthplace, from which Acron calls him 'Gallum poëtam;' others because he wrote a poem (πραγματία the Scholiasts call it) on Caesar's Gallic war, from which the above verse is taken. Bentley prefers the first of these three reasons, and I agree with him. The epithet 'turgidus' applies to his person, and is explained by the description given of him in the above place, "pingui tentus omas." He is said to have murdered Memnon, and it is generally said that this refers to a translation he is supposed to have made of the Aethiopis of Arctinus, one of the cyclic poets, in which Memnon was one of the principal heroes. Dacier suggests that he wrote a tragedy with this title, to which notion the following lines give some probability. Horace says that Furius, like some rude artists, had made a figure of Rhenus with a head of clay, referring to the statues by which the different river gods were represented, and to some description this poet had given of the sources of the Rhine, probably in the above poem on the Gallic war. There is a very different representation of Rhenus on a medal of Drusus, in Oiselian's Thesaurus, Pl. 24, 6, where he appears as a majestic figure, reclining with his left arm resting on his urn, and in his right hand a reed partly broken; which latter symbol appears to have been familiar to Ovid, for he writes, describing the triumph of Tiberius, A.D. 12 (ex Pont. iii. 4. 107):

\[ f f 2 \]

"Squalidus inmissos fracta sub arundine crines Rhenus et infectas sanguine portet aquas,"

'Defingo' is to fashion out, and differs little from 'fingo' 'diffingo' (C. i. 35. 39, n.) is to break up and fashion anew. Nevertheless some MSS. and editions have 'diffingit' here. Dillenbr. says this word "haud dubie reprehensionem continet ut simile verbum deformare." I do not agree with him. If 'deformare' were substituted it would either have the same meaning that I have given to 'defingit,' or it would signify disfigured, which sense the passage will not bear. There is a chapter in Gallius (xvii. 11) in which he defends Furius from the adverse judgment of Caesellius Vindex, who pronounced him affected, and said he had spoilt the Latin tongue by the invention of new words, of some of which he gives specimens. The heading of the chapter makes this Furius to be Aulus Furius of Antium; but as he was a poet held in high esteem, and one whom Virgil largely imitated (see Macrob. Saturn. vi. 1), it has been assumed that "Furii Antiatis," in the lemma to Gallius' chapter, is a corrupt reading (Weichert, Poët. Lat. p. 350 sqq.). Whatever the merits of Furius of Antium may have been, it is possible he may have used the expressions Gallius quotes, and they would not be more or worse blemishes than one might find in most poems of the same length (his Annals extended to upwards of eleven books); and I see no good reason for supposing Furius Bibaculus to be meant. It is curious however that one of the affectations ascribed to the poet Gallius refers to, is "quod terram in lutum versam 'lutescere' dixerit." If Bibaculus were the author of this expression we might imagine that it had stuck to his name, and that Horace uses the expression 'luteum caput' as referring to this proverbial reproach. What else is known of him will be found in his life in the Dict. Biog.; the author of which notice thinks Horace might have shown more respect and forbearance towards the aged Furius. He ascribes his ridicule to various possible motives, principally perhaps to the circumstance that Furius' writings "were stuffed with insults against the Caesars" (see Tacit. Ann. iv. 34), and Catullus he thinks incurred Horace's hostility for the same reason. But Catullus is only once mentioned in Horace, and there no hostility is shown towards him (see above v. 19, n.). And if Furius was so abusive in his attacks upon Augustus, Horace's patron and friend, there would have been no cause for surprise if he had handled him more severely than he has done. But Augustus, like Julius Caesar, passed over those sort of attacks with contempt, and we need not suppose Horace was much influenced by them; though we may believe that the opponents of the Caesars would be among the most prominent of Horace's detractors, to whom he is here replying.
Q. HORATII FLACCI

SATIRARUM

LIBER SECUNDUS.

SATIRE I.

C. TREBATIUS TESTA was a jurisconsult of eminence and a man of honour. He was in the confidence of Augustus, and was consulted by him on legal matters (see the notice of him in Dict. Biog.). Horace seems to have been well acquainted with him, though he was many years younger than Trebatius, and it is said that he was dead when this Satire was written. I am inclined to doubt this, for though it is possible Horace may have used the old man's name though he was dead, it is more natural to suppose that he did so when he was alive. The Satire is placed by the chronologists after all the others of the second book. Franke argues from the allusion in v. 15 to the Parthians, that it must have been written in A.U.C. 724, when, after the battle of Actium, Augustus was in Asia settling the affairs of the East (see C. i. 26, Int.). I think this is a weak foundation for his assumption. As I have said before, the conquest of the Parthians was a subject the Romans of this period had continually before them, and to allude to the wounds of the Parthian prostrate on the field of battle ("aut labentis equo descripta vulnera Parthi") would have been more natural at almost any time than when Augustus was carrying on peaceful negotiations with that people, without any immediate intention or prospect of coming to blows with them. That the Satire was written after the eighth of the first book is plain, because a verse is repeated from that poem in this (v. 22). Horace writes however as if he were just beginning his career (v. 60), a tiro full of the impulses of youth, and resisting the superior wisdom of his elder. As this is done only to keep up a little humour in the scene, no particular inference as to time can be drawn from it. Because Caesar is called 'invictus' (v. 11), Kirchner supposes the Satire could not have been written till after the death of M. Antonius and the final establishment of Augustus' power. He therefore assumes the date A.U.C. 726, which I believe to be much too late.

Horace pretends to lay before the old lawyer a case for his opinion, and asks what he had better do to meet the malevolence of his enemies. Trebatius advises him to cease from writing, which Horace says is impossible. He was born to write, and must do it. He has no capacity for heroic subjects, and has a passion for imitating Lucilius, to whom he pays a graceful compliment by the way. Trebatius warns him that he runs the risk of being frozen to death by his great friends, or of legal penalties for libel. But trusting in the goodness of his cause he sets these dangers at defiance, and resolves to indulge his inclination. It is not easy to suppose that a satire written in this strain was quite the last that Horace composed; and it might be supposed, not unreasonably, that it followed at no great distance of time the eighth of the first book, from which Trebatius quotes and not from any in the second book, from which he might as easily and more naturally have quoted if they had been written at the time; for that they were published as soon as written, and not for the first time when they were collected in books, is sufficiently evident.
ARGUMENT.

Some men think my satire too severe, others think it wants power. Tell me, Trebatius, what am I to do? Keep quiet. What, not write at all? That is my advice. Well certainly it would be better; but I can get no rest. Then go and swim the Tiber, or drink freely over night; or, if you must write, write of Caesar's renown, and you will get your reward. Good father, I have no strength for that: the battle-field is not a fit theme for every one. But you may write of his virtues and his fortitude, as Lucilius wrote of Scipio's. So I will when opportunity offers. But Caesar is only to be approached at the proper time. Stroke him clumsily and like a spirited horse he kicks. But how much better is this than to libel buffoons and prodigals, and so make an enemy of every body. What am I to do? Every man has his taste, and mine is to string words together, as Lucilius did. He trusted all his secret thoughts to his books: in prosperity or adversity he made them his friends; so that there you see the man's life drawn out as in a picture. Him the humble poet of Venusia follows. But I attack no one without provocation: why should I? I desire peace, but woe to the man that rouses me. He'll suffer for it, and find himself the talk of the town. And this is in the course of nature. Every animal defends itself with its own proper weapons. The long and short of it is I must write whether I am to die presently or in a quiet old age, rich or poor, at home or an exile, whatever or wherever I may be. Young man, I fear your life is not worth much: your great friends will freeze you to death. Why, were Laelius and Scipio offended with Lucilius when he attacked all the great men of his day, sparing none but the virtuous? Nay, they loved him and lived with him most familiarly. I may be much beneath Lucilius in wealth and genius; but I too have illustrious friends, and if any one thinks to put his teeth into me he will find himself mistaken. Do you object to that, Trebatius? No, I do not. But I must remind you that if any man write scurrilous verses against another the law allows him a remedy. I grant you, scurrilous: but what if they are good and proper verses, and the person worthy to be exposed? Why then the court will laugh at the joke, and you will come off scot free.

"Sunt quibus in satira videor nimis acer et ultra Legem tendere opus; sine nervis altera quidquid Composui pars esse putat, similique meorum

1. Sunt quibus—videor] Bentley prefers 'videor' to 'videor,' and the MSS. and editions are divided. But Horace had no doubt in his mind those particular opponents, on some of whom he had retorted in S. 10 of the last book, and this being the case the indicative mood is wanted rather than the subjunctive (see C. i. 1. 3. n., and compare S. i. 4. 24: "Quod sunt quos genus hoc minime juvat"). I do not agree with Orelli that 'tendere opus' is a metaphor taken from the stretching of the strings of a lyre. Horace says he is charged with carrying his work, or straining it, beyond the license properly allowed to satire, and that is all. The notion of a metaphor taken from Orelli's source would lead to confusion in respect to the next word 'nervis,' which might be supposed to be taken from the same idea. It merely means 'nerve,' 'vigour.' See S. i. 10. 53, n. As to 'deduci,' see S. i. 10. 44,n.

7. Optimum erat.] Here as below (v. 16) the imperfect indicative is used where the subjunctive might be expected. The Greeks in similar cases sometimes used the imperfect indicative without ἄρα, where the usual construction required that word.
Ter uncti Transnanto Tiberim] See S. i. 6. 123, n. The language is a little in the style of a 'lex.' 'Sub noctem' means immediately after nightfall. See Epod. ii. 44, n. S. i. 7. 109. Epp. ii. 2. 169. It appears from Cicero's letters to Trebatius that he was a great swimmer, and Cicero describes himself as having gone home from his house one night "bene potus seroque" (ad Fam. vii. 22). He may therefore have lived pretty freely.
10. rapit] Bentley, with no authority worth consideration, substitutes 'capit,' and thereby weakens the sentence. There is force in 'rapit,' 'hurries you on like a torrent.'
13. quivis] This corresponds to ὅ τρυχών in Greek.
14. fracta percutentes cuspide] Plutarch, in his life of Marius (c. 25), relates how, on the occasion of a battle with the Cimbri, he altered the spears of the soldiers in such a way that they could not be used to the enemy. He says that the spear-heads were formerly fastened to the shaft by two iron nails, and that Marius removing one substituted for it a wooden peg, which would give way when the spear struck the shield, where it would stick and drag along the ground. As early as the year a.u.c. 715 Augustus was engaged in putting down disturbances in Gaul, and Agrippa was sent there by him two years afterwards. At sundry times between that and his victory at Actium he was engaged in the same quarter, as Franke has shown from the historians; and he included his victories over the Gauls in the first of his three days' triumphs a.u.c. 723 (Dion Cass. li. 21). For his statement about the Gauls therefore Horace has sufficient foundation. The Parthians falling under blows inflicted by the arms of Augustus, is a picture he draws from his own imagination; for the first time Augustus came in contact with the Parthians was in a.u.c. 724, when, after the battle of Actium and the taking of Alexandria, he went into Asia and Syria, and there Tircates fled to him for protection from Phraates (see C. i. 26, Introduction). Not a blow was struck, nor did he encounter any Parthian force at all, then or at any subsequent time. On 'labentis equo,' see C. i. 1. 39, n.
16. potera] See above, v. 7. As to 'fortem,' see what is said of 'Fortitudo' on C. S. v. 57.
17. Scipiadam ut sapiens Lucilius.] Virgil uses this form (Georg. ii. 170), "Scipiadas duros bello." As the Elder Scipio had Ennius to praise him (see C. iv. 8), so the younger had Lucilius, who was his intimate friend, and who served under him in the Numantine War. There is no necessity for supposing that Lucilius wrote a separate poem on the exploits of Scipio, though it is not improbable that he did so.
'Sapiens' is applied to the poet as 'doctus' is elsewhere. See note on C. i. 1. 29.
Cum res ipsa feret. Nisi dextro tempore Flacci Verba per attentam non ibunt Caesaris aurem, Cui male si palpare recalcitrat undique tutus."
"Quanto rectius hoc quam tristi laedere versu
Pantolabum securam Nomentannumque nepotem,
Cum sibi quisque timet, quamquam est intactus, et odi!
"Quid faciam? Saltat Milonius, ut semel icto Accessit fervor capiti numerosque lucerns.
Castor gaudet equis, ovo prognatus eodem
Pugnis; quot capitum vivunt, totidem studiorum
Milia: me pedibus delectat claudere verba
Lucili ritu nostrum melioris utroque.
Ille velut fides arcana sodalibus olim
Credebat libris, neque si male cesserat unquam
Decurrens alio, neque si bene; quo fit ut omnis
Votiva pateat veluti descripta tabella
Vita senis. Sequor hunc, Lucanus an Apulus ancesp:

18. dextro tempore] See below, S. 4. 4:
"cum te sic tempore laevo Interpellarim."
24. Milonius.] When the Scholiasts know nothing about a man of this sort they usually call him a 'scurra,' a parasite, a low fellow who has no respect for himself, who lets himself out at the price of a dinner to entertain rich people and their guests with buffoonery and small talk. This man, as soon as the wine gets into his head, would get up and dance before the company, the lowest proceeding in the eyes of a Roman that could be imagined. Cicero (pro Mur.
c. 6) says it is wrong in Cato to call a Roman consul a 'dancer:' "Nemo fere salat sobrius, nisi forte insanit," and he calls it "omnia vitiorem postremum."
'Icto,' in this sense of 'wine-struck,' is expressive, but does not occur elsewhere. It is a Greek notion. Juvenal graphically describes the effect of tipsiness in doubling the candles and putting every thing out of its place (vi. 304):—
"Cum bibitur concha, cum jam vertigine
tectum
Ambulat, et geminis exsurgit mensa lucern-is."
26. Castor gaudet equis.] This difference in the tastes of Castor and his brother is expressed in one line of the Iliad (iii. 237), Κάστωροι θ' ἵπποδαμον καὶ πίξ ἀγαθὰν
Πολύνεικα. On what follows the Scholiasts quote the well known sentence of Terence, "Quot homines tot sententiae; suus cuique mos" (Phormio, ii. 4. 14).
28. claudere] See S. i. 10. 59. Out of the common compliment in the next line with which Rutgersius (Lect. Ven. p. 362) compares Lucretius (iii. 1038):—
"Lumina sis oculis etiam bonus Ancu' re-liquit,
Qui melior multis quam tu fuit, improbe, rebus," the Scholiasts have extracted an allusion to Lucilius' ancestral connexion with Cn. Pompetius, whose great uncle he is said to have been. The description of Lucilius' affection for his books, his companions in cheerfulness and in sorrow, to whom he communicated as to sympathizing friends his most secret thoughts, and through whom his whole inner life was laid open to the world, is graceful and touching. It must have satisfied any reasonable person who had been disposed to quarrel with Horace for his remarks on the old poets.
33. Votiva—tabella.] On the practice of hanging up a picture in the temples to commemorate escape from shipwreck, see
C. i. 5, 12. n. It was probably not confined to sailors. Juvenecius says, I do not know on what authority, it was commonly done by people on recovering from sickness or escaping from danger.
34. Vita senis.] Lucilius, the date of whose death is not certain, but who is said to have died in his forty-sixth year, A.U.C.
Nam Venusinus arat finem sub utrumque colonus,
Missus ad hoc pulsis, vetus est ut fama, Sabellis,
Quo ne per vacuum Romano incurreret hostis,
Sive quod Apula gens seu quod Lucania bellum
Incutteret violenta. Sed hic stilus hanc petet ulro

651, is here called old only in point of time, as in Epp. (ii. 1. 56), "Auffert Pacuvius
docti famam senis Accius alti," and above
(S. i. 10. 67), "poetarum seniorum turba;" and as Aristophanes is called by Persius
(i. 124), "praegrandis senex."

Lucanus an Apulus aemps: ] See C. iii.
4. 9, n. 'Aemps' I think with Heindorf is neuter. 'Sub' signifies 'close up to,' where 'sub' has its original meaning 'up,' and the 'sense of 'to' belongs to the accusative termination, not to the preposition' (Key's L. G. 1374, note). As to 'colonus,' see C. ii. 14. 12, n. 'Romano' is used for the Romans, as in Epod. vii. 6, and Tac.
Ann. xii. 58, quoted on S. ii. 5. 63. I do not think 'Romano' would be used for 'Romano agro,' as Orelli suggests, though in respect to the provinces and inferior states of Italy that form of expression is used, as the examples he quotes from Cicero's orations against Verres. The colony of Venusia was formed in A. u. C. 463, the last year of the third Samnite War, when L.
Postumius Megellus and C. Junius Brutus Bubulus were consuls (see Clinton, F. H.).
The town, which was on the borders of Lucania and Apulia, belonged to the Sam-nites, from whom it was taken by Q. Fabius.
(Sabelli was the name given by the Romans to all the tribes which issued from the Sabine stock, of whom the Samnites were
one. See Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. i. 91.) Apulia and Lucania were, at the beginning of this war, independent states in close alliance with the Samnites; but after the first year they found it for their interest to desert those allies and joined the Romans, with whom they continued to unite their forces till the end of the war. Horace's supposition that one or other of those states was meditating or carrying on war with Rome is not therefore strictly accurate; but they were always very doubtful allies, and were glad to assist their old enemies the Greek cities in their resistance to Rome
when they called in the help of Pyrrhus;
and it was not till the fall of Tarentum,
A. u. C. 462, that these, in common with the other southern states of Italy, finally acknowledged the supremacy of Rome, and accepted their freedom from her. It was in consequence of the commanding position of Venusia, in reference to the three nations of the Samnites, Apulians, and Lucanians, that the Romans sent there in the above year (A. u. C. 463) a colony of 20,000 persons.
This place was of great use to the Romans
in the war with Pyrrhus. (See Niebuhr's Lectures, p. 508. Schmitz.) After their reverse at the battle of Heraclea, A. u. C.
474, the remnant of their army retreated to Venusia, and here many found refuge after the defeat of Cannae. There are very few monuments of antiquity or ruins left at Venosa. A marble bust placed upon a column professes to be an ancient bust of Horace; but its authenticity is more than doubtful. Swinburne takes it to be the head of a saint, but observes that the inhabitants have not canonized Horace as the Neapolitans have Virgil. Horace commences this digression meaning to speak humbly of himself as compared with Lucilius, a Roman 'eques,' and continues it perhaps from affection for his native place, and to show that it had done good service and was not to be despised.
The quantity of the second syllable in Venusinus Horace makes short here, and in C. i. 28. 26. Juvenal lengthens it (vi. 167): 'Nec Malo Venusinam quam te,
Cornelia, mater Grachorum,' where, as here,
the humble inhabitant of Venusia is contrasted with the proud matron of Rome.
'Quo no!' (v. 37) is an unusual expression,
in which 'quo' is redundant.

39. Sed hic stilus hanc petet ulro)
On this use of 'sed' see C. iv. 4. 22, n.
'Ultr' means here wantonly, without provention or cause. (See C. iv. 4. 51, n.)
The MSS. vary as usual between 'destrigere' and 'distringere.' See C. iii. i.
17, n. Orelli prefers 'distringere,' Heinddorf 'distringere.' Having adopted the latter form in the above passage, I do so here, without feeling quite certain which is right. The same variation occurs in the MSS. in Caesar (B. G. i. 25). 'Ut peresa' is an imitation of the Greek use of 'ως, expressing a wish. From 'at ille' the construction is a little irregular, but the abruptness of the several clauses is well suited to the occasion: 'but for that man that provokes me, he had better not touch me, I cry; he'll suffer if he does,' &c. It spoils the sentence to put 'melius—clamo' in a parenthesis, as Bentley does, so that 'illi'
may govern 'flebit.'
Quemquam animantem et me veluti custodiet ensis
Vagina tectus; quem cur distinguere coner
Tutus ab infestis latronibus? O pater et rex Jupiter, ut pereat positum rubigine telum,
Nec quisquam noceat cupido mihi pacis! At ille
Qui me commorit,—melius non tangere! clamor;
Flevit et insignis tota cantabitur urbe.
Cervius iratus leges minitatur et urnam,
Canidia Albuti quibus est inimica venenum,
Grande malum Turius, si quid se judice certes.
Ut quo quisque valet spectos terrae, utque

47. Cervius iratus — urnam.] Comm.
        Cruq. is the only one of the Scholiasts who gives any account of this man. He says:
        "Cervius Ascanii libertus calumniator accussavit Ca. Calvinum lege de Sicarils." Estré, following Lambinus, thinks we should read Servius, and that the person meant is Servius Pola, whom Cicero mentions as a low informer (ad Quintum Frat. ii. 13).
        His friend Coelius, writing to Cicero (ad Fam. viii. 12), mentions the same person as one whom his enemies were trying to enlist to lay an information against him. The person he is said by the Scholiast to have informed against is Ca. Domitianus Calvinus, consul A.U.C. 700. Another Cervius is mentioned below (S. ii. 6), a totally dif-
f erent person. 'Urnam' means the urn into which the judices put their tablets, or that into which their names were put for drawing the jury, as the Scholiasts say.
Either way it is equivalent to 'judicium.'

48. Canidia Albuti, quibus  ] Acron understands this to mean Canidia the daughter of Albutius. Porphyrian says,
"Amphibolice posuit:;' for it may be either
what Acron says or the poison of Albutius:
'hic enim Albutius veneno uxorum suam dicitur peremisse.' Comm. Cruq. takes it the first way, referring to Virgil's "Deiphobe Glauci." (Aen. vi. 36). Duetsner goes farther, and supposes Canidia to have been 'amica Albuti;' that he is identical with the Varus of Epod. v., and had his name, as she hers, from his white hair, which is all more invention. Porphyrian's story may be assumed to be the true one, or like the truth, Albutius being a person notorious for having poisoned somebody. We meet with another Albutius below (S. 2. 67), whom Porphyrian identifies with this person, and says he poisoned his wife because he wanted to marry another woman. There are no grounds for contradicting this assertion,
and but little for believing it.

49. Grande malum Turius.] Of this person we know nothing; but Porphyrian says, "Hic praetor fuit apud quem accu-satus est a Cicerone Verres Hortensio de-defendente." On that occasion M. Aelianus Glabrio was praetor. Comm. Cruq., in a note of which the text is very corrupt, calls him C. Marius Turius, and says he was 'judex corruptissimus,' that he presided at Verres' trial, and gave out tablets of different colours, that he might know which of the judices voted according to his wishes,
—which is clearly all taken from a misunderstanding of the words Cicero puts into the mouth of Hortensius (Divin.
c. 7). The words "magnus ille deensor et amicus eis" (i. e. of Verres), by which Cicero means Hortensius, the Scholiast applies to Turius. Asconius, on the above chapter of Cicero, has a note which may have led to the confused statements of the Scholi-asts: "Terentius Varro consobrinus frater Hortensii reus ex Asia apud L. Furius praettorium primo de pecuniis repetundis, deinde apud P. Leutulum Suram est accusatus absolutusque est a Q. Hortensio, qui cor-ruptis judicibus hunc metum ad junxit ad gratiam ut discoloribus cernis insignitas judices tabellas acciperent," &c., where perhaps for Furius we should read Turius, though Cruquius prefers changing Horace's Turius into Furius, which the metre will not allow. Doering, however, follows him.
As praetor, Turius could not be called judex. The threat has reference most probably to a 'cusa privata,' an action at law, in which Turius might act as judex. (See Dict. Ant., art. 'Judicium.') "Si quis se judice certet" is the reading of Lambinus and the editions of the sixteenth century.
'Si quid—certet' is that of Ven. 1483 and others of the earliest editions. The reading of the text, Fea says, is in the Venetian edition of 1481. It is supported by the best MS. authority, and Bentley has done well to restore it to the text.

50. Ut, quo quisque valet,] In what Imperet hoc natura potens, sic collige mecum:
Dente lupus, cornu taurus petit: unde nisi intus
Monstratum? Scaevae vivae cum crede nepoti Matrem; nil faciet sceleris pia dextera: mirum,
Ut neque calcù lupus quemquam neque dente petit bos;
Sed mala tollet anum vitiato mole cicuta.
Ne longum faciam: seu me tranquilla senectus
Exspectat seu Mors atris circumvolat alis,
Dives, inops, Romae, seu fors ita jussisset, exsul,
Quisquis erit vitae scribam color.” “O puer, ut sis
Vitalis metu et majorum ne quis amicus
Frigore te feriat.” “Quid, cum est Lucilius ausus
Primus in hunc operis componere carmina morem, Detrahare et pellem, nitidus qua quisque per ora follows it is Horace’s purpose to show that it is a law of nature that every one should use the means of defence that are given him, and he is only acting on this law when he employs satire in self-defence. ‘Unde’ in v. 52 belongs to ‘monstratum,’ as in the next Satire, v. 31, “Unde datum sentis.”

Some punctuate the words ‘unde, nisi intus monstratum?’ ‘so as to mean ‘how should they unless it were suggested from within?’
says he was a luxurious liver, and poisoned his mother because she lived longer than he liked, which we may learn from the text without his help. Acron says he was given to magic arts; and Porphyrian quotes by way of illustration a passage from a speech of Cicero, not extant, on behalf of Scaurus:
“Libertus patronum non occidit sed duobus digitulis gulae oblitis.” What Horace says is, that Scaeva, like other animals, resorted to the means most natural to him,
which were not cold steel, to which cowards have an aversion, but poison. ‘Mirim, ut neque,’ &c., ‘Strange yes, as strange as that the wolf does not kick nor the ox bite.’

58. sua Mors atris circumvolat alis.]
The representations of Death in the works of art that have come down to us are very few, as might be expected. From medals, coins, seals, rings, &c., the figure of Death would be banished, as Spence says (Poly-metis, p. 260), because it would be unsuitable and of ill omen; and of ancient pictures we have few remaining. In those probably the representations of the poets were copied, or those which we find in the poets are copied from them, and this of death hovering over a man with dark wings looks very like the representation of a painting. Seneca describes Death with many wings:

“Mors alta axidos oris hiatus Pandit et omnes explicat alas.”

(Oedipus, Act i. Chor.)

60. Quisquis erit vitae scribam color.] This loose collocation of words is not uncommon in Horace. I do not know what force he saw in it, but he must have preferred it.

This sentence illustrates the rule respecting verbs of fearing, that they ‘have the subjective with ‘ne’ if the object be not desired, with ‘ut’ if it be desired’ (Key’s L. G. 1186), to which the note is “observe that the Latin inserts a negative where the English has none, and vice versa.” Persius has imitated this passage (S. i. 107):

“Sed quid opus teneras mordaci radere vero Auriculas? Vide sis ne majorum tibi forte
Limina frigescant.”

64. Detrahare et pellem.] Compare
Epp. i. 16. 44:

“Sed videt hunc omnis domus et vicinia tota Introrsum turpem speciosum pelle de-cora.”

Each of the Scipiones had a Laelius for his intimate companion. This is C. Laelius Sapiens, the friend of P. Scipio Africanus Minor, and well known through Cicero’s treatises ‘de Senectute’ and ‘de Amicitia,’ in the former of which he is a listener, in the latter the principal speaker. As to the following verse see C. iv. 8. 18, n. Lucilius was on terms of close intimacy with these two friends.
Cedert, introrsum turpis, num Laelius aut qui Duxit ab oppressa meritum Karthagine nomen,
Ingenio offensi aut laeso doluere Metello
Famosisque Lupo cooperto versibus? Atqui
Primores populi arripuit populumque tributim,
Scilicet uni aequus virtutis atque ejus amicis.
Quin ubi se a volgo et scena in secreta remorant
Virtus Scipiacae et mitis sapientia Laeli,
Nugari cum illo et discincti ludere donec
Decoqueretur olus soliti. Quidquid sum ego, quamvis
Infra Lucili censum ingeniumque, tamen me

67. Metello] Q. Caecilius Metellus, who had the cognomen Macedonicus given him for his successes against Andricus, the pretender to the throne of Perseus, was a political opponent of Scipio; but it need not be supposed it was on this account that Lucilius satirized him. Horace's way of mentioning the subject is against that supposition. He means to say Scipio and Laelius were not offended at Lucilius' wit, nor feared it might turn upon themselves, when they saw him attack Metellus. But if Lucilius had done so because he was an enemy of Scipio, that alone would be a sufficient guarantee against his exercising his wit in an offensive way upon his friend, and Horace's argument would mean nothing. And Metellus' opposition to Scipio in public life was conducted without acrimony, as Cicero says (de Off. i. 25. 87), P. Africanaus und Q. Metellum sine acerbitate dissenso. (See the notice of his life in Dict. Biog. Metellus, No. 5.)

68. Lupo] Who Lupus was is not certain. His name appears in many of the fragments of Lucliius, and Persius writes (S. i. 114), "Secuit Lucilius urbem Te, Lupus, te Mucii, et geminum fregit in illis." The Scholiasts speak of him as P. Rutilius Lupus, who was consul A.U.C. 664. But Lucilius died, according to the most probable account, in A.U.C. 651, and in one of his fragments speaks of Lucius as dead; and even if we suppose that Lucilius lived longer than the year 664, his attacks on Rutilius Lupus could not well have begun in the life-time of Scipio, who died forty years before the consulship of Rutilius. The most probable person, therefore, as Torrenius suggests, is L. Cornelius Lentulus Lupus, who was consul A.U.C. 598. What he had done to provoke Lucilius' satire we do not know, but Cicero has preserved a verse of his in which Lupus is mentioned. "Quid de sacrilegis, quid de impii perjurisque dicimus?" asks Cicero, and he proceeds:

"Tubulus si Lucius unquam, Si Lupus, aut Carbo, aut Neptuni filius, ut ait Lucilius, putasset esse Deos, tam perjurus aut tam impurus fuisset?" where, if Lucilius' verse was in accordance with Cicero's argument, Lupus is classed with the perjured and profigate.

Atqui Primores populi] 'Atqui,' which is a form of 'at quin,' means 'but he did, did he not?' 'Tributim,' throughout all the tribes: he attacked the optimates and plebeians, and all without distinction. 'Aequus' means 'favourable to.'

72. Virtus Scipiacae] On this form see above, v. 17. See also S. i. 2. 32, n. on the expression 'viris Scipiacae,' and compare Juv. iv. 81, 'Venit et Crisipi ju- cunda senectus.' Laelius, as above mentioned, had the cognomen Sapiens given him, and any one who reads Cicero's treatise that bears his name will understand Horace's epithet 'mitis.' It would have been worth while to have been present at the scene Cruquis' Scholiast relates of Laelius running round the dinner-table, and Lucilius pursuing him with a napkin to flag him. Lucilius was born A.U.C. 606, and Scipio died A.U.C. 625. He was therefore but a boy when he thus played with these friends; and if, as Horace's language implies, he wrote satires in Scipio's lifetime, they were probably the mere interperete sallies of youth. But Horace may be mistaken. The fare of these great men was of the simplest kind. (See note on S. i. 6. 115.)

75. Infra Lucili censum] Horace had before intimated (v. 34, n.) that he, a poor man's son, born in a provincial town, was not to be compared with Lucilius, a Roman citizen, who was rich and had a fine house in the Forum.
Cum magnis vixisse invita fatebitur usque
Invidia, et fragili quærens illidere dentem
Offendet solido; nisi quid tu, docte Trebat, Dissentis." "Equidem nihil hine diffindere possum.

Sed tamen ut monitus caveas, ne forte negoti
Incutiatur tibi quid sanctarum inscitia legum:
Si mala condiderit in quem quis carmina, jus est
Judiciumque." "Esto, si quis mala; sed bona si quis
Judice condiderit laudatus Caesare? si quis Opprobris dignum latraverit, integer ipse?"

78. nisi quid tu.] This is equivalent to saying, 'this is what I think, Trebatius; but I shall be glad to defer to your opinion if you differ from me.'

79. nihil hinc diffindere possum.] This was the reading of Comm. Crv.; for he explains it thus: "Infirmare, mutare, differe, utitur Trebatius juris antiqui verbo. Praetor enim solebat dicere 'hie dies diffissus esto.'" Porphyrius's note in Ascensius' text is "diffingere; legitim etiam diffiere," which I take to mean 'diffindere,' the usual mark over the 'i' being omitted. There are more readings in the MSS. and editions here than in almost any other verse of Horace. They vary in the first place between 'hinc' and 'hic,' and for the verb they have 'diffundere,' 'diffindere,' 'defin gere,' 'defindere,' 'diffindere,' 'diffingere,' 'diffingere,' 'defringere.' Fea says the balance of MSS. and editions is in favour of 'diffindere,' though he prefers 'diffundere.' Bentley argues for 'diffingere' in the sense in which it is used in C. iii. 29. 47: "Diffinget infectumque reddet;" and Heindorf agrees with him. The oldest editions have that word, and Lambinus was the first to introduce 'diffindere.' It will be seen that the Scholiast says 'diffundere' is a legal term; but as such it is only used in the sense of adjourning business to another day, and was peculiar to the praetor's functions; that sense too has no place here. (See Forcelli.)

Fea, however, with whom Orelli agrees, thinks Horace jocally puts a legal term in Trebatius' mouth, because he was a lawyer, but without meaning it should have more than its primary signification, which would be 'to cut off,' and so Trebatius means there is no part of what Horace has said that he wished to cancel or separate from the rest, as the bad is separated from the good. I prefer this word to any of the others, but it is clear it has no technical sense here; and as to the supposed joke, it does not strike me very forcibly. Doering reads 'diffindere,' but supposes it to have the meaning of 'secare' above (S. i. 10. 15, and Ep. i. 16. 42); that is, 'to decide; and Trebatius, therefore, according to him, says he cannot decide the question from the premises, and Horace has put before him ('hinc'). Cicero has 'dissolvere' in a sense something like this (de Orat. ii. § 236): "Orator odiassas res saepe quas argumento dilui non facile est joco risuque dissolverit." I think Doering's suggestion is worthy of consideration.

80. Sed tamen] If Doering's interpretation of 'diffindere' be correct, Trebatius means 'though I cannot pretend to decide the case you put before me, I think it right to warn you,' &c. If the other be Horace's meaning, Trebatius says 'though I have no fault to find with your remarks, still,' &c. By the XII Tables, the writing of scurrilous verses was among the few offences that were punishable with death. See Dict. Ant., art. 'Injuris,' and compare Ep. i. 153. There was a 'lex Cornelia de injuris,' which probably included the offence of writing scurrilous verses. But Augustus himself (after this Satire was written) appears to have proposed a law on the subject, as we learn from Suetonius (Octav. c. 55): "Id modo censuit cognoscentum de his qui libellos aut carmina ad infamiam cujuspiam sno vel alieno nomine edant." When Tre batius says there is 'jus judiciumque,' he means that there is law and also there are legal proceedings for this case. 'Ne forte' is used as in C. iv. 9. 1, where see note, and compare Ep. i. 1. 13, 18. 58; ii. 1. 208.

With Heindorf I understand 'sanctarum' to be a participle, 'quae sanctumur.' 'San cire legem' was to affix the penalty to a 'lex,' and so give it effect.

35. latraverit] There is a good deal in what Bentley says in favour of 'laceraverit,' which word he adopts. Lambinus had some MS. authority for it, and Heindorf adopts it. But 'latraverit' appears in nearly all the MSS. and editions, and the Scholiasts had that word, which is less likely to have been invented than the other. When Bentley tries to support his position by separating ‘opprobriis’ from ‘dignum,’ and taking it with ‘laceraverit,’ leaving ‘dignum’ to stand alone, he only shows his own weakness. ‘Latro’ is used as a transitive verb in Epod. v. 53, and Epp. i. 2. 66, and therefore it may be here, which Bentley does not deny.
“Solventur risu tabulae, tu missus abibis.”

86. Solventur risu tabulae,] Comm. Cruq. was as perplexed with this expression as modern commentators. He says “vel subsellia; vel leges xii tabularum; vel judices non erunt in eum severi.” Acron explains ‘tabulae’ by ‘subsellia,’ by which he means that the benches of the judges would split with their laughter if an action were brought in such a case, like that expression in Juvenal (i. 13): “assiduo ruptae lectore columnae.” The second of the above explanations (“leges xii tabularum”) is adopted by Doering, Dillenbr., and Zeuni. Lambinus inclines to the same, or thinks ‘tabulae’ may be put for the judges, as representing the laws. Orelli takes ‘tabulae’ for the ‘tabellae judiciae,’ the voting tables, referring to the sentence quoted above (on v. 79) from Cic. de Orat. The general meaning is clear enough, that the matter will be treated as unworthy of serious consideration; the judges will laugh at the joke and acquit the defendant. I think with Orelli that the ‘tabulae’ are the tablets by which they declared their votes, and that Trebatius is meant to say that the votes of the judges will be decided by the amusement of the scene, or else that the severity of their votes will be melted by the fun.

SATIRE II.

Of Ofella, the person into whose mouth Horace puts the chief part of the precepts contained in this Satire, we know no more than we may gather from the Satire itself, that in Horace’s youth he was the owner of an estate near Venusia, and that his property was taken from him and made over to one of the veteran soldiers named Umbrenus (v. 133), and that he afterwards rented, as ‘colonus,’ a farm on that estate which was once his own. This transfer took place in all probability when the troops returned to Italy after the battle of Philippi, a.u.c. 712, at which time (among several other districts) the Venusinus ager was distributed among the soldiers. It has been supposed that Horace visited his native place, and renewed his acquaintance with Ofella, on his return from Brundusium (see Introduction to S. i. 5, sub fin.). The old man, unchanged by the reverses of fortune, industrious and uncomplaining, exhorting his sons to frugality and contentment, is a pleasant picture, and helps by contrast to illustrate the gluttonous and luxurious habits of the city, which, though they had not yet reached the height they came to under the training of Apicius (“qui in ea urbe ex qua aliquando philosophi ut corruptores juventutis abire jussi sunt, scientiam popiniae professus disciplina sua seculum infect.” Sen. Cons. ad Helv. 10), were already very bad. As political activity grew dangerous and diminished, and wealth poured into the city through the increase of commerce and the pillaging of provinces, sensual indulgence grew rapidly. Business ceased and dining began at what we should consider an early hour; and comparatively few of the Romans being men of literary habits, the rich now passed most of their evenings over the table, which was furnished with delicacies and ornaments at an enormous expense. The art of cooking must have been brought to great perfection in the course of that period during which eating and drinking was the chief feature in a Roman's day; but Horace probably had only seen it in its infancy. Juvenal and Martial are more full in their account of it. Flesh, fish, and fowl, and made dishes of every kind, were imported from all quarters. The art of digestion was as much studied as the art of the kitchen, but diseases of course multiplied. Convivial amusements were necessarily invented to beguile these long meals; the science of conversation flourished, and small talk was a trade, professional diners-out ('parasiti') being required to keep the company alive whenever their own resources failed. This deflection from the simplicity of early days is a melancholy feature in the history of the Empire; but it required perhaps a stronger and sterner pen than Horace’s to handle it thoroughly. This Satire, the fourth, and the eighth, throw some light on culinary details; but the vice of gluttony, which must have gone considerable lengths even at this time, might have been more vigorously attacked. It forms no part of the corruptions pointed out for reformation in the odes. Horace himself, though abstemious in his own appetite, dined a good deal with the rich, and may not have thought it expedient or gracious to attack them on such a point.

ARGUMENT.

The value of a moderate fare come learn from me (on the authority of the plain sensible Ofella), not with the glitter of plate in your eyes, but now, before you have broken your fast. He who would judge truly must have an unbiased judgment. (v. 9.) Go, get up your appetite with hunting or ball-play or the quoit, and then see whether you will despise humble fare and reject the drink that is not mingled with Hymettian honey. If the butler is abroad and no fish is to be had, your belly will be content with dry bread and salt. How is this? Why the pleasure of eating does not lie in the savour of the meat, but in yourself. Let labour supply you with sauce. The most tempting dainties give no pleasure to the bloated stomach. Yet scarce any argument will prevent your preferring a peacock to a barn-door fowl, merely because it has a fine tail, and costs more money. How can you tell where that fish was caught? You delight in a mullet of three pounds weight, and yet you must cut it into fragments to serve it to your friends. But why then don’t you like the big lupus? Why, because the one is big by nature, the other small, and you like what is unnatural and rare. The hungry belly, on the other hand, seldom despises a thing because it is common. "I like to see a huge beast stretched out on a huge dish," says the glutton. Blow south winds and rot their dainties! But let them alone, they are as good as rotten already for appetites that want rather stimulants than food. But these luxuries are only of late growth, and some day we shall have roast gulls in fashion. (v. 53.) But moderation is not meanness, and it is of no use to avoid one fault only to fall into another. Avidious puts old fruit and sour wine before his friends, and is stingy of his stinking oil, even on holidays. Which would you rather imitate? Respectability lies in a middle course, avoiding excessive strictness, but equally avoiding a slovenly carelessness. (v. 70.) Now I will tell you the advantages of moderate fare. In the first place it conduces to health, as you can easily tell, if you think how well your food agreed with you till you mixed up all manner of things in your stomach. How pale a man gets up from a mixed supper! Let the belly be oppressed with debauch and the soul is oppressed likewise. Another man takes a hearty supper, goes to bed early, and gets up equal to the duties of the day; and he, if a holiday comes round or sickness or age requires extra indulgence, may indulge himself with impunity: but what can you add to the indulgence you anticipate in your early days? Our ancestors, bent on hospitality, kept their meat till it was high, in hopes of a guest dropping in to share it. Would I had been born in those good old days!

(v. 94.) You do not disregard your character. But what disgrace as well as ruin these luxuries bring upon you! how your relations hate you, and how you will hate yourself when the last as is spent with which you would gladly have bought a rope to hang yourself!

(v. 99.) "But I can afford to be extravagant," says one. Well, if you have more than you want why not give alms, restore temples, contribute to public works? The world is never to go wrong with you, I suppose. But, tell me, you whose enemies shall one day laugh at you, which man is best fitted to meet the chances of fortune, he who seeks great things, or he who is content with a little and huckles on his armour in time of peace to meet the struggle that is coming? As an instance, look at Ofella. When I was a child he was rich, but he lived no more ostentatiously than now that he is poor. He lives on a hired farm, on the estate of which once he was master, and thus he talks to his children: "My fare on ordinary days was nothing but a dried pig's foot and vegetables; and when a friend dropped in we made ourselves merry with a chicken or kid from the farm, and plain fruit for a second course; and then we played and drank and poured libations to Ceres, who made our hearts cheerful and our faces merry. Let Fortune be as hard as she will, how can she rob us? Have we lived in less comfort since the stranger came, my children? Nature made neither him, nor me, nor any one else, perpetual owner of the soil. He has expelled me; he will be driven out in his turn. Now Umbrenus, now Ofella is master. So put on stout hearts and be ready to meet adversity when it comes."

Quae virtus et quanta, boni, sit vivere parvo,
Nee meus hic sermo est, sed quae praecipit Ofella
Rusticus abnormis sapiens crassaque Minerva,

1. boni,] This opening being something like that of C. iii. 2, the word 'boni' has given some colour to the reading "Angustam, amici, pauperiem pati" (see note). It would seem from Fea's various readings that nearly all the old editions read 'bonis,' which I find in Ven. 1463, and Ascensius; 1511. Many MSS. also have that reading. Fea adopts it; but, as Orelli says, it probably arose out of the 's' that follows. All his MSS., and all the Parisian (Pottier's) and the Blandinian, all Torrentius but one of a late date, five of Lambinus, in short nearly all the best have 'boni.'

2. qua praecipit Ofella] The received reading in Bentley's time, and that of all the old editions, was 'quem praecipet Ofellus.' Torrentius preferred, but did not edit, 'qua,' which he found in three of his MSS. Bentley was the first to take it into the text. I am surprised to find Heindorf and Dillenbr. retain 'quem.' Bentley also conjectured the reading 'Ofella' for 'Ofellus:' the former being a known Roman name, a cognomen of the Lucretii; and the other being met with neither in history nor in inscriptions. Orelli has found the name Bentley suggested in his St. Galle MS., and it is to be regretted that Bentley had not sufficient confidence in his own conjecture to adopt it in his text. He was deterred by the authority of John of Salisbury, who mentions one 'Ofellus' as the author of a homely proverb about superstitious people who trusted in dreams. The Scholiasts had 'Ofellus,' and every edition but Orelli's has the same, as far as I know. I have no doubt 'Ofella' will now become the unquestioned reading. Estré adopts it without hesitation.

3. abnormis sapiens crassaque Minerva,] A man wise without rule and of plain mother wit. Cicero (de Amicit. c. 5) uses the expression "agamus pingui Minerva" as a proverbial one. Orelli's idea that the proverb is derived "a textura rudi," I do not understand. Minerva was the goddess of wisdom, and 'crassa Minerva' therefore means a coarse kind of wisdom. (See Mr. Long's note on the above passage of Cicero.) 'Abnormi,' the reading of some of the best MSS., is quite out of place. 'Cressa Minerva' is proverbial; 'abnormi Minerva' is not so.
Discite, non inter lances mensasque nitentes
Cum stupet insanis acies fulgoribus et cum Acclinis falsis animis meliora reesusat,
Verum hic impansi mecum disquirire. Cur hoc?
Dicam si potero. Male verum examinat omnis Corruptus judex. Leporem sectatus equove

4. inter lances mensasque nitentes] The wealthy Romans had already learnt to fill their rooms with costly furniture, and to make a display of their plate, whether in the shape of useful or ornamental vessels, and the same fashion prevailed in the provinces, from whence in fact it must have been imported. One of Cicero's charges against Verres (ii. 4. 16) is, that he robbed one Diocles of all his plate, "ab hoc abaci vasa omnia, ut exposita fuerunt, abstitulit." 'Exponere' is the usual word for this display. 'Abaci' were slabs usually of marble, in later times even of silver. Their use was sometimes that of side-boards only. Of the same kind, used in the same way, were the 'Delphicae mensae' mentioned in the same oration of Cicero (c. 58; see Mr. Long's note). Very much of the plate thus displayed was of foreign manufacture and very costly, much of it of great antiquity, and a good deal too taken from Greek and Asiatic temples, and brought to Rome by various conquerors (Marcellus and Mummius in particular), by governors of Verres' school, or by the travelling mercatores, who thus brought home the proceeds of the goods they took abroad. There appears to have been no article in which the Romans showed more extravagance than their tables; and, though this did not come to its height till after the time of Augustus, the text shows that they were then very costly; and Pliny relates of Cicero that he gave a million sesterces for a table of that sort which were called 'orbes.' These consisted of single slabs, sometimes of great diameter. Pliny (xiii. 15) mentions one made of the 'citrus,' a tree of the cypress kind, which was four feet in diameter. These were called 'monopodia,' from their resting on a single stem, usually of ivory. The most expensive were spotted, and Pliny calls them by various names expressive of that appearance, 'tigrinae,' 'pantherinae,' &c. See Becker's Gallus, &c., ii. notes 9, 11. The wood next in value to the citrus was the maple, and such an one Nasidienus entertained his guests at (S. ii. 8. 10). The dishes of the rich were very generally of silver, so that the 'lances' here mentioned would be not only those which appeared upon the 'abaci,' but those also in which the viands were served. 'Lances' is here used as a generic name for dishes; but there were other names, as 'patina,' 'catus,' 'soutula,' 'gabata,' 'paropsis,' all of different shapes and for different uses.

9. Corruptus judex.] Horace likens the man whose judgment is biased by a fine table and good dinner to a judex who has been tampered with. (See C. iv. 9. 39, n.)

— Leporem sectatus equove.] There is some confusion raised in this long sentence by the introduction of the words 'pete cedentem aera disco.' Horace means at first to say 'when you have tired yourself with hunting the hare, with riding an unbroken horse, or (supposing the 'rouger sports are too much for you) with ball play or throwing the discus, and are dry and hungry, then see if you will despise the commonest food, and call for rich mulsum.' Instead of which he says: 'after hunting the hare or wearying yourself with riding, or if (supposing you are only accustomed to Greek sports, and the Roman are too much for you) ball play occupies you or the discus, then throw the discus; but when fatigue shall have banished fastidiousness, and you are dry and hungry, then see if' &c. 'Romana militia' corresponds to what Cicero says (de Nat. Deor. ii. 64): 'exerceramur in venando ad simulitudinem bellica disciplinae.' As may be seen by this passage, the ball play, which was so common an amusement in one shape or other among the Romans, was introduced from Greece, though the Romans had varieties perhaps of their own invention. The most violent form however, 'harpastum,' was borrowed from the Greeks, who also had the severer exercise of football, which the Romans had not. The throwing of the discus likewise was of Greek origin, and belonged to the heroic age. The nature of the discus is seen in the famous statue of the δισάξομενος by Myron, of which casts are common, and of which there is a good copy in the British Museum. A wood-engraving of this statue, and an account of the discus, will be found in Smith's Dict. Antt. The specimen of Greek effeminacy mentioned in C. iii. 24, 57, the 'trochus,' is more to the purpose.
Lassus ab indomito, vel si Romana fatigat
Militia assuetum graecari, seu pila velox
Molliter austerum studio fallente laborem,
Seu te discus agit, pete cedentem æra disco;
Cum labor extuderit fastidia, siccus, inanis
Sperne cibum vilem; nisi Hymettia mella Falerno
Ne biberis diluta; Foris est promus et atrum
Defendens piscis hiemat mare: cum sale panis
Latrantem stomachum bene leniet. Unde putas aut
Qui partum? Non in caro nidoré voluptas
Summa sed in te ipso est. Tu pulmentaria quaere Sudando; pinguem vitis albumque neque ostrea than the 'pila' or 'discus,' which were manly amusements enough. But Horace assumes (v. 12) that the man's ball play is rather lazy. Bentley, doubting whether 'extuderit' can bear the meaning here required, reads without authority 'expulerit.'

The Scholiasts and all the MSS. have 'extuderit.' 'Extundo' is no where else used in this sense, but it is a very apt word for the occasion. Hunger beating fastidiousness out of a man represents the power of the one, and the contemptible character of the other, very well.

15. nisi Hymettia mella Falerno. This constituted the drink called 'mulsum,' oliv-aria, which was commonly drunk at the preparatory course called 'gustus' or 'promulsum' (see S. I. 3. 6, n.), the former name being taken from the dishes that were eaten as a whet to the appetite, and the latter from the mulsum that was taken with them.
(Gall. Sc. 9: The Banquet.) The use of the strong Falernian wine for this mixture, in which the usual proportion was four of wine to one of honey, is condemned below,
S. IV. 25. Of the honeys used by the Romans of his day, but not mentioned by Horace (see C. ii. 6. 18, n.) the best was that of Hybla in Sicily; the worst was that of Corsica, mentioned in various epigrams of Martial; 'mulsum' made with which was held to be drink fit only for the vulgar.

16. promus. This was one of the 'ordi-narii' or upper domestic slaves, whose duty it was to take charge of the wine-cellar and larder. He was hence called 'cellarius,' also 'procurator peni,' 'steward of the provisions.' Another name he bore was 'condus,' because he had to take into store ('condere') the provisions that were left or brought in for consumption; and, as the same person who locked up also took out the provisions ('promere'), both names were united in one, 'conduspromus,' as in Plautus (Pseud. ii. 2. 14):

Ps. Conduspromus sum procurator peni.
Hery. Quasi te dicas atriensem. Ps. Immo atriensi impero.'

He therefore had authority over other slaves.
The 'atriens' was one who had charge of the 'atrium,' and was also one of the principal slaves.

17. hiemat mare:] This word is only known to have been used before Horace by Sallust, who was fond of unusual and archaic words. Seneca (Epp. 114) mentions that he says (somewhere not known to us),
'aquis hiemantibus,' and that Arruntius,
the author of a history of one of the Punic wars, and an imitator of Sallust, was always dragging in this word 'hiemare.' Pliny uses it occasionally. Horace's taste was insensibly affected by his study of the Greek poets, and he copied their χαυμάρια, though he may also have seen and approved
more than Seneca does Sallust's 'aquis hiemantibus.' With 'latrantem stomachchum,' compare 'iratum ventrem' (S. ii. 6. 5).
A hungry man is vulgarly said to have a wolf in his belly to this day.

19. Qui partum?] The subject is only to be gathered from the context. 'Whence do you suppose this appetite springs, or how is it got?'

20. pulmentaria quaere] The Scholiasts tell us a story of Socrates, that, when he was taking a long walk, he accounted for his activity by saying δύω συνάγω, 'I am getting sauce for my dinner.'

21. ostrea Nec scarus] These were all served up with the 'gustus' to stir up the appetite. Oysters were eaten raw or dressed.
The 'scarus' was a fish not known in these days. It was rare even among the Romans, and imported from the Aegean sea. (Pliny
Nec scaurus aut poterit peregrina juvare lagois.
Vix tamen eripiam posito pavone velis quin
Hoc potius quam gallina tergere palatum,
Corruptus vanis rerum, quia veneat auro
Rara avis et picta pandat spectacula cauda;
Tamquam ad rem attineat quidquam. Num vesceris ista Quam laudas pluma? C hecticum num adest honor idem?
Carne tamen quamvis distat nil, hae magis illam
Imparibus formis deceptum te petere! Esto:
Unde datum sentis lupus hic Tiberinus an alto
Captus hiet, pontesne inter iactatus an annis

ix. 17.) Martial says it was good for the stomach, but of poor flavour. The 'lagois' is described by the Scholiast as 'avis leporini coloris;' beyond which we know nothing about it. 'Ostrea' is here used as a disyllable. Of the other things of which the 'promulgis' usually consisted, some are given below (S. 8. 8. sq.). The peacock was a dish lately introduced when Horace wrote. It was first brought into fashion by Q. Hortensius the orator, Cicero's rival, and was for a long time considered an indispensable dish at great entertainments, which leads Cicero (in his cheerful letter to Paetus, quoted on S. i. 3. 6, and C. iii. 16. 21) to call himself a bold man, in that he had entertained Hirtius at dinner and given him no peacock; which however he accounts for by his cook being an indifferent one, and his only lately having taken to giving dinners. 'Ponere' for putting on the table occurs below (S. 4. 14). 'Tergere palatum,' 'to wipe the plate,' is a novel expression. As to 'vanis rerum' see C. iv. 12. 19. n.

28. C hecticum num adest?] This cannot properly be called an hiatus, as Orelli calls it. The 'm' is pronounced with the following word, as is common in Terence. So Lucretius (iii. 1085): "Sed dum adest quod avemus id exsuperare videtur.'

30. deceptum te petere?] Porphyrian's note (in Asccnius' text) is "Carnem tamen hanc magis quam illam petere non deseb, which shows that his reading was 'petere;' and this reading Torrentius adopts from more than one of his MSS., "in uno atque altero scriptum inveni." Orelli finds it in his St. Gallen MS. with 'patef' superscribed, as a correction of 'patet' in a, and as the only reading in c. These three are excellent MSS., and the authority for the reading is now ample. As early as Acron and Comm. Cruq. the word 'patef' had got into the text, probably because the copyists did not perceive that the infinitive 'petere' expressed a feeling of indignation. (See Key's L. G., 1247, note, where it is stated that "this infinitive is dependent on some such phrase as 'credendum est.'"") The editions all have 'illa,' which, on the authority of some of his MSS., since confirmed by Orelli's St. Gallen and Berne, Torrentius changed to 'illam,' making the sense as follows: "to think that, although in the quality of the flesh there is no difference, you should prefer the peafowl to the other, deluded by the superiority of its beauty." According to this reading, which I have adopted as the simplest, 'hac' refers not to the bird last mentioned, but to that which the speaker prefers, or is defending; just as we have 'his' and 'illis' changing places below (36, 37). Orelli, who followed this reading in his first edition, changed his mind, and has edited 'illa' and 'petet' in his second. As to other readings, "quam sudent hie et omnia moliantur interpretes quo verborum constructionem explicat et evolvat, vide si vacat aut copia est apud ipsos" (Bentley, who rejects Torrentius' reading).

31. Unde datum sentis,] The sentence goes on thus: 'be it so; grant that you may be taken in by the eye in the matter of the bird with a fine tail; but what sense can tell you whether such and such a fish was caught in a particular part of the river, or at its mouth, or in the open sea?' This is not a very well chosen question. That part of the river which is meant by 'inter pontes' lies between the Pons Fabricius, which joined the Insula Tiberina with the left bank, and the Pons Sublicius, and between these bridges the Cloaca Maxima emptied itself. It would not require a very keen epicure to distinguish a fish caught in those waters; and the fish taken at sea, if it was the same Ostia sub Tusci? Laudas, insane, trilibrem
Mullum in singula quem minuas pulmenta necesse est.
Ducit te species video: quo pertinet ergo
Proceros odisse lupos? Quia scilicet illis Majorem natura modum dedit, his breve pondus.
Jejunus raro stomachus volgaria tenmit.
"Porrectum magno magnum spectare catino Velem," ait Harpyis gula digna rapacibus. At vos, Praesentes Austri, coquite horum obsonia,—quamquam
Putet aper rhombusque recens, mala copia quando
Aegrum sollicitat stomachum, cum rapula plenus
Atque acidas mavolt inulas. Needum omnis abacta
Pauperies epulis regum; nam vilibus ovis
Nigrisque est oleis hodie locus. Haud ita pridem Galloni praeconis erat acipensere mensa

fish, would be out of season and coarse. The 'lupus' is said to have been of the pike kind.

33. Ostia sub Tusci? ‘Sub’ with the accusative in phrases of place, seems to have the meaning it has in phrases of time, immediately after (see Epod. ii. 44, n.); so that 'sub ostia' would be ‘immediately on entering the mouth.’ But it usually in these phrases follows a verb of motion, and means ‘close up to,’ and if it be so understood here, the verb of motion must be supplied, 'as you approach close up to.' The Tiber is called Tuscus amnis, as (C. i. 20. 5) it is said to be Maecenas' 'paternum flumen,' because it rises in Etruria.

34. Mullum] The mullet was a fish in high estimation for a great number of years. Martial speaks of one of two pounds as the least that should be put upon a fine dish:

"Grandia ne viola parvo chrysandeta mullo;
Ut minimum libras debet habere duas." (xiv. 97.)

This Pliny says was a size it rarely exceeded. Juvenal tells a story of a man who bought a mullet of six pounds at a thousand sesterces for each pound (iv. 15). The bearded mullet, as it was called, was held in highest esteem.

36. Quia scilicet illis] ‘Illis’ does not refer to the more remote object here, but to the nearer, as in v. 27 (see note). ‘Illis’ refers to the mullet.

40. At vos, Praesentes Austri,] ‘Now may ye, O potent south-winds.’ ‘At’ is a particle of exclamation when a sudden emotion is expressed, as mentioned above (Epod. v. 1). The winds are invoked as deities. As to ‘praesens’ in this application, see C. i. 35. 2.

41. Quamquam] ‘Though I need not invoke your help; for the boar and the turbot lose their flavour when the stomach is gorged and seeks stimulants.’

42. rhombus] This fish, if it was the turbot, was not less esteemed by the Romans than by ourselves. The finest were caught in the Adriatic, near Ravenna, whence the fish that caused such a sensation in Juvenal’s story (iv. 37, sqq.) he calls ‘Hadracii spatium admirabile rhombi.’ But it is not certain that we know what fish is meant by the ‘rhombus.’ Respecting ‘rapula’ and ‘inulas,’ see below, S. ii. 51. On the use of eggs at the ‘promul-sis,’ see S. i. 3. 6. The sense in which Horace uses the words ‘pauper’ and ‘rex’ is no where more marked than here (see C. i. 1. 16, and C. i. 4. 14).

47. Galloni praeconis erat acipensere] ‘Hic est qui primus acipenserem convivis apposuit’ (Porph.). This was in the time of Lucilius and of Laelius. A few verses of the former have been preserved by Cicero (de Finn. ii. 8), in which he repeats the indignation of Laelius against this epicure, his own taste being, as we have seen (S. ii. 1. 72, n.), of the simplest kind—

"O lapathe ut jactare necesse est cognitu' cui sis.
In quo Laeliu clamores σοφος ille solebat
Edere compellans grumias ex ordine nostros:"
Infamis. Quid, tunc rhombos minus aequora alebant?
Tutus erat rhombus tutoque ciconia nido
Donec vos auctor docuit praetorius. Ergo
Si quis nunc mergos suaves edixerit assos,
Parebit pravi docilis Romana juventus.
Sordidus a tenui victu distabat, Ofella
Judice; nam frustra vitium vitaveris illud
Si te alio pravum detectoris. Avidienus,
Cui Canis ex vero dictum cognomen adhaeret,
Quinquennes oleas est et silvestria corna,
Ac nisi mutatum parcit defundere vinum, et Cujus odorem olei nequeas perferre, licebit

'O Publ., O gurges Galloni, es homo miser,' inquit,
'Coenasti in vita nunquam bene quam omnia in ista Consumis squilla atque acipensere cum decumano.'

'Acipenser' is said to be a sturgeon. The fish was out of fashion in Pliny's days (N. H. ix. 17). In respect to 'praeconis,' see S. i. 6. 86; n.

50. auctor docuit praetorius.] On this Porphyryon tells us that one Rufus was the first to bring into fashion the eating of young storks; and when he was a candidate for the praetorship (which is a little contradiction, since after Horace he calls him 'praetorius,' but that does not do much matter, the story is equally good), being rejected, the following epigram was made upon him:—

"Cionicarum Rufus iste conditor Hic est duobus elegantior Plancis:
Suffragiorum puncta non tult septem.
Cionicarum populus ultus est mortem."

Who the Planci were we do not know, but they must have stood for some office, and were 'eleganter emuncti,' though Rufus was 'elegantius.' When he lived it is impossible to say; or whether he was the first to introduce the 'rhombus' as well as the 'ciconia,' in which case he deserved well of those who liked good living. The story went out of fashion, as Ofella predicts; and though gulls did not take its place, cranes came into vogue, as Estré has pointed out from Pliny (N. H. x. 23, § 30). See S. i. 8. 87. As to 'auctor,' see C. i. 28. 14; n. The word 'edixerit' is a play upon the 'edictum' of the 'praetor.'

55. pravum detectoris.] Literally, 'turn yourself awry.' Bentley, on the authority of one MS., reads 'pravus.' I see no reason for deserting the received reading, with the weight of authority that it has. — Avidienus,] The Scholiasts have nothing to tell us of this miser. The MSS. are divided between 'ductum' and 'dictum.' In this, as in the last case, either would do.

58. defundere] 'Defundere,' which is the reading of the old editions and many others, as well as some of the best MSS., signifies, as mentioned before, to draw from the 'dolum' into the 'amphora,' 'testa,' or 'cadus' (all the same kind of vessel), in which it was kept till it was fit to drink. When poured from thence into the ' crater' to be mixed for drinking it was said to be 'defusum,' and that is the only word that has any meaning here. This miser's wine was of a poor kind, probably not fit to be bottled in the first instance, but only to be drunk from the 'dolum.' He bottled it, and did not produce it for consumption till it was sour.

59. licebit Ille repotia] On 'licebit,' see Epod. xv. 19. 'Repotia' was a 'coena' sometimes given the day after marriage by the husband. I am not aware that any explanation of the custom is to be met with. The marriage-dinner was given by the husband. As that was usually a scene of nothing but unrestrained merriment, perhaps the religious ceremonies required properly to inaugurate the new life of the married couple, and to propitiate the penates and lares, were usually deferred to this day; and the sobriety of the ' repotia' was probably designed to make amends for the license of the 'coena nuptialis.' The Romans observed their birthdays with much religious accuracy, and with festivities equal to our own. See note on C. iv. 11. 8. They took care on every holiday to have their Ile repotia natales aliosve dierum
Festos albatrus celebret, cornu ipse bilihri
Caulibus instillat, veteris non parcus aceti.
Quali igitur victu sapiens utetur, et horum
Utrum imitabitur? Hac urget lupus, hac canis, aiunt.
Mundus erit qua non offendat sordibus, atque
In neutrām partem cultus miser. Hic neque servis, Albuti senis exemplo, dum munia didit
Saevus erit; nec sic ut simplex Naevius unctam
Convivis præebbit aquam; vitium hoc quoque magnum.
Acerque nunc victus tenuis quae quantaque secum
Afferat. Imprimis valeas bene: nam variae res
Ut noceant homini credas memor illius escac
Quae simplex olim tibi sederit; at simul assis
Misceris elixa, simul conchylia turdis, toga especially clean. The ordinary toga was not dyed. The natural whiteness of the wool was increased by the process of cleaning, in which it was rubbed with of different kinds of fuller's earth ("creta ful lonis"), and also exposed to steams of sul phur, which removed stains of any kind.

'Albatus,' therefore, signifies in a toga which has just come from the 'fullo.' It was usual for persons who were canvassing for office to have their toga unusually whitened with an extra supply of 'creta,' whence they were called 'candidati.' Theophrastus (Charac. p.3. μελοφυλαγιας) speaks of mean persons as πρὸς τοὺς γνωσίς δια τέμνουσας δῶς τὸ ιμάτιον αὐτοῦ ἂν πολλῆς γῆν ἵνα μη ρωτανίμητα ταύτη.
61. cornu ipse bilihri] The 'cornu' was the horn vessel in which the oil was kept. Instead of having a crucet or small vessel suited to the dinner-table, such as wealthy people usually had of silver and others of cheaper material, he would bring down the big horn, and with his own hand, lest others should be too liberal, drop the smallest quantity of oil upon the cabbage, while of his old vinegar, which would turn his guests, if he had any, from the dish, he was free enough. So that the reading
'largus' for 'parcus' which Gesner supports is out of place. It has little authority.
64. aiunt.] τὸ λέγωμεν, 'as the saying is.' It was perhaps a common proverb, though not now met with elsewhere.
The old editions, without any exception I believe (till Lambinus), and Porphyryon, have 'angit' for 'aiunt.' Yes says it appears in all his MSS., which is hardly credible. He edits 'angit.' All Cruquius' but two of little value had 'aiunt.' Torrentius edits 'angit,' but approves of 'aiunt,' on the authority of his best MSS. The majority of the Parisian MSS., and Orelli's three best, have 'aiunt.' 65. Mundus erit qua non] 'A man will be decent so far as ("qua") he does not offend by meanness, and is on neither hand sordid in his way of living.' 67. Albuti senis] See S. i. 48, n. What more is given by the Scholiasts is hardly worth repeating, for it is only drawn from the text as any one may see. They say the savage old man used to flog his slaves before they did wrong, "because," said he,
"when you do wrong I may not be at leisure to flog you." 'Dido,' to distribute, is different in sense and etymology from
'divido.' The latter is connected with 'iduo,'
'idus' (C. iv. 11. 16, n.), the former with
'do.' 'Dido' is commonly used by Lucretius.
Of Naevius nothing is known. Lam binus,t to illustrate the character Horace gives of him, refers to the story told by Plutarch in his life of Julius Caesar (c. 17)
of Valerius Leo, who put before the Di tator some asparagus covered with ointment instead of oil. Such 'simplicity,' amounting to an indifference to the decencies of life, and a want of consideration for others, which some people almost look upon as a virtue, Horace very properly describes as a great vice.'
Dulcia se in bilem vertent stomachoque tumultum
Lenta feret pituita. Vides ut pallidus omnis Coena desurgat dubia? Quin corpus onustum Hesternis vitius animum quoque praegravat una,
Atque affigit humo divinae particularum auras.
Alter ubi dicto citius curata sopori
Membra dedit vegetus praescripta ad munia surgit.
Hic tamen ad melius poterit transcurrere quondam,
Sive diem festum rediens advexerit annus,
Seu recreare volet tenuatum corpus, ubique
Accident anni et tractari mollius aetas
Imbecilla volet; tibi quidnam accedet ad istam
Quam puer et validus praesumis mollitiem, seu
Dura valetudo inciderit seu tarda senectus?
Rancidum aprum antiqui laudabant, non quia nasus
Illis nullus erat sed credo hac mente, quod hospes

by the intestines. Cicero (Tusc. iv. 10) compares the mental diseases produced by the conflict of vicious opinions with the disorders of the body, "quam sanguis corruptus est aut pituita redundat aut bilis." The first and third syllables of 'pituita' are long; the second therefore here coalesce with the third. 'Coena dubia' is an expression copied from Terence, and means such a good dinner that you cannot tell what to eat first. Phorm. ii. 28:—

"Ph. Coena dubia apponitur Get. Quid istuc verbi est? Ph. Ubi tu dubites quid sumas potissimum."

79. Atque affigit humo] This is the reading of all the old editions and the Scholiasts, together with the great majority of the MSS., and all the oldest and best. Lambris, on the authority as he says of twelve MSS., has 'affigit,' and Bentley has defended that reading in a long note. He says the copyists invariably make mistakes between these two words, and that here it will require a ghost from the shades below to decide the reading. It appears to me that 'affigit humo,' which would signify dashes to the ground, does not express Horace's meaning, and that the examples Bentley quotes in support of that phrase have no resemblance to this passage: for instance, Ovid (Met. xii. 139):—

"Quam super impulsam resupino pectore cygnum Vi multa vertit terraeque affigit Achilles."
HORATII FLacci

Tardius adveniens vitiatum commodius quam
Integrum edax dominus consumeret. Hos utinam inter Heroes natum tellus me prima tulisset!
Das alicui famae quae carmine grator aurcm
Occupet humanam: grandis rhombi patinaeque
Grande ferunt una cum damno dedecus; adde
Iratum patrum, vicinos, te tibi iniquum,
Et frustra mortis cupidum, cum deerit egenti
As laquei pretium. “Jure,” inquit, “Trausius istis Jurgatur verbis; ego vectigalia magna Divitasque habeo tribus amplas regibus.” Ergo
Quod superat non est melius quo insumere possis?
Cur eget indignus quisquam te divite? Quare Templa ruunt antiqua deum? Cur, improbe, carae
Non alicui patriae tanto emetiris acervo?
Uni nimirus recte tibi semper erunt res.

it was high, in case a stranger should drop in to eat of it with them. Horace was a ‘laudator temporis acti,’ and in respect at least to simplicity of social and domestic habits there is no doubt he was right. How far he was sincere in the wish that bursts forth in v. 93 is perhaps doubtful. He himself suggests the doubt (S. 7, 23), and he probably knew his own mind.
93. tellus me prima] See S. i. 3. 99.
94. Das alicui famae] ‘I suppose you have some consideration for your character.’ 95. patinaeque] The ‘patina’ was a covered dish in which meats were brought in hot from the kitchen. ‘Patruus’ was as proverbial a name for tyranny on the male side of the family as ‘noverca’ on the female. See C. iii. 12. 3, and Cicero pro Cael.
11: ‘Fuit in hac causa pertristi quidam
patruus, censor, magister.’ S. ii. 3. 97.
96. As laquei pretium.] This was a proverb, or became so. See Lucian (Tim.
c. 20): ἤρω δὲ καὶ πολλαὶς ἵνα εἰτέκ ἔχουμεν σοι χέρις μὲν εὐθεῖα δοξαὶ ὡς τε πρίασθαι βρόχον ὑγρότερας, ἄφω δὲ τῷ μονῳ πολυτελεῖς καὶ πολυτιλεῖς. The old read-ingen ‘aes,’ as Orelli observes, destroys the proverb. Of Trausius the spendthrift nothing is known. All we have to infer is, that he lived profusely upon small means and ruined himself, which the speaker considers himself too rich ever to do. ‘Vec-tigalia’ is used for a private fortune in C.
iii. 16. 40. Its use is appropriate here in connexion with ‘regibus.’
103. indignus] This has the same sense
as ‘immeritus’ (C. iii. 6. 1, and elsewhere), ‘innocent.’ Forcell. gives other examples.
Orelli inquires why Horace, who professes
(C. i. 34. 1) to have been at this time careless about religion, should reproach the rich man with letting the temples go to ruin.
He suggests, as the answer, that Horace speaks as a man of taste, and that he lamented the decay of the temples as a spectator rather than a worshipper, as more interested in the beauty of the city than in the honour of the gods. But if Horace was not so piously disposed as this fit of zeal for the temples might seem to show, he knew the value of religion as a political instrument, and that the neglect of sacred rites went hand in hand with civil disorders.
We can hardly suppose Augustus and Ti-berius to have been influenced by much higher motives than these when they applied themselves to the restoration of the sacred buildings, which during the civil wars had fallen so much into ruin. See C. ii. 15, Introduction, and note on C. iii. 6. 1.
106. Uni nimirus] The practical good sense of Horace’s writings causes that his language may often be illustrated by words from Scripture (where human nature is mentioned in all its features) more frequently than I have cared to illustrate it, for obvious reasons. “He hath said in his heart I shall not be moved, for I shall never be in adversity” (Ps. x. 6), is very like the argument Horace puts in his rich man’s mouth, the man whose fortune was large enough for three kings. Bentley spoils the senti-
O Magnus posthac inimicis risus! Uterne
Ad casus dubios fidet sibi certius? Hic qui Pluribus adsuerit mentem corpusque superbum,
An qui contentus parvo metuensque futuri
In pace ut sapiens aptarit idonea bello?
Quo magis his eредas, puer hunc ego parvus Ofellam
Integris opibus novi non latius usum
Quam nunc accisis. Videas metato in agello Cum pecore et gnatis fortem mercede colonum,
"Non ego," narrantem, "temere edi luce profesta
Quidquam praeter olus fumosae cum pede pernae.
Ac mihi seu longum post tempus venerat hospes,
Sive operum vacuo gratus conviva per imbrem
Vicinus, bene erat non piscibus urbe petitis,
Sed pullo atque haedo; tum pensilis uva secundas
Et nux ornabat mensas cum duplice ficu.
Post hoc ludus erat culpa potare magistra, ment altogether by adopting Heinsius' conjecture 'eunt' for 'erunt.' Horace's man argues that he is so rich that he never can be otherwise.

107. Uterne Ad casus dubios] On 'ne,' see S. i. 10. 21, and with 'dubios,' compare C. iv. 9. 36: "Secundis temporibus dubius-que rectus.'

111. aptarit] 'Has fitted on his armor' as it were.

113. latius] This word, for which 'latius' and 'lactius' have been proposed as substitutes, is used as 'angustius' in the opposite sense. It means more profusely. I am not aware that it is so used any where else. 'Metato in agello' is the farm which has been marked out by the public surveyor ('metator'), and assigned to Umbrenus. This participle is used passively in C. ii. 15.

15. 'Fortem' has been explained in the note on C. S. 58, and for 'colonum,' see C. ii. 14. 12, n. As 'colonum' signifies a tenant, 'mercede' is only added to give additional force to the contrast. It makes rather a clumsy sentence. Orelli says 'mercede' means a fixed share in the produce. I think it only means a sum of money paid as rent, as in Dig. 19. 2. 21: "Quam venderem fundum conventi ut donec pecunia omnis persolveret, certa mercede emptor fundum conductum habetere." Farms were held either on payment of rent, or of a certain part of the produce of the land; but 'merces' could not mean the latter. A colonus who held on the latter terms was called 'partarius.' 'Temere' signifies that which is done without consideration, because habitually done.

122. cum duplice ficu.] Some take this for a large coarse kind of fig ('marisca'), double the size of an ordinary one (Turnebus xiii. 1, Forcellini, and others). Others take it for a fig split in two, and so dried. There does not seem to be any authority by which to decide the question, except that of Comm. Cruq., who interprets 'duplice' by 'bifida.' It is possible Horace may mean two figs.

123. Post hoc ludus erat] This passage has caused the commentators not a little trouble. 'After this we amused ourselves by drinking with 'culpa' for our 'magister,' or 'rex bibendi,' συμποσίαιριος.' But the question is what 'culpa' means. It appears that they agreed between themselves as to some mode of drinking, and established a penalty for the transgression of it, which transgression ('culpa') was to do that which at drinking parties, where a president was appointed, he might do arbitrarily, that is, either mulct a guest of a cup of wine, or make him drink an extra cup, or any thing else he chose, as a fine for misbehaviour. In short, Ofella means it was a quiet and primitive sort of way of proceeding, unlike the new fashion introduced from Greece, and followed in fine houses, of having a sym-posiarch to preside (S. ii. 6, n.). A scene of this kind will be found in the Stichus of Plautus (v. 4). Bentley calls this, which is Ac venerata Ceres ita culmo surget alto,
Explicit vino contractae seria frontis.

Saeviat atque novos moveat Fortuna tumultus,
Quantum hinc imminuet? Quanto aut ego parcius aut vos,
O pueri, nituisti ut huc novus intola venit?
Nam propriae telluris herum natura neque illum
Nec me nec quemquam statuit: nos expulit ille;
Illum aut nequitiae aut vafri inæsita juris,
Postremum expellet certe vivacior heres.
Nunc ager Umbreni sub nomine, nuper Ofellae
Dictus, erit nulli proprius, sed cedet in usum
Nunc mihi nunc alii. \"Quocirca vivite fortæ Fortiaque adversis opposite pectora rebus.\"
This Satire appears to have been written during the Saturnalia in the month of December, A.U.C. 722; in the year before Agrippa had been Aedile, and his Aedilship is alluded to in v. 185. It was written at Horace’s country house, not long, it may be supposed, after it was given him. He was improving the house at the time, as we may infer from v. 308. The Satire is general, taking in the leading vices and follies of human nature,—ambition, avarice, extravagance, lust, superstition, which are brought together with some ingenuity.

One Damasippus, a man who had wasted a good fortune in speculating as an amateur in all sorts of costly articles, particularly works of art, in which he was held to be a connoisseur, is introduced in a new character as a Stoic philosopher, reproving Horace for his laziness, and urging him to write. He relates the story of his own conversion to philosophy, which was this. When he had lost all his fortune, and got hopelessly involved with money-lenders, and found himself laughed at and called madman wherever he went, he grew desperate, and was going to throw himself into the Tiber, when he was arrested by Stertinius, an oracle of the Stoics, who remonstrated with him and consoled him, and at the same time armed him against his enemies (v. 297) with a long homily, in the course of which he proved that all the world but the good and wise were as mad as he was. In this discourse he enumerates the chief features of this universal madness, and this forms the bulk of the Satire.

To Damasippus the Scholastics give the gentle name Junius. Erasti, in his Clavis to Cicero, says that it was a cognomen of the Licinia gens (which is impossible), and Orelli calls Damasippus Licinius. I think it probable he was a Greek and a freedman. Cicero, wishing to purchase a piece of ground on which to erect a shrine to the memory of Tullia, heard that Damasippus had some to dispose of on the bank of the Tiber, and commissioned Atticus to negotiate with him for it (ad Att. xii. 29. 33). On another occasion he commissioned a friend (Fabius Gallus) to buy him some statues to put in his library. He bought some which Cicero did not like, and thought too costly. It appears that Damasippus had bid for them too, and wanted to have them; for Cicero writes, “Vellim maneat Damasippus in sententia—si enim non manebit aliquem pseudodamasippum vel cum jactura repertemus;” by which he means, if Damasippus will not take them off his hands, he must look out for some one less knowing or less bold, and part with them if necessary at a sacrifice. There can be little doubt that the Damasippus here mentioned is the person Horace introduces in this Satire. Doering and other commentators, following Com. Cruq. (who says “consumpto per mercatum patrimonio”), call him a ‘mercator,’ which it is plain he was not. That he was not a regular trader is clear from the people calling him ‘Mercurialem’ (v. 25). The ‘mercatores’ were always under the protection of Mercury (“Mercuriales viri”), and there would be nothing particular in the application of the word to Damasippus if he had not been merely a private person, who had turned his hand to trading. Why Horace should have chosen this man as the mouth-piece of his Satire does not appear. He says himself, it is true, that having ruined his own affairs he had nothing to do but to attend to the affairs of others; which Horace interprets to mean, that he had taken to giving advice when it was not asked (see v. 27, n.). But Horace may have had better reasons for employing this man’s name, which we have no means of knowing. He may have ruined himself and taken to cant, as Horace here represents; but we know nothing farther about him.

Stertinius appears to have been an authority among the Stoics of the day. The Scho-liasts tell us he wrote 220 books on the doctrines of that school. Damasippus calls him (v. 286) "sapientium octavus." His books, if he ever wrote them, have not rescued him from oblivion. Horace mentions him again in Epp. i. 12. 20 as the representative of the sect. Estréc suggests that he may have been the Stertinius mentioned by Quintilian (iii. 1. 21) as the author of a treatise on oratory, though, as he says, the Stoics troubled themselves less with rhetoric than with dialectic.

The discourse of Stertinius turns upon this dogma, that every man in the world, high or low, is mad except the sage (see note on v. 46). Cicero has argued the same doctrine of the Stoics in his Paradoxa (iii. 5. a παντα ἀφόθων μαίνεται), but he does not go very deep into the subject, or throw much light upon it.

ARGUMENT.

You write so seldom, and destroy what you have written, and are angry with yourself because you are too lazy to write anything worth speaking of. What do you mean to do? You acknowledge you came to this retreat to escape the noise of the Saturnalia. Well, then, begin: let us have something suited to your intentions. It's of no use to find fault with your pens and beat the wall. Where are all your promises? What have you brought out all your books for? Do you mean to avoid odium by shirking your duty? Men will only despise you for your pains. 'Tis nothing but sloth. Flee from the Siren, and be content to forfeit all you have earned in better days.

(v. 16.) Heaven reward you, Damasippus, with a barber for your good advice. But how came you to know me so well?

Since the usurers robbed me of all my money, I have taken to managing other people's affairs. I used to be such a successful driver of bargains in all sorts of property, that people called me every where the ward of Mercury.

I am aware of that. How did you get rid of that mania? You seem, however, only to have exchanged it for another, as a pain in the head is transferred to the stomach, or as the patient in a stupor suddenly falls to fighting his doctor. Only don't follow his example, and you may have it all your own way.

(v. 31.) My good friend, you need not deceive yourself. You, and all fools I may say, are mad, if there be any truth in Stertinius, who saw me one day as I was ready to throw myself into the river; and "for shame," said he: "why should you mind being called mad when all are so? For what is madness? Folly and blind ignorance of the truth. All are mad from the highest to the lowest, except the wise. As in a wide wood where all lose their way, though all go in different directions, so is it with fools. One is afraid where there is no fear; another wantonly rushes into danger, and is deaf to the voice of warning. You, Damasippus, have a madness for buying old statues. But is the man who trusts you less mad? If I were to beg you to accept a present from me, would you be mad if you accepted it, or not rather mad if you refused your good luck? 'This rascal, get what security you will from him, tie him fast in a thousand knots, like Proteus he will still get out of them;' but, friend Petullius, if he is mad for mismanaging his affairs, you are much more so for lending him money.

(v. 77.) "Come listen to me, ye ambitious, ye avaricious, ye luxurious, ye superstitious, and I will prove you all to be mad.

(v. 82.) "The avaricious are the worst, almost past cure. Staberius would have the amount of his fortune engraved upon his tomb. Why? Because he believed poverty to be the greatest possible disgrace; and if he had been dying an as poorer, he would have considered himself a worse man in that proportion: he thought that virtue, fame, every thing gave way to wealth, and that its possessor was noble, brave, and just. What, wise too? Aye, and a king to boot or any thing else. 'But which is most mad
SATIRARUM II. 3.

(see you), Staberius or Aristippus, who to lighten his slave's sack bade him throw away some of the money that was in it? It does not help one moot point to raise another. A man that should buy a quantity of musical instruments who knew nothing of music, awls and lasts who was no shoemaker, sails who was no trader,—all would say he was mad. Is he less mad who gets money together which he knows not how or fears to use? A man who watches over his heap of corn but eats only bitter herbs, who has his cellar full of the best wine and drinks only sour, handsome bed-clothes in his chest and sleeps upon straw, he is not called mad, only because it is the madness of so many. Are you keeping all this for your heir to squander, old fool? or for fear you should come to want? How much would it take from you to put a drop of better oil to your cabbage, or to clean your dirty head? What do you lie, steal, rob for, if so little is enough for you? What, are you sane? If you began to throw stones, every one would call you mad; but you may strangle your wife, or poison your mother, and you are all right, because you are no Orestes of Argos but a gentleman of Rome. But was not Orestes mad before he betrayed it by murdering his mother? And after that he did nothing worse than yourself. Opimius the miser was sick, and nigh unto death. His heir was exulting in the prospect of succession. His physician however had his money-bags brought out and emptied before him, and set people to count the contents. This roused his patient. Then says the doctor, 'If you don't take care, your heir will carry off all your money.' 'What, before I am dead?' 'Well, then, get up: take some nourishment, or you'll die. Come, take some broth.' 'How much did it cost?' 'Oh not much.' 'But how much?' 'Eight asses.' 'Alas, alas! what difference does it make whether I die of disease or robbery?' Who then is sane? He who is not a fool. But the covetous? He is a fool, and insane. But if a man is not covetous is he sane? No. A man may be sick though he has not the heart-burn. A man may not be a perjurer or a miser, for which he may be thankful; but if he is ambitious and headstrong let him go to Anticyra.

(v. 166.) 'It makes no difference whether you throw away your money or forbear to use it. One Servius Oppidius had two farms, which he gave one to each of his two sons, and on his death-bed he called them to him and said: 'I have watched you, my sons, one throwing or giving away his toys, the other hiding them in holes. Take heed lest you fall under opposite manias: do you beware of diminishing, and you of increasing, the fortune I leave you. I caution you both against the temptations of ambition. My curse be upon you if you ever aim at public offices. You may be tempted to ruin yourselves for popularity, aping the munificence of Agrippa as the fox might ape the lion.'

(v. 187.) 'Why refuse burial to the great Ajax, O king?' 'Because he was so mad as to kill a flock of sheep and thought he was killing Ulysses, Menelaus, and me.' 'But were you sane when you offered your child at Aulis? Ajax spared his own flesh and blood; and, though he cursed the Atridae, he did not kill either Teucer or even Ulysses.' 'But to loose the fleet I propitiated the gods with blood.' 'Yes, madman, with your own.'—Any man who takes up false fancies is out of his mind, whether it be from folly or passion. Ajax was mad; but when you commit crimes for the sake of empty inscriptions, are you not as mad as he? If a man were to carry about a lamb and call it his daughter he would be treated as a lunatic. If on the other hand he were to take his daughter for a lamb and sacrifice her, he would be called mad too. The fool then is mad, the depraved is more mad, but the ambitious is maddest of all.

(v. 224.) 'Then for the spendthrift, he is certainly mad. A young man comes into his father's property: he sends for all the tradesmen and fings his money at random among them. Another takes a jewel from his mistress' ear, melts it down and swallows it: another dines habitually on nightingales. Are these mad or not mad?

(v. 247.) 'If we see an elderly gentleman riding on a stick, and playing at children's games, we say he is mad. Is not he as mad who whines after a harlot? And if so, is it not better to follow Polemo's example, to listen to the voice of wisdom, and to cast away the ensigns of lust and repent? The child who refuses the fruit you offer him, and if he cannot get it longs to have it, only represents the caprices of lovers squabbling and making it up again. Is not the man prattling and playing lovers' games with his mistress as mad as the dotard we have mentioned? to say nothing of the bloodshed lust often leads to, as in the case of Marius the other day, who murdered his mistress and destroyed himself.

(v. 281.) "There was once a libertinus who went about from shrine to shrine praying the gods to give him immortality. A certain mother vowed if her son recovered from his fever he should stand up to his chin in the Tiber. The boy recovered, the vow was performed, and the fever came back. Now what was their madness?—Superstition."

(v. 296.) Thus has Stertinius armed me against all the world. If any one says I am mad, I can tell him to look at home.

Friend, success attend you. Pray tell me what is my particular madness. I am not aware that I am otherwise than sane.

Did Pentheus' mother think herself mad even when she carried the head of her poor slaughtered son?

Well I admit I am mad. But tell me how.

Why you are aping Maecenas and building beyond your means, as the dwarf might ape the giant, or as the frog in the fable aped the bull. Then you write verses. I say nothing of your horrible temper—

No more of that!
—or of your living beyond your income—

Mind your own business, Damasippus.
—and your thousand mad amours.

O spare me, I pray thee, great madman, for thou art mightier than me.

"Sic raro scribis, ut toto non quater anno Membranam poscas, scriptorum quaeque retexens,
Iratus tibi quod vini somnique benignus
Nil dignum sermone canas. Quid fiet? At ipsis

1. Sic raro scribisco] The MSS. and editions are nearly all in favour of 'scribos,' notwithstanding the metre. The Blandinian MSS., which Cruquiuss follows, had 'si' for 'sic.' Bentley, followed by Cunningham and Sanadon, edits 'si raro scribes,' and makes 'quid fiet?' (v. 4) the interrogative following this hypothetical clause. The common reading appears to be the simplest and best.

2. Membranam poscas.] Horace speaks of parchment only twice (A. P. 369), 'charta,' which means the Egyptian papyrus, being his usual equivalent for a book. From the thin coats of the papyrus the name 'liber' was derived, and parchment was less generally used in Horace's day than the papyrus; though the word 'membrana' is here used with sufficient familiarity to show that that material was also commonly employed. 'Retexens' applies more properly to the papyrus, 'texere chartam' being a common expression for putting the pieces of the papyrus together; for the manner of doing which see Dict. Ant., art. 'Liber.' 'Retexere scripta' therefore means to take to pieces or tear up what is written, or to take out leaves and substitute others with different writing upon them. Some of the interpreters not wisely refer the metaphor to Penelope and her web.

3. Vini somnique benignus] This Forcellini notices as a Greek construction: 'freely indulging in wine and sleep.' 'Dignum sermone' means worthy of being talked about.

4. At ipsis Saturnalibus] The old editions, and all toil Bentley, together with most of the MSS., have 'aet,' but the eldest of the Blandinius had 'at,' which Bentley has restored to the text. Horace's Saturnalibus hue fugisti. Sobrius ergo
Die aliquid dignum promissis: incipe. Nil est:
Culpantur frustra calami, immeritusque laborat
Iratis natus paries dis atque poëtis.
Atqui voltus erat multa et praelara minantis
Si vacuum tepido cepisset villula tecto.
Quorum pertinuit stipare Platona Menandro,
Eupolin, Archilochum, comites educere tantos?
Invidiam placare paras virtute relicta?
Contemnere miser; vitanda est improba Siren
Desidia, aut quidquid vita meliore parasti
Ponendum aquo animo." "Di te, Damasippe, deaeque
Verum ob consilium donent tonsore. Sed unde
Tam bene me nosti?" "Postquam omnis res mea Janum
Ad medium fracta est aliena negotia euro,
Excussus propriis. Olim nam quaerere amabam, Quo vafer ille pedes lavisset Sisyphus aere, to have come into the country prepared to produce something worthy of his fame.
The books he would bring with him would be of a kind suited to his purpose, which the writings of the comedians and of Archilochus, the bitterest of all satirists, would be. I do not see what Plato, the philosopher, has to do with Menander, Eupolis, and Archilochus, or the design for which Horace is supposed to have carried them into the country with him. Plato's com-dies were greatly admired by his contemporaries. Their character also in some instances approximated to that of the New Comedy. Plato is on this account associated with the so-called Middle Comedy;
and so if we take Menander to represent the new, and Eupolis the old, we shall have all the three styles of Greek comedy here assembled. I observe by Orelli's note that C. Passow understands 'Platona' to mean the writer of comedies. Dacier did the same. I am inclined to agree with them.
'Tantos' Acron refers to the size of the volumes, Orelli to the greatness of the writers. Perhaps Horace meant both: διάλογος, as Baxter would say.

13. virtute relicta?] I have more than once had occasion to remark that the notion of perseverance is involved in the Roman
'virtus' (See C. S. 59), and it is so here, being opposed to 'desidia' (v. 15). But it means more, for it implies moral courage and a strong will, which were in great esteem among the Romans. Damasippus supposes the poet to be consulting his ease and his cowardice at the same time; and says if he thinks to silence jealousy by ceasing to write, he will only find himself the object of contempt; and if he means to be idle
now, he must be content to lose the reputation won in his better days of energy.
As to 'Siren,' see Epp. i. 2. 23.

Horace prays, in the words of a common formula, that heaven will send Damasippus, to reward him for his good advice, a barber to shave his long beard. He may be supposed to have let his beard grow long with the affectation peculiar to those who called themselves philosophers; and Horace means that he be delivered from that folly would be the best boon that could be bestowed upon him. (See below, v. 35, and note on
S. i. 3. 133.) Aulus Gellius (N. A. ix. 2) tells a story, of which he was an eye-witness, of a man going to Herodes Atticus, "pal-litius et crinitus barbaque prope ad pubem usque porrecta," and asking him for money to buy bread. When he was asked who he was, he answered in a tone of reproach that he was a philosopher, and that he was surprised that Atticus should ask a question which his own eyes would enable him to answer. The good man's reply was, "Video barbam et pallium; philosophum non dum video." ί ε πώγονος σοφοί was the Greek way of representing such persons,—men whose wisdom lay in their beards.

18. Janum Ad medium] There appear to have been three arches dedicated to Janus in the Forum Romanum, one at each end, and one in the centre, near to the Arcus Fabianus at the extremity of the Via Sacra.
They are alluded to again Epp. i. 1. 54:
"Haece Janus summus ab imo Perdocet;"
i. e. the whole Forum. Near the middle arch were the 'tabernae' of the principal money-lenders. Cicero mentions them (de Off. ii. 25): "de quaerenda, de collocandade
pecunia, vellem etiam de utenda commodius
a quibusdam optimis viris ad Janum medium sedentibus, quam ab ullah philosophus ulla in schola disputation."
Quid sculptum infabre, quid fusum darius esset Callidus huic signo ponebam milia centum; Hortos egregiasque domos mercarier unus Cum lucre noram; unde frequentia Mercuriale Imposuere mihi cognomen compita." "Novi, " Et miror morbi purgatum te illius. Atqui Emovit veterem mire novus, ut solet in cor Trajecto lateris miseri capitivse dolore, valuable property; among the rest, vessels of Corinthian bronze (often, but improperly, called brass), of such antiquity that the founder of Corinth might be supposed to have used them for washing his feet. This satire upon the rage for antiquated pieces of furniture would have applied still more to the habits of the Romans at a later time. It appears to have gone to absurd lengths during the Empire. Martial (ix. 58) speaks of the worn handles "veterum Corinthiorum." He has an indignant epigram on one Euctus, who was a collector of such pretended antiques, one of which still showed the dent it had received in the battle between the Centaurs and Lapithae. The handle of another (a dove) was worn by the hand of Nestor. Another was the cup in which Dido drank Bittas' health, and so on. We have had before (i. 3. 91) mention of a dish handed down from Evander. Martial thus speaks of a gentleman who went about to all the most extravagant shops, pretending he wanted to purchase, and ended by buying two cups for an as:

"Consuluit nazes an olerent aera Corinthi, Culpavit status et, Polyclete, tuis. Expendit veteres calathos et si qua fuerunt Pocula Mentorea nobilitata manu." (ix. 60.)

22. infabre.] 'In an unworkmanlike manner.' The reverse of this is 'affabre,' used by Cicero (in Verd. Act. i. c. 5): "Deum deique nullum Siculus qui ei paulo magis affabre atque antiquo articulo factus videtur reliquit." The art of founding is of great antiquity, though the earliest metal statues were beaten out of lumps with the hammer. It was a process of much nicety, and the fitting of the parts required great skill. The subjects of casting and the metal called 'aes,' are discussed in the Dict. Ant., arts. 'Bronze' and 'Aes,'

25. Mercuriale] There appears to have been a mercantile association called Mercuriales at Rome. Cicero calls it a 'collegium' (ad Qua. Frat. ii. 5): "M. Furius Flaccus equestrem Romanum, hominem nequam, Capitolini et Mercuriales de collegio ejuscerunt." But Damasippus merely means that his skill in making bargains was so well known that he was called all over the town a ward of Mercury, and we need not suppose him to have been a mercator. (See Introduction.) All the MSS. and Acron have 'Mercuriale.' Sanadon and some others have the dative, which is the more usual construction. See below, v. 47, n., and Key's L. G. 964, note. See also Galliius x. 29: "Duae istae in loco fundique notae satis usitateaque sunt 'Mihi nomen est Julius' et 'mihi nomen est Julius.'" 'Compita' were those spots where two or more streets converged at a point or crossed one another. At these places idlers lounged, and passengers stopped, if they were so disposed, to offer a prayer to the Lares publici or Compitales, whose altars were erected there. (See below, v. 281, n.)

27. morbi purgatum] This genitive follows the Greek construction. 'Purgare' comes under the category of verbs of removal and separation referred to in Key's L. G. 940, where he quotes this example and C. ii. 9. 17, "desine mollium Tandem querelarum," where see note. Horace calls the man's mania for bargains a disease, and he is surprised how he ever got over it. 'But,' says he, 'you have only exchanged that disorder for another (that of giving advice where it is not wanted), as the patient in a lethargy has been known suddenly to jump up and assault the doctor. Provided however you don't follow his example, be it as you please.' On 'trajecto' Porphyrian remarks, "Proprie 'trajecto;' ita enim medici dicunt." 'Miser' is also said to be a medical word for 'diseased.' 'Hic' means 'any one,' 'such an one.'
Ut lethargicus hic cum fit pugil et medium urget.
Dum ne quid simile huic esto ut libet."
"O bone, ne te Frustere; insanis et tu stultique prope omnes,
Si quid Stertinius veri crepat, unde ego mira Descripsi docilis praecepta haec, tempore quo me
Solatus jussit sapienten pascere barbarum
31. O bone, ne te Frustere;] 'My good sir, don't deceive yourself.' We have 'o bone' below (S. 6. 51). It is like the Greek ὁ ἄρδη.
32. prope omnes,] Stertinius would not allow of any exceptions to this rule (see note on v. 44), and 'prope' therefore may be looked upon, not as limiting 'omnes,' but perhaps as softening the expression a little. I do not know how else to account for it. It is hard to give the word a distinct meaning in C. iv. 14. 20, and below in the 268th verse of this Satire (see note on the former passage). The Greeks would use ὁ ἀρδῆ ἐπί σε in the same way.
33. Stertinius] See Introduction. 'Crepo' is no where else used in a good sense, and it is put into Damasippus' mouth ironically. 'Unde' may mean 'from whom,' i.e. Stertinius, or from which preaching, the antecedent implied in 'crepat.' The former I prefer.
35. pascere barbarum] See above, v. 17, ὁ ἀρδή ἐπί σε is a term used by the later Greek writers. The Pons Fabricius, from which Damasippus was going to throw himself into the river after he became bankrupt, connected the Insula Tiberina with the left bank, and was just outside the walls, facing the south end of the Mons Capitolinus. It had lately (A.D. 692) been rebuilt with stone, having been formerly (as may be supposed) made of wood. (Dion Cass. xxxvii. 45). There are still ruins of this bridge, which now bears the name Ponte di Quattro Capi. The Fabricius who built it, and whom Comm. Cruc. calls Consul, was Curator Viarum, as appears by an inscription upon one of the arches. The same Scholiast says in his time it was called Pons Lapideus, which may have been its name with the common people.
36. Cave faxis] The last syllable in 'cave' used with the subjunctive (sometimes with and sometimes without 'ut') is always short. In respect to the forms 'faxo,' 'faxo,' 'faxem,' 'faxim,' 'faximin,' for 'ecerim,' 'ecerem,' 'ecerem,' for 'ecissem,' see Key's L. G. 566. 'Pudor malus' is what the French-call 'mauvaise honte.'
40. insanus haberij] Those persons who called him a clever fellow as long as he appeared to be succeeding, now that he had failed called him a madman, as Orelli remarks. Success was their criterion of wisdom, as it is with most people. 'Qui vereare,' 'because you are afraid.'
41. Primum nam inquiram] 'Nam' is sometimes used to introduce an explanation as here and in Epp. i. 1. 76. Compare Caesar (B. G. iii. 28): "Morini Messapiique longe alia ratione ac reliqui Galli bellum agere instituerunt. Nam quod intelligebant maximas nationes quae proelio contendissent, pulsat superasque esse, continentessylvas ac paludes habebant, eo se suae omnia contulerunt." (See Key's L. G. 1452.)
44. Chrysippi porticus] This was the στόλος πολιτική or picture-gallery at Athens, in which Zeno first taught, and from which his followers derived their name. The Stoics seem to have admitted no mean between perfect wisdom or virtue and absolute folly or vice. ἄρσκει δὲ αὐτοῖς μηδὲν μίσον εἶναι ἁρτῆς καὶ κακίας, τῶν Ἰππο-Autemat. Haec populos, haec magnos formula reges

Excepto sapiente tenet. Nunc accipe quare

Desipiant omnes aeque ac tu qui tibi nomen

Insano posuere. Velut silvis ubi passim

Palantes error certo de tramite pellit,

Ille sinistrorum, hic dextrorum abit: unus utrique

Error, sed variis illudit partibus; hoc te

Crede modo insanum, nihil ut sapientior ille

Qui te deridet caudam trahat. Est genus unum

Stultitiae nihilum metuenda timentis, ut ignes,

Ut rupes fluviosque in campo obstare queratur;

Alterum et huic varum et nihil ut sapientius ignes

Per medios fluviosque ruentis: clamet amica

Mater, honesta soror cum cognatis, pater, uxor:

"Hic fossa est ingens, hic rupes maxima, serva!"

\footnote{50. \text{utrique}] Horace uses both the singular and plural. Here as elsewhere the MSS. vary, but the majority are in favour of 'utrique.' Heindorf and others have the plural.

\footnote{52. \text{caudam trahat.}] "Ut pecus, i.e. stultus; aut ex consuetudine puorum

\footnote{53. sumptum: solent enim pueri deridentes nescientibus a tergo caudam suspendere ut velut pecus caudam trahant" (Porph.). Mischievous boys play tricks of this sort upon half-witted people in the streets. In some such way the proverb may have arisen.

\footnote{55. \text{varum}] This is the reading of Porphyrian, who interprets it 'diversum et distortum.' Baxter adds, from a Scholiast I have not seen, "Pedes in diversum flexos habentes varos dicimus," and he was the first to take 'varum' into the text, the universal reading before having been 'varium,' which Bentley reads, not noticing 'varum' (see S. i. 3. 47, n.). Fea and Orelli quote MSS. for this reading, which two of the Berne had till they were corrected. Heindorf defends 'varum;' I do not feel certain about it.

\footnote{57. \text{clamat amica Mater,}] "Haec composite proferenda sunt: videntur autem sumpta a Graeca tragedidia \text{φιλη} \text{μηνηρ}" (Comm. Cruc.). This Scholiast is no doubt right: but some commentators take 'amica' for the man's mistress. The word 'cognatis' embraces all blood relations who can trace back their origin to a common pair of ancestors. On this word, and how it differs from 'agnati,' see Dict. Ant.

\footnote{59. \text{serva!}] 'Take care!' a word common in the comic writers (see Forcell.).}
Non magis audierit quam Fufius ebrius olim, Cum Ilionam edormit, Catienis mille ducentis, Mater, te appello! clamantibus. Huic ego vulgus Errori similem cunctum insanire docebo. Insanit veteres status Damasippus emendo:
Integer est mentis Damasippi creditor? Esto! Accipe quod nunquam reddas mihi, si tibi dicam, Tune insanus eris si acceperis? an magis excors Rejecta praeda quam prae sens Mercurius fert? Scribe decem Nerio; non est satis: adde Cicutae

60. Fufius] Nothing more is known of this actor and of Catienus than is here mentioned. The ordinary story of Polydorus, the son of Priam, is that which Euripides relates in the Hecuba, that he was entrusted to the care of Polyphemost, king of Thrace, and murdered by him for his gold. Another legend (see Dict. Plut. 'Polydorus') makes him entrusted to the care of his sister Ilione, who was wife of the above Polyphemost. She, for some reason, put him in the place of her own son Deiphilus, and the latter was brought up as her brother. When the Greeks took Troy they required Polyphemost to put Priam's son to death, and he accordingly killed Deiphilus. On this story Pacuvius founded a tragedy called Ilione, and in one of the scenes the ghost of Deiphilus is introduced in his mother's bed-chamber, calling upon her to give his body burial in these words (preserved in Cic. Tusc. Disp. i. 44):—

"Mater, te adpello quae curam somno suspensus levas, Neque te me miseret; surge et sepeli natum."

Fufius acted Ilione, and Catienus was Deiphilus. The former was so drunk that he fell fast asleep, and Horace says if 200,000 Catienuses had screamed in his ear he would not have heard them. His part was to start up and cry to the vanished ghost, like Hamlet,—"Age, adsta, manc, audi, iteradum eademmet ista mihi!" (Cic. Acad. Prior. ii. 27). Cicero made a proverb of these words, 'Mater, te appello,' using them in various illustrations. See his speech pro Sestio, c. 59.

63. Errori similèm] 'Errorem' is understood, and it is governed by 'insanire' as a cognate accusative, 'error' being equivalent to 'insania.' Comp. Epp. i. 1. 101: "Insanire putas sollemnia me neque rides."
against his slippery debtor Nerus. If that be so, the Stoic replies to him in ver. 74 and the two following verses. The Scholiasts, it is true, make Cicuta and Perillius the same person; but Acron adds, "quidam dicunt istum Nерium Perillium," and this is as likely as the other, but more likely that they are all different. Taking it so, the sense seems to me to be this. 'Make an entry of ten (minae, or any thing else) lent to Nerus; add by way of security, a hundred such bonds as Cicuta employs, and to this any number of fetters you please (that is, take what security of him you choose), still the rascal will escape.' To which the Stoic replies, 'If he is mad who ruins himself and cannot pay his debts, you are more mad for lending him money which you have no chance of getting back again.' The banker ('argentarius') through whom the money was advanced would make an entry in his books, which entry was legal evidence of the debt; but Perillius says with such a slippery fellow it would not be sufficient. Porphyryon says, "juris verbo scribere est mutuum sumere; rescribere, resituire." And Bentley (on Epp. ii. 1. 103) says 'scribe' in this passage is addressed to the debtor, quoting, among other places, Dig. xii. 1. 40, "Lucius Titius scripsi me accepisse a P. Mævio quindecim mutua numerata mibi de domo." That the word is used elsewhere in connexion with the acknowledgement given by the borrower is true. It explains that transaction of the unjust steward in the Gospel of St. Luke (xvi. 6), δέδωκα σοι τὸ γραφήμα καὶ καθίσας τάχισι γράφον πεντηκοντα. But here it is impossible that the debtor can be addressed. The entry of the debt must be meant. Difficulties have been raised about 'decem,' after which Doering and Heindorf, and most of the editors since them including Orelli, propose to understand 'tabulas.' This seems to me to spoil the passage. 'Decem' expresses the sum, as 'quindecim' does in the above passage from the Digest. And again, in Dig. xiv. 2. 9, "Titius et Mævius Senpronic decem dato;" and xii. 1. 19, "veluti si Titio decem dedero, ut Stickum intra Kalendas manumittat," and elsewhere. Acron and Porphyryion omit the preposition before Nerio, as I have done, but the latter says, "quidam Anerio legunt," and this means 'a Nerio,' which Comm. Cruq. has. The Scholiast on Persius ii. 14 ('Nerio jam tertia conditum uxor'), and Servius on Aen. vii. 422, quote this passage without the preposition. All the early editions till Lambinus omit it. Fea quotes several MSS. in which 'a' does not occur. It appears in most MSS. and modern editions, but it is not wanted. The Roman expression for entering a debit against any one was 'expensum referre alicii;' to put to his credit was 'acceptum referre alicii;' sometimes, but rarely, 'abs aliquo,' not 'a.' (See Cicero, Orat. c. 47, and other authorities quoted by Mr. Long on Caesar, B. G. viii. 38.)

The Scholiast on Persius (i. c.) says that the Nerus there mentioned made a great deal of money through the death of his wives 'and was a notorious usurer, being the same that Horace alludes to. I put no faith in this. The name in either case stands for any body that the case may suit, though it may have become proverbial through some person that bore it. 'Cicuta' is a nickname, the Scholiasts say, given to some notorious usurer for his sour temper. Horace represents him as a shrewd person to have dealings with; one who when he advanced money looked well to the security, and when he bounded a debtor tied the knot tight.

71. Proteus.] For the story of Proteus, see Hom. Odys. iv. 416, sqq., 455, sqq.;—

οὐδ' ὃ γὰρ ἐδόξα ἐπέλθετο τήνυς ἀλλ' ἦτο προτίστατων γίνετ' υήγενειος, αὐτὰρ ἔπειτα ἔραον καὶ πάραλις, ἕνεκ' ἐμίσεως τοῦ γίγνετο ν científico ὤσορ, καὶ δείνερον υψι-πέτηλον,

(which Virgil has imitated, Georg. iv. 405, sqq.). Ovid, Fast. i. 369, sqq.; A. A. i. 761:—

"Utique leves Proteus modo se tenuabit in undas; Nunc levo, nunc arbor, nunc erit hirtus aper;"

As to 'rapies in jus,' see note on S. i. 9. 79. 'Malis ridentem alienus' is a proverbial way of expressing a hypocrite who puts on a face not his own. The words are taken, without strict regard to their application, from the Odyssey (xx. 347), οι δ' ἦσαν γναθράτοι γειλοίοι ἀλληρωταί, where the suitors of Penelope laugh when they would rather have cried, like 'Quin et Ixion Titysque vultu Risit invito ' (C. iii 11. 21). Orelli's quotation of Thucydides (i. 70), τοὺς μὲν σώμασιν ἀλλοτριωτάς ὑπὸ τῆς πλείως χρωται, τὴν γνώμην δὲ σιέιο-ταργ, and his interpretation ' effuse ri-
Cum rapies in jus malis ridentem alienis,
Fiet aper, modo avis, modo saxum et cum volet arbor.
Si male rem gerere insani est, contra bene sani, Putidius multo cerebrum est mihi crede, Perilli,
Dictantis quod tu nunquam rescribere possis.
Audire atque togam jubeo componere, quisquis
Ambitione mala aut argentii pallet amore,
Quisquis luxuria tristive superstitione
Aut alio mentis morbo calet; hoc propius me,
Dum doceo insanire omnes, vos ordine adite.
Danda est ellebori multo pars maxima avaris;
Nescio an Anticyram ratio illis destinet omnom.
Heredes Staberi summam incidere seculero:

dentem," do not give the meaning of the passage. The sense is, that this cunning debtor, when his creditor sues him, will put on all kinds of characters, tell all manner of lies, get out of the obligation, and laugh at his creditor, let him do what he will to bind him. The reading 'in iura,' which appears in a great many MSS., and in most of the old editions, has no meaning. It arose from a misunderstanding of the passage, in which 'malis alienis' was supposed to mean another person's misfortunes. Compare Valerius Flac. (Argon. viii. 163), "Errantesque genae atque aliéno gaudia vultu Semper erant."

74. Si male rem gerere] See v. 40, n. 75. Putidus This Forcellini explains, I believe correctly, "insanius et quasi corruptus." Perillus is supposed to be the 'Cicuta' mentioned above, v. 69, but see note. As 'scribere' signifies to make an entry, 'rescribere' signifies to cancel the entry, which would be done when the debt was paid and not before. 'Quod tu nunquam rescribere possis' therefore means 'what you can never recover.' 'Dictare' is to dictate the form of bond for the borrower to write out or the sum to be entered in his own books, and either way is equivalent to lending money.

77. togam jubeo componere,] This only means to sit down and composedly attend to what he is going to say. He turns from Damaskippus to an imaginary mixed audience.

83. Nescio an Anticyram] On the phrases 'nescio an,' 'haud sclo an,' 'I incline to think it is so,' see Key's L. G. 1421. Anticyra, called by Strabo A:vrikipha, was a town of Phocis on the Sinus Corinthiacus, and was celebrated for the production of hellebore, a medicine used very generally in cases of madness. It would seem probable from ver. 166 and other places that patients went to reside at Anticyra sometimes. The modern name is Aspra Spitia, that is, 'hospital.' There were two other places of the name (Strabo, pp. 418: 434), one in Thessaly, another in Locris, each of which is said to have produced hellebore. Whether this can be supported by A. P. 300, "Si tribus Anticyris caput insanabile nunquam," is more than doubtful (see n.). 'Destinare,' Orelli says, is a medical term for prescribing.

84. Staberi] There is no information about this person in the Scholiasts. The praenomen of Arrius was Quintus (below, ver. 243, "Quinti progenies Arri par noble fratum"), and he is known from several allusions in Cicero. He was the person Verres wanted to succeed him (in Verr. ii. 2. 15), being a person of like mind with himself, and of the lowest origin. See Brut. c. 69, where he is said to be an instance how, in those days as in these, without learning or talent and merely by time-serving, a man might rise to honour and wealth. He was praetor in A. D. 682 (Liv. Epit. 96), and stood for the consulship A. D. 695, but was rejected, Caesar having withdrawn his support from him (Cic. ad Att. ii. 7), and in that year it appears that he gave a great funeral entertainment. It is mentioned by Cicero in his speech in Vatinium, c. 12, 13. He there calls him "familiaris meus," which raises a doubt whether he is the person mentioned in the Brutus. But it is not conclusive. He was dead when that treatise was written. Orelli calls him 'famous.' The exhibition of gladiators was originally a funeral ceremony, and so continued after the practice became common as a popular entertainment. After the funeral of a wealthy man a distribution of meat to the people ('visceratio') was not uncommon, and a public banquet ('epulum') was very common, to which persons of the highest distinction that the friends could get to attend were invited. The distribution of corn ('frumentatio') was also a common practice. This Staberius, who considered it a disgrace for any man to die poor, willed that the amount of his property should be recorded on his tomb; and his heredes if they did not do this were, by a conditio in his testament, 'damnati,' under a penalty, to celebrate his funeral with gladiatorial shows and an epulum on a scale to be determined by Arrius, which would be an extravagant scale. 'Damnati' is a legal term, and penalties were common in Roman wills. We must infer from the text that 200 pairs of gladiators were in Horace's day an extravagant number, but in later times it would not have been excessive (see art. 'Gladiatores' in Dict. Antt.). "Frumenti quantum metit Africa" is a proverbial expression, see C. i. 1. 10. As to 'patruus,' see C. iii. 12. 3, and above, S. 2. 97. Compare Persius (iii. 96), "Ne sis mihi titor."

89. Prudentem] Cicero (in a fragment quoted by Forcell.) defines 'prudentia' thus: "Sapiens est providere, a quo sapientia est appellata prudentia." What Staberius provided for is related in what follows.

90. summam patrimonii] It would seem from this as if he had not increased the property his father had left him, since the amount of his patrimonii was the amount to be engraved on the tomb.

91. Quoad] This is to be pronounced as a monosyllable. On the formation of the word, see Key's L. G. 799.

93. perisset] This, which is the reading of the Blandinian and other good MSS., is probably the true one. The common reading used to be 'periret.' Bentley approves and argues for the pluperfect, but leaves 'periret' in the text, no doubt through an oversight. He quotes Terence (Phorm. i. 2. 69), "Non si redisset ei pater veniam daret;" and Adelph. ii. 1. 24, "Si attigisses ferres infortunium;" and S. i. 6. 79. 'Nequior' has more irony in it I think than Orelli perceives. He thinks it means more prodigal. But Staberius' doctrine was that goodness was measured by wealth, and that if he should die poorer by the third part of an as, he would, in the same proportion, be in his own esteem a less virtuous man.

97. Sapiens? Etiam, et rex.] 'Wise? say you. Aye, and a king to boot, and any thing he shall please.' Some MSS. omit 'et,' but 'etiam' in replies means 'even so.' Compare Cic. Acad. Prior. 32, "Ant etiam aut non, respondere possis," 'yes or no.'
Propter onus segnes. Uter est insanior horum? Nil agit exemplum, litem quod lite resolvit. Si quis emat citharas, emptas comportet in unum, Nec studio citharae nec Musae deditus ulli; 105 Si scalpra et formas non sutor, nautica vela Aversus mercaturis: delirius et amens Undique dicatur merito. Qui discrepat istis Qui nummos aurumque recondit, nescius uti Compositis metuensque velut contingere sacrum? Si quas ad ingentem frumenti semper acervum Porrectus vigilet cum longo fuste, neque illinc Audeat esuriens dominus contingere granum, Ac potius foliis parcus vesecatur amaris; Si positis intus Chii veterisque Falerni 115 Mille cadis—nihil est, tercentum milibus—acre Potet acetum; age, si et stramentis incubet, unde-Octoginta annos natus, cui stragula vestis, nothing for money, while he used it for the purpose of sensual indulgence. The story Horace mentions is derived with little variation from Diog. Laert. (ii. 77), τὸν θεράποντος ἐν ὅδω βαστάζοντος ἀργυρὸν καὶ βαρυνομένου, ὡς φασίν οἱ περὶ τὸν Βίωνα ἐν τοῖς διαγμασίς, ἀπόθεσεν, ἡρῴος τὸ πλάνον καὶ θέουν ἐννασαι βάσατε. See Epp. i. 1. 18; n.

103. Item quod lite resolvit. Which settles one doubtful point by raising another. It supposes that the conduct of Aristippus may by some be considered noble.

104. Si quis emat citharas. Sir Henry Halford relates an instance of lunacy which illustrates this: “In another well-known case which justified the Lord Chancellor’s issuing a writ ‘de lunatico inquirendo,’ the insanity of the gentleman manifested itself in appropriating everything to himself and parting with nothing. When strongly urged to put on a clean shirt he would do it, but it must be over the dirty one; nor would he put off his shoes when he went to bed. He would agree to purchase any thing that was to be sold, but he would not pay for it. He was, in fact, brought up from the King’s Bench prison, where he had been committed for not paying for a picture valued at 1500 pounds which he had agreed to buy; and in giving my opinion to the jury I recommended them to go over to his house in Portland-place, where they would find 15,000l. worth of property of every description; this picture, musical instruments, clocks, baby-houses, and bables, all huddled in confusion together on the floor of his dining-room. I need not add that the jury found the gentleman insane” (Halford’s Essays, p. 63).

106. Formas. Here this signifies a shoemaker’s last. It is used for moulds in which castings are made, and would express any shape or block on which any thing is made.

107. Aversus mercaturis.] The poets use the dative after verbs, participles, and adjectives, which signify removal or difference. See Key’s L. G. 987. Compare C. ii. 4. 19: “Tam lucro averam,” ‘Istis’ (v. 108) is the dative under the same rule. Quintilian (vii. 1. 11) has “defensioni aversior,” and this Latin use accounts for our ‘averse to.’

115. Chii veterisque Falerni. Pliny says respecting the age of Falernian, “Falernum nec in novitate nec in nimia vetustate corpori salubre est. Media ejus aetas a quinto decimo anno incipit” (N. H. xxii. 20).

116. Nihil est.] He might have said ‘immo.’ See S. i. 3. 20, n. A similar mode of expression, as I understand the line, occurs in Aeschylus (Eumen. 30):

ἐξίασα γὰρ γαρφής, ὀβδέλλη, ἀντίπατς μὲν ὅθ’

117. Unde-Octoginta annos natus. After he has completed seventy-nine years, that is, in his eightieth year.

118. Stragula vestis.] In ‘stratum’ omne vestimentum contineri quod injiciatur Labeo ait: neque enim dubium est quin stragula vestis sit omne pallium περίστρωμα.
Blattarum ac tinearum epulac, putrescat in area:
Nimixir insanus paucis videatur, eo quod
Maxima pars hominum morbo jactatur eodem.
Filius aut etiam haec libertus ut eibat heres,
Dis inimice senex, custodis? Ne tibi desit?
Quantulum enim summae curtabit quisque dierum,
Ungere si caules oleo moliere caputque
Cooperis impecta foedum porrigne? Quare,
Si quidvis satis est, perjurus, surripis, aufers
Undique? Tun sanus? Populum si caedere saxis Incipias servosque tuos quos aere pararis,

In victum ergo vestem accipiemus non stragula; in stratum omnem stragulam vestem." (Ulpian, quoted by Forcell. v. 'stragulum'). The ancients had very expensive coverings for their beds. They were usually purple, wide, and sometimes richly embroidered. "Multae stragulae vestes" are reckoned among the rich furniture of Heraclius of Syracuse. (Cic. in Ver. ii. 2. 14.) Compare also ii. 4. 26, where Cicero says that Verres had a weaving establishment for the manufacture of these coverlets in every wealthy house in Sicily. One lady of Sestes, named Lamia, took three years to make him a 'stragula vestis,' which was dyed with the richest purple throughout. By way of illustrating the reckless extravagance of M. Antonius, Cicero says (Phil. ii. 27) you might see the couches in his slaves' rooms covered with the purple περιστρώματα that had belonged to Cn. Pompeius. The affectation of Zollius, who pretends to be ill, that he may have an opportunity of displaying his bed and its furniture, is cleverly told by Martial (ii. 16):

"Zollius aegrotat; faciunt haec stragula febrem;
Si fierit sanus coccina quid facient?
Quid torus a Nilo? quid Sidone tinctus olenti?
Ostendit stultas quid nisi morbus opes?
Quid tibi cum medicis? dimitte Machanonas omnes.
Vis fieri sanus? stragula sume mea."

119. putrescat] There is no variation in the MSS. here. Below (v. 194) the majority and best are in favour of 'putesco.' (See note.)

121. morbo jactatur eodem.] That is madness. The word 'jactari' is applied medically to the tossing of the sick and writhing of those in pain. See Lucretius (iii. 505):—

"Haec igitur tantis ubi morbis corpore in ipso
  Jactentur, miserisque modis distracta laborent."

123. Dis inimice senex.] This is an adaptation of θυσίς ἵχθρος, a common Greek expression. See Demos. (de Cor. p. 124): κόλακες καὶ θυσίς ἵχθροι καὶ ταλάλα, and p. 245, προδοτῶν καὶ ἐφρο-δόκων καὶ θυσίς ἵχθρων ἀνθρώπων.

127. perjuras,] Other examples of this form are given by Forcellini, who says the best MSS. have 'perjuro' in Cicero, where 'pejero' is usually found in the editions. As a compromise between the two forms, Orelli's best MSS. in this place have 'pejurus.'

129. servosque tuos quos aere pararis.] Bentley will lay any wager ('equidem ansim quavis sponsione contendere') Horace did not write thus, but 'servosque tuos quos aere pararis.' 'Tuo' appears in Ascensius' text and in a very few of Fea's MSS. Tan. Faber has that word. All other MSS. and editions till Bentley have 'tuos;' 've' for 'que' is his own invention. Several modern editors have adopted 'tuo.' Heindorf has 'tuos.' I do not see any great difference between the two readings. 'Quos aere pararis' enhances the folly of the man who, having laid out his money in the purchase of slaves, employs himself in breaking their heads with stones. Such a man, says Stertinius, would be counted mad by acclamation. 'Well,' then,' he adds to the miser, 'are you not mad who poison your mother or strangle your wife, to get rid of the expense of keeping them? Of course not; for you do it, not at Argos, but at Rome; not in the character of Orestes, but of a respectable citizen. But do you not believe Orestes was mad before he killed his mother, and when no one suspected it?' For 'quid enim' (as to which see note on S. i. 1. 7) Bentley with bad taste substitutes 'quid ni?' What Horace alludes to...
Insanum te omnes pueri clamentque puellae:
Cum laqueo uxorrem interimis matremque veneno
Incolumi capite es? Quid enim, neque tu hoc facis Argis, Nec ferro ut demens genitricem occidis Orestes.
An tu reris eum occisa insanisse parente,
Ac non ante malis dementem actum Furiis quam
In matris jugulo ferrum tepefecit acutum?
Quin ex quo est habitus male tutae mentis Orestes
Nil sane fecit quod tu reprehendere possis:
Non Pyladen ferro violare aususve sororem
Electram, tantum maledicit utrique vocando
Hane Furiam, hunc allud jussit quod splendida bilis.
Pauper Opimius argenti positi intus et auri,
Qui Veientanum festis potare diebus
Campana solitus trulla vappamque profestis,
Quondam lebido grandi est oppressus, ut heres
Jam circum loculos et claves laetus ovanesque
Curret. Hunc medicus multum celer atque fidelis
Excitat hoc pacto: mensam poni jubet atque
Effundi saccos nummorum, accedere plures
Ad numerandum; hominem sic erigit; addit et illud:
Ni tua custodis avidus jam haec auferet heres.
Men vivo? Ut vivas igitur vigila: hoc age. Quid vis?
Deficient inopem venae te ni cibus atque
Ingens accedit stomacho fultura rumen.
Tu cessas? Agedum, sume hoc ptisanarium oryzae.

when he speaks of Orestes calling Pylades names is uncertain. In Euripides’ play of Orestes (v. 264) he says to his sister:

μετέρα μαντών iμανόν jρυγών
μόνον με οχμάζεις, ως βάλγας είς Τάφραν.

130. pueri clamentque puellae:] “Que” in the poets is sometimes placed, not after the second of the two words compared, but after a word which is the common predicate of both clauses (Key’s L. G. 1441). In a note Professor Key adds, “a construction that probably began with a repetition of the predicate, ‘pueri clament clamentque puellae.’ ” See below (v. 157): “furis percamque rapinis;” and many other instances.

137. male tutae mentis] Against Nic. Heinsius, who proposed to substitute ‘motae’ for ‘tutae,’ Bentley shows from Celsius that ‘tutus’ was in medical language equivalent to ‘sanus.’ ‘Incolumis’ is used in the same sense (v. 132).

130. splendida bilis.] ‘Splendida’ is a redundant epithet. Persius, who imitates Horace frequently, calls it ‘vitrea bilis’ (iii. 8). Heindorf quotes from Galen (περι ατρ. συμπ. ii. 50); μελαια χολή στιλπνο- τια αυτοι τινων αματως λατιπερ, ὁσπερ και η εις της νεκρας θαλατης άσβαλτος ην ἱνοελαειν νυμφαδονιν.
142. Opimius] This man, who was ‘magnas inter opes inops’ (C. iii. 16. 28) is quite unknown except from this description. On the wine of Veii, see note on C. i. 9. 7, and Persius (S. v. 147): “Veientanumque rubellum.” On ‘Campana trulla’ see S. i. 6. 118. ‘Trulla,’ which has the same element as τρύμαλων, was a drinking-cup of some shape. It was not necessarily of earthenware as here. Cicero (in Verr. ii. 4. 27) mentions one made of a single precious stone of enormous size, with a gold handle.

147. Multum celer] See S. i. 3. 57.

155. Agedum, sume hoc ptisanarium
SATIRARUM II. 3.

oryzae.] On 'agedum' see S. i. 4. 38. 'Pisanarium' is a diminutive of 'pisana,' and means a little broth. Rice was imported from Egypt.

157. furtis pereamque rapinis?] See note on S. i. 3. 122, and above v. 130. The reading 'pereamve,' which Bentley and Fea adopt against most of the MSS. and nearly all the old editions, appears to me to spoil the sentence. The wretched man, when he hears the price of his food, conjures up the notion that every body is conspiring to rob and plunder him: a state of mind which the precision of the disjunctive particle does not express.

158. Quisnam igitur sanus?] These questions and answers are all carried on by Stertinius himself. 'Stultus et insanus' means 'he is a fool, and therefore mad;' not 'he is a fool, and moreover he is mad,' since folly and madness have already been declared to be identical.

161. Craterum dixisse putato] Craterus was an eminent physician of that day. Cicero speaks of him as attending the daughter of Atticus during her illness, A.D.C. 709; "de Attica doleo: credo autem Cratero" (ad Att. xii. 14). He is mentioned by Persius as representing the profession (S. iii. 66):

"— Venienti occurrere morbo. Et quid opus Cratero magnos promittere montes?"

As to 'cardiacus' Heindorf quotes Celsius' definition (iii. 19): "Nihil est aliud quam nemia imbecillitas corporis quod, stomacho languente, immodico sudore digestit."

163. morbo tentantur acuto.] This whole verse is repeated Epp. i. 6. 28.

'Morbus acutus,' 'an acute disease,' is opposed to 'longus,' 'a chronic disease.'

165. porcum Laribus:] C. iii. 23. 4. 'Let him offer a thanksgiving to his Lores who have protected him from those vices.'

166. barathrone] The Scholiasts, MSS., and editions vary in respect to this word. Acrón reads 'Balatro,' and explains it as the name of a 'scurra ineptus,' the usual description of indifferent characters not otherwise known. Porphyrian has the same, but notices 'barathron' as a various reading; and Comm. C. r. has this word, from which he says is derived the name, which he spells Barathro. (See note on S. i. 2. 2.) All Orelli's MSS. have 'barathron,' and he adopts that word, which he explains as some deep pit, such as malefactors were thrown into at Athens and Lacedaemon. All the editions till Bentley have 'barathron.' He edits 'balatro,' not as a proper name, like the Scholiasts, but in the sense in which it is used before (see the note above mentioned). He mentions two MSS. in its favour, and Fea mentions others. Fea himself adopts 'balatro' ('balatro' being the nominative, 'utrum ut balatro'), which Bentley seems to prefer, but does not edit. The great preponderance of authority is in favour of 'barathron,' and I adopt it without Orelli's explanation. Any pit will do. We need not go to Athens or Sparta.

168. Servius Oppidius] This person is unknown except from this passage. He lived at Casaniam, a town of Apulia (see S. i. 5. 91, n.). His property was reduced to two farms, though his ancestors were rich. This is Orelli's explanation. The more obvious one is that he was rich, even Antiquo censu, gnatis divisse duobus
Fertur et hoc moriens pueris dixisse vocatis
Ad lectum: Postquam te talos, Aule, nucesque
Ferre sinu laxo, donare et ludere vidi,
Te, Tiberi, numerare, cavis abscondere tristem;
Extimui ne vos ageret vasania discors,
Tu Nomentanum, tu ne sequerere Cicutam.
Quare per divos oratus uterque Penates,
Tu cave ne minuas, tu ne majus facias id
Quod satis esse putat pater et natura coërcet.
Praeterea ne vos titillet gloria jure
Jurando obstringam ambo: uter aedilis fueritve
Vestrum praetor, is intestabilis et sacer esto.
In cicer atque faba bona tu perdasqure lupinis, with two farms, according to the standard of incomes in the old times. This is Acron's interpretation, which Heindorf approves. As to the form 'divisse,' see S. 1. 5. 79.

171. talos,—nucsesque] The 'talus' was the knuckle-bone of some animal, generally a sheep, the Greek name for which was άστραγαλός. The manner of playing with it was the same among the Greeks and the Romans, and the same bones are still used by boys in England. The ancients used them in games of skill and of chance; for the latter purpose they were marked as dice, and thrown usually from a box called 'frilitus,' 'phimus,' &c. (see S. ii. 17, n.; and Becker's Gallus, on the 'Social Games,' and Dict. Ant.). Boys had also games of various kinds with nuts, as they have now. Suetonius relates that Augustus "animi laxandi causa modo piscabatur hamo, modo talis aut ocellatis nucibusque ludebat cum pueris minutis" (Octav. 63), where, according to Forcellini, 'ocellatis' means small round stones like eyes. But the reading seems to be uncertain. Oppilius observed that his son Aulus carried about his bones and his nuts in a careless way in a loose fold of his toga, ready to give them away to any of his companions or to lose them at play; while Tiberius always counted his carefully and hid them away, carrying a serious face wherever he went; and from these early signs of character he foresaw that one would prove a spendthrift and the other a miser. As to Nomentanus see S. i. 1. 102, n.; and on Cicuta see above, v. 68.

178. coërcet.] Keeps within bounds, defines, limits.

181. is intestabilis et sacer esto.] A person who was 'intestabilis' was 'infamia' and something more. He could not appear as a witness before a magistrate, and so lost virtually much of his capacity for private rights, which was not a consequence of ordinary 'infamia.' (See Dict. Ant., art. 'Infamia.') He was also, Unterholzner says (ap. Heindorf), incapable of the right of 'mancipatio,' and incapable of all proceedings 'per aedem et libram,' because in such proceedings witnesses were wanted. He was not able to witness a will, or, according to Cruquius' Scholiast, to make a will, or to receive any thing by will. The conventional meaning of 'intestabilis' came to be the same as 'detestabilis,' but we may take the legal sense here. As to 'sacer' Festus (quoted by Heindorf) says: 'Homo sacer is est quem populus judicavit ob maleficium, neque nefas est eum immolare, sed qui occidit parricidei non damnatur, nam lege tribunicia prima ceditur, 'Si quis eum qui eo plicisatio sacer sit occiderit, parricidea ne sit.' Ex quo quivis homo malus autque improbus sacer appellari solet." Thus Oppilius imprecates a curse upon his sons if they should ever aspire so high as to the office of an aedile or a praetor. Wieland and others suppose the magistracies of their own town to be meant. Heindorf seems to be right in opposing this view.

182. in cicer atque faba] As if his sons were already seeking votes, he says to each of them (for 'tu' must be so understood), 'so you would throw away your money in distributing largesses to the people (such as the aediles were wont to give) in order that you may strut about in the Latus ut in Circo spatiere et aëneus ut stes, Nudus agris, nudus nummis, insane, paternis;
Scilicet ut plausus quos fert Agrippa feras tu,
Astuta ingenuum volpes imitata leonem.
Ne quis humasse velit Ajacem, Atrida, vetas cur?

Circus, and have a bronze statue voted you —that is to say, that you may be loaded with the same honours as the great Agrippa, like a fox aping a lion.' It was customary for the aediles to distribute grain or vegetables of the sort mentioned to the common people at the festival of the Floralia (Comm.
Cruq.). See Persius (v. 177):

"— vigilia, et cicer ingere large Rixanti populo, nostra ut Floralia possint
Aprici meminisse senes."

Agrippa, after he had been praetor and consul, undertook the aedilesiphip, which was the lowest of the curule offices, in A.U.C.
721, to gratify Augustus. His munificence was very great in the erection of public buildings and the celebration of games on a splendid scale, and large donations to the people. 'Latus spatiere' is explained in the note on Epod. iv. 7. Such statues as are here supposed were usually erected in The Forum, and one had probably been lately placed there in honour of Agrippa.
It may be observed that Oppidius plainly means the first part of his address, from
'In cicerre,' &c., to apply to the careless extravagant Aulus, while the simile of the fox and lion is only applicable to the astute Tibeius, who, if he spends his money, will look for a substantial return for it in such honours and rewards as he saw Agrippa had won. The old editions till Lambinus had 'lactus;' 'latus' is the reading of all the MSS. The greater number of MSS. are in favour of 'aut aeneus,' and that is the reading of all the editions till Bentley, who adopts that of some good MSS., 'et aeneus,' saying that this word is never used as a trisyllable. I do not see that the disjunctive particle is wanted, as some editors affirm. As to 'aeneus' see C. iii. 3, 65, n.
The form of expression 'aeneus ut stes' is like that in C. iv. 1. 19: "Albanos pro-te lacus Ponet marmoream," and Virg.
(Ec. vii. 35):

"Nunc te marmoreum pro tempore fecimus;
at tu
Si fetura gregem suppleverit aureus esto."

The same way of speaking is common in Greek. 'Astuta ingenuum,' &c. appears to be nothing but a suitable illustration invented by Horace. It is obvious enough, and we need not suppose it a proverb or a current fable of Aesop or any one else.

187. Ne quis humasse velit] This scene is taken from the reminiscence of Ulysses with Agamemnon in the Ajax of Sophocles (v. 1928, sqq.). 'Veto' usually governs the infinitive mood. Once more, as here, Horace uses it with 'ne' and the subjunctive (Epp. ii. l. 289): "Edicto vetuit ne quis sae praeter Apellem Fingeret;" and once with the subjunctive, but without 'ne'
(C. iii. 2. 26):

"— vetabo qui Cereris sacrum
Vulgarit arcanae sub isdem Solvat phaselon."

Tibullus has 'veto' with 'ut.' "Illius ut verbis sis mihi lenta veto" (ii. 6. 36).
'Atrida' is the later form of the vocative,
The Greek 'Atride' is used in Epp. i. 7.
43. The termination of Aenches in Aen.
iii. 475: "Conjugo Aenches Veniues dignare supero," on which Servius quotes Horace's
'Atrida,' is Greek, being the Doric a for η.
'Cur' is awkwardly placed, as it is in S. 7.
104. The connexion with what precedes lies in the extravagant and imperious conduct of the king as illustrating the excesses of pride, and proving that madness is found in high places and in the heart of kings. Stertinis, it must be remembered, is exposing the folly of ambition. The dialogue is supposed to be between Agamemnon and one of his soldiers in view of the unburied corpse of Ajax. 'Nil ultra quapro plebeius' is interposed by the soldier: 'I am a king,' ('I am one of the common sort, and dare ask no more!')—and moreover the thing is just that I command.' There is a good deal of irony here. The justice of the command is secondary to the will of the despot, and his subject is ready with instinctive awe to admit that it is so; but the tyrant condescends to justify his act; and the man of low degree, not without trembling and doubt and astonishment at such condescension, ventures to ask that his reason may be enlightened a little, in order that he may learn to acquiesce willingly. Compare Juvenal (S. x. 69, sqq.):"

Rex sum. Nil ultra quero plebeius. Et aestuam
Rem imperito; ac si cui videoer non justus, inuito
Dicere quod sentit permitto. Maxime regum,
Di tibi dent capta classem deducere Troja!
Ergo consulere et mox respondere liecbit?
Console. Cur Ajax, heros ab Achille secundus, Putescit toties servatis clarus Achivis,
Gaudet ut populus Priami Priamusque inhumato,
Per quem tot juvenes patrio caruere sepulcro?
Mille ovium insanus morti dedit, inclitum Ulixen

"— Sed quo cedidit (Sejanus)
sub crimine? quisnam Delator? quibus indicibus, quo teste pro-bavit?
Nil horum: verbosa et grandis epistola venit
A Capreis. Bene habet; nil plus interrogo."

Bentley, mistaking the connexion, and missing the force of the parenthetical humility of the second speaker, reads 'quære' against the metre, but on the authority of the oldest Blandian MS. As the king immediately goes on to invite comments we need not make him stultify himself by here refusing to listen to it. Stephens quotes a Greek proverb, μὲ ών καὶ βασιλεί νόμος ἄγαρφος, 'fools and kings are governed by an unwritten law.' And Juvenal's 'Sic volo sic jubeo; stat pro ratione voluntas' (vi.
223) will occur to every body.

191. Di tibi dent capta classem deducere Troja! [This is a version of Chryses' words to the king (II. i. 10):

υμίν μὲν θεοὶ δὁϊνεν 'Ολυμπία δόματα' ἐχονεν
ἐκτίσσαι Πριάμου τὸν, ἐν δ' ὁικαὶ ἰκεσβαι.

Three of Orelli's best MSS., and many others, have 'reducere,' which Lambinus and all the editions after him till Bentley adopted. Heindorf has done the same.
The old editions (Ven. 1483, and Ascens.
1511) have 'dudcere,' which, independently of the quantity, is the word required. 'Reducere' can only be said in the country to which the return is to take place. 'Con-sulere,' as Orelli says, is used humorously, as if the person addressed was a jurisconsultus. On 'respondere' see C. S. 55, n.

194. Putascit] The two forms 'pu-trescere' and 'putescere' are in use, and a difference of meaning is assigned to them, as if 'putescere' meant to rot and emit a stench; the other simply to go to decay.
There is no probability in such distinctions.
The old editions, with Lambinus, Torren-tius, and Bentley, have 'putescit' here.
The majority and best of the MSS. are in favour of 'putescit.' I do not think it is easy to decide. The instances of 'putescos' quoted by Forcellini are all doubtful, according to the MSS.; but the word flows naturally from 'putes,' and the root is the same in both verbs. Orelli says that the meaning of both is the same, but that 'putesos' is used because it is softer. But 'putrescet,' is used above (v. 119), and the instances he quotes, 'inrecruit,' for 'inrecruitus,' 'ru-besco,' for 'rubresco,' are not to the purpose, since in both those cases the softer form is apparently adopted in order to avoid the double 'e.' (See Mr. Long's note on Cic. in Verr. ii. 2. 3, and S. ii. 5. 93.)

195. Gaudet ut populus Priami Priamus-que] Comp. II. i. 255: ἡ κεῖν γνῆθαιν Πρίαμος Παμάυοτ τή παιδείσ.

197. Mille ovium] "'Mille,' in the singular is commonly an adjective; in the plural perhaps always a substantive," (Key's L. G. 1604). An exception to the latter part of this rule has been noticed above
(S. i. 6. 111). Gallius (i. 16) has mentioned instances in which, as here, 'mille,'
the singular, is used as a noun substantive.
He takes as his text a passage of Quadrigarus (Annal. iii.): "Ibi occiditur mille ho-mineum," and quotes Lucilius (Sat. iii.):
"Ad portum mille a porta est, sex inde
Salernum." Varro (Human. xviii.): "Ad Romuli initium plus mille et centum annorum est." Cato (Orig. i.): "Inde est ferme mille passuum," Cicero (Phil. vi. 5):
"Janus medius (v. sup. v. 18) in L. An-tonii clientela est? Quis unquam in ullo Jano inventus est qui L. Antonio mille nummum ferret expensum?" He quotes other instances, and concludes that the Romans used 'mille,' not as χιλιον, but as χιλιάς. Lucilius, in two passages quoted by Gallius, uses the ablative singular 'mille:'
"Hunc milli passuum qui viscret atque
Et Menelaum una mecum se occidere clamans.
Tu cum pro vitula statuis dulcem Aulide natam
Ante aras spargisque mola caput, improbe, salsa, Rectum animi servas? Quorsum? Insanus quid enim Ajax Fecit cum stravit ferro pecus? Abstinuit vim Uxore et gnato; mala multa precatus Atridis,
Non ille aut Teucrum aut ipsum violavit Ulixen.
Verum ego, ut haerentes adverso litore naves
Eriperem, prudens placavi sanguine divos.
Nempe tuo, furioso. Meo, sed non furiosus.
Qui species alias veris scelerisque tumultu

duobus." "Tu milli numnum potes uno quserere centum."—Morti dedit is exactly equivalent to our 'put to death.' 'Do' means 'to put; so its compounds 'abdo,'
'to put away;' 'addo,' 'to put to;' 'condo,'
'to put together;' 'dedo,' 'to put down (one's arms); 'dido,' 'to put asunder or distribute;' 'edo,' 'to put forth;' 'indo,
'to put on;' 'trado,' 'to put across, or to hand over,' &c. See Key's L. G. 542.

203. mecum se occidere clamans.] See Soph. Aj. 42:
\[ \text{t} \text{i} \text{ } \text{ } \text{d} \text{y} \text{a} \text{ } \text{p} \text{o} \text{u} \text{m} \text{a} \text{n} \text{a} \text{ } \text{t} \text{i} \text{m} \text{a} \text{ } \text{t} \text{h} \text{e} \text{n} \text{a} \text{ } \text{t} \text{i} \text{o} \text{n} \text{e} \text{p} \text{u} \text{r} \text{p} \text{i} \text{t} \text{e} \text{i} \text{ } \text{b} \text{a} \text{s} \text{u} \text{v} \text{;} \text{d} \text{e} \text{k} \text{e} \text{n} \text{ } \text{i} \text{n} \text{ } \text{v} \text{e} \text{i} \text{i} \text{n} \text{ } \text{h} \text{e} \text{r} \text{i} \text{a} \text{ } \text{h} \text{r} \text{a} \text{i} \text{n} \text{v} \text{e} \text{n} \text{a} \text{b} \text{i} \text{a} \text{ } \text{f} \text{o} \text{n} \text{v} \text{y} \text{.} \]

200. spargisque mola caput.] This is the 'mola salsa,' the meal and salt with which the head of the victim was sprinkled.
(See C. iii. 23. 20, n.)

201. Quorsum? Insanus] There are different ways of punctuating this passage.
Acron and Porphyrian have 'quorsum insanus?' which the latter explains "quid enim? inquit: inter quos insanus est, inter luxuriosos et avaros, an inter ambitiosos?"
Comm. Cruq. punctuates as I have done:
"Quorsum: supp. tendis; quid vis? loquitur Agamemnon." So also Ven. 1483.
Orelli's three best MSS. go with the two first Schoiastas. But 'quorsum?' expresses a sudden and angry interruption of the king, astonished at the man's boldness, while he, being warm, goes on without heeding Agamemnon's anger. So I understand the passage. Heindorf and Bentley have their own punctuation.

202. Uxore et gnato:] Tecmessa and Eurytaces.

204. Non ille] 'Non' must not be separated from 'ille.' The meaning is 'not even he,' ob's lexivo. So in C. iii. 21. 10:
"Non ille quanquam Socrates madet Sermonibus te negligent horridus."

205. adverso litore] This Orelli, against his own first and I think better judgment, interprets with Heindorf and others the shore opposite to Troy. I think the shore is called adverse because they wanted to get away from it and could not. Properly the winds were adverse, not the coast. But the transfer of the epithet from the wind to the shore is in accordance with a common usage. Comm. Cruq. interprets 'adverso' by "inimico, unde navigare non poteram."

207. Meo, sed non furiosus.] This is a very polite reply, considering the provocation. The colloquy ends here. Horace, we may presume, had something before him to suggest what must appear to us a rather unnatural and far-fetched scene.

208. Qui species alias veris scelerisque tumultu Permixtas is very intelligible. But 'alias' cannot stand alone. Bentley says it may be in the sense of 'alienas a veritate,' 'foreign to the truth;' or 'alias atque ipse opinatus est;' or, if not, he proposes to adopt 'falsas' or 'vanas,' 'levi mutatione,' as usual. He professes not to see what 'sceleris tumultus' can mean, though he could hardly require to be told that guilt breeds confusion in the mind and is the parent of error. The comment of Porph.
is 'qui concepit animo species falsas et vera non videt et demens est,' and that seems to me to be the meaning: he who entertains fancies foreign to the truth, and confused through the blinding power of his own wickedness, is mad.
211. cum occidit desipit agnos;] This is a clumsy collocation of words; but it is not mended by the commas by which 'desipit' is usually preceded and followed.

212. Cum prudens] Here Bentley has substituted 'tu' for 'cum,' which he introduces before 'admittis.' But the MSS. are unanimous in favour of 'cum,' and the pronoun is not wanted. (See below, v. 234, n.) For 'admittis' some MSS. have 'commitis,' which was Forpyrion's reading.

214. Si quis lectica] The 'lectica' of the Romans and φωτιός of the Greeks were introduced from Asia, and differed very slightly from the 'palankeens' in which from time immemorial the Asians have been carried. For full particulars the reader may consult Becker (Gall., 'Exc. on the Carriages') and Dict. Ant. The principal points are mentioned in Mr. Long's note on Cicero, in Verr. ii. 5. 11: 'lectica octophoro ferebatur.'

216. Rufam aut Pusillam] These names commonly occur in inscriptions, as Bentley has shown by quoting several. Other names have been substituted, and he has Pusillam for Pusillum.

217. interdicto huic omne adimat ius] The law of the XII tables assigned the charge of persons who were 'furiosi' to their relations in the male line, 'agusti,' and the praetor in later times chose the person who should act as 'curator' to the insane person. The same law applied to 'prodigi,' notorious spendthrifts. (See article 'Curator' in Dict. Ant., and below Epp. i. 1, 102, sq.). The story of Sophocles brought before an Athenian jury by his sons, and reading the celebrated chorus in his Oedipus Colonus, to prove his sanity, is told by Cicero in his treatise on Old Age, c. 7. 'Onne ius' means every legal right.

221. hic summa est insania; 'Insania' signifies unsoundness of mind generally; 'furor' the same, accompanied with violence. Horace's climax of madness is the fool, the man of crime, and the ambitious the worst of all.

222. vitrea] 'Aut fragilis aut splendida' (Porphy.). It probably means the latter, the glitter of fame. See C. i. 17, 20, where the epithet is applied to Circe, but probably only as it is applied to 'ponto,' in C. iv. 2. 3, in the sense of 'caerulea,' as υαλινος is used in Greek.

223. Hunc circumontuit] This verse, which has a grand Epic tone, Orelli thinks may be taken from Ennius. But Horace may have written it himself. He resorts occasionally to travestie to heighten the force of his satire. The worst stage of insanity is represented by one whom Bellona hovers round with a trumpet of thunder and her bloody scourge, and urges on to madness, as she drove the Roman soldiers, according to Silius' description of the battle of the Trasimenus (v. 220, sqq.):

> "Ipsa facem quatiens, ac flavam sanguine multo
> Sparsa commax, medias acies Bellona pererrat.
> Stridit Tartareae nigro sub pectore divae
> Letiferum murmur feralique horrida cantu
> Buccina lymphatas agit in certamina mentes."
Nunc age luxuriam et Nomentanum arripe mecum: Vincet enim stultos ratio insanire nepotes. 225
Hic simul accepit patrimoni mille talenta, Edicit piscator uti, pomarius, auceps, Unguentarius ac Tusci turba impia vici, Cum scurris fartor, cum Velabro omne macellum, Mane domum veniant. Quid tum? Venere frequentes. 230
Verba facit leno: Quidquid mihi, quidquid et horum Cuique domi est, id crede tuum et vel nunc pete vel eros.

The mad rites of the Bellonarii, the priests of this goddess, who cut their own flesh to offer the blood in sacrifice, are mentioned by Lucan (i. 562):

"—— Tum quos sectis Bellona lacerit Saeva movet cinerine deos;"

and there appear to have been impostors who, professing to be inspired by Bellona, disturbed the peace of the city with their cries. Martial mentions them among the nuisances of a town life (xii. 57. 11): "Nec turba cessat entheata Bellonae."

225. Vincet enim stultos ratio] See S. i. 3. 105, n. As to 'tenta,' see S. 7. 89.

226. Tusci turba impia vici.] The Vicus Tusces was a street south of the Forum, and leading from the Forum along the bottom of the Mons Palatinus on the west into the Velabrum, which was the name of that part of the city that lay between Mons Capitolinus and Mons Aventinus, from the Tiber to the Circus Maximus. The street received its name, according to Livy (ii. 14) and Dion. Halic. (v. 36), from a body of fugitives from Porsena's army, who were hospitably entertained by the Romans, and allowed to occupy this street. It appears to have been filled with shops, some apparently of the better sort. Martial speaks of the richest silks being sold in the Vicus Tusces (xi. 27. 11): "Nec nisi prima velit (amica) de Tusco serica vico." But in Plautus' day the worst characters were found there (Curcul. iv. 1. 21): "In Tusco vico ibi sunt homines qui ipsi sese venditant." The Velabrum is said by Varro (Ling. Lat. iv. 8) to have derived its name from the verb 'vehere,' because the ground was originally a swamp traversed by boats. Here too there appears to have been a collection of shops of the better sort: "prostabant omnia quae ad victus rationem atque delicias pertinebant" (Comm. Cruq.). There were in earlier times different markets for the sale of different provisions, as the 'forum boarium' for oxen, 'olitorium' for vegetables, 'piscarium' and 'piscatorium' for fish, 'cupedinis' for delicacies, &c. These were afterwards (the time is uncertain) all transferred to one large market on the site of the 'forum cupediniis,' on the north side of the Sacra Via, not far from the Forum Romanum. This market was called Macellum, the diminutive form of 'maceria,' the wall with which it was surrounded (see Cic. in Verr. ii. 3. 62, Mr. Long's note). Varro says it was from one A. Macellus, a notorious robber, who had a house in this place, which, when he was banished, was pulled down, and on the spot was built with the money realized by the sale of his property this market-place. He also derives Forum Cupediniis from the names of one Numerius Equitius Cuces, an accomplice of the above Macellus; but these etymologies are not to be trusted.

See Terence ([Eun. ii. 2. 24]):

"—— interea loci ad Macellum ubi adventamus Concurrunt laeti mi obviam cupedinarii omnes, Cetarii, lanii, coqui, fartores, piscatores.

'Fartores' Becker (Gallus, sc. ix. n.) says were aervitati, whose business was to fatten fowls. The 'scurae,' parasites, were sent for to help to consume all this quantity of provisions, and to entertain the new heir.

230. Quid tum?] This is the reading of all but a very few MSS. Bentley found 'qui tum' in one, and changed it to 'qui cum,' which reading has since been found in three MSS. by Fea, who adopts it. 'Quid enim?' is another various reading; 'quid tu?' a third; but this is only 'quid tum' with the mark (u) omitted. The common reading is not likely to have been introduced if Horace had written 'qui cum.'

232. vel nunc pete vel cres.] This sounds like a conventionalism for 'whenever you please.'
Accipe quid contra juvenis responderit aequus:
In nive Lucana dormis ocreatus ut aprum
Coenem ego; tu pisces hiberno ex aequore verris.

Segnis ego, indignus qui tantum possideam: aufer:
Sume tibi decies; tibi tantundem; tibi triplex
Unde uxor media currit de nocte vocata.
Filius Aesopi detractam ex aure Metellae,
Selicet ut decies solidum absorberet, aceto
Diluit insignem baccam: quî sanior ac si
Illud idem in rapidum flumen jaceretve cloacam?

233. aequus:] This is ironical. The young man affecting to be just shows a wanton extravagance towards the most profligate persons.

234. In nive Lucana:] Bentley puts 'tu' for 'in;' but the pronoun does not appear in any MS., and is not wanted. Dramatic transitions like this are effected, not by pronouns, but by turning to the person addressed. It appears from this passage and S. 8. 6, that Lucanian boars were particularly prized. Martial mentions an Etrurian boar as a great present he had received. Horace, in the next Satire (ver. 40) recommends the Umbrian boar above the Laurentian, or those found in the marshy land on the coast of Latium, in the neighbourhood of Laurentum, about sixteen miles from the mouth of the Tiber. The same cause that gave the Umbrian boar its superiority would give value to the Lucanian: both were fed upon the acorns and chestnuts of the Apennines, which are still considered in Italy the best food for hogs, wild and tame. The boar was usually served up whole at large tables, and formed the principal dish. The 'ocrea' was a leather gaiter that came up to the knee and round the calf like the soldier's greaves, and was called from them.

235. verris:] Many MSS. and the old editions have 'vellis,' which Acron (who mentions the reading 'verris') explains "cum difficiulata trahis." Cruguius says all his MSS. have 'verris,' which Lambinus also adopts. Bentley does the same and most modern editors, and I think they are right. 'Vellis' conveys no sense to my mind. See note on S. 4. 37. Silius uses 'verro' in this sense (xiv. 262):—

"Seu silvis sectere feras, seu retibus aequor Verrere seu caelo libeat traxisse volutorem."

237. tibi decies:] 'Decies centena milia sextertium; ten hundred thousand sestertii, not much under 9000L, which sum is given to the huntsman, the same to the fishmonger, but three times that amount to the pander who was in the habit of lending his own wife to the lust of this young profligate. This is the sense if 'currat' is the true reading. It is that of most MSS. and of the best. Others have 'currat,' and that appears in most of the editions of the sixteenth century. 'Currat' would mean that the money was given as an inducement to the man to send his wife.

239. Filius Aesopi] Aesopus, the actor, amassed great wealth. The name of his son who inherited it was Clodius, which was the father's name, given him perhaps as a freedman of some one belonging to the Clodia gens. See Pliny, N. H. ix. 35, § 59, where this story of the ear-ring is told. Caecilia Metella was the wife of P. Cornelius Lentulus Spinther, and was divorced by him A. u. C. 709, in consequence of her intrigues, chiefly with Dolabella, Cicero's son-in-law, of whose profligacy Aesop's son appears to have been a partner. Cicero mentions them together in a letter to Atticus (xii. 15), "ea—qua me conficient: ad quae gener accedit et caetera quae fletu reprimor ne scribam. Quin etiam Aesopi filius me excruciat." According to Porphyrius he fell under the abuse of the poet Maevius ("de hoc Maevius poeta scribit"); which places him in better company than he deserves, for that man's abuse seems to have been directed against the best men of his day. The mad freak of Clodius is also (as is better known) related of Cleopatra. See Pliny (ubi sup. § 58) and Suetonius (Vit. Calig. c. 37). Aesopus, the actor, was not less extravagant than his son, see below, v. 245, n.

240. absorberet.] The MSS. vary between this word and two others. 'Absorberet' Bentley first took into the text from most of his own MSS. and several others, Quinti progenies Arri, par nobile fratrum, Nequitia et nugis pravorum et amore gemellum, Lusciniias soliti impenso prandere coëmptas, Quorum abeant? Sanin creta an carbone notandi? Aedificare casas, plostello adjungere mures, Ludere par impar, equitare in arundine longa, Si quem delectet barbatum amentia verset. Si puellius his ratio esse evincet amare, Nec quidquam differre utrumne in pulvere trimus Quale prius ludas opus, an meretricis amore Sollicitus plores, quaero faciasne quod olim and the best MSS. since have confirmed it. 'Exsorberet' was the common reading in Bentley's day, and that of all the old editions. 'Obsorberet' Orelli prefers on little authority, quoting S. ii. 8. 24, "obsorber placertas," where the word signifies the act of a glutton gobbling down his food, which sense has no place here.

243. Quinti progenies Arri.] Of the father enough has been said above (ver. 86, n.). Of the sons nothing is known. There was one of this name who held several offices under Tiberius, as appears from an inscription on a tombstone transcribed by Capmartin de Chaupy (Découv. de la Maison de Camp, de Horace, vol. i. p. 199). In point of time this may be one of the persons in the text, who may have become more sensible as he grew older.

245. Lusciniias] The second syllable is long; the third coalesces with the last (see i. 7. 30, n.). The spirit of wantonness could hardly go farther than dining upon nightingales, who are "vox et praeterea nihil," as the story goes in Plutarch (Apophth. Lacon. divers. 13), τιλας τις ἀρθόνα καὶ βραχίαν πάνω σάρκα ἑώρων εἶπε, φώνα τύ τις ίσω καὶ οὐδὲν ἄλλο. Pliny (H. N. x. 43) speaks of the cost of a dish of nightingales: "Servorum illis pretia sunt, et quidem ampliora quam quibus olim armigeri parabantur." He also mentions (x. 72) that Aesopus, the actor (see above, v. 239, n.), on one occasion had a dish of singing and talking birds ("canto aliquo aut humano sermone vocales"), each of which cost 6000 sester titi, and the whole dish 100,000, on which Pliny remarks the man was worthy of his son who melted the pearl and drank it. -- 'Impenso' is nowhere else used absolutely for 'impreno preto,' which is a common expression for a high price. 'Prandere' need not be strained to mean that they eat these costly dishes for their 'prandum' or luncheon.

246. Sanin creta an carbone notandi?] The distinction of days by white and black marks has been mentioned C. i. 36. 10. Horace here applies them to the distinction of character, and Persius has imitated him (S. v. 108): "Ilia prius creta mox haec carbone notasti?" The MSS. and editions vary in the reading of this verse. 'Sanin' is the reading of Ven. 1483. 'Sani' is joined to 'abeant' in the edition of Ascensius, 1511, but in his commentary he takes it otherwise, and seems to follow the reading I have adopted, saying, "Sanine sunt ac notandi creta, i.e. bona lapillo quo sani notandi sunt; an carbone, i.e. nigro colore quo malos et perditos designant; q. d. sine dubio notandi sunt carbone tanquam insani." This I believe to be the true reading and interpretation. 'Are they as men of sound mind to be marked with a white mark, or (as unsound) with a black?' 'Sanin' is due to Bentley, being the familiar contraction of 'sanine,' which appears in some MSS. Bentley adopts 'notati' from several MSS., instead of 'notandi,' which the sense requires. 'Quorums abeant?' 'what is to become of them? are they to be marked, &c.?'

248. Ludere par impar.] A game fit only for children, in which one person guessed whether the number of things another person held in his hand was odd or even. The Greeks had the same game, and called it ἀποτέλεσμα. Aristoph. Plut. 816. Aristotel. Rhet. iii. 5. 4. Plato, Lys. p. 206. Stertinus goes on to speak of the man of pleasure, whose madness is no less than that of the covetous, the ambitious, or the spendthrift. With the last he is closely allied.

Mutatus Polemon? ponas insignia morbi,
Fasciolas, cubital, focalia, potus ut ille
Dicitur ex collo furtim carpsisse coronas
Postquam est impransi correptus voce magistri?
Porrigis irato puero cum poma recusat:
Sume, catelle! negat; si non des optet: amator Exclusus qui distat agit ubi secum eat an non Quo rediturus erat non arcessitus, et haeret
Invisis foribus? Nec nunc cum me vocat ultro Accedam? an potius mediter finire dolores?
Exclusit; revocat: redeam? Non si obsecrect. Ecce
Servus non paulo sapientior: O here, quae res
Nec modum habet neque consilium ratione modoque
Tractari non volt. In amore haec sunt mala, bellum, Pax rursum: haec si quis tempestatis prope ritu
Mobilia et caeca fluitantia sorte laboret

254. Mutatus Polemon?] The story of Polemon is told by Diog. Laert. iv. c. 16, and mentioned by many authors. As a youth he was given to pleasures and bad company. Passing the Academy with a garland on his head, and with a band of riotous companions, while Xenocrates was lecturing, he burst into the school, but was so struck with what he heard, that having gone in a thoughtless profligate he came out serious and quite converted. He succceeded Xenocrates at the head of the Academy. Xenocrates himself, whose purity of life and sobriety of character is referred to in the word 'impransi,' became the head of the Platonic school on the resignation of Speusippus. He was the disciple of Plato, and accompanied him on his travels.
255. Fasciolas, cubital, focalia.] These are all articles of dress, worn only by women or men who took great care of their person.'Fasiola' was a bandage for the legs,'cubital' a sleeve for the arm,'focala' a bandage for the throat. See Quintillian (xi.
3. 144), "Palliolum scut fascias quibus
crura vestiuntur et focalia et aurium ligam-menta sola excusare potest valetudo.'Focala' is said to be derived from 'faux.' It may be so: but it is doubtful. 'Impransus' stands for 'sobrius,' because it was not usual for abstemious men to take the mid-day meal (prandium). 'Furtin' as a happy touch of Horace's. It expresses the shame of the young man, and his instinctive reverence for the philosopher and the place he was in, better than many sentences could have done. 'Correptus,' which Orelli renders 'acriter reprehensus,'
'sharply reproved,' rather means 'arrested, conscience-smitten.'
259. Sume, catelle.] Such diminutives were expressions of endearment. See Plautus (Asin. iii. 3. 76):—
"Dic igitur me passerculum, gallinam, coturnicum,
Agnellum, haedillum me tuum dic esse vel vitellum;"
and ver. 103:—
"Dic igitur me anaticulam, columbam, vel
catellum,
Hirundinem, monedulam, passerculum
putillum."
260. agit ubi secum] With such a scene as this the Enuchus of Terence opens, and a good deal is taken word for word from that scene. Persius has imitated Horace closely in his fifth Satire, ver. 161, sqq.:—
"Dave cito, hoc credas jubeo, finire dolores Praeteritos meditor," &c. The lover's indecision is represented elsewhere, in Epod.
x1. 19, sqq. In ver. 262 'nee nunc,' which is the reading of all the best MSS., Bentley has changed into 'ne nunc,' with very slender authority. Fea and others have followed him. The same change has been made in the text of Persius (I. c.), where he borrows these words of Horace. 'Invisis foribus' Persius turns into 'limen ad obscumen.'
Reddere certa sibi, nihil plus explicit ac si
Insanire paret certa ratione modoque.
Quid, cum Picenis excerpens semina pomis
Gaudes si cameram percusti forte, penes te es?
Quid, cum balba feris annoso verba palato,
Aedificante casas qui sanior? Adde cruorem Stultitiae atque ignem gladio scrutare. Modo, inquam, Hellade percussa Marius cum praeceptitat se
Cerritus fuit, an commotae crimine mentis

270. nihil plus explicit] Forcellini quotes this passage in conjunction with others, in which 'explico' signifies to gain a point or serve a purpose. He explains
'explicit' by 'efficient', 'assequat', 'obtineat.' There is a like use of this word in Caesar (B. G. viii. 4): "Explicandae rei frumentariae cause." It is also used in a peculiar sense in C. iv. 9. 44, where see note.

272. Picenis excerpens semina pomis] The orichards of Picenum, the district that lay between the country of the Sabines and the Hadriatic, appear to have been celebrated.
In the next Satire (ver. 70) Pice-nian apples are said to be superior to those of Tibur, and they are mentioned many years later by Juvenal (xi. 74):

"—— de coribus isdem Aemula Picenis et odoris mala recentis."

The pears of this same country are commended by Pliny (N. H. xv. 15, 16). Martial mentions the olives and the bread of Picenum as particularly good (xiii. 36 and 47). The Scholiasts Porphyrius and Comm.
Cruq. explain the sport here alluded to.
Lovers, say they, were wont to take the pips of apples between their finger and thumb and shoot them up to the ceiling, and if they struck it then their wish would be accomplished. Pollux relates the same sports (ix. 128), and some such are common in our own nurseries. 'Camera,' which is from the Greek καμάρα, and is sometimes spelt with an 'a,' was an arched ceiling, as lacunar' was flat. The latter was so called from panels with raised sides, and so having each the appearance of a 'lacu' or shallow reservoir, into which the ceiling was sometimes divided. It was common in rich houses for the ceiling to be richly ornamented. See C. ii. 18. 2: "Non ebur neque aurem mea reindet in domo lacunar." Pliny (xxxiii. 3) says, "Laquearia qua nunc et in privatis domibus auro teguntur, post Carthaginem versus primo inaurata sunt in Capitolio." 'Laquear is another form of 'lacunar.' Horace also uses the expression 'laqueata tecta' (C. ii.
16. 12), which is found in other writers.
Ovid alone uses the word 'lacuno,' to form
such ceilings (Met. viii. 563).

273. penes te es?] This seems to correspond to the Greek εχε laqoif ελαι, for a man in his right mind: or it may mean to ask if the man is 'su jure,' which one who was 'furiosus' would not be.

274. cum balba feris] Persius has imi-titated this in a different connexion (i. 33):

"Rancidulum quiddam balba de nare locutus,

Phyllidas, Hysipylas, vatum et plorabile si quid

Eliquat, et tenero supplantat verba palato."

Persius says 'he trips his words on his mincing palate;' Horace says 'you strike your lisping words against your old palate.'

275. Adde cruorem Stultitiae] But childish nonsense is not the worst of this madness. Add bloodshed to folly and run into the most violent excesses of passion,
and you will not do more than such lusts commonly lead to. Such is the Stoic's meaning. 'Ignem gladio scrutare' is a translation of a Greek saying, πυ μαχαίρα, σαλι'ταντο, 'to stir the fire with the sword,' which Diogenes Laert. (viii. 17) attributes to Pythagoras. Heindorf says it is capable of various interpretations. Its application here seems plain. To stir the fire of lust with the sword, is to stir up strife and bloodshed in the indulgence of your lusts.

276. Modo, inquam, Hellade percussa] 'To take a late instance,' seems to be the meaning of 'modo.' The story here referred to, as Estré says, was probably well known at the time, but of the actors in it we know nothing. 'Cerritus,' Festus says, is another form of 'cereritus,' which signi-Absolves hominem et sceleris damnabīs eundem,
Ex more imponens cognāta vocabula rebus? 280
Libertinus erat, qui circum compitā sīceus
Lautis mane senex manibus currebat et, Unum—
Quid tam magnum? addens,—, unum me surpīte morti,
Dis etenim facile est! orabat; sanus utrisque
Auribus atque ochlis; mentem, nisi litigious, Exciperet dominus cum venderet. Hoc quoque volgus Chrysippus ponit fecunda in gente Meneni.
Juppiter, ingentes qui das adimisqve dolores,
Mater ait pueri menses jam quinque cubantis,

fies smitten by Ceres; but striking men mad was not, as far as I am aware, one of the functions of that goddess. ‘Commotus’ is used for different degrees of mental excitement. See v. 209, where the meaning is the same as here, ‘mad.’ Agrippina, who was of a hasty temper, is called ‘commotor’
by Tacitus (Ann. i. 33). ‘Cognata vocabula’ means words which may differ in sound, but are one in sense. ‘Diversa quidem, non tamen multum inter se distantās’ (Acron.). The editors are not all agreed in the punctuation I have adopted.

281. Libertinus erat,] The next folly noticed is superstition. Stertinus tells, by way of illustration, a story of an old ‘liber-tinus,’ who went from shrine to shrine erected in the ‘compita,’ spots where two or more streets met, praying to the Lares Comptales (for whom altars were built in such places; see above, v. 26, n.) that they would grant him immortality. This he did early in the morning, quite sober, and with hands washed as became a serious wor-shipper. Now this man was sound in hearing and sight, but, says Stertinus, if his former master had ever wanted to part with him, in putting him up for sale he would have cautioned purchasers that he was not in his right mind, unless he wanted to get into an action to rescind the bargain on the ground of fraud. It was necessary for a person selling a slave to inform the buyer of any bodily or mental defect in him. See Cicero de Off. iii. 17: “In mancipiorum venditione venditoris famis excluditur:
qui enim scire debuit de sanitate, de fuga, de furtis præstat edicto Aedilium.” See also Dig. 21, Tit. 1: “Qui mancipia vendunt certiores faciant emportes quid morbi vitivae cuique sit, quis fugitivus errove sit, noxave solutus non sit: eademque omnia cum ea mancipia veniunt pabam recte pronunci-cianto. Quod si mancipium adversus ea

venisset quod ejus praestari oportere dicetur emptori omnibusque ad quos ea res per-tinet judicium dabimus ut id mancipium redhibatur.” On ‘lautis manibus,’ Comm.
Cru. says, “quia solebant precaturi deos manus et pedes abluere.” The practice was followed by the Greeks according to the rule stated by Hesiod (Op. et Di. 724, sq.):
Mεῖπτοτ’ ε’ νοις δι ιείβεν αίθησα αίνον
Χερείν ανίπτουσιν μηδ’ ἄλλοις ἀθανάtοσιν,
Ου γάρ τοι γε κλύουσιν, ἀποπτύουσι δ’ τ’
ἀράς.

Hector likewise says (Il. vi. 266):—
Χερεί δ’ ανίπτουσιν Αίτι λείβεν αίθησα οίνον “Αვωὶατ.”

For ‘quid tam magnum’ (with which compare Pors., S. v. 120, “Et quid tam par-vum?”), the old editions and some early MSS. have ‘quiddam magnum,’ ‘Quid tam’ is supported by good MSS., and Cruiunus has it in his text; Turrnbus had previously sanctioned that reading (“‘Quid tam’ quod in libro antiquo vidi mallem quam quiddam”), and Bentley and others have adopted it. ‘Quid? tam magnum?’ is Heinde’s punctuation, which makes the words ironical, and rather insolent. Of Menienus nothing is known, except that Porphyrian speaks of “Meneniae stut-titiae vel ineptiae” as a proverb.

289. cubantes.] See note on S. i. 9. 18.
‘Ilo die’ Porphyrian explains to mean ‘die Jovis.’ The Jews fasted on Thursdays and Mondays (“I fast twice in the week,” Luke xviii. 12) in commemoration, it is said, of Moses’ ascent into the Mount on the fifth day of the week, and of his return on the second. The practices of the Jews were the best illustrations of superstition in the eyes of Horace and men of the world, and their Frigida si puerum quartana reliquerit, illo
Mane die quo tu indicis jejunia nudus
In Tiberi stabit. Casus medicusve levarit
Aegrum ex praecepti mater delira necabit
In gelida fixum ripa febrimque reducet;
Quone malo mentem concussa? Timore deorum.

Haec mihi Stertinius, sapientum octavus, amico
Arma dedit, posthae ne compellarer inultus.
Dixerit insanum qui me totidem audiet atque Respicere ignoto discet pendentia tergo."

"Stoie, post damnum sic vendas omnia pluris,
Qua me stultitia, quoniam non est genus unum, Insanire putas? Ego nam videor mihi sanus."

fast is here perhaps alluded to. See note on S. i. 9. 60. On special occasions fasts were ordered like that which was instituted in honour of Ceres, a.u.c. 561, when the decemvirs, after consulting the Sibylline books, reported "Jejunium instituendum Cereri esse et id quinto quoque anno servandum" (Livy xxxvi. 37). The vow made by the mother for her sick child is that if he recovers he shall stand naked in the Tiber to wash away his sins. This is intended to represent another foreign superstition, as the Romans held it, that of bathing the body in token of the purifying of the soul. Juvenal (vi. 522, sqq.) represents a woman three times in the Tiber on a cold winter's morning when she had to break the ice to get in; and Persius (ii. 15) says of the hypocrite who prayed to the gods to send him a treasure, or to put his ward or his wife out of the way:—

"Haec sancte ut poscas, Tiberino in gurgite mergis Mane caput his terque, et noctem flumine purgas."

295. Quone malo [See S. i. 10. 21 on 'quone.' 'Timor deorum' is equivalent to εμπειρομονε in its usual sense of superstition. 'Deorum metus' expresses a right fear or reverence of the gods. But the distinction was not invariably observed. (See Pers. S. ii. 31, "Ecce avia et metuens divum matertera."

296. sapientum octavus, ] "Septem fuere sapientes Graeciae: hunc Stertinium annumerat quasi octavum ludendo" (Comm. Crqu.).

297. ne compellarer inultus.] For other instances of 'compellare' used absolutely and in a bad sense, see Forcell.

299. Respicere ignoto This plainly refers to Aesop's fable of the two wallets, which is also referred to by Catullus (xxii. 26, sqq.).—

"— Suus cuique attributus est error, Sed non videmus manticae quod in tergo est;"

and by Persius (iv. 23, sq.):

"Ut nemo in sese tentat descendere, nemo:
Sed praecedenti spectatur mantica tergo."

It is told, with its moral, in five lines by Phaedrus (iv. 10):

"Penas imposuit Jupiter nobis duas:
Propris repletam vitulis post tergum dedit,
Alienis ante pectus suspendit gravem.
Hac re videre nostra mala non possumus;
Alii simul delinquunt, censores sumus."

300. sic vendas omnia pluris.] On 'sic,' see C. i. 3, 1. "Pluris," Heindorf considers, is simply put for 'magnus.' Other commentators render it differently, as 'more than you have lost,' or more than you ever got before, and so forth. I agree with Heindorf. Horace quietly hints to Damasippus that he had better leave off philosophy and return to his trade, in which he wishes him all success. In the next verse the MSS. have, with but one exception, 'qua me stultitia,' the ablative, which Lambinus on his own authority, and Crucquius on that of one MS., changed into the accusative. Bentley and some others have adopted this reading. The construction is common enough, but the ablative is a legi-
“Quid, caput abscissum demens cum portat Agave Gnati infeliciis, sibi tum furiosa videtur?”

“Stultum me fateor, liceat concedere veris,
Atque etiam insanum; tantum hoc edissere, quo me
Aegrotare putes animi vitio?”

“Accipe: primum
Aedificas, hoc est, longos imitari ab imo
Ad summum totus moduli bipedalis, et idem
Corpore majorem rides Turbonis in armis
Spiritum et incessum: qui ridiculos minus illo?
An quocunque facit Maecenas te quoque verum est
Tantum dissimilem et tanto certare minorem?
Absentis ranae pullis vituli pede pressis,
Unus ubi effugit, matri denarrat, ut ingens Belua cognatos eliserit. Illa rogare:

timate construction and, supported as it is, ought to be adopted.

303. Agave] How she and the other Maenads tore her son Penthes to pieces for intruding upon the orgies, is related at length by Ovid (Met. iii. 701, sqq.) and other authors referred to in Dict. Myth. For ‘manibus’ in this verse, the old editions, with scarcely an exception, have ‘demens.’ The oldest Blandinian MS. had ‘manibus,’ which Bentley introduced into the text on this authority, confirmed by three other MSS. in his time, and since by several mentioned by Fea. Why ‘demens’ ever should have been forged, if ‘manibus’ is the true reading, it is not easy to say. ‘Manibus’ may have been invented from Euripides, who two or three times speaks of Agave with her son’s head in her arms (Bacch. vv. 967, 1137, 1275). These passages are produced by Bentley to prove that Horace wrote ‘manibus,’ but this is not proof. ‘Portat’ expresses all that is meant without the addition of ‘manibus.’ All Orelli’s MSS., which are some of the best, have ‘demens.’ He edits ‘manibus.’ The St. Gallen MS. has ‘vel manibus’ superscribed over ‘demens.’

308. Aedificas, hoc est,] ‘You are building, which is as much as to say, you, who are a dwarf two feet high, are aping the airs of a giant; and yet you laugh at Turbo (a gladiator of great courage, but small stature, Porph. says), swelling with a spirit too big for his little body.’ Horace may have been making some additions to his Sabine house, and about this time Maecenas built his large house on the Esquiliae (see S. i. 8, Introd.). Priscian (p. 683, quoted by Bentley), distinguishing Turbo, ‘onis, from ‘turbo,’ a whirlwind, says the former is the name of a gladiator, and quotes this passage. Turbo is a name found in inscriptions.

312. verum est] ἐκείνῳ ἐστὶ; ‘is it right?’ Compare Caesar, B. G. iv. 8: “Neque verum esse qui suos fines tueri non potuerint alios occupare.” In the next verse ‘tantum’ has been restored to the text on the authority of the oldest Blandinian MS. by Bentley, in whose time the received reading was ‘tanto.’ A similar construction occurs immediately below (ver. 317), ‘tantum magna,’ where ‘tandum’ has got into most MSS. and editions. ‘Multum similis’ (S. i. 5. 92), ‘multum dissimilis’ (Epp. i. 10. 3), are like phrases. ‘Tanto’ is the dative governed by ‘certare.’

314. Absentis ranae] This fable is told by Phaedrus (i. 24). The reader will have no difficulty in following the narrative of Horace with the punctuation I have given, which in the main is that of Heindorf and Orelli. Great difficulty has been raised by the little frog’s reply, that the ox was only ‘major dimidio’ than his mother. Bentley is particularly disturbed by this absurdity. He himself (he says) would have written ‘major pernimio.’ Heindorf suggests disrespectfully that the ‘junge Frosch’ is laughing at his parent. We may at any rate admit that ‘greater by half’ is a conventional way of speaking, which can seldom be interpreted very literally, and the inaccuracy of the little frog may be excused. There is a little more difficulty in the words that follow, ‘nun tanto?’ Bentley follows Cruqui in changing ‘tanto’ into ‘tantum,’ Quantane? num tantum, sufflans sc, magna fuisset?
Major dimidio. Num tanto? Cum magis atque
Se magis inflaret, Non si te ruperis, inquit,
Par eris. Haec a te non multum abludit imago.
Adde poëmata nunc, hoc est, oleum adde camino;
Quae si quis sanus fecit sanus facis et tu.
Non dico horrendam rabiem. Jam desine.” Cultum Majorem censu. Teneas, Damasippus, tuis te.
Mille puellarum, puera'orum mille furores.
O major tandem parcas, insane, minori!

and quotes the Leiden and Trinity College MSS. as his authority. But 'tanto' is the reading of every other MS. and edition except two or three, who have followed Bentley. By 'num tanto' the frog means to ask whether the calf was so much bigger than her natural size, as by puffing she had made herself. 'Is it so much bigger?' she says, blowing herself out to proportions much greater than her own.

320. abludit] This word occurs nowhere else. It means, to be out of harmony with.
322. sanus] See A. P. 296: “Excludit sanos Helicone poetas Democritus.” The reading I have followed is that of all the old editions, and of every other that I have seen till the present century. Bentley adopts it without remark. But Lambinus mentions that six of his MSS., and Cruquius that some of his, had ‘si quis sanus facit et sanus facies tu;” and Torrentius in two of his found the same reading, except ‘facias’ for ‘facies.’ Fea quotes many authorities for ‘facit et sanus facies tu;’ which he adopts. Orelli quotes one or two MSS. that support that reading, which he also follows. Dillenbr. does the same without remark. There is so much good authority for the common reading that I see no reason for deserting it. Either way there is not much consistency in Damasippus urging Horace to write at the beginning of the Satire, and calling him mad for doing so at the end of it.

323. horrendam rabiem. [Doering and others apply this to the spirit which breathed in his “criminosi iambi” (C. i. 16). It more probably refers to his temper generally, but the charge against himself need not be taken seriously. We have no reason to believe Horace was an ill-tempered man. He laments the facility of his temper on one occasion (S. i. 9. 11).

324. Teneas—tuis te.] ‘Mind your own business.’
326. O major tandem] The scene winds up with a pretended deprecation of the severe truths of Damasippus, to whom the poet submits as the greater madman of the two, and humbles himself before him accordingly. I think this interpretation gives more force to the Satire than Dacier’s, which Orelli commends, that after trying to coax the Stoic into silence Horace loses all patience (“Horace perd patience”), and exclaims to his astonishment, “O major tandem,” &c.
SATIRE IV.

This Satire is an essay on good living put in the form of precepts delivered to Horace at second hand by one Catius, who professes to have got them from some sage more learned in the art, but whom he does not name. Horace meets him accidentally as he is hurrying away from the Professor’s lecture to think over what he had learnt, and to store it in his mind. Catius recites what he has heard from memory or from notes, and enters without preface upon the question of the first course. The Professor may be supposed to have carried his hearers through an entire dinner, “ab ovo usque ad mala” (see S. i. 3. 6, n.). Catius only gives the heads of the lecture and one or two of the sage’s reflections. The precepts he delivers inflame Horace with a desire to see and hear the great man himself, and he prays Catius to introduce him. It may be that Horace had some third person in his eye, but we have no means of knowing who it was. If it be so, there were those no doubt who would understand the allusion at the time. That it was Mæcenas Heindorf supposes; Wieland that Horace meant himself; Acron says he meant Nasidienus, but who Nasidienus was we do not know (S. 8. Introduction). Conjecture is thrown away. As to the man Catius himself the Scholiasts call him M. Catius, and Comm. Cruq. (on ver. 47) Catius Miltiades. Cicero, writing to Cassius (ad Fam. xv. 16) mentions one Catius Insuber, an Epicurean, who was lately dead, and for whom he expresses some contempt, meant perhaps for the sect he belonged to more than for himself. Quintilian (x. 1. 124) speaks of a Catius (probably the same as Cicero’s) as “in Epicureis levis quidem sed non injucentus.” There was therefore in Cicero’s time a person of this name who was pretty well known, and who probably wrote on the opinions of his sect, the Epicureans. The Scholiasts tell us that he wrote “quattuor libros de rerum natura et de summo bono;” and Comm. Cruq. on ver. 47 says Horace “irridet eum quod de opere pistorio in suo libro scribit de se ipso, Hace primus invent et cognovit Catius Miltiades.” He does not seem however to have observed that Catius is only representing the words of his teacher. But as this person must have been dead many years before this Satire was written (Cicero’s letter was written A.U.C. 709), it has been supposed by some that Horace introduces his name, though he was no longer living, only as a handle for ridiculing the Epicureans. Orelli suggests that Horace’s Catius was a freedman of Cicero’s Catius, and a contemptible person, notorious as a writer on cookery. Certainly a well-known name would answer every purpose even if the owner were dead, and the former of these two opinions is probably correct.

That Horace chose a well-known Epicurean as the speaker in this gastronomical Satire, seems to show that he no longer held with that sect when he wrote it (see C. i. 34; S. i. 5. 101). That the followers of Epicurus went beyond their master in patronizing sensual delights may very well be believed. It is usually the fate of unsound teachers, that their errors are exaggerated by those who profess to adopt them. It appears that Epicurus held πολυτελὴν σίτια to be only secondary pleasures, ὡς ἀναγκαῖα: that he held a man should be able to do without them, though if he could afford them he would do well to have them; and indeed that he had a good opinion even of fasting (Diog. Laert. x. 127—149). But his Roman adherents did not take that view of their duty, and under the sanction of his name and school made good living the chief good, and the art of cookery the art of life (see Introduction to S. 2 of this book).
unde et quo Catius?" "Non est mihi tempus aventi
Ponere signa novis praeceptis, qualia vincent Pythagorani Anytique reum doctumque Platona."
"Peccatum fateor cum te sic tempore laevo
Interpellarim; sed des veniam bonus oro.
Quod si interciderit tibi nunc aliquid repetes mox,
Sive est naturae hoc sive artis, mirus utroque."
"Quin id erat curae quo pacto cuncta tenerem, Ut pote res tennes tenui sermone peractas."
"Ede hominis nomen, simul et Romanus an hospes."
"Ipsa memor praecepta canam, celabitur auctor.
Longa quibus facies ovis erit illa memento,
Ut suci melioris et ut magis alba rotundis,
Ponere; namque marem cohabent callosa vitellum.

1. Unde et quo Catius?] On Catius see Introduction. On the formula, see S. i. 9. 62, n.
2. Ponere signa] The ancients practised methods for helping the memory, which are described by Cicero (de Orat. ii. 86, sqq.), and still more fully by the author of the treatise on Rhetoric addressed to Herennius, and inserted among Cicero's works (iii. 16, sqq.). The first 'memoria technica' was said by tradition to have been invented by Simonides of Ceos, when, after that banquet at which his patron Scopas and all his guests were buried in the ruins of the house (see life of Simonides, in Dict.
Biog.), he was able to identify the bodies
by remembering the places they respectively occupied at table. Cicero does not put much faith in this story; for he says (in the above place): 'sive Simonides sive alius quis inventit.' 'Signa' were more technically called 'imagines,' objects which the person arranged so that his mind's eye could rest upon them, and thus assist his memory. But 'ponere signa' seems also to have been commonly used in this sense;
for Gellius (xvii. 7), referring to a passage of P. Nigidius, the grammarian, says:
'Anguste perquam et obscure disserit: at signa rerum ponere videns, ad subsidium magis memoriae suae quam ad legentum disciplinam.'
3. Anytique reum] Anytus was one of the three (Meletus and Lycon were his associates) who got up and conducted the prosecution of Socrates. According to one story he was banished by the Athenians
when they repented of Socrates' death; ac-

According to another he was stoned by the inhabitants of Heraclia in Bithynia for the part he had taken against Socrates. (The-mist. Orat. 20.)
4. tempore laevo] See above, S. ii. 1. 18:
"Nisi dextro tempore Flacci Verba," &c.
7. Sive est naturae] "Sunt igitur due memoriae; una naturalis, altera artificiosa." (ad Herenn. iii. 16.) See above, v. 2, n.
11. celabitur auctor.] See Introduction.
12. Longa quibus facies ovis erit] "Quae oblonga sint ova gratioris saporis putat Horatius Flaccus," says Pliny (x. 74), taking Horace at his word. On 'ova' see S. i. 3, 6, n. 'Success' here is equivalent to 'sapor.'

Why Horace should make Catius say that long eggs were more white than round ones, or what is gained by the whiteness of an egg, or by its containing a male rather than a female chicken, is not clear. He puts any nonsense, it appears, into the man's mouth.
Bentley, being very literal, says the fact is not as Catius states, if 'alba' be the right word, and therefore he changes it into 'alma,' as from 'alo,' signifying that they are more nutritious. 'Ponere' is to put upon the table, as 'posito pavone' (S. ii. 2, 23). The notion that from long eggs cocks were hatched, and from round hens, appears to have been a vulgar error. Pliny says:
"Feminam edunt quae rotundiora gignuntur, reliqua marem" (x. 74); and Columella (viii. 5. 11): "Cum quis volet quam plurimos mares exclivi longissima quaque et acutissima ova subjecit; et rursus cum feminis quam rotundissima." The contrary order is stated to be true by Aristotle (Hist. Anim. vi. 2, 2), who says the long and pointed egg brings forth a hen, while all other eggs bring forth cocks. Sir Thos.
Caule suburbanum qui siccis crevit in agris
Duletor; irriuego nihil est elulius horto.
Si vespertinus subito te oppresserit hospes,
Ne gallina malum responsat dura palato,
Doctus eris vivam mixto mersæ Falerno;
Hoc teneram faciet. Pratensisibus optima fungis

Browne disposes briefly of these notions: "That the sex is discernible from the figure of eggs, or that cocks or hens proceed from long or round ones, as many contend, experiment will easily frustrate" (Vulg. Er. iii. 28). 'Callosa' signifies 'tough,' and belongs in sense, though not in construction, to the yolk.

15. Caule suburbanum] The reading of nearly all the old editions and the best MSS. is 'cole.' Acron too had that reading, and says: "Cole: hoc est caule, ut clause pro clade, Sorices pro Saurices; ceda pro cauda." The same variation appears in Clodius and Claudius, Plotius and Plantius, &c. Artificial streams and fish-ponds were commonly introduced into the gardens of rich people. Hence Catius says the vegetables grown in the suburbs were not so pleasant as those grown in the country on drier soil. 'Elutius' Forcellini interprets 'infirmus ad aleandum.' Perhaps Horace only means that they were insipid from the quantity of water they imbibed. "Suburbane: quia suburbana loca rivis abundant" (Acron); for the above reason I suppose.

17. vespertinus subito te oppresserit] On 'vespertinus' see Epod. xvi. 51; and for examples of 'oppresserit,' to overtake or come upon one suddenly, see Forcell.

18. malum responsat] 'Responsare' is used by Horace several times in the sense of resistance. See below, S. 7. 85: "Responsare cupiduntis, contemnerre honoros;" and v. 104: "animus coenis responsat opimis;" and Epp. i. 1. 68: "fortunae te responsare superfae Liberon et erectum praesens hortatur." Here it may be taken in a similar way, or in the ordinary sense of 'respondere,' according as we understand 'malum.' It may only mean 'ill suits,' or 'malum' may strengthen 'responsat' as 'male rauri' (S. i. 4. 66), 'responsat' signifying to disagree with. Jacobs proposes to read 'malum' as an expletive (malum!), leaving 'responsare' to speak for itself in the latter sense. "Responsat: resistat; reluctetur in faucibus" (Acron).

19. vivam mixto mersæ Falerno;] The MSS. all have 'mixto' or 'misto,' and nearly all editions till Bentley's. Landinus is said by those who have seen his original edition (I suppose) printed at Florence in 1482, to have edited 'mulso.' The Venetian edition of the following year, which is said to be a reprint of the Florentine, has 'mixto;' but 'mulso' is the reading assumed in Landinus' commentary printed in that edition. Bentley edits 'musto' for 'misto;' and though this is a plausible conjecture enough, there is no reason in my opinion for altering the reading of the MSS. 'Mixto,' without any other word, would naturally mean mixed with water, in spite of what Bentley writes on the subject. Catius' rules, as we have already seen, if (as he says) they are new, are not very accurate, and it is fruitless to conjecture whether he advised 'mustum' or wine and water for the steeping of fowls. If the question is to be treated seriously, it may be doubted whether the steeping in the diluted liquor might not be more advisable than in strong.

20. Pratensisibus optima fungis] He says the 'fungi' that grew in the open meadows were more to be trusted than others—that is, those which grew in the shade. Truffles and different kinds of mushrooms were much eaten by the Romans as they are still by the Italians. Of the latter there were and are great varieties. Forsyth (Italy, p. 81) mentions an astonishing variety of mushrooms, all natives of Vallombrosa, a collection of which (painted) he saw in the monastery of that place, with this absurd motto, of which the author asks, rather unnecessarily, whether it is correct in its etymology:

"Naturae fetus mirae, sed au fugere fungos, Namque a fungendo funere nomen habet."

The mushroom most highly esteemed was the boletus, which was cultivated in gardens and kept for the eating of the rich. See Juvenal (v. 146): "Vilibus ancipites fungi ponentur amisic, Boletus domino;" and Martial (iii. 60. 5): "Sunt tibi boleti, fungos ego sumo mullos;" and i. 21. 2: "Solus boletos, Caeciliane, voras." The Libyan mushroom was counted the best of the wild.
Natura est; aliis male creditur. Ille salubres Aestates peraget qui nigris prandia moris Finiet, ante graven quae legerit arbores solem. Aufidius fortis miscaban mella Falerno, Mendose, quoniam vacuis committere venis Nil nisi lene decet; leni praecordia mulso Prolueris melius. Si dura morabitur alvus, Mitulus et viles pellent obstantia conchae Et lapathi brevis herba, sed albo non sine Coo. Lubrica nascentes implent conchyliarum lunae; Sed non omne mare est generosea fertile testae. ones, and the spring was the best season for them. See Martial (xiii. 43):

"Lecta suburbanis mittuntur apyrina ramis Et vernae tuberes: quid tibi cum Libyces?"

and 42: "Non tibi de Libyces tuberes," &c. The great value of the boletus is expressed in another epigram in exaggerated language (xiii. 48):

"Argentum atque aurum facile est lactanamque togamque Mittere: boletos mittere difficile est."

But all such fungi had to be chosen with great care. Even the boletus served to carry off an emperor. See Juvenal, l. c., and Martial i. 21.

24. Aufidius] Estré thinks this may be M. Aufidius, who was remarkable as having been the first at Rome who bred and fattened peacocks for sale, and derived a large profit (as much as 600,000 sesterces a year) from that trade. (Pliny, N. H. x. 20. 23; Varro de R. R. iii. 6. 1.) This person is also identified with M. Aufidius Lurco, who was tribune of the plebs a. v. c. 633, and author of the Lex Aufidia de Ambitu. (See his Life in the Dict. Biol.) I am not aware that there are sufficient grounds for either of these conjectures. As to the composition of 'mulsion' see note on S. ii. 2. 15, n. Falernian wine, which Horace appears to have esteemed next to Caecuban, is here called 'forte,' and elsewhere 'severum' and 'ardens' (C. i. 27. 9; ii. 11. 19). It was a very strong spirituous wine, and required long keeping to become mellow. Forsyth (Italy, p. 264) stopped at Santa Agata (a modern town in the Falernus Ager) in the hope of getting some real Falernian; but he found it very inferior to the Formian which he had lately drank at Mola (Formiae).

27. morabitur] This may have been a medical word for costiveness. Forcellini does not notice this use of it. 'Mitulus,' the limpet, is noticed as among the 'villores conchae' by Martial (iii. 60):

"Ostrea tu sumis stagno saturata Lucrino; Sugiiter inciso mitulis or mihi."

The Greeks called it τιλλινη or ξιφιδρων. The 'lapathus' is mentioned above as a purgative (Epod. ii. 57, n.) 'Brevis,' which Porphyry interprets 'short-lived,' as 'Brevis liliun' (C. i. 36. 16), refers rather, as Orelli says, to the size of the plant.

30. Lubrica nascentes] That shell-fish were best at the time of the new moon, appears to have been generally believed among the ancients. Gellius, in a chapter (xx. 8): 'de ipsis quae habere sumpasitum videntur cum luna augescente ac senescente,' mentions that while he was dining with his friend Annianus the poet, at his country seat, there arrived a large supply of oysters from Rome, which proved to be poor shrivelled things, and the host accounted for it by the fact that the moon was then on the wane, quoting Lucilius:

"Luna alit ostrea et implet echinos, muriubu' fibras Et pecui addid."
long experience that all the testaceous tribe are fuller, fatter, and more delicate during the new and full moon than in the first and last quarters" (vol. i. p. 244). So that modern observation is in conformity with that of the ancients. The above writer accounts for the fact "by the tides and currents which set in stronger in the new and full moon, and bring with them large quantities of bruised fishes, insects, fruits, and other fattening nurtures."

32. Murice Baiano] This shell-fish, from which a purple dye was obtained, was found it seems in great abundance at Baiae. It would seem not to have been as useful for the table as for its dye. It is thus described by Swinburne: "The body consists of three parts; the lowest, containing the bowels, remains fixed in the twisted screw at the bottom for the purpose of performing the digestive functions; it is fleshy and tinged with the colour of its food. The middle division is of a callous substance and full of liquor, which, if let out of its bag, will stain the whole animal and its habitation. The third and upper part is made up of the members necessary for procuring food and perpetuating the race. The murex generally remains fastened to rocks and stones. The proper season for dragging for this shell-fish was in autumn and winter. To come at the liquor the shell was broken with one smart blow, and the pouch extracted with the greatest nicety by means of a hook. If the shells were of a small size they were thrown by heaps into a mill and pounded" (i. 239). The 'peloris,' which was found in the Lacus Lucrinus, close to Baine, appears from Martial to have been an insipid fish, though Catius says it is better than the murex. "Tu Lucrina voras, me pascit aquosa peloris" (vi. 11). "Et fatum summa coenare pelorida mensa" (x. 37). The rival oyster-beds were in the Lacus Lucrinus and at Circeii, the opposite point of the bay which is terminated by the promontory of that name in Latium and the promontory of Misenum in Campania. Catius gives the preference to the oysters of Circeii, which Pliny also says were unsurpassed (xxxii. 21). See note on Epod. ii. 49. The best oysters, however, were found at Brundusium on the other coast, from whence the spawn was carried to stock the beds on the coast of Campania and Latium.

34. Pectinibus patulis] The shell-fish called 'pecten,' it seems, was found in greatest perfection at Tarentum. Swinburne gives a list of shell-fish found in the Tarentine waters, amounting in number to 93. Pliny (xxxii. 11) says the 'pecten' was also found in great abundance and perfection at Mytilene. It must have been one of the bivalved sort, called by Aristotle ἀνάπτυχα, as opposed to those that were μονόδορα (Hist. Anim. iv. 4). Whether it was the 'pinna marina' or not is uncertain; but if so, it was one of the largest of the testaceous tribes, often exceeding two feet in length. Cicero (de Fin. iii. 19. 63) mentions it as attended by a small animal called 'pinnothares,' because it acted as watchman to the pinna, warning it of the approach of its prey or its enemies. When danger is at hand, the little creature jumps into the opening of the shells, which close directly. The same animal is still found among the feelers of the pinna, and the Italians call it 'caurella.' "But more accurate observers," says Swinburne, "have discovered that the poor shrimp is no more than a prey itself, and by no means a sentinel for the muscle, which in its turn frequently falls a victim to the wiles of the Polyopus Octopoda. In very calm weather this rapacious pirate may be seen stealing towards the yawning shells with a pebble in his claws, which he darts so dexterously into the aperture that the pinna cannot shut itself up close enough to pinch off the feelers of its antagonist or save its flesh from his ravenous tooth." This illustrates the epithet 'patulis.' The origin of the name 'pecten' cannot be determined. The pinna "fastens itself to the stones by its hinge, and throws out a large tuft of silky threads, which float and play about to allure, small fish." This bunch is called 'lanappa.' 'lanappa' is taken off and dried, and combed out and carded; and of the thread thus made, mixed with a little silk, the Italian women knit stockings, gloves, caps, &c.

molle Tarentum.] The degenerate character of the Tarantines, which gained their city the epithets 'molle,' 'imbebe' (Epp. i. 7. 45), dates from the death of Archytas, about the middle of the fourth century B.C. Among other symptoms of this degeneracy it is recorded that their Nec sibi coenarum quivis temere adroget artem,
Non prius exacta tenui ratione saporum.
Nec satis est cara pisces avertere mensa
Ignarum quibus est jus aptius et quibus assis
Languidus in cubitum jam se conviva reponet.
Umber et illigna nutritus glande rotundas
Curvat aper lances carnem vitantis inerter;
calendar contained more festivals than there were days in the year. For full 200 years (some make it much more) before the above period they had flourished above all the colonies of Magna Graecia in arms and commerce. For the latter Tarentum was the only emporium, because (until that of Brundusium was formed, long afterwards) it afforded the only harbour on the eastern side of Italy, to which all the traffic of Greece, Illyricum, and Asia naturally flowed.
The Tarentines had a large standing army with which Archytas gained many victories:
they had a fine fleet, and many cities were subject to them. Tarentum itself, which now is said to contain about 18,000 inhabitants, in the days of its power contained 300,000. It flourished no less in arts than in war and commerce. These it retained after it had ceased to be powerful, and the number of its edifices was great, especially,
as might be expected, those that were devoted to amusement. The coins of Tarentum are among the finest specimens that we possess. "The modern Tarentines, as much as their poverty will allow them, seem to copy the gentle indolent manners of their forefathers, citizens of 'molle Tarentum.'
They are still passionately fond of amusements, and eager only in the pursuit of pleasure. Their address is affable and pleasing to strangers; their pronunciation linging, and softer than that of the natives of the neighbouring provinces" (Swinburne,
vol. i. p. 269).

36. exacta] For this meaning of 'exigere,' 'to investigate,' see Forcell. under 'exigo' and 'exactus.'
37. cara pisces avertere mensa] 'Mensa' means the fishmonger's board, which is called dear instead of the fish exposed on it.
If 'avertere' be the true word, it is properly
terpreted by Porphyrian: "Avertere: abstrahere, aufferere." Compare Virgil (Aen.
x. 78): "Arva aliena jugo premere atque avertere praedas." It is commonly used with 'praedae,' as in Caesar, B. C. iii. 59:
'praedam omnem domum avertente;' and Sil. Ital. iii. 321: "invadere fluctu Audax naufragia et praedas avertere ponto," where 'avertere,' and not 'avellere,' is the proper reading. It may be applied humorously in this sense here, the man making a booty of the fish he loved. Orelli thinks it may be taken in a like sense to 'vertit,' to embezzle wrongfully, to appropriate to one's own use, in Cic. in Verr. Divin. 17: "ex illa pec-cunia magnam partem ad se vertit," where Zumpt reads 'avertit' and Lambinus 'averrit.' Lambinus has a partiality for that word, which he introduces for 'avertere'
here, though from the Scholiasts downwards the latter word had appeared in all the commentaries and editions. He says he relies "auctoritate complurium librorum Mstorum," and explains it by 'converrere,' which is no explanation. Torreitius, though he edits 'avertere,' prefers 'averrere,' which he interprets sweeping the board as fishermen sweep the sea with their nets. (See above, S. 3. 235, and Forcell. 'verro.') Cruquius, though he follows the received reading, says that all his MSS. but one inferior to the rest had 'avvererare,' and Bentley adopts and defends that reading,
but in a new sense, contrary to the meaning of the passage. "Averrere' is not used by yany classical author; but that does not prove any thing. It appears in all the oldest Parisian MSS. In many of the later one's 'avertere' appears as it does in Orelli's Berne and St. Gallen MSS. and in most of Fea's. It is not at all certain which Horace wrote, but I prefer 'avertere,' in the plain meaning of carrying off. 'Mensa' is used for the counter of the 'argentarius,' but no where else in the sense it here seems to bear. On 'pisces patinarii' ('quibus jus est aptius') and 'assi' see note on S. i.
3. 81.
39. Languidus in cubitum] Catius says it is of no use for a man to buy expensive fish if he does not know how to dress them, that is, which should be served up with sauce, and which when fried will tempt the guest, after he has laid himself down tired of eating, to raise himself on his elbow and begin eating again.
41. Curvat aper] On 'aper' see above,
S. 3. 234. The great majority of MSS. and
HORATHII FLACCI

Nam Laurens malus est, ulvis et arundine pinguis.
Vinea submittit capreas non semper edules.
Fecundae leporis sapiens sectabitur armos.
Piscibus atque avibus quae natura et foret aetas
Ante meum nulli patuit quaesita palatum.
Sunt quorum ingenium nova tantum crustula promit.
Nequaquam satis in re una consumere curam,
Ut si quis solum hoc mala ne sint vina labore,
Quali perfundat pisces securus olivo.
Massica si caelo suppones vina sereno
Nocturna si quid crassi est tenuabitur aura,
Et decedet odor nervis inimicus; at illa
Integrum perdunt lino vitiata saporem.
Surrentina vaer qui miscet faecie Falerna
Vina columbino limum bene colligit ovo,
Quatenus ima petit volvens aliena vitellus.
Tostis marcentem squillis recreabí et Afræ
Potorem cochlea; nam lactua innatat acri
Post vinum stomacho; perna magis ac magis hillis
Flagitat immorsus refici; quin omnia malit
Quaeceunque immundis fervent allata popinis.
Est operae pretium duplicis pernoscere juris

53. odor nervis inimicus] This means what we call the bouquet which helped the wine in its intoxicating effects upon the brain. With the inferior wines various aromatics were frequently introduced for the purpose of giving them an agreeable perfume.

58. Tostis marcentem squillis] When the guest has got surfeited or drank so much he cannot digest any more, his appetite is to be tempted with fried shrimps and snails, of which the best sort came from the coast of Africa, and were called 'Solitanea,' the derivation of which name is uncertain, (see Varro de R. R. iii. 14, and Pliny ix. 56; xxx. 6): also with bacon and sausages. Comm. Cruq. says that 'hilla' is a diminutive form of 'hira': 'et significant intes-tinum salsum, vel ut alii dicunt fартum salisitum.' The lettuce, Catus says, ought not to be taken for this purpose, because it does not settle on the stomach when it is irritated. 'Lactua' was commonly eaten at the 'gustatorium' as an incentive to the appetite. Pliny, speaking of the different species of this plant, says: 'Est natura omnibus refrige ratrix, et ideo acetate gratae stomacho fastidium auferunt cibique appetentiam faciunt' (xix. 38). Catus says the cloyed stomach would rather (malit) have any coarse dish brought in from the cook-shop to stimulate it than lettuce after drinking wine, which was a different thing from taking it before dinner.

61. Flagitat immorsus refici;] 'Im-morsus' agrees with 'stomalun,' and signifies stimulated, 'pervulsus,' as 'qualia lassum pervellunt stomachum' (S. 8. 9). The older editions nearly all have 'in-morsus,' as if the meaning was that the stomach wanted to be recruited for a fresh attack upon the viands; but the expression is not admissible here. This reading, which is that of many MSS., including all those of the Royal Library at Paris collated by Pottier, probably arose out of the word 'immorsus,' a way of writing the compounds with 'in' found in many MSS.

62. immundis fervent allata popinis.] The 'popinae' were the lowest sort of eating-houses, where meat was cooked and usually eaten on the premises, but sometimes sent out. They were the same as the Greek ἐσταρία. They were a lower sort of 'cauponæ' (see S. i. 5. 2, n.). Their keepers, 'popae,' were, as might be expected, usually persons of no credit ('mi-rabar enim credi popae,' Cie. pro Mil. 24). The shops were dirty, and the company very low. Compare Epp. i. 14. 21: 'Fornix tibi et uncta popina Incutiunt urbis desiderium.' There were great numbers of these shops about the city; whence Martial says, in speaking of the improvement of the streets (vii. 61):

'Stringitur in densa nec caeca novacula turbæ:
Occupat aut totas nigra popina vias.
Tonsor, caupo, coquus, lanius sua limina servant.
Nunc Roma est, olim magna taberna fuit.'

The 'popinae' were called 'thermopolia' by Plautus (see Forcell.), because there the Romans drank hot spiced wine and water, 'calda.' Bekker (Gallus, 272) says there was no difference between a 'popina' and 'thermopolium.'

63. duplicis pernoscere juris] Catus goes on to describe the sauces, of which there are two kinds: one which he calls simple, but which was not entirely so, being made of sweet olive oil mixed with rich wine and 'muria,' which is not, as Comm. Cruq. says, salt water, but 'garum,' made from certain shell-fish (S. 8. 53). There was a composite sauce which was Naturam. Simplex e dulci constat olivo,
Quod pingui miscere mero muriaque decebit;
Non alia quam qua Byzantia putuit orca.
Hoc ubi confusum sectis inferbuit herbis
Corycioque croco sparsum stetit, insuper addes
Pressa Venafranae quod baca remisit olivae.
Picenis cedunt pomis Tiburtia succo;
Nam facie praestant. Venetaula convenit ollis;
Rectius Albanus fumo duraveris uavam.
Hane ego cum malis, ego faecem primus et allec,
Primus et invenior piper album cum sale nigro
Incretum puris circumposisse catilis.
Immane est vitium dare milia terna macello Angustoque vagos pisces urgeere catino.

made up of the above boiled with chopped herbs, with a sprinkling of saffron, and, when it had stood to cool, the finest olive oil of Venafrum (C. ii. 16, n.).

66. Byzantia putuit orca.] The 'thynnus' from which the best 'garum' was made was found best in the neighbourhood of Byzantium (Pliny ix. 20). 'Orca' is a jar used for preserving sauces and pickles.
Suidas derives it from an Aeolic word ὅχα:
ὅχα, κεβάμα ἀγγία ὑποδέκτικα ταρί-
χιν. See Bentley's note and Forcell.
Nearly every known MS. has 'putuit.' Lambinus and Torrentius and many of the old editions have 'putruit' (see S. 3. 194,n.).
The 'crocus' of Mons Corycus in Cilicia appears to have been most celebrated (Pliny xxi. 17). 'Stetit.' Comm. Cruq. explains
"cessavit agitare, fervere."

70. Picenis cedunt pomis Tiburtia] The apples of Tibur and Picenum have been referred to before (C. i. 7, 14; S. ii. 3.
272).

71. Venetaula convenit ollis:] This grape derives its name, Comm. Cruq. says, from Venusia, which is very doubtful.
The word is variously spelt. Pliny says (xiv. 4.
6), "Veniculam inter optime dephorescentes et ollis apstitissam Campani malunt sirculum vocare; ali staculum." Columnella also (ii. 2. 2, xii. 45) speaks of grapes preserved in jars for the winter. Pliny (xiv.3) says "alilis gratiam, qui et vinis, fumus affert fabrilis." For drying in this way Catus says the grape of the Alban hills is best.
His opinion is not supported by any extinct authority, as it is in the other instance.

75. Hane ego cum malis,] Catus says he was the first to introduce Albanian raisins at the second course, and likewise
'faex' and 'allec,' two pickles, as it would seem, but Forcellini makes them the same, being the lees of the 'muria' (v. 63, n.).
So Pliny describes 'alec,' or 'alex' as it is otherwise spelt. Speaking of 'garum,' he says, "vitium hujus est alex imperfecta nec colata faex." The names came to be differently applied perhaps. Pliny goes on to say: "Transit seinde in luxuriae creverunaque genera ad infinitum.—Sic alex per-venit ad ostrea," &c. So that it came from being a poor man's sauce to be a rich man's.
Catus also claims the merit of introducing little dishes containing a mixture of salt and white pepper. The object of all this, as well as the pickles, was to promote thirst, and add to the pleasure of drinking after dinner. White pepper, as Pliny (xiv. 7) says, is milder than black. It is made by blanching the finer grains of the black and taking off the rind. The ancients must have got their pepper from the East Indies. The best is grown on the Malabar coast.

75. Incretum] This comes from 'in-cerno,' to sift, or 'incernendo spargere' (Forcell.), to scatter with a sieve or 'in-cernicum.' It therefore means that the pepper was sprinkled over the salt. The Schol-ials interpret it differently: Acron 'permixtum,' Porphyrius 'non cernum,' and Forcellini takes it in the latter way, "in-divisum, confusum, admixtum—ab incerno sed contraria significationes." 'Catillus' is a diminutive form of 'catinus.'

76. milia terna macello] 3000 ses-terces for a dish of fish is a large sum, but not perhaps exaggerated. 'Larger sums were given for dainties. As to 'macellum,' Magna movet stomacho fastidia, seu puer unctis
Tractavit calicem manibus dum furta ligurit;
Sive gravis veteri craterae linus adhaesit.
Vilibus in scopis, in mappis, in scobe quantus
Consistit sumptus? Neglectis flagitium ingens.
Ten lapides varios lutulenta radere palma
Et Tyrias dare circum inulta toralia vestes,
Oblitum quanto curam sumptumque minorem
Haece habeant tanto reprehendi justius illis.

see S. 3. 229, n. By ‘vagos pisces’ he means that it is a shame to confuse in a narrow compass animals that have had the freedom and range of the seas. The liberty of the bird is expressed by the same epithet in C. iv. 4. 2.

79. calicem] The slave handing a drinking cup (‘calix’) to a guest, just after he had been gathering and licking up the remains of the dishes, would leave the marks of his fingers upon it, and this would turn the stomachs of the company, who would also be disgusted if they saw dirt upon the ‘cratera’ in which the wine and the water were mixed. The ‘calix’ was the same as the Greek κόλιξ. Its shapes and sizes and materials all varied very much. There were wooded and earthenware ‘calices,’ and others of common glass, and others of greater value of coloured glass; but those that were most valued of all were the ‘crystallina’ of a pure and highly transparent crystal glass. The coloured glass cups came principally from Alexandria. The Romans were curious in collecting old vessels for their table (‘veteres craterae’), as observed before (S. 3. 21, n.).

81. Vilibus in scopis.] ‘Scopae’ were besoms for sweeping the floors, walls, and furniture of a room, usually made of the branches of the wild myrtle or tamarisk.
The palm seems also to have been used.
See Martial (xiv. 82), ‘In pretio scopas testatur palma suisse.’ ‘Mappae’ were towels, for which ‘mantilia’ was another name. Each guest had a napkin, which it would seem he brought with him. See Martial (xii. 29. 21, sq.):—

Ad coenam Hermogenes mappam non attulit unquam,
A coena semper retulit Hermogenes."

But it does not appear that ‘mappae’ here means dinner-napkins. It means rather towels or dusters to clean the furniture and walls. As to ‘scobe’ Bekker says (Gallus,
p. 138, n.), “it still remains a question whether common saw-dust used for cleaning is meant by Horace, as there was scarcely any ‘sumptus’ in that. It was customary to strew the floor with dyed or sweet-smelling saw-dust, or something similar.”

83. Ten lapides varios] ‘Tene?’ is it for such as you? ‘Tene decet?’ The floors in the houses of the rich were laid with slabs of marble and mosaic work, and marble slabs were also introduced in the walls, though paintings were more common.
Representations of different ‘pavimenta’ found at Pompeii are given in Dict. Ant.
The meaning of ‘toralia’ is uncertain.
‘Torus’ meant properly a round pillow, as is shown by its root ‘ter’ (which appears in ‘tornus,’ ‘torqueo,’ &c. See C. i. 1. 28, n.) ‘Toral’ would naturally therefore be something belonging to the pillows, and here it probably has that meaning, though it has not always. It seems to signify something put over the rich ‘stragulae vestes’ (see last Satire, v. 118, n.), as we put chintz coverings over our furniture when it is not in use, or on ordinary occasions. Bekker thinks ‘mappae’ and ‘toralia’ mean here the same thing, because ‘scopae’ and ‘palma’ do so. He finds fault with Heindorf for saying that the ‘toralia’ were coverings for the cushions. He says that they were hangings with which the ‘lectus’ was draped from the ‘torus’ to the floor, relying upon a description of Petronius. But by this he contradicts himself, since the ‘mappae’ were not hangings. See Bekker’s Gallus, pp. 367. 369, Engl. abr. Inviting his friend Torquatus to dinner, Horace tells him he will take care ‘ne turpe toral, ne sordida mappa Corruget nares’ (Epp. i. 5.
22).

85. Oblitum quanto] Catius says that the neglect of those matters, which cost little and require but little attention, is more reprehensible than the absence of furniture, which the rich only can afford.
Quae nisi divitibus nequeant contingere mensis?"

"Docte Cati, per amicitiam divosque rogatus, Ducere me auditum perges quocunque memento.
Nam quamvis memori referas mihi pectore cuncta,
Non tamen interpres tantundem juvieris. Adde
Vultum habitumque hominis, quem tu vidisses beatus
Non magni pendis quia contigit; at mihi cura
Non mediocris inest, fontes ut adire remotos
Atque haurire quem vitae praeccepta beatae."

The case he supposes is that of a man who combines dirt with finery, slovenliness with ostentation.

88. Docte Cati] Catius, having brought his discourse to an end with an exhortation upon decency and order, Horace entreats him wherever it is he goes to get such lessons
he will take him with him, that he may drink wisdom at the fountain-head. Catius, he says, no doubt repeats accurately what he has heard, but such precepts would be more highly commended by the aspect, bearing, voice, &c. of the teacher himself.

94. fontes ut adire remotos] Horace here parodies Lucretius (i. 926): "juvat integros accedere fontes atque haurire."

SATIRE V.

In this Satire, which has a good deal of humour in it, Horace takes up the practice of will-hunting, of which, as of many other degrading vices that afterwards pervaded Roman society, he saw only the beginning. Describing the rage for making money in Epp. i. 1. 77, he says,—

"Pars hominum gestit conducere publica: sunt qui Crustis et pomis viduas venentur avaras
Excipiantque senes quos in vivaria mittant."

The practice was sufficiently common in Cicero's time to be thus spoken of by him (Paradox. v. 2): "An corum servitus dubia est qui cupiditate percussi nullam condi-tionem recusant durissimae servitutis? Hereditatis spes quid iniquitatis in serviendo non suscipit? quem nutum locupletis orbi senis non observat? loquitur ad voluntatem; quicquid denunciatum sit fact; assecatur, assidet, munatur. Quid horum est liber? quid non deique servi inertis?" This practice will only be found to prevail in a corrupt state of society; and Pliny (N. H. xiv. Proem.) connects it with the growth of wealth, and the time when money began to be the instrument of ambition and the measure of respectability; that is, he dates its birth from the decline of the Republic. His words are :
"Postquam senator censu legi coeput, judex fieri censu, magistratum ducemque nihil magis exornare quam census, postquam coepere orbitas in auctoritate summa et potentia esse, captatio in quaestu fortissimo ac sola gaudia in possidendo, pessum iere vitae pretia, onmesque a maximo bono liberalis dictae artes in contrarium eccidere, ac servitute sola profici coepstum. Hanc atius allo modo et in allis adorare; codem tamen habendique ad spes omnium tendente voto." Petronius (Sat. 124) speaks of finding "turbam herculepetarum" at Crotona. He wrote in the reign of Tiberius.

Ducentzer calls this Satire "felissima fictio." Dacier thinks nothing could be more ingenious "que le tour qu'il donne à cette Satire, ni plus heureux que le choix des acteurs qu'il introduit." The extravagance of the anachronism and the incongruity of the persons heighten the absurdity, but do not help the Satire, as far as I can see. Homer (Odys. xi.) makes Ulysses go down to Hades and there meet Teiresias the Theban prophet, who tells him of the hardships that awaited him in his journey home, where however in the end he is destined to arrive. Horace supposes a continuation of the interview, and makes Ulysses ask the soothsayer how he is to repair his fortunes when he gets home, and finds his property wasted by his wife's suitors, as the prophet told him it would be (see note on v. 6). Teiresias, though he implies that the cunning Ulysses would be at no loss in such a matter if he once got home, gives him his advice, which is to lay himself out for pleasing old men and women of fortune, and getting named in their wills, for which he lays down a few ordinary rules, of which a persevering and coarse servility is the chief, such as Periplectomenes describes in the Miles Gloriosus, iii. 1. 110, sqq. Ulysses appears in as low a character as he can,—an apt disciple, ready to be the shadow of a slave, and to prostitute his chaste Penelope if need be. The Ulysses of all poets after Homer is a contemptible personage, and it must be said in favour of Horace that Penelope, whose character in the Odyssey is feminine and pure, is by later writers represented as less chaste than Homer has drawn her. Those who only know her as the virtuous wife and mother, will not easily forgive the coarse allusions to her in this Satire. Sanadon and Dacier are anxious it should be understood, that when Ulysses appears to acquiesce in the advice of the prophet, he has no intention of demeaning himself so far as to follow it: "il se retire après la consultation sans répondre à Tirésias, et sans déclarer le parti à quoi il se détermine" (Sanadon). As it would be difficult to avoid condeming the whole construction of the Satire except by understanding it to be an extravagant burlesque, we need not be at the trouble of determining what the intentions of Ulysses were when the imperious Proserpine abruptly summoned his counsellor and broke off the dialogue.

The mention of the Parthians (v. 62) once more raises up among the chronologists the ghost of Crassus and the standards recovered in a.u.c. 734. The French editors take it for granted the Satire was written after that event. Franke more probably places the date before the battle of Actium, though he should have remembered C. i. 2. 41,

"Sive mutata juvenem figura Ales in terris imitaris;"

where, by 'juvenem,' Augustus is clearly meant (see note), before he came to the conclusion that after the battle of Actium "poeta unicum rerum arbitrum vix juvenis nomine insignivisset." The above ode was written not earlier than a.u.c. 725.

ARGUMENT.

Tell me now, Teiresias, before we part, how I may repair my broken fortunes. Why smile?

What, is it not enough that I promise you safe return?

O true prophet, you see how I am naked and poor, eaten out of house and home by those suitors, and what are birth and merit without money?

Well, to be brief, since you have such a horror of poverty, I will tell you how to get rich.

If a friend sends you some game, pass it on forthwith to some rich old gentleman, and take care he has the first fruits of your garden; never mind your Lares,—he is better than they. Be he the lowest of the low, walk out with him and give him the wall. What, I give the wall to a dirty slave? So did I never at Troy. Well then you must be content to be poor.

If that be so, then I must nerve my great heart. Tell me now how I am to act.

I repeat, you must fish for the old men's wills; and though you may now and then have only a nibble never give up in despair. If there is any suit going forward, don't ask which of the parties has the best case but which is the richest; and if he be without children go up to him and offer your services; call him delicately by his praenomen; tell him you love him for his virtues; you know the law, and will see no one deprives him of his rights; he may go home and make himself easy and leave the matter in your hands; and then do you persevere and carry it through for him. Summer or winter, never mind; men will admire your zeal; many fish will come into your pond.

Or if you know a widower with a sickly boy, try and get named second heres, that you may step in if the lad dies. And when any one asks you to read his will affect reluctance, but get a glance at the contents nevertheless.—It will happen occasionally that an astute fellow overreaches his man, as Coranus will Nasica.

What is this? Pray tell me if you may.

In times to come, when a son of Aeneas shall be mighty by land and by sea, Nasica shall marry his fair daughter to stout Coranus, and so think to get rid of his debts. Then shall the son hand his testament to the father and pray him to read. He shall modestly decline; but, being pressed, shall read in silence and find that he and his are left—nothing!—But to go on. If the dotard has a tricksy damsels or a freedman that manages him, make up to them; flatter them, and they will return the favour. But it is best to attack the head first. Praise his bad verses if he is fool enough to write; or if that is in his line, don't wait till he asks, but of your own accord send him your Penelope.

What, think you one so chaste, on whom her suitors could make no impression, would consent to this?

The suitors came with scanty gifts and thought more of your kitchen than your wife. Penelope is chaste till she shall have tasted of the old man's money.

There was a sly old woman at Thebes who made a provision in her will that her heres should carry her on his shoulders, greased for the occasion, to burial, and if he dropped her he was to forfeit. He had stuck to her all her life, and she hoped she might shake him off in this way when she was dead. Take warning by this and make your approaches carefully, neither too slack nor too impetuous; be neither too talkative nor too silent. Stand, like Davus in the play, with your head meekly bent and your eyes on the ground. Push your way with servility; if the wind blows, entreat him to cover up his dear head; clear his way in a crowd; be all attention to his prattle; if he is greedy of flattery ply him till he cries, Enough, and still blow him up like a bladder. And when your bondage is done, and the will is read, and you hear the pleasant words, "Let Ulysses inherit a fourth of my estate," and are sure you are not dreaming, then squeeze out a tear and cry for the dear departed, and take care your face does not betray you. Spare no expense for his funeral and his tomb. It will get you golden opinions. And if one of your co-heirs seems to be near his end, go and offer him any part of your share he likes as a present—But hold: the stern Proserpina summons me. Adieu, adieu.

---

HORATII FLACCI
"Hoc quoque, Tiresia, praeter narrata petenti Responde, quibus amissas reparare quacam res Artibus atque modis. Quid rides?" "Jamne doloso Non satis est Ithacam revehi patriosque penates Adspicere?" "O nulli quidquam mentite, vides ut Nudus inopsque domum redeam, te vate, neque illic Aut apotheca proxis intacta est aut pecus; atqui Et genus et virtus nisi cum re vilior alga est."

"Quando pauperiem, missis ambagibus, horres, Accipe qua ratione queas ditescer. Turdus Sive alidi privum dabitur tibi, devolet illuc Res ubi magna nitet domino sene; dulcia poma Et quosqueque feret cultus tibi fundus honores

3. Quid rides?] These words appear to be spoken by Ulysses, though some editors take them otherwise. Teiresias may be supposed to smile at Ulysses for asking advice in a matter in which his own craftiness would help him better than any counsel he could give him. His answer seems to mean, though obscurely, that when he gets back to his home, his wits will soon teach him how to repair his fortune. 'Jamne' means, 'what now I have told you that you will get home?'

6. te vate.] See Hom. Odys. xi. 110:—

"This bird, if well fattened, was considered a great delicacy by the Romans. Martial ranks it first among birds (xiii. 92):—

"Inter aves turdus, si quis me judice ceretet, Inter quadrupedes mattea prima lepus."

See also xiii. 51, where there is the following conceit:—

"Texta rosis fortasse tibi, vel divite nardo, At milii de turdis facta corona placet."

In Epp. i. 15. 40, the glutton Maenius pronounces that there is nothing better than one of these birds, "obeso nil melius turdo;" and the host at Beneventum produced a dish of them in honour of his visitors, but they were poor things, and he did not know how to dress them (S. i. 5. 76). 'Turdus' were preserved and fed, and cost a good deal for their size, being such small birds. Varro says that in his time they fetched three denarii apiece, and that from one villa 3000 were produced in a year (R. R. iii. 2. 15. See Bekker's Gallus, p. 70, n.). Columella (viii. 10) gives instructions for rearing them, and says "nunc setatis nostrae luxuries quotidiana facit hac pretia." 'Turdus' was not the common thrush, but the fieldfare, which is still reckoned a deli-
Ante Larem gustet venerabilior Lare dives;
Qui quamvis perjurus erit, sine gente, cruentus
Sanguine fraterno, fugitivus, ne tamen illi
Tu comes exterior si postulet ire recuses."
"Utne tegam spurco Damae latus? Haud ita Trojae
Me gessi certans semper melioribus." "Ergo
Pauper eris." "Fortem hoc animum tolerare jubebo;
cate bird. 'Privum' means for your own private eating.
14. Ante Larem[1] The first-fruits were offered to the Lares, as represented on a gem in Gorlaeus' collection, P. i. No. 190, in which is a naked figure standing an altar with a basket of fruit in his right hand and two ears of corn in his left. See Tibull.
i. 1. 13:—
"Et quodcumque mihi pomum novus edu-cat annus
Libatum agricolae ponitur ante deo."
No divinity was dearer to a Roman than his Lares, whose images stood in his hall, who reminded him of his departed ancestors, and whom he invoked and sacrificed to every day at his meals (see C. iv. 5. 34. On the worship of the Lares, full information will be found in Smith's Dict. Myth.).
15. sine gente,] Suppose him to be a 'libertinus,' and in former days to have run away from his master, in which case he would be branded on the forehead, and the shame of attending him would be greater.
He would also be 'sine gente,' that is, he would belong to no 'gens,' if he were the descendant of a freedman, or had suffered
'capitis diminutio,' if the definition of 'gen-tillis' by Scaevola given by Cicero (Top. vi.) is correct (see Dict. Ant. art. 'Gens,' p.
448, a). Horace means one of low birth, or who has been disgraced. The legal de-inition goes further, since 'capitis diminu-tio' might be incurred without disgrace, and the exclusion on the score of slavery extended to ancestors of the remotest degree.
17. Tu comes exterior[1] Teiresias advices that, if the rich man should call upon him to attend him when he walks abroad, he should never refuse to go, taking the least honourable place, which was by his patron's side, and usually between him and the road.
The Scholiast's explanation, "Exterior:
sinister, in sinistra parte positus," is not sufficient: the business of the humble companion was to give his patron the wall and to walk outside, "sive dexter sit sive sinister," as Forcellini says (s. v. 'interior'). The expressions 'tegere latus,' 'claudere latus,' were common enough, and meant plainly to take that side which was most exposed. See Juvenal (iii. 131):—
"Divitis hic servii clauidit latus ingeniorum Filius —"
where 'servi' means, as here, one who had been a slave. Martial calls the companion
'latus,' but the expression was probably peculiar to himself (vi. 68):—
"Inter Baianas raptus puer occidit undis Eutychius, ille tuum, Castrice, dulce
latus.'
Ovid, speaking of the respect shown to a Senator of the olden time on account of his age, says (Fast. v. 67),—
"Et medius juvenum, non indignantibus
ipsis,
Ibat, et inferior si comes unus erat."
Suetonius, speaking of the condescension of Claudius (c. 24), says, "Aulo Plauto etiam ovationem decretit (on account of his successes in Britain), ingressaque urbem ob-viam progressus, et in Capitolium eunti et inde rursus revertenti latus textit." And Etropius, repeating the same anecdote, says, "conscendenti Capitolium laevus in-cederet," from which it would seem as if the less honourable place was called conventionally 'laevus,' though the outside must as often be right as left (see Epp. i.
6. 50, n.). Torrentius has a long note on the subject. 'Utne tegam' is a short way of saying 'hortarisme me ut tegam?' 'Damae'
is used generally as a common name of slaves (see S. i. 6. 30). 'Spurus' is a word Lucillus used, as in that verse quoted by Cicero (Tusc. ii. 17), "Ergo hoc poterit 'Sannis spurus homo vita illa digninus locoque?"
20. hoc] When Teiresias tells him he must be content to be poor, or do as he he bids him, Ulysses consents to the degradation rather than incur the poverty, and makes a merit of doing so: he will bear the disgrace with his usual magnanimity. Some Et quondam majora tuli. Tu protinus unde Divitias aerisque ruam die, augur, acervos.

“Dixi equidem et dico: captes astutus ubique Testamenta senum, neu, si varier unus et alter.

Insidiatorem praeroso fugerit hamo,
Aut spem deponas aut artem illusus omittas.

Magna minorne foro si res certabitur olim,
Vivet uter locuples sine natis, improbus, ultro
Qui meliorem audax vocet in jus, illius esto
Defensor; fama civem causaque priorem
Sperne, domi si natus erit secundave conjux.

Quinte, puta, aut Publi, (gaudent praenomine molles Auriculae) tibi me virtus tua fecit amicum;

Jus ances novi, causas defendere possum;

Eriptiv quisvis oculos citius mihi, quam te .

Contemptum cassa nue pauperet; haec mea cura est,
Ne quid tu perdas neu sis jocus. Ire domum atque

Pelliculum curare jube; fi cognitor; ipse take ‘hoc’ as referring to ‘pauper eris,’ which, as Orelli says, the context disproves. The hero’s language is a parody of that which Homer puts into his mouth (Odys. xx. 18):—

\[\text{tē} \text{λαθι δι, κραδιν και κύντερον ἄλο \piο' \text{ή}ρας.}\]

And v. 223:—

\[\text{ヘδι γαρ μάλα πόλει \text{παθον και πολλ' \ιρόγονα.}}\]

Κύμαιοι και πολέμην μενα και τόδε τοιοι γενίσων.

Rudens ii. 6. 58: “Ibi me corruree posses aiebas divitas.”

27. \textit{olim]. See C. ii. 10. 17, n. On ‘ultra,’ C. iv. 4. 51; on ‘voce in jus,’ S. i. 9. 74, n.

28. \textit{sin e natis}]. Compare Lucian (Dial. Mort. vi. 5), καινὴν γάρ τινα ταύτην τίχ·

\[\text{νει \text{πινενοθικη, γραγο και γεράων \πωτος και \μάλα παι \τεκνοι των' οι \δὲ \τεκνοι υπὸ \τον \άγιαστον.}\]

32. \textit{Quinte, puta, aut Publi]} These names would be given a slave at his manumission, as Persius humorously describes it (v. 78):—

“Verterit hunc dominus; momento turbinis exit

Marcus Dama.”

38. \textit{Pelliculum curare jube;} This diminutive is frequently used without any particular force (see Forcell.). The expression is like that in Epp. i. 2. 29:—

“In cute curanda plus sequo operata juventus;”

and 4. 15:—

“Me pinguem et nitudem bene curata cuto vises,

Cum ridere voles Epicuri de grege porcum.”

‘Corpus curare’ is a common phrase, and Horace has “genium curare” (C. iii. 17. 15, n.).

— fi cognitor; ipse] ‘Si,’ ‘sis,’ ‘fis,’ appear in the old editions and in some MSS. Lambris restored the word ‘fi,’ which is found in the best MSS. and in two of the oldest editions, that printed at Milan in 1476, and the Venetian, 1479.

‘Cognitor’ means an attorney, one who is authorized to appear for another, either in maintaining or defending an action. ‘Procurator’ was also one who acted for another; but there was this difference between the two, that the procurator had to give security that the plaintiff would adopt his acts, which he was not bound to do, because Perstà atque obdura, seu rubra Canicula findet
Infantes statuas, seu pingui tentus omaso
Furius hibernas cana nive conspuet Alpes.
Nonne vides, alquis cubito stantem prope tangens
Inquiet, ut patiens, ut amicis aptus, ut acer?
Plures adnabunt thunni et cetaria crescent.
Si cui praeterea validus male filius in re
Praeclara sublatus aletur, ne manifestum
Caelibis obsequium nudet te, leniter in spem Adrepo officiosus, ut et scribare secundus

he was not necessarily appointed by the plaintiff; while the cognitor had no security to give, because he was appointed by and looked upon as the principal, and he was liable as such (Gaius iv. 97). The obsequiousness of the will-hunter was not to be deterred by such a responsibility. All the editors -but Bentley (and Orelli says he afterwards changed his mind) take 'ipse' with 'cognitor,' in which case it must mean that he was of his own accord ('ipse') to offer himself to the man as his cognitor, and see that he got his rights without any trouble or anxiety. This meaning of 'ipse' is not uncommon. The Greeks used αὐτός in the same way. But it seems more simple to take 'ipse' with what follows: "become his cognitor, and let him go home, while you yourself persevere, and hold out for him, whatever the weather may be."

39. seu rubra Canicula] He means in the height of summer or the depth of winter. The 41st verse, with the substitution of Furius for Jupitser, is taken from Bihaculus of whom much has been said in the Exc. on S. i. 10. 36. Whether the other expressions are so, or whether they are only a parody of his style, or taken from some other poet, we cannot tell. The epithet 'rubra' for the dog-star, and 'infantes' as an ornamental epithet to express the speechlessness of the statues are sufficiently absurd, and the hyperbole is not in good taste; there is vulgarity likewise in 'conspuer.' 'Omaso' -Forcellini interprets 'pro ipso ventre.' It may be that, but I think not. It does not occur elsewhere in this sense. It usually signifies tripe, a vulgar dish even among the Romans. (See Epp. i. 15. 34). Acron takes it for the man's belly.

42. cubito stantem prope tangens] Persius has the same expression: "Est prope te ignotus cubito qui tangat" (S. iv. 34).
Heres et, si quis casus puerum egerit Orco,
In vacuum venias: perraro haece ala fallit.
Qui testamentum tradet tibi cuque legendum.
Abnuere et tabulas a te removere memento,
Sic tamen ut limis rapias quid prima secundo
Cera velit versu; solus multisne coherces, Veloci percurre oculo. Plerumque recoctus

'tabula.' When a man made his will he commonly named a 'secundus heres,' or more than one, who would succeed to the ' hereditas,' if the first 'heres' or 'heredes' refused it, or had become disqualified, or had failed to express his or their intention of accepting it within a time named in the will. These were called 'substituti.' He might also if he pleased make provision,
in the case of naming his children his 'heredes,' that if they died 'impuberes,' another person or persons named by him should get the 'hereditas.' Cicero (Topic, i.) speaks of Crassus: "agens de eo qui testamento sic heredem instituisset, ut si filius natus essest in decem mensibus isque mortuus prius quam in suam tutelam venisset, seccundus heres hereditatem obtineret." The same provision might be made in the case of children not yet born. Cicero mentions such an instance (de Invent. ii. 42): "Pater-familias quam liberorum nihil haberet uxorem autem haberet, in testamento ipse scripsit:
si mihi filius genitus unus pluris est mihi heres esto. Deinde quae assoldent, Postea, si filius ante moritur quam in tutelam suam venerit tu mihi, dicebat, secundus heres esto." No son was born, and the next of kin disputed the right of the 'secundus heres' because he was appointed to succeed in the event of the supposed son dying before he could come in tutelam suam, which is the same as being 'impubes.' This was called 'pupillaris substitutio,' and may be referred to by Horace in this place. (See Dict.
Ant., art. 'Heres, p. 476, b. sq.) 'Vacua hereditas' was a common legal term. (See Forcell.)

40. puerum egerit Orco:] There is a little mock pathos in this. 'Agro,' with the dative, is not a prose construction. See
C. i. 24. 18: "Nigro compulerit gregi." 53.
ut limis rapias] 'Oculis' is understood after 'limis.' The advice given is that if the testator should give the man his book to read, he should affect indifference and put it from him, taking care first to get a side glance at its contents, and see if his name appears in the next line after the testator's. A will was commonly written on three pages, which were called severally
'prima,' 'secunda,' and 'ima cera.' The testator's name appeared in the first line of the first page, and after his came those of the 'heredes.' Suetonius thus describes the will of Julius Caeser (c. 83): "Novissimo testamento tres instituit heredes sororum nepotes, C. Octavium ex dodrante, et L.
Pinarium et Q. Pedem ex quadrante religio: in ima cera C. Octavium etiam in familiam nomenque adoptavit: pluresque percussorum in tutoribus filii, si quis sibi nascetur, nominavit: D. Brutum etiam in secundis hereditibus. Populo hortos circa Tiberim (see S. i. 9. 18) publice et virtium trecenos sestertios legavit." In the last page therefore, if the text is correct (as I believe it to be, though Lipsius has altered it, and most persons follow him), appeared the names of all but the 'primi heredes' (that is, the 'legatarii' and 'substituti'), together with the general provisions of the will. See Martial (iv. 70):

"Nil Amniano praeter aridam vestem
Moriens reliquit ultimis pater ceris.

This disposes of the opinion of those who think that 'secundo verum' is equivalent to 'heres secundo gradu'; that is, 'substitutus.' Porphyrion's note is "Quid prima secundo: bene hoc et juxta ordinem, quia prius testatoris nomen, secundo heredes." According to Suetonius (vit. Neronis, c. 17) in the time of Nero provision was made
'ut in testamentis primae duae cerae, testa-torum modo nomine inscripto, vacuae signaturis ostenderentur'; the object being that witnesses who attested the signature of the testator might not become acquainted with the names of the 'heredes' which appeared in the two first 'cerae.' 'Solus heres' would be called 'heres ex asse; if there were several 'heredes' they would be
'heres ex dodrante,' 'ex quadrante,' &c., according to the proportion of the estate devised to each, which was described by the different divisions of the as.

55. Plerumque recocctus Scriba ex quin-quevoio] 'Plerumque' is used by Horace Scriba ex quinquevir corvum deludet hiantem;
Captatorque dabit risus Nasica Corano."

"Num furis? an prudens ludis me obscura canendo?"

"O Laërtiade, quidquid dicam aut erit aut non:
Divinare etenim magnus mihi donat Apollo."

"Quid tamen ista velit sibi fabula, si licet, ede."

"Tempore quo juvenis Parthis horrendus, ab alto
in the sense of 'interdum' here and elsewhere. (See A. P. v. 14 and 95.) Forcellini only gives examples of this meaning from later writers. The 'scribae,' of whom an example occurs above (S. i. 5. 35), were clerks in public offices. These places were often got by purchase, and the 'scriba' received public pay. Nevertheless the 'quinqueviri' appear from this passage to have ranked lower than the 'scribae,' and Cicero speaks rather contemptuously of the office in his Acad. Prior. ii. 41. They were officers appointed to relieve the other magistrates at night of the charge of the city. These were the permanent 'quinqueviri,' but extraordinary commissions of five were often appointed for various purposes. (See Dict. Ant.) The meaning of 'recuctus' has been variously given. The Scholiasts Acron and Comm. Cruq. make it equivalent to 'astutus,' 'vafer:' "saepe refectus et per hoc astutus," Porphyrion says it is "iterum scriba factus," as if the man had been a 'scriba,' had become a 'quinquevir,' and had returned to his former condition again. Some editors take it as Acron does, though his sense I think is only suggested by the context. Others (as Lambinus) follow Porph. What the exact force of Horace's description is I do not see, whether we take 'recuctus' in the sense of the last Scholiast, or suppose it only to mean, as it may, one who having been a 'quinquevir' has been transformed into a 'scriba.' Perhaps Teiresias means to say that Coranus, who had got into a situation in which he had acquired a good deal of money and some knowledge of business, was too wide awake to be caught in the snare, saw through the attentions of the fortune-hunter and laughed at him. The 'corvus hians' is perhaps taken from Aesop's fable of the fox and crow, copied by Phaedrus (i. 13).

57. Captator] This word, as 'captare' above (v. 23), is used by Juvenal several times for this character; another word used in the same sense was 'herediteta,' whether by any classical author but Petronius I do not know. We know nothing more of the actors in this story, Nasica and Coranus, but it appears likely they were living persons and the case well known.

58. Num furis?] Ulysses does not understand him, and asks if he is frenzied, as prophets were when inspired.

59. aut erit aut non:] This is taken by some to be an ironical διόκοια; that is, it may be taken as if Teiresias meant that whatever he said was going to happen would happen, and vice versa; whereas he may mean to say that there is no certainty about the issue of the prophecies,—they will happen or will not, and he does not know which. I am not sure about the double meaning, and rather think Horace only meant to put a pompous truism into the mouth of the prophet. Various alterations have been proposed, but they have no MS. authority, and I need not repeat them. Orelli has done so in his various readings.

"Nascetur pulchra Trojanus origine Caesar, Imperium Oceano famam qui terminet astris,
Julius a magno demissum nomen Iulo:
Hunc tu olim ceelo spolius Orientis onus tum Accipies secura."

By his adoption into the Julia gens Augustus claimed direct descent from Aeneas. Tacitus mentions a speech delivered by Nero in favour of the people of Ilium, which was built not far from the supposed site of the ancient city, in which "Romanum Troja demissum, et Juliae stirpis anctorem Aeneam, aliquae haur corpor fabulis vetera, facunde executus, perpetrat ut Ilienses omni publico munere solvereuntur" (Ann. xii. 58). Suetonius, in his life of Claudius (c. 25), mentions the same act of grace, and the speech of Nero, "pro Rhodiis et Iliensis Graece verba fecit" (vit. Neron. c. 7). The Romans attached much importance to the legend which derived their origin from the Trojans. See C. iii. 3, Introduction. On 'genus' see C. i. 3. 27, n.
Demissum genus Aenea, tellure marique
Magnus erit, forti nubet procera Corano
Filia Nasicae metuentis reddere soldum.
Tum gener hoc faciet: tabulas socero dabat atque
Ut legat orabit; multum Nasica negatas
Accipiet tandem et tacitus leget, invenietque
Nil sibi legatum praeter plorare suisque.
Illud ad hacc jubeo: mulier si forte dolosa
Libertusve senem delirum temperet, illis
Accedas socius; laudes, lauderis ut absens.
Adjuvat hoc quoque, sed vincit longe prius ipsum
Expugnare caput. Scribet mala carmina vecors:
Laudato. Scortator erit: cave te roget; ultro Penelopam facilis potiori trade.” “Putasne?
Perduci poterit tam frugi tamque pudica,

64. forti nubet procera] These epithets are mock heroic, and adapted to the character of the speaker. Nasica owed money to Coranus, and gave him his handsome daughter by way of discharging the debt and getting an interest in his son-in-law’s will. Coranus understands him, and begs him to read his will. He coquets with the proposal just as Teiresias advises his hearer to do, but allows his modesty to be overcome, and on reading it through in silence finds no legacy left to himself or his family. If by ‘suis’ it is meant that Coranus excluded the offspring of his marriage with Nasica’s daughter, they would be exeheredated by name, otherwise the will would be void. In respect to himself or any other members of his family whom Nasica might expect to be named ‘heredes,’ or to have legacies, he would simply find that no notice was taken of them. We need not suppose with Jacobs (Lect. Ven. p. 402) that the will contained any such words as “Nasica cum suis plorare jubet.” The phrase is equivalent to *ofiωτέτων or κλατέν κελευ. (See S. i. 10. 91).

65. metuentis reddere soldum.] On ‘metuo’ see C. ii. 2. 7. He had neither power nor will to pay. ‘Solidum’ means the entire debt, including principal and interest. The contracted form is used before (S. i. 2. 111).

67. orabit,] The rich man is maliciously bent on seeing the disappointment of his father-in-law.

73. vincit longe prius] ‘It is better by a great deal first to take the head by storm.’

Orelli takes ‘prius’ differently: “id quod, vel, utpote quod prius; i. e. efficacius est: επίρνον ὤν.” I hardly understand his meaning.

76. Penelopam] Most of the MSS. have this form. Some have the Greek, Penelope. What Bentley says on this subject (see Epod. xvii. 17, n.) admits of exceptions, as all such rules will be found to do when the metre requires it. Immediately below (v. 81) we have Penelope (which Bentley and Fea change to Penelopa without making it more Latin), and in Epp. i. 7. 41, ‘Ithace.’ Dacier thinks Ulysses means to express no sort of horror at the advice of Teiresias, but is only afraid his wife will prove too chaste; which apprehension the prophet sets himself to dispel. ‘Peructor’ is the name for a pimp. See Cicero (Verr. ii. 1. 12): “Sileatur de nocturnis ejus bacchationibus; lenonum, aleatorum, perductorum nulla mentio fiat.” Plantus (Mostell. iii. 2. 161):

“Apage istum a me perductorem; nihil moror ductarier; Quinquid est errabo potius quam me per ductet quisiam.”

The words ‘frugi’ and ‘frugalitas’ Cicero (Tusc. Disp. iii. 8) derives from ‘fruges,’ because it is the best thing the earth produces; a bad reason even if the etymology be right. He gives the word a wide meaning; “tres virtutes, fortitudinem, justitiam, prudentiam, frugalitas est complexa.—Eius videtur esse proprium motus animi appententes regere et sedare semperque adversan-
HORATII FLACCI

Quam nequiere proci recto depellere cursu?"
"Venit enim magnum donandi parca juventus,
Nec tantum veneris, quantum studiosa culinae.
Sic tibi Penelope frangi est, quae si semel uno
De sene gustarit tecum partita lucellum,
Ut canis a corio nunquam absterrebitur uncto.
Me sene quod dicam factum est: ans imperba Thebis
Ex testamento sic est elata: cadayer
Uncutm oleo largo nudis humoris tulit heres,
Scilicet elabi si posset mortua; credo
Quod nimium institerat viventi. Cautus adito:
Neu desis operae neve immoderatus abundes.
Difficilem et morosum offendet garrulus ultimo;

84. anum improba Thebis] 'Improba' seems to mean 'sly,' which we too call 'wicked.' See S. I. 9. 19.
87. Scilicet elabi si posset] 'Of course it was to see whether she could escape from him when dead,' or 'in hopes that she might.' We are to suppose, as Comm.
Cruq, says, she had made it a condition in her will that if he did not carry her without letting her drop he was to forfeit the inheritance. Of this story Estré says (p. 555):
'quin Romae Horatii tempore accederit mili dubium non esse videtur.' Orelli thinks it is taken from some 'minus,' and considers it an incredible story. It is certainly very strange. 'Scilicet' is in reality a verb, and signifies 'you may know,' 'you may be sure.' For this use of 'si' see Key's L. G. 1422, and compare the example there quoted from Caesar. "Hostes circumfundantur ex omnibus partibus si quem aditum reperire possint" (Bell. Gall. vi. 37). Fea quotes some Vatican MSS. that have 'sic,' and the oldest Blandinian has 'ut sic,' whereby the authority of that MS. is much damaged.

89. ane—abundes.] 'Don't overdo it.'
90. ulro: Non etiam sileas.] 'Ultro' has given a good deal of trouble. Fea quotes several MSS. that have 'ultra,' and Lambinus mentions that reading, which was in all the Blandinian MSS. Pottier, who edits from a collation of the Paris
MSS., has 'ultra' in his text, and mentions no various readings. Baxter and Combe have 'ultra,' but it seems to me to have no meaning here. The editors who have 'ultra' differ as to the connexion, some taking it with 'garrulus,' others with what follows. I think it goes with the...
Non etiam sileas. Davus sis comicus atque
Stes capite obstipo, multum similis metuenti.
Obsequio grassare; donec, si increbuit aura,
Cautus uti velet carum caput; extrahe turba
Oppositis humeris; aurem substringe loquaci.
Importunus anat laudari; donec Ohe jam!
Ad caelum manibus sublatis dixerit, urge,
Crescentem tumidis infla sermonibus utrem.
Cum te servitio longo curaque levari,

former, and means that he should not speak before he was spoken to. On ‘ultra’ see C. iv. 4. 51, n. It is a difficult word to translate, and seems awkwardly placed here. As to ‘non’ for ‘ne,’ compare Epp.
ii. 18. 72: “Non ancilla tumur jecur ulceret ulla puerev; and A. P. 400: “non sit qui tollere curet.”

91. Davus sis comicus.] Horace has introduced a Davus in this respectful attitude in S. 7 of this book: “Jamaudum auscultans et cupiens tibi dicere servus Pauca reformitudo.”

92. Stes capite obstipo,] Suetonius, describing Tiberius, says (c. 68), “incedebat cervice rigida et obstipa; “hic est qui Graecis dicitur βουσκήν, nam βύτιν est stipare—contrarii sunt his qui rigida cervice capite retrorsum adducto incedunt quos Graeci συμπραγγόνιος nominant” (Casu-bon). Arrian in Epictetus speaks of a man walking as though he had swallowed a spit:
τί ἡμῖν δειλίως καταπίνων πιστίτης; (quoted in the same note of Cas. on Suet.
l. c.) The booby in Persius (S. iii. 90) turns up his nose at the philosophers who go about “obstipo capite et figentes lumina terris.” It means therefore stiff, unbending, or bent downwards, with the eyes fixed on the ground. As to ‘multum similis,’ see S. i. 3. 57, n.

93. Obsequio grassare,] ‘Grassor’ is a frequentative form of ‘gradior,’ and signifies to go on, advance. The expression in the text is like ‘grassari dolo’ (Tac. Hist. iv.
16), and other like phrases. Livy and Tacitus use the word often. The MSS.
vary between ‘increbuit,’ ‘increbruit,’ and ‘increbuit.’ Penn adopts the last, though he must have been aware that the quantity of the second syllable is short. All the Paris MSS. have ‘increbuit’ or ‘increbuit,’ except three, which have ‘increbruit.’ The oldest Bland. had ‘increbruit,’ the others all ‘increbuit.’ One of the Berne has ‘increbuit,’ another ‘increpuit,’ and I take the latter to be merely a corruption introduced by copyists who found ‘increbuit’ and thought it was wrong. Lambinus, Torrens, and others argue for ‘increbruit,’ which form appears in every instance in the Medicean MS. of Virgil. (See V. L. Georg.
i. 359, Wagner). Orelli approves that form, Heinrodt the other. It should be observed that the root of the word is ‘creb,’ and that the second ‘r’ is no part of the root.
Whether it improves or injures the sound of the word must be matter of opinion, and in the conflict of MSS. the question can hardly be decided with certainty. It is discussed in a note on Cic. in Ver. ii. 2. 3, by Mr. Long.

95. aurem substringe loquaci,] ‘Stringo’ means to grasp in the hand; ‘aurem sub-stringe’ therefore may mean to hold up the ear as we commonly do when we wish to catch every word that is said. Other explanations have been given, but they all come to the same point, which cannot be mistaken. He was to pay the strictest attention to the old man, let him be as garrulous as he would. “Arrige aurem subjecta manu et quasi collige. Sic vestis substringi dicitur quae attollitur et accingi-tur” (Juvencius).

96. donec Ohe jam,] If he is fond of flattery, ply him with it till even he is forced to cry ‘hold, enough!’ and blow him up with your fulsome breath like a bladder.
Though the old man might say he had had enough, he was not to be taken at his word, but plied still harder, for he never could have too much. If the man’s tact were at all proportioned to his servility, this advice might be of use to him; otherwise it would only do in very gross cases. ‘Importunus’ Lambinus explains as ‘is qui nunquam conquiescit neque aliis conquiescendi potes-tatem fact.’ The expression ‘Ohe jam satis’ is common. See S. i. 5. 12, and Martial (iv. 91):

“Ohe jam satis est, ohe libelle,
Jam pervenimus usque ad umbilicum.”
Et certum vigilans, Quartae sit partis Ulixes,
Audieris, heres: Ergo nunc Dama sodalis
Nusquam est? Unde mihi tam fortem tamque fidelem?
Sparg subinde, et, si paulum potes, illacimare: est
Gaudia prodentem voltum celare. Sepulcrum
Permissum arbitrio sine sordibus extrue; funus
Egregie factum laudet vicinia. Si quis
Forte coheredum senior male tussiet, huic tu
Dic, ex parte tua seu fundi sive domus sit Emptor, gaudentem nummo te addicere. Sed me Imperiosa trahit Proserpina; vive valeque.”

100. Et certum vigilans,] Bentley illustrates this by Ovid (Heroid. x. 9):

“Incertum vigilans, a somno languida, movi Thesea pressuras semisupina manus;”

and Statius (Theb. v. 212):

“Turbidus incertumque oculis vigilantibus hostem Occupat.”

It means therefore ‘wide awake,’ not confusely as those who are half asleep.

— Quartae sit partis] The ‘heres’ of one fourth of the property would be ‘ex quadrante’ or ‘ex teruncio.’ (See note on v. 63, above.) The formula in wills was such as this: “Sola mihi uxor heres esto,” “Semonprinius ex parte dimidia heres esto,” wherefore Bentley, with very little authority, substitutes ‘esto’ for ‘sit.’

101. Dama,] See 2. 18. He is to throw in now and then (‘sparg subinde’) a whine for the dear man that is gone, and squeeze out a tear if he possibly can.

102. Unde mihi tam fortem,] This abrupt and elliptical way of speaking occurs again below (S. 7. 116): “Unde mihi lapidem? Quorsum est opus? Unde sagittas?” Seneca (Herc. Fur. 296) has the same:

“— unde illum mihi
Quo te tuamque dexteram amplerat diem?”

Compare the broken language Parmeno puts in Phaedria’s mouth in Terence (Eun. i. 1. 20): “Egone illam, quae illum? quae me? quae non?” &c. ‘Parabo’ may be understood, or some such word.

103. est] This is equivalent to esse. Lambinus quotes this verse from a farce of Publius Syrus: “Heredis fictus sub persona risus est.”

105. Permissum arbitrio] A sum of money was generally named in the will for the funeral expenses. Sometimes they appear to have been left expressly to the judgment and liberality of the ‘heres’ or ‘heredes’ as here. But if no mention was made of this subject in the will, or if a man died intestate, those who succeeded to the property were bound to provide all that was decent for his interment. As to ‘funus,’ see note on S. i. 6. 43. ‘Commissum’ was the common reading before Lambinus (though Ven. 1463, has ‘permissum ’), but ‘permissum’ has more authority, and Lambinus says truly “committere vide dicimus, poteris permittere potestati et arbitrio.” See C. i. 9. 9: “permitte divis caetera.”

108. seu fundi sive domus sit Emptor,] Fundus is a landed estate together with the buildings upon it. ‘Domus’ therefore, which is opposed to ‘fundus’ here, and in Epp. i. 2. 47, may mean a town-house. The advice is, that if one of the man’s ‘coheredes,’ who is old, and by a bad cough shows he is near his end, expresses a wish to have an estate or house which forms part of his share, he should declare himself delighted to make it over to him for a nominal price, a single ‘sesterius.’ This would be a bold game, but he might hope that such generosity on his part would be remembered in the sick man’s will. ‘Addicere’ is a legal term used in selling, “and signifies the declaration of him who sells as to the transfer of the thing to the buyer” (Long, Verr. ii. 2. 32). It was used in private bargains as here, and at public auctions it was the word used for declaring who was the purchaser. For all the meanings of ‘addicere,’ ‘addictus,’ ‘addictio,’ with examples, see Forcell. Suetonius, speaking of Caesar’s fondness for Servilia, and his rich presents to her, says (c. 50), “super alias donationes amplissima praedia ex auctionibus hastae ei nummo addixit,” where ‘minimo’ has been proposed for ‘nummo,’ and appears in some MSS. I do not see what is gained by the change. Either way he must have tampered vastly with the public auctions for the benefit of his mistress.
SATIRE VI.
A.U.C. 724.

Whenever Horace touches on matters personal to himself he does it with humour and feeling. He is also very skilful in telling a story or representing a dramatic tableau. The fable of the town and country mouse could hardly have been better told than it is here. The apostrophe to the country beginning 'O rus, quando te aspician,' and the contrast between a town and country life, are among his most natural touches; and the allusion to his intimacy with Maecenas, and the envy it had brought upon him, is managed with delicacy towards his patron, while it shows in a very few words the mixture of pride and annoyance which the feeling against him caused. He outlined this feeling, as he tells us in C. iv. 3. 16 (see Introduction); but at this time it perhaps caused him a good deal of pain; for he was not a man of vigorous temperament capable of disregarding a jealousy he did not deserve, and he had none of the ambition which overlaps the jealousy it creates. He had no desire to be mixed up with public affairs; and if he sought Maecenas, it was in gratitude for his kindness and for the pleasure of his society, and that of the circle to which his patronage introduced him. When therefore vulgar people appealed to him as the depository of state secrets and in the great man's confidence, it disturbed and annoyed him probably, as he here with evident sincerity professes.

The historical references in this Satire mark the date of its composition pretty accurately. It appears (v. 53) that the Daci were in arms against the Romans. They helped Antonius at Actium (C. iii. 6. 14, n.), and the following year, A.U.C. 724, M. Crassus was sent against them. (Dion Cass. li. 23.) In the same book (c. 3, sq.) Dion relates that the veterans who had fought at Actium, having been sent back to Italy, were discontented and broke out into mutiny because they had no reward. In the middle of the winter of A.U.C. 723—724, Augustus came from Asia to Brundusium for the purpose of quelling this mutiny, and gave money to some, and to the others he distributed land in those districts which had been favourable to Antonius. This distribution had been promised but not made when this Satire was written (v. 55). In the absence of Augustus, when he went against Antonius and till his return to Rome, Maecenas, at first singly and afterwards in conjunction with M. Agrippa, was deputed by Augustus to exercise those powers in the city and in Italy which he himself would have exercised had he been there. (Dion Cass. li. 3; Pliny xxxvii. 4.) This too is referred to in v. 38: all of which goes to indicate the beginning of A.U.C. 724 as the time when this Satire was written. In v. 40 he says that upwards of seven years had passed since he became intimate with Maecenas; add to that the nine months that elapsed between his first introduction and his recall (S. i. 6. 61), and we bring the former event to the beginning of A.U.C. 716. How long he had been in possession of his Sabine estate we cannot gather from this Satire; but there is nothing in it to disturb the opinion that it was presented to him either in A.U.C. 721 or 722. He speaks familiarly of a country life no doubt, but one or two seasons there would give him a sufficient taste of that way of living to account for any expressions in this poem.

ARGUMENT.

The height of my desires used to be a small bit of ground with a garden, a running stream, and a little wood to crown them all. I have more than I asked, and I ask no more, thou son of Maia, than that these may be mine for ever. If I have neither increased my store by dishonesty, nor am likely to waste it through vice or neglect,—if I am content with that I have, nor have prayed for a slice of my neighbour's field, nor sighed for hidden treasure,—I ask thee to fatten my flocks, and all I have but my wits, and be with me, my mighty protector.

(v. 16.) Now that I have retreated to my castle in the mountains, what subject is worthier of my muse than the spot where I escape from the snares of ambition and the pestilent winds of autumn?

(v. 20.) Janus, be thou the beginning of my song. When at Rome thou hastest me to the Forum. 'Haste, lest any be at the post of duty and friendship before thee:' and so in all weathers I must go. And when the business is over and I have given my ball, I must struggle through a crowd, and be cursed and taunted with 'What are you about, mad fellow? Are you to be thrusting every one out of your way to get back with all haste to Maecenas?' and this tickles my vanity, I confess. And when I get to my friend's, hundreds of commissions come dancing before my mind. 'Roscius entreated you to be early at the Puteal to-morrow.' 'The Scribae wanted you to attend their meeting very specially to-day.' 'Mind Maecenas puts his seal to this diploma.' 'I'll try.' 'You know you can if you like.'

(v. 40.) It is nearly eight years since Maecenas began to take notice of me, just to the extent of taking me with him into the country, and talking of most common-place topics. From that day envy has been growing upon me. If I go with him to the games or the Campus Martius, 'Son of Fortune!' cry they all. Is some bad news abroad, every body comes to me for information, and if I profess ignorance, 'Oh you are laughing at us; you must know.' 'Are the soldiers to have their lands in Sicily or Italy?' Though I swear I know no more than they do, they only think me the closest of mortals. And so my life is wasted, and I cry; O country, when shall I behold thee again, and quaff forgetfulness of care in the midst of my books, with quiet nights and idle days, and light repasts, and pleasant friends, with the wine-cup free, and conference of soul, and the prattle of our good old Cervius.

(v. 78.) A good story was that he told us when one commended the wealth of the miser Arellius, little knowing the anxiety it cost him.

"Once upon a time," said he, "a country mouse entertained a city friend in his hole: a shrewd thrifty mouse, but hospitable nevertheless. Well, he put before him the best he had,—pulse and oats, and dry grape stones, and nibbled bits of land,—to tempt his dainty palate, while he himself ate nought but coarser grains. Then at length says the gentleman from the town, 'How canst thou endure, my friend, to live in these wilds? Wouldst thou not prefer the haunts of man to these rough woods? Then haste, come back with me; life is short; we all must die; live cheerfully while thou mayst.' So the clown jumps up, and off they set for the city. The night was at its noon when they entered the rich man's house, where the bright coverlid clothed the ivory couch, and plenteous were the remains of the evening's repast. Then the host sets his rustic friend on the fine couch, and girds himself up to attend him, changes the dishes, and tastes before he serves them. While the other is making merry over his altered condition, lo! the doors creak upon their hinges, the watch-dogs bark, and the trembling friends rush hither and thither, till safe at last, says the countryman, 'I like not this life of thine: farewell. In my hole in the woods I fear no surprises, and I'll make myself happy with my humble fare.'"
Hoc erat in votis: modus agri non ita magnus,
Hortus ubi et tecto vicinus jugis aquae fons
Et paulum silvae super his foret. Auctius atque Di melius fecere. Bene est. Nil amplius oro, Maia nate, nisi ut propria haece mihi munera faxis.

5
Si neque majorem feci ratione mala rem
Nec sum facturus vitio culpave minorem;
Si veneror stultus nihil horum: 'O si angulus ille
Proximus accedat qui nunc denormat agellum!
O si urnam argenti fors quae mihi monstrat, ut illi
Theasaurum invento qui mercenarius agrum
Illum ipsum mercatus aravit, dives amico

1. non ita magnus.] See Key's L. G.
1451, i. Compare with these lines C. iii.
16. 29, sq. As to 'modus,' signifying quantity, see Forcellini, and compare Cicero (ad Att. xii. 33): "nihil scrispit nisi de modo agri."

2. jugis aquae fons] It is doubted whether 'jugis' belongs to 'aqua' or 'fons.' I have no doubt it belongs to aqua.' The etymology of the word I am not acquainted with. It signifies running water, and a good spring of this would be of great value to the property.

3. super his] 'Besides these.' In this sense 'super' usually governs the accusative. (See Key's L. G. 1381, e.) Another instance of the ablative is found in Silius (Pun. i. 60):

" —— his super aevi
Flore virens, avet Aegates abolere, parenttum Dedecus."

'Super' is used absolutely in this sense of
'more,' as in Epod. i. 31: "Satis superque me benignitas tua Ditavit," which passage may be compared with what follows: "anc-tius atque Di melius fecere." 'Bene est' occurs in C. iii. 16. 43: "Bene est cui deus obtulit Parca quod satis est manu," and is familiar in the formula s. v. e. v. (si vales bene est; valeo) which the Romans prefixed to their letters.

5. Maia nate.] Respecting Mercury, the god of luck and gain, the protector of poets and of Horace in particular, see S.
ii. 3. 60; C. ii. 7. 13; ii. 17. 29. Of 'proprius,' signifying 'permanent,' many examples will be found in Forcellini, and this may be added to them. (See also S. 2.
129, n.) As to the form 'faxin' see S.
ii. 3. 36, n.

7. vitio culpave] Heindorf distinguishes these as 'prodigientia — negligentia.'
'Culpa' is often used by the law-writers in the sense of 'negligence.' 'Vitium' appears to mean a defect of the nature,
'culpa' of the conduct.

8. Si veneror stultus nihil horum:] As to 'veneror,' 'to pray for,' see C. S. 40.
This passage has been imitated by Persius
(S. ii. 9):

"Illa sibi introrsum et sub lingua immurmurat: 'O si
Ebulis patruus, praeculum funus!' et,
'O si
Sub rastro crepet argenti mihi sera, dextro Hercule!"

Forcellini gives no other instance of 'denormare' to disfigure.' One of Cruquins' MSS. (none of the Blandinian), and a few others quoted by Fea, and most of the editions of the sixteenth century, have 'de-format.' The Scholiasts had 'denormat,' which Porphyrian explains, "extra modum procedens, denormare facit." Acron says rightly: "denormat: decurcat et inequa-lem facit. Est autem norma ad quem men-sores fines aequales dirigunt habita perpendiculi racione." 'Mercenarius' is a free labourer who works for pay.

12. amico Hercule!'] Acron says "Mer-curius dicitur esse dator opum: Hercules vero custos;" and Porphyrian "ideo quod thesaurior praeest: et sunt qui eundem incubonem quoque esse velint; unde putant et quod res rustica in tutela sit ejus, nam ilii sacrificia reddunt rustici cum juvenes domuerint." 'Incubo' is applied to one who watches over a treasure in a passage of Petronius quoted by Forcellini. Though Hercules was especially a Grecian hero,
Hercule! si quod adest gratum juvat, hac prece te oro:
Pingue pecus domino facias et cetera praeter
Ingenium, utque solesto custus mihi maximus adsis.
Ergo ubi me in montes et in arem ex urbe removi,
Quid prius illustrem satiris musaque pedestri?
Nec mala me ambitio perdit nec plumbeus Auster

and was in no way connected historically with the Romans, he was held by them in high esteem. He had a temple in the north part of the city near that of Venus Erycina, and not far from the Porta Colina (Livy xxi. 10). We read in Plutarch of Sulla and Crassus dedicating a tenth of their whole fortune to Hercules, and feasting the people magnificently in his honour. (Sulla, c. 33; Crassus, c. 2. 12.) He was associated with Mercury in various ways; as the god of gain, which we find here and in the offerings above mentioned, which were of frequent occurrence; as the god of ways and of boundaries, 'vilis' and 'terminalis,' and likewise as presiding over the 'palaestra.' There are representations of the two gods in one, of which a specimen is given in Agostini's collection from a gem (No. 109), and he mentions having seen others on rings that had been worn by 'athletae,' and many statues in marble. The combined form is called 'Ermoporalc' by Athenaeus, and it appears to have been very common. The notion seems to be that of combining strength and cunning.

13. quod est] See C. iii. 29. 32: 'quod adest memento Componere aequus.' It is an adaptation of the Greek τὸ παρὰν. 'Gratum juvat' may either mean 'satisfies me, for I am grateful,' or 'is welcome and satisfies me.' Orelli prefers the latter. He may be right, but not without doubt.

16. in montes et in arem] See C. iii. 4. 21: 'Vester, Cameneae, vester in arduos Tollor Sabinos.' By 'arcem' he means his house on the Sabine hills. (See C. ii. 7. 21.)

17. quid prius illustrem] 'What subject should I take in preference to this;' that is, the country to which he retires. On 'pedestri' see C. ii. 12. 9, n.

18. plumbeus Auster] The south-wind is so called as depressing the energies and spirits. The epithet is very expressive, 'the leaden south.' Compare C. i. 14. 15:

"Frustra per Auctumnos nocentem Corporibus metemus Austrum;" and C. iii. 23. 8: "Pomiferove grave tempus anno;" and Epp. i. 7. 5:

"— dum ficus prima calorque Designatorem decorat lictoribus atris;"

Juvenal also speaks thus:

"— Jam letiferor sedente pruinis Auctumnio jam quartanaam sperantibus aebris."
(S. iv. 56.)

And—

"— Jam deficientibus Austris, Spes vitae cum sole redit." (S. xii. 69.)

And again—

"Grande sonat metuque jubet Septembris et Austri
Adventum." (S. vi. 517.)

Auster and Notus are not distinguished by the poets. They are invariably represented as bringing heavy rains: 'quid cogitetur humidos Austere' (Georg. i. 462). Ovid has a representation, which seems plainly to have been taken from a picture (Met. i. 204, sqq.):

"— Madridis Notus evolat alis,
Terriblem picea tectus caligine vultum,
Barba gravis nimbus; canis fluit unda capillis:
Fronte sedent nebulae: rorant pennaeque sinusque."

Statius refers to these 'sinus' or folds of his garments, it would seem from another picture:

"— sed plurimus Auster
Ingloemerat nocentem, et tenebrosa volumina torquet, Defunditique imbre." (Theb. i. 350.)

We do not know what we have lost in the paintings of the ancients till we read these fine descriptions. Probably following the same guidance, Statius speaks of "pullens Auctumnus" (Silv. ii. 1. 217). Horace had a different picture in view perhaps when he wrote "decorum mitibus ponis caput Auctumnus arvis extulit" (Epod. ii. 17). In one of Agostini's gems (No. 147) he is represented as quite a youth with fresh strong wings, a basket of fruit under one arm, and in the other hand a dead wild-duck or goose. He was therefore represented under various aspects.
Auctumnusque gravis, Libitinæ quaestus acerbae.
Matutine pater, seu Jane libertius audis,
Unde homines operum primos vitaque labores
Instituunt, sic dis placitum, tu carminis esto
Principium. Romae sponsorem me rapis. Eja, Ne prior officio quisquam respondat, urge.

19. Libitinæ quaestus acerbae.] The goddess Libitina was one of the oldest Roman divinities. Plutarch (Quaest. Rom.
23) speaks of her service being as old as Numa, who identified her with Venus, in order to bring together the beginning and the end of human life, and he mentions an 'Αφροδιτή Ἐπιτύμβια at Delphi. She was also identified with Persephone. She presided over funerals and all things pertaining to the dead. There were kept in her temple (the site of which is not known) all manner of things required at funerals, where the undertakers (hence called Libitinarii) might purchase or hire them. Also a register of funerals was kept in the temple, and when they were registered a fee was paid: hence Suetonius, in his life of Nero (c. 39) speaks of "pestilentia unius Anctumni qua triginta funerum millia in rationem Libitinæ venerunt;" one sickly autumn in which thirty thousand funerals were entered in the accounts of Libitina; and in Eusebius' Chron.
mention is made of an epidemic in the time of Vespasian: "quae ingens Romae facta ita ut per multos dies in ephemeridem decem millia ferme mortuorum hominum referatur;" where the ephemeris seems to be the register in this temple. From both the above sources the temple would derive increased revenues in a season of great mortality. Horace twice uses the name of Libitina as equivalent to Mors.
See C. iii. 30. 6: "magnaque pars mei
Virabil Libitinam;" and Epp. ii. 1. 49: "miraturque nihil nisi quod Libitina sacravit;"
and Juvenal does the same (S. iv. 122):
"nam si Libitinam evasert aeger Delebit tabulas."

20. Matutine pater.] Janus was pecularily a Latin deity, and one of the oldest.
As he presided over the opening year, so he did also over the beginning of every month and of every day. Sacrifices were offered to him on the first of every month, as well as of his own (January), and prayer in the morning of every day. Hence he is called 'Matutinus pater;' and hence he is confonded with the Sun. 'Pater' was the title by which he was commonly addressed, and according to Gallius (v. 12) the two words were joined thus, 'Januspater.' See Epp. i. 16. 59: "Jane pater, clar, clarum dixit, Apollo." He was worshipped before the other gods, which Ovid makes him explain on the ground that he was the medium through whom men got access to the others:—

"Mox ego: Cur, quamvis aliorum numina
placem,
Jane, tibi primo tura merunque fero?
Ut per me possis aditum qui limina servo
Ad quoscumque velim prorsus habere
deos." (Fast. i. 171.)

'Jane' is put in the vocative case by a sort of attraction. (See C. ii. 20. 6, n.) 'Audire,' in the sense of 'appellari' ἀκουεῖν, occurs again in Epp. i. 7. 37:—

"rexque paterque Audisti coram me verbo parcius absens;"

and 16. 17, "Tu recte vivis si curas esse quod audis." "Subtilis veterum judex et callidus audis" (S. 7. 101). The word is not commonly used in this sense except with 'bene' or 'male.'

23. sponsorem me rapis.] 'Sponsor' was one who became security for another under the form of contract called 'ver-borum obligatio,' the contract taking place
by question and answer, 'ex interrogatione et responsione.' One asked the other, "Dari spondes?" and he answered 'spondeo.'
The principals were called, 'stipulator,' he who asked the question; and 'promissor,' he who answered. The sponsor was said
'intercedere,' and to him the same question was put, to which he returned the same answer (see Dict. Ant., arts. 'Intercessio,' 'Obligationes'). This explains 'respondeat' in v. 24, and "quod mi obisit clare certumque locuto," v. 27. He answers 'spondeo' in a clear distinct voice, and becomes liable, possibly to his great detriment. The words
'Eja, ne prior,' &c., may represent what is passing in Horace's own mind, as some suppose, but more probably he means them for the words of Janus, to whom he attributes the prompting of his zeal.

SATIRARUM II. 6. 517
Sive Aquilo radit terras seu bruma nivalem
Interiore diem gyro trahit, ire necesse est.
Postmodo, quod mi obsit clare certumque locuto,
Luctandum in turba et facienda injuria tardi.
"Quid vis, insane, et quas res agis?" improbus urget Iratis precibus; "tu pulses omne quod obstat,
Ad Maecenatem memori si mente recurras?"
Hoc juvat et melli est; non mentiar. At simul atras Ventum est Esquiliaris aliena negotia centum Per caput et circa saliant latus. "Ante secundum Roscius orabant sibi adesses ad Puteal eras."

26. Interiore diem gyro trahit,] Cicero renders a line of Aratus respecting the Cynosura, "Nam cursu interiore brevi convertitur orbe" (De N. D. ii. 41). The notion is that of the heavenly bodies moving round a centre in a series of orbits of which the diameters gradually diminish, and in the winter solstice traversing the innermost and shortest circle.
29. improbus urget Iratis precibus; ]
'Improbus' means here 'hot tempered,' and 'precibus' curses, as in Epod. v. 86.
'Tu pulses' is an angry way of speaking,
'are you the man to knock down every thing
in your way;' as in the next Satire (v. 40),
"Tu, cum sis quod ego et fortassis nequior, ultra Insectere." There is sarcasm in 'memori,' as if he was not likely to forget his duty to the great man. He says he feels an inward pleasure at the testimony
thus borne to his intimacy with Maecenas:
so at least I understand the words 'hoc juvat,' &c. Orelli says he is delighted to run back to Maecenas. I do not think that is the meaning. In v. 29 I have followed the reading of all the best MSS. Bentley and others have different readings. In a few MSS. 'tibi' has been inserted between 'quid' and 'vis' according to a common formula; and this has made it necessary to alter 'quas res' into 'quam rem,' which Bentley has done on his own authority;
but three of Torrentius' had "quid tibi vis,
quas res agis, insane?" 'Si recurras' means in the hopes of getting back, to see if you can get back. See S. 5. 67, n.
32. atras—Esquiliaris] See S. i. 8, Introduction. The former character of the place is expressed by 'atras,' gloomy. He says directly he gets near Maecenas' house
he begins to remember a hundred different commissions entrusted to him by his acquaintance. They flit about him like a swarm of gnats, or any thing else that is teazing.
35. Roscius orabant] Roscius may be any body. It appears he had pressed Horace to appear next day, probably as his sponsor, at the Puteal Libonis. This was some sort of building in the Forum Romanum, erected by one of the Scribonia gens, and therefore called 'Scribonianum.' Acron on this passage calls it "locus Romae ad quem vieniebat foenestrares. Alii dicit in quo tribunal solebat esse praetoris;" and Porphysyon on Epp. i. 19. 8, "Forum putealque Libonis Mandabo siccis," says, "Sedes praetoris fuit prope arcum Fabianum:
dictum quia a Libone illic primum tribunal et subsellia colocata sint." That the place or its neighbourhood was the resort of money-lenders appears from Ovid (Rem.
Am. 561):—
"Qui Puteal Janumque timet celeresque Kalendas,
Torqueat hunc aeris mutua summ - sui;"
and Cicero (pro Sext. 8) speaks of "puteal et foenestratorum greges." There are coins of Scribonius Libo on the reverse of which is an altar crowned, with the inscription PUTEAL SCRIBON. (see Dict. Biog.), which leads some to affirm that the 'puteal' was no more than an altar. The request of Roscius that Horace would be there before the second hour, makes it appear as if his business was not with the praetor, who did not open his court till the third hour (see S. i. 9. 35, n.). The general opinion seems to be, that whatever the building was the praetor did sit in or near it, but this is doubtful. If it was an enclosed place it was open at the top, and took its name from the stone enclosures built round wells.
36. De re communi scribæ] The 'scribæ' were classed in 'decuriae,' and were a numerous body. Cicero (in Verr. ii. 3. 79, where see Long's note) calls them an 'ordo.' They formed a guild or company, and though they were employed in different branches of the public service, they had interests in common, and must have held meetings to discuss questions that concerned their body. As Horace has belonged to them, and was now known to have a good deal of influence, they wished him to attend their meeting on some particular occasion; so at least he puts it.

38. Imprimat his cura] See Introduction. Suetonius (Octav. 50) says of Augustus, "In diplomatibus, libellisque et epistolis signandis initio sphinge usus est." He afterwards used a head of Alexander, and latterly a portrait of himself. The 'tabellæ' of the text may have been a 'diploma,' so called from its consisting of two leaves, by which privileges of some sort were to be granted. 'Signum' expressed any work sculptured or engraved. Here it signifies a seal, which was usually set in the form of a ring. On the subject of rings, of which a large number of specimens have been preserved, sufficient information will be found in the Dict. Ant.; and whoever has access to Gorlaeus' collection of engravings, which he calls Dactyloiotheca, with the commentary of J. Gronovius, will find a great fund of information and amusement in that work. After the conquest of Egypt the sphinx was a common symbol on seals, and Gorlaeus has one in his collection (p. ii. 190). Such an one is to be found in the notes of Burmann's edition of Suetonius (I. c.), with the inscription "CARISIUS III VIR." T. Carusius was triumvir monetalis in the time of Augustus. The practice of kings delivering their rings to those whom they deputed to represent their own authority is of the highest antiquity. Pharaoh delivered his ring to Joseph, and Ahasuerus to Mordecai.

42. quem tollere rheda] 'Rheda' is the name for a travelling-carriage. The shape probably varied, but it appears to have gone upon four wheels, and to have been, sometimes at least, of capacious size, since Juvenal mentions a whole family travelling in one 'rheda' (S. iii. 10). The only other four-wheeled carriage we read of is the 'petorritum' mentioned above (S. i. 6. 104, n.). There were public 'rheæ' on the great roads for the benefit of travellers, and Horace and his friends performed part of their journey to Brundusium in these conveyances (S. i. 5. 86), and it appears from his language, 'hinc rapimur,' that they went pretty fast.

44. Thrax est Gallina Syro par?] Comm. Crq. says "Thrax Gallina fuit secutor, Syrus autem retiarius, uterque gladiator." 'Thrace,' 'secutores,' and 'retiarii,' were three different kinds of gladiators. The distinctions between them, and all necessary information about gladiators, may be learnt from Dict. Ant. (art. 'Gladiatores'). The first had their name from being armed like the Thracians with a short sword and round shield, from which they were sometimes called 'parrunarii.' See Sueton. Vit. Domit. c. 10: "Patrem-familias, quod Thracem mirmilioni parem, munerario imparem dixerat, detruitum spectaculis in arenam canibus objectum, cum hoc titulo: Impio locutus parrunarius." The MSS. vary between Thrax and Threx. Torreuntius says the oldest MSS. have Threx. Orelli, on the other hand, says Thrax is best supported. Maecenas is supposed to ask Horace, among other trifling questions, whether he has seen the famous gladiators, and which is the better of the two.

45. mordent:] 'Mordere' is said of Et quae rimosa bene deponuntur in aere.
Per totum hoc tempus subjectior in diem et horam Invidiae noster. Ludos spectaverat una, Luserat in Campo: Fortunae filius! omnes.
Frigidus a Rostris manat per compita rumor:
Quicunque obvius est me consulit: "O bone, nam te Seire deos quoniam propius contingis oportet;
Numquid de Dacis audisti?" "Nil equidem." "Ut tu
Semper eris desiror!" "At omnes di exagitent me
Si quidquam." "Quid, militibus promissa Triquetra
Praedia Caesar an est Italia tellure daturus?"
Jurantem me scire nihil mirantur ut unum
Scilicet egregii mortalem altique silenti.
Perditur haec inter misero lux non sine votis:
O rus, quando ego te adspeiciam? quandoque licebit
Nunc veterum libris, nunc somno et inertiibus horis both heat and cold. See Epp. i. 8. 5, "oleamque momorderit aetus." 'Rimosa' is intelligible enough. But it does not occur in any such sense elsewhere. Comm. Cruq. compares it with 'patula' in Epp. i. 18. 70, "Nec retinens patulae commissa fideler aures," and says the expression is taken from that of Terence (Eun. i. 2.

24):—
"Sin falsum audierim ac fictum continuo palam st:
Plenus rimarum sum, hac atque illac perduo."

48. noster.] This is a familiar way of expressing 'myself,' Plautus has it in several places. See for one Epid. i. 2. 45, "Novi ego nostros; mihi dolet, cun ego vapulo." The editions till Bentley all seem to have had a stop after 'invidiae,' joining 'noster' with 'spectaverat,' which leaves the first sentence too bare and elliptical. 'Spectaverat' and 'luserat' are the readings it appears of the best MSS. There is very little authority for 'spectaverat,' and only one MS. that Bentley can produce has 'luserat.' The subjunctive is more usual, as in S. i. 1. 43, where this hypothetical construction is discussed, but the indicative occurs below, S. 7. 68. 'Luserat' refers to ball-play. 'Fortunae filius' was a conventional phrase. Sophocles uses it (Oed. Tyr. 1080), ἵδι ἐστὶν ἵμαρτον παθή τῆς τύχης νόμων.

50. Frigidus a Rostris] Suppose some Ducere sollicitae juenda oblivia vitae?
O quando faba Pythagorae cognata simulque
Unca satis pingui ponentur oluscula lardo?
O noctes coenaeque deum! quibus ipse meique
Ante Larem proprium vescor vernasque procaces
Pasco libatis dapibus. Prout cuique libido est
Siccat inaequales calices conviva, solutus.
Legibus insanis, seu quis capit acria fortis
Pocula seu modicis uvescit laetius. Ergo

62. Ducere] 'To quaff the cup of oblivion.' See C. iii. 3. 34, n., and Aen. vii. 713:

"— Lethaei ad fluminis undam Securos latices et longa oblivia potant;"

and Epod. 14. 3 —

"Pocula Lethaeos ut si ducentia somnos Arentae fauce traxerim."

63. faba Pythagorae cognata] The popular notion was that Pythagoras had taught his disciples to abstain from meat so from beans, which class of vegetables he connected somehow or other with the human species in his doctrine of metempsychosis, though different reasons are assigned by different writers (see Cic. de Div. i. 30; ii. 58. Plut. de Lib. Educ. c. 17. Diog. Laer. viii. § 24 and 34); and Gellius (iv. 11) affirms that the fact is not to be believed, quoting Aristoxenus, who, in his work on the doctrines of Pythagoras, declared that above all vegetables that philosopher preferred the bean. Παταγὸς ἐλ τῶν ὅσπιων μαλίστα τὸν κάμον ἱδρύμα τί πῶς κυνηγεῖ τὴ γάρ θύσι καὶ ἱεροφυρτεύων ἔσθαι καὶ μάλιστα εἴχρηται αὐτῷ. However this may be, there is no doubt Horace refers to the popular opinion that those vegetables were forbidden fare to the disciples of Pythagoras, under the fanciful notion that in eating them they might be devouring their own flesh and blood. Hence the expression 'cognata,' and this is the allusion in Epp. i. 12. 21, "seu porrum et caepe trucidus." As to Horace's vegetable meals, see S. ii. 6. 115.

65. O noctes coenaeque deum?] Turnebus compares the frugal feasts laid out in the temples as described from his own observation by Dionys. Halic. (lib. ii.), ἐγὼ γονὸν ἱδρύμα ἐν τερατοφλώει δίπου παρακινήμα τοῦ ἄτοι, ἐν τραπέζῃς ἐξίσους ἐρχόμενος, ἐν κάνσις καὶ πανικίσσεσι καιροῖς, ἀλοιφῶν μαζές καὶ τόπανα καὶ ζιας καὶ κρασίν τινάν ἀπαρχάς, καὶ Ἰλλας...

66. Ante Larem proprium] See note on Epod. ii. 66. 'Libatis dapibus' means that the master and his friends ('meique') dined lightly, and left the greater part of the dishes to his slaves. The master, in this instance, as well as his slaves, dined in the 'atrium,' where the images of the Lares were placed. 'Libare' is to touch lightly. See Aen. vi. 90, 'inter pateras et levia pocula serpens Libavitque dapes;' and Ovid (Am. i. 4. 34):

"Si tibi forte dabat quos praegustaverit ipse Rejice libatos illius ore cibos."

The distribution of the remains of the dinner to the slaves is mentioned as a matter of course by Seneca (Ep. 78): "Marcellinum admonuit non esse inhumanum quemadmodum coena peracta reliquiae circumstantibus dividuntur, sic peracta vita aliquid porrigo his qui totius vitae ministri fuissent."

69. Legibus insanis] See S. 2. 123, n. Cicero, describing Verres' riotous living, says, "iste enim praetor severus ac diligens qui populi Romani legibus nunquam parVueissit, illis diligenter legibus quae in pocus ponebant observabat" (Act. ii. i. 5. c. 11). One of the strictest laws of a banquet directed by a presiding symposiarch would have reference to the regulation of the quantity of wine to be drunk by each guest at each round. Horace's notion of liberty here is to be able to drink as much or as little as he pleased, which is expressed by "inaequales calices.

70. uvescit] Lambinus introduced this reading from some of his MSS., which were confirmed by Cruquius, and since by many more. The old reading was 'bumescit.' 'Uvescere' does not occur elsewhere, but it corresponds with Horace's word 'uvidus,' C. ii. 19. 18, "Tu separatis uvidus in jugis;" and iv. 5. 38, "Dicimus integro Sicci..."
Sermo oritur, non de villis domibusve alienis,
Nec male neene Lepos saltet; sed quod magis ad nos
Pertinet et nescire malum est agitamus: utrumne
Divitiis homines an sint virtute beati;
Quidve ad amicitias, usus rectumne, trahat nos;
Et quae sit natura boni summumque quid ejus.
Cervius haec inter vicinus garrit aniles
Ex re fabellas. Si quis nam laudat Arelli Sollicitas ignarus opes, sic incipit: "Olim
Rusticus urbanum murem mus paupere fertur
Accepisse cavo, veterem vetus hospes amicum,
Asper et attentus quaesitis, ut tamen artum
Soleret hospitiis animum. Quid multa? neque ille Sepositi ciceris nec longae invidit avenae, mane die, dicimus uvidi Cum sol Oceano subest.

72. Nec male necne Lepos saltet;] Lepos was a 'pantomimus' who was so named according to the Scholiasts, and as the name itself imports, "quod juvende et molliter saltaret et eloquetur." The business of the 'mimi,' as of the 'mimae' (S. i. 2. 2, n.),
was to recite poetry as well as to act parts
in the farces that bore the same name (S.
i. 10. 6, n.). The word 'saltare' was applied to all pantomimic acting and the emotion of the limbs in dumb show. See S.
i. 5. 63, where Messius calls upon Sarmentus to act Polyphemus—"Pastorem saltaret uti Cyclopa rogabat," where 'saltaret' is equiva-tent to 'movetur' in "Nunc Satyrum nunc pastorem Cyclopa movetur" (Epp. ii. 2.

125). Torrentius says, "in veteri libro ad-scriptum, Lepos Caesaris archimimi nomen."

75. usus rectumne] Cicero makes Laelius indignantly deny the doctrine that makes' utility the foundation of friendship, and he says with much truth and delicacy "non enim tam utilitas parts per amicum quam
amici amor ipse delectat" (Lael. c. xiv.).
There is more in the same strain in c. viii., where he makes virtue the basis of friendship. Ovid (ex Pont. ii. 3. 7) says mournfully enough:

"Turpe quidem dictu sed (si modo vera fatemur) .
Vulgus amicitias utilitate probat."

The other subject, 'natura boni summum-que,' is discussed at large in Cicero's treatise
'de Finibus Bonorum et Malorum,' and was a common place in Horace's day, as it has been in all ages. 'Summum' represents the Greek τιλος, 'the end proposed,' so frequent in Aristotle and the philosophers.

77. Cervius] This was an old neighbour of Horace's, and that is all we know. Estré supposes he may have been one of the five persons who had houses on Horace's estate (Epp. i. 14. 2); but there is not the smallest clue to his history or to that of Arellius below, who however must have been a rich man and careful about his money.

78. Si quis nam] The old editions have nearly all 'nam si quis,' but the MSS. are mostly in favour of 'si quis nam,' which Bentley restored to the text, and most of the modern editors have it so. The 'nam' is awkwardly placed. Perhaps Horace wrote 'si quisnam.'

79. Olim] 'Once upon a time:' a common way of beginning a story that does not profess to be true.

82. attentus] This is a common word for what we should call 'close.' See Epp.i.
7. 91; ii. 1. 172. 'Ut tamen' means 'ita
tamen ut.' Compare S. 7. 4.

84. nec longae invidii avenae.] This construction is Greek: ἐκνευρία τινά τυχός.
The Latin construction is with the accusative and dative, as S. i. 6. 49: "honorem Jure mihi invideat quivos;" Epp. i. 14. 41:
"Invidet usum Lignorum et pecoris tibi." Lambinus introduced the reading 'illii' from nearly all his MSS. Torrentius and Crucquius have 'illii.' The old editions have nearly all 'ille,' and Fea mentions a large number of MSS. with that reading. Quintilian quotes the passage as a graecism, with 'illii' (Inst. ix. 3). I am not clear on upon the subject. Bentley and the late Aridum et ore ferens acinum semesaque lardi 85
Frusta dedit, cupiens varia fastidia coena
Vincere tangentis male singula dente superbo;
Cum pater ipse domus palea porrectus in horna
Esset ador loliurnque, dapis meliora relinquens.
Tandem urbanus ad hunc: 'Quid te juvat,' inquit, 'amice,
Prae부터t memoris patientem vivere dorso?
Vis tu homines urbenque feris praepone silvis?
Carpe viam, mihi crede, comes; terrestria quando
Mortales animas vivunt sortita, neque ulla est
Aut magno aut parvo leti fuga: quo, bone, circa,
Dum licet in rebus jucundis vive beatus;
Vive memor quam sis aevi brevis.' Haec ubi dicta
Agrestem pepulere domo levis exsilit; inde
Amo propositum peragunt iter, urbis avertes
Moenia nocturni subrepere. Jamque tenebat
Nox medium caeli spatium cum ponit uterque
In locuplete domo vestigia, rubro ubi coccio
Tincta super lectos canderet vestis eburnos,
Multaque de magna superessent fercula coena,
Quae procul exstructis inerant hesterna canistris.
Ergo ubi purpurea porrectum in veste locavit editors adopt 'ille.' The 'avena' here is the cultivated oat, and 'longae' describes its grain. The wild oat Virgil distinguishes from this by the epithet 'sterilis' (G. i. 153),

and couples it with the 'loliurn,' or bare,
with which the host on this occasion satisfied himself. 87. male] This goes with 'tangentis,' and is equivalent to 'vix.' 89. Esset ador loliurnque,] The 'ador' was that coarse kind of grain which was called ζιοια by the Greeks, but the name was applied to grain in general, and in the form 'adorea' signified the supply of corn given to soldiers after a victory, and hence was used as synonymous with victory itself.
(See C. iv. 4. 41, n.)
93. mihi crede,] These words are par-renthetical, as Ovid (Am. ii. 2:9): 'Si
sapis o custos odium, mihi crede, mereri Desine.' The language that follows is very like that of Hercules in Euripides' play of Alcestis (782, sqq.).
βροαίς ἄπαι καθανέων ὄφειλε ταῖς αἵνειαν μέλλονον εἰ βίωσεται.—
ταῦτι ὅνω ἄκοςα καὶ μαθῶν ἢμοῖ πάρα
e[vraive saeuton, πιε, τὸν καθ' ἑκατον
βίον λογίζων σὸν, τὰ δ' ἄλλα τῆς τύχης.
98. pepulere] This is used absolutely in the sense of 'mover.'
100. nocturni] See C. i. 2. 45, n.
103. canderet vestis eburnos.] On the 'stragula vestis' see S. 3. 118, n. The sides of the couches were sometimes veneered with ivory. Fire is said 'candere,' and the flamming drapery of the bed is here described by the same word, which is not applied in this sense elsewhere. 'Fercula' was the name for the different courses, of which the 'coena' usually consisted of three, called 'prima,' 'secunda,' 'tertia coena.'
The word, like 'feretrum,' contains the root for 'of foro,' and so its first meaning may have been the tray or dish on which the viands were brought. It seems here to mean the viands themselves; 'many courses were left' would mean nothing. 'Procul' signifies 'hard by,' as in Epp. i. 7. 32.
The remains of the evening's 'coena' had been collected and put into baskets and left in the 'triclinium' till the morning, and the purple coverings were still exposed waiting till the servants should cover them (S. 4. 84, n.).
Agrestem, veluti succinctus cursitat hospes
Continuatuque dapes nec non verniliter ipsis
Fungitur officiis, praelambens omne quod affert.
Ille cubans gaudet mutata sorte bonisque
Rebus agit laetum convivam, cum subito ingens
Valvarum strepitus lectis excussit utrumque.
Currere per totum pavidi conclave, magisque
Exanimes trepidae simul domus alta Molossis Personuit canibus. Tum rusticus: 'Haud mihi vita
Est opus hac,' ait, 'et valeas; me silva cavusque
Tutus ab insidiis tenui solabitur ervo.'”

107. veluti succinctus] 'Like one tucked up' as the slaves when on duty. (See S. i. 5. 5, n.) The duties of the 'structor' are those the host is here represented as performing. It was his province to arrange the dishes and see that they were properly served up. He runs about, puts one course after another on the table ('continuatuque dapes'), and tastes the dishes to see if they are properly seasoned. 'Praegustatores' were regularly employed only at the tables of the emperors. Halotus, an enuch, is mentioned as serving the emperor Claudius in this capacity and as having been, according to some reports, the agent of his death. (Sueton. Claud. 44; Tac. Ann. xii. 66.) Lipsius on the latter place says that the practice was begun by Augustus, and the title 'praegustator, a potione,' occurs in inscriptions. The custom was imitated from Eastern courts. (See Xenoph. Cyrop. i. 8. 9.)

112. Valvarum strepitus] The servants coming in early to clean the room interrupt the banqueters and rouse the watch-dogs, whose barking terrifies them still farther. The distinction between 'valvae' and 'fores,' that the latter opened outwards, 'foras,' and the others inwards, has been disproved by Becker (Gall. Sc. ii. Ex. 1). There was a dog, or more than one, kept in most houses, in the 'cella ostiarii,' the porter's chamber at the side of the 'ostium.' At the entrance of the house at Pompeii, which has received the name of the Tragic Poet's House, there was discovered worked in mosaic on the pavement a large dog, black and white, with a red collar, with fierce aspect, and as if ready to spring upon the person who entered. Beneath it are the words "Cave Canem." Such dogs were occasionally painted on the wall, as Petronius relates. 'Conclave' is the general term for any chamber or suite of chambers under one lock or bolt. As to Molossis see Epod. vi. 5.
SATIRE VII.

The substance of this Satire Horace puts into the mouth of his slave Davus, giving him liberty to express himself as he pleases on the day of the Saturnalia, when much licence was granted to slaves in particular. Davus takes advantage of the permission given him to abuse his master, and to taunt the rich with a slavery (to their passions and to the world) harder and more stupid than his own. He also taunts Horace with his instability and weakness of purpose, which part of the Satire appears to me to be the most natural and amusing (see note on v. 23). The rest contains a great deal that is disagreeable and much that is common-place. It may perhaps represent the habit of talking trash under the name of philosophy, which those who pretended to be of the Stoic school had established, and the humour would be more perceptible to a Roman of the day than it is now. The commentators speak highly of its wit, but most of them make little distinction, and praise all alike.

There is no trace of a date in the Satire, but some think it probable that as S. 3 was written at one Saturnalia, and this makes mention of the same festival, and touches like the other upon Stoic doctrines, it was perhaps written a year after the above. I do not see any force in this, nor does it appear necessary to suppose the Satire was written at or near the Saturnalia. That way of introducing the subject might have suggested itself at any time of the year.

ARGUMENT.

I have been long a listener, O my master, and though I long to say a few words, I know my position, and am afraid.

Is that Davus?

Even so, Davus your indifferent good slave.

Well, it's the Saturnalia: you may speak.

There are some men who are consistent in vice; others who are always hovering between right and wrong. There's Priscus, a man who changes every hour from the fop to the plain man, from the stately to the humble, from the rake to the philosopher, the very type of mutability. While Volanerius the gamester, when he could no longer hold the dice-box for the gout, hired a boy to do it for him. But he in his consistency was better off than the other man in his inconsistency.

What does all this refer to, you rascal?

To you.

What do you mean, scoundrel?

Why you profess to praise the good old times, but wouldn't go back to them if you might. In the town you pine for the country, in the country you cry up the town.

If you are not invited out you pretend you are glad to stay at home; if an invitation comes, off you fly and leave your poor guests in the lurch; gluttons they are no doubt, but are you less so yourself?

Suppose I should prove that you are sillier even than me your slave? Don't be angry, and I will tell you what I have picked up at the philosopher's.

This man goes after his neighbour's wife, I after a common woman, which of us deserves most to be hanged? I incur no disgrace and no danger. You are obliged to put on all sorts of disguises, trembling with a mixture of lust and fear. Why you might as well go hire yourself for a gladiator as submit to be tucked into a box to escape an angry husband. You are much worse than the woman you seduce, and deserve a heavier punishment. If you get out of the scrape, of course you'll take care not to get into it again. Not a bit. You will seek the first opportunity to renew your terrors and your punishment. Do you call yourself my master, you whom no emancipation could free from bondage? I am your vicarius if you please, or your fellow-slave. You are but a puppet, and your passions the strings that work it.

Who then is free? He who has command over himself, who can bid defiance to his lusts, and look down upon honours, who is complete in himself and proof against the rubs of the world and of fortune. Do you recognize yourself here? Why your mistress cheats you, dismisses, recalls you, and you cannot get your neck out of the yoke; and yet you cry, I am free! Then you let your senses be run away with by a fine picture; and while poor Davus is abused if he stops for a moment to look at a daub in the streets, you are a connoisseur forsooth. I am good for nothing if I am tempted with a cake piping hot. Are you more master of your appetite? Why am I worse than you? Your food will soon turn sour on your stomach, and your legs refuse to carry you. Which is worst, the slave who steals a scraper and gives it for a bunch of grapes, or the master who sells his lands to feed his belly? And then you can't live in yourself, but are always running away from care like a slave from his lord; but he follows you, go where you will.

Give me a stone.
What for? are you mad?
Be off with you, or I'll send you to work in the fields forthwith.

"Jamdudum ausculto et cupiens tibi dicere servus Pauca reformido." "Davusne?" "Ita, Davus, amicum Mancipium domino et frugi quod sit satis, hoc est, Ut vitale putas." "Age, libertate Decembri, Quando ita majores voluerunt, utere; narra." " Pars hominum vitiiis gaudet constanter et urget Propositum; pars multa natat, modo recta capessens, Interdum pravis obnoxia. Saepe notatus Cum tribus annellis, modo laeva Priscus inani,

1. Jamdudum ausculto We may suppose Horace has been talking to a friend upon subjects that have attracted his slave's attention, and give rise to the points he argues. Or he may have been giving Davus some good advice, and he offers him a homily in return, recommending him, as Acron says, to practise what he preaches.

3. Mancipium This word, which properly signifies the act of taking possession, 'manu capiendo,' is applied here to the 'res mancipi,' the object of 'mancipium,' which in this instance is a slave. It is so used in Ep. i. 6. 39, "Mancipis locuples eget aeris Cappadocum rex." For other instances, see Forcellini. Respecting the act of mancipation and the 'res mancipi,' see Smith's Dict. Ant., arts. 'Mancipium and Dominium.' As to 'frugi,' see S. 5. 77, n.

4. Ut vitale putas. 'That you need not think him too good to live' (S. 6. 62). As to the Saturnalia, see S. 2. 5, n., and for further particulars, see Dict. Ant. The month of December was dedicated to Saturnus. Horace speaks of the licence of that festival being a custom handed down from their ancestors. The time of its institution is quite unknown.

6. Pars hominum Davus avails himself without profane of his master's permission, and begins to moralize on the instability of some men, who never know their own minds. This character he applies to his master in v. 23, sqq.

9. Cum tribus annellis, This is mentioned as a large number. In later times the Romans wore a great profusion of rings on both hands. At this time they were only worn on the left. Gellius (x. 10),
Vixit inaequalis, clavum ut mutaret in horas,
Aedibus ex magnis subito se conderet, unde
Mundior exiret vix libertinus honeste;
Jam moechus Romae, jam mallet doctus Athenis
Vivere, Vertumnus, quotquot sunt, natus iniquis.
Scurra Volanerius, postquam illi justa cheragra
Contudit artículos, qui pro se tolleret atque
Mitteret in phimum talos, mercede diurna
Conductum pavit; quanto constantior isdem
In vitis, tanto levius miser ac prior illo, quoting as his authority Apion's work on Egyptian Antiquities, is the earliest writer who propagated the vulgar error that there was a nerve communicating between the fourth finger of the left hand and the heart, and that therefore rings were worn on that finger in particular, which absurdity (still commonly believed) Sir Thomas Browne has very learnedly disposed of (Vulg. Errors, iv. 4). Gellius says the ancient Greeks wore their rings on the same finger. The reason for their being worn on the left hand is sufficiently clear, particularly when they began to be set with stones and made of gold. They were more likely to be injured and to be in the way on the right hand.

Priscus was a senator, and therefore entitled to wear a gold ring, which privilege did not descend at this time below the equestrian order. In later times it was conferred upon all manner of persons by the emperors.
Those who were not entitled to wear rings of gold had them of iron, according to the most ancient practice; and such of the Romans of higher condition as adhered to the simplicity of earlier days continued to wear iron.

Nothing is known of Priscus. He was a senator, and therefore entitled to go abroad with the 'latus clavus,' which he would do sometimes; while at others he would appear only as an 'eques,' with the 'angustus clavus.' He was rich enough to live in a fine house, and did so; but would from caprice go and take an obscure lodging, such as a poor man might be ashamed of.
Comm. Crnq. who had 'doctor' for 'doctus,' says Priscus taught rhetoric at Athens.
That word appears in many MSS. I see no occasion with Bentley and most of the commentators for supposing Priscus to have been in the habit of going backwards and forwards to Athens. He put on first one character and then another: now a man about town, and now talking of going to Athens as a philosopher. That seems to be all. He was just such an unstable person as Tigellius is described to be in S. i. 3.
18: "Nil fuit unquam Sic impar sibi." He was "every thing by turns and nothing long."

14. Vertumnus, quotquot sunt, natus iniquis.] Vertumnus, as his name indicates, was the god who represented change.
Horace says Priscus was born when Vertumnus was angry (see S. 3. 8, n., "Iratis natus parties dis atque poetis"), and he strengthens it by saying all the Vertumnus that are to be found; as if every image of the god were a separate divinity, and all were angry together when this fickle man was born.

15. Scurra Volanerius.] Nothing is known of this person. He had the gout, which Horace says he richly deserved, and was so given to gambling (which was illegal, see C. iii. 24, 58, n.), that when he could not handle the dice-box himself, he hired a boy to do it for him. 'Phimus' was the Greek word for what the Romans called 'fritillus.' From the shape it was also called 'turricula' or 'pyrgus' (πυργος), and that word appears in the text of the Scholasts and in many of the old editions for 'phimum.' As to 'talos,' see S. 3. 171,
n. They were not always thrown from a box, but sometimes with the hand.

19. levius miser ac prior illo,] 'Levius
miser' is an unusual expression. The MSS.
and editions vary between 'illo' and 'ille.'
Bentley and many others before and after him have 'ille.' 'Illo' gives the simpler construction. 'Prior illo' means better off than that man who is always changing his character, one moment appearing strict,
another loose, in his principles and conduct.
The superiority of the man who is consistent in vice lies in his indifference to virtue, and the quietness of his conscience arising from that cause. In that sense he Qui jam contento, jam laxo fune laborat."

"Non dices hodie, quorum hacem tam putida tendant, Furcifer?" "Ad te, inquam." "Quo pacto, pessime?" "Laudas Fortunam et mores antiquae plebis, et idem Si quis ad illa deus subito te agat usque recuses, Aut quia non sentis quod clamas rectius esse, Aut quia non firmus rectum defendis, et haeres Nequiequam coeno cupiens evellere plantam. Romae rus optas, absentem rusticus urbem Tollis ad astra levis. Si nusquam es forte vocatus Ad coenam laudas sequuram olus ac, velut usquam Vinetus eas, ita te felicem dicis amasque Quod nusquam tibi sit potandum. Jusserit ad se Maecenas serum sub lumina prima venire Convivam: 'Nemon oleum fert ocium? Ecquis Audit? cum magnu blateras clamore fugisque. Mulvius et scurræ tibi non referenda precati is better off, and less miserable than the other. Some MSS. have 'scior illo.'

21. Non dices hodie,] 'Hodie' is equivalent to 'statim,' 'this moment.' Doering interprets 'this day of the Saturnalia,' which destroys the force of the word altogether. 'Furcifer' is explained by Donatus on Terence (Andr. iii. 5, 12; 'Tibi ut ego credam, furcifer?') as a slave who for some slight offence was obliged to go about with a 'furca' round his neck, a sort of collar shaped like a V, in which the hands also were inserted. The master begins to see that Davus is aiming a stroke at him, and is getting angry.

23. antiquae plebis.] 'Plebs' has not its distinctive meaning in this place. (See C. iii. 14, 1, n.) Horace has no doubt touching his own infirmity here. He was fond of praising the simplicity of the olden time, but he was not the man to extricate himself from the degenerate habits of his own day (nequiequam coeno cupiens evellere plantam), which is taken from the Greek proverb ἔστι δὲ πῦρ ἡμῶν πῶς δὲ ἐγκυν. He had been but lately perhaps writing the praises of a country life and sighing for his farm (in the last Satire); but when there we may believe he felt dull enough, and missed the society and elegance of the city. Whatever his ordinary fare may have been, he had no objection to the tables of the rich, and was proud to be invited to the Equiliane. It is this good-tempered raillery of himself that makes some of Horace's writings so agreeable, and the man himself appear so amiable. There is much humour in this part of the Satire. He is supposed to be congratulating himself upon being suffered to dine quietly at home when he gets an unexpected invitation from Maecenas to a late dinner. He immediately shouts for his lantern, scolds the servants if they keep him waiting a moment, and runs off as fast as he can, leaving in the lurch some persons to whom he had promised a dinner, and who go away disappointed and muttering abuse.

33. sub lumina prima] 'Immediately after the lighting of the lamps.' (See Epod. ii. 44, n.) The ordinary dinner-hour was earlier (see C. i. 1, 20, n.), but Maecenas' occupations protracted his 'solidus dies,' at the end of which he was glad enough no doubt to get a cheerful companion like Horace to dine with him. 'Blatero' is to bawl, or more commonly to babble and talk nonsense. (See Fessell.) 'Mulvius' may be any body, one of the numerous tribe of parasites. 'Non referenda precati,' uttering curses which the servants heard but must not repeat. See last Satire, v. 30, 'iratis precibus.' Estré observes (p. 441): 'Habuit parasitos quoque suos Horatius. Quid mirum? Pasecebat Diogenes murens: (Diog. Laert. lib. vi. c. 40). Collocandos autem censensus infra servos.' Discedunt. Etenim fateor me, dixerit ille,
Duci ventre levem, nasum nidore supinor,
Imbecillus, iners, si quid vis adde popino.
Tu, cum sis quod ego et fortassis nequior, ultro
Insectere velut melior verbisque decoris
Obvolvas vitium? Quid, si-me stultior ipso Quingentis empto drachmis deprenderis? Aufer
Me vultu terrere; manum stomachumque teneto,
Dum quae Crispinoci docuit me janitor edo.
Te conjux aliini capit, meretricula Davum:
Peccat uter nostrum cruce dignius? Acris ubi me
Natura intendit, sub clara nuda lucerna
Quae aequal quae turgentes verbura caudae,
Clunibus aut agitavit equum lasciva supinum,
Dimitit neque famosum neque sollicitum ne
Ditior aut formae melioris meiat eodem.
Tu cum projectis insignibus, annulo equestri

37. dixerit ille.] Mulvius may be supposed to mutter this, as Horace goes off and leaves him without his expected dinner.
'Nasum nidore supinor,' 'I snuff up my nose at the smell of a good dinner.'
'Nidor' means 'nidor culinae,' as in Juv.
v. 162: 'Capidum te nidore suae putat ile
culinae;' and Martial i. 93. 9: 'Pasceris et nigrae solo nidore culinae.' 'Popino' is not a common word. It means an idle dissolute fellow, a frequenter of 'popinae,' cook-shops. (See above, S. 4. 62, n.) Suet-tomius (de Illust. Gram. c. xv.) says that Lenaecus, a teacher at Rome and a freedman of Pompeius Magnus, used to revile Sallust the historian, and called him 'lastaurum et lurconem et nebulumen popinonemque' (not 'ganeonemque,' as Orelli has it).
Forcellini has only one other instance from a fragment of Varro. 'Tu—ultro insectere,' are you the man to come forward and attack? that is, to be the first to do it.
See S. 6. 30, and C. iv. 4. 51, n.
42. Quid, si me] Davus goes on in his own person. Five hundred drachmae, reckoning the drachma and the denarius
as nearly the same value (about 8j.d.), which was the case about this time, amounts to 171. 15s. of our money, and this was a small price, only given for inferior slaves. The price varied very widely according to the beauty of the slaves (of is either sex), which enhanced their value more than any thing else, or according to their education, or skill in handicrafts, &c.
(See Dict. Ant., art. 'Servus.') 'Aufer me terrere,' literally 'away with that frightening me.' The word nowhere else occurs with an infinitive. It expresses alarm and haste, for Davus sees his master frowning and lifting his hand to strike him.
45. Crispinici docuit me janitor] About Crispinus see S. i. 1. 120, n. Davus professes to have got at second hand from the slave of this Stoic philosopher the arguments he is going to propound. They are put generally, and he uses his own name;
but the pronoun 'te' means any one. The 'janitor,' who was also called 'ostiarius,' kept the door of the house. He had a room on each side of the 'ostium,' which was a space between the outer and inner door.
Crispinus' janitor may be supposed to have overheard what his master had said from time to time to his friends while sitting in the 'atrium' into which the inner door open ed.
47. cruce dignius?] See S. i. 3. 82.
53. annulo equestri] See above v. 9, n.
The person is supposed to be an 'eques,'
and one of the 'judices selecti' (see S. i. 4.
123, n.) to have put off his toga and thrown over him by way of disguise a loose cloak,
'lacerna,' which garment had sometimes a hood, 'cncullus,' to go over the head, and that is supposed to be the case here. See Martial (xiv. 132): 'Si possem, totas cupererem misisse lacernas,' by which he means a 'lacerna' with its hood complete. The 'lacerna' was usually worn over the 'toga,'

M 3
Romanoque habitu, prodis ex judice Damas

Non es quod simulas? Metuens induceris atque

Altercante libidinibus tremis ossa pavore.

Quid refert uri, virgis ferroque necari

Auctoratus eas, an turpis clausus in arca.

Quo te demisit peccati conscia herilis,

Contractum genibus tangas caput? Estne marito

Matronae peccantis in ambo justa potestas?

In corruptorem vel justior. Illa tamen se

Non habitu mutatve loco, pecctave superne.

but here that garment (‘Romanus habitus’) is laid aside. The man’s hair is scented with perfumed oil, like Varus’ in Epod. v. 59. See Epp. i. 14. 32, n.

59. Auctoratus eas. Though gladiators were for the most part slaves or criminals, freemen sometimes sold their services in this capacity, and they were called ‘aucto-

rati,’ and the pay they received ‘auctoramen-rum.’ So Suetonius says that Tiberius exhibited gladiatorial shows to the memory of Augustus, and Drusus his grandfather, and to increase the number he hired several who had received their discharge, “rudiaris quoque quibusdam revocatis auctoramento centenum millium” (vit. Tib. c. vii.). Such persons bound themselves by a very stringent bond to the ‘lanista’ who hired them. The words of this bond are given in a passage of Petronius: “In verba Eumolpi sacramentum juravisuri, vinciri, verberari, ferroque necari, et quicquid alium Eumolpos jussisset, tanquam legitimi gladiatores domino corpora animasque religiosisissimae ad-dicimus.” The same words Seneca quotes (Ep. 37): “Promissi verum bonum; sacramento obligatus es.—Eadem honestissimi huys et illius turpissimi auctoramenti verba sunt uri, vinciri, ferroque necari;” and this explains Juvenal’s “Scripturus leges et regia verba lanistae” (S. xi. 8). The word is said to be derived from ‘auctor,’ in the sense of ‘venditor’ from the person selling his services, that being a particular sense of ‘auctor’ as opposed to ‘emtor.’ There is evidently a connexion between the two words, but it is not easy to see what it is; for ‘auctor’ is only applied to the seller as warranting the title.—From the above passages it is clear that ‘uri’ is absolute; it does not go with ‘virgis’ as some take it.

60. conscia] See S. i. 2. 130, and Juvenal (iii. 49): “Quis nunc diliguit nisi conscius?” ‘Conscius’ means an accomplice. The man asks what difference it makes whether a freeman goes and lets himself to a ‘lanista’ to be beaten and tortured at his will, or runs the risk, in furtherance of his amours, of being shut up head and heels together in a dirty old chest by his mistress’s slave-girl, to keep out of the way of her husband.

61. Estne marito] What were the provisions of the laws respecting adultery repealed by the Julia lex, passed a. u. c. 737

or thereabouts (C. iv. 5. 21), is not known.

That they affected the wife’s ‘dos’ we have seen in S. i. 2. 131. Gellius (x. 23) quotes a speech of the elder Cato, “De Dote,” by which it appears that the husband had then power to put his wife to death if he caught her in the act of adultery; and if so he must have had that power at the time

Horace wrote, for the law had not been altered. The words of Cato, who died B. C.

140, are these: “Vir quam divorium fecit mulieris judex pro censure est. Imperium quod videtur habet. Si quid perverse tetere-que factum est a muliere, multatur: Si cum judex pro censure est. Imperium quod videtur habet. Si quid perverse teter-

que factum est a muliere, multatur: Si

vinum bibit, si cum alieno viro probi quid fecit, condennatur.—In adulterio uxor in-tuus si reprehendisset sine judicio impune necaret. Illa si adulterares digito non auderet contingere; neque jus est.” This Davus would call hard measure against women: “Ecator legere dura vivunt muliliers” (Plautus, Mercat. iv. 5. 3). The partiality which Davus’ words imply was corrected by the above law of Augustus, which gave the husband power to kill the adulterer in certain cases, but not to kill his wife. It is clear from this Satire and the second of the first book that the injured husband might do pretty much as he pleased, or was able, to revenge himself on the adulterer, without fear of the laws.

64. Non habitu mutating loco] Davus says the woman may be bad, but she is not Cum te formidet mulier neque credat amanti,

Ibis sub furcam prudens dominoque furenti
Committes rem omnem et vitam et cum corpore famam.
Evasti, credo metues doctusque cavebis:
Quaeres quando iterum pavesa iterumque perire
Possis, o toties servus! Quae belua ruptis,
Cum semel effugit, reddit se prava catenis?
Non sum moechus, ais. Neque ego hercule fur ubi vasa
Praetereo sapiens argentea: tolle periculum,
Jam vaga prosiliet frenis natura remotis.
Tune mihi dominus, rerum imperiiis hominumque
Tot tantisque minor, quem ter vindicta quaterque
Imposita haud unquam misera formidine privat?
Adde super dictis quod non levis valeat: nam
Sive vicarius est qui servo paret, uti mos.

so bad as the man: she does not steal out of her own house to his in disguise, and is always afraid of his coming, mistrusting his promises of secrecy and fear detection;
while the man, with his eyes open, puts his head in the pillory, and risks the fury of the woman's husband and loss of fame, life, and everything. In "pecatte superne" there is an obscene meaning. As to 'furca,' see above, v. 22, n. 'Dominus' is used for a husband here, as 'domina' for a wife elsewhere. See C. i. 12, 13, n.

63. Erast. See S. i. 1. 45, n.; ii. 6, 48,
n. On the contracted form, see C. i. 36, 8,
S. i. 5, 79, n.; 9, 73, n.

71. praev] 'Foolish.' 'Pravus' signifies that which is crooked, distorted, awry, and is applied both to folly and vice.
S. i. 4, 79, "hoc studio pravus facis," that is, 'malicious;' ii. 2, 55, 'Si te alio pravum detorseris," where it means out of the straight course.

76. minor,] "σωματικες, a slave to (C. ii. 11, 11, n.).
— quem ter vindicta quaterque] 'Vindicta'
is here used as signifying the 'festuca' or red laid upon the shoulder of a slave by the praetor in the act of giving him his freedom. It properly signifies the 'res vindicata,' and is derived 's vindicando,' the praetor standing in the position of 'adversarius'
to the owner, as in a 'vindicatio.'
The act is clearly described in Dict. Ant., art. 'Manumissio;' and with reference to the last remark, see art. 'Vindicatio,' in the formula connected with which 'vindicata,'
as here, was used for the 'festuca:'

"Hunc ego hominem ex jure Quiritium
meum esse aio secondum causam sicut dixi. Ecce tibi Vindictam imposui." Davus says that manumission repeated over and over again (though that involves an absurdity) could not deliver his master, as he called himself, from the bondage he was under to the world.

78. Adde super dictis] 'Dictis' is governed by 'adde,' and 'super' is used absolutely. Orelli makes 'super' govern dictis,' as in S. 6. 3 it governs 'his' (see note).

79. vicarius] Cicero (in Verr. ii. 3, 38), speaking of one Diognetus as a slave of the lowest sort, says, "Vicariumnullum habet, nihil omnino peculii." The 'peculium' was that property which a slave might accumulate, and which conventionally was held by him independent of his master, and among the rest he might have a 'vicarius,'
a slave to do his duty or help him in it.
He was held to be 'quasi dominus' in relation to his 'vicarius' (see Mr. Long's note on Cic. in Verr. ii. 1, 36). In later times it appears that a slave might have several 'vicarii,' but at this time more than one was unusual (Becker Gall. Sc. i. n. 5).
What Davus says is, whether you choose to call the slave's slave his 'vicarius,' or substitute, as your law does, or his fellow-slave as strictly speaking he is, for except by sufferance a slave can hold no property independent of his master), what is my relation to you? I am your slave; you are the slave of your passions, which pull you about as the strings pull a puppet (which the
HORATII FLACCI

Vester ait, seu conservus; tibi quid sum ego? Nempe Tu mihi qui imperitas alii servis miser atque
Duceris ut nervis alienis mobile lignum.
Quisnam igitur liber? Sapiens sibi qui imperiosus,
Quem neque pauperies neque mors neque vincula terrent,
Responsare cupidinibus, contemnere honores
Fortis, et in se ipso totus, teres, atque rotundus,

Greeks called νευρόσταστον). The ancients carried their mechanical skill in the construction of automaton figures as far, and perhaps farther, than it has been carried since. A celebrated instance is that of Claudius' sham-fight in the Lacus Fucinus, during which a figure of Triton in silver rose up from the lake and blew a blast upon a trumpet (Sueton. Vit. Claudii, c. 21).
Artists in this line were common among the Greeks, and were called νευρόστασται, στρογγυλογροι. It appears from Herodotus (ii. 48) that άγάλματα νευρόσταστα, as he calls them, were in use among the Egyptians. The instance he gives is very filthy. Plato (de Legg. lib. i. p. 644) speaks of man's passions as Davus does: τούτο δὲ
ίμμεν, οτι ταύτα τὰ πάθη ἐν ἡμῖν ὁλὸν νευμα ἢ μηρόντοι τινες ἐνόοις σπάοι τε ἡμᾶς καὶ ἀλλήλας ἀνθίλουσιν. Ίναιται οὖν εἰπ' ἰναιτίας πράξεις. Persius has imitated this passage like many others (S.
v. 129):

"— Sed si intus et in jecore agcro
Nascentur domini, qui tu impulitor exis Atque hic, quem ad strigiles scutica et metus
eget herilis?"

83. sibi qui imperiosus. 'He who has control over himself.' Before Horace no writer uses this word with a case after it.
Pliny uses the genitive, Seneca the dative, after 'imperiosus' in the places quoted by Forcellini.

85. Responsare cupidinibus. 'Respon-so' is repeated in v. 103 (where however see note), and Epp. i. 68. "Fortunae responsare superbae." It seems to mean, to reply to on equal terms, and so to be a match for, and to overcome. The construction of the adjective and infinitive is common in the Odes, but not in the Satires or Epistles. See C. i. 1 16, n.

86. in se ipso totus, teres, atque rotundus.
'In himself entire, smoothed, and rounded,' that is, perfect as a sphere, and, as the next line explains, like a beautiful statue whose graces are all in itself, which is perfected finished and polished. This is elsewhere expressed by 'ad unguem factus homo' (S. i. 5, 32, n.), the difference in the mode of expression being, that here it is meant there are no inequalities on the surface on which any thing at all can rest.
The other expression has been explained in its place. 'Justus homo' signifies a complete or perfect man. 'In se ipso totus' is explained by a similar passage in Cicero (Paradox. ii.): "Non potest non beatissimus esse qui totus aptus est, ex seque qui in se uno sua ponit omnia." He wants nothing from without to set him off, and his resources as well as his graces are all in himself. The mud through which he passes as he goes through the world does not adhere to him; circumstances, prosperous or the reverse, do not affect his character; and in all her assaults upon his happiness Fortune proves but feeble, not being able to make any impression upon it. "Mancus" means lame in the hand, as 'claudus' does in the foot (see Forcell.). Ausonius has imitated Horace (Idyll. xvi.), and his words illustrate these:

"Vir bonus et sapiens, quaem vix reperirat unum
Millibus e multis hominum consultus
Apollo,
Judex ipse sui totum se explorat ad un-guem:
Quid proceres vanique ferat quid opinio vulg Securus, mundi instar habens teres atque
rotundus
Externae ne quid labis per levia sidat."

Here 'rotundus' is explained by the likeness of the heavens, which Plato (Tim. p. 33)
says the Deity σφαιρικός ἐστροβείσατο, as being most after his own image. A parallelogram was also an illustration of the anceints for a perfect man, taken from that saying of Simonides in the fragment quoted by Plato in his Protagoras (p. 339), and thus restored by Hermann:

άνδρ' ἄγαθόν μὲν ἀλαθῆς γενίσθαι χα-λετὸν,
χειρίν τε καὶ ποσὶ καὶ νοῦ τετράγωνον, ἀνεν' ὕψον τετευχένον.
Exteri ne quid valeat per leve morari,
In quem manca ruit semper fortuna. Potesne
Ex his ut proprium quid noscere? Quinque talenta
Poseit te mulier, vexat foribusque repulsum
Perfundit gelida, rursus vocat; eripe turpi
Colla jugo; Liber, liber sum, die age. Non quis;
Urget enim dominus mentem non lenis et acres
Subjectat lasso stimulos versatque negantem.
Vel cum Pausiaca torpes, insane, tabella,
Qui peccas minus atque ego, cum Fulvi Rutubaeque

i. 10. § 11. 'Teres' is explained in a note
89. Quinque talenta] The Attic drachma of this period, which is here meant, was worth about the same as the Roman denarii, nearly 8½d. (see above, v. 43, n.).
The mina was equal to 100 drachmae, and a talent to 60 minae. It was worth therefor about 212l., and five talents 1060l.
Davus, a Greek, reckons in the currency of Greece. The caprice of the man's mistress is described as before, S. 3. 260, sqq. His own bondage is very well described by Cicero (Paradox. v. 2): 'An ille mihi liber
cui mulier imperat, cui leges imponit, prae scribit, jubet, vetat quod videtur? qui nihil imperanti negare potest, nihil recusare aud et? Poscit, dandum est; vocat, veniendum;
ejicit, abeundum; minatur, extimescendum.
Ego vero istum non modo servum, sed
nequissimum servum, etiam si in amplissima familia natus sit, appellandum puto.' 92. Non quis:] This is the second person of 'queo,'
93. Pausiaca torpes, insane, tabella,] Pansias was a native of Sicyon, one of the most celebrated schools of art, where there was a large collection of his pictures.
Many were sold by the Sicyonian government to buy their debts, and most of these found their way to Rome. A very large one, painted with great boldness and skill, and representing a sacrifice, was trans ported to Rome by Scaurus when he was aedile, and at the time Horace wrote was kept in the porticus of Cn. Pompeius. His pic tures however were chiefly small, 'tabellae,' and among the most celebrated was the por trait of his mistress Glycera as a flower girl, Στραφανίπλοκος (Plin. N. H. lib. xxxv. c.
11, sect. 40, § 2, sqq.), 'parvas pingebat tabellas maximeque pueros,' but Pausias was also celebrated for his encaustic paint ings, in which Pliny says he had no equal.
He flourished about the middle of the fourth century, B.C. 'Torpes' is a like expression to that in S. i. 4. 28, "Stupet Albius aere," and 6. 17, "Qui stupet in titulis et imaginibus."
96. Fulvi Rutubaeque Aut Pacideiani]
These are all names of gladiators, as we may gather from the context. Pliny tells us it was the practice, when shows of gladiators were exhibited, for the exhibitor to set forth a picture of the games, to inform the public, such as we see now of conjurors, circus, and the like; and these are what Davus alludes to. They were done no doubt roughly as he describes. "Pingu autem gladiatoria munera atque in publico exponi cepta a C. Terentio Lucano" (Plin. xxxv.
c. 7, § 33). Cicero mentions repeatedly a gladiator named Pacideianus, as one whom Lucilius had seen at Capua matched with one Aserninus or Aeserninus. He quotes
the following lines of Lucilius:---
"Non spurcus homo sed doctus et acer Cum Pacidiano hic componitur, optimus
longe
Post homines natos [gladiator qui fuit
unus]."

(De Opt. Gen. Orat. c. vi. See also Tusc.
Disp. iv. 21, and Ep. ad Qu. Fr. iii. 4.) Horace may have taken the name for any gladiator in consequence of the celebrity of this man. The MSS. and editions vary between Placideiani and Pasideiani. Some of the old editions have ' placide Jani.'
Fea refers to an inscription in Gruter's col
clection (p. 301), in which the name Placidianus occurs, and he adopts that orthography.
'Contento poplite' represents the attitude of the gladiators. The Scholiasts raise a doubt upon the point, thinking the words may apply to the spectator stretching him self on tip-toe to get a nearer view.
Aut Pacideiani contento poplite mitor
Proelia rubrica picta aut carbone, velut si
Re vera pugnet, feriant, vitentque moveentes
Arna viri? Nequam et cessator Davus; at ipse Subtilis veterem judex et callidus audis.
Nil ego si ducor libo fumante: tibi ingens
Virtus atque animus coenis responsat opimis
Obsequeim ventris mihi perniciosius est cur?
Tergo plector enim. Qui tu impunitior illa
Quae parvo sumi nequeunt obsonia captas?
Nempe inamarescent epulae sine fine petiatae.
Illusique pedes vitiosum ferre recusant
Corpus. An hic pececat, sub noctem qui puer uavam Furtiva mutat strigili: qui praedia vendit.
Nil servile gulae paren habet? Adde, quod idem
Non horam tecum esse potes, non otia recte

101. callidus audis.] See S. 6. 20, n., and 3. 23: "Callidus huic signo ponebam
millia centum."

102. coenis responsat opimis] It is usual to put a note of interrogation after ‘opimis,’ and to take ‘responsat’ in the same sense as above (v. 85). I prefer taking it in the sense of ‘corresponds to,’
as ‘responsura’ in S. 8. 66. What Davus says I think amounts to this: ‘I am good for nothing, because I am attracted by a cake just hot from the oven; you forsooth are virtuous and noble because you feast upon good things.’ So the same opposition appears in these lines as in the two before.
‘Libum’ was a coarse sort of cake made of pounded cheese, eggs, and flour, all mixed together and baked (Cato R. R. 75, Forcell.)
There was another sort used in sacrifice, concerning which see Epp. 1. 10. 10, n.
The ‘liba’ Davus means were such as the good old woman at Bovillae made for the poor. (See Ovid, Fast. iii. 667, sqq.)

"Orta suburbanis quaedam fuit Anna Bo-villis,
Pauper sed mundae sedulilatis anus.
Illa levi mitra canos redinita capillos
Fingebat tremula rustica liba manu.
Atque ita per populum fumantia mane solebatebat.
Dividere; haec populo copia grata fuit."

103. coenis responsat opimis
104. Non horam tecum esse potes, non otia recte

105. Qui tu impunitior] Persius has copied this way of speaking (v. 129):

"—— Sed si intus et in jecore aegro
Nascuntur domini, qui tu impunitior exis Atque hic quem ad strigiles scutica et metus
egit herilos?"

110. Furtiva mutat strigili:] As to the construction with ‘muto’ see C. i.
17. 2. The ‘strigil,’ which the Greeks called Στριγύς, was a scraper of bone or metal, of a curved form and with a sharp edge, with which the skin was scraped after bathing, or exercise in the gymnasium.
See Becker’s Gallus, ‘Exc. on the Baths,’ and Dict. Ant. on the same subject, for an account of these instruments and their application.

112. Non horam tecum esse potes,] Acron interprets this ‘non es tecum; i. e.
non es sanus,’ which does not appear to be the meaning. To a man who has no resources in himself, or is afraid of his own conscience or his own thoughts, and resorts to amusesments or other means of ‘distraction to divert his mind, these words apply.
‘Tecum habita,’ ‘inhabit your own breast,
make that your home’ (Pers. S. iv. 52).
Seneca (de Tranq. An. ii.) says: “siuid ex alio iter suscipitur et spectacula spectaculis mutantur, ut sit Lucretius: ‘hoc se quisque modo semper fugit.’ Sed quid prodest si non effugit? Sequitur se ipse et urget gravissimus comes.’ The quotation from Lucretius is taken from the third book,
v. 1081. The whole passage will illustrate this of Horace. It is quoted on C. ii. 16.
Ponere, teque ipsum vitas, fugitivus et erro,
Jam vino quaerens, jam somno fallere curam:
Frustra; nam comes atra premit sequiturque fugacem.
"Unde mihi lapidem?"—"Quorum est opus?"—"Unde sagittas?"
"Aut insanit homo aut versus facit." "Ocius hinc te Ni rapis, accedes opera agro nona Sabino."

19, which, and other places of Horace there mentioned, may be compared with this.
The difference between 'fugitivus' and 'erro' is explained by Ulpian (Dig. 21. 1.
17), quoted by Forcellini, under the latter word. The whole passage is: "Erronem definit Labeo pusillum fugitivum esse, et ex divero fugitivum magnum errorem esse, sed proprie errorem sic definimus qui non quidem fugit sed frequentor sine causa vagatur, et temporibus in res nagatorias consumptis series ad dominum redit."
That is, a 'fugitivus' is a slave who runs away outright; an 'erro' was an idle fellow who skulked out of the way to escape work or to amuse himself. There was the same distinction in the army between 'de-sertor' and 'emansor.' A 'fugitivus' was branded on the forehead, and hence he was termed 'literatus,' 'notatus,' 'inscriptus,' 'stignosus;' 'stigma' being the word to express the mark thus given. See above,
S. 5. 15, n.

116. Unde mihi lapidem?] See above,
S. 5. 102, n. Horace is supposed to get angry beyond endurance at this home-thrust of his slave, and calls out for a stone, arrows, anything to throw at his head. The man is bewildered with fear, and thinks his master has gone mad, unless, which was as good, he was making verses. He is, or affects to be, unconscious of the license he has given himself, and the force of the truths he has been telling.

"I will send you away to work with the other slaves (of whom therefore he appears to have had eight) at my farm." It was a common punishment, as it is now in slave countries, for a slave to be turned out of the 'familia urbana,' into the 'familia rustica,' and set to work in the fields with chains on his legs. See Terence (Phorm.
i. 1. 19), where Geta looks forward to being punished in the above manner:

"Molendum est in pistrino, vapulandum,
habendae compedes,
Opus ruri faciundum."

And Grumio in Plautus (Mostell. i. 1. 15)
says to his fellow slave,—

"Sane credo, Tranio,
Quod te in pistrinum scis actutum tradier,
Cis hercle puncas tempestates, Tranio, Angelis ruri numero genus ferratile;"
where 'genus ferratile' means the men with fetters, who are called in the same play (ii. 1. 9) "ferritribaces viri."
SATIRE VIII.

This Satire represents a dinner given by a rich vulgar man to Maecenas and five of his friends. There is not so much to distinguish it in the way of humour as the subject admitted of. Few subjects present more scope for facetious satire than the airs of low-born men, lately become rich, aping the ways of the fashionable world, and making wealth their one passport into what is called good society. This is a very slight sketch, and some of the force even of this is perhaps lost through our ignorance of little points of etiquette and culinary refinements observed by the Romans of that day.

The host's name is Nasidienus Rufus. Who he was it is impossible to say. Lambinus supposes Q. Salviodienus Rufus to be meant, a man of obscure origin whom Augustus advanced to equestrian rank for services rendered against Sex. Pompeius, and who was afterwards consul designatus. He put an end to himself in A. D. C. 714, which was long before this Satire was written, and the theory would not be worth mentioning if Heindorf and Buttmann had not supported it. Spohn (Jahn's Horace, Ed. ii. p. 271) supposes Q. Nasidius, one of the commanders under M. Antonius, and mentioned by Dio Cassius (i. 13) to be the host. But as we cannot arrive at any real knowledge on the subject, and as the essence of the Satire consists in the obscurity of the person, it is useless to speculate about him.

Instead of telling the story himself, though it is probable from the tone of the Satire that he writes from a scene he had witnessed, Horace puts it into the mouth of his friend Fundanius, the comic writer mentioned in S. i. 10. 42, where see note.

It is impossible to conjecture with any probability the date of the Satire, though it may be assumed that it was written after Horace's intimacy with Maecenas had begun.

"Ur Nasidieni juvit te coena beati?
Nam mihi quærenti convivam dictus here illie
De medio potare die." "Sic ut mihi nunquam

2. here 'Here' nunc E litera termina-mus, at veterum comicorum adhuc libris invenio 'heri ad me venit:' quod idem in epistolis Augusti quas sua manus scripsit aut emendavit reprehenditur" (Quint. i. 7).

'Heri' is a dative form, 'here' an ablative; so we have 'mani' and 'maehe in the morning, 'vesperi' and 'vespere' in the evening. The termination in 'i' is the older of the two, and, from the above remark of Quintilian compared with this passage of Horace, it would seem as if the usage of the word was in a state of transition at this time. (See Key's L. G. 950.)

3. De medio potare die. Nasidienus dined early to make the most of his feast.
But 'medio die' need not be taken quite literally. The 'prandium' was usually taken at noon. The dinner-hour was later.
(See C. i. 1. 20, n.) Busy men, as we saw in S. 7. 33, sat down by candle-light. 'De medio die' is like 'de nocte' in Épp. i. 2.
32, 'media de luce,' Épp. i. 14. 34. Professor Key thinks that in this use of 'de'
the notion of a part of time is contained,
and that it may therefore be best rendered In vita fuerit melius."

"Da, si grave non est, Quae prima iratum ventrem placaverit esca."

"In primis Lucanus aper; leni fuit Austro Captus, ut aiebat coenae pater; acria circum
Rapula, lactucae, radices, qualia lassum
Pervellunt stomachum, siser, alc, facculta Coa.
His ubi sublatis puer alte cinctus acernam

by our preposition 'by' or 'in the course of' (L. G. 1326, g). It rather means 'after'; I think; that is, 'de medio dicem' means 'after mid-day;' but it must note proximity to mid-day, or it would have no meaning at all.

4. fuerit melius.] See S. 6. 4. n. — Da, si grave non est.] I like this reading better than 'dic,' though no MS. authority was produced for it till Fea discovered it in a few of his, which he calls 'optimae notae.' Pottier, editing from the Parisian MSS., has 'da,' and gives no various reading whatever. Several editions of the sixteenth century have 'da,' but the earlier have 'dic.' Comm. Cruq. says: 'dic, ait Horatius,' from which it is justly inferred that he had another reading, and that dic is his gloss upon it. There is sufficient authority therefore for 'da,' though there is much more for the other. Bentley says 'da' is only the interpolation of 'pexus nescio quis magistellus,' who found it in Virgil (Ecl. i. 19), 'sed tamen iste Deus qui sit da, Tityre, nobis,' and therefore thought Horace must have used the same word. He is very angry with the 'ignotus homuncio,' but as the MSS. have come to his assistance the word may be received, and it is I think a good one. Terence uses it: 'Nunc quam ob rem has partes didicerim paucis dabo' (Heaut. Prol. 10). From the meaning of this word, 'to put,' this application of it is easily derived.

5. iratum ventrem placaverit] Compare S. 2. 18: "Laratrem stomachum." Both passages put together suggest the idea of a sop thrown to an angry dog to keep him quiet. Perhaps that notion, or something of the sort, suggested this line. 'Placaverit' is a more suitable word than 'pacaverit.' It applies better to 'iratum.'

6. Lucanus aper;] See S. 3. 234; 4. 42, n. No mention is made of a 'promulzis' (S. I. 3. 6, n.), and the things of which it was usually in a great measure composed were sent up in the same dish with the boar, which was generally served whole, and was the chief dish, 'caput coenae.' Turnips, lettuces, radishes, parsnips, with pickles and sauces of various descriptions (see S. 4. 73, n.), generally formed part of the 'gustus' or 'promulzis' which preceded the 'fercula' or courses of which the regular 'coena' consisted. The boar was killed, the host (called 'coenae pater') with a sort of mock respect informed his guests, when the south wind was not at its worst, meaning, I suppose, that when this wind ('siccroco') was blowing hard the meat would soon spoil, if he had any meaning at all. But it was probably some notion of his own.

10. Hic ubi sublatis] The narrator is inclined to make a short business of the viands, but he is brought back to them afterwards. The meat being removed (and though he only mentions one course here, we may gather from what comes presently that there was no lack of dishes, and therefore probably there were the usual courses), a slave, with his clothes well tucked up, 'succinctus' (see S. 6. 107, n.), came and wiped the table with a handsome purple towel, and another gathered up whatever had fallen or had been thrown on the floor, which at the same time he strewed with saw-dust, perhaps scented (see S. ii. 4. 81). The ancients, eating with their fingers and without plates, threw away the bones and other parts of their food that they did not eat: such were "the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table" which Lazarus was glad to pick up and eat. 'Gausapse, -is' (other forms of which are 'gausapa,' 'gau- sape, -es,' 'gausapum') was a woollen cloth of foreign manufacture. The table was of maple wood, which was not the most costly (see S. 2. 4, n.), but not so shabby as Orelli says. I understand such tables are favorites in good Italian houses still. When the litter is cleared away and the table wiped, two slaves, one from the East and named after his native river, the Gausape purpuroe mensam pertersit, et alter Sublegit quodcumque jaceret inutile quoque Posset coenantes offendere; ut Attica virgo Cum sacris Cereris procedit fuscus Hydaspes Caecuba vina ferens, Alcon Chium maris expers. Hic herus: Albanum, Maecenas, sive Falernum Te magis appositis delectat, habemus utrumque. “Divitias miserias! Sed quis coenantibus una, other a Greek, walk in with two 'amphorae,' one of Caecuban, the other of Chian wine. They are represented as coming in a solemn and stately manner, like the κομψόφοι who carried the baskets in procession at the festival of Ceres. (See S. i. 3. 11, n.) On the Caecuban and other Italian wines here named, see C. i. 9. 7, n. Pliny (xxiii. 1) says that Caecuban wine was not grown in his day, and that the Setian, which was highly valued by Augustus, was very rare. There are some good wines made in the Levant still, of which those of Thera (Santoria) and Tenedos I believe are amongst the best.'

15. Chium maris expers.] It would seem, strange as it is, that salt water was mixed with the sweet wines imported from the Greek isles. In the treatises de Re Rust. of Columella (xii. 21. 37) and of Cato (xxiv. 105) directions are given as to the proportion that was advisable of salt water to wine. Columella directs that the water be boiled down to about a third part, and that a 'sextarius' of water be added to an 'amphora' of wine, which is about the proportion of a pint to six gallons. Some, he says, add even two or three 'sextarii,' and he would like to do the same if it could be done without betraying a saline taste. Cato has given receipts for cooking (as it is called) native wines so as to imitate the Greek, and salt water forms an ingredient. He says, speaking of one of these compounds: 'non erit deterius quam Coum.' It is said that the practice arose out of the circumstance of a slave, who had stolen some of his master's wine, filling up the deficiency with sea-water, which was thought to have improved the flavour. In Athenaeus (i. 24) it is said that with some more delicate wines the proportion of sea-water was only 10. An accident is said to have led to a similar improvement in the manufacture of a certain kind of beer at Newhaven, on the Sussex coast, which goes by the name of Tipper ale. Whether Horace refers to this practice, and means that the wine had not been prepared, and was of inferior quality, or whether he means that this pretended Chian had in fact never crossed the seas, but had been concocted at home, is I think doubtful. Orelli and most of the commentators adopt the first opinion after the Scholiasts. I am more inclined to the latter. Compare Persius (vi. 39):

"—postquum sapere urbi Cum pipere et palmis venit nostrum hoc maris expers," where he means a learning bred not in Greece but at home. In Plautus (Curcul. i. 1. 76) Phaedromus says: "Ei est nomen lenae Multibiba atque Morobiba." To which Palinus answers: "Quasi tu lagenam dicas ubi vinum solet Chium esse," as if Chian wine was always 'merum,' 'unmixed,' which may help to explain Horace's meaning.

18. Divitias miserias!] This exclamation is drawn from Horace by his friend's description, in which he who knew Nastidienus would see more to call for such language than lies on the surface. There has been nothing said hitherto to call forth particular remark; but the impression perhaps conveyed by what Fundianus has said was that of vulgar ostentation without taste or real liberality on the part of the host. He perhaps passed bad wine off under fine names, and offered others which his guests knew better than to call for. Heindorf takes up the interpretation of some of the earlier commentators, and gives 'divitias miserias' to Nastidienus, as if while displaying his riches he pretended to sigh over the anxiety they cost him. There are many obvious objections to this, and there is no doubt that the exclamation is that of him who has been listening to Fundianus' narrative. It was money that had brought the man out of his proper obscurity, and caused him all the petty shifts and anxieties that wait upon the position he tried to maintain.

19. pulchre fuerit] See above, v. 4, "Nunquam In vita fuerit melius." As to 'Fundanius,' see Introduction.

20. Summus ego] The company consisted, as was usual, of nine persons, who reclined on three couches. These were arranged so as to form three sides of a square with the table in the middle, the fourth end being open, thus:

---

Medius Lectus.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>1</th>
<th>2</th>
<th>3</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr> </tbody>
</table>

The 'medius lectus' was that at the top, the 'imus' was to the right, and the 'summus' to the left. On each couch were three persons. On the 'summus' Fundanius says he himself, Viscus, and Varius reclined. On the 'medius lectus' were Maecenas and the two uninvited friends he brought with him, Servilius Balatro and Vibidius. On the middle seat of the 'imus lectus' lay Nasidennus, above him Nomen- tanus, who acted as nomenclator (properly the duty of a slave, see Epp. i. 6. 50, n.), and below him Porcius, another of his parasites. The place of honour (ὁ πρώτος προσ- αγορέων, Plut. Quest. Conviv. i. 3) was the corner seat of the 'medius lectus'.
Si memini Varius; cum Servilio Balatrones
Vibidius, quas Maecenas adduxerat umbras.
Nomentanus erat super ipsum, Porcius infra
Ridiculus totas semel absorbere placertas;
Nomentanus ad hoc, qui si quid forte lateret and next to that, on the first seat of the 'imus,' was usually the place of the host.
But it appears that Nasidius resigned that place to Nomentanus, probably because he supposed him better able to entertain his guests than himself. The host usually reserved the 'imus lectus' for himself and his family, as Plutarch tells us in the above place. If they were not present their places were usually occupied by dependents of the host (parasites), who filled up the table, and helped to flatter the host and entertain the company. This explains Epp. i. 13. 10, "imi Derisor lecti." Sometimes these places were occupied by 'umbrae,' brought by the invited guests. See Becker's Gall. exc. 'Triclinium.' By 'sum-num ego' Fundanius means that he occupied the farthest seat on the 'sumnum lectus.' The slaves in helping the wine began from this point, and went round till they came to the 'imus,' or third place in the 'imus lectus.' See Plautus (Asin v. 2.
41), "Da, puere, ab summo. Age tu interibi ab infimo da savium." These words Demaeetus addresses to his wife, who, as above stated, would, according to custom, be where he says, 'ab infimo,' 'ima.'
— Viscus Thalrus ] See S. i. 9, 22, n.; 10, 23, n. He appears to have been a native of Thurii, in Lucania, which was made a Latin colony a. u. c. 550 (Livy xxxv. 9), and received the name of Copiae.
But its old name, given it at its foundation by the Athenians (a. c. 444), continued to be used as well as the new. Viscus was highly esteemed by Horace. As to Varius, see S. i. 5, 40, n. Nothing whatever is known of Servilius Balatrones (as to whose cognomen, see S. 2, 2, n.) or Vibidius.
The second syllable of Servilius appears from inscriptions to be long; the third therefore coalesce with the last. Maecenas had taken them with him as 'umbrae,' which means persons taken by guests without special invitation from the host. See Epp. i. 5, 28, n. The MSS. and editions vary between 'quos' and 'quas.' Orelli prefers the latter. I do not think there is much to choose between the two. 'Super ipsum' means on the seat above the host (see last note). As to Nomentanus, see
S. i. 1. 102. Porcius Comm. Cruq. says was a 'publicanus,' as Nomentanus, according to the same authority, was a 'decumanus.' This may have been true once, but it is clear that they are here introduced as mere parasites. Suidas, from Plutarch, mentions one Tortius as a parasite of Maecenas, which name is supposed to be a corrupt reading for Porcius, who might in that case be identified with the person in the text. All that we learn of him if that be so is that, Maecenas having bought a handsome new table, which was not round according to the fashion of the day but oblong, after every praise had been exhausted by the company, Porcius wound up by saying, "You don't observe, my dear friends, how beautifully round the table is!"
He would call black white, a square table round, for a dinner. Here he seems to be occupied chiefly in filling his own belly, while the host and his other parasites are looking after the guests and doing the honours of the table. 'Placentae' were cakes, often sweetened with honey.
25. Nomentanus ad hoc, qui] 'Nomentanus was there for this purpose that he might—.' His business was that of nom-mentarius, to direct the attention of the guests to any dainties they might have overlooked, and to explain to them the mystery of each dish; for, as Fundanius says, the commonest viandas were so dressed up with sauces, that they could hardly be recognised, or new sorts of dishes were put on the table, such as the entrails of different fish, turbort and placce for instance. 'Pas-sus' is described by Pliny (ix. 20) as a flat fish, and is generally supposed to be the plaece. 'Indice digito' is the forefinger;
the middle finger was called 'famosus.'
Persius calls it 'infamis' (ii. 33), and Martial 'impudicus' (vi. 70. 5). This name is given to it as the finger of scorn.
The third finger was called 'medicus' or 'medicinalis,' for the same reason probably that got it the name 'annularis,' its supposed anatomical connexion with the heart. (See S. 7. 9.) By 'cetera turba' Fundanius means the uninitiated, Maecenas and his party. 'Ut vel continuo patuim' means that the nature and importance of Nomentanus' functions were shown on that occasion, when he handed Fundanius a dainty he had never tasted before or perhaps heard of, and yet these gentlemen knew what good living was.

31. melimela. These were a sweet sort of rosy apple which, we learn from Varro, were once called 'mustea,' and afterwards 'melimela.' The derivation of the name sufficiently marks their flavour, and Martial mentions them as vying with the produce of the hive; "Dulcisbus aut certant quae melimela favis" (i. 44). That they had a higher colour when gathered at the wane of the moon is an invention of the nomenclator. His reasoning on the subject was so abstruse that Fundanius does not pretend to be able to recollect it.

34. Nos nisi dannose bibimus] See Terence (Heaut. v. 4. 9):

"Ch. At ego si me metuis mores cave esse in te istos sentiam."

Cl. Quo? Ch. Si scire vis ego dicam: gerro, iners, fraus, belluio, Ganeo, dannosus."

Vibidius means that if this stupid dinner is to be the death of them, they had better have their revenge beforehand, and drink ruinously of the host's wine: if they do not then they will die unavenged. 'Moriemur inulti' is borrowed from the Epic style. See Aen. ii. 670; iv. 659.

35. Vertere pallor Tum parochi faciem] Fundanius gives two reasons why the host turned pale when he heard his guests call for larger cups: because when men have drank well they give a loose rein to their tongues, and because wine spoils the palate by destroying the delicacy of its taste. He might probably have added a third, for it seems that in the midst of his ostentation the man was a niggard. As to 'parochi,' see S. i. 5. 46. The host is so called as the man "qui praebet aquam" (S. i. 4. 88).

39. Invertunt Allifanis vinaria tota] Allifae was a town of Samnium, the capture of which by C. Petilius in the second Samnite War, A.D.C. 429, is related by Livy (viii. 25). The Romans did not retain it long this time, for fifteen years afterwards it was captured again by C. Marciius Rutilius (Livy. ix. 38). Comm. Crnq. says that there a large sort of cup was made of earthenware. This the context implies. 'Vinaria' is properly an adjective, and agrees with 'vasa' understood. It means, here the 'lagena' or 'amphora,' which differed in shape but not in use. Both were vessels either of clay, or sometimes latterly of glass, in which the wine was kept. Their contents were usually poured into a 'crater' for the purpose of being mixed with water. These persons helped themselves from the 'lagena,' and all followed their example, except the master and his two parasites (see above, v. 20). There was no symposiarch, no 'magister bibendi,' and the guests drank as they pleased.

42. squillas inter muraena natantes] As
In patina porrecta. Sub hoc herus: 'Haec gravida,' inquit, 'Capta est, deterior post partum carne futura. His mixtum jus est: oleo quod prima Venafri Pressit cella; garo de suceis piscis Hiberi; Vino quinquenni, verum citra mare nato, Dum coquitur—coeto Chium sic convenit, ut non Hoc magis ullum aliud;—pipere albo, non sine aceto, Quod Methymnaeam vitio mutaverit uvam. Erucas virides, inulas ego primus amaras Monstravi incoquire, inutos Curtillus echinos, Ut melius muria quod testa marina remittat.' Interea suspensa graves aulae ruinas to 'squillas,' see S. ii. 4. 58. 'Muraena' was a lamprey, and accounted a great delicacy by the Romans, who appear to have sometimes kept them tame. They were brought chiefly from the coast of Sicily. See Martial (xiii. 89):—

"Quae natat in Siculo grandis muraena profundo Non valet exustam mergere sole cutem."

Macrobius (Sat. ii. 11) and Pliny (ix. 55) relate, the one of L. Crassus and the other of Hortensius the orator, that they each kept a pet 'muraena,' and each shed tears when their favourite died. See Mart. (x. 30. 22):—

"Natat ad magistrum delicata muraena. Nomenclator mugilem citat notum, Et adesse jussi prodeunt senes mulli."

The prawns were swimming in sauce, the composition of which the host goes on to describe himself, as a matter of too much consequence to be left to the explanation of his nomenclator. The materials were Venafrian olive oil (C. ii. 6. 16, n.), 'garum' (a sauce made of the entrails and blood of fish, and here made from the scober, perhaps the mackerel, caught in greatest abundance off the coast of Spain. See Pliny (xxxi. 8), "Garum ex scombo pisce laudatissimum in Carthaginis Spartanis cetarias;" and Martial (xiii. 102):—

"Exspirantis adhuc sambri de sanguine primo Accipe faecosum, manura cara, garum," some Italian wine added while it was making, and some Chian when it was made; white pepper (see above, 4. 74, n.) and vinegar made from sour Lesbian wine (C. i. 17, 21). Of the other ingredients Nasidicus boasts of having invented two himself; one was the 'eruca,' which we call the rocket, a vegetable of the genus brassica, and the 'inula campana,' 'elecampane,' the 'inula helenium' (ιλίνον) of Linnaeus, a plant that grows in meadows and damp ground. It is used medicinally as a bitter. The last ingredient was the 'echinus,' a prickly shell-fish, thrown in without being washed, for the benefit of its saline qualities; for which addition to the sauce he gives credit to one Curtillus, whoever he may have been. The superiority of the 'echinus' to 'mura' (see S. ii. 4. 65, n.) is here said to consist in the fact of the former coming fresh from the sea, and furnishing a more perfect brine. 54. [aulae] See C. iii. 29. 15, n. The host's dissertation was brought to a sudden close by the falling of the tapestry from the ceiling, bringing down among the dishes an immense cloud of dust. The guests fancy the house is coming down, but when they find the extent of the damage they recover themselves ('erigimus'). Rufus (Nasidienus) was so disturbed by this untoward accident that he put down his head and began to shed tears. Nomentanus comforts him with an apostrophe to Fortune, complaining of her caprices, the solemn hypocrisy of which makes Fundanius laugh so immoderately that he is obliged to stuff his napkin into his mouth to check himself. Balatro, who has a sneer always ready (μετρηταίζω, see S. i. 6. 5), begins a long sympathetic and flattering speech, with which Nasidienus is highly pleased and comforted under his misfortune. A brilliant thought suddenly strikes him, and he calls for his shoes and goes out, on which

In patinam fecere, trahentia pulveris atri
Quantum non Aquilo Campanis excitat agris.
Nos majus veriti postquam nihil esse perici
Sensimus erigimur. Rufus posito capite, ut si
Filius immaturus obisset, flere. Quis esset
Finis ni sapiens sic Nomentanus amicum
Tolleret: 'Heu, Fortuna, quis est crudelior in nos
Te deus? Ut semper gaudes illudere rebus
Humanis!' Varius mappa compescere risum Vix poterat: Balatro suspendens omnia naso,
'Haec est condicio vivendi,' aiebat, 'eqoque
Responsura tuo nunquam est par fama labori.
Tene ut ego accipiar laute torquerier omni
Sollicitudine districtum, ne panis adustus,
Ne male conditum jus apponatur, ut omnes
Praecincti recte pueri comptique ministrent!
Adde hos praeterea casus, aulaea ruant si
Ut modo; si patinam pede lapsus frangat agaso.
Sed convivatoris uti ducis ingenium res
Adversae nudare solent, celare secundae,' Nasidiemus ad haec: 'Tibi di quaecunque preceris Commoda dent! Ita vir bonus es convivaque comis,'
Et soleas poscit. Tum in lecto quoque videres Stridere secreta divisos aere susuros.'
"Nulos his mallem ludos spectasse; sed illa
Redde age quae deinceps risisti." "Vibidius dum
Quaerit de pueris num sit quoque fracta lagena,
Quod sibi poscenti non dantur pocula, dumque
Ridetur fictis rerum Balatrone secundo, the guests begin to titter and to whisper to one another, not wishing to give offence, or to speak out before the parasites and the slaves. (54—78.)

72. agaso] This was a groom or mule-driver, or otherwise connected with the stables. Balatro means a sneer at the establishment, the out-door slaves being had in to wait at table and swell the number of attendants.

77. Et soleas poscit.] See S. i. 3. 127.
The sandals were taken off before they sat down to dinner, for which therefore "soles demere, deponere" (Mart. iii. 50. 3) were common expressions, as 'soles poscere' was for getting up. The Greeks had the same custom and the same way of expressing themselves. See Aristoph. (Vesp. 103), ενθελ' δ' ἀπὸ δόρτηστον εἰκραίνει ἐμβάςας. In Plautus play Truculentus (ii.
4. 12, sqq.), Dinarchus, when he finds his mistrust cannot sup with him, exclaims,
"Cedo soleas mihi! Properate. auferte mensam," though he had not sat down to table at all; and immediately afterwards,
when she has pacified him, he exclaims,
"Ah, adsperisti aquam: Jam redit animus. Deme soleas. Cedo, bibam." In the next line an attempt seems to have been made to convey the notion of whispering
by the sound of the s repeated.

83. Ridetur fictis rerum] They pretend to be laughing at something else when Nasidienus comes in. As to 'fictis rerum,' see C. iv. 12. 19, n. 'Balatrone secundo,' Orelli says, is a metaphor from a favourable wind, as if it meant that Balatro helped the joke. This is not very satisfactory. Acron interprets it "ex tristi hilari facto," which belongs more to 'mutatae frontis.' Comm. Cruq. I think is nearer the meaning when he renders it "hypocritam agente, subsecuente, subserviente; pocula etiam poscens secundabat omnia joci suis." He played δευτεραγωνίστης who supported the principal actor, but was not so prominent. (See Epp. i. 13. 14.) Balatro was a wit and sarcastic. He supplied jokes and the others laughed. 'Mazonomus' was a large round dish, properly one from which grain (μάζα) was distributed. Cranes became a fashionable dish with the Romans, but not till after this time, when storks were preferred (see S. 2. 50, n.). The liver of a white goose fattened on figs, the legs of a hare served up separately, as being (according to the host), better flavoured when dressed without the loins, blackbirds burnt in roasting, and wood-pigeons with the hinder parts, which were most sought after, removed (perhaps from the ignorance of the host, who thought novelty was the best recommendation of his dishes),—these composed the last 'ferculum' brought in as special delicacies to make up for the late catastrophe. But the officiousness of the host destroyed the relish of his dishes, such as they were, and the guests took their revenge by tasting nothing he put before them, and presently taking their leave.

95. Canidia afflasset ] Here is this woman again, the last time we meet with her. See Ep. iii. 8, n.; v. and xvii., Introduction, and S. i. 8, Introduction.
That and he his that he and joke best suppose did passion which the life patron it practice, Epistle own of belief notions the beggars return had been he Notre-Dame was return to occasioned, whatever he best of some irony, to follow his own crude notions as a mere beginner; his hope and purpose, he says, is to carry virtue into active practice, as that which "Aeque pauperibus prodest, locupletibus aequum."

It is an earnest wish to retire into privacy, to abandon poetry, and to devote himself to the study of philosophy. He disclaims all connexion with sects, and professes in all humility, but not without some irony, to follow his own crude notions as a mere beginner; his hope and purpose, he says, is to carry virtue into active practice, as that which "Aeque pauperibus prodest, locupletibus aequum;" he recommends it as the panacea of life, as the only true wisdom; he looks upon the world as a shuffling scene of inconsistency, and men's judgments as shallow and vulgar; he even charges his patron himself with the prevailing levity.

We may infer from all this that Horace, who knew the world pretty well, and whose life had not been free from many vexations, arising out of the jealousies his popularity and his writings had occasioned, would have been glad to retire to his books and his reflections, not, as some have said, to the study of philosophical systems, for all of which I believe he had a contempt in his heart, as he cannot help showing even in his short summary at the end of this Epistle; the climax of his sermon on virtue is an irresistible joke at the expense of the Stoics, the most rigid though not the most practical advocates of virtue. Whatever views Horace had in respect to goodness and happiness were his own: and we can believe that one who had such perceptions of the follies and vices of the world was sincere in wishing to get away from it; that he was tired of a reputation which brought him into trouble; and that he was weary of writing verses to express a passion he never heartily felt and was still less likely to feel in his forty-fifth year. He did return to ode-writing, as we know, and wrote some of his best verses (but not his best love verses) long after he had pleaded his exemption with Maecenas. When this Epistle was written is not to be traced by any incidental allusions; and we can only suppose it was some time after the publication of the odes, which was not earlier than A.D.C. 730. The year 734 is assumed with some probability by Franke.
ARGUMENT.

Maecenas, more honoured than all the world, I have received my discharge; seek not to call me back; my years and my inclinations are not what they were. Let me hang up my arms and retire. A warning voice within bids me loose the aged steed lest he stumble at the end of his course. Verse I lay aside, and turn all my thoughts to philosophy and virtue, and am laying up stores of these.

(v. 13.) I belong, if you ask me, to no school, and own no master, but am borne along wherever the breeze may set: now all activity and virtue with the Stoics, now insensibly falling into the laxity of Aristippus. The days are weary till I shall have learnt to act out what neither rich nor poor, young nor old, can neglect with impunity. Meantime I can only take the little knowledge I have for my guide and comfort. If we cannot reach perfection, we may advance towards it. There are charms in philosophy for every disease. Ambition, envy, passion, sloth, intemperance, lust,—all that is most savage may be tamed if it turn a willing ear to instruction. The first step in virtue and wisdom is to abandon vice and folly. For instance, you who are hastening to be rich, and flying from the disgrace of poverty, will you not learn from the wise to despise those things you love so foolishly? Would the boxer who fights in the streets despise the Olympic crown which should be offered him without a blow?

(v. 52.) Believe me virtue is above the worth of gold, though the whole Forum may say otherwise, and old and young may learn the lesson, crying, 'Money first and then virtue.' Be able, good, eloquent, honest, as you will, let your property fall short but by a little of the equestrian and you are nobody. Never mind; the children will call you King if you do well. Let this be your stronghold, a conscience void of offence. Which is best, Roscis' law or the boys', which the good old soldiers Curius and Camillus approved? Which is your best adviser, he who bids you get money how you can, that you may sit a little nearer the stage, or he who stands ever at your elbow and bids and teaches you to defy the caprices of Fortune?

(v. 70.) And if I be asked why I hold not the opinions of the world I mix with, my answer is that which the fox made to the lion: because I see all the footmarks turned towards your den and none the other way. Whom or what am I to follow? One man is getting rich by one foul way and another by another, and no one is consistent even with himself. A man takes a fancy to build on the coast at Baiae, the next day he is off inland to Teanum. If he is married he wishes himself a bachelor; if not he wishes he was. And even the poor man, he must change his lodgings and his furniture, and hire himself a boat to ape the rich man's yacht.

(v. 94.) And you too my friend, you laugh at me if the barber has cut my hair awry, or if my vest is shabby while my tunic is fine: but graver inconsistencies you care not for. In respect of these you think I am but as mad as my neighbours and want no guardian, and this though you are my protector and are vexed with me for the smallest neglect of my body, and though I look to you and hang upon you like a child.

(v. 106.) In short, to go back. The wise man is only inferior to great Jove,—rich, free, respected, handsome, and a king of kings; but above all sound except when his stomach is out of order.
Prima dicte mihi, summa dicende Camena,
Spectatum satís et donatum jam rude quaeris,
Maccenas, iterum antiquo me includere ludo.
Non eadem est aetas, non mens. Veianius armis Herculis ad postem fixis latet abditus agro,
Ne populum extremâ toties exoret arena.

1. Prima dicte mihi.] This is an affectionate way of speaking. It has no particular reference to any thing Horace had written. It is like Virgil's address to Pollio (Ec. viii. 11): "A te principium, tibi desinet," or Nestor's to Agamemnon (II. ix. 96):

'Atreius eúdai, ánax ánérwv Ἀγαμήμων,
'Ev soi μιν λέγω, στο δ' ἀρχωμαι.

Theocritus also opens his panegyric on Ptolemaeus Philadelphus in the same way:

ἐκ Δίως ἀρχώμεθα καὶ ἕκ Δία λῆτες, θανάτων τὸν ἀριστον ἐπὶν ἄκωμεν
ἀοιδός:

ἀνέρων δ' αὖ Πτολεμαίος ἐνὶ πρόωνια πριγματο καὶ μέσου, ὦ γὰρ προφέρεσ στατος ἀνέρων. (Idyll. xvii.)

2. Spectatum satís et donatum jam rude] When gladiators received their discharge they were presented by the 'lanista' or the 'editor spectaculum,' who owned or hired them, with a 'rudis,' which was a blunt wooden instrument, some say a sword others a cudgel. There are two gems representing as it appears 'rudarii,' in Agostini's collection, in each of which the man carries a short round weapon like a policeman's truncheon. The name may have belonged to any weapon used in the 'praelirius' or sham fight that generally preceded the real battle with sharp swords. Suetonius says of Caligula (vit. c. 32):

'Mirrillonem e ludo rudibus secum batuentem et sponte prostratum confodit ferrea sica;' and again (c. 54): "Batuebat pugnatorius armis." There were therefore different sorts of weapons used in this way, and 'rudis' may have been the name for any of them. The gladiators thus discharged were called 'rudarii,' and if they were freemen 'exauctorati.' (See above, S. ii. 6, n.) 'Spectatum' is a technical term. Tickets with the letters SP upon them were given to gladiators who had distinguished themselves. 'Ludus' means the place where the training took place and the gladiators were kept. (See A. P. 32, n.)

4. Veianius armis Hercules ad postem] Veianius was a 'rudarius,' and when he was discharged he hung up his weapons in the temple of Hercules just as the man is made to hang up the arms of love in the temple of Venus when they had ceased to profit him, in C. iii. 26. 3:

"Nunc arma defunctamque bello Barbiton hic paries habebit;"
or as the slave hung up his chain to the Lares (see S. i. 5. 63, n., "Donasset jamne catenam Ex voto larisbus"), to whom also boys dedicated their 'bulla' when they assumed the 'toga virilis' ("Bullaque succincta Laribus donata pecundit," Pers. v. 31), and generally, as Tertullian remarks, those who gave up any trade or calling dedicated the instruments with which they had followed it to the gods and to that god in particular under whose patronage they had placed themselves. Hercules would naturally be chosen by a gladiator, or by a soldier as in an epigram in the Anthologia (Brunck, vol. i. p. 254). Similar actions are frequently represented in those epigrams, as of a fisherman dedicating his nets to the Nymphs (vol. ii. p. 494), a huntsman his nets and quiver to Mercury (vol. i. p. 223), &c. So the shepherd hangs up his flute on a tree to Pan (Tibullus ii. 5. 20):

"Pendebatque vagi pastoris in arbore
votum,
Garrula silvestri fistula sacra deo."

All the Scholasts tell us that Veianius hung up his weapons in the temple of Hercules Fundanus, and it appears that Hercules was worshipped particularly by the inhabitants of Fundi in Latium (S. i. 5. 34). Orelli refers to an inscription in his own collection, No. 1539 ; and Obbarius on this passage quotes Vopiscus in Florianus, c. 4, as making mention of the temple of Hercules Fundanus. He had at least one temple at Rome (see S. ii. 6, 12, n.), and also at Tibur, which was called after him. (See note on Ep. 2. 2.) Veiania was the name of an Italian family. Varro (R. R. iii. 16. 10) mentions two brothers of that name from the Faliscus ager.

6. Ne populum extrema] The gladia-
Est mihi purgatam crebro qui personet aurem:
Solve senescentem mature sanus equum, ne
Pecet ad extremum ridendus et ilia ducat.
Nunc itaque et versus et cetera ludicra pono,
Quid verum atque decens eurō et rogo et omnis in hoc sum;
Condo et compono quae mox depromere possim.
Ac ne forte rogés quo me duce, quo lare tuter,
Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri
Quo me eunque rapit tempestas deferor hospes.
Nunc agilis fio et morsor civilibus undis,

torial shows at this time were exhibited in the Circus. The arena was separated from the seats, which went round the building, by a wall called the 'podium,' near which a gladiator would station himself to appeal to the compassion of the people, at whose request it usually was that they got their freedom and the 'rudis.' We learn from Juvenal that the persons of highest condition sat by the 'podium,' and to their influence the appeal would be more immediately made. He says (ii. 145):

"Et Capitolinis generosior et Marcellis Et Catulis Paulisque minoribus et Fabiis et Omnibus ad podium spectantibus."

Lipsius (de Amphith. c. xi.) supposes that there was between the 'podium' and lowest seat a level space, in which the principal personages sat, the curule officers in their own chairs. Velanius, Horace says, retired into the country to escape the temptation to engage himself again, and to place himself in the position he had so often occupied of a suppliant for the people's favour. When they liked a man they were not easily persuaded to ask for his discharge.

7. Est mihi purgatam] He has a voice within him, he says, the office of which is to whisper in his attentive ear the precept that follows, the idea of which is taken from Ennius, who takes it from the Circus. His words, in Cicero de Senect. (c. 8) are,—

"Sicut fortis equus spatio qui saepé supremo Vicit Olympia, nunc senio confecta quiescit."

The reverse of 'purgatam aurem,' which was a conventional expression, is found in the next Epistle (v. 53), "auriculas collecta sorde dolentes."

9. ilia ducat.] 'Ilia trahere' or 'ducere' are ordinary expressions for panting: they mean to contract the flanks, as is done in the act of recovering the breath. The reverse is 'ilia tendere.' See Virg. Georg.

iii. 506, "imaque longo Ilia singultu tendunt." 'Ilia ducere' is here to become broken winded.

10. et versus et cetera ludicra pono,] He did not keep his word, for he wrote much of the fourth Book of Odes and the Carmen Saeculare after this; so that he says of himself (Epp. ii. 1. 111):—

"Ipse ego qui nullus me affirmo scribere versus Invenior Parthis mendacior." "Ludicra' means the follies of light poetry, jokes, amours, &c., as he says (Epp. ii. 2. 55):—

"Singula de nobis anni praeclantur euntes,
Eripuere jocos, venerem, convivia, ludum;
Tendent extorquere poëmata."

13. quo lare tuter,] This is equivalent to 'qua in domo,' respecting which see C. i. 29. 14, n.; and as to 'jurare in verba,' see note on Epod. xv. 4, "in verba jurabas mea." The metaphor is taken from the oath of the gladiator ('uctoramentum') referred to above (S. ii. 7. 59). Horace says he follows no school and knows no master, but like a traveller always changing his abode, he follows the breeze that carries him hither and thither, just as his temper happens to be or his judgment chances to be influenced; "tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine," as St. Paul says, using the same sort of language.

16. Nunc agilis fio] That is, he agrees with the Stoics, with whom "the end of life lay in its most active development," and whose "doctrine necessarily set itself in direct opposition to all such modes of view as made good to consist, not in activity, but in calm enjoyment. They regarded the pleasure that is sought to be derived from an abandonment of active duties as a hindrance of life and an evil" (Ritter, Anc. Phil. vol. iii. p. 563, Engl. Trans.). The virtue Virtutis verae custos rigidusque satelles;
Nunc in Aristippi furtim praecepta relabor,
Et mihi res non me rebus subjungere conor.
Ut nox longa quibus mentitur amica, diesque
Longa videtur opus debentibus, ut piger annus of the Stoics was essentially a Roman virtue (see C. S. 58, n.), and lay in action; and with them the perfection of virtue was the perfection of happiness, utility, wealth, power (see below, v. 106, n.): "Zenoigitur nullo modo erat qui ut Theophrastus nervos virtutis incidere, sed contra quia omnis quae ad bestiam vitam pertinet in una virtute ponere, nec quidquam aliud numeraret in bonis" (Cic. Ac. Prior. 10).

18. Nunc in Aristippi] After holding for a time to the rigid school of virtue and the Stoics, he insensibly went over to the lax doctrines of the Cyrenaeics, whose founder was Aristippus of Cyrene, one of Socrates' least worthy disciples. He held that every man should control circumstances and not be controlled by them. Hence he did not hesitate to expose himself to the greatest temptations, and once when he was blamed for keeping company with Lais, the courtezan, his reply was, ἐξω Λαΐδα ἄλλ' ὠκομαι (compare Diog. Laert. iv. 66, 68, 73). An instance of his indifference in another way is given above (S. ii. 3.100), when he told his slave who was carrying a bag of money and was tired, to throw away some of it to lighten his load. Another story of the same sort is given by Cicero (de Invent. ii. 50), that he threw his money into the sea. But his object then was to save his life. In Epp. 17. 23 we have—

"Omnis Aristippum decuit color et status et res, Terrantem majora fere praesentibus aequum."

Plutarch says he was able ὁμοί ἔγων πρὸς τὰ βιλτίονα τῶν υποεικέμενων ἐξαναφέρει καὶ ἀνακοφίζεσθαι αὐτῶν (De Tranq. An. B.) and Diog. (ii. 66), ἵνα ὑπεκακυς ἀμίασθαι καὶ τάπω καὶ χρώνια καὶ προσώπω, καὶ πάνα περίστασιν ἀμονίως υποκόρισθαι. Though there was much affectation and at the same time a want of practical strictness in these views, they in theory recognized self-control, or temperance and contentment, as the basis of happiness. But while Aristippus inculcated self-reliance and contentment, requiring all care for the future to be dismissed, and the thoughts and desires to be confined to the present moment, he brought in the notion that present pleasure was the only happiness, and this doctrine is associated with the Cyrenaeic school. Comm. Crug. explains "Et mihi res," &c., clearly, saying, "Rebus utor ita ut eis imperem non autem ut eis serviam, ut avarus." But Aristippus departed from his own theory when he departed from the rule of his teacher and took money from his pupils. He was the first of the Socratids that did so, and Xenophon is supposed to refer to him, when he says that some of Socrates' disciples got for nothing a little of his wisdom and sold it at a high price to others (Mem. i. 2, § 60). Those that took money from their disciples Socrates said sold themselves into slavery, and he must therefore have held this opinion of Aristippus (Ib. § 6). His dialogue with Socrates (in Xen. Mem. ii. 1) throws light upon his opinions as here stated by Horace. The word 'subjungere' is plainly taken from putting the neck of beasts of burden under the yoke.

20. diesque Longa] Here Bentley reads 'Lenta,' "quo scilicet Horatium ipsum emendet," as Baxter says. The change of word weakens the force of the verse.

21. ut piger annus Pupillis] Every boy who had lost his father was under a 'tutor' or guardian in respect of his property, while the care of his person belonged to his mother, or, in the case of her death, to his nearest relation, provided he was not a 'pupillus' himself. This lasted till the age of puberty (fourteen). The boy was a 'pupillus,' not in relation to his mother, but to his tutor, who might be appointed by the mother if she had by the father's will 'tutors optionem,' and if that 'optio' was 'plena' she might change the tutor as often as she pleased; if it was 'angusta,' the number of times she was allowed to change was limited by the will. In the former case her guardianship might be 'dura,' oppressive and mischievous, as of course it might be in many other ways if she were an unnatural mother; but Horace means that it was irksome to boys, because they wished to be their own masters. 'Tutores' were only chosen by the mother.
Pupillus quos dura premit custodia matrum;
Sic mihi tarda fluunt ingratatae tempora, quae spem
Consiliumque morantur agendi naviter id quod
Aeque pauperibus prodest, locupletibus aequo,
Aeque neglectum pueris senibusque nocebit.

Restat ut his ego me ipse regam solerque elementis.
Non possis oculo quantum contendere Lyceus,
Non tamen idcirco contennas lippus inungi;
Nec quia desperes invicti membra Glyconis,
Nodosa corpus nolis prohibere cheragra.
Est quadum prodiere tenus si non datur ultra.
Fervet avaritia miseroque cupidine pectus,
Sunt verba et voces quibus hunc lenire dolorem
Possis et magnam morbi deponere partem.
Laudis amore tumes, sunt certa piacula quae te
Ter pure lecto poterunt recreare libello.
Invitus, iracundus, iners, vinosus, amator,
Nemo adeo ferus est ut non mitescere possit,
Si modo culturae patientem commodet aurem.
Virtus est vitium fugere et sapientia prima Stultitia caruisse. Vides quae maxima credis Esse mala, exiguum censum turpemque repulsam, probably familiar with it. But the above epigram confirming the Scholiasts' statements sets the matter at rest. Comm. Cruq. mentions 'Milonis' as a various reading, and one of the Vatican MSS. has that name. Dacier quotes a saying of Epictetus (Diss. i. c. 2), which is much to the purpose here: ouv l γαρ Μίλων έσσομαι και άμως ούς αμελὼ τού σώματος, ούκ Κροίσος ἀλλ' άμως ούς αμιλὼ τῆς κτήσεως, κ.τ.λ.

31. Nodosa—prohibere cheragra.] The gout in the hand is called 'nodosa,' from its twisting the joints of the fingers (S. ii. 7. 15). The construction of 'prohibere' with the accusative of the person and ablative of the thing is repeated with 'arceo' in Epp. 8. 10.

32. Est quadum prodiere tenus] Horace is probably indulging a little irony at the expense of the philosophers in the implied comparison of their perceptions and powers with those of Lyncus and Glycon, and in the humble tone he takes towards them. 'Tenus,' as a general rule, takes the ablative of the singular, and is so used in the compound words 'hactenus,' 'cetenus,' &c. The form 'quadamentus' is used occasionally by Pliny as Bentley has shown, and the feminine gender appears in all the combinations of 'tenus' with pronouns. All the early editions had 'quodam' or 'quadam' till Lambinus introduced 'quodam' on his own conjecture. Cruquius afterwards found it in his oldest Blandinian MS. and adopted it. The two oldest of Pottier's Parisian MSS. have 'quadam,' and that was the first reading of Orelli's St. Gallen. In all other MSS. the reading has been 'quodam' or 'quadam.' Bentley and the majority of modern editors have adopted 'quadam.' Fea is certainly wrong in reading 'quoddam.'

34. Sunt verba et voces ] Compare Euripides (Hippol. 478)—

ιησιν ο γ ιπφεαι και λαγοι θελκήριοι φανήσαι τι τήδε φάρμακαν νόσου.

The charms Horace means are the precepts of the wise to be derived from books (37). He also calls them 'piacula' (36), which is equivalent to 'medicamenta,' because disease being attributed to the wrath of the gods, that which should remove their wrath ('piaculum') was the means of removing disease. 'Ter' is used by way of keeping up the religious notion (that number being common in all religious ceremonies, see C. i. 28. 36, n.): 'pure' is used in the same connexion. The book must be read with a pure mind, as the body must be washed before sacrifice or libation can be offered. By 'libello' I understand Horace to mean any book that instructs the mind in virtue. Obbarius says, 'Sine dubio intelligentus est libellus expiationum vel ritus vel ipsas formulas continens,' books of charms said to be written by Orpheus Musaeus and others, which beggars and impostors carried about for sale. Orelli supports this notion; but I do not find that 'libellus' is any where specifically applied to a book of charms, or that such books existed.

41. Virtus est vitium fugere] If you cannot all at once attain perfection you may at least begin to learn, and the first step towards virtue is to put away vice. What follows is an illustration of this. As to 'repulsar,' see C. iii. 2. 17. He who would secure an election must have a command of money.
Quanto devites animi capitisque labore.

Impiger extremos curris mercator ad Indos,
Per mare pauperiem fugiens, per saxa, per ignes:
Ne eures ea quae stulte miraris et optas
Discere, et audire, et meliori credere non vis?
Quis circum pagos et circum compita pugnax
Magna coronari conternat Olympia, cui spes,
Cui sit condicio dulcis sine pulvere palmae?
Vilus argentum est auro, virtutibus aurum.
"O cives, cives, quaerenda pecunia primum est;
Virtus post nummos." Haec Janus summus ab imo Perdocet, haec reclinunt juvenes dictata senesque,

44. capitisque labore.] 'Caput' is here put for the whole body. We do not use it so, but for the seat of intelligence, which the Romans placed in the heart, not in the brain. On 'per saxa, per ignes,' see C. iv. 14. 24; S. ii. 3. 56.

47. Ne eures ea] 'In order that you may cease to care for those things which you now so foolishly admire and long for, will not you learn and listen, and trust the experience of a better man than yourself.'

49. Quis circum pagos] Suetonius says of Augustus (vit. c. 45) that he was very fond of observing boxers, 'et maxime Latinos: non legitimos atque ordinarios modo sed et catervarios oppidanos inter angustias vicorum pugnantes temere ac sine arte.' These latter are what Horace alludes to: boxers who went about the streets and the country villages and fought for the amusement of the inhabitants and for what they could pick up. Horace does not merely mean what took place at the Paganalia and Compitalia but frequently. 'Coronari Olympia' is a Greek word of speaking. Horace says, what boxer who goes about the country towns exhibiting would despise the Olympic prizes if he had a hope, still more a promise, that he should be crowned without a struggle? By this he means, men strive after happiness in the shape of riches, &c.; but if they will learn wisdom, that shall give them all they can desire without trouble or pain. The world may judge otherwise, he proceeds to say, and make wealth the standard of worth; but the world is not to be listened to, it is foolish and inconsistent. 'Sine pulvere' seems to be taken from the Greek δεκαυρί.

54. Janus summus ab imo] See S. ii. 3. 18. Most modern editions have 'prodiciet,' which appears, in good MSS., but was first edited by Lambinus. The word does not occur elsewhere. The Greeks used προδιακόησεν, as Demos. p. 1231. 26; Soph. Aj. 163; Trach. 601, and elsewhere. It signifies 'to warn,' 'to teach beforehand.' Lambinus, Doering, Fea, and others, explain 'prodiciet' by ἐκτίθεσθαι, i.e. 'publico, palam docet.' Ven. 1483 has 'prodocet,' and many old editions and some MSS. have the same. The edictio princes has 'perdocet,' and so had some of Cruqius' MSS., and all the editions of the sixteenth century. It is defended by Torrentius and H. Stephens (Diat. pp. 45, 127), in whose time it was the vulgar reading. I think it is the true one. 'Perdocet' means it persists in teaching, it enforces. Horace says that as gold is more precious than silver, virtue is more precious than gold; whereas from one end of the Forum to the other (not only by the money-lenders, as Orelli says) the opposite doctrine is insisted upon, and old and young go there to learn it, as boys going to school, and repeat it as school-boys repeat their tasks dictated to them by the master. Verse 56 is repeated from S. i. 6. 74. Cunningham, Sandon, and others omit this verse, but no MSS. omit it, and this is not the only instance in which Horace repeats himself. It heightens the force of the picture by representing the sort of lesson men' of all ages are spending their lives on learning, the casting up of accounts, as Gesner remarks. As to 'dictata' see S. i. 10. 75, n. Plato (Rep. iii. p. 407, Stept.) quotes a verse of Phocylides (Bergk. Poet. Lyr. Gr. p. 340), bidding men first seek the means of subsistence and then practise virtue when they have got them: εἰ διασκέπας βιοτήν, ἄρητιν δ' ἄραν ἵ πι πιος ἑκτίνι; which shows that 'virtus post nummos' is a very old rule as it is a very modern one.
Laevus suspensus loculos tabulamque lacerto.
Est animus tibi, sunt mores et lingua fidesque;
Sed praesens his septem milia desunt,
Plebs eris. At pueri ludentes. "Rex eris," aiunt,
"Si recte facies." Hic murus aenaeus esto,
Nil conscire sibi, nulla pallescere culpa.
Roscia, dic sodes, melior lex an puerorum est
Nenia, quae regnum recte facientibus offerit,
Et maribus Curiiis et decantata Camillus?
Isne tibi melius suadet qui rem facias, rem,
Si possis recte, si non quocunque modo rem,
Ut propius spectes lacrimosa poëmata Pupi,

58. Sed praesenti sex septem [Suppose you lack six or seven thousand out of 400,000 sestercii, which make an equestrian property, whatever your genius, character, eloquence, and uprightness may be, you are put down for one of the common sort, and will not be allowed, under Otho’s law, to sit in the front rows.’ (See Epod. iv. 15, n.) Juvenal (v. 132) puts the opposite case, and says:

"Quaerit gamba tibi si quis Deus aut similis diis
Aut melior fatis donaret homunio, quantus
Ex nihilis fies."

‘Plebs’ is not used in its regular sense, but contemptuously, ‘a common fellow.’
The equestrian order consisted of all citizens who had the above income and were not senators; for when a man became a senator he ceased to be an ‘eques.’

59. At pueri ludentes, Rex eris, aiunt.] See note on C. i. 36. 8. Plato makes Socrates say (Theaet. i. 146, Steph.): τις τι ημων πρωτος ειποι; ὃ ἐς ἅμαρτων, και ὃς ἐς ἅλα ἅμαρτων, και ὃς καθευθινθητικ, ὃς ἂν παριθριππος, ὃς καθευθινθητικ, ὃς ἂν παρίζηται. In which on which there is a long Schollar’s note: των ουν παριζων τατα (i. e. την σφαιραν) των μιν γενων βασιλεις ἐκκλησα και ὃτι ἂν προστασαν τοις ἄλλοις υπηρεζον, τοις οὐτωμενοις ὑπον. They who threw or caught the ball best were called kings; while they who were beaten were called asses. Some such game must have been in use among the Roman boys, and their king-making had become a proverb. The world may despise you, he says, because you are poor, according to the boys’ rule which makes the best man king, you shall be a king if you do well. As to ‘murus aenaeus’ see C. iii. 3. 65. n. For the different senses in which Horace uses ‘nenia’ see Epod. xvii. 29, n. Here it signifies a sort of song of triumph. The note just referred to may be corrected by this explanation. Through a mistake of mine or the printer’s, this ‘nenia’ has been made to stand for a night-song, as in C. iii. 28. 16.

64. Et maribus Curiiis et decantata Camillus.] On this plural see S. i. 7. 3. The persons referred to are M. Curiius Dentatus, the conqueror of Pyrrhaus, and M. Furius Camillus, the man who saved Rome from the Gauls. Curiius’ contempt for money is especially related by Cicero (de Senect. c. 10) in terms which account for Horace’s selecting him for an illustration here: ‘Curio ad fociem sedentis magnus auri pondus Samnites cum attulisset, repudiati ab eo sunt; non enim aurum habere praeclarum sibi videri dixit, sed ipsis qui haberent aurum imperare.’ The boys’ strain was ever in the mouths of these noble soldiers, giving honour to none but the worthy. ‘Mares’ is used in this sense in A. P. 402: ‘Tyrraeusque mares animos in Martia bella Versibus exauit.’ We use ‘musciam’ in the same way.

67. lacrimosa poëmata Pupi.] Of this person Comm. Crui, writes ‘Puppius tragediographus ita movit affectus spectantium ut eos flere compelleret: inde distichon fecit

Flebunt amici et bene noti mortem meam,
Nam populus in me vivo lacrimavit satis.’

We know nothing more of him than this. ‘Lacrimosa’ is used ironically. As to ‘responsare’ see S. ii. 7. 65. ‘Praesens’ means stands by you and urges you on, and teaches you to meet the insults of fortune with an independent heart and erect bearing. The editio princeps and nearly all the old editions have ‘optat’
HORATHI FLACCI

An qui Fortunae te responsare superbae
Liberum et erectum praesens hortatur et aptat?
Quodsi me populus Romanus forte roget, cur
Non ut porticibus sic judiciis fruar isdem,
Nec sequar aut fugiam quae diligit ipse vel odit,
Olim quod vulpes aegrotus cauta leoni
Respondit referam: Quia me vestigia terrent,
Omnia te adversum spectantia, nulla retrorsum.
Belua multorum es capitum. Nam quid sequar aut quem?
Pars hominum gestit conducere publica, sunt qui
Crustis et pomis viduas venentur avaras,
Excipiantque senes quos in vivaria mittant;
Multis occulto crescit res fenore. Verum for 'aptat,' which is the reading of the existing MSS, with few exceptions. Cruquiuss first adopted 'aptat,' as far as I can discover. 'Oaptat' has little if any meaning here. 'Oaptat' is explained by "pectus praeceptis format amicis" (EpP. i. 28), which province belongs, Horace says, to the poet.

71. Non ut porticibus sic judiciis  As to 'porticus' see S. i. 4. 134. He has said that the world are not fit guides, and he goes on to prove this by the inconsistencies of men, both rich and poor. He says, if people ask him why he mixes with them in the ordinary way of society, in the promenades, &c., but does not form his judgment of things as they do, he answers them as the fox answered the lion in the fable; and the meaning of the answer here is that he found that of all those who joined the world and made money their chief pursuit, none had survived or recovered their right judgment. Socrates uses this same fable of Aesop in his conversation with Alcibiades, to illustrate the wealth of Lacedaemon, into which gold had flowed from all quarters for many generations, and from whence none had come forth (Alc. Prim. ii. 123, Steph.). Lucilius (ap. Nonium, verb. Spectare) refers to this fable. The following lines have been preserved entire:

"Quid sibi vult quare sit ut introversus et ad te Spectent atque ferant vestigia et omnia prorsus?"

76. Belua multorum es capiwm.] The avarice of the world is like the hydra with many heads; if you check it in one form it springs up in another; whom then or what is one to take for one's guide? Bentely, without any authority, substitutes est for 'es;" "corrige vel invitis librarisi," says he.

On the use of 'nam' in this verse see S. ii. 3. 41. n. As to 'conducere' see C. ii. 18. 17, n. On the subject of will-hunting see S. ii. 5, and compare with 'quos in vivaria mittant.' v. 44 of that Satire: "Plures adnabunt thumni et vivaria crescent." There the 'captator' appears as a catcher of fish; here as a hunter of game. 'Vivaria' are preserves. 'Excipere' is the word used for catching the wild boar in C. iii. 12. 12. 'Occulto fenore' means interest which was greater than the law allowed (see S. i. 2. 14, n.), and therefore privately agreed upon. Of all the classes of money-seekers in Rome Horace fixes as the most prominent upon three, the 'publicani,' those who ingratiate themselves with old men in the hope of becoming their heirs, and extortionate usurers. 'Publica' may be equivalent to 'vestigalia' (see Cic. in Verr. ii. 371, Long's note), or it may refer to public buildings and works as some suppose, quoting Juvenal (S. iii. 31):

"Quis facile est aedes conducere, flumina, portus, Siccandam eluviem, portandum ad busta cadaver."

Perhaps the latter suits the context best.

80. Verum Esto atis alios] But allow different men their different tastes, yet even this is of no use; for the same men when they get rich get capricious, and are always changing their minds. If the rich man has set his heart upon building a house at Baine, he does not brook a moment's delay; the waters of the Locus Lucrinus on one side, and the sea on the other, are disturbed with the eager preparations with which the rich man begins to satisfy his desire. The allusion is the same as in C. ii. 18. 19, sqq.
Esto alii alios rebus studiisque teneri:
Idem eadem possunt horam durare probantes?
Nullus in orbe sinuus Baiis praelucet amoenis,
Si dixit dives, lacus et mare sentit amorem
Festinantis heri; cui si vitiosa libido
Fecerit auspicium, "Oras ferramenta Teanum Tolletis, fabri." Lectus genialis in aula est,
Nil ait esse prius, melius nil caelibe vita;
Si non est jurat bene solis esse maritis.
Quo teneam vultum mutatem Protea nodo?
Quid pauper? Ride: mutat coenacula, lectos, and iii. 1. 33, sqq., 24. 3, where see notes.
Baiae was for several generations a favourite resort of the wealthy Romans. Julius Caesar had a house there, and also Cn.
Pompeius. Martial, writing long after Horace, says (xi. 80):
"Ut mille landem, Flaccè, versibus Baias, Laudabo digne non satia tamen Baias."

Its warm springs were a great attraction.
Horace alludes to them in Epp. i. 15, where he says the physician has forbidden his go ing to Baiæ. The Lucerius Laeus was an arm of the sea. Its basin has been filled up by the rising of the volcanic hill called Monte Nuovo in the middle of the sixteenth century. Teanum (now Teano) was a town belonging to the Sidicini, an ancient people of Campania. It was situated on the Via Latina, and about thirty miles from Baiæ.
Some very ancient coins with Oscan characters on them have been found on the site of this town. The whim for the coast having vanished, and a desire to live inland in a country town having seized upon the man of money, he sends off the workmen with their tools to Teanum at a day's notice. 'Vitiosa libido' means a corrupt (capricious will, which is said 'facere auspici-um,' to stand in the place of birds and other omens usually consulted before new enterprises were undertaken.
87. Lectus genialis in aula est.] 'Aula means the 'atrium,' and 'lectus genialis,' also called 'adversus,' because it was opposite the door, was the marriage-bed, which was dedicated to the genius of the bride and bridegroom. If the man married a second time the bed was changed. See Prop. (iv.
11. 85):
"Seu tamen adversum mutarit janua lectum,
Sederit et nostris cauta noverca toro,
Conjugium, pueri, laudate et ferte paten-um.'"

Gellius (xvi. 9) quotes from the compitalia of Laberius:
"Nunc tu lentus es: nunc tu susque deque
fors
Materfamilias tua in lecto adverso sedet."

Virgil's line (Aen. vi. 603), "Lucent genialibus altis Aurea fulcrum toris," which is usually quoted in this place, does not refer to the marriage-bed, but to banquet in honour of the genii, such as the Romans celebrated on their birthdays and at other times. (See C. iii. 17. 14.) The bed was a symbol of domestic love and peace, and was placed where it was for a good omen.
Juvenal says (S. vi. 21): "Antiquum et vetus est—sacri genium contemnere lecti," to describe the profissig of mankind from the age of gold downwards. Lucan describes it as "gradibus acclivis eburnis" (Phars.
ii. 366). Respecting the genii, see below, Epp. i. 7. 94; ii. 2. 187.
90. Protea] See S. ii. 3. 71.
91. Quid pauper? Ride:] "Viden ut mutat,' Bentleius, ex conjectura inepta,' Faa says, and I agree with him, and so I think will any one who reads Bentley's note. The only variation in the MSS. is 'redes' for 'ride.' That appears to have been the reading of one of the Scholiasts (Comm. Cruq.), who says: 'fingit Maecenatem ridere quasi praesentem.' But very few MSS. have 'rides,' and those inferior.
— coenaculæ.] All the rooms above the ground floor were called 'coenaculæ.' So Festus says: "Coenacula dicuntur ad quae scalis ascenditur." While the rich lived in their own houses, poorer persons (and it must be remembered that 'paupertas' is comparative poverty, not want) took 'flats'
as they are called in Scotland, or single Balnea, tonsores, conducto navigio aeque
Nauseat ac locuples quem ductit priva triremis.
Si curatus inaequali tonsores capillos
Occurri, rides; si forte subucula pexae
Trita subest tunicae vel si toga dissistet impar,
Rides: quid, mea cum pugnat sententia secum,
Quod petit spernit, repetit quod nuper omisit,
Aestuat et vitae disconvenit ordine toto,
Diruit, aedificat, mutat quadrata rotundis?

rooms in the upper story of houses which went by the name of 'insulae,' the inhabitants of which were called 'coenaculari,' and who they kept them were said 'coenaculariam exercere.' In such a room Vitellius lodged with his wife and children, according to Suetonius (in vit. c. 7), and Martial lived up three pair of stairs (i. 118):
'Scalis habitus tribus sed altis.' Other distinguished literary men lived in garrets then as they have since. Suetonius tells us of Orbilius a celebrated grammarian, that he was so lodged: "namque jam persenex pauperem se et habitare sub tegulis quodam scripto fatutor" (de illust. Gram. c. 9); and Valerius Cato we learn from the same treatise (c. 11) passed the latter years of a long life in the same sort of abode. Suetonius quotes some bitter lines of Furius Bibaculus (see S. i. 10, Exc.), in which he describes Cato as one—

"Quem tres caucalicu et selibra farris, Racemi duo tegula sub una,
Ad summam prope nutriment senectam."

It seems to have been usual for annual tenants to change their lodgings on the Kalends of July. Martial describes the flitting of a poor family with all their property, which he enumerates in an amusing way.
The Epigram (xii. 32) begins—

"O Julianum dedecus Kalendarum
Vidi, Vacerra, sarcinas tuas, vidii.

(See Bek. Gall. p. 6, n. Eng. Trans.) Horace speaks of persons changing from caprice and aping the ways of the rich.
92. conducto navigio] 'Navigium' expresses the vulgar craft which the poor man bears in imitation of the private yacht,
as smartly built and well found as a 'tirene,' belonging to the rich man. He hires his boat, which he cannot afford to do, and goes through the horrors of sea-sickness, that he may have the honour of serving as a foil to the elegance of his wealthy neighbour. Orelli thinks it very probable Horace is here drawing a picture of himself, as in S. ii. 7 (where see note on v. 23), and he commends the sagacity of Cruquiou, who first suggested that notion. I see no merit in it at all.

94. Si curatus inaequali tonsores] He goes on to tax Maccenas with the prevailing inconsistency. A very few MSS., including one of Cruquiou, have 'curtus,' which that editor, Lambinus, Torribentius, and others, have edited. But 'comas' or
'capillos curare' was a common expression.
Domitian wrote a book 'de cura capillorum,' according to Suetonius (c. 18), which he addressed to a friend who was bald like himself. Orelli's strange explanation of the construction, making 'inaequis tonsore' an ablative absolute, has been mentioned on C. i. 6. 2. 'Subucula' was a second tunic worn under the 'intiumus,' which was the upper tunic. 'Pexae' signifies a cloth of which the nap was not closely shorn and was still fresh ('pexusa toga-que recenti,' Pers. S. i. 15). The upper tunic therefore would be new while the under one was old and shabby. The 'subucula' had sleeves, which the 'intiumus' had not.
Any difference therefore in the cloth would be very perceptible. Out of doors the toga would conceal both, but in-doors the toga was not worn. 'Intiumus' is from 'induo.' 'Subucula,' Varro says (Ling. Lat. v. 30), is derived from 'subitus.'
It is more likely connected with 'duo' (that is, 'do') likewise. Martial has this keen epigram (ii. 58) on one who wore fine clothes he had not paid for:

'Pexatus pulvere rides mea, Zoile, trita:
Sunt haec trita quidem, Zoile, sed mea sunt.'

'Disconvenit' is a word only found in Ho-

100. mutat quadrata rotundis?] Orelli
Insanire putas sollemnia me neque rides,
Nec medici credis nec curatoris egere
A praetore dati, rerum tutela mearum
Cum sis et prave sectum stomacheris ob unguem
De te pendentis, te respicientis amici.
Ad summam: sapiens uno minor est Jove, dives,
Liber, honoratus, pulcher, rex denique regum;
Pracipue sanus, nisi cum pituita molesta est.

says this looks like a proverbial expression for one who did not know his own mind. It may be so, or it may have reference to alterations Horace was making on his estate, in which case the whole would be only a joke against himself; or truth in jest, which Maecenas would understand. He appears to have begun building directly he entered on his new property, if there is any meaning in the scolding he gets from Damasippus (S. ii. 3. 307).

102. nec curatoris egere] See S. ii. 3. 217, n. Though in the next line no one would suppose Horace meant 'tutela' literally, as Orelli says, who is himself too literal, yet the word is suggested by the context. 'Tutela' was the guardianship of a 'tutor,' the protector of an orphan's property till he came to the age of puberty. 'Curatela' was the office of 'curator,' who had the same relation to the orphan in a modified form (see Dict. Ant. 'Curator') till he was twenty-five (see above, v. 22, n.). It was also that of the protector of insane persons. Though 'tutela' therefore is not the precise word to keep up the previous notion, it has more force here than 'praesidium,' by which Orelli explains it. Horace means that Maecenas looks after him anxiously as if he was his 'tutor,' and he looks up to him as if he was his 'pupillus,' but that his guardian had better look to his greater faults and correct those than be put out by trifling defects, such as negligence of dress, and so forth. What may have passed between Horace and his patron to give rise to this piece of raillery, which is meant to convey a satire on the world in general, especially the fashionable world, with whom then as now vices were peccadilloes and breaches of etiquette unpardonable sins, we cannot tell. He writes to Maecenas out of the familiarity of frequent intercourse, and such intimacy gives rise to ideas and language which none but the friends themselves can fully enter into. What Horace says is a repetition in a different form of "O et praesidium et dulce deecus meum" (C. i. 2).

105. respicientis] For this Heinsius conjectured and Bentley has adopted 'suspicientis,' which has no authority, and is not wanted. Caesar (B. C. i. 1) says, "Si Caesarem respicient atque ejus gratiam sequuntur ut superioribus fecerint temporibus," &c. Forcellini does not notice this use of the word. It is much stronger than our term 'respect,' which is derived from it. 106. Ad summam: This is an ordinary formula, 'to come to the point,' 'to conclude.' The pursuit of virtue and wisdom is the point from which he started, and having digressed a little he returns suddenly, and concludes with a definition of the sage, which is a repetition of S. i. 3. 124, sqq: "— dives qui sapiens est, Et sutor bonns et solus formosus et estrex.'

Here it is added that he is the only Freeman, and inferior to Jove alone; and this Acron says is only in consequence of his mortality. He is a king because he governs his passions; he is free through an indifference which it is the business of his life to cultivate; he is rich because he wants nothing; he is beautiful because virtue is beautiful; he is equal to Jove because he rises above the world, and also because he is above all human law,—a doctrine which the later Stoics held as rising naturally out of the perfection of his reason and the purity of his motives. The attempt to apply these notions to man as he is, led necessarily to practical inconsistencies involving the wildest improprieties. But the Stoics meant well, and would have effected a reign of virtue if they could have had their wishes. Horace says, with an intentional bathos, the Stoic above all his other attributes is of course 'sanus,' except when his digestion is disturbed and the phlegm troublesome; 'sanus' bearing a double application to the body (from the pains of which no exemption was claimed for the Stoic sage, though he did not allow them to affect his will) and to the mind, the sanity of which no one could lay claim to but the sage himself (see S. ii. 3. 44, n.). As to 'pituita,' see S. ii. 2. 73, n.
EPISTLE II.

Something has been said about M. Lollius, the consul, who was defeated by the Sigambri, in the Introduction to C. iv. 9, which ode was addressed to him probably on the occasion of his defeat, some time after the writing of this Epistle to his eldest son, as the person here addressed is very generally supposed to be. The eighteenth Epistle is written to the same person. There we learn that Lollius was with Augustus in the Cantabrian expedition, a.u.c. 729, and that he had a brother, to whom some suppose the eighteenth Epistle was written. It is plain that the person here addressed was young, and if he had been with the army he was now practising for the Forum. Horace addresses him as 'puer,' and speaks of his declaiming as if he were still with the rhetorical teacher, which he was no doubt; but these teachers attended young men at home after they had left school and taught them the higher principles of oratory. 'Puer' is a word that might be used familiarly towards a young man long past 'pueritas,' and, as Franke observes, it is not likely that these grave views of life would he addressed to a boy who had not yet taken the 'toga virilis.' I think there is much probability in the date Franke supposes, a.u.c. 731, which would be a year after Lollius' return from Spain while he might yet be quite young; though when Franke supports his opinion by the reference in v. 53 to gout and fomentations, he only weakens his argument (see note).

Why Lollius is called Maximus in the first verse no one has yet satisfactorily shown. That he was the elder of two brothers, supposing that to have been the case, would be a bad reason for calling him Maximus. He would rather be called Major. But this is the opinion of most editors, and of Orelli among them. That he had the cognomen Maximus is the explanation of others. But there is no trace of such a cognomen in this family: the only cognomen they are known to have borne during the republic is Palicenus, and the father of this youth does not appear to have had any. Young Lollius could not have done any thing to gain himself such a title; and on the whole I am inclined to think the word is only a familiar half jocular way of addressing his young friend that Horace uses, as in the other Epistle he addresses him as 'liberrime Lolli.' I see no other way of explaining the word, which Estré gives up as unintelligible.

Horace has been refreshing himself with the cool breezes of Praeneste, and reading Homer over again, and has been more than ever impressed, as it would seem, with the wisdom of his poems and the moral and political lessons they convey. This he makes the foundation of a letter of advice, such as a young man just starting in life might find useful. What appears to have struck him most on his last perusal of the Iliad was the reckless selfishness of the leaders and their indifference to the sufferings their petty squabbles occasioned; while the Odyssey he judges to have been written with the intention of representing a picture of patient and wise endurance in the person of Ulysses, as an example to all ages. Horace considers the value of the Homeric poems to lie in the living pictures they present to the mind; that they taught wisdom by examples. He says nothing of the poetry and the artistic character of these compositions, in which their real merit consists. As a piece of criticism therefore Horace’s remarks are worth nothing. They are akin to the allegorical interpretation of Homer which treated his works as an inexhaustible fountain of wisdom, and overlaid the critical with a fanciful view. That a sensible man might get some good lessons from the Iliad and Odyssey is saying no more than may be said of any works in which character is drawn in so many various shapes. But that the predominating impression on the mind of a man like Horace, with
ARGUMENT.

While you are declaiming at Rome, Lollius, I am reading Homer at Praeneste, a teacher above Chrysippus and Crantor themselves. For consider, in that Iliad of his how he sets before us the passions of princes and people: Antenor's sage counsel; the selfish obstinacy of Paris; Nestor mediating between angry kings, one inflamed with love and both with anger. The princes err, the people suffer. There is one scene of treasons, stratagems, crime, lust, passion, in the Grecian camp or within the walls of Troy. Then again he has given us a bright example of wisdom in Ulysses, driven over the earth and sea, gathering experience as he went, surrounded with the waves of suffering but rising above them all, and shunning the charms of the Siren and the sweet poisons of Circe. Why, we are but cyphers, born but to eat and drink, like the suitors of Penelope or the people of Alcinous, who slept and danced and drove away care with the sound of the wanton lute.

Does the robber rise at midnight to kill, and do you not wake up to guard yourself from evil? Nay then, if you will not practise running while you are well, you shall do so with the dropsy in your skin: if you rise not early, and give your mind to study and to virtue, you shall lie awake under the tortures of envy or lust. Why are you in such haste to remove a grain of dust from your eye, but defer the curing of your mind's disease? Begin and you have half done; be bold to be wise; begin. He who puts off the day of reformation is like the clown that waits till the stream runs dry.

But men are for money and ease, and for laying field to field. Let him that has enough not wish for more. Riches will not take fever from the veins or grief from the heart. Its owner should be sound in body and mind if he would enjoy what he has got; but he who is always anxious gets no more good from his riches than the blind from a picture, the gouty from a fomentation, or the deaf from the sounds of a lyre; for if the vessel is foul whatever you pour into it turns sour. Heed not pleasure; it is dearly bought with pain. The covetous never has enough, therefore set bounds to your desires.

Envy ever pines over others' success, a greater torment than ever tyrant invented. Wealth too, if it be not under control, will urge you to do that you will wish undone: it is a brief madness: it must be either servant or master: put a bit or a chain upon it. The horse is trained to his rider's will; the hound is taught to hunt; even so drink in instruction, my young friend, and give yourself up to the wise. The cask keeps its odour long. Think not however that I can wait for you if you lag behind, or keep up with you if you are too vigorous and push on before.
TROJANI belli scriptorem, maxime Lolli,
Dum tu declamas Romae Praeneste relegi;
Qui quid sit pulchrum, quid turpe, quid utile, quid non,
Planius ac melius Chrysippo et Crantore dicit.

1. maxime Lolli.] See Introduction.
2. Dum tu declamas Romae] Horace writes to Lollius as to one familiar with Homer's poems. He says of himself, referring to his early education at Rome (Epp. ii. 2. 41):

"Romae nutriri mihi contigit atque doceri Iratus Grauis quantum nocuisset Achilles."

After the Romans had begun to expand the course of their sons' education (as mentioned in the note on S. i. 6. 77) Homer was one of the first authors a boy studied. Pliny (Ep. ii. 14) has "Sic in foro pueros a centumviralibus causis auspiciari ut ab Homero in scholis;" and Quintilian approves the practice: "Optime institutum est ut ab Homero atque Virgilio lectio inciperet, quamquam ad intelligentias eorum virtutes firmiore judicio opus esset" (Inst. i. 8). Boys attended the schools of the rhetorical masters before they put on the 'toga virilis,' and there they learnt to declaim upon subjects given them from history, of which a bitter description is given by Juvenal (vii. 150, sqq.; see also x. 167):

"I, demens, et saevas curre per Alpes Ut pueris placeas et declamatio fias."

This practice was not introduced till the latter years of the republic. As late as a.u.c. 662 the censors Cu. Domitius Aenobarbus and L. Licinius Crassus issued this edict: "Renuntiatum est nobis esse homines qui novum genus disciplinae instituerunt: ad quos juventus in ludos conveniuit: eos sibi nomen imposuisse Latinos Rhetoras: ibi homines adolescentulos totos dies desidere. Majores nostri quae liberos suos discere, et quos in ludos itare vellent, instituerunt. Haec nova quae praeter consuetudinem ac morem majorum fiunt, neque placent, neque recta videntur. Quapropter et ipsis qui eos ludos habent, et ipsis qui eo venire consueverunt, videtur faciendum ut ostendamus nostram sententiam, nobis non placere" (Sueton. de Rht. c. 1), which will serve for a good instance of educational bigotry. The practice of declaiming with an instructor did not cease when boys left school. They had teachers at home. Lollius no doubt had one. (See Introduction.)

— Praeneste relegi:] Praeneste (Palestrina) was in Latium, about twenty-three miles due east of Rome, on the edge of the Apennines. It was a cool retreat, to which Horace appears sometimes to have gone in summer, even when he had a place of his own elsewhere. See C. iii. 4. 21, sqq.:

"— vester in arduos
Tollor Sabinos, seu mihi frigidum
Praeneste seu Tibur supinum
Seu liquidae placuere Baiae."

It suffered greatly from the cruelty of Sulla for sheltering the younger Marius, but afterwards recovered itself and became a place of fashionable resort for the sake of its climate, which Strabo notices (v.p. 365). Juvenal calls it "gelda Praeneste" (iii. 190), and couples it with Tibur and other places as a retreat from the disturbances of Rome, and he speaks of one Centronius, who built villas

"— modo curvo
Littore Caietana, summa nunc Tibiris arce,
Nunc Praenestinis in montibus, alta parabat
Calmina villarum, Graecis longeque petitis Marmoribus, vincens Fortunae atque Herculis aedem." (xiv. 86, sqq.)

There must therefore have been some fine houses there, for the temple of Fortune at Praeneste was a handsome building; and Sulla, by way of making up to the inhabitants for his barbarity, beautified this temple very much. He placed in it the first mosaic pavement known in Italy. Propertius (i. 32), remonstrating with Cynthia says:

"Nam quid Praenestis dubias, o Cynthia, sortes,
Quid petis Aeaci moenia Telegon?
Curve te in Herculeum deportant esseda Tibur?
Appia cur toties te via ducit anum?"

4. Chrysippo et Crantore] As to Chry-sippus the Stoic, see S. i. 3, 126, n. Both he and Crantor were born at the Cilian town Soli. Crantor studied philosophy in the Academia under Xenocrates and with Poemen. His writings, according to Diog.
Laert. (iv. 24), amounted 3t 3μηράδας στίχων τριτίς 30,000 lines. Cicero ranks him among the first of the Platonists (Tusc.
Disp. iii. 6. 12), and speaks with particular
Cur ita crediderim nisi quid te detinet audi.

Fabula qua Paridis propter narratur amorem
Graeciae Barbariae lento collisa duello
Stultorum regum et populorum continet aestus.
Antenor censet bellì prae cidere causam:
Quid Paris? Ut salvus regnet vivatque beatus
Cogi posse negat. Nestor componere lites
Inter Peliden festinat et inter Atriden;
Hunc amor, ira quidem comminiter urit utrumque.
Quidquid delirant reges plectuntur Achivi.
Seditione, dolis, sedere atque libidine et ira Iliacos intra muros peccatur et extra.
Rursus quid virtus et quid sapientia possit
Utile quidquid delirant et uritur et extra.
Dum sibi dum sociis reditum parat, aspera multa
Pertulit adversis rerum immersabilis undis.

commendation of a short treatise of his,
'de Luctu.' The earliest editions have
'planius ac melius;' and Acron, in his commentary, has 'manifestius et melius; Porphyrion 'melius et aptius,' which I take to be 'apertius.' If so, both these Scho-liasts confirm the reading 'planius.' The Blandinian MSS. had 'plenius;' so have most of the Parisian, but the oldest of all has 'planius;' and three others. The St. Gallen and Berne have the latter, and five of Fea's Vaticans; with many others quoted by Lambinus, Torrentius, Cruquius, and Bentley, who restored 'planius' after it had been banished more than a century.
I find 'plenius' in the Venetian edition of 1549. I think 'planius' suits the context better. Chrysippus is said by Diog. Laer.
(vii. 180) to have written more than 700 volumes: so that 'plenius' would be rather out of place, though Obbarius, who retains it, supposes Horace to mean that there was more instruction in Homer than in all the volumes of Chrysippus put together; but he also means it is more clearly conveyed.
(See Introduction.)

7. Barbariae] That is, Phrygia. (See Epod. ix. 6.) 'Aestus' is a metaphor from the ebbing and flowing of the tide, and represents the passions and variableness of the princes and people.

9. Antenor censet] At a meeting of the Trojan chiefs after the combat of Hector and Ajax, Antenor proposes to restore Helen to the Greeks, which Paris flatly refuses, 'αντικρυ δ' απόθεμι γνωάι μην οὐκ ἀποδόσω (II. vii. 362, sqq.).
12. Inter Peliden—inter Atriden;] See
S. i. 7. 11, n.
13. Hunc amor,] From its position this seems to belong to 'Atriden.' The allusion is to Nestor's attempt to mediate between Agamemnon and Achilles, when the former angrily consents to restore Briseis, whom he loved above Clytemnestra his wife (II. i.
113, sqq.).
19. domitor Trojan] The epithet πτολιπορθος is frequently applied to Ulysses by Homer. Cicero accounts for it in a letter to Plancus (x. 13), in which he urges him to follow up the victory of Brutus at Mutina, and to crush M. Antonius: 'Qui enim
M. Antonium oppresserit est bellum confecerit. Itaque Homerus non Ajax nec Achillem (which is an oversight) sed Ulixem appellavit πτολιπορθον.' The three first verses of the Odyssey are almost trans-lated in these lines. 'Immersabilis' is like ἀβατησος in Pindar (Pyth. ii. 80)
ἀβατησος ειμι, φιλλος ως ὑπερ ἵκος, ἀλμας. Compare C. iv. 4. 65: "Merses profundo pulchrior evenit."
Sirenum voces et Circae poca nosti;
Quae si cum sociis stultus cupidusque bibisset,
Sub domina meretrici fuisset turpis et excors,
Vixisset canis immundus vel amica luto sus.
Nos numeros sumus et fruges consumere nati,
Sponsi Penelopae, nebulones, Alcinoique
In cute curanda plus aequo operata juventus, Cui pulchrum fuit in medios dormire dies et
Ad strepitum eitharae cessatum ducere curam.
Ut jugulent homines surgunt de nocte latrones:
Ut te ipsum serve non expergisceris? Atqui
Si noles sanus curres hydropicus; et ni

23. Sirenum voces] How by the directions of Circe Ulysses eluded the charming voice of the Sirens, is related in the twelfth book of the Odyssey, 165, sqq.; and the way in which Circe poisoned his companions and changed them into swine, will be found in the tenth book, 230, sqq. The Sirens were as proverbial with the ancients as with us. Martial calls them (iii. 64),—
"Sirenas hilarem navigantium poenam,
Blandasque mortes, gaudiumque crudele,
Quas nemo quondam deserebat auditas."

27. Nos numeros sumus] This expression is not uncommon in the Greek tragceans. In Aristophanes too (Nub. 1201, sqq.) Strepsiadea breaks out thus to the audience:—
εὔ γ' ὡ κακοδαμίνες, τί κάθεσθαι ἄβλατουρον ήμπτερα κέρδω τῶν σοφῶν, ὄντες λίθοι, ἄριθμος, πρόβασιν ἀλλως, ἀμφοτής νεκρο-σμένοι;

It means a mere undistinguished heap, and
'fruges consumere nati' is an adaptation of Homer's οἱ ἀρόφρης καρπῶν ἔδουσι (II. vi.
142). 'Nos' means the common sort of men, among whom Horace places himself,
and all but the sage, who is like Ulysses,
while the rest are no better than his wife's suitors, gluttons, wine-drinkers, and lazy;
or the subjects of Alcinous, king of Phaeacia, the host of Ulysses, to whom he relates his adventures (Odyss. ix. lib. sqq.). The king describes his people thus:— αιτε δ' ὡμιν δαις τε φιλη, κῆθαρις τε, χόροι τε,
ἐμαρτά Ῥ εἶξημοιβάδα, λοετά τε θερμά, καὶ
eπνεῖ.
(Odyss. viii. 248.)

The Phaeacians were proverbial in respect to good living. See Epp. i. 15. 24: "Pin-guis ut inde domum possim Phaeaaxque re-verti." Comm. Cruq. and some editors take Alcinoi for the plural number. It is better to understand it as the genitive singular. On 'cuta curara, see S. ii. 5. 38,
n.

31. cessatum ducere curam.] 'Duco,' as a verb of motion, takes the accusative of the verbal substantive to denote the object, just as 'venio' and 'mitto' do. "The ac-cussative of the verbal in 'tu' is often called the supine active, and the ablative of the same the supine passive; but there is nothing passive in the latter, and therefore the distinction is inappropriate" (Key's
L. G. 1290, note). 'Factum' is 'in the doing,' as 'factum' is 'to the doing,' so neither is passive. The Blandinian MSS., had 'cossatam duceres annum,' which means nothing at all; but out of it Bentley has conjectured and adopted into his text "cessantem ducere sonnum." In the next line he reads 'ho-minem' for 'hominem,' the reading of all previous editions, and "Mstorum pars longe major," according to Fea.

34. Si noles sanus curres hydropicus:] The MSS.
 vary here between 'nolis' and 'noles,' 'curres' and 'cures.' The future seems to be required, since it appears in the two following instances, 'ni posse' and 'si non intendet.' On 'cures' Porphyrius says, "quia hydropici jubentur a medicis curare; ita enim morbus eorum solet extenuari laborre;" and the commentators quote Celsus' rule for the dropsical patient:
"Multum ambulandum, curandum ali-quando est" (iii. 21). 'Cures' appears in Ven. 1483, and nearly all the oldest ed-tions, with most of the Parisian MSS., and several of the Roman. I think 'curres' Posces ante diem librum cum lumine, si non Intendes animum studiis et rebus honestis, Invidia vel amore vigil torquere. Nam cur
Quae laedunt oculos festinas demere, si quid
Est animum differs curandi tempus in annum?
Dimidium facti qui coepit habet; sapere aude;
Incipe. Qui recte vivendi prorogat horam
Rusticus exspectat dum defluat annis; at ille
Labbit ur et labetur in omne volubilis aevum.
Quaeritur argentum puerisque beata creandis
Uxor, et incultae pacantur vomere silvae:
Quod satis est cui contingit nihil amplius optet.
Non domus et fundus, non aeris acervus et auri
Aegroto domini deduxit corpore febres,
Non animo curas. Valeat possessor oportet
Si comportatis rebus bene cogitaret uti.
Qui cupit aut metuit juvat illum sic domus et res
Ut lippum pictae tabulae, fomenta podagram, Auriculas citharae collecta sorde dolentes.

is the word. 'Cures' arose perhaps partly out of 'curandi' in v. 39.
38. Quae laedunt oculos] Some MSS.
and most modern editions since Bentley have 'oculum.' Orelli prefers that reading, but the plural has the most authority.
39. in annum?] So he says below (Epp.
11. 23), "Neu dulcia differ in annum." It is the habit of procrastinators to put off
the work of to-day till to-morrow, of this week still till next, of this year till next year;
and this is Horace's meaning. 'In annum'
is till next year. 'Dimidium facti qui coe-pit habet' is an adaptation of the Greek saying δρύχι εἰ τοιούτου πανταγό, attributed variously to Hesiod and Pythagoras.
44. Quaeritur argentum] This is advanced as a reason why men put off the day of reformation, that they are anxious to make themselves comfortable and rich.
46. Quod satis est cui contingit] Horace may or may not have remembered Lucilius' lines:—
"Nam si quod satis est homini sat esse
potessi,
Hoc sat erit: nunc cum hoc non est, qui credimus potro
Divitias uillas animum mi explorare potesse?"
47. Non domus et fundus,] See S. ii.
5. 108, n. 'Deduxit' in the next line is used like the aorist. Some MSS. have the present tense.
52. fomenta podagram,] As to 'fomenta' in a derived sense, see Epod. xi. 17,
n. Comm. Cruq., on Epp. 15. 3, says that Augustus was cured of the gout by An-tonius Musa through cold water bathing, hot applications having been previously tried by another physician without effect.
Suetonius (vit. c. 81) speaks of this Musa having recovered Augustus by 'frigida fomenta' from an illness he contracted after the Cantabrian expedition, and Pliny twice refers to the circumstance (xxv. 7; xxix. 1).
Franke supposes Horace to allude to the unsuccessful hot fomentations which he concludes must have been generally used before,
but went out of fashion ever afterwards;
and hence he derives a very precarious support for his argument that A.U.C. 731 is the date of this Epistle. However all this may be, Horace means to say fomentations go a small way towards curing the gout. Perhaps he means they aggravate the pain.
Whether such is the fact I do not know.
A good deal has been said about Horace's meaning, but I see no particular difficulty.
Bentley chooses to read 'podagram,' as from
'podager,' a word used by Ennius (see Epp.
19. 7, n.). He has scarcely any support but Sanadon's, which is not worth much.
Sicerum est nisi vas quodcumque infundis acescit.
Sperne voluptates, nocet empa dolore voluptas.
Semper avarus eget: certum voto pete finem,
Invidus alterius macrescit rebus opinis;
Invidia Siculi non invenere tyranni
Majus tormentum. Qui non moderabitur irae Infestum volet esse dolor quod suaserit et mens,
Dum poenas odio per vim festinat inulto.
Ira furor brevis est: animum rege, qui nisi paret
Imperat; hunc frenis, hunc tu compesce catena.
Fingit equum tenera docilem cervice magister
Ire viam qua monstrat equus; venaticus, ex quo
Tempore cervinam pellem latravit in aula, Militat in silvis catulus. Nunc adibite puro Pectore verba, puer, nunc te melioribus offer.
Quo semel est imbuta recens servavit odorem
Testa diu. Quodsi cessas aut strenus anteis, Nec tardum opprior nec praecependibus insto.

55. Sperne voluptates.] This is part of the same subject. The pursuit of sensual pleasure is connected with the pursuit of money, which is wanted for it. The pursuit of money leads on to envy, and envy to wrath, so that all these pithy sayings hang together.

56. Invidia Siculi] Horace probably alludes to the bull of Phalaris, which, according to Cicero, P. Scipio recovered from Carthage and restored to the Agrigentini: "ille nobilis taurus quem crudelissimus omnium tyrannorum Phalaris habuisse dicitur, quo vivos supllici causa demittere homines et subjicere flamman solebat" (in Verr. ii. 4. 33. See also De Off. ii. 26). But the tyrants of Sicily were proverbial.

60. et mens,] 'Mens' signifies passion, μυστήριος. 'Exmens' (formed like 'exespis', 'excors,' and other words) is suggested by H. Stephens (Diatr. p. 118), and 'amens' is put forward by Muretus, who said he found it in one of the Vatican MSS. which Pea does not notice.

61. poenas — festinat] 'Hurries after its revenge.' So Horace uses 'properare' in C. iii. 24. 62, 'pecuniam Heredi properet;' and in the next Epistle (v. 28), 'Hoc studium parvi propereramus et amplius;' It is like the Greek σπειδεῖν, which takes an accusative.

63. hunc tu compesce] In general pre-
In A.U.C. 734 an embassy came from Armenia to Rome, expressing the dissatisfaction of the people with their king Artaxias, and praying that Augustus would place upon the throne that king's younger brother Tigranes, who was then living in exile at Rome. Augustus assented, and sent Tiberius with Tigranes to dethrone Artaxias. This Tiberius did, and with his own hand crowned Tigranes. Suetonius (vit. Tib. c. 14) speaks of him as leading his army through Macedonia into Syria, which partly corresponds with Horace's inquiries; but as to Syria there must be a mistake; it would be entirely out of the way. This summary proceeding was made the most of at Rome, though there appears to have been little resistance. There was a medal struck on the occasion, with the inscription "Armenia capta." Horace speaks below (Ep. 12. 26) of the Armenian having fallen by the valour of Tiberius; and Velleius, the court gazetteer, says Armenia was on that occasion reduced to the power of the Romans. It had been so virtually since the submission of Tigranes' grandfather to Cn. Pompeius.

About his person Tiberius appears to have had a number of young men, such as Titius, Celsus, and Munatius, mentioned in this Epistle, and Julius Florus, to whom it is addressed. What little can be said about the three first will be found in the notes. Of Florus Porphyrian says, "Fuit satirarum scriptor cujus sunt electae ex Ennio, Lucilio, Varrone." From this Epistle (v. 23) we infer that he was practising to become an orator or a jurisconsultus, and that he wrote verses of the softer sort; and in the second Epistle of the second book (v. 59) we have the same information.

"Carmine tu gaude, hic delectatur iambis; Ille Bioneis sermonibus et sale nigro."

He may have written Satires, but it would seem from the last quotation that he had not written any when Horace sent him that Epistle. If the Scholiast is to be trusted (and it is not likely he invented what he says), Florus published a selection from the old writers mentioned by Porphyrian. Quintilian (Inst. Orat. x. 3) tells an anecdote of one Julius Florus, who was uncle to an intimate friend of his, Julius Secundus, and whom he calls "in eloquentia Galliarum (quoniam iibi demum exercuit eam) princeps." This may be the person Horace addresses, and if so he carried out successfully the pursuit of which Horace here supposes him to be beginning the practice. He is also supposed by Weichert to be the person mentioned by Tacitus (Ann. iii. 40, 42) as the leader of an insurrection of the Treviri, which is very improbable. How he got the gentilician name Julius is uncertain. The cognomen Florus belonged to the Aquillia gens; and there was a L Aquillius Florus, one of the 'triumviri monetales' at this time, several of whose coins are extant. Some of them are given in the Dict. Biog. It is supposed he received the 'civitas' from Julius Caesar and took his name. But we know nothing about this. Horace had a great regard for him, as appears not only from this but the other Epistle, in which he makes his excuses to him for not having sent him any poetry.

Florus was evidently a young man at this time, and all the persons named were young. One of them (Celsus) was secretary to Tiberius. Whether the others had any definite occupation, or were merely travelling to enlarge their experience and see the world, is not stated. Horace assumes that they are not wasting their time, but pursuing their studies and practising their pens. He inquires after his young friends in a way that shows his interest in them, offers them such advice and encouragement as he thinks they need, and especially begs Florus to be reconciled to Munatius, with whom he had for some reason quarrelled. This was probably Horace's chief design in writing this Epistle.
Juli Flore, quibus terrarum militet oris
Claudius Augusti privignus seire laboro.
Thracane vos Hebrusque nivali compede vincus,
An freta vicinas inter currentia turres,
An pingues Asiae campi collesque morantur?
Quid studiosa cohors operum struit? Hoc quoque euro.
Quis sibi res gestas Augusti scribere sumit?
Bella quis et paces longum diffundit in aeum?
Quid Titius Romana brevi venturus in ora?

3. Thracane vos Hebrusque] The first of these is the Latin form of the Greek Ὠρατίων. It has been observed before that Horace generally uses the Latin terminations in the Satires and Epistles, and the Greek in the Odes. The Hebrus he elsewhere calls “himē sodalem” (C. i. 25. 19).

4. vicinas inter currentia turres.] The Scholiast Porphyrius says these were the towers or castles of Hero and Leander, at Sestos and Abydos. The former stood on the European shore of the Hellespont, and its modern name is Akbachi. The strait takes a bend to the north-east between the two towns, and Abydos stood directly south of Sestos, at the distance of thirty stadia. There is a village named Avido, which is supposed to stand on the site of Abydos, though others identify the site of the village of Nagara with that of Abydos (see Creuzer's note on Herod. v. 117). The story of Leander swimming by night repeatedly, till he lost his life in a storm, from Abydos to visit Hero the priestess of Venus at Sestos, is well known from Ovid’s two Epistles (Heroid. i. 18, 19) and Virgil (Georg. i. 258, sqq.). The same adventure was accomplished by Lord Byron and a companion in the year 1810, in the month of May. They swam from the European shore to the Asiatic, “entering a considerable way above the European, and landing below the Asiatic fort.” “The rapidity of the current is such that no boat can row directly across.” They swam the distance, one in an hour and five minutes, and the other in an hour and ten minutes, and calculated that they had swum upwards of four English miles, “though the actual breadth is barely one.” “The water was extremely cold, from the melting of the mountain snows.” According to this account, which I have given in Lord Byron's words, there are still two forts on the opposite shores of the Hellespont in the narrowest part, which is only seven stadia wide (Herod. vii. 34). But the European fort cannot occupy the site of Sestos, which was higher up. It is probably on the spot to which Xerxes' bridge was thrown over from Abydos, which Herodotus calls αὐτῆς τραχία ἦ εἰς θάλασσαν κατέβαλα, lying between Sestos and Madytus (Maito). It is not improbable that there was a fortified town there, or a castle in former times, and that Horace alludes to it in this place. The strength of the current above described is referred to in 'currentia.' For 'turres' the oldest Blandinian MS. had 'terras,' which Bentley, "semper novitatis auidus," has adopted, saying, that though we hear in different poets of the tower of Hero at Sestos, we hear nothing of a tower at Abydos, the plain reason of course being that it was necessary to the story that the priestess should have a tower or some high place from which to show the signal-light to her lover. Abydos was a fortified place, and stood more than one siege, and 'turris' does not necessarily mean a tower. It may mean a fortified place or a castle.

5. Quid studiosa cohors operum] As to 'cohors,' see S. i. 7. 23, n. 'Operum' belongs to 'quid,' and signifies 'writings,' either prose or poetry.

7. scribere sumit?] Compare C. i. 12. 2, "sumis celebrare." 'Sumere' is sometimes used in a bad sense, as we use 'assume,' 'presume,' but it is not so here. It is the word Horace generally uses in this connexion. See A. P. 38: "Sumite materiaem vestris qui scribitis aquam Viribus." With 'diffundit in aeum,' compare C. iv. 14, init.: "Quae cura patrum—Auguste, virtutes in aeum—Aeternet."

9. Quid Titius Romana] Of Titius the Scholiasts say that he was a tragic and lyric poet. Acron says that Horace is ridiculing him for imitating Pindar, and that his poetry was worth nothing: "libri ejus nullius momenti erant." Porphyrius, on the other hand, says he was a person of great Pindarici fontis qui non expalluit haustus,
Fastidire lacus et rivos ausus apertos.
Ut valet? ut meminit nostri? Fidibusne Latinis Thebanos aptare modos studet auspice Musa,
An tragica desaevit et ampullatur in arte?
Quid mihi Celsus agit? monitus multumque monendus
Privatas ut quacerat opes, et tangere vitet
Scripta Palatinus quaequeque receptit Apollo,
Ne si forte suas repetitum venerit olim
Grex avium plumas moveat cornicula risum Furtivis nudata coloribus. Ipse quid audes?

learning, and Comm. Crqu. calls him Titius Septimius, and that he had "insigne monumentum infra Aricam." From the last of these notices he has been supposed to be the same as Septimius, to whom C. ii. 6 is depicted, and whom Horace commends to Tiberius in the ninth Epistle of this book.
Weichert (Poet. Lat. Rel. de Titio Septimio) entertains this opinion, but the Titia and Septimia were Roman gentes, and though those who belonged to Italian families might have two gentilician names, those who belonged to Roman could not at this time, though in later times they might.
Besides, this person appears to have been younger than Septimius. There are several persons of this family whom we hear of in the history of the time, among others one who held a high command at the battle of Actium, and was made consul subsequent that year. But there is no one upon record with whom the person in the text can be identified, though some suppose he may be the person Tibullus mentions (i. 4. 73), "Haec nihii quae canerem Titio Deus edidit ore."

9. centurum in ora?] This was proba-ably a conventional expression, and may have taken its rise from Ennius' "volto vivu' per ora virum," which Virgil has imi-titated once or twice. 'Lacus' and 'rivos apertos' are opposed to the deep and hidden springs of Pindar's genius, for which Horace had the greatest reverence (see C.
iv. 2, Introduction). 'Expalluit' is used as in C. iii. 27. 27, "mediasque fraudes Paluit audax."

14. An tragica desaevit et ampullatur]
The first of these verbs refers to the passions represented in tragedy, the other to the pompous words employed by inferior writers to express them. 'Ampulla' signifies a sort of bottle with a big round belly, and corresponds to the Greek λυκνος,
which was used to signify great swelling words. Horace appears to have been the first to substitute the Latin words 'ampullari' and 'ampulla' (the first of which he probably coined) for λυκνθιειν and λυκνθος.
See A. P. 97, "Projicit ampullas et sesquipedalia verba." Porphyrius says Horace took the idea from Callimachus, and he uses the term Μδπιναν ληκνθικαν (Fr. 319, Bl.).
I do not think Orelli is right in making the point of Aeschylus' taunt against Euripides (Arist. Ran. 1208) fitting the words ληkνθικαν απωλειαν to every other verse he composes, to turn upon the above proverbial use of the word. He is speaking of his rhythm, particularly in respect to the use of trisyllabic feet. In the other sense it would be absurd to make Aeschylus censure any one as a ληκνθιστις.

15. Quid mihi Celsus agit?] 'Quid agis' is the common formula for 'how d'ye do?' See S. i. 9, 4, "Quid agis, dulcisimine rerum?" and Epp. i. 8, 3, "Si quaseret quid agam." Celsus is most probably Celsus Albinovanus, to whom the eighth Epistle is addressed. We know nothing of him except that he was one of Tiberius'
staff and his secretary ("comiti scribaveque Neronis," 8. 2). There was one Pedro Albi-novanus, to whom Ovid wrote one of his Epistles from Pontus (iv. 10), but it was not the same man. The advice Horace here sends him is to write something original, and not confine himself to the ideas of other authors, either in the way of translation or imitation. It has been mentioned before (C. i. 31, Introduction) that August-us attached a library to the temple he built for Apollo on the Mons Palatinus. Aesop's fable of the jackdaw, who dressed himself in the peacock's cast-off feathers, is told by Phaedrus (i. 3). Αιαωπιοσ κολοφοσ was a proverb.
Quae circumvolitas agilis thyma? Non tibi parvum Ingenium, non incultum est et turpiter hirtum.
Seu linguam causis acuis seu civica jura
Respondere paras seu condis amabile carmen,
Prima feres hederae victricis praemia. Quodsi
Frigida curarum fomenta relinquere posses
Quo te caelestis sapientia duceret ires.
Hoc opus, hoc studium parvi properemus et ampli
Si patriae volumus, si nobis vivere cari.
Debes hoc etiam rescribere, si tibi curae
Quantae conveniit Munatius; an male sarta
Gratia nequiquam coit et rescinditur. At vos
Seu calidus sanguis seu rerum inscitia vexit
Indomita cervice feros, ubicunque locorum
Vivitis, indigni fraternum rumpere foedus,
Pascitur in vestrum reditum votiva juvenca.

21. Quae circumvolitas] This similitude of a bee gathering honey from thyme Horace applies to himself (C. iv. 2. 27, sqq., where see note). As to 'orator' and 'respondere,' see S. i. 1.9, n., and on 'hederae praemia,' see C. i. 1. 29.

23. seu civica jura Respondere] This is a singular expression for the usual 'jus respondere,' or 'de jure respondere.' Pliny has "jus civile respondere" (Epp. 6. 15).

26. Frigida curarum fomenta] It is not easy to decide upon the meaning of 'fomenta' here. Some suppose it signifies those selfish objects, such as honour, riches, &c., which seem to foster ('fovere') care, and which make the heart cold and the feelings dull. Others apply it to similar objects; but as the remedies by which care is sought to be alleviated are "fomenta vuinus nil malum levantia" (Epod. xi. 17), I incline to the latter myself. (See note on the above Epode). They are still 'frigida,' in the sense above given.

28. parvi properemus et ampli] As to 'properemus,' see Epp. 2. 61, n., and with the sentiment compare Epp. 1. 25, "Acque pauperibus prodest, locupletibus aequae."

30. si tibi curae] Most of the MSS. have 'sit,' but 'st' is better, and has sufficient authority. 'Si' and 'sit' are confused in the MSS. See Epod. i. 5, n. Horace says, 'You must write me back word whether you make as much of Munatius as he deserves, or whether your mutual regard (which had been interrupted), like a wound ill sewn, refuses to unite and is torn open again.' Munatius has been mentioned before (C. i. 7, Introduction) as the son of Munatius Plancus, the consul of A.U.C. 712. We know nothing more about him except that he was consul in A.U.C. 766, and that he was afterwards sent as one of the commissioners from the senate to the mutinous German legions (Tac. Ann. i. 39). It appears he and Florus had quarrelled; we are not told what it was about; but Horace attributes it to youthful heat and ignorance of the world. He likens them to unbroken horses, and in terms more affectation than grammatical tells them that they ought to make it up, and that when they come home they will find the fattcd calf ready for sacrifice. Compare C. i. 36, written on the return of Numida. It is impossible to put the different parts of the sentence together so as to make the construction regular and natural, but the sense is clear enough. Horace frequently uses 'dignus' with the infinitive. See C. iii. 21. 6, n. 'Indignus' he uses in the same way here and in A. P. 231, but in the usual prose construction with 'qui' and the subjunctive in S. ii. 3. 236. From 'fraternum foedus' Comm. Cruq. makes them brothers. Horace only means that they were or had been and ought to be 'paene gemelli Fratres animis,' as he says below, Epp. 10. 3.
EPISTLE IV.

Something has been said about Albius Tibullus, the poet, in the Introduction to C. i. 33, which is addressed to him, as this Epistle is. Horace writes to him (probably from Rome) at his place near Pedum, a town of Latium, not far from Praeneste, which Porphyrian writes did not exist in his day, and the site of which is supposed to be occupied by the modern town Zagarola. There Tibullus had a good estate, inherited from his father, which before his death he appears by some means to have diminished (see S. i. 4. 28, n.). That it was not by his own extravagance, and that his losses must have occurred after this Epistle was written, we may perhaps infer from v. 7. He alludes to them in the first of his elegies (v. 19, sqq.):

"Vos quoque, felicis quondam nunc pauperis agri Custodes, fertis munera vestra, Lares;"

and in Lib. iv. 1, 181, sqq. there are some bitter lines on the same subject. But that these were written by Tibullus is not probable; and if not, the language of the elegy above quoted is not enough to prove that the diminution of the property took place after it came into his possession. He might call his estate 'pauperem agrum' by comparison, and he might still by Horace's standard be rich. He says in v. 41:

"Non ego divitis patrum, fructusque requiro Quos tuit antiquo condita messis avo."

He may therefore be supposed to contrast his estate with what it was in the times before he came to it, rather than with its earlier condition under himself. Nevertheless there are some who suppose that Horace wrote this Epistle to console Tibullus, and to chide him for being melancholy, referring to v. 12, which, as Orelli says, contains nothing more than a general description of human life. The description Horace gives of Tibullus' person is confirmed by an old biography, which calls him "eques Romanus insignis forma cultuque corporis observabilis." He lived chiefly on his estate in the quiet pursuits Horace here supposes him to be engaged in; but in a. u. c. 723, immediately after the battle of Actium, he accompanied Messalla into Gaul and was absent about a year, which as far as we know comprised all his active life, though Dissen has endeavoured to show that for ten years, from a. u. c. 712 to 722, he served in the army. Horace among other blessings assigns him good health; nevertheless he died young. It appears that while many disparaged Horace's writings Tibullus judged them kindly, and the affection the two poets bore one another cannot be mistaken. Tibullus was probably ten or twelve years younger than Horace. Various attempts have been made to give a date to the Epistle, but none are satisfactory to my mind. Tibullus died the same year with Virgil (a. u. c. 734), or very soon after. Ovid seems to imply that he first came into notice when Augustus was made emperor, a. u. c. 727 (Trist. ii. 463, sq.), "legiturque Tibullus Et placet et jam te principe notus erat." And so the Epistle is placed between these two dates. Any thing nearer cannot be arrived at, and this is uncertain.
Horatii et scripsit Horace sermones. Hie, nostrorum sermonum candide judex;
Quid nunc te dicam facere in regione Pedana?
Scribere quod Cassi Parmensis opuscula vincat,
An tacitum silvas inter reptare salubres,
Curantem quidquid dignum sapiente bonoque est?
Non tu corpus eras sine pectore. Di tibi formam,

1. sermonum] It is a matter of discussion whether these ‘sermones’ were the Epistles or Satires, or both. The Satires must have been published some time, and some of the Epistles may have been written and made known to Horace's intimate friends. I think there can be no doubt the word ‘sermones’ applies (whether Horace published them with that title or not) to the Epistles as well as the Satires, and whatever Tibullus had seen he approved, which is all we can gather from the text. Acron writes “Albius ille criticus fuit et scriptor philosophiae.” By ‘criticus’ he probably meant ‘grammaticus’ (see Epp. i. 19. 40, n.); but he is plainly wrong.

2. regione Pedana?] See Introduction.

3. Cassi Parmensis opuscula] Parma (Parma) was a town belonging to the Boii, at the edge of the Macri Campi, in Cisalpine Gaul, on a river of the same name which runs into the Po about twelve miles north of the town. The Via Aemilia passed through Parma. Cassius of Parma has been referred to before on S. i. 10. 61, where it was stated that the Scholiasts had confounded him with the bad poet of Etruria there mentioned. That person is entirely unknown. Cassius of Parma was one of the murderers of Julius Caesar, and a ‘tribunus militum’ in the army of Brutus and Cassius. He was therefore in all probability well known to Horace. After following the fortunes of Sex. Pompeius he joined M. Antonius, on whose side he fought at the battle of Actium. After that battle he retired to Athens, and there he was put to death by order of Augustus. Acron, after stating most of the above particulars, which are confirmed by the historians, says, “Qu. Varus (or Varius, as it is in the commentary of Porphyrius; Comm. Cruc. has Varus) ab Augusto missus ut eum interfercerat, scriptorem repetit: et perempto eo serinium cum libris tulit. Unde multe crediderunt Thyestem Cassii Parmensis fuisse: scripserat enim multas alias tragoidias.” It has been supposed that L. Varius, Horace's friend, the dramatic and epic poet, who wrote a tragedy called Thyestes, is meant by the Qu. Varus of the Scholiasts, and that they mean to affirm that he stole it from Cassius. (See C. i. 6. 8, and S. i. 5. 40.) But Estrè suggests that Qu. Altius Varus, to whom the sixth Eclogue of Virgil is addressed, and who was a poet, was the executioner of Cassius referred to by the Scholiasts. A very elaborate treatise has been written (by Weichert) respecting the two Cassii, in which, besides establishing the distinction between them, he produces a few fragments which are supposed to belong to Cassius of Parma; and he attributes to him the epigram on Augustus, beginning “Quin primum istorum conduxit mensa choragum,” quoted by Suetonius in his life (c. 70). What the ‘opuscula’ Horace refers to may have been we do not know, but it is clear that he thought well of them. Acron's note on this person begins, “Hic aliquot generibus stylum exercuit: inter quae opera elegiaca et epigrammata ejus laudantur.” What confidence is to be placed in this assertion, part of which at least might easily be got from the text, we cannot tell. Obbarius thinks Horace gave a strong proof of his friendship for his old companion in arms by praising one who had died under the displeasure of Augustus. But those quarrels had long been forgotten.

4. silvas inter reptare salubres,] ‘Repto’ (frequentative of repo), which contains the same root as ἑπιφανες, signifies to saunter, or go about quietly; and Lucretius applies it to flocks of sheep grazing on downs (i. 317):

“Nam sape in colli tendentes pabula lactae
Lanigerae reptant pecudes, quo quanquam vocantes Invitant herbae.”

The woods are called ‘salubres’ because their shade protects from the heat of the sun, as Cicero says (Cat. M. c. 16): “Ubi enim potest illa aetas (senectus) aut calescere vel apricatione melius vel igni, aut viessim umbris aequise refrigerari salubrius?”

6. Non tu corpus eras sine pectore.] ‘Sine pectore’ is used twice by Ovid (Met. xiii. 290), “rudis et sine pectore miles.” Heroid. xvi. 305:
Di tibi divitias dederunt artemque fruendi.
Quid voceat dulci nutricula majus alumnus,
Qui sapere et fari possit quae sentiant, et cui
Gratia, fama, valetudo contingat abunde,
Et mundus victus non deficiente crumena?
Inter spem curamque, timores inter et iras,
Omnem crede diem tibi diluxisse supremum:
Grata superveniet quae non sperabitur hora.
Me pinguem et ntidum bene curata cute vises
Cum ridere voles Epicuri de grege porcum.

“Huncine tu spere hominem sine pectore dotes
Posse satis formae, Tyndari, nosse tuae?”

It means ‘intellect,’ of which the ancients held the heart to be the seat. See Quintilian (x. 7. 15): “Pectus est quod disertos facit et vis mentis.” There is a difficulty in ‘eras’ which the commentators get rid of too easily, though they have different ways of explaining it. Both says it is used by enallage for ‘es,’ like ἕνοι for ἕστι, which Obbários says truly is a piece of gramarians’ nonsense which no one now believes; but he does not help us much by saying that it refers to the time which was present to the poet’s mind, since he does not tell us what that time was. Orelli says it means “you always were since I first knew you,” which is a new sense for the imperfect. Others take it for “you were before you went into the country;” that is,
“when I last saw you,” which implies a doubt whether he was so at the time of writing. Others (Gesner and Doering) suppose it to mean ‘you were born so;’ this would be like the Greek ἑφυς. Terence uses ‘tune eras?’ for ‘is it you?’ I cannot say I am able to explain the idiom.
The imperfect is used irregularly in C. i.
27. 10, and 31. 4, where see the notes.

7. dederunt] Some MSS. and nearly all the old editions have ‘dederant.’ Most MSS. have the perfect, the penult of which is frequently shortened. Wherever it is so the MSS. vary, Wagner says (on Georg. iv.
393).

8. nutricula] These nursery prayers are often mentioned. Persius makes a nurse exclaim (ii. 37):

“Hunc optem generum rex et regina;
puellae
Hunc rapiant; quicquid calcaverit hic, rosa fiat.”

And in Juvenal (x. 289) the anxious mother

“Formam optat modico puerus, majore puellis
Murmure, cum fanum Veneris videt.”

11. mundus] This is explained by S. ii.
2. 65: “Mundus erit qui non offendat sordibus.” A good many MSS. have ‘et modus et victus,’ out of which Bentley has get by conjecture ‘et domus et victus.’ ‘Mundus’ is the reading of all the old and nearly all the modern editions.

13. diluxisse] Some MSS. and old editions have ‘deluxisse,’ which would mean the reverse of ‘diluxisse,’ and Rutgersius defends it in that sense. I am surprised Porcellini should notice the archaic reading ‘tibid illuxisse,’ which is only a conjecture of Muretus.

15. Me pinguem et ntidum] This corresponds to Suetonius’ description of Ho-race’s person, “Habitu corporis brevis fuit atque obesus.” On ‘bene curata cute’ see S. ii. 5. 38. Horace indulges his friend with a joke at his own expense and Epicurus’. He was getting sleek and in good keeping. We need not trouble ourselves about his philosophical opinions here. He is not referring to them.
As to Torquatus, the person whom Horace in this Epistle invites to dine with him, see C. iv. 7, Introduction. The occasion was the evening before Caesar's birth-day (v. 9), which Porphyrius says means C. Julius Caesar. His birth-day was on the 12th July and this dinner was given in the summer (v. 11). But the name Caesar put absolutely could only apply to Augustus at this time, and Comm. Cruq. differs from the other Scholiast, and says rightly it must have been the birth-day of Augustus, which was the 23d of September. The expression 'aestiva' does not accurately correspond to that time, for autumn began the day before the Ides of September. But that is not very important. The heat is never so oppressive as in September in a warm climate. Franke goes farther, and because Dion Cassius says (54. 8) that in a.u.c. 734 this anniversary was kept with especial festivities, he thinks it must have been written that year; in which argument he supports himself by the age of the wine, which was drawn off in the second consulship of T. Statilius Taurus, a.u.c. 728. It is clear that from these data not much can be derived. The wine certainly was none of the best, and perhaps would not keep long. It may have been only six years old therefore; but it may have been less, and as Augustus' birth-day was kept every year and especially observed no doubt by his friends, and nothing is said about unusual festivities here, there is nothing in this to fix the date in a.u.c. 734; but if any thing the reverse, since the mention of the day might perhaps have led to something more if it had been a special occasion. Besides, the dinner was not given on the birth-day, but the night before, and the holiday is referred to because the man of business would have nothing to do next day, and might lie in bed late and therefore sit up late. The Epistle contains a good-tempered invitation to dinner, nothing more. It is the fashion with a good many of the commentators to find out the characters of Horace's friends from his Odes and Epistles, and in various parts of this they see allusions to the pride and avarice and parsimonious tendency of Torquatus, as well as his fondness for good living, just as from the last it is discovered that Tibullus was of a morose and melancholy turn of mind, and given to brooding over his misfortunes. This is mere trifling.

Sr potes Arachiacis conviva recumbere lectis
Nec modica coenare times olus omne patella,

1. Si potes Arachiacis] The Scholiasts all say these were short couches called after the name of their maker, whom Porphyrius calls 'Archias,' Acron and Comm. Cruq. 'Archaicus;' from which Laminus first, and others after him, suppose that the word is from the Greek ἀρχαίος, to which it is answer enough that the second syllable of that word is long. The great majority of MSS., and the best now existing, have 'Archaicus;' and though many of the old editions have 'Archaicus,' it is as from the name of the maker, not from the Greek. Landinus (1483), for instance, has 'Archaicus,' and explains it 'villoribus et ple-

2. olus omne] The fare Horace offers would not be very inviting to a modern diner-out; but he seems to have lived chiefly on the produce of the garden himself, and 'olus omne' may have been a sort of salad or other dish compounded of different vegetables. The dinner is fixed at a rather late hour for the time of year, to give Torquatus time to finish his business. (See S. ii. 7, 33, n.) 'Patella' is the diminutive of 'patina,' as 'catillus' of 'catinum' (S. i. 3. 90).
Supremo te sole domi, Torquate, manebo.
Vina bipes iterum Tauro diffusa palustris
Inter Minturnas Sinuessanumque Petrinum.
Si melius quid habes arcesss vel imperium fer.
Jamdudum splendor focus et tibi munda supellex.
Mitte leves spes et certamina divitiarum
Et Moschi causam: cras nato Caesare festus

4. Vina bipes iterum Tauro diffusa]
See Introduction, and C. iii. 8. 12, n.; and as to ‘diffusa’ see C. iv. 5. 34, n., and S. ii. 2. 58. A smaller number of MSS. than usual have ‘defusa.’ The two words are commonly confounded, like all other compounds of ‘di’ and ‘de.’ As to Minturnae and Sinuessa see S. i. 5. 40, n. Petrinus was a hill overhanging Sinuessa, according to Comm. Crug., or a tract of land in its neighbourhood. The overflowings of the Garigliano (Liris), on which Minturnae stood, still render the surrounding country damp, and it is very thinly inhabited. “The plain itself is highly cultivated, yet not a house can be seen. The labourers retire before night from the exhalations of the low grounds to towns built on the skirts of the Apennines” (Forstyth’s Italy, p. 263). These marshes are famous for the adventure of Marius, who concealed himself in them. The Falernus ager and Mons Massicus, with their celebrated vineyards, were in the neighbourhood of Sinuessa, and Martial speaks of Massic wine made at that town (xiii. 111):

“De Sinuessanis venerunt Massica prelis: Condita quo quaseris consule? Nullus erat.”

It does not appear that Horace’s wine was of the best, and every body knows how two vineyards close to one another may produce wines of very different quality.

6. arcesss vel imperium fer.] “Fetch it or else put yourself under my ‘imperium,’” as if he as master had the ‘imperium’ at his own table. Martial (xii. 48. 15) has something like this:

“Convivas alios coenarum quae magister,
Quos capiant mensae regna superba tuae.”

For the full meaning of ‘imperium’ see Dict. Ant. ‘Arcesso’ is compounded of ‘ar’ (which is equivalent to ‘ad’) and ‘cesso,’ which involves the same root (‘ci-’) as ‘cie.’ Many MSS. and editions read ‘arcesss,’ which Wagner on Aen. v. 746, says is a form belonging to the age ‘catentis latinitatis.’ It is more likely a corruption of the MSS. Fea quotes in support of ‘arcesso,’ from the Calendar of Verrius Flaccus, a grammarian of Horace’s time, found at Prænesta, a.d. 1773: “Quod Mater Magna ex Libris Sibullinis Arcessita locum mutavit ex Phrygia Roman.” See Forcellini and Key’s L. G. 547, note on 753 on the suffix ‘ess,’ and 1312 on ‘ar,’ which he says is rarely if ever used, except in composition. An exception noticed by Professor Key is found in Plantus (Truc. ii. 2. 18): “An eo bella ea tu quam clepsisti? Ar me advenias.” See also Long’s notes on Cicero, Cat. M. c. 10, and in Verr. Act i. c. 9.

7. Jamdudum splendet focus.] See Epod. ii. 43, n. As it was summer he does not mean that the fire was lit, but that the ‘focus,’ by which he means probably that which stood in the Atrium, near the images of the Lares, and which was probably of bronze, had been burnished and made gay for the occasion. Different specimens of braziers have been found at Pompeii, all moveable, and varying in size and shape, some of them combining a hot-water apparatus with a charcoal trough. ‘Supellex’ legally included all household furniture but such as was of gold or silver, gilded or plated; that is, it included tables of all sorts, chairs, benches, couches (even when they were ornamented with silver) with their drapery, footstools, napkins, candleabra, lamps, and all sorts of vessels of earthenware, glass, bronze, whether for eating or drinking. (Dig. 33, tit. 10, quoted by Forcell., where one or two exceptions in respect to plated things are mentioned.) Wearing apparel was not included, and perhaps ivory ornaments. Cicero (Agrar. ii. 15) speaks of “multa in mancipis, in pecore, auro, argento, ebore, veste, supellex.”

9. Et Moschi causam: If we can trust the Scholiasts, Moschus was a famous rhetorician of Pergamum, who was charged with the crime of poisoning, and his cause
Dat veniam somnumque dies; impune liebit
Aestivam sermone benigno tendere noctem.
Quo mihi fortunam si non conceditur uti?
Parcus ob heredis curam nimiumque severus
Assidet insano: potare et spargere flores
Incipiam, patiarque vel inconsulta haberi.
Quid non ebrietas designat? Operta recludit,
Spes iubet esse ratas, ad proelia trudit inerterm;
Solicitis animis onus eximit, addocet artes.

was undertaken by Torquatus, and also by Asinius Pollio ("insigne maestis prae sidium reis," C. ii. 1. 13). The case would be tried under the 'lex Cornelia de Sicariis et Veneficis,' passed in the time when Sulla was dictator A.D. 672, directed (among others) against all who committed murder by poison or abetted in such murder; for the provisions of which 'lex' see Dict. Ant.
p. 285, sq.

It happened that the 23rd September, Augustus' birth-day, was one of those days in which the early part was 'nefastus;' that is, the praetor could not hold his court till a later hour than usual. Hence it is marked in the Calendar N. P. ("Nefastus Prior"). (See Dict. Ant. p. 186.) So that it was doubly a holiday for Torquatus, and he could lie in bed without damaging his cause, and therefore might sit up late with his friend.

12. Quo mihi fortunam] This is an elliptical way of speaking, which must be filled up according to the context. 'Quo
mihi fortunam dedit Deus' may do here.
'Quo' is 'to what,' that is, 'to what pur-purpose,' as:

"Quo pinus ingens albaque populus
Umbram hospitalem consociate amant Ramis" (C. ii. 3. 9, sq.), where there is an ellipse. Ovid has "Quo mihi fortunam quae nunquam fallere curat?" (Am. ii. 19. 7); and Phaedrus "Quo mi, inquit, mutam speciem si vinceo sono.'

Many MSS. and editions have 'quo mihi fortuna,' against the metre. The omission of the mark over the final 'a' may account for this.

14. Assidet insano:] As 'dissidet' is used to signify difference, Horace uses 'assidet' to signify resemblance. It is not so used elsewhere. The guests not uncommonly wore wreaths of flowers on their heads, and carried them in their hands; and we can understand their scattering them about the table and floor, especially when they were merry. But it appears that the slaves scattered flowers about for the sake of their perfume, and in a picture discovered at Pompeii there is a representation of a young man and woman reclining on a couch before a small table, with flowers strewed about the floor. The man is drinking from a horn (πυρόν), and the woman is taking a small box from a female slave, supposed to be a 'myrotheca' or box of perfumes. Horace says: "Parentes ego dexteras Odi: sparge rosas" (C. iii. 19.
21). Fresh flowers were probably scattered at intervals during the dinner.

15. patiarque vel inconsulta haberi.] See
C. ii. 7. 28: "recepto Dulce mihi furere est amico." C. iii. 19. 18: "Insanire juvat."

16. Quid non ebrietas designat?] For-cellini explains 'designare' here by "rem aliquam insignium patrame, sed cum nota et ignominia," quoting besides this place Terence (Adelph. i. 6. 6):

"—— quae facta sunt Omitto: modo quid designavit. Mi. Quidnam id est?
De. Fores effregit atque in aedes irruit;"
on which Donatus says, "designare est rem novam facere in utramque partem et bonam et malam;" that is, to do any thing out of the common way. If this be the meaning, and I know no other, Horace says 'what strange things will not ebriety do?' (See Epp. i. 7. 6, n., on 'designator.') As to 'operta recludit' compare C. i. 16. 16; iii. 21. 16; Epod. xi. 14,
and the places quoted in the note on S. i.
4. 89, "verax aperit praecordia Liber."
'Spes jubeat esse ratas, ad proelia trudit inerterm;' agrees with what Aristotle says
(Nic. Eth. iii. 8): τοιοῦτον ἐπὶ ποιοῦντι καὶ οὐ μεθοδοκόμουν, ἑβλιπτεῖς γάρ γίνονται, that is, they gain courage by gaining self-confidence.

18. addocet artes.] That is more par-
Fecundi calices quem non fecere disertum?
Contracta quem non in paupertate solutum?
Haec ego procurare et idoneus imperor et non Invitus, ne turpe toral, ne sordida mappa
Corruget nares, ne non et canthus et lanx
Ostendat tibi te, ne fidos inter amicos
Sit qui dicta foras eliminet, ut coe at par
Jungaturque pari. Butram tibi Septiciumque, Et nisi coena prior potiorque puella Sabinum
Detinet, assumam; locus est et pluribus umbris:
Sed nimiis arta premunt olidae convivia caprae.
Tu quotus esse velis rescribe, et rebus omissis
Atria servantem postico falle clientem.

ticularly the art of speech mentioned in the next line. ‘Addoecit’ is an uncommon word, and is like the Greek προσείδαςκε. ‘Fecundi calices’ corresponds to ‘angustam pauperiem’ (C. iii. 2. 1).

21. Haec ego procurare. The ‘procurator’ was one of the chief slaves, and general steward. But the ‘promus’ was also called ‘procurator peni’ (see S. ii. 2. 16), and Horace says he has undertaken or ordered himself to arrange every thing for the dinner. ‘Haec’ refers to what follows. He says he is ‘idoneus,’ competent to the duty, and ‘non invitus,’ he likes it. ‘Imperor’ is nowhere else used as it is here. The proper construction is ‘imperat or mili.’ The use of ‘imperor’ with the passive infinitive is a different thing: as in Cicero (in Verr. ii. 5. 27), “in has lautumias — deduci imperantur.” (See Key’s L. G. 1243, n.) So Horace alone uses ‘inve or’ (A. P. 56): “Ego cur acquirere paua Si possum inve or?” where he illustrates what he is saying by this novel construction. As to ‘toral’ and ‘mappa,’ see S. ii. 4. 81. 84. ‘Corruget nares’ means to make the guests turn up their noses in disgust, as Quintilian explains it, quoting this passage (xl. 3. 80).

25. eliminet.] This is an old word for ‘to turn out of doors.’ Horace applies it to telling tales out of doors. Horace knew how to make up a dinner party. He only brought together persons who were suited to one another, and could tell their minds without fear of what they said being repeated. Seneca (Ep. xix.) quotes in his own words a good rule of Epicurus: “Ante conspiciendum cum quibus edas et bibas quam quid edas et bibas.” Of the guests nothing at all is known, and the conjectures that have been made are not worth repeating. ‘Potior puella’ means one who has more attractions than Horace’s dinner.

28, locus est et pluribus umbris.] ‘Umbrae’ were guests uninvited by the master of the house and brought by the invited guests, as mentioned before (S. ii. 8. 22, n.). Horace says there is room for several ‘umbrae,’—that is, four; for a full ‘triclinium’ held nine persons. But, considering the heat of the weather, he thinks it as well not to have the full number, especially if what the Scholiasts say is true, that ‘Archai lecti’ were short couches. ‘Capra,’ ‘caper,’ ‘hircus,’ are all used to signify the smell from the arm-pits when they perspire. (See examples in Forcell.)

30. Tu quotus esse velis] So Martial (xiv. 217):

“Dic quotus et quanti cupias coenare; nec unum

Addideris verbum, coena parata tibi est;”

a hospitable invitation. He had only to say how many persons he wished to bring, and leave the rest to the host. Horace advises his friend not to come out at the front door, ‘ostium,’ or ‘janua atriaenis,’ for fear he should find a client waiting to catch him, but at the back door, ‘posticum ostium,’ which the Greeks called ψευδοθυρον, a false door, and that word Cicero uses more than once. See in Verr. ii. 2. 20, where he says that the money Verres paid back to the Syracusans publicly, came again to him afterwards privately, “per pseudothyrum.” This applied sense of the word was often used, as it is by ourselves. Torrentius gives several instances.
EPISTLE VI.

Who Numicius was nobody can tell, and it does not signify. Any other name would have done as well. Nothing turns upon the character or circumstances of the person nominally addressed, and I feel inclined to put the Epistle in the same light as several of the Odes, in which, as I have often had occasion to remark, a name seems to be introduced more to give life to the poem than for any other reason. The Numicia was a patrician gens of no great note.

In respect to the time of composition, the only guide is v. 26: "Cum bene notum Porticus Agrippae et viae conspexerit Apri," and that does not assist us much. (See note.)

As to the design of the Epistle, it is to support virtue, under the aspect of a calm self-content as the chief good. The ordinary standards of happiness are treated with contempt, and there is a strong vein of irony running through the greater part of the Epistle, as will be seen by the Argument.

ARGUMENT.

The only way to get happiness and to keep it, Numicius, is to keep the mind from excitement. There are wise men who can look calmly on the awful skies. What do you suppose they think of the treasures of the earth and sea, and the rewards of a paltry ambition? But he who fears their opposites is excited just as much as he who desires these things themselves: each is taken by surprise, and in either case there is uneasiness. Be it joy or grief, desire or fear, what is the difference if every thing that falls out a little otherwise than is expected strikes a man dumb and makes him stare like an idiot? Nay, he who seeks virtue herself in excess is mad though he be wise, and a knave though he be good.

(v. 17.) Now then, go run after fine things; delight yourself in the praises of a mob; rise early and sleep late, that that low Mutus may not be richer and therefore more admired than you; but be sure that time brings obscurity to light and buries all that is brilliant in the earth: after all your admiration you shall go whither greater men have gone before you.

(v. 28.) If you are sick you take physic. You want to be happy of course. Then if virtue be the only means, be resolute, make every sacrifice, and follow her.

(v. 31.) If virtue be but a name, make haste to be rich: off with you before any one gets the start: money is a queen, she will get you every thing. Persuasion and Love are in her train. Mind you are not like the poor king of Cappadocia. No, look at Lucullus, who knew not how much he had got: that is your only rich man: he had plenty for himself and the thieves too. So if money is to make you happy, make that your first object and your last.

(v. 49.) But if you are for honours and show, why then get yourself a man to prompt you: "here comes so-and-so—shake hands with him—there's a man will get you plenty of votes—here's another can give places to whom he will." Be sure you are civil to them: make them father, brother, on the spot.

(v. 56.) And if eating is your good, see, the day dawns, be off to the market, buy your boar as Gargilus did, and pretended he had killed it himself. Let us go bathe with our bellies full—no more fit to be citizens of Rome than the swinish crew of Ulysses.
Nil admirari prope res est una, Numici, Solaque quae possit facere et servare beatum. Hunc solem et stellas et decedentia certis Tempora momentis sunt qui formidine nulla Imbuti spectent: quid censes munera terrae, Quid maris extremos Arabas ditantis et Indos, Ludicra quid, plausus et amici dona Quiritis, Quo spectanda modo, quo sensu credis et ore? Qui timet his adversa sive miratur eodem Quo cupiens pacto; pavor est utrobique molestus Improvisa simul species exterret utrumque. Gaudeat an doleat, cupiat metuatuque, quid ad rem, Si quidquid vidit melius pejusve sua spe

1. Nil admirari] The equality of the soul, καθ’ ἡν γεληνώς καὶ εὐστάθως ἡ ψυχὴ ἐκάμε ὑπὸ μείζον ταραττόμενη φόδου ἡ ἐπιστάθως ἡ ἄλλου τινὸς πάθως (Diog. Laert. ix. 45), was one of the fundamental doctrines of Democritus of Abdera, and he called it by various names, as εὐστάθως, ἀταραξία, ἀριστος, συμφρεία, ἀθανασία. But before him Pythagoras had held the same notion, and Heraclitus before either of them, and the same doctrine was held in one form or other by nearly every school of Greek philosophy as the foundation of morals and of happiness. In the theory of the sensual Aristippus it was an essential part (see Epp. i. 1. 18, n.). Epicurus and Zeno equally found it necessary to their views of the chief good, as we find from the sayings imputed to them by Diogenes Laertius and other writers, and might infer from the nature of their several systems. It is this self-control that Horace says is the only means of making a man happy and keeping him so. ‘Nil admirari’ can only be said to be necessary to this rule when admiration amounts to a stupid wonder, excessive fear, excitement, or other effects by which the judgment is misled and the passions roused injuriously. Horace had too much sense to recommend a stupid apathy, or that affection of self-possession which is not uncommon, and is the height of coxcombry. As to ‘prope’ see S. ii. 3. 92, n.

4. sunt qui formidine nulla] ‘Formido’ is here equivalent to ἐπιστάθως, a superstitious dread of the influences of the heavenly bodies which acts upon vulgar minds. The best MSS., and most of them, have ‘spectent.’ A few quoted by Fea (who adopts the indicative) have ‘spectant,’ which some other editors prefer. I think Horace is referring generally to men of philosophical mind rather than to any particular sect or individuals, and therefore that the subjunctive is wanted. (See C. i. 1. 3, n.)

6. Arabas ditantis et Indos] Comp. C. iii. 24. 1:

‘Intactis opulentior
Thesaurus Arabum et divitis Indiae.’

The treasures of the sea brought from the East were chiefly pearls and coral.

7. Ludicra quid, plausus This refers perhaps to the exhibition of gladiatorial and other shows, by which the favour of the people and such rewards as they could bestow were sought. As to the singular ‘Quiritis’ see C. ii. 7. 3.

9. sive] This is used much as ‘prope’ is above. Horace says that fear and desire are much on a par, both indicating the want of that equanimity which he recommends at starting. ‘Miratur’ expresses the astonishment of fear as well as of admiration, and so does ‘stupet’ frequently, and ‘exterret’ applies like ικέλπον to either state of mind. ‘Torpet’ does the same. (See S. ii. 7. 95.)
Defixis oculis animoque et corpore torpet?
Insani sapiens nomen ferat, aequus iniqui,
Ultra quam satis est virtutem si petat ipsam.
I nunc, argentum et marmor vetus aeraque et artes
Suscipe, cum gemmis Tyrios mirare colores;
Gaude quod spectant oculi te mille loquentem;
Navus mane forum et vespertinus pete tectum,
Ne plus frumenti dotalibus emetat agris
Mutus et, indignum quod sit, pejoribus ortus
Hic tibi sit potius quam tu mirabilis illi.
Quidquid sub terra est in apricum proferet actas;
Defodiet condetque nitentia. Cum bene notum Porticus Agrippae et via te conspexerit Appi,

15. Insani sapiens] Whether ironically or carried away by an unusual fit of enthusiasm, Horace maintains that a man may seek virtue itself 'ultra quam satis est.' What he means, or should mean, is, that excitement is to be avoided in the pursuit of the chief good as well as of subordinate goods. But, by saying that virtue itself may be admired inordinately, he is able to introduce with more contemptuous force the vulgar objects of admiration that follow, respecting which see C. iv. 8. 2; S. i. 4. 28; ii. 3. 118; and other places in the Satires.

21. dotalibus emetat agris] This is equivalent to 'metat ex agris dotalibus,' as in S. ii. 2. 105 he says 'emetiris acervo.' 'Emeto' is not used elsewhere. Who is meant by Mutus, if any body, is not known. I do not think any one in particular is alluded to. The name, though it occurs in inscriptions, and therefore is a Roman name, is perhaps adopted here by way of opposition to the eloquent man who by his own exertions was running an unequal race with the other man's luck. According to most modern commentators 'indignum' is used absolutely as an exclamation, and 'quod sit pejoribus ortus' explains why it was a shame. Mutus was a low fellow who had got rich by a fortunate marriage, and it was a shame that the orator should be obliged to look up to him as he must because he was rich. I am inclined rather to take 'indignum quod sit' together, as Torrentius does in his notes, though he edits 'Mucius indignum,' which is the reading of some of the old editions and of Lambinus, Cruquius, and others. Bentley prefers 'qui sit,' for which there is no authority.

24. Quidquid sub terra est] This is like Sophocles (Aj. 646):

'agath' o makro kavanidiatos xronsos
phi t' dora kai faniita kruptetai.

'In apricum 'means 'to the rays of the sun,' 'to the light of day.' Horace means by this reflection that the man need not be in such a hurry to make himself a name, since time would swallow it up, while it brought forward the obscure.

26. Porticus Agrippae] In A. U. C. 729 Agrippa built the Pantheon near the Campus Martius, to which a 'porticus' was attached. He also built in the same year, in commemoration of the naval victories of Augustus, a porticus, to which he gave the name Porticus Argonautarum. It was not far from the Via Flaminia, on the site of the modern Piazza di Pietra (Nardini ap. Cramer). It was dedicated to Neptune, and contained a painting of the Argonauts. Martial refers to it (iii. 20. 10); asking where his friend Caius Rufus is, he says:

'Hinc si recessit porticus terit templi,
An spatia carpit lentus Argonautarum?
An delicatae sole rursus Europae'— where 'templi' probably refers to the Pantheon. He refers to the second again (xi. 1); among several 'porticus,' those of Quirinus, Pompeius, and Europa:

'Vicini pete porticum Quirini;
Turbam non habet otiosiorem
Pompeius, vel Agenoris puellas, Vel prinear dominus levis carinae,'

that is, Jason. Which of the two is referred to it is impossible to say. Estré Ire tamen restat Numa quo devenit et Ancus.
Si latus aut renes morbo tentantur acuto Quaere fugam morbi. Vis recte vivere: quis non?
Si virtus hoc una potest dare, fortis omissis
Hoc age deliciis. Virtutem verba putas et Lucum ligna: cave ne portus occupet alter,
Ne Cibyratica, ne Bithynia negotia perdas;

(p. 406) thinks neither, but that of Europa referred to in both the above passages of Martial (and in ii. 14), which was built by Polla, Agrippa’s sister, and which is mentioned by Dion Cass. (55. 3.) This was not finished till Horace was dead. One of the others is more probably referred to, and of these the second is more likely to have been called ‘porticus Agrippae.’ (See Dion Cass. 53. 27.)

As to the Via Appia, see Epod. iv. 14.
S. i. 5. Most of the towns on this road as far as Capua had country houses belonging to wealthy Romans. Their equipages therefore would frequently be seen on the Via Appia. ‘Numa quo devenit et Ancus’ is a proverbial way of speaking, differing little from C. iv. 7. 15, where see note.

28. Si latus aut renes] The connexion will be seen in the Argument. On ‘fortis’ again, see C. S. 58, n. ‘Hoc age’ means ‘set about this’; that is, the pursuit of virtue.

31. Virtutem verba putas] Comp. ‘Aut
virtus nomen inane est,’ &c. (Epp. 17. 41.) ‘Putas’ is more in Horace’s way than ‘putes,’ which Bentley thinks ‘mollius et verecundius,’ and adopts from some MSS., among others the Blandian. These also have ‘ut’ instead of ‘et,’ and the MSS.
and editions are much divided. I do not think there is much to choose between them. ‘Lucus’ is usually a grove dedicated to some divinity, and Horace means perhaps that the man had no regard for what other sons held sacred, but counted a consecrated grove no better than any other wood. So Orelli at least says. ‘I do not feel sure that such is Horace’s meaning. ‘Lucus’ was sometimes used indifferently for any wood, as Forcellini shows, and Horace may mean ‘if you think virtue consists only of words as a grove does of trees;’ in which case ‘ut’ would be better than ‘et,’ though ‘et’ would do.

32. Cave ne portus occupet alter.] As to ‘occupo’ see C. ii. 12. 28, n. Horace says ‘if you think lightly of virtue as the means of happiness, be active and make money: see no one gets into harbour before you to carry off the business before you arrive.’ He supposes him a ‘negociator,’ respecting which class of persons see S. i.
7, Int. Their business was chiefly that of banking and money-lending, but they also engaged in mercantile transactions, the difference between them and ‘mercatores’ being that the latter travelled with their own wares, while the ‘negociatores’ did business in a general way. Cibyrata Major (Horzoom) was situated on a branch (now called Horzoom Ichy) of the Indus, on the north-west borders of Lycia (Spratt’s Lyca.
vol. i. p. 258). It was called ‘major’ to distinguish it from a smaller town on the coast of Pamphylia. Twenty-five towns belonged to the conventus of Cibyra, and its commercial transactions were probably large.
As to the limits of Bithynia after it became a Roman province, see Dict. Geog. It included a great part of Pontus, and so comprised nearly the whole sea-coast of Asia Minor on the Euxine. Its trade therefore must have been very great, since the Halys alone must have brought down vast quantities of merchandise, and there were other navigable rivers, as the Lycus, Iris, Parthenius, Sangarius, communicating with the interior. It had also convenient harbours on the Propontis, and was only separated from Europe by the narrow Thracian Bosporus. Its mountains produced valuable minerals and precious stones and marbles of different kinds. The names Thyni and Bithynia originally represented two different peoples of Thrace who migrated into this part of Asia and displaced the native tribes. They remained distinct for some time, but at this time the distinction was not observed; therefore Horace speaks of ‘Thyna merx’ (C. iii. 7. 3), where he means generally Bithynian. ‘Negotia,’ is commonly used for the business transactions of a ‘negociator,’ as Cicero, in his letter introducing Manlius Sosia to Aculus, pro-consul of Sicily (ad Fam. xiii. 20), says, ‘habet negotia vetera in Sicilia sua.’ He had debts to get in, and accounts of old standing to settle.
Mille talenta rotundentur, totidem altera, porro et tertia succedant et quae pars quadrat acervum.
Scilicet uxorem cum dote fidemque et amicos
Et genus et formam regina Pecunia donat.
Ac bene numatum decorat Suadela Venusque.
Mancipiis locuples eget aeris Cappadocum rex:
Ne fueris hic tu. Chlamydes Lucullus, ut aiunt, goddess. Therefore Horace associates them here. Cicero tells us that Ennius called the eloquent M. Cethegus "Suadae medullam" (Cat. Maj. xiv. 50), 'the marrow of persuasion.' (See Epp. ii. 2, 117, n.)

39. Mancipiis locuples] See S. ii. 7-3, n. Cappadocia was governed by its own kings from a very early period. A list of them is given by Clinton (F. H. vol. iii. p. 430, Append.). The last was Archelaus, who was appointed by M. Antonius A.C. 718, Ariarathes VII., who represented the lineal kings of Cappadocia, having been deposed and put to death. Archelaus was king at the time this epistle was written, and he reigned fifty years. At his death (A.C. 770) Cappadocia was reduced to the form of a Roman province, in the third year of Tiberius (Tacitus, Ann. ii. 42). He had lands and slaves on them, and property of that sort, but wanted the precious metal. Ariobarzanes, who was king of Cappadocia when Cicero was governor of Cilicia, is described by him as "rex perpauper" (ad Att. vi. 3). "Nullum aerarium, nullum vectigal habet. Nihil illo regno spoliatus, nihil rege gentius" (vi. 1). M. Brutus had advanced him large sums of money at exorbitant interest, which he was unable to pay, and Cicero, though he got 100 talents from him, was unable to extract all the debt. Cn. Pompeius too was his creditor, and all he could get was a promissory bond for 200 talents payable in six months (vi. 3). Horace advises his man not to let himself be as poor as this king. 'Hic' is an adverb, like évraóda.

40. Chlamydes Lucullus, ut aiunt,] L. Licinius Lucullus began his public life under Sulla, and assisted in checking Mithridates and bringing him to terms, and, when the war with that king broke out again after Sulla's death, was appointed to the conduct of it, being at the time pro-consul in Cilicia. His extraordinary successes against Mithridates and Tigranes, king of Armenia, are related by Plutarch in his life of Lucullus. He was prevented from completing his work by the intrigues of his enemies and the mutinies of his army, and being superseded in his command by Cn. Pompeius, he returned to Rome with great wealth accumulated by himself in Asia (for he inherited nothing from his father), which he devoted to every sort of self-indulgence; so that Plutarch (c. 30) compares his life to an ancient comedy, the first part of which is taken up with political and military affairs, and the latter part with all sorts of reveling. His houses (especially at Naples and Tusculum), his gardens and works of art, and preserves of fish, and household furniture, and the extravagance of his meals and way of living, surpassed any thing that had ever been known before, and even in the imperial times his gardens, Plutarch says, were amongst the most noble. From his extravagant works, by which he levelled hills and checked the waters of the sea, he was called by his contemporaries ‘Xerxes togatus.’ Plutarch relates (in the same chapter) this anecdote of Horace’s, only giving a smaller number of purple cloaks, which Horace puts at ten times the number applied for, and Plutarch, perhaps with more truth, if there is any truth in the story, only doubles. The story as Plutarch tells it is, that a praetor who wished to get up a public spectacle on an ambitious scale (πολυτιμώμενον περί θαλάς) applied to Lucullus to lend him some purple cloaks for a chorus. Lucullus said he would inquire, and if he had any he would let him have them. The next day he asked him how many he wanted, and when the ‘praetor’ said a hundred, Lucullus bade him take twice that number. Plutarch refers to Horace’s mention of the story, and seems to think his comment upon it, that a man to be rich ought to know only a small part of his possessions, is meant seriously. He gives that as Horace’s opinion, whereas it is plain he is only speaking ironically.

The ‘chlamys’ was an upper garment worn by the Greeks, a light sort of shawl thrown loosely over the person in a variety of ways (see Dict. Ant.), of which a specimen is seen in the Belvedere Apollo. The Romans did not wear it till the time of the empire, and it was never more than an occasional garment at Rome. Lucullus it seems had brought with him a large number of a costly kind from Asia, where they were worn in the Greek cities. What the representation may have been for which the praetor wanted these ‘chlamydes’ is not certain, but Greek characters must have been introduced.

50. Mercemur servum] There was a class of slaves called ‘nomenclatores’ or ‘fartores’ (crammers), διοματολόγων, whose office it was to accompany their master when walking, or attend him at home at the hour of ‘salutatio’ (when, if he was a person of consequence, people of all sorts came to pay him their respects), and to remind him of the names and circumstances of his visitors, and anything else that it might be necessary for the master to remember. If he was aiming at any office he had to be particularly polite to the citizens of all classes, and his ‘nomenclator,’ if he were clever, would be of good service to him in this matter. Horace’s advice to the man who thinks happiness depends on such things as show and popularity (‘species et gratia’), is, that he should hire a clever ‘nomenclator,’ if he had not one of his own, to go with him through the streets, and nudge him whenever he came to any one of influence and remind him to shake hands and say something civil to him, calling him affectionately ‘my brother,’ ‘my father,’ according to his age. (This shows us that the canvassing and elections still continued. Some people suppose that Augustus at once put an end to the old forms, which is not the case.) ‘Nomenclatores’ were also employed to explain to Qui fodicet latus et cogat trans pondera dextram Porrigere. "Hic multum in Fabia valet, ille Velina;
Cui libet hic fases dabit cripietque curule

the guests the names and qualities of the dishes, and parasites sometimes took this office upon themselves, as we have seen in S. ii. 8. Pliny mentions that in his time the number of slaves in a household was such that it was necessary to keep a 'nomenclator' to tell the master their names and offices (xxxii. 1): "Hoc perpecere mancipiorum legiones, et in domo turba externa, ac servorum quoque causa nomenclator adhibendus." For these reasons women also had servants of this class,
as we read in Suetonius, who speaks of a 'nomenclator' belonging to the wife of Telephus having formed a design on Augustus (vit. Aug. c. 19). Women had their thongs of courtiers as the men had.

50. laevum Qui fodicet latus [As to 'laevum latus,' see S. ii. 5. 17, n. A great many MSS., including all the Parisian and all the old editions, have 'saevum,' which appears to me to have no meaning, though some persons defend it in the sense of 'durum,' and support it by the word 'cogat,' as if the candidate were reluctant. But the reverse is implied. The man who should place his chief happiness in the attainment of public posts would not hesitate much about shaking hands with any one. 'Cogat' merely expresses the energy of the 'nomen-curator.' All the old editions, all Lambinus' MSS., and many others, have 'fodist.'
Torremanus has that reading, but quotes
'fodicet' from three MSS., in one of which there was this note: "fodicare est leviter ac superficie tenus fodere," which is contrary to its meaning in Ciceron (Tusc. iii. 16), and Plautus, Bacch. i. 1. 30 (quoted by Porcellini), and Cas. ii. 6. 9. "Stimulus ego nunc sum tibi: Fodico corculum," in all of which places it expresses a deep impression on the mind. Here it means a hearty thrust corresponding to 'cogat.'

51. trans pondera dextram Porrigere.] The meaning of 'trans pondera' has been doubted. Orelli understands 'pondera' to mean the weights standing in front of a shop, so that the man when he came to the shop of any one who could command votes was to stretch his hand over them to greet the shopkeeper. I do not think this is right.
Acrón interprets 'pondera' by "lapides
qui porriguntur per vias, vel qui per latera
(the sides of the road) expositi altiores sunt;" following whom some interpreters understand the man to hold out his hand to help the other over an obstruction. It is rather to shake hands with him. Obstructions were common in the narrow streets of Rome, such as Horace describes EpP. ii. 2.
72, sqq., and Juvenal (iii. 245):—
"—— Perit hic cubito, ferit assere duro
Alter, at hic tignum capiti incutit, ille me-tretam;"
and Martial (v. 22),—
"Vixque datur longas mulorum rumpere mandras
Quaeque trahi multo marmora fune vides."
Plutarch, quoted by Lambinus, says aüḫerôn ἵπτε τῷ γὰρ χείρα τῷ δήμῳ προ-τείνουσα ψυφον αἰτοῦντας (Moral. iv. p.171), which explains the text. Ciceron (pro Planc.) speaks of P. Scipio Nasica, when a candidate for the aedilship, shaking hands with some rough voter, and asking him good humouredly "if he walked on his hands," they were so hard.

52. Hic multum in Fabia valet,) Servius Tullius, as is well known, divided the Plebes into thirty tribes, of which four were of the city and twenty-six were of the country.
Of these twenty-six ten appear to have been swallowed up by the conquests of Porsenna, and of the remaining sixteen the Fabia was one. The number was gradually increased from sixteen to thirty-one; but it was not till A.U.C. 511, towards the end of the first Punic War, that the Quirina and Velina were added, being composed of persons belonging to Cures and Velinus in the Sabine territory (Liv. Epit. xxx.). These were the last tribes that were formed.

53. hic fases dabit] On the 'fases,' see Dict. Ant. The 'sella curulis,' or chair of state, was ornamented with ivory, and expressions like Horace's are common. It was called by the Greek writers ἐξαθάν-τιος δείπρος. Ovid (ex Pont. iv. 9. 27)
says,—
"Signa quoque in sella nossem formata
curuli,
Et totum Numidae sculptile dentis opus."
The officers entitled to use this chair ('cu-rules magistatur') were the consuls, praetor, and curule aedile, but the last was not allowed fasces in the city. Officers of lower rank had them in the provinces. 'Importunus' means 'obstinate' or 'ill-tempered'; 'facetus,' 'polite.'

56. lucet, eamus Quo ducit gula;] The day has dawned, let us be off and lay in our provisions; let us hunt and fish, as Gargilius hunted when he bought a boar, and pretended he had caught it himself; that is to say, let us go to market. Who is meant by Gargilius we have no means of knowing. The name is Roman. It occurs in inscriptions. He wanted to establish his reputation as a huntsman: got up before daybreak and returned to the city before the morning was over, and passed through the Forum while it was full of people, with nets, spears, and men, and a mule carrying a boar which he had not caught but purchased. It has been suggested to me that 'lucet, eamus' may mean, 'it is clear we should go.' I have never met with that interpretation, but I leave it for the reader to consider.

58. plagas, venabula.] As to 'plagae,' see C. i. 1. 28, n. They were too large to be carried by men, and were laden on mules (see Epp. 13. 46). They were sometimes of enormous extent, as stated in Epod. ii. 32. A modern writer (Swinburne, i. 163) writes that Alphonsus I. enclosed eighteen miles of the country near Foggia in Puglia (Apulia) with toils, and took so many stags, that besides what was taken away by the hunters, he sent 400 head to be salted for the use of the garrisons of Trani and Barletta. These toils were 'plagae.' The 'venabulum' was a long hunting spear, such as hog-hunters use in India, with a barbed point. Such an one is carried by one of the centaurs in the picture of the lion and centaurs found in the tragic poet's house at Pompeii. Virgil (Aen. iv. 131), describing the hunting-party of Aeneas and Dido, says,—

"Retia rara, plagae, lato venabula ferro, Massyliique ruunt equites et odora canum vis."

In the picture of Leda and Tyndareus in the same house, the latter holds two 'venabula,' and in the picture of Meleager in the Museo Borbonico, recovered from Pompeii, he is holding two of the same sort of spears upright in his left hand, while at his feet lies a huge boar's head. They were used, not for throwing, but thrusting; and in pursuit the rider would get ahead of the beast, and thrust the spear into his left flank as he passed.

59. Differtum transire forum populumque] Because 'differtum' does not suit 'populum,' and because 'populo' occurs in the next verse, Bentley has put in 'campumque' for 'populumque' out of his own head. There is no difficulty in the text, which is that of all the MSS. It is useless to argue against a reading so purely arbitrary. The editor who could not only suggest an alteration, but take it into the text with confidence, rejecting the reading of all MSS. and previous editions, with 'ab eat in malam rem inficta lectio populumque,' is not to be argued with. Obbarius says 'contra Bentleium egometipse pluribus disputavi in ed. Schmidlit, p. 159,' to which I refer my readers if they care for such discussion.

61. Crudi tumidique lavemur.] It would seem that some gluttons, with the idea of renewing their appetite, went to bathe immediately after dinner as well as (which was the general practice) immediately before. It can hardly be supposed that under any circumstances such a process, which was opposed to digestion and sometimes fatal, could have promoted an appetite. Persius (iii. 98) says "Turgidus hic epulis atque albo ventre lavatur," and then goes on to describe the man carried away from table in a fit of apoplexy. Compare Juvenal (i. 142):—

"Poena tamen praesens quam tu deponis amictus Turgidus, et crudem pavonem in balnea portas. Hinc subitae mortes atque intestata se- nuctas."
62. Caerite cera Digni.] Caere (Cervetri) was a very ancient town of Etruria, about twenty-seven miles north of Rome. It was called by the Greeks 'Δεσπότα. About A.U.C. 400, the people of Tarquinii having taken up arms against the Romans, the Caerites were accused of aiding them, and were threatened with punishment, but having asked pardon they obtained it at the expense of half their territory. They were also granted the Roman franchise without the 'suffragium' or right of voting for magistrates. It is disputed whether this was given them on the occasion last mentioned, in which case it would appear more as a punishment than a reward; or on the retirement of the Gauls before the destruction of Rome, on which occasion they rendered important service. Gellius says it was at this latter time (xvi. 13), and he says they were the first that received the franchise in this form "sine suffragii jure." Porphyrius says distinctly this limited franchise was laid upon them as a disgrace, "victis Caeritibus Romanis in percutiendo foedere non dederunt suffragii fruendi jus, quod ignominiosum fuit." Acron says, "Caerites populi sunt quos cum vicissent Romani, statuarent ut nunquam leges ederent nec leges haberent, quod multum ignominiosum fuit." Comm. Cruq. says they had the full 'civitas' given them after the Gallic invasion, but after they had forfeited it, the Romans restored it without the 'jus suffragii,' which however would be no great loss if they had the 'commercium' and 'connubium.' 'Caeritum cerae,' or 'tabulae,' would mean properly a register of the inhabitants of Caere, who would of course be registered when they came into the above relation to Rome. But it seems probable that at this time the name had a conventional meaning, and applied to the registers of all those who were in the position of 'aerarii,' that is, of the citizens of such towns as had not the perfect franchise, and of those citizens who had for any cause been degraded from their tribes (see Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. ii. 67; iii. 65).

"Ut qui senator esset ejiceretur senatu; qui eques Romanus equum publicum perderet; qui plebeius in Caeritum tabulas referretur, et aerrarii fieret, ac per hoc non esset in albo centuriae suae, sed ad hoc esset civis tautum, ut pro capite suo tributi nominate aera penderet." Thus Horace means that they who took such a low view of life were not worthy of being Roman citizens, being more on an equality with the crew of Ulysses, whom Circe turned to swine (Epp. 2. 23, n.), and who slew and eat the kine sacred to the Sun, though they swore they would not, and their return home depended on their oath being kept. See Odys. xi. 105, sqq.; xii. 303, sqq.; 340, sqq. 'Remigium' is used for the rowsers, as 'mancipium,' 'servitium,' are used for a slave, and many other words are used in the same way.

65. Si, Minnermus uti censet.] Horace was familiar, we may be sure, with the writings of Minnermus, the elegiac poet of Smyrna. He preferred him to Callimachus, as appears from Epp. ii. 2. 99, sqq. His poetry is of a melancholy cast, as far as we can judge from the few fragments that have come down to us: though love was their principal theme and the only remedy he recognizes for the ills of life, it does not seem as if he was very happy in his experience of it. One fragment, preserved in Stobaeus (Florileg. 63. 16, Fr. 1, Bergk), bears out what Horace says. He may have had many such passages in his mind. It begins,— τις δὲ βιος, τι δὲ τειχὼν ἄτερ χρυσῆς Αφροίτης;

τεῦναιρ οὔτε μοι μηκέτι ταῦτα μίλια, κ.τ.λ.

Horace adds 'jocisque,' as elsewhere he makes Jocus the companion of Venus (C. i. 2. 34). Propertius says of Minnermus (i. 9. 11),—

"Plus in amore valet Minnermi versus Homero; Carmina mansuetus lenia quererit amor."

Porphyrius's note appears to be derived from some information he possessed and we do not, and it is worth adding: "Minnermus elegans scriptor suits, qui in quadam ecloga Hieronymi sectam commendans
Nil est jucundum, vivas in amore jocisque.
Vive, vale. Si quid novisti rectius istis Candidus imperti; si non his utere mecum.

sumnum bonum indolentiam ait, quam Graeci ἀναληγήσαν nominant: molestias amores plus quam gaudii habere demonstrat." The last sentence, if the text is correct, contradicts Horace, and is not therefore to be trusted. It is also against all we have of Mimnermus' writings.

68. his utere mecum.] There is no difficulty in understanding that 'his' refers to the rule laid down at the beginning and taken up in v. 30:— "Si virtus hoc una potest dare fortis omissis Hoc age deliciis;" for all that follows is only recommended ironically, and in such a way as to hold up to contempt every rule of life but that of virtue.

---

EPISTLE VII.

On some occasion Horace, having gone into the country for change of air on account of his health, at the beginning of August, was tempted to stay away the whole month; and as he had promised Maecenas to return in a few days, he had perhaps got a letter from his friend reminding him of that promise, and begging him to come back. Maecenas was a valetudinarian, and had probably some of the querulous selfishness that usually attends on that condition. We may infer as much from that ode (ii. 17), which begins "Cur me querelis examinas tuis?" and he very likely felt the want of Horace's society at this time. We can only gather the tone of his letter or message from the character of Horace's reply. He says he has no mind to risk a return of his sickness by going back during the autumn to Rome; indeed that he meant to be absent at some warm place on the coast through the winter; that he was no longer as young and cheerful as he had been; that he was sure Maecenas' liberality was bestowed upon him in a generous spirit, and that he did not mean to compromise his independence; for if he could suppose such was the case, he would give up every thing he had ever received rather than forfeit his liberty. He illustrates his position by two stories,—one that of the fox who got into a vessel of corn and grew so fat there that he could not get out again (which Horace was determined to prove was not his case), and the other a splenetic trick played by L. Philippus upon a worthy man whom he seduced into leaving his home and vocation and settling on a farm in the country, the result of which unnatural change was the total destruction of his peace and independence. To this too Horace means to say he will never let himself be brought.

There is nothing disrespectful or angry in the Epistle, though it might appear from a bare outline like the above, or from a superficial reading, that there was. It was written after many years of intimacy, and shows pretty clearly the influence Horace had acquired with his patron; for though Horace was not perhaps of a servile disposition, as servility was then reckoned, he would not have taken this tone if he had not been sure Maecenas would not take offence at it.

When this Epistle was written there is no evidence to prove. It is generally attributed to the same year as Epp. 15, when Horace was meditating a winter residence on the coast. But the date of that Epistle is also quite uncertain, and Horace in all probability passed most of his winters elsewhere than at Rome.

ARGUMENT.

I promised to be back in a few days, and now I have been a whole month away. But you let me go because I was sick, and now you will excuse me, I know, if I am afraid of this fatal season. And when the snow shall show itself on the fields of Alba, I shall go to the sea coast and take care of myself, with my books, and return, dear friend, with your permission, with the return of the swallow. Yours was not the liberality of the unmannishly Calabrian, who pressed his pears upon his guest, and when he still politely declined, concluded with "as you please: if you do not eat them the pigs will." The spendthrift gives away what he does not care for,—a generosity that does but breed ingratitude. The good man gives to those who deserve, but he knows the value of money. I then will try and be deserving in proportion to the goodness of my benefactor. But if you will have me always live at Rome, give me back the strength and cheerfulness of my youth.

A little fox chanced to get through a cranny into a vessel of corn, and when he had eaten his fill tried to get out, but could not. "Lean you went in and to leanness you must return if you would get out," said a weasel hard by. If any one says the same to me, I am ready to give up all. I don't praise the repose and freedom of the country only because I have my belly full of dainties. I would not exchange it for the wealth of Arabia. You have often witnessed and commended my reverence for you, and have heard me call you my father and my king; but see if I cannot cheerfully restore all you have given me. Well did Telemachus reply when Menelaus offered him horses: "Ithaca hath no room for horses, thou son of Atreus; thy gifts are more suitable for thine own keeping, and there I leave them." I am a humble man: I love not the splendours of Rome, but the ease of Tibur and the softness of Tarentum.

When Philippus, that stout orator, was returning home from the Forum, tired and out of spirits, he saw one sitting in a barber's shop lazily paring his nails: 'Go,' said he to his slave, 'go and find out who that man is, and all about him.' He proves to be one Mena, a crier, of small means and good character, and well known as an active, sensible man, well content with his condition. 'I should like to hear all this from himself: invite him to dine with me.' The man can hardly believe his ears: however he begs to be excused. Philippus was surprised, but next morning saw the man at an auction and repeated his invitation, and it was accepted. The dinner went off agreeably, and was often repeated till the man became an established guest. One holiday he went with his patron into the country, and was delighted with all he saw. Philippus saw an opening for a joke, and persuaded the man to buy himself a piece of ground. To make a long story short he was soon turned into a farmer, talked of nothing but husbandry, and worked himself to death. Then come losses: his sheep are stolen, his goats get the rot, his crops fail, his steers are worn out, till he can stand it no longer, but mounts his horse and rides off to Philippus, and entreats him by all he holds sacred to restore him the life he has lost.

And so let every man do who has found out that he has made a bad exchange. Let him go back to his first estate; and let each take care to measure himself by his own standard.
Quinque dies tibi polllicitus me rure futurum, Sextilem totum mendax desideror. Atqui
Si me vivere vis sanum recteque valentem,
Quam mihi das aegro dabis aegrotare timenti,
Maece nas, veniam, dum ficus prima calorque
Designatorem decorat lictoribus atris,
Dum pueris omnis pater et matercula pallet,
Officiosaque sedulitas et opella forensis
Adducit febres et testamenta resignat.
Quodsi bruma nives Albanis illin et agris,
Ad mare descendet vates tuus et sibi par cet
Contractusque leget; te, dulcis amice, reviset
Cum Zephyris, si concedes, et hirundine prima.
Non quo more piris vesci Calaber jubet hospes
Tu me fecisti locupletem. "Vescere sodes."

1. _Quinque dies_] This is a conventional phrase to express any short time. It occurs in S. i. 3. 16, "quinque diebus Nil erat in loculis."
2. _Sextilem_] In a. u. c. 746 this month first received the name of Augustus (Dion Cass. 55. 6).
3. _dum ficus prima calorque_] See S. ii. 6. 16, n. The 'designator' was the man who arranged the procession at the funeral of any important person, and the 'lictores' were his attendants who kept order (see S. i. 6. 43). I do not imagine that 'lictoribus atris' means anything here but the common attendants of the undertaker; but it would seem that the 'lictores' and other officers who attended on the magistrates were sometimes appointed to attend the 'designator' on these occasions. Cicero (de Legg. ii. 24. 61), referring to the XII. Tables, says, "Reliqua in more sunt; funus ut indicatur, si quid ludorum; dominusque funeris utatur accenso aut lictoribus." The 'dominus funeris' here was the 'designator,' which name belonged also to the person who put people of rank in their places at the theatre. See Plautus (Poenul. Pro!. 18):

"Neu lictor verbum aut virgae mittant;
Neu designator praeter os obambulet;
Neu sessem ducat dum his tro in scena siet."

The form 'designator' occurs in inscriptions and some MSS., including nearly all the Parisian. 'Designator' is that of all the editions. As to the verb 'designo,' see Epp. 5. 16, n.

4. _Officiosaque sedulitas_] That is attending upon great people, and so forth. It does not seem as if the diminutive form 'opella' had any particular force. Horace uses diminutives when it suits the measure.
5. _Quodsi bruma nives Albanis_] 'Si' is used with reference to a future event, even if it be not hypothetical, when any action depends upon that event, as (S. ii. 3. 9),

"... multa et praeclera minantis
Si vacuum tepido cepisset villula tecto,
and elsewhere; so that it becomes nearly equivalent to 'cum.' He says as soon as the snow begins to lie on the Alban hills he shall go down to the sea, whether to Tarentum, as. Torre nius and Labinus suggest, or any where else, where it was milder than at his own place or at home. 'Contractus' expresses the attitude of a man sitting head and knees together, wrapped up by the fire to keep himself warm. The west wind set in about the second week in February.

6. _Calaber jubet hospes._] The man is made a Calabrian only to give the story more point, not I think as Orelli says because the Calabrians were "poeitis vitae ignari." The question is not one of refined manners, but of genuine or false hospitality; and the former does not belong exclusively to conventional refinement, which is rather apt to corrupt it. The guest is polite enough, and he is a Calabrian too.
"Jam satis est." "At tu quantum vis tolle." "Benigne."
"Non invisar feres pueros minuuscalia parvis."
"Tam teneor dono, quam si dimittar onustus."
"Ut libet; haec porcis hodie comedenda reliquae."

Prodigus et stultus donat quae spernit et edit;
Haec seges ingratos tulit et feret omnibus annis.

Vir bonus et sapiens dignis ait esse paratus,
Nec tamen ignorat quid distent aera lupinis:
Dignum praestabat me etiam pro laude merentis.
Quosdi me noles usquam discedere, reddes

Forte latus, nigros angusta fronte capillos, Reddes dulce loqui, reddes ridere decorum et Inter vina fugam Cinarae maerere protervae.
Forte per angustam tenuis vulpeca rimam

16. Benigne.] This is a polite way of declining the offer. "You are very good," the refusal being expressed in action (see below, v. 62). It might mean acceptance, just as the French say 'merci,' meaning 'yes' or 'no,' according to circumstances. In Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor (Act i. Sc. 1), Anne Page says to Slender, "Wilt please your worship to come in, Sir?" And he answers, bashfully, "I thank you forsooth, heartily; I am very well."—Anne. "I may not go in without your worship: they will not sit till you come."—Slender. "I faith I'll eat nothing: I thank you as much as though I did." ("Tam teneor dono, quam si dimittar onustus"). A very similar scene occurs between the maid servant and Xanthias in Aristophanes (Ran. 503, sq.), when, to her earnest invitation to come in and eat of her dainties, he answers sheepishly, κάλλεστ', ἐπαινο—πάνυ καλώ. There is none of this silliness here however, but the conversational idiom is the same. (See Cicero in Verr. ii. 3. 35, Long's note.)
22. dignis ait esse paratus.] Several examples of this sort of attraction are given in Key's L. G. 1060. Orelli has collected more on this place. See also C. iii. 16, 32, n., and C. iii. 27, 73, "Uxor invicti Jovis esse nescia." 'Dignis' is masculine: he is ready to serve those who are worthy, but he is no simpleton: he knows the difference between true money and counterfeit. This kind of bean was used for counters or sham money on the stage; 'comicum aurum' as it is called in Plautus (Poem. iii. 2. 20).
25. Dignum praestabato me] Horace means to say he will endeavour to show himself worthy (referring to 'dignis' above) in proportion to the excellence of him (Maeceonas) who has laid him under such obligations. He says in effect that Maeceonas does not bestow his liberality stupidly, as one who gave his friends what he was just as ready to throw to the pigs, or the fool who does not know the value of his gifts. He only gave to the worthy, and such Horace would try to prove himself.
26. angusta fronte] See C. i. 35. 5, n.
27. Reddes dulce loqui.] A similar instance, illustrating the nature of the infinitive as a neuter substantive, occurs above (S. ii. 7. 43), "Aufer Me vultu terrere." See Key's L. G. 1232, sqq.:—"In the Greek language this is so completely the case that the article may be prefixed to it in all its cases. The English also treat their infinitive as a substantive when they place before it the preposition 'to.'"
29. vulpecula] Bentley has a facetious note upon this, in which he appeals to huntsmen, countrymen, and natural philosophers, against such a monstrous notion as a fox eating corn. He proves that they have neither teeth to grind nor a stomach to digest it. But the reader must go to his note, "quam legisse non poenitetibis," says Forcellini, I hardly know why. It represents to me nothing but the arrogance of the author. He proposes, out of his own head, 'nitedula,' a 'field-mouse,' without attempting to explain how this word has disappeared from every MS., and to have been met with in no edition till his own. The improbability of an illustration is no reason for abandoning or altering it. We EPISTOLARUM I. 7.

589

Repersat in cumera frumenti, pastaque rursus
Ire foras pleno tendebat corpore frustra;
Cui mustula procul, "Si vis," ait, "effugere istine,
Macra cavum repetes artum quem macra subisti."
Hac ego si compellor imagine cuneta resigno;
Nec somnum plebis laudo satur altillum, nec
Oitia divitiis Arabum liberrima muto.
Saepe verecundum laudasti, rexque paterque
Audisti coram, nec verbo parcius absens:
Inspice si possum donata reponere laetus.
Haud male Telemachus, proles patientis Ulixiei:
"Non est aptus equis Ithace locus, ut neque planis Porrectus spatiiis nec multae prodigus herbae;
Atride, magis apta tibi tua dona relinquant."
Parvum parva decent; milii jam non regia Roma, Sed vacuum Tibur placet aut imabelle Tarentum.

are all familiar with the proverb of the camel and the needle's eye, and the fables of Aesop abound in improbabilities. The cunning of the fox brings him frequently into stories of this sort: in this instance he overhears himself. In respect to 'cu-mera,' see S. i. 1. 53, n.

34. Hac ego si compellor] As to 'compellor,' see S. ii. 3. 207. Horace says if he is taunted with this illustration he is willing to resign every thing; by which he means, if he is compared to the fox who had got into a store and had become so fat he could not get out again; in other words, if it was supposed that he had become lazy and self-indulgent, and that he could not assert his own liberty till he should cast off the bounties of his patron, he was willing to give them up; for he loved the peace that waits upon poverty, not as those do who commend it at rich tables spread with dainties, but as one who would not exchange his ease and liberty for the wealth of Arabia (respecting which compare C. i.
21. 1; iii. 24. 1. Epp. i. 6. 6). 'Altilia' were fattened poultry and other birds, for which service there were particular persons employed ('fartores,' aucturae).

37. rexque paterque Audisti coram,
' Rex,' which is generally used in a bad sense (C. i. 4. 14. n.), is here used in a good. As to 'audisti,' see S. ii. 6. 20, n.
'Verecundum' means 'reverential.' It expresses that feeling which Cicero says is the greatest ornament of friendship, "Nam maximum ornamentum amicitiae tollit qui ex ea tollit verecundiam' (Lael. xxii. 82).
Horace means to say that Maecenas had always found him full of affectionate respect and gratitude, and what he was in his presence he was no less in his absence; but he must not think so ill of him as to suppose he only behaved so because he wanted to keep his bounties; or if he thought so let him see how willingly he could resign them all, even as readily as Telemachus declined the horses of Menelaus (Odys. iv. 601, sq.):--
εν δ' ἑθάκην οὖτι ἄρ σφόμου εἶρες οὖτε τι λειμών
αγίβοτος, καὶ μᾶλλον ἐπίρατος ἐπιτοβότοιο.

45. vacuum Tibur] Orelli condemns those who explain 'vacuum' by 'otiosum;' but in Epp. ii. 2. 81, "vacus Athenas" he explains in that way, and refers to this passage for confirmation. On second thoughts he seems to have changed his mind. I think 'vacuum' means 'idle.' Whether Horace possessed a house of his own at Tibur or not has been a subject of much discussion. In his life, attributed to Suetonius, it is said that he did, and that it was shown as his house at the time that memoir was written. That he was much at Tibur is quite certain; that he had a house of his own there I do not believe, for he never mentions or alludes incidentally to such a possession. But there are no other Strenuus et fortis causisque Philippus agendis
Clarus ab officii octavam circiter horam
Dum rexit, atque Foro triumvim distare Carinas
Jam grandis natu queritur, conspexit, ut aiunt,
Adrasum quendam vacua tonoris in umbra
Cultello proprios purgantem leniter ungues.

"Demetri,"—puer hic non laeve jussa Philippi Acciepiebat—"abi, quaere et refer, unde domo, quis, means of deciding the question. Those who wish to know all that has been said on either side can read an Excursus of Obbarius on v. 12 of the next Epistle. As to 'imberle Tarentum,' see S. ii. 4. 34, n.

46. Philippus] This was L. Marcus Philippus, who was tribunus plebis a. u. c. 650, consul a. u. c. 663, and censor a. u. c. 668. He was a very distinguished man, an energetic supporter of the popular cause, a friend of Cn. Pompeius and a powerful orator. Cicero describes him as "hominem imprimis disertum atque eruditum, qui sita solet ad dicendum surgere, ut quod primum verbam habetur sit nesciat: et ait idem quorum brachium concaeleficetum tum se solere pugnare" (De Orat. ii. 78. See also iii. 1 for his vigorous language towards the senato): "Duobus igitur summis Crasso et Antonio L. Philippus proxime accedebat, sed longo intervallo tamen proximus" (Brut. 47). Cicero therefore did not rank him among the first orators, but he goes on to say that if he were put out of comparison with the highest there was much to admire in him: his speech was free, his wit abundant; he was inventive, and perspicuous, and clever in repartee; and elsewhere he calls him "suavis orator, gravis, facetus" (Brut. 50).

47. octavam circiter horam] The following is Martial's description of the distribution of a Roman's day:—The first and second hours were given to the 'salutatio,' or reception of clients and visitors. At the third hour the courts opened and business went on for three hours. The sixth hour was given up to rest (and the 'prandium'), the seventh to winding up business, the eighth to exercise, and with the ninth began dinner. (Mart. iv. 8.) In the main this appears to have been the division of the day in Horace's time likewise.

48. Foro triumvime distare Carinas] The Carinae was a collection of buildings on the north side of the Via Sacra, under Mons Esquilinus, occupying part of the fourth and third quarters of the city, though the greater part of it was in the fourth, corresponding, Nardini supposes, with that part which is now called Pantani; but that part of the Carinae which was in the third quarter comprised the spot on which afterwards was built the Colosseum, and which was distinguished by the name of Cericolenis. The Carinae comprised the houses of many persons of distinction, among whom we read of Sp. Cassius (whose house was pulled down after he had been put to death), Cn. Pompeius (afterwards occupied by M. Antonius), of Tiberius (Sueta. vit. Tib. 15), of M. Manlius (Cic. Parad. c. 3), of Balbinus, and of this Philippus. The temples of Concordia and Tellus were in the same part. The farthest part of the Carinae could not have been above three-quarters of a mile from the Forum Romanum; but Philippus was old. Horace means to show that he was inclined to be peevish, being tired with his work in the Forum; and in this splenetic humour, which, if this story be true, had become habitual with him, he fell in with the man Mena, whose easy enjoyment of life made a strong impression upon him. It made him jealous, and he resolved to spoil his independence if he could.

50. Adrasum quendam] The MSS. and editions vary between 'adrasum,' and 'abrasum,' and each reading has warm defenders. The former has most authority, and differs least from 'rasum,' which is all Horace means. He had just been shaved and was paring and cleaning his nails leisurely for himself ('propriis purgantem ungue'); he did not employ the barber for this operation, as people were in the habit of doing. The shop was empty, because those who would come for business came early, and those who came to lounge came later (S. i. 7. 3). 'Umbra,' which here means a shop, is used for different kinds of buildings by the poets, as a 'porticus' and a school. See Juvenal (vii. 173): "Ad pugnam qui rhetorica descendit ab umbra." (See Forcellini.) The shops were open probably as they are in Italy now.
Cujus fortunae, quo sit patre quove patrono.”

It, reedit et narrat, Volteium nomine Menam,
Praeconem, tenui censu, sine crime, notum
Et properare loco et cessare et quaecere et uti,
Gaudentem parvisque sodalibus et lare certo
Et ludis et post decisa negotia Campo.
“Scitari libet ex ipso quodcumque refers; die
Ad coenam veniat.” Non sane credere Mena, Mirari secum tacitus. Quid multa? “Benigne,” Respondet. “Neget ille mihi?" “Negat improbus et te Negligit aut horret.” Volteium mane Philippus
Vilia vendentem tunicato scrutare popello

54. unde domo.] This phrase, which is equivalent to ‘a qua domo,’ occurs in Virgil (Aen. viii. 114): “Qui genus? unde domo?” which Heyne explains by τίνες τό γίνετο; πάντων (for ποιος) πάρεις; Philippus sends to know who the man is, where he comes from, whether he is rich or poor, if ‘in-genus,’ who is his father; if a freedman, who is his ‘patronus.’ On the relation of the ‘patronus’ to his manumitted slave, see Dict. Ant.

55. Volteium nomine Menam.] This person is represented as a freedman of some person of the Volteia gens, of which one or two are mentioned in the Roman writers, as L. Volteius, a friend of L. Metellus, in Cic. in verr. ii. 3. 66. A freedman took the gentile name of his master on his manumission. The name Menas is akin to Menodorus (see Epod. iv. Int.) as Demas to Demetrius, Lucas to Lucanus, Silas to Silvanus, Artemas to Artemius, &c.

56. sine crime, notum E[.] The punctuation of this passage has been much discussed. Orelli and others take ‘notum’ absolutely for a man well known, quoting Caesar (B. C. 19): “non civis Romanus paulo notior quin ad diem conveniret;” and Epp. i. 6. 25: “Cum bene notum Porticus Agrippae et viae te conspexerit Appli.”
Laminius and many after him take ‘notum, with ‘sine crime.’ I think it belongs to the verbs that follow, which nearly all the editors suppose to depend on ‘gaudentem.’
The description Menas gives of himself is that he is a crier of small means, of unblemished character, well known as a person who could be active or quiet as the occasion required, and who enjoyed what he got;
one who made himself happy in the company of humble people, in the possession of a house of his own, at the theatres and Circus, and with the amusements of the Campus Martius. ‘Et quaerere et uti,’ ‘to get and to enjoy,’ expresses the reverse of him who is ‘nescius uti Compositis’ (S. ii. 3. 109). ‘Lare certo’ is opposed to a lodging, ‘coenaculum’ (Ep. i. 1. 91, n.).
It appears (v. 65) that he transacted business as a seller; probably he had some second hand things of his own to dispose of.
But the ‘praeco’ was not usually the person who managed an ‘auctio,’ which was presided over by an ‘argentarius,’ and he employed a ‘praeco.’ See S. i. 6. 86, n.
Bentley’s reading, ‘sine crime natum,’
which he has adopted on the slenderest authority, and explains ‘ceto patre, ho-nestis parentibus,’ cannot without straining bear the sense he gives it. He also reads ‘Lare curto’ from two MSS. of Cruquius, comparing ‘parvo sub lare’ (C. iii. 29. 14), “modicus penatibus” (Tac. Ann. ii. 84).
But supposing that Horace would have used ‘curto’ where he could have said ‘parvo,’ the expression would only be a repetition of ‘tenui censu’ above, and ‘ceto lare’ is a common phrase, as Bentley himself has shown, as in Virgil (Georg. iv.
155), “Et patriam soleae et certos novere
penates!” and (Aen. vi. 673) “Nulli certa domus; hec his habitamus opacis.” Compare Epp. i. 15. 20: “Scurra vagus non qui certum praesepe teneret.”

61. Non sane credere Mena.] ‘Sane’ is not commonly used in negative sentences.
It is an adverb of emphasis. As to ‘benigne’ see above, v. 16, and on the subjective ‘negat’ compare S. ii. 6. 31.
“What, he deny me?”

65. tunicato scrutare popello] Suetonius tells us that Augustus took pains to restore the old habits of propriety in dress which had become neglected: “ac visa quondam Occipat et salvere jubet prior. Ille Philippo Excusare laborem et mercenaria vincla, Quod non mane domum venisset, denique quod non Providisset eum. "Sic ignovisse putato
Me tibi si coenas hodie mecum." "Ut libet." "Ergo
Post nonam venies; nunc i, rem strenuus auge."
Ut ventum ad coenam est, dicenda tacenda locutus
Tandem dormitum dimittitur. Hic ubi saepe
Occlutum visus decurrere piscis ad hamum
Mane cliens et jam certus conviva, jubetur
Rura suburbana indictis eomes ire Latinis.
Impositus mannis arvum caelumque Sabinum pro concione pullorum turba, indignabn-dus et clamitans: 'En,' ait, 'Romanos re-drum dominos gentemque togatam!' Ne-gotium aedilibus dedit ne quem posthac patentur in Foro Circove nisi positis lacernis togatum consistere" (c. 40). To be without the toga in the streets therefore was not considered respectable. It was confined to the lowest sort of people, which is expressed by the diminutive 'popello.'

This word is used only here and by Persius (iv. 15). On the word 'scruta,' which signifies small wares, Comm. Cruq. says:
"Scruta, quas vulgus grutas vocat:' it is derived from the Greek γρύφη, and was used by Lucilius (ap. Gell. iii. 14), with its cognate word 'scrutarius:'
"Quidni? et scruta quidem ut vendat scrutatarius laudat.
Praefractam strigilem, soleam improbus dimidiatam."

As to 'occupat' see C. ii. 12. 28, n.
67. mercenaria vincla,] The bonds (that is, the occupations) of buying and selling. Mena offers these as his excuse for not having waited upon Philippus in the morning at his 'salutari,' as, after his attention of the previous day, he would have felt bound to do if he had had time.
69. Sic] See Key's L. C. 1491, g. note.
71. Post nonam venies;] See above,
v. 47, n. and C. i. 1. 20, n.
72. dicenda tacenda locutus] This is a familiar adaptation of the Greek ῥήγον ἄφηρήθησαν η ἐπος (Soph. Oed. Col. 1001), which was a conventional phrase. It means all manner of things. Persius (iv. 8) has "dicenda tacendaque calles." Virgil (Aen.
ix. 505); "digna atque indigna relatu Vocferrans." Horace means that Volteius was placed at his case by his host, and, being a simple man, talked of what came uppermost without waiting to see if it was out of season or not. "Locutus: Volteius, velut plebeius, expers rerum" (Comm. Cruq.).
This gives the meaning very well. I do not see why Orelli should suppose the poor man 'bene potus,' or that he required a hint to go away. 'Dimittere' was a word of politeness used among equals, as above,
v. 18.
73. Hic ubi saepe] After he had broken the ice Volteius was easily persuaded to repeat his visits till at last he became an established guest and a daily attendant at the rich man's morning receptions, till on one occasion he was invited to accompany Philippus to his country seat in the Sabine country during the 'feriae Latinae.' This festival was of the highest antiquity. Its proper name was Latiar. Its most important feature was a sacrifice offered on the Alban Mount, which sacrifice had been offered before Rome was built. Tarquinius Superbus first converted it into a Roman festival, Niebuhr says (i. 34), by which he means that whereas it had before been presided over by the Latin dictator, the Roman king, when the Latins were brought into close alliance with Rome, took that place himself; and though the Latins continued to send their own magistrates till they lost their independence, the chief magistrates of Rome continued to preside over the sacrifice which was still offered on the Alban Mount. The holidays lasted six days, during which all manner of festivities went on, and business was suspended. They were 'feriae corporativae,' that is, they were annual, but not held always at the same season, which is what Horace means by calling them 'indictae.' The magistrates appointed the time of their celebration.
EPISTOLARUM I. 7.

Non cessat laudare. Videt ridetque Philippus, Et sibi dum requiem, dum risus undique quaerit, Dum septem donat sestertia, mutua septem Promittit, persuadet uti mercetur agellum. Mercatur. Ne te longis ambagibus ultra Quam satis est morer, ex nitido fit rusticus atque Sulcos et vineta crepat mera; praeparat ulmos, Immoritur studii et amore senescit habendi. Verum ubi oves furto, morbo periere capellae, Spem mentita seges, bos est enectus arando, Offensus damnis media de nocte caballum Arripit iratusque Philippi tendit ad aedes. Quem simul adspexit scabrum intonsumque Philippus, "Durus," ait, "Voltei, nimirus attentusque videris Esse mihi." "Pol me miserum, patrone, vocares, Si velles," inquit, "verum mihi ponere nomen! Quod te per Genium dextramque deosque Penates

79. dum requiem, dum risus] Philippus, tired with his work, refreshed himself by getting amusement at other people's expense. He gave the man a sum equivalent to about 60l. of our money, and offered to lend him as much more.

84. vineta crepat mera; ] So Cicero says (ad Att. ix. 12), "Mera sclera loquuntur." (Tb. 13) "Dollabella suis litteris merum bellum loquitur." (iv. 7) "Chae- rippus mera monstr avanti ferat." 87. Spev mentita seges.] See C. iii. 1. 30, m.

1. Durus — attentusque] Philippus means that he appears to be too hard-working and anxious about his affairs. Compare S. ii. 6. 82: "Asper et attentus quaeitis"; and Epp. i. 16. 70: "sine pascat durus areteque."

92. Pol me miserum,] Gellius (xi. 6) says, respecting oaths of this sort, that women never swore by Hercules, nor men by Castor, but both men and women would swear by the temple of Pollux, 'Aedepol,' and this, he says, on the authority of Varro, was only adopted by men in later times, whereas it had always been used by women, who got it from the Eleusinian mysteries.

94. Quod te per Genium] See Epp. ii. 1. 144. This use of the relative "quod" in entreaties is common, as in Virgil (Aen. vi. 363):

"Quod te per coeli jucundum lumen et auras, Per genitorum oro, per spes surgentis Iuli;"

and Terence (Andr. i. 5. 54): "Quod et ego per dextram hanc oro et per genium tuum." It was customary for slaves to pray to their masters by their genius. So in Propertius (iv. 8. 68):

"Lygdamus ad plutei fulcras sinistra lateus Exuitur, geniumque meum prostratus adorat."

The Romans believed that every man had a genius, though their notions on the subject were very confused apparently. According to the name (which involves the same element as γενις, γις) it should be the attendant on a man's birth, as it was believed to be the inseparable companion of his life. It represented his spiritual identity, and the character of the genius was the character of the man. Varro, quoted by St. Augustine (de Civ. Dei. vii. 13), describes the genius as "Deus qui praepositus est ac vix habet omnium rerum gignendorum;" and again he says "Genium uniuscujusque animum rationalem et ideo esse singulos singulorum." This explains Epp. ii. 2. 183, sqq.:

"Cur alter fratrum, &c.— Scit genus, natale comes qui temperat astrum, Natureae deus humanae, mortalis in unum Quodque caput, vultu mutabilis, albus et ater."

Hence we understand why the marriage-
Obsecro et obtestor, vitae me reddre priori."
Qui semel adspezit quantum dimissa petitis
Praestent, mature redeat repetatque relicta.
Metiri se quemque suo modulo ac pede verum est.

bed was sacred to the genius (Epp. i. 1.
87, n.). Hence Horace speaks of "genium memorem brevis aevi" (Epp. ii. I. 143), and offerings of wine and flowers, and such like were said to be presented to the genius when a man was indulging in that way himself (A. P. 209). This explains the expressions "genio indulgere" (Persius v.
151), "genium suum defraudare" (Terence, Phorm. i. 1. 10), "genium curare"
(C. iii. 17. 14). Women had their genii, but they were named Junones: "Quamobrem major caelitum populus quam hominum intelligi potest: cum singuli quoque ex semetipsis totidem deos faciunt, Junones
Geniosque adoptando sibi" (Plin. ii. 7).
The representations of genii on medals correspond to attributes supposed or real of the persons they belong to. There is a

EPISTLE VIII.

A.U.C. 734.

Respecting the person to whom this Epistle was written, and the occasion, see Ep. 3 of this book, Introduction, and note on v. 15. Horace it appears was not in very good humour with himself when he wrote it. He describes himself as suffering less from bodily than mental weakness, irritability, sluggishness, perverseness, and caprice. He may use rather stronger language than was necessary, but there can be no doubt he felt a good deal of what he says he felt. It shows that a man may give good advice to his friends which he cannot steadily apply to himself, and it helps us to understand the character of Horace and his philosophical aspirations described, probably about this time, in his Epistle to Maecenas (i. 1). The critics find fault with this Epistle as if it were written in an unkind spirit towards Celsus, which I do not understand. The counsel in the last verse does not imply this. It is advice such as a young man lately promoted to an important office might be glad of; and if the manner seems abrupt to us it was nothing at that time probably between friends of whom one was young enough perhaps to be the other's son.
Celso gaudere et bene rem gerere Albinovano
Musa rogata refer, comiti scribaeque Neronis.
Si quaeret quid agam, dic multa et pulchra minantem
Vivere nec recte nec suaviter; haud quia grando
Contuderit vites oleamque momorderit aestus,
Nec quia longinquus armentum aegrotet in agris;
Sed quia mente minus validus quam corpore toto
Nil audire velim, nil discere, quod levet aegrum;
Fidis offendar medicis, irascar amicis,
Cur me funesto properent arcere vetro
Quae nocuere sequar, fugiam quae profore credam;
Romae Tibur amem ventosus, Tibure Romam.
Post haec ut valeat, quo pacto rem gerat et se,
Ut placeat juveni percontare utque cohorti.
Si dicet, Recte, primum gaudere, subinde
Praeceptum auriculis hoc instillare memento:
Ut tu fortunam sic nos te, Celse, feremus.

2. comiti scribaeque Neronis.] See S. i.
7. 23, n. The following words in this Epistle have been referred to in former notes:
'quid agam' (Epp. 3. 15), 'minantem' (S.
i. 3. 9), 'momorderit' (S. ii. 6. 45), 'cur'
(C. i. 33. 3), 'cohorti' (S. i. 7. 23).
'Suaviter' occurs in the same connexion
in S. i. 9. 5. 'Multa et pulchra minantem' Comm. Cnq. explains rightly I think:
'promittentem philosopham.' It refers to his philosophical aspirations described in Epp. i. 1. Orelli refers it to his poetical studies chiefly. I do not agree with him.
6. longinquus armentum aegrotet in agris.] The pastures of Apulia, Calabria, and Lucania, and those of the basin of the Po, have been referred to before (C. iii. 16.
35; Epod. i. 27). The levying of a tax on flocks fed on the southern pastures, referred to in the latter of those notes, has been continued to modern times. At the town of Foggia in Puglia (Apulia), Swinburne says there is 'a register office known by the name of 'Tribunale della dogana della mena della pecore di Puglia' (the custom-house for the toll of the sheep that pass to and from Puglia). It is managed by a governor, auditor, and two advocates, and has the distribution of a fixed assessment upon all sheep that descend in autumn from the mountains of Abruzzo into the warm plains of Fuglia, where they yean, and in May return to the high country.' "This dogana is one of the richest mines of wealth belonging to the crown of Naples, and is capable of great increase. At present (1777) the net profit arising to the king from the letting of the pastures is about 40,000 ducats." The reading 'arvis' which apppears in some editions and MSS. is inadmissible. That word is used for arable land. 'Ager' applies to that and pasture and other lands too.
10. properent arcere vetro
.] 'Arcere' occurs in this construction in A. P.
64: "Neptunus classes aquilonibus arcet." It is also used with an accusative of the thing and ablative of the person, with a preposition. 'Prohibere' is used in the same construction in C. i. 27. 4. ' Veternus' is a lethargy, here applied to the mind, and his faithful physicians are the friends who would cheer and rouse him, though we may take the word 'medicis' literally and suppose he was under medical treatment. His feelings probably arose out of the state of his health.
14. Ut placeat juveni] Tiberius was now in his twenty-third year. But on 'juvenis,' see C. i. 2. 41.
EPISTLE IX.
A. U. C. 734.

As to Septimius, on whose behalf this Epistle is addressed to Tiberius, see C. ii. 6, Introduction. The occasion was that journey into Armenia which has been referred to twice before (Ep. 3 and 7). It is a well-considered and careful production. Horace would have written more warmly for such an intimate friend if he could have ventured to do so; but the character of Tiberius did not admit of warmth, and he would not have responded to any very earnest eulogy. Horace therefore satisfies himself with merely naming his friend and excusing his own boldness in doing so.

This Epistle is noticed in an amusing article of the Spectator (No. 493) on the subject of introductions and testimonials in general, of which this is quoted as a judicious specimen, and a loose translation is there given.

SEPTIMIUS, Claudi, nimirum intelligit unus
Quanti me facias; nam cum rogat et prece cogit
Scilicet ut tibi se laudare et tradere coner,
Dignum mente domoque legentis honesta Neronis,
Munere cum fungi propioris censet amici,
Quid possim videt ac novit me valdus ipso.
Multa quidem dixi eur excusatus abirem;

1. nimirum] 'Of course,' it would be strange if it were otherwise. Horace sometimes uses the word seriously, sometimes ironically, as in S. ii. 2. 106; 3. 120. He says 'Of course Septimius knows my influence with you better than any body else does ('unus,' see S. ii. 6. 57, n.), and better than I do myself, and thinks that I stand to you in the relation of an intimate friend, or he would not press me for an introduction.' There is about the same amount of ironical meaning in 'scilicet.' 'Tradero' is the usual word for introductions. (S. i. 9. 47.) 'Munere fungi' is like 'officium facio' below (Epp. 17. 21). It means to discharge the duties of friendship, but generally expresses the relation of an inferior to one above him in rank, and sometimes is used in a bad sense to signify servility.

4. Dignum mente domoque] Tacitus says of Tiberius, summing up his character (Ann. vi. 51): 'Morum quoque tempora illi diversa: egregium vita famaque, quod privatus vel imperii sub Augusto fuit: occultum ac subilobum fingendis virtutibus, donec Germanicus ac Drusus superfuere.' His genuine character, he says, did not come out fully till after the fall of Sejanus. At this time he was about twenty-two years of age, but even now was reserved and unpleasant in his manners, so much so that even Augustus could hardly be cheerful in his company. Suetonius thinks Augustus had no very good opinion of him: 'sed vitii virutibusque perfensis potiores duxisse virtutes' (S. 21). Horace speaks well of him not only here, when he is writing to himself, but in Epp. ii. 2. 1, written probably at a later time, to his friend Julius Florus. The fourteenth Ode of the fourth book was written in honour of his successes, but there I think no great amount of warmth is shown in his favour. 'Domo' means his family. Tiberius was the son of T. Claudius Nero, and the Nerones belonged to the patrician gens Claudia, which numbered many consuls and other high magistrates from the first establishment of the family in A. U. C. 250. They were of Sabine origin.

6. valdus] This comparative occurs again in A. P. 321: 'valdus oblectat populum.'
EPISTOLARUM I. 10.

Sed timui mea ne finxisse minora putarer, Dissimulato toris, opis propriae, mihi commodus uni. Sie goror

e majoris fugiens opprobria culpae

Frontis ad urbanae descendit praemia. Quodsi

Depositum laudas ob amici jussa pudorem,

Scribe tui gregis hunc et fortem crede bonumque.

11. Frontis ad urbanae descendit praemia.] Forcellini interprets urbanae frontis by oris duri, perfrictae frontis, cujusmodi sunt urbani praes rusticis; and his English editor translates this passage: “I have put in for the prize of city assurance,” which is not a very sensible translation. Orelli and others understand ‘urbanae frontis’ to mean impudence, and though there is no other place in which ‘urbanus’ has that meaning, it seems to bear it here, judging from the next verse. But it is not easy to understand ‘descendi ad praemia.’ ‘Praemia’ seems to be opposed to ‘appro-bria,’ and ‘descendere’ is commonly used in connexion with the arena. Horace may mean (taking his metaphor from this source), that, to avoid the discredit of a greater fault, he has resolved to win the crown or prize of impudence, or some thing of that sort. But I am not sure what he means. 13. Scribe tui gregis] This construction with the genitive is more common in Greek. It occurs in C. iii. 13: 13: “Fies nobilium tu quoque fontium.” As to ‘fortem bonumque’ see C. iv. 4. 29, n.

EPISTLE X.

This Epistle is addressed to Fuscus Aristius, whose name appears in C. i. 22; S. i. 9. 61; 10. 83. For such particulars as can be stated about him see the Introduction to the above Ode. It appears that his habits inclined him to a town life. He was making money in some way, and he was associated with all Horace’s literary and other friends. Horace praises the freedom, the natural beauties, and the healthiness of the country, and shows that they are natural to men’s tastes from the attempts they make to get trees in their town houses and a prospect over the fields. He follows this up with a few miscellaneous remarks on the pursuit of wealth, how it blinds the eyes to the distinction between truth and falsehood, and how prosperity only makes adversity more hard to bear and disappointment more bitter, and subjects the mind to a galling slavery.

There is no clue to the date.

ARGUMENT.

You love the town, Fuscus; I love the country: that is our only difference. I for my part begin then to live and to be a king when I fly from all you praise so warmly. I am like the slave who ran away from his master the priest, because he got nothing but sweet cake to eat. I want something wholesome. If we are to live naturally, where can we build our house more fitly than in the country? Where shall we find such warmth in winter, such cool breezes in summer? Where is sleep so unbroken by care? Is the meadow less bright and sweet than the marble floor? Is the water that struggles through the leaden pipe more pure than the rippling brook? Why even among your pillars you grow a sham forest, and you like no house like that which has a landscape spread before it. You cannot get rid of Nature: she will come back and assert her rights.

The man whose ignorance cannot distinguish the dye of Aquinum from the dye of Sidon will not, it may be, suffer more hurt than he who confounds truth and error. He who is elated by prosperity will be confounded by adversity. If you have specially set your heart upon a thing you will be sorry when you lose it. Seek not great things. The poor man may be happier than kings and the followers of kings. Take warning by the horse in the fable: he who forfeits his liberty for money will be a slave all his life to a hard master. As a shoe trips a man if it be too large, and galls him if too small, so is it with him whose means do not fit his desires.

Be content and wise, my friend, and when you see me heaping up riches you may chastise me in your turn as you will. Money is the mistress or the servant. It should ever be the captive, never the conqueror.

Dated by the ruins of Vacuna: in good spirits, though they would be better if you were with me.

Urbis amatorem Fuscum salvere jubemus
Ruris amatores, hac in re silicet una Multum dissimiles, ad caetera paene gemelli;
Fraternis animis quidquid negat alter et alter;
Annuimus pariter vetuli notique columbi.
Tu nidum servas; ego laudo ruris amoeni
Rivos et musco circumlita saxa nemusisque.
Quid quaeris? Vivo et regno simul ista reliqui Quae vos ad caelum fertis rumore secundo:
Utque sacerdotis fugitivus liba recuso;

3. ad caetera] Most of the old editions have 'ad caetera,' and that is the reading of all the Parisian, the St. Gallen, three Berne, and many other MSS. The oldest Blandinian has 'at,' which Bentley defends, and so does Orelli. I see no reason for deserting the old reading so well supported by the best MSS.

5. vetuli notique columbi.] I do not know whether Horace means to be jocular here; but the notion of these two middle-aged gentlemen billing and cooing like two old pigeons has something rather absurd in it. There are some (Dacier, Sanadon, and others) who take 'noti' to refer to some well-known story of two doves. But what the story was, or what trace of a story is to be found in Horace's words, they do not say. He can only mean two doves in a nest.

8. Quid quaeris?] This is only a formula equivalent to 'in short.' 'Why need you ask?'

9. fertis rumore secundo:] Orelli's MSS. have 'effertis,' and so had the oldest Blandinian, and many others of note. But 'fertis' has equally good authority, and appears in nearly all the old editions. 'Rumore secundo' is a conventional phrase, and occurs in various combinations. Virgil (Aen. viii. 90) has "Ergo iter inceptum cel rant rumore secundo," where Wagner applies it to the song of the rowers. Tacitus, speaking of the honours conferred on Nero, says "ut haece secundo rumore in adversis animis acceptum, quod filio Claudii socer Sejanus destinatur" (Ann. iii. 29). He uses 'adverso rumore' in the opposite sense (xiv. 11). Here it means with an unanimous assent.

10. fugitivus liba recuso;] He likens himself to the slave who ran away from the priest his master because he fed him too much on the sweet cakes offered in sacrifice. He got tired of them and wanted plainer food. These cakes, 'liba,' which the Greeks called πιλανα, were made of flour sweetened generally with honey, and Pane egeo jam mellitis potiore placentis.
Vivere naturae si convenienter oportet
Porndaeque domo quaederg est area primum,
Novistine locum potiorem rure beato?
Est ubi plus tepeant hiemes, ubi gratior aura
Leniat et rabiem Canis et momenta Leonis,
Cum semel' acceptit Solem furibundus acutum?
Est ubi divellat somnos minus invida cura?
Deterius Libycis olet aut nitet herba lapillis?

sometimes made in the shape of animals as a substitute for more costly sacrifices. Orelli suggests that a scene in some 'minus' may be referred to by Horace. He had some story in his mind I think. Ovid says the name is derived from 'Liber' (Fast. iii. 763):

"Nomine ab auctoris ducunt libamina no-
men,
Líbaque quod sacris pars datur inde focia.
Liba deo funt; succis quia dulcis ille Gaudet, et a Baccho mella reperta fe-
runt."

12. Vivere naturae] See S. i. 1. 49, n.: "quid referat intra Naturae fines viventi." Diogenes Laert. (vii. 67) says: πρώτος ὁ Ἱέρων—τέλος εἰπὲ τὸ ὄμολογοψινως τῇ φύσι τῷ ἴῳν. This was the fundamental doctrine of Stoic morality, but the teachers of that school differed as to the word 'nature,' which indeed it is not easy to define. As a mere social question, which is the only point of view Horace is concerned with, the artificial state of society and mode of life in large towns he considers, as all must, to be a wider departure from the normal condition, which may be called natural, than a country life.

13. Ponendaeque domo] There are three forms of this dative, 'domui,' 'domo,' 'domi.' 'Area' is any open space, here for building on. The technical meaning of it is given on C. i. 9. 18. Seneca (Ep. 90) has a passage very like this: "Levis umbra rupis aut arboris et percludi fontes rivique—et prata sine arte formosa, inter haec agrestis domicilium rustica positum manu. Hae erat secundum naturam domus, in qua libeat habitare."

15. plus tepeant hiemes.] See S. ii. 3. 10, n.
16. rabiem Canis et momenta Leonis.] See C. iii. 13. 8, n.; 29. 18, n. 'Momenta' here seems to mean the violence of the heat that accompanies this constellation. Orelli interprets it "motus, circuitus caelestes." The reader may compare Xenophon's praises of a country life (Econ. 5. 9): χειμάσαι εἰ τοῖς ἀθάνατοι και θερμοὶς λουτροίς τοῦ πλείων εὐμάρεια η ἢ χωρία; ποῦ εἴ τῇ θερίαν θερίσα τὸ και πνεύσαι και σκιάς ή καὶ ἀγονιρι:

19. Deterius Libycis olet] Horace asks whether the field covered with flowers smells less sweet and looks less beautiful than marble floors laid with mosaic pictures and strewn with flowers or other perfumes. Respecting the Libyan and other marbles see C. ii. 18. 3, n. By 'lapillis' Horace means the small pieces of different marbles with which the floors were laid, 'tessellae,' or 'crustulae' as they were called. Augustin (de Ordine i. 2) uses the illustration of a mosaic to show the folly of those who look only to small parts of the divine dispensations rather than to the whole, and uses Horace's word 'lapilli:' "Sed hoc pacto, si quis tam minutum cerneret, ut in vermiculato pavimento nihil ultra unius tessellae modulum acies ejus valeret ambitre, vituperant artificem velut ordinationis et compositionis ignarum, eo quod variatatem lapillorum perturbatam putaret, a qua illa emblematu in unius pulchritudinis faciem congruentia simul cerri cumulastrique non possent." Such pavements, which are now so costly as only to be found in the richest houses, were formerly very common in Italy. They were wrought in coloured marbles, or the more ordinary ones in white and black. Pliny (1. xxxvi. c. 64) says that these 'pavimenta' (λίθιστρατα) were first introduced by Sulla, who had one made for the temple of Fortune at Praeneste. He also gives directions for laying the substratum of such floors, and they have been found to correspond with some foundations that have been discovered, particularly in the Roman villa at Northleigh in Oxfordshire. The foundation was laid seven feet deep, and consisted of different layers of rubble, ashes, broken pots, &c., at the top being a layer
Purior in vicos aqua tendit rumpere plumbea. 20
Quam quae per pronom trespidat cum murmure rivum?
Nempe inter varias nutritur Silva columnas,
Laudaturque domus longos quae prospicet agros.
Naturam expellas furca tamen usque recurret, of plaster nine inches thick, in which the 'tesserae' were laid. Most of the good mosaics found at Pompeii are of coloured glass; but there is one of marble supposed to represent the battle of Issus, which surpasses every other specimen that has yet been discovered. It is only part of the whole, but that part contains twelve horses,
a war chariot, and twenty-two persons, including Darius and Alexander with his horse Bucephalus, all admirably executed more than half the size of life.

20. aqua tendit rumpere plumbea] The use of leaden pipes for conveying water is referred to in an inscription containing an edict of Augustus for the supply of water to the town of Venafrum: "Quaque aqua in oppidum Venafrorum it, fluuit, ductur, eam aquam distribuere, describere vendundi causa . . . . . . jus potestatem esse placent, dum ne ea aqua quaerat distributa, discripta . . . . . . erit alter quam fistulis plumbeis d. t.
(dumtaxat) ab rivo p. L. (pedes quinquagenitas) ductatur. "The use of such pipes has been disputed. The above inscription sets the question at rest, and Horace's 'plumbum' means leaden pipes.
(The inscription also settles the question of 'describere' or 'describere.' See A. P.
86. n.; C. ii. 13. 23; and Long's note on Cic. in Verr. ii. 3. 30, where part of the above inscription is given.) Ovid also sees the bursting of a leaden pipe to illustrate the spurting of blood from a wound (Met.
iv. 122):
"Non alter quam cum vititio fistula plumbo
Scinditur, et tenues stridenter foramine
longe
Ejaculatur aquas, atque icibus aëra rum-pit."

Cisterns were called 'castella,' and there were three sorts: 'publica,' which received the water intended for public purposes;
'private,' which were the common property of several persons who clubbed together to built it, and laid on pipes to conduct the water to their 'castella domestica,' the cisterns they had in their own houses. These pipes therefore intersected the whole city.
As mentioned before (S. i. 4. 37, n.), those who could not afford to must have water laid on at their houses resorted to the 'lacus' or public tanks erected for their convenience, mostly by the liberality of individuals, in several parts of the town. The pipes were called 'fistulæ.'

21. trespidat cum murmure] Compare
C. ii. 3. 11: "obliquo laborat Lymphia fugax trepidare rivo."

22. nutritur Silva columnas.] See note on C. iii. 10. 5: "nemus Inter pulchra satum tecta." Compare Tibullus (iii. 3. 15):
"Et nemora in domibus sacros imitantia lucos." Shrubs and flowers were planted in the 'impluvium,' but more largely in the 'peristylum,' which was an open space at the back part of the house, surrounded by columnades, and usually, like the 'implu-vium,' having a cistern or fountain in the middle.

24. Naturam expellas furca] This was a common expression. Laminus restored it in a corrupt passage of Cicero (ad Att.
xvi. 2): "sed quoniam furcilia extrudimur Brundisium cogito," where the common reading was 'furore illo.' Laminus quotes Catullus (105):
"Mentula conatur Pilempleum scandere
montem:
Mutas furcillis praeceptim ejiciunt;"
and Aristophanes (Pax 635):
"oi ëgynkonvtes ev
toûs pinonetas asbainontas ëkatropuneta aliniton
tînês mév (ërîmêta) ëfroíes ës ëwson tîn thôv ekparation;"
where ëfrop ëkperamata is a conceit for cries that acted like a pitchfork to toss peace out of the city. Lucian (Tim. 12) has kai múnon oûchi ek spans me ëxiwthi òîis fîas. Erasmus explains the metaphor in 'furca,' by the practice of forcing down branches of shrubs by means of a forked stick, when which is removed the bough rises again. But that is clearly wrong:
forcible and contemptuous ejection is meant.
Cicero says (Tusc. v. 27), referring to the eagerness of Indian widows to be burnt with their husband's body (a fiction which it appears he believed): "nunquam naturam mos vinceret, est enim ea semper invicta.
Sed nos umbris, deliciis, otiio, langueo, desi-
Et mala perrumpet furtim fastidia victrix. 25
Non qui Sidonio contendere callidus ostro
Nescit Aquinatem potantia vellera fucum
Certius accipiet damnnum propiusque medullis,
Quam qui non poterit vero distinguere falsum.
Quem res plus nimio delectavere secundae,
Mutatae quatient. Si quid mirabere pones
Invitus. Fuge magna: licet sub paupere tecto Reges et regnum vita praecurrere amicos.

Cervus equum pugnae melior communibus herbis dia animum infecimus: opinionibus maloque more delinitum mollivimus." This explains the 'mala fastidia,' which nature, silently recovering her ground, contrives to supplant.

26. Non qui Sidonio] On the position of 'non,' see S. i. 6. 1. This which Obbarius calls 'difficilimum locus' can have but one meaning. 'Not he who knows not skilfully to compare with Sidonian purple
the wool that drinks the dye of Aquinum, shall suffer harm more certain or more deep, than he who cannot tell truth from falshood.' There is strong irony in these words, and they follow naturally on what goes before, as representing the paltry objects with which the mind is employed in what is called fashionable life to the destruction of the moral sense. For examples of this use of 'contendere,' see Forcell.
The MSS. vary between 'propiusve' and 'propiusque.' There is not much to choose between them, but I prefer 'quene.'
The 'murex' and 'purpura,' which were the shell-fish from which the purple dye was obtained, abounded on the coasts of Italy. Those of Balaæ were most celebrated on the west coast (S. ii. 4. 32, n.),
and those of Tarentum on the east (Epp. ii.
1. 207). The foreign purpures (enumerated on C. ii. 16. 36) were most esteemed, and these were imitated by the Italians.
The juices varied in color in various places according to climate and local circumstances.
That part of the fish which yielded the dye was extracted (see S. ii. 4. 32, n.) and stewed with salt in the proportion of 20 ounces to 100 pounds of fish. This caused the juice to flow, and kept it from putrefac-tion. After remaining thus for three days the juice was drawn off into a leader cau-dron, the heating of which gave the colours additional brilliancy. After ten days of this process, by which the fleshy particles were carried off, the liquor was fit for use. The wool was steeped for five hours, and then dried and carded; and this was repeated till the dye was sufficiently imbibed according to the quality required. The 'fuscus' was a marine plant of some kind which yielded a red juice used for colouring. Pliny (xxvi.
10) says that wool was sometimes stained with this before it was steeped in the purple. But it was commonly used in imitation of the real dye. Hence it came to be used for deception in general (see Forcellini).
Aquinum (Aquin), the birth-place of Juvenal, was a large town of Latium on the Via Latina, between Fregellae and Venafrum. We hear no where else of its carrying on a trade in dyed articles; and Comm. Cruq., who says that it did so, seems only to have got his information from this passage. The town of Amyclae, on the Latin coast, seems to have dealt in the same imitation wools which Ovid mentions (Rem. Am. 707):—

"Confer Amyclais medicatum vellus ahenis Murice cum Tyrio, turpium illud erit," which Quintilian quotes (xii. 10. 75), saying, "Ut lana tincta facio citra purpuras placet, at si contuleris Tyriæ lacernæ conspectu melioris obstruatur."

31. Si quid mirabere] This maxim is consistent with the advice to Numicius, Epp. 6. 1.

34. Cervus equum pugnae melior] Steci-chorus is said to have spoken this fable to the citizens of Himera when they were preparing to confer absolute power on Phalaris, and give him a body-guard, as mentioned by Aristotle (Rhét. ii. 20). The fable is told by Phaedrus (iv. 4), with the substitution of a boar for the stag. Bentley (Epist. of Phalaris, p. 27) rather doubts the accuracy of Aristotle in connecting the story with Phalaris. Conon, a grammarian of Augustus' time, and the author of a work called Δηνιγήσις, consisting of fifty narratives, says it was Gelo; but Aristotle's authority is the best.
Pellebat, donec minor in certamine longo
Imploravit opes hominis frenumque recepit;
Sed postquam victor violens discessit ab hoste
Non equitem dorso, non frenum depulit ore.
Sic qui pauperiem veritus potiore metallis
Libertate caret, dominum vehit improbus atque
Serviet aeternum, quia parvo nesciet uti.
Cui non conveniet sua res, ut calceus olim,
Si pede major erit subvertit, si minor uret.
Laetus sorte tua vives sapienter, Aristi,
Nec me dimittes incastigatum ubi plura
Cogere quam satis est ac non cessare videbor.
Imperat aut servit collecta pecunia cuique,
Tortum digna sequi potius quam ducere funem.
Haec tibi dictabam post fanum putre Vacunae,
Excepto quod non simul esses caetera laetus.

37. Sed postquam victor violens] Bentley, not liking 'violens' in this connexion, has changed 'victor' into 'victo,' and put 'violens' before it. There is no authority for the change. The reading of the text is that of every MS. and the Scholiasts, and expresses the struggle with which the horse won his victory and his servitude.
39. potiore metallis] The 'vectigalia' from mines ('metalla') were very considerable at this time. The principal mines were the gold of Aquileia and Icimuli in the Alps, and the silver of Spain.
42. ut calceus olim,] See S. i. 3. 31, n.
'Olim' is used quite indefinitely, as in S. i.
1. 25, 'ut pueris olim dant crustula blandi Doctores.' See C. ii. 10. 17, n. For other instances of 'arete,' 'to gall,' see Forcell.
48. Tortum digna sequi] Acron says,
"Qui magis vinci debet: quoniam vinci est trahi non trabere." I think this gives the right sense, and that the metaphor is not taken from machines, or rope-dancing, or halters, or dog-chains, or boys pulling at ropes of spartum, or any thing of that sort, which the commentators suggest, but from a prisoner led with a rope round his neck
by his captor.
49. Haec tibi dictabam] The imperfect tense is generally used in letters instead of the present, because the action is past to the person receiving the letter. As to 'dictabam,' see S. i. 10. 92, n. The Fanum Vacunae was about three miles from the confluence of the Digesta and the Anio close to the modern town, Rocca Giovane. "Vacuna has been thought by some commentators to be the goddess of leisure. Lilius Giraldus says it is synonymous with Minerva, Varro with Victoria. The opinion of the last seems confirmed by the following inscription found near the temple:—

IMP. CAESAR. VESPASIANVS.
PONT. MAX. TRIB. POT.
CAESARIS. AEDEM. VICTORIAE.
VETUSTATE. DILAPSAM.
SVA. IMPENSA.
RESTITVIT.

A prostrate brick wall covered with cement, and the portion of a small conduit, which supplied the temple with water, were all that we could find of the 'fanum putre Vacunae'" (Kelsall's Classical Excursion from Rome to Arpino, p. 21, London, 1821).
Vacuna was originally a Sabine goddess.
Some suppose that Horace is playing upon the name, as if it were akin to Vacatio, to which notion I attach no value.
This Epistle is addressed to one Bullatius, of whom we know nothing at all. He was travelling in the Aegean and in Asia Minor, and was absent longer than Horace wished, or thought good for him; and the object of this letter is to induce him to return. The commentators generally have a very mean opinion of Bullatius, who has suffered at their hands harder measure than any of Horace's friends. But his chief vice seems to have been a fondness for travelling, and an especial admiration of some of the finest and most ancient towns in the world. If we are to add to this that for some reason or other he was unhappy, and thought to relieve himself by change of scene, he may have been mistaken in his means, but if so plenty of people have shared in his mistake, and when Horace puts before Bullatius as the end of life the enjoyment of the present moment,—a doctrine he seems to have held pretty strongly,—we may doubt whether his philosophy is not at least as bad as his friend's practice. But we need not assume any thing injurious to Bullatius. Such reflections upon travel as occur in this Epistle might naturally have suggested themselves whomsoever it had been written to. We are not to judge Horace's Epistles as we would private letters, meant only for the reading of the persons they are written to.

We have no means of knowing when the Epistle was written.

ARGUMENT.

What think you, Bullatius, of the fine places of the East? are they not all tame compared with our Campus and Tiber? Have you set your heart upon one of Attalus' towns, or are you so tired of travelling that you must settle down at Lebedus, the dullest of places, as you know? And yet I could live there for a time, I confess, forgetting home and every body, to look out upon the stormy sea. But the traveller who turns in to his tavern to rest would not stay there for ever; and he who warms himself by the fire or a hot bath does not make these the end of his life. So if you have been tempest-tost, and have been glad to put into port, is that any reason why you should sell your ship and never come back? Those parts are very well for sick people, but as long as health and fortune let you be at Rome, stay here and praise Samos and the rest at a distance. Be thankful for the blessings of the day, and live for the present hour; so will you be happy whatever place you may be in. 'Tis reason that takes away sorrow, and we only change our clime when we shift our place. It is but a busy idleness that employs us when we seek happiness in ships and in coaches. All you want is here or at dull Ulubrae, if your heart be true and fail you not.
Quid tibi visa Chios, Bullati, notaque Lesbos,
Quid concinna Samos, quid Croesi regia Sardes,
Smyrna quid et Colophon? Majora minorave fama,

1. Quid tibi visa Chios.] The island of Chios was rugged and mountainous ("Chio's rocky isle"); but had, as it still has, an excellent climate and choice wines: its women also were very handsome; in all of which ancient and modern accounts agree. Its principal town, Chios, was a noble city, richly adorned with buildings and works of art. Verres plundered it of some of its best statues (Cic. in Verr. ii. 1. 19). Not a trace of any thing remains. Horace calls Lesbos celebrated, and its fame need not be supposed to depend on its wines, or on Alcaeus and Sappho, as the commentators say. From the Trojan War to the times of the Roman Empire, when Tacitus calls it "insula nobilis et amoena" (Ann. vi. 3), the fortunes of Lesbos, its revolutions and conquests, its connexion with Athens, its tradition of Orpheus, its poets and musicians and statesmen, its cities and works of art, its fields and vineyards and climate, all contributed to make it the most conspicuous island in the Aegean.

Samos (the island) is rough, but the town is mean, and it is called 'concinna' from its buildings, of which a temple of Juno was one of the most conspicuous. Cicero calls it "fanum antiquissimum et nobilissimum" (Verr. ii. 1. 19). Outside and inside this temple was adorned with the finest works of art. There was also a celebrated mole at Samos, made to protect the harbour, which would be an object of interest to a traveller.

The town of Sardes (at Σάρδης), or the greater part of it, from the readiness with which it was burnt to the ground in the revolt of the Ionians, B.C. 499, must originally have been built of slight materials, though it was the seat of enormous wealth during the reigns of the Lydian kings, and especially that of Croesus, whose palace became the residence of the Persian Satraps and was beautified by them, especially by Cyrus the younger, whose gardens are celebrated (Cic. de Senec. c. 17). The strength of its natural position was extraordinary. The river Pactolus flowed through the city. There are ruins still in existence, one of which (of brick) is said to have been the palace of Croesus. There are traces of a theatre and marble piers supporting masses of brick, but all these and the other do not are Roman. Sardes surrendered to Alexander, and after his death passed through the hands of Antigonus, Seleucus, and his descendants, and the kings of Pergamum, till Lydia became part of the Roman province of Asia. Some of the imperial coins of Sardes bear the inscription, ΣΑΡΔΕΙΣ, ΑΣΙΑΣ, ΛΥΔΙΑΣ, ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛΙΣ.

3. Smyrna quid et Colophon?] Alexander the Great found Smyrna in ruins, and conceived the design of re-building it, being prompted by Nemesis in a dream. He did not live to do so, but Antigonus began and Lysimachus finished a new town on a magnificent scale. Strabo (l. xiv. p. 646) gives a description of it, and speaks of it as one of the most beautiful cities of Ionia. There are coins of the empire bearing the inscription ΣΜΥΡΝΑΙΟΝ ΠΡΩΤΩΝ ΑΣΙΑΣ ΚΑΛΛΕΙ ΚΑΙ ΜΕΓΑΘΕΙ. Among other objects of interest was a temple erected to Homer, and called Homerium. The inhabitants claimed him as their countryman, and showed a cave in which it was said he wrote his poems. The ruins that now stand are not many, the Turks having used the materials for their buildings; but excavations have brought to light many statues, inscriptions, and medals.

Colophon, also in Ionia on the Hales, was destroyed by Lysimachus with Lebedus (v. 6). Its chief attraction was its neighbourhood to the shrine of the Clarian Apollo. At present only a few huts stand on the site of this town.

— Majora minorave fama.] 'Be they greater or less than report makes them out to be (I care not which), are they not all tame compared with the Campus Martius and the Tiber?' 'Ve' is probably formed from 'vel,' and had much the same meaning, being chiefly used in poetry. When 'vel' is used an indifferent in the speaker's mind is implied as to which of the two cases or objects be taken. 'Ne' being attached to 'cuncta' shows that the emphasis lies on that word (see Key's L. G. 1444, n., and 1417). Ven. 1483, Ascens. 1529, and most of the old editions, and the great majority of MSS., have 'minorave.' Laminus and many editors after him, including Bentley, have followed the Aldine editions, which have 'minorane.' But 'ne' has little MS. authority. It would be unusual here. "'Ne,' in the second part of a Cunctane praef Campo et Tiberino flumine sordent?
An venit in votum Attalicis ex urbis una,
An Lebedum laudas odio maris atque viarum?
Scis Lebedus quid sit; Gabiius desertor atque direct question, is rare, and perhaps limited in the best writers to 'neque.'" (Key's L. G. 1526, n.) If 'minorete' be the true reading, 'fama' must be followed by a note of interrogation.

5. Attalicis ex uribus] One of the towns of the kingdom of Pergamum besieged by Attalus III. to the Roman people, and constituted a Roman province on the defeat of Aristanicus, A.U.C. 625. The fortress of Pergamum in Mysia was entrusted by Lysimachus to his officer Philetarcs, who made himself independent, and held the town and its vast treasures, of which he had charge, for twenty years, beginning B.C. 263. His successor, Eumenes I., defeated the army of Antiochus the Great near Sardes, and added some of the surrounding country to his possessions, to which his successor Attalus I. added more by the conquest of the Gallo-Graeci, and he first took the title of king of Pergamum. His successors, adhering to the alliance of the Romans, got the benefit of their successes against Antiochus; and the kingdom of Pergamum, when it was handed over to the Romans, included Mysia, Lydia, Ionia, and part of Caria, the principal cities of which (μυρτώπολις) were Ephesus, Pergamum, Sardes, Smyrna, Laodapicus, Cyzicus. Other large towns were Trallies, Adramyttium, Thyatira, &c., nearly all of which are shown by the ruins that remain to have been built and ornamented on a magnificent scale.

6. An Lebedum laudas] Lysimachus, after the battle of Ipsus (B.C. 301), when he became master of the western part of Asia Minor, destroyed the towns of Lebedus and Colophon in Ionia, and transferred their inhabitants to Ephesus. Lebedus never seems to have been rebuilt so as to recover any of its former importance, and the ruins of the old town probably helped to cause the desolate appearance described by Horace. There are some ruins still in existence, marking the spot where this town stood, now called Ecclesia, or Xingi (Cramer). Horace writes as if he knew Lebedus, but did not know the other places he refers to before. He must have seen this place, if at all, in his campaigning with Brutus.

Gabiius was an ancient town of Latium, an Alban colony, 100 stadia from Rome, which excavations, made about the end of the last century, show to have stood on a place now called l'Osteria del Pantano (Cramer). In Cicero's time it was a municipium (Pro Planc. c. 9). During the civil wars it fell into ruins; so that Lucan says,

"— Gabios, Veiosque, Coramque Pulvere vix tectae poterunt monstrare ruinae" (vii. 392).

Propertius mentions its desertion and former greatness in one line,—

"Et qui nunc nulli maxima turba Gabi."

Juvenal mentions it as a place of resort for people in humble circumstances, as—

"Quis timet aut timuit gelida Praeneste ruinam, Aut positis nemorosa inter juga Volsiniis, aut Simplicibus Gabiis?" (iii. 190).

"— jam celebris notique poetae Balneolum Gabiis, Romae condneceris furnos Tentarent" (vii. 5).

In Horace's time, while cold bathing was the fashion under the advice of Antonius Musa, it appears Gabii was resorted to. Horace may have been there himself. See Epp. 15. 9. The town was restored under the Emperors Antoninus and Commodus, and recovered some importance. There was a temple of Juno at Gabii, of which some remains are said to exist still. Several statues and inscriptions were found when the excavations took place.

Fidenae was about five miles from Rome, in the Sabine territory, of which remains are still in existence near Castel Giubileo (Cramer). In A.U.C. 329 the town was destroyed by Aemilius Mamercus (Liv. iv. 9). Previous to this it had been one of the most troublesome of the Roman possessions, making many efforts to recover its independence. According to tradition Romulus found it a large town and conquered it (Dionys. Halic. ii. 23), but it seems never to have risen to any great importance again. It appears from Tacitus (Ann. iv. 62) that Fidenae was a municipium in the time of Tiberius. He relates, in his own style, a dreadful accident by the falling of a temporary amphitheatre, by which he says 50,000 persons were killed.
Fidenis vicus; tamen illic vivere vellem,
Oblitusque morum obliviscendus et illis
Neptunum procul e terra spectare furentem.
Sed neque qui Capua Romam petit imbre lutoque Adpersus volet in cauponam vivere; nec qui or hurt; but they had come from all quarters, and this is no indication of the population. Suetonius (Tib. 40) makes the number upwards of 20,000.
These two towns were proverbially joined together, for besides this place we find in Juvenal (S. x. 59),—
"Hujus qui trahitur praetextam sumere mavis,
An Fidenarum Gabiorumque esse potestas?"
that is, a magistrate of the little towns of Fidenae and Gabii; and S. vi. 55:—
"Magna tamen fama est cujusdam rure paterno
Viventis: vivat Gabii, ut vixit in agro;
Vivat Fidenis, et agello cedo paterno."
Virgil mentions them together as colonies of Alba (Aen. vi. 773):—
"Hi tibi Nomentum, et Gabios, urbemque Fidenam, Hi Collatias impotent montibus arces;"
where it may be observed Virgil shortens the first syllable, whereas Horace and Juvenal and Silius (xv. 91) make it long.
8. tamen illic vivere vellem] There is a good deal of difficulty in respect to the connexion and meaning of this passage and the next. Horace seems to mean that though Lebedus was a place deserted, he could enjoy living there though it cut him off from all his friends for the sake of the fine prospect it gave of the sea, which would be an exaggerated way of speaking. He had probably in mind some occasion when he had admired the sea from Lebedus, and the recollection came upon him strongly as he wrote; or Bullatius may have said something in a letter about the fine prospect, and Horace means that he agrees with him. But, he goes on to say, there is a time for all things. The traveller, when he gets splashed, may be glad of a tavern to retire to and clean himself, but he would not wish to stay there all his life; and the man who has got chilled may be glad of a fire or hot bath, but he does not reckon fires and hot baths the chief good of life; and though you may have been glad to get on shore in a foreign land to escape from a storm, you will surely not think it necessary to stay there for ever. If a man is in health, Rhodes and Mytilene are not the places for him; so come back again while you may, and if you must praise those distant parts, praise them at home. It appears as if Bullatius had been a good while absent and meant to remain much longer.
11. qui Capua Romam] The road Appius made (A.U.C. 442) extended only as far as Capua. It was afterwards extended to Beneventum, and then on by two different branches to Brundusium, according to the general opinion, which however has been disputed (see S. i. 5. 79, n.). The road, of which a description is given by Procopius (de Bell. Goth. i. 14) from his own observations, was formed of blocks of basaltic stone very compactly put together without mortar or clamps, or metal of any sort. Whether there was originally gravel laid over the pavement or not is uncertain; but when it came to be worn by traffic, a coat of gravel may have been given it. Certainly gravel is mentioned in the inscription quoted on S. i. 5. 6, and Horace’s account of the traveller coming in splashed with mud leads to the same conclusion. The pavement is now generally covered with gravel, and “when it is uncovered, as at Capo de Bove, at Fondi, &c., the stones, though irregular, are large and flat, but their edges being worn into hollows they jolt a carriage unmercifully” (Forsyth’s Italy, p. 133). This confirms the interpretation given to the verse last referred to.
12. nee qui Frigus collegit] This passage is not given by Forcellini under ‘colligere,’ and, as far as I can gather, it stands alone. The meaning is plain enough: he who has got chilled, not he who has caught the ague, as some say. Obbarius quotes Ovid (Met. i. 234): “ab ipso Colligit os rhabem.” “Furnos” may be bakers’ ovens or any furnaces to which a man might go to warm himself. As to the ‘balneas,’ ‘public baths,’ the subject is too wide for this place, and all information that is wanted can be gathered from the Dict. Ant.
Frigus collegit furnos et baldnea laudat
Ut fortunatam plene praestantia vitam.
Nec si te validus jactaverit Auster in alto,
Idcirco navem trans Aegaeum mare vendas.
Incolumi Rhodos et Mytilene pulchra facit quod
Paenula solstitio, campestre nivalibus auris,
Per brumam Tiberis, Sextili mense caminus.
Dum licet ac vultum servat Fortuna benignum,
Romae laudetur Samos et Chios et Rhodos absens.
Tu quameunque deus tibi fortunaverit horam
Grata sume manu, neu dulcia differ in annum,
Ut quocunque loco fueris vixisse libenter
Te dicas; nam si ratio et prudentia curas,
Non locus effusi late maris arbiters anfert,
Caelum non animam mutant qui trans mare currunt.
Strenua nos exercet inertia: navibus atque
Quadrigis petimus bene vivere. Quod petis hic est,
Est Ulubris, animus si te non deficit aequus.

17. Incolumi] See S. ii. 3. 137, n.
18. Paenula solstitio, campestre] The ‘paenula’ was a thick outer mantle worn in bad weather over the toga. (See S. ii.
7. 55, n.) The ‘campestre’ was a linen cloth worn round the loins in games or exercises in which the body was otherwise stripped, as also in swimming. The garment which Adam and Eve made for themsehls of fig-leaves, which the Septuagint translators call πηλ arous, and we translate ‘aprons,’ Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xiv.
17) renders ‘campestria,’ ‘conseuerunt folia fici et fecerunt sibi campestria: id est succinctoria genitalium. Nam quidam in-terpretes succinctoria posuerunt. Porro autem campestria latiunum quidem verbm est, sed ex eo dictum quod juvenes qui nudi exercetbant in Campo pudenda operiebant:
unde qui ut succincti sunt campestratos
vulgus appellat.’
19. caminus.] See Epod. ii. 43, n.
22. fortunaverit] Of this word For-cellini says, ‘ubique diis tribuitur quorum in manu Fortunae vis esse dicitur.’ It is only used in reference to the gifts of the gods.
23. in annum,] See Epp. i. 2. 38.
26. effusi late maris arbiters] That is,
a place which commands ‘as we say’ a wide prospect over the sea, such as Lebedus was described to be above.

28. Strenua nos exercet inertia:] This is a very happy expression, and has become proverbial for a do-nothing activity, such exertions as tend to no point and produce no fruits. ‘Navibus atque quadrigis’ obviously means ‘running about by sea and land.’ ‘Quadriga’ is any carriage drawn by four horses (abrest, two under the yoke attached to the pole, and two outside, ‘funales’ fastened by traces), though the word is more generally used for a triumphal or racing chariot than for a travelling carriage, of which there were various kinds.
‘Rhedu’ was the most general name for such a carriage on four wheels (see S. ii. 6.
42, n ). ‘Peterritum’ was another name,
and a third was ‘carrua,’ a later name,
not known in Horace’s time. Of travelling carriages there was a variety of names, each differing more or less from the others:
‘cisia,’ ‘essedum,’ ‘carpentum,’ ‘pilen-tum,’ ‘covinus.’
30. Est Ulubris,] All that we know of Ulubres is that it was a small town of Latium, not far from Velitrae, and that it was a place of no importance. So Juvenal
(x. 101) says:

‘Et de mensura jus dicere? Vasa minor Frangere pannosus vacuis acellis Ulubris?’
EPISTLE XII.

A.U.C. 734.

Iccius, to whom this Epistle is addressed, has been mentioned, with all that is known of him, in the Introduction to C. i. 29, and Pompeius Grosphus in C. ii. 16. It is a letter of introduction for Grosphus to Iccius, who was employed in managing Agrippa's estates in Sicily.

It is possible Horace may have had a letter from Iccius in which he wrote something that gave rise to the reflections with which the Epistle begins; but to affirm from what Horace here says that Iccius was a miser or a misanthrope, or any thing else but a good and sensible man, any one who reads the Epistle with the smallest attention must see is absurd. The Argument will show the spirit of it, and convince any body that Horace means nothing but compliments to his friend.

The date is not difficult to make out. It must have been written shortly after the successes of Agrippa against the Cantabri, who, having been subdued by Augustus in A.U.C. 730, afterwards broke out again and were finally conquered and broken by Agrippa A.U.C. 734, in the autumn of which year this Epistle was written. (See v. 29.) At that time the close of Tiberius' expedition to Armenia, and the restoration of the standards of Crassus would be news just fresh.

ARGUMENT.

Use what you get with discretion, Iccius, and no man can be better off than you. Be content. He is not poor who has enough. As long as you have good health the riches of kings could add nothing to your happiness. Accustom yourself to simple fare and you will never leave it off, though you should be turned into gold, whether it be that money makes no change in our natures, or because, like a wise man, you count every thing less than virtue. We may wonder why Democritus should have neglected his goods to absorb himself in his studies, when we see how you are able in the midst of sordid employments to lift your thoughts to the skies, and to search into the springs of nature, and to balance rival systems.

But be all this as it may, I beg you to receive Pompeius Grosphus, and whatever he asks let him have, for he will ask nothing that is not right. Such friends are cheaply purchased.

If you would know what is going on at Rome, the Cantabrian has fallen before the yalour of Agrippa, the Armenian of Tiberius. Phraates has done homage and accepted the yoke of Caesar. Plenty is showering an abundant harvest upon Italy.
Fructibus Agrippae Siculis quos colligis, Ieci,
Si recte frueris non est ut copia major
Ab Jove donari possit tibi. Tolle querelas;
Pauper enim non est cui rerum suppetit usus.
Si ventri bene, si lateri est pedibusque tuis, nil
Divitiae poterunt regales addere majus.
Si forte in medio positorum abstemius herbis
Vivis et urtica, sic vives protinus ut te Contestim liquidus Fortunae rivos inauret;
Vel quia naturam mutare pecunia nescit,
Vel quia cuncta putas una virtute minora.
Miramur si Democriti pecus edit agellos
Cultaque dum peregre est animus sine corpore velox;

1. Fructibus Agrippae] From what sources Agrippa derived his immense wealth we do not know. From this Epistle we learn that he had estates in Sicily, probably given him after his successes against Sex. Pompeius. Horace means to say to Iecius that he has got a good post and may be very comfortable if he is careful. He probably got a per-cent-age on what he collected. He is generally called the ‘procurator’ of Agrippa, and that as a general term may express his office, since ‘procurator’ was one who acted for another with his authority. He might be called ‘coactor’ as collector of rents, but probably his supervision was general. But he must not be supposed to have been Agrippa’s ‘vivicus.’ The ‘vivicus’ was a slave (see below, Epp. 14. 1).

4. cui rerum suppetit usus.] ‘Rerum usus’ here seems to mean the supply of things needful. ‘Suppeto,’ meaning ‘to be sufficient,’ occurs in Epod. xvi. 64. ‘Pauper’ is here used more in the sense of privation than Horace generally uses it.

5. Si ventri bene, si lateri] This seems to be a translation of Solon’s verses, quoted by Plutarch (vit. c. 2), who says of him πλούτον δ’ οὐκ ἰθαμάζων ἀλλὰ καὶ φησιν ὃμιῶς πλούτειν ὑπὲρ —

πολὺς ἀργυρὸς ἠτί
καὶ χοῦνας καὶ γῆς πυρόφόροι πεδία, ἵπποι θ’ ημινοὶ τοῖς, καὶ ψ’ μόνα ταῦτα περιστε.
γαστρὶ τί καὶ πληρβίζει καὶ ποιιν ἀβρά ταῖν:

7. positorum] ‘Ponere’ is the usual word for putting dishes on the table, as observed on S. ii. 2. 23. Here fine dishes are meant, as we can tell by the context. The nettle ‘urtica’ forms an ingredient in the broth of poor people in this country, and still more in Scotland. ‘Protinus’ means ‘right on,’ and is applied in various ways. Here it means ‘in an uninterrupted course,’ that is, ‘always.’ ‘Ut’ means ‘even supposing,’ as in Epod. i. 21. ‘Contestim,’ ‘straightway,’ has the same root as ‘festino,’ which Gellius (xvi. 14) says is akin to ‘fessus.’ Though ‘Fortunae.rivos’ occurs no where else in extant writers, it seems, as Orelli says, to have been a proverbial expression.

10. naturam mutare] Horace says the same in a different application elsewhere (Epod. iv. 5):

“Licet superbus ambules pecunia, Fortuna non mutat genus.”

12. Miramur si Democriti] I do not agree with Orelli in his interpretation of this passage. (See Argument.) Democritus of Abdera had a considerable patrimony, and he is said to have entertained Xerxes when (as Herodotus relates, viii. 120) he stopped at Abdera on his return from Greece. (See Diog. Laert. ix. 34.) He travelled a great part of his life and squandered his means in this way. (Diog. L. iv. 35. 39.) Cicero says he was reported to have put out his eyes to prevent his mind from being distracted, and that he neglected his patrimony and left his lands uncultivated. (De Finn. v. 29; Tusc. Disp. v. 39.) In whatever way he wasted his goods it seems his name had passed into a proverb.
Cum tu inter scabiam tantam et contagia lucr
Nil parvum sapias et adhuc sublimia cures:
Quae mare compescant causae, quid temperet annum,
Stellae sponte sua jussaene vagentur et errent,
Quid premat obscurum lunae, quid proferat orbem,
Quid velit et possit rerum concordia discors,
Empedocles an Stertiniurn deliret acumen.
Verum seu pisces seu porrum et caepe trucidas
Utere Pompeio Grossoho, et si quid petet ultro

14. Cum tu inter scabiam] There is no reflection on Icicius in these words. His occupation as a collector of rents and overseer of a large estate would bring a good deal of dirty work upon his hands, and the words are well suited to express the contrast between the necessary pursuits of his daily life and the high subjects his mind rose to in spite of such drawbacks.

16. Quae mare compescant causae.] There is much poetical power in these four verses. They are worthy of Lucretius, and in his style.

20. Empedocles an Stertiniurn] Empedocles was born about n.c. 520, and was a man of wealth and station at Agrigentum in Sicily. His philosophy was chiefly his own; but in respect to his physics, which are here more particularly referred to, he seems to have held with the Eleatic school of Xenophanes and Parmenides. What we know of his doctrines is chiefly derived from fragments of two poems in hexameter verse, one called καθαρμοί, a song of expiation (see Müller's Hist. Gr. Lit. p. 254); the other on Nature, unless, which is most probable, they are parts of the same poem. His views are rendered more difficult of comprehension by the pretension, which runs through his works and mystifies his style, to divine powers. (See A. P. 463, sqq.) Lucretius (i. 732, sqq.) says of his poems (of which, so far as the fragments allow, an analysis is given by Ritter, Hist. Phil. i. p. 445, sqq.):

"Carmina quineland divini pectoris ejus
Vociferant, et exponent praecclara reperta;
Ut vix humana videatur stirpe creatus."

They were much read and admired by the Romans. Horace refers perhaps to a dogma imputed to Empedocles (Diog. Laert. viii. 76): στοιχεῖα μὲν εἰναι τέταρα, πῦρ, ἥδωρ, γῆν, ἄεια, φιλίαν τε τῇ συγκρινεται καὶ νικος τῇ διακρινεται: and to this Cicero alludes (de Amic. vii.) when he says "Agrigentinum quidem doctum quemdam virum carminibus Graecis vaticinatum ferunt, quae in rerum natura totoque mundo constarent quaeque moverentur, ea contrahere amicitiam, dissipare discordiam."

Stertownius, of whom all that is known has been told in the Introduction to S. ii. 3, is put again as the representative of the Stoics, who in their physical theory followed Aristotle, and he appears to have had a contempt for Empedocles. 'Stertiniurn' is an adjective formed like 'Sulpicius' in C. iv. 12. 16. 'Stertiniurn acumen' is an expression like 'sententia Catonis' (S. ii. 1. 22, n., and others quoted there, and ii. 1. 72, n.), and 'error Herculis' in Propertius (i. 20. 15): "Quae miser ignotis error perpessus in oris Herculis." 'Deliret' is used perhaps by way of jocular allusion to the Stoic theory noticed in S. ii. 3.

21. Verum seu pisces] This is only a way of changing the subject, and passing from Icicius and his habits to that which was the chief purpose of the Epistle, the introduction of Grosphus. Murdering leeks and onions is a humorous way of alluding to the notion of Pythagoras mentioned in S. ii. 6. 63, and the same is extended to fishes perhaps, because Empedocles, who believed in the metempsychosis, though in a different way from Pythagoras, and held that to take life was against the universal law, declared that he himself had once been a fish, among other things:

δή χῦρ τοτ' ἵψω γενώμην κοῦρος τε κόρη
tē θάμυνος τ' οἰωνός τε καὶ ιξ ἄλος εἰπμυρος ἀγορος.

We need not at any rate suppose that a contrast of luxurious and frugal fare is meant in 'pisces' and 'porrum et caepe.' "Seu laute sive parce vivis" is the explanation of Comm. Cruq., which many commentators have followed.
Defer; nil Grosphus nisi verum orbitat et aequum. Vilis amicorum est annona bonis ubi quid deest. Ne tamen ignores quo sit Romana loco res: Cantaber Agrippae, Claudi virtute Neronis Armenius ececidit; jus imperiumque Phraetes Caesaris accepit genibus minor; aurea fruges Italae pleno defundit Copia cornu.

23. verum] See above (Epp. 7. 98, n.).
24. Vilis amicorum est annona] Horace means to say good friends are cheaply bought because they do not ask more than is right, they are reasonable and modest in their demands, as Grosphus would be. Socrates in Xenophon (Mem. ii. 10), exhorting Diodorus to the duties of friendship, says: νίν δέ έιλά τά πράγματα εύνοιατόνω ίσην φιλος ἀγαθος κτήσασθαι, in consequence of the troubles of the times friends may be bought cheap.
27. Armenius ececidit: ] This is an exaggerated way of stating the case. He refers to the completion of Tiberius' mission mentioned in the Introduction to Epp. 3. At their own request Augustus sent Tigranes to the Armenians, he having been for some time living in exile at Rome. They put the reigning king Artaxias to death and received Tigranes, because they had chosen to have him for their king. Nevertheless it appears that a coin was struck for the occasion with the inscription ARMENIA CAPTA.

—jus imperiumque Phraetes] The restoration of the standards of Crassus took place A.D.C. 734. The account of Justin, quoted in the Introduction to C. i. 26, does not state the case accurately as regards this transaction, and the causes which led to the restoration are so variously stated by the historians that it is difficult to form any opinion from their statements. Suetonius (Aug. c. 21) merely says: "Parti quaque et Armeniam vindicanti facile cesserunt (which refers to a later affair), et signa militaria, quae M. Crasso et M. Antonio ademerant, reposcenti reddiderunt: obsideoque insuper obtulerunt." Tacitus (Ann. ii. 1) says: "Phraates quanquam depulisset exercitus ducesque Romanos, cuncta venerantium officia ad Augustum vererat partemque prolis firmandae amicitiae miserat, haud perinde nostri metu quam fidei popularium diffusus." It suited the Romans to make the most of the concessions of the Parthian king, and the recovery of the standards, which was probably an act of policy independent of any fear of Roman invasion, was proclaimed as a triumph and recorded upon coins with the inscription SIGNIS RECEPTIS. Horace alludes to the circumstance not only here but in C. iv. 15. 6, where the standards are represented as torn down from the proud walls of the Parthians; and in Epp. i. 18. 56, where the same fiction is repeated. That Augustus was particularly anxious to hide the fact that the Parthians were not afraid of him may be inferred from the frequent assertion that they were so. (See C. iv. 5. 25; C. S. 53, sq.; S. ii. 5. 62; Epp. ii. 1. 256.) On the 'Monumentum Ancyranum' (p. 35, ed. Franz. quoted by Orelli) Augustus records that he compelled the Parthians to restore the spoils and standards of three Roman armies, and to seek as suppliants the friendship of the Romans. What Horace here says is, that Phraates accepted or put himself under the law and 'imperium' of Augustus, prostrating himself at his knees ("genibus minor"), —a ridiculous exaggeration. Ovid is nearly as strong (Trist. ii. 227):

"Nunc petit Armenium pacem; nunc porrigit arcus Parthus eques timidâ captaque signa manu;"

and again (Fast. vi. 465, sqq.):

"Crassus ad Euphraten aquilas natumque suosque
Perdedit; et leto est ultimus ipse datus.
Parthe, quid exultas? dixit dea: signa remittes,
Quique necem Crassi vindictam ultor erit."

Property in the following places refers prospectively to the recovery of these standards, showing how much importance the Romans attached to it (i. 10. 13; iii. 4. 9; 5. 48; iv. 6. 79). On this subject see C. iii. 5. 3, and Introduction.
29. Copia cornu.] See C. S. 60, n., and compare the expressions in C. iv. 5. 17, sqq.:

"Tutus bos et enim rura perambulat, Nutrit rura Ceres almaque Faustias," &c.

and 15. 4, sq.:

"— Tua, Caesar, actas Fruges et agris retulit uberes."

The present tense 'defundit' makes it appear that the harvest was going on. But the perfect appears in some MSS. I do not feel certain however that the words are to be taken literally. They may refer figuratively to the general prosperity of the country. 'Diffundit' appears in some MSS. But 'defundit' represents the pouring out from the horn better than 'diffundit,' 'scatters.' In later representations Copia is shown with her horn upturned.

---

EPISTLE XIII.

This letter professes to be written by Horace to one Vinius Asella, the bearer of certain volumes of his to Augustus at Rome, Horace being probably at his own estate. He writes as if he had given his friend particular and anxious instructions when he started as to how he was to behave, and as if this was to be sent after him to overtake him on the road, in order to impress those instructions upon his memory. It is probable that some such jokes may have passed between Horace and his messenger when he started, and that he amused himself afterwards by putting them into the form of this Epistle, which it is not unlikely he showed Augustus; but more I think is made of it in this respect than it will bear, as if it were written for the especial purpose of commending to Augustus the modesty of the writer, and apologizing for the intrusion, and so forth. I cannot see any such design. The person is assumed to be ignorant of the world, and therefore liable to make mistakes in the execution of his mission; to intrude at an unseasonable time; in the eagerness of his affection for Horace to be too officious; to carry the books awkwardly, so as to draw attention, or to stop in the streets in order to tell his curious friends what important business he was upon. The person addressed is called Vinius, and the allusion in v. 8 leads to the inference that his cognomen was Asellus, or Asina, or Asella. Asellus was a cognomen of the Annia, Claudia, and Cornelia gentes. Asina also was of the Cornelia. Porphyrian calls the man Vinnius Asella, while the other Scholiasts call him Caninius (which may be an error for Cainus) Vinnius Fronto Asina. There was one T. Vinius Philopocemus proscribed by the triumvirs for concealing his patronus, whose name therefore was the same, and the, Vinia gens was in existence at this time. It has been conjectured by Dacier, and believed by others, that the person here addressed was one of the five tenants mentioned in the next Epistle, v. 3. The conjecture may be taken for what it is worth. No one can deny that he may have been one of those persons. He was not, as Orelli says, a 'tabellarius' or letter carrier, as his name sufficiently shows, for a 'tabellarius' was a slave, yet some have treated him as such.

What the volumes were that Horace was sending to Augustus it is impossible to say for certain, but I think it probable they contained the three first books of the Odes, and, if so, the Epistle was probably written in A.U.C. 730. Franke thinks so very decidedly; but all do not adopt that date, and some suppose the Satires to be the 'volumina' referred to.
Ut proficiscentem docui te saepe diuque
Augusto reddes signata volumina, Vini,
Si validus, si laetus erit, si denique poseet;
Ne studio nostri pecces odiumque libellis
Sedulus importes opera vehemente minister.
Si te forte meae gravis uret sarcina chartae,
Abjicito potius quam quo perferre juberis
Clitellas ferus impingas, Asinaeque paternum
Cognomen vertas in risum et fabula fias.
Viburus uteris per elivos, flumina, lamas;
Victor propositi simul ac perveneris illuc,
Sic positum servabis, ne forte sub ala
Fasciculum portes librorum, ut rusticus agnum,
Ut vinosa glomus furtivae Pyrrhia lanae,

2. signata volumina.] The number of volumes would depend upon the number of books into which the work was divided, as each book, if it was not very long, would be rolled on one stick. (See Epod. xiv. 8. n.) Round each would be wrapped a piece of parchment, and to this Horace’s seal would be affixed.

3. Si validus.] Augustus had very uncertain health, as Suetonius informs us (vit. c. 51): “Graves et periculoas valetudines per omnem vitam aliquot expertus est.” He had some diseases that returned annually, and he was generally ill about the time of his birth-day (23d September); at the beginning of spring he suffered from cholic, and in the autumn from catarrh. So that, Suetonius adds, in the shattered state of his body he could hardly bear either cold or heat. In winter he wore an extraordinary quantity of clothing, as many as four tunics with a subucula (Epp. i. 1. 95), and a woollen covering for the chest, and trousers or leggings of some sort. In the hot weather he slept with all the doors open and a man to fan him. He never went out in the sun without a broad-brimmed hat (“petasus”); he generally travelled at night, and in a litter, and very short distances; and he preferred going by sea when he could. He took the greatest care of his health: seldom bathed, and washed in tepid water; rarely and cautiously he used hot medicated baths for his nerves. He took little exercise latterly, and that only walking or gently running. Notwithstanding all this he lived to be seventy-six. His physician after the Cantabrian expedition (a.u.c. 730), when he was very ill with liver complaint, was Antonius Musa, concerning whom see below (Epp. 15. 3).

9. fabula fias.] Compare Epod. xi. 8: “fabula quanta fui.”

10. lamos:] This word is only found elsewhere in a verse of Ennius, quoted by Comm. Cruq. and by Torrentius from an old MS. Comm. Cruq. thus explains “lamos”: “lacunas majores continentes aquam pluviam seu caelestem. Ennius: ‘Silvarum saltus, latebras lamasque lu- tosas.’” Acron also says: “lama est aqua in via stans ex pluvia;” and Porphyrion: “lama est vorago, λαμάς enim est inglusses. Lamiae quoque dicuntur devouratrices pnerorun. (As to ‘Lamiae,’ see A. P. 340.) Torrentius mentions an old Lexicon which has “Lamiae: πηλωδες τόπως;” and Forcellini quotes Festus: “Lacuna, aquae collectio quam alli lamam ali lustrum dicunt.” Horace writes as if the man was going some arduous journey over hills and rivers and bogs, whereas he had but thirty miles or thereabouts to go along a good road, the Via Valeria, which passed very near the valley of the Digesta.

14. glomer furtivae Pyrrhia lanae.] Comm. Cruq. says Pyrrha is the name of a slave in a play of Titinius, who stole some wool and carried it away so clumsily that she was detected. ‘Titinius was a writer of comedies who lived before Terence. Pyrrha is formed from Pyrrha, the name of a town in Lesbos, like Lesbia, Delia, &c. For ‘glomer,’ Ven. 1463, Ascens. 1519, and many MSS. and editions, have ‘globos.’ The common reading till Bentley was ‘glomer;’ but such a word does not exist, as Ut cum pileolo soleas conviva tribulis.
Ne vulgo narres te sudavisse ferendo
Carmina, quae possint oculos auresque morari
Caesaris; oratus multa prece nitere porro.
Vade, vale, cave ne titubes mandataque frangas.

Bentley has shown. 'Glomus' is the singular number and neuter gender. See Lucret. (i. 360): "Nam si tantumdem est in lanae glomere quantum Corporis in plumbo," where the quantity of the first syllable is long. In 'glomero' it is short, and in 'globus.' They are all however formed from the same root. 'Glomus' is a clue or ball of wool.

15. Ut cum pileolo soleas] The notion here is of a person of humble station invited to the table of a great man of his own tribe, who perhaps wanted his vote and influence. Having no slave to carry them for him, as was usual, he comes with his cap and slippers under his arm in an awkward manner, not being accustomed to the ways of fine houses. 'Pileus' was a skull cap made of felt and worn at night or in bad weather. The man would bring it with him to wear on his way home from the dinner party. The 'solea' was the slipper worn in the house as 'calceus' was the walking shoe. (See S. i. 3. 127, n.)

16. Ne vulgo narres] "Don't tell it to all the town that you are the bearer of poems from Horace to Augustus, and, though they should stop you and entreat you to tell them your business, press on." Horace, by way of keeping up the joke, supposes his messenger to arrive hot from his journey and to be besieged by inquisitive people wanting to know what brings him to Rome.

19. cave ne titubes] This is perhaps another jocular allusion to his name, and, as an ass stumbling might chance to break what he was carrying, he adds 'mandataque frangas.' In plain prose it means 'take care you make no mistake nor neglect to deliver your charge.'

EPISTLE XIV.

Horace appears to have had a discontented 'vilicus' or steward of his property, whom he had promoted to that post from having been originally one of the lower sort of slaves in the town establishment. While in that position he sighed for what he thought must be the superior freedom of the country; but as soon as he had reached the highest place he could be trusted with on the farm, he began to regret the former days when he could get access to the tavern, and cookshop, and brothel, forgetting, as is common, the vexations that had made him long for deliverance before. This man's discontent suggested to Horace this Epistle. It is such only in form, for we are not to suppose it was ever sent to the 'vilicus.' Horace means to describe his own feelings in respect to the country, and the change in his habits and character, and at the same time to draw a moral from his slave's conduct, as to the temper of those who never know what they want, who are envious, discontented, and lazy.

There is no clue to the date.
ARGUMENT.

Steward of my dear woods and fields, which you despise, though five respectable families they maintain, and send up as many good fathers to Varia, let us see which can root out the thorn quickest, you from the soil, or I from my breast, and whether Horace or his land is best. Lamia’s sorrow keeps me here, but my heart yearns to be where you are. I love a country life, you love a town; and of course he who envies another’s lot dislikes his own. Each lays the blame on the place he is in, whereas the fault is in his own breast. While you were a common slave in the town you used to sigh for the country; now you long for the town. I am consistent, as you know, and am loth to depart when business forces me to Rome. Our tastes are different. What you call a desert I call a beautiful landscape, and what you think beautiful I dislike. You long for the brothel and greasy tavern, and dancing to a wanton’s music, declaring that that paltry place of mine would as soon bear pepper as the grape; and yet with all this dulness you must work forsooth at the hardest of soils, and look after the oxen, and attend to the river banks, and so forth. You know the gay man I was; now I like nothing but simple fare in a plain country way, and though I like my recreation I should be ashamed to be always at play. No envy pursues me into the country, though my neighbours good honouredly quiz me in my new character of farmer. But you had rather go back to your city rations, while the stable boy is envying you your logs and your flocks and your garden, just as the ox longs for the saddle, and the horse for the plough. I advise each to mind the business he understands.

VILVICE silvarum et mihi me reddentis agelli, Quem tu fastidis habitatum quinque focis et Quinque bonos solitum Variam dimittere patres,
Certemus spinas animone ego fortius an tu
Evellas agro, et melior sit Horatius an res.

Me quamvis Lamiae pietas et cura moratur
Fratrem maerentis, rapto de fratre dolentis
Insolabiliter, tamen istuc mens animusque
Fert et amat spatiois obstantia rumpere claustra.

1. Villice silvarum] The ‘villicus’ was one of the principal slaves in the ‘familia rustica’ who had the superintendence of a man’s farm and ‘villa rustica.’ He collected his rents, looked after his slaves, and had charge of every thing but the cattle, of which there was a separate superintendent. Horace says his woods and fields restored him to himself; that is, they gave him liberty and enjoyment of life.

2. habitatum quinque focis] ‘Foci’ is put for ‘families.’ Horace says there lived on his estate five families, the heads of which were good men, who went up from time to time to the neighbouring town of Varia, Orelli supposes, to elect local officers or to attend the market. If Varia was a municipium, as perhaps it was, they may have gone up on town business. Some suppose they were ‘coloni’ (C. ii. 14. 12, n.), lessees who farmed different parts of the estate. Varia, according to the Tabula Theodosiana, was thirty miles from Rome and ten from Tibur, on the Via Valeria. It was four miles from Horace’s farm. Its modern name is Vico Varo.

5. an res.] ‘Praedia’ were ‘res mancipi.’ (See Dict. Ant., art. ‘Dominium,’ for the legal significations of ‘Res.’)

26; iii. 17. ‘Insolabiliter’ occurs nowhere else.

9. rumpere claustra.] At the end of the Circus were stalls (‘carceres’) in which the Rure ego viventem, tu dicis in urbe beatum;
Cui placet alterius sua nimirus est odio sors.
Stultus uterque locum immitterum causatur inique:
In culpa est animus, qui se non effugit unquam.
Tu mediastinus tacita prece rura petebas,
Nunc urbem et ludos et balnea villices optas;
Me constare mihi scis, et discedere tristem
Quandocunque trahunt invia negotia Romam.
Non eadem miramur; eo disadvinit inter
Meque et te: nam quae deserta et inhospita tesca
Credis amoena vocat mecum qui sentit, et odi
Quae tu pulchra putas. Fornix tibi et uncta popina Incutiunt urbis desiderium, video, et quod
Angulus iste feret piper et thus oculus uva, chariots remained till the race was ready to begin. They were then brought out and ranged side by side behind a rope called ‘alba linea’ or ‘calx,’ which was stretched across the course and formed a barrier, beyond which the chariots could not advance till the signal was given and the rope withdrawn. It is from this obstruction or from the ‘carrere’ that the metaphor in the text is taken.

13. se non effugit unquam. Compare C. ii. 16. 19:

“— patriae quis exul
Se quoque fugit?”

14. Tu mediastinus] See Becker’s Gall. Exc. on the ‘Slave Family.’ He had been one of the lowest slaves, used for all manner of work in the ‘familia urbana,’ and by his pitiful countenance (for he was afraid perhaps to speak) had shown how much he wished to be delivered from that condition and to be sent to work on the farm, though that was generally considered to be the greatest punishment (see S. ii. 7. 118, n.). When there he had risen it may be supposed to be ‘villicus,’ for it is not likely a ‘mediastinus’ from the town would be suddenly promoted to be steward of the farm. That was the name for the lowest sort of slave both in the town and country establishment. It is derived, Forcellini says, from ‘medius,’ from his standing in the midst and being at every one’s call. The Scholiasts derive the word from ἄστυ, because he lived in the middle of the city, which is nonsense. Porphyrion, on this passage, explains ‘mediastinus’ to be a ‘balneator,’ one who attended to the baths; and Priscian, quoted by Forcellini and Becker (ubi sup.), limits the name to the bathing slaves. He is corrected by Nonius (ii. 573, ap. Forcell.) but it is probable that the ‘balneatores’ were included in the class of slaves called ‘mediastini.’

19. tesca] Acron says ‘tesca’ (or ‘tesqua,’ as it is in Ascensius’ edition of his text and Porphyrion’s, and so it appears in Comm. Cruq.) are “loca deserta et difficilia,” and that it is a Sahine word. According to the authorities quoted by Festus it signified also a consecrated enclosure, and Varro says much the same (de Ling. Lat. 6. 2). He derives the word from ‘tecor,’ because therein the mysteries of the gods were observed (“tuentur’). There are others, according to Forcell., who believe the word to be derived from the Greek δαίσικος (δαίσις and σκις). There is little probability in either of these etymologies. Accius used the word before Horace, and Lucan after him (vi. 41): “Amplexus fines, saltus, nemorosae tesca, Et silvas.”

21. Fornix tibi et uncta popina] Within the porticus, which ran round the circus, were vaulted chambers (‘fornices’), which were let out to prostitutes; and in other parts of the city, under different buildings, public and private, there were similar vaults employed in the same way. As to ‘popina’ (which he calls ‘uncta,’ because of the greasy viands cooked there), see S. ii. 4. 62, n.

23. Angulus iste feret] Horace writes as if he were repeating the contemptuous language of the villicus. ‘That little nook of yours would produce pepper and frankincense (which of course was impossible) sooner than grapes.’ The grapes grown on Nec vicina subest vinum praebere taberna
Quae possit tibi, nec meretrix tibia, cujus
Ad strepitum salias terrae gravis: et tamen urges Jampridem non tacta ligonibus arva bovemque
Disjunctum curas et strictis frondibus exples;
Addit opus pigro rivus, si decidit imber,
Multa mole docendus aprico parere prato.
Nunc age quid nostrum concentum dividat audi.
Quem tenues decuere togae nitidique capilli,
Quem scis immunem Cinarae placuisse rapaci,
Quem bibulum liquidi media de luce Falerni,
Coena brevis juvat et prope rivum somnus in herba;
Nec lusisse pudet sed non incidere ludum.

the farm he did not think worthy of the name. That Horace made his own wine, and that it was not too bad to put before Maecenas, we know from C. i. 20. Pepper the ancients must have got through some channel from India. 'Thus ' or 'tus' (see Forcell.) 'olibanum,' which is a gum resin, extracted from a tree called now the Boswellia Thurifera, was brought chiefly from Arabia. See Virgil (Georg. i. 57): 'India mittit eur, molles sua tura Sabaei.'

25. mercetrix tibia,] As to 'tibia,' see C. iii. 19. 19; iv. 15. 30. It was played by women as well as men.

26. et tamen urges] This is said with a sort of mock compassion: 'and yet, poor man!' (though you have none of these comforts to help you on your way) you have to go on turning up the rough soil, feeding the oxen, looking out for floods, and all that.' 'Jampridem non tacta' implies that Horace's property had been neglected before it came into his possession. Maecenas had probably never resided there, and perhaps he had not been long owner of it (though he got it, which is not known), when he gave it to Horace. One of the duties the 'villicus' had to attend to was looking to the banks of the river (Digentia), which it was apt to burst or overflow when the rains came down heavily. Horace has 'decere' again in this connexion (A. P. 67):
'Seu cursum mutavit iniquum frugibus amnis Doctus iter melius.'

31. quid nostrum concentum dividat]
'What disturbs our harmony,' or prevents us from agreeing in opinion; which is, that whereas I can look back upon my past enjoyments with pleasure, and am glad to quit them now that my time of life requires to retire to the country, where I am free from jealousies and vexations, you are longing to get back to your former life,

and give up the country, which many a poor slave in the town envies you. So the ox envies the horse, and the horse envies the ox, but my judgment is that each should do the work he is best fitted for.

32. tenues decuere togae] The toga was generally made of a thick woollen cloth, but there were lighter and finer sorts for summer. These were called 'rasae,' because the nap was clipped close. See Martial (ii. 65):

'Dona quod aestatis misi tibi mense De-cembri
Si quereris, rasam tu mihi mitte togam.'

'Nitidi capilli' refers to the anointing of the head at meals. The Romans in their degenerate days carried the use of perfumes, in the shape of fragrant oils and ointments
for the body and hair, at great lengths, Scipio counted the man a coxcomb and something worse, "qui quotidie guen-tatus adversus speculum ornetur, cujus supercilii raduntur," &c. (Gell. vii. 12.)

33. immunem Cinarae] Though Cinara loved money, and he had none to give, yet she was fond of him. As to this woman,
see C. iv. 1. 3, n.

34. media de luce] 'Soon after noon'
(see S. ii. 8. 3, n.). It need not be taken too literally. Their drinking was not uncommonly carried on from three or four o'clock till past midnight, but with idle people, or on particular occasions, it began earlier. 'Bibulum' depends upon 'scis.'
As to Falerni, see C. i. 9. 7, n.

36. sed non incidere ludum] 'I am not ashamed to amuse myself' sometimes, but I am ashamed never to break off' or interrupt
Non istic obliquo oculo mea commoda quisquam
Limat, non odio obscurio morsique venenat;
Rident vicini glebas et saxa moventem.
Cum servis urbana diaria rodere mavis:
Horum tu in numerum voto ruis; invidet usum
Lignorum et pecoris tibi calo argutus et horti.
Optat ephippia bos, piger optat arare caballus;
Quam scit utereque libens censebo exercreat artem.

my amusements.' He liked relaxation, but thought it shame to be always idle.
40. urbana diaria] See S. i. 5, 69, and compare Martial (xi. 108), ‘Sed Lupus usuram puere diaria poscunt.’ The word ‘calo’ was applied to the mennial slaves in general, though it is not a generic title for such, like ‘mediastinus’ (v. 14). See S. i. 6, 133, n. The meaning of ‘argutus’ here is doubtful. Forcellini understands it to be ‘cunning.’ It may mean ‘sharp,’ or it may mean ‘noisy.’
43. ephippia] ‘Ephippium’ was a saddle which the Romans appear to have used, having copied it from the Greeks. It did not differ materially from ours, except that it had no stirrups. A saddle cloth was worn under it, sometimes highly ornamented.

EPISTLE XV.

This Epistle, as the chronologists rightly assume, is not likely to have been written before A.U.C. 731, when Antonius Musa and his cold remedies came into fashion (v. 3, n.). How long afterwards it may have been written is uncertain.

Vala was the cognomen given to one C. Numonius for storming the vallum of a camp, as appears from a coin with his head on one side, and the above exploit represented on the other. The Scholiasts say nothing of Horace’s friend, but the MSS. inscriptions call him C. Numonius Vala. There was one of that name who was a legatus of Varus, and perished with his army in Germany A.U.C. 763, thirty years or more after this Epistle was written. He may have been this man or his son. Estré has given an inscription found at Philae in Egypt, in which it appears that two persons—L. Trebonius and C. Numonius Vala—were at that place ‘A.D. VIII. K. Aprilis,’ in the year when Augustus was consul the thirteenth time, that is, A.U.C. 752. If this be Horace’s friend, as it may, he was a traveller like Bullatius, and has succeeded in recording his travels for a longer time than he expected. But this does not help us to distinguish him from many travellers who have carved their ignoble names upon the sphinxes, obelisks, and Pyramids of Egypt.

Vala was acquainted with the southern coast of Italy, and Horace, who had been recommended by his physician no longer to go as he had been wont to Baiae, had a mind to try one of the southern ports; and he writes to Vala for information about them. It is an unconnected sort of Epistle, with a long digression upon the lament of Baiae at the loss of her invalids, and another upon wines, and a third, which occupies half the Epistle, upon the profligacy of one Maenius, who squandered all his money on good living, and then turned to living at the expense of others. When he had nothing better he ate tripe and abused all spendthrifts, and as soon as he had got any money he spent it in the same way again. Such am I, says Horace; when I am short of money I commend the serenity of a humble life; when a windfall drops in I am ready to be as extravagant as you please.

The connexion of this with the professed object of the letter I do not quite see.

Quae sit hiems Veliae, quod caelum, Vala, Salerni, Quorum hominem regio et qualis via, (nam mihi Baias
Musa supervacuas Antonius et tamen illis

1. Quae sit hiems Veliae,] Velia or Elea, famous as the residence of Xenophanes, the founder of the Eleatic school of philosophy, and the birth-place of Parmenides and Zeno, was a town of Lucania, near the mouth of the river Heles or Elees (Alento). It was said to have been founded about A.D. 300 by the Phocaeans of Ionia on the occasion of their migration related by Herodotus, i. 169 (see Epod. xvi. 15, n.). The ruins of the town still exist on the site called Castelamare della Braca. From the Topica of Cicero (c. i) and Epp. ad Fam. (vii. 20) we learn that Trebatius, who is introduced in S. ii. 1, had estates there. On his way from thence to Rhegium, when he fled from Rome after the death of Caesar, Cicero compiled the Topica, and he wrote the above letter to Trebatius from that place, and probably from his house, which he makes remarks upon. There are many coins of Velia extant with the inscriptions ΤΕΑΗ. ΤΕΑΗΤΩΝ. ΤΕΑΙΑ. Salernum in Campania was situated at the head of the bay of Paestum, now the Gulf of Salerno, on the heights above the modern town, which is close to the sea. It was a Roman colony, but was originally built only as a fortress to be a check on the Picentini, in whose country it was situated. These places were not very much frequented it would seem at this time, but a new doctor was bringing them into fashion. Salernum was situated on a very good road, the Via Aquilia, of which there was a branch from Picenum as far as Paestum. From thence to Velia, about twenty miles, there was no Roman road.

2. Baias] The atmosphere of Baias appears to have been clear, and the place attractive (Horace calls it 'liquidae,' C. iii. 4. 24, and 'amoenae,' Epp. i. 1. 83). This made it the most favourite resort of wealthy Romans. To invalids there was the additional attraction of hot sulphurous springs. See among other places Ovid (A. A. i. 255):—

"Quid referam Baias, praetextaque litora velis.

Et quae de calido sulphure fumat, aquam?"

and Statius (Silv. iii. 5. 96):—

"Sive vaporiferas, blandissima littora, Baias, Enthea fatacide seu visere tecta Sibyllae Dulce sit."

Horace had been in the habit of going to Baias, as we may infer from his connecting it with the Sabine hills, Praeneste, and Tibur in C. iii. 4; but it appears he was now advised to try a different treatment, and seek some other climate. A letter of Cicero's to Dolabella (ad Fam. ix. 12) begins in this jocular way:—"Gratulor Baias nostris siquidem ut scribis salubres repento factae sunt: nisi forte te amant et tibi assentatur et tandiu dum tu ades sunt obitiae sui." The place therefore was not healthy in Cicero's opinion, or Dolabella had found it disagree with him before. 'Supervacuas' means 'useless,' the place would do him no good.

3. Musa — Antonius] This physician was a freedman of Augustus, and came into notice chiefly through curing him of a bad illness he contracted in the Cantabrian expedition (see above, Epp. 13. 3), on which occasion Suetonius (c. 81) tells us that Augustus "distillationibus jecinore vitiato ad desperationem redactus contrarium et ancipitem rationem medendi necessario subit, quia calida fomenta non proderant, frigidis curari coactus, auctore Antonio Musa," which gave rise to the caustic words Seneca makes Livia address to Augustus (de Clemen. 9. 4):—"Fac quod medici solent ubi usitata remedia non procedant, tentant contraria." It seems that in consequence of this cure Musa came into fashion, and having found cold bathing successful with the emperor, he appears to have made that his general principle of treatment. At any rate he recommended it to Horace, the Scholiast says, for his eyes; and he followed his advice, not without reluctance, as it would seem from this Epistle. A statue was erected to Musa by subscription near that of Aesculapius in gratitude for Augustus' restora-
Me facit invisum, gelida cum perluor unda
Per medium frigus. Sane murteta relinqui
Dictaque cessantem nervis elidere morbum
Sulphura contemni vicem gemit, invidus aegris,
Qui caput et stomachum supponere fontibus audent
Clusinis Gabiosque petunt et frigida rura.
Mutandus locus est et deversoria nota

The death of Marcellus may have contributed to making Baiae unpopular for a time, but it soon recovered its character (see above, Epp. 1. 83). There are some fragments of medical works by Musa still extant, and he is frequently referred to as an authority by Galen. The order of the names is inverted, as in C. ii. 2. 3; 11. 2.

3. et tamen illis Me facit invisum.] Though it is all Musa’s fault, he makes Baiae hate me as if it was mine; that instead of enjoying her pleasant climate and warm baths, I am being drenched with cold water in the middle of winter. This seems to be Horace’s meaning, and he goes on to say that the town is angry with all the patients for deserting it. ‘Murteta’ means groves in which houses were erected over sulphur springs for vapour baths.

8. Qui caput et stomachum] A douche bath on the head or stomach would now be thought a strong remedy even by hydro-pathists; but it is one of those which Musa recommended and Celsus likewise (i. 4; iv. 5).

9. Clusinis Gabiosque] Clusium (Chiusi) was one of the chief towns of Etruria, the capital of Porsenna, and the place where the Gauls received that insult which led to their siege of Rome (Liv. v. 33). It was situated on the Via Cassia, about 100 miles north of Rome. The river Clavis (la Chiana) flows by it, forming nearly a complete communication between the Arno and the Tiber. The Clusine marshes, which, according to Tacitus (Ann. i. 79), it was at one time proposed to drain into the Arno, were formed by the overflowings of this river. As to Gabii, see Ep. 11. 7, n. Pea says there are sulphur baths there still. But it was not for sulphur baths that the Romans went there. Strabo (v. 3) mentions several cold streams here called Αλβοῦα, which were useful in many complaints both for bathing and drinking. The baths of Clusium may be those that Tibullus refers to (iii. 5. 1):—

Vos tenet Etruscis manat quae fontibus unda, Unda sub aestivum non adeunda Canem."

10. deversoria] See S. i. 5. 2, n. There was a branch of the Via Appia at Sinuea, leading to Cumae, called the Via Domitiana; but that, as the name shows, was not constructed at this time, and probably the traveller would have to continue along the Via Appia till he came to Capua, from whence the Via Campana went to Cumae to the right, and the Via Aquilia went straight on to Salernum, and the Appia branched off through Caudium to Beneventum. (See S. i. 5. 50. 71.) This explains ‘laeva habena.’ The horse would Praeteragentudus equus. Quo tendis? Non mihi Cuma
Est iter aut Baias, laeva stomachosus habena
Dicit eques; sed equi frenato est auris in ore.
Major utrum populum frumenti copia paseat,
Collectosne bibant imbres puteosne perennes
Jugis aquae; (nam vina nihil moror illius orae;
Rure meo possum quidvis perferre patique,
Ad mare cum veni generosum et lene requiro,
Quod curas abigat, quod cum spe divite manet
In venas animumque meum, quod verba ministret, Quod me Lucanae juvenem commendet amicae.)
Tractus uter plures lepores, uter educet apos,
Utra magis pisces et echinos aequora celent,
Pinguis ut inde domum possim Phaeaxque reverti, Scribere te nobis, tibi nos accurdere par est.
Maenius, ut rebus maternis atque paternis
Fortiter absumptis urbanus coepit haberi,
Scurra vagus non qui certum praesepe teneret,
Impransus non qui civem disinseret hoste,
Quaelibet in quemvis opprobria fingere saevus,
Pernicies et tempestas barathrumque macelli,
Quidquid quaesierat ventri donabat avaro.
Hic ubi nequitiae fatoribus et timidis nil

Pliny also (xiv. 10) says that Tiberius declared it was no better than vinegar, and only owed its character to the doctors.
Horace did not think it worth while to ask about the wine, which he knew was bad.

17. perferre patique.] This pleonasm occurs again in the next Satire, v. 74. It serves to make up a verse. I am not aware it has any other force.

21. Lucanae] This supposes he was going to Velia.

24. Phaeaxque reverti,] See Epp. i. 2.
28.

Fortiter] is used ironically. Urbanus' means 'witty.' Scurra vagus] means a parasite who was ready to dine any where,
paying for his dinner with his jokes.

31. Pernicies et tempestas barathrumque] All these words belong to 'macelli,' as to which see S. ii. 3. 229, n. He was a plague that wasted, a tempest that swept, a gulf that swallowed up, the whole contents of the market.
Aut paulum abstulerat patinas coenabat omasi
Vilis et agninae, tribus ursis quod satis esset;
Scilicet ut ventres lamna candente nepotum
Diceret uarendos, corrector Bestius. Idem
Quidquid erat nactus praedae majoris ubi omne
Verterat in fumum et cinerem, Non hereule miror,
Aiebat, si qui comedunt bona, cum sit obeso
Nil melius turdo, nil vulva pulchrius ampla.
Nimirum hic ego sum; nam tuta et parvula laudo
Cum res deficiunt, satís inter vilia fortis;
Verum ubi quid melius contingit et unctius idem
Vos sapere et solos aio bene vivere, quorum
Conspicitur ntidis fundata pecunia villis.

37. corrector Bestius.] This reading is due to Lambinus, who first conjectured it, and, before the publication of his second dition, found it in one of his oldest MSS., but did not take it into the text. Bentley defends it, and was the first editor to adopt it. Most modern editors have done the same. The meaning, if this be the true reading, is, that Maenius, whenever he could not get a good dinner from one of those who patronized or were afraid of him, would dine prodigiously off tripe and coarse mutton, and then declare all good livers ought to be branded on the belly: a censor as strict as Bestius, who was no doubt some person well known at the time, perhaps as a spare liver or reprover of profligate living, though nothing is known of him now.
'Corrector,' which was used in a technical sense during the empire for a person sent into a province to put it in order, in a special commissioner, is here used (if it is the true reading) for a reformer of morals, as in Epp. ii. 1. 129 it is applied to poets. The old readings and those of most of the MSS.
are 'correctus' and 'correptus.' Some editions have the stop before Bestius and others after it: some also substitute Maenius for Bestius, connecting it with 'idem.'
The amount of authority and support for each of these readings may be learnt from Obbians or Fea. The MS. authority for 'corrector' is very small, but I believe it is right. I can make no sense of the others.

39. Verterat in fumum et cinerem.] This was evidently an ordinary way of speaking. We need not refer the expression to the sacking of towns or the kitchen fire, as an authority quoted by Orelli does.
He got rid of all the plunder he made from fools who patronized him.

41. Nil melius turdo, nil vulva] As to 'turdus' see S. ii. 5, 10, n. The womb and breast ('sumen') of a sow, especially after her first litter, were considered great delicacies.

42. Nimirum hic ego sum: ] Compare
Epp. 6. 40: 'ne fuere hic tu.'

46. ntidis fundata pecunia villis.] 'Villa' was a country house, as opposed to 'aedes,' a town house. There were 'villae rusticae,' farm houses, and 'villae urbanae,' houses in the neighbourhood of towns (to which sense we limit the word in our use of it) or in the country, but built in 'many'
respects after the fashion of town houses.
A good description of both is given in Becker's Gallus. The 'urbanae villae were often built at great expense, with much marble about them, which is referred to in 'nitisid.' 'Fundata' means 'invested.'
I am not aware of its being so used elsewhere.
EPISTLE XVI.

Quintius, to whom this Epistle is addressed, cannot be identified with any known person. The same name is connected with the eleventh Ode of the second book; but there is no reason to suppose them to belong to one person. There is no more reason in the Epistle than in the Ode why a name should appear at all; for the subject is general, that being the liability of men to be deceived in respect to their own goodness and that of others, by the judgment of the multitude. This discourse is added on rather abruptly to a short description of Horace's residence, to follow which any body who can get it should read the Abbé Capmartin de Chaupy's ' Découverte de la Maison de Campagne d'Horace,' printed at Rome in 1767. It is written with great vivacity and intelligence, though, as in such cases must always be expected, with a tendency to strain his proofs and to attempt more precision than the circumstances admit of.

ARGUMENT.

To save you the trouble of asking about my estate, my good Quintius,—my crops and my olives, my orchards, meadows, and vines,—I will describe it to you at full length. There is a chain of mountains broken by a shady valley, of which one side gets the rays of the morning sun, the other of the evening. The climate you would like; and when I tell you I have cornels and plums growing wild, and oaks to give acorns to my swine and shade to their master, you will think Tarentum has drawn nearer to Rome. Then I have a stream that might be called a river, for Hebrus is not more clear or cool, good for the head and good for the stomach. To these retreats, which I love, and which are in truth delightful, you owe it that your friend is alive in September.

You too are counted a happy man: see that you be so; trust not to the judgment of others but to your own of yourself, and remember that none but the sage is happy. The people may think you sound, but if you are conscious of a fever in your veins do not attempt to hide it. If any one talks of your wars in language that fits only Augustus, you shrink from the lie; but when they call you good and wise, do you not accept the compliment? Well, say you, I like to be praised, as I suppose you do yourself. But do you not know that they who give can take away their praise? Give it back, say they, and you must do so. What if they call me thief, parricide, does that affect me? Who but the vicious care for false praise or false blame? Who is the really good man? The vulgar will point to the correct man who keeps the laws and is in favour in the courts, but his intimates may know him better. There are some who do not sin for fear of punishment; but the good man is good because he loves goodness. Your good man who is so looked up to when he sacrifices has his silent prayer to Janus, Apollo, Laverna, that they will promote and hide his knavery. I cannot see wherein he is better than the poor slave who stops to pick up an as from the pavement. He who craves will fear; and he who fears is not a free man in my judgment. He has deserted the ranks of virtue who is ever busied in making money. Sell him for a slave: he is fit for that; whereas the sage can say to his tyrant ' take all I have, put me in bonds if you will; but when I please, heaven will set me free;' for he thinks thus: "I can die; and death is the goal of all things."
Ne perconteris fundus meus, optime Quinti,
Arvo pascat herum an baccis opulentet olivae,
Ponimse et pratis an amicta vitibus ulmo,
Scribetur tibi forma loquaciter et situs agri.
Continui montes ni dissocientur opaca
Valle, sed ut veniens dextrum latus adspiciat Sol, Laevum dissecdens curru fugiente vaporet.
Temperiem laudes. Quid, si rubicunda benigni

1. fundus] See S. ii. 5. 108, n.
2. Arvo pascat herum] Horace had some of his land under his own cultivation; but it was no great quantity, as we may infer from the number of slaves employed upon it (S. ii. 7. 118). The rest he seems to have let (Epp. 14. 2, n.). Part of his land was arable and part of it meadow (Epp. 15. 26—30, and C. iii. 16. 30, "segetis certa fides meae "). He had a garden (Epp. 14. 42). He must also have had vines (23, n.). In short, it was an ordinary farm on a small scale. The second and third verses, though not put directly as a description, are so to be understood I think. Horace recounts the different productions of his farm, while he supposes Quintius to ask about them; otherwise, as de Chaupy says (vol. i. p. 357), the subsequent description is meagre enough, and all we learn is that the land produced wild cherries, plums, and acorns.

— opulentet] This word does not occur in any earlier writer. Forcellini produces only one other instance, from Columella.
3. an amicta vitibus ulmo.] See C. ii. 15. 5: "platanusque caelibs Evincet ulmos." The reader may be interested in what de Chaupy says: "Je remarquerai sur les vignes, qu’elles y on conservé la forme antigue peinte par Horace, qui consiste à y être exactement marieés aux ormeaux. Dans la Vallée de Licence et dans le reste de la Sabine antique en effet les vignes sont en ce qu’on appelle Alberetti. On plante en même tems, et on taille ensuite dans la même saison le cep, qui forme la vigne et l’ormeau qui doit l’élever et l’appuyer: les deux plantes croissent et vivent ainsi ensemble avec un sort si uni, que de même que l’ormeau devient inutile lorsqu’il perd la vigne, ainsi la vigne reste quasi sans ressource si l’arbre qui lui sert d’appui vient à mourir" (iii. 545). He says the olive is less cultivated in this valley than it might be, in consequence of the large quantity that is grown at Tivoli. Other fruits, he says, continue abundant and good in the valley of Licenza. He also speaks of the oak and holm oak (le chêne vert), and the wild plum and wild cherry (‘cornus ’), as growing every where.

5. Continui montes] De Chaupy’s description (iii. 284) of the valley of the Licenza is, that it is the only valley which cuts the vast range of mountains extending from the Campagna above Tibur to Carseoli, about forty-five miles from Rome. Without this valley, he says, this immense body would be a continuous mass. The valley is not formed by a simple depression of the mountains, but they seem to open down to their foundations to produce it. This he thinks gives more force to the word ‘latebrae’ in v. 15. The valley, he says, seems to have neither entrance nor exit. It lies nearly north and south, which corresponds with the description of the text. De Chaupy professes to have found the ruins of Horace’s house on the western side of this valley, its aspect being chiefly east. But there is not much reliance to be placed on this, and the map he has given is likely to mislead, the points of the compass being inaccurately marked. A writer quoted by Obbarius, and said by him to have investigated these localities before De Chaupy (Ger. Heerken’s Notabil. i. ii. p. 31) says: "circumspiciens aliquandu montes oculis dimensus sum qui multo dumo virides vallem videbantur quinque milium includere." This corresponds with De Chaupy’s account and the rough map he gives of the country. The Scholiasts Acron and Comm. Crug. say that both the valley and, one of the mountains was called Ustica; but see C. i. 17. 1, n.

8. Temperiem laudes.] The position of the valley, De Chaupy says, keeps it cool in summer and warm in winter, the latter by the exclusion of the north wind (Traumontana). The Scirocco (‘plumeus Aust- ter’) he says is either excluded altogether, or the little of it that penetrates the mountains is so purged of its noxious qualities on the way that it does no harm.

— Quid, si rubicunda] There is no necessity for making two interrogative sen-
Corna veprés et pruna ferant, si quercus et ilex
Multa fruge pecus multa dominum juvet umbra,
Dicas adductum propius frondere Tarentum.
Fons etiam rivo dare nomen idoneus, ut nec
Frigidior Thracam nec purior ambiat Hebrus, Infirmo capiti fluid utilis, utilis alvo.
Hae latebrae dulces, etiam si credis amoenae,
Incolorem tibi me praestant Septembribus horis.
Tu recte vivis si curas esse quod audis.
Jactamus jampridem omnis te Roma beatum;
Sed vereor ne cui de te plus quam tibi credas,
Neve putes alium sapiente bonoque beatum,
Neu si te populus sanum recteque valentem
Dietitet occultam febrem sub tempus edendi
Dissimules, donec manibus tremor incidat unctis.
Stultorum incurata pudor malus ulcera celat.
Si quis bella tibi terra pugnata marique

14. fluit utilis,] See note on v. 8 of the last Epistle. De Chaupy says of the fonte Ratino that the purity and coolness of its waters were equal to those of Bandusia, which he had visited.

15. dulces, etiam si credis amoenae,] A place may be dulcis from association or other causes: it can only be amoenus from its climate, its beauties, and so forth. Bentley's conjecture, "et (jam si credis) amoenae," is very bad, in my opinion. As to *Septembribus horis," see S. ii. 6, 18, n., and for *audis" see note on v. 20 of the same Satire.

24. pudor malus,] See C. ii. 3. 39, n. He says it is a false shame that would induce a patient to conceal his sores from the physician; and so it is for a man to hide his defects rather than bring them to the wise to cure. The idea contained in vv. 22, sq. is expanded by Persius in his powerful manner (S. iii. 88, sqq.).

25. Si quis bella tibi] 'Tibi' depends on 'pugnata,' which is joined with 'bella' in C. iii. 19. 4. See note on C. ii. 6. 11. Quintius had no doubt seen service; but, says Horace, if any one were to speak of your campaigning in such language as this (then he quotes two lines, said by the Scholiasts to be taken from Varius' panegyric on Augustus, referred to on C. i. 6. 11), you would recognize it as meant not for you, but for Caesar. But if you allow yourself to be called wise and correct, does your life correspond to that name any more Dicat et his verbis vacuas permulceat aures:
"Tene magis salvum populus velit an populum tu
Servet in ambiguo qui consulit et tibi et urbi
Juppiter;" Augusti laudes agnoscere possis:
Cum pateris sapiens emendatusque vocari,
Respondesne tuo dic sodes nomine? Nempe
Vir bonus et prudens dici delector ego ac tu.
Qui dedit hoc hodie cras si volet auferet, ut si
Detulerit fasces indigno detrahet idem.
"Pone, meum est:" inquit. Pono tristisque recedo.
Idem si clamet furem, neget esse pudicum,
Contendat laqueo collum pressisse paternum;
Mordear opprobriis falsis mutemque colores?
Falsus honor juvat et mendax infamia terret
Quem nisi mendosum et medicandum? Vir bonus est quis?
Qui consulta patrum, qui leges juraque servat,
Quo multae magnaeque secantur judice lites,
Quo res sponsore et quo causae teste tenetur.
Sed videt hunc omnis domus et vicinia tota
Introrsum turpem, speciosum pelle decora.
"Nec furtum feci nec fugi," si mihi dicat Servus, "Habes pretium, loris non ureris," aio.
"Non hominem occidi." "Non pasces in eruce corvos."
"Sum bonus et frugi." "Renuit negitatque Sabellus:
Caught enim metuit foveam lupus accipiterque
Suspectos laqueos et opertum milua hamum.
Oderunt peccare boni virtutis amore;
Tu nihil admittes in te formidine poenae:
SIT spes fallendi, miscebis sacra profanis;
Nam de mille fabae modis cum surripis unum,
Damnnum est non facimus mihi pacto lenius isto."
Vir bonus, omne forum quem spectat et omne tribunal, which word occurs no where in the sense of 'sponsore' (as to which see S. ii. 6. 23, n.), and could only apply here to him 'qui respondet,' that is, the 'jurisconsultus.'

The oldest Beldandian had 'res sponsore,' and Cruquiits defends that reading. So does Bentley, and it appears in nearly all modern editions. Torrentius conjectured it, but did not think it would make good sense. 'Tenere,' in the sense of gaining a cause, is used by Cicero (pro Caecina, c. 24):
'Seeueola causam apud centumviro non tenuit.'

46. Nee furtum feci. 'There are some who think themselves very good who would be bad if they dared.' To such an one Horace answers as he answered his slave when he boasted of his goodness. I understand vv. 46—56 to be a dialogue between the slave and his master; the application being easily made is not expressed. Not to be very wicked does not make a man good;
nor is it sufficient to abstain from crime through fear of punishment; our motive should be the love of virtue for her own sake. 'Sabelius' may mean the 'vilicus,' or it may be taken, as Torrentius understands it, for any plain-judging man. Many suppose Horace means himself. Orelli does so. There is a good passage in Cicero (de Legg. i. 14) containing the same sentiment as we find here: 'Quod si poena, si metus supplieici non ipsa turpitude deterreret ab injuriosa facinorosae vita, nemo est in-justus, et incauti potius habendi sunt quam improb weld.

Gellius has a chapter on this subject (xii. 11), and quotes some wise sayings bearing upon it. 'Frugi' is explained on S. ii. 5. 76.

57. Vir bonus, omne forum] He whom the people believe to be good, whom everybody turns to look at as he walks through the Forum, and looks up to when he speaks in the courts. "Gaude quod spectant oculi temille loquentem" (Bpp. 6. 19). There were three principal 'fora' in Rome in which judicial and other public as well as mercantile business was carried on. The Forum Romanum was called simply Forum because it was the largest, and till the time of Julius Caesar the only one. The dictator began the erection of another adjoining the Forum Romanum, and it was called after him: "Forum de manubii inchoavit, cujus area super IIS millies constitit." (Sueton.
Cae. 26). It was finished by Augustus, as appears from the Monumentum Ancyranum: "FOrum JVIIVM et BASILICAM QVAE FVIT INTER AEDEM CASTORIS ET AEDEM SATVRNI CAEPTA PROFLIGATAE OPERA A PATRE MEO PERFECT." Afterwards Augustus built another in the same neighbourhood: "Publica opera plurima exstruxit, ex quibus vel praeceps Forum cum aede Martis ultoris. Fori extruendi causa fuit hominem et judiciorum multitudo quae videbatur, non sufficientibus duobus, etiam tertio indigere." (Sueton. Aug. 29).
Elsewhere Suetonius says it was of no great extent: "Forum angustius fecit, non aaus etrumqere possessoribus proximas domos" (c. 56). In this 'forum' none but judicial business was transacted. The allusions to the Forum Augusti are common. Servius Quandocunque deos vel porco vel bove placat,
Jane pater! clare, clare cum dixit, Apollo!
Labra movet metuens audiri: "Pulchra Laverna, on Aen. i. 294, "Furor impius intus Saeve sedens super arma," says "in fora Augusti introcuentibus ad sinistram fuit Bellum pictum et Furor sedens super arma, nenus vinctus, eo habitu quo poeta dixit." It was partially destroyed by fire, and restored by Hadrian. Other 'fora' were afterwards erected by different emperors (Nerva, Trajan, Vespasian). But in Martial's time there were but three in which judicial business was transacted (iii. 38):

"Causas, inquis, agam Cicerone disertius ipso, Atque erit in triplici par mihi nemo foro."

In every 'forum' there was a 'basilica' (or more than one), a building devoted to the joint purposes of judicial and commercial business. At the end of the building was a part called 'tribunal,' devoted to law (for which the early ones were exclusively intended); and in a later 'basilica' (that of Trajan) there was a 'tribunal' at each end. (See Dict. Ant.) There was in the Forum Romanum the Basilica Porcia, erected by M. Porcius Cato when he was consul, A.D. 542. Plutarch mentions its erection in his life of Cato the Censor (c. 19), and in that of Cato of Utica (c. 5) he says that here the tribunes did their business, and here Cato first distinguished himself as a speaker. There were also two Basilicae Aemiliae erected or restored by Aemilius Paulus. Julius Caesar built one called after him Julia. This is referred to in the inscription above quoted, which places it between the temples of Saturnus and Castor; but the positions of these are doubtful. Here the 'centumviri' held their court. (See S. i. 9. 35, n.) L. Opimius, who was consul, A.D. 633, built a basilica, and called it after himself; and Augustus built one in honour of his grandsons, Lucius and Caius, probably in his own Forum (Sueton. Aug. c. 29). Others were built in the course of time.

58. vel porco vel bove] The animals most commonly sacrificed by the Romans were sheep, pigs, and oxen. On public occasions these three were sacrifices together, and the sacrifice was called 'suovetaurilia,' being a combination of the three names. Such a sacrifice is represented on one of the four panels on Constantine's arch, of which an engraving is given in p. 884 of the Dict.

Ant. Private persons would only sacrifice the three on great occasions, and on some there would be several of each or any of them offered together. Ordinarily they sacrificed but one, according to their means or their zeal.

59. Jane pater] See S. ii. 6. 20, n. This scene is imitated with much power by Persius (ii. 5, sqq.). Ovid has a similar scene (Fast. v. 671, sqq.), where he introduces a mercator praying to Mercury to help him to cheat successfully, and to give him delight in cheating:

"Da modo lucra mihi, da facto gaudia lucro, Et face, ut emtori verba dedisse juvet." (v. 689, sq.)

Silent devotion was not practised or understood by the ancients, any more than it is by the heathen or Mahomedans now: μητὰ φονικὰ εὐχαριστεῖ δεί is reported to have been a saying of Pythagoras. Silent prayers were supposed to be a veil either for improper petitions, or magical incantations, or something wrong. To speak with men as if the gods were listening, and with the gods as men might overhear, is a rule found in more than one writer (Senec. Ep. 10. Macrob. Saturn. i. i. c. 7). See Ruperti on Juv. vi. 539. See also the above passage of Persius, in which he says, "at bona pars hominum tacita libavit acerra;" and S. v. 184, "Lavra moves tacitus." A Hindoo, seeing nothing of the Christian's devotions, believes he practises none; and if you speak to him of your private prayers, he smiles incredulously.

60. Pulchra Laverna,] Laverna was a goddess associated with Mercury as the god who presided over thieving. According to Comm. Cruq. she had a grove dedicated to her on the Via Salaria, which led from Rome through the Sabine country to the coast. But on what part of this road the grove lay we are not informed. The derivation of the word is uncertain. The same Scholiast derives it from 'latere:' "Nam fuere elin et lateriones et laverniones decubantur." Acron derives it from 'lavare:' "Nam fuere lavatores dicuntur," alluding to the λωττοφόρου, I suppose, those who stole the clothes of bathers. Vossius (Etymol. v. Laverniones, p. 282) thinks Acron wrote 'levatores,' and that the word is from 'levare,' as we say 'shop-lifting.'
Da mihi fallere, da justo sanctoque videri,
Noctem peccatis et fraudibus objice nubem.”
Qui melior servo, qui liberior sit avarus,
In triviis fixum cum se demittit ob assem,
Non video; nam qui cupiet metuet quoque; porro,
Qui metuens vivet liber mihi non erit unquam.
Perdidit arma, locum virtutis deseruit, qui Semper in augenda festinat et obruitur re.
Vendere cum possis captivum occidere noli;
Serviet utiliter: sine pascat durus arectque,
Naviget ae mediis hiemet mercator in undis;
Annonae prosit; portet frumenta penusque.
Vir bonus et sapiens audiet dicere: “Pentheu,

Buttmann (Mythol. i. p. 17) identifies Laverna with Latona, the goddess of night.
Forcellini adopts λαβεῖον as his solution.
Obbadius, on this passage, has collected all the opinions respecting the etymology of this word.

64. In triviis fixum] Persius, speaking of a man who was above sordid ways, says
(v. 110), “Inque luto fixum possis transcendere numnum,” where there is a Scholium which says boys used to fasten an as to the pavement, and amuse themselves with watching people stop to pick it up;
and Obbadius quotes an old note on the Prologue to Persius’ Satires (v. 6), relating a similar amusement resorted to by old men. Whether this is referred to by Horace, or whether any such practice existed, is doubtful. It is very likely Horace means no more than a man stooping to pick up an as from the mud, which seems to be the origin of that expression of Augustine’s (Confess. v. 12), “lucrum luteum, quod cum apprehenditur manum inquinat.”

65. qui cupiet metuet quoque;] Horace joins fear and desire in Epp. i. 2. 51:

“Qui cupit aut metuit juvat illum,” &c.;
and ii. 2. 155:

“At si divitiae prudentem reddere possent,
Si cupidum timidumque minus te, nempe ruberes —.”

67. Perdidit arma;] The man who is ever hurrying after money and swallowed up in the love of it is a πίθαστις; he has cast away his arms, and run away from the ranks of virtue. If you catch him, do not put him to death, but sell him for a slave, which is all he is fit for. He may do good service in keeping cattle, or ploughing, or going with his master, the mercator, to sea, replenishing the market, and so forth. One of the principal sources from which the Romans got their slaves in earlier times was the prisoners of war. Dealers always ac-companyed the camp for the purpose of purchasing them. They were sold on the spot by auction, ’sub corona,’ that is with a chaplet on their head to mark them for sale. See Gallus (vii. 4) and Caesar (B. G.
iii. 16). Captives reserved to follow the triumph of the commander were put to death when the procession was over (see Epod. vii. 8, n.). The law-writers derive ’servus’ from ‘servare,’ as prisoners kept for slavery were not put to death. ‘An-nona’ properly signifies the year’s supply of provisions from the harvest. ’Pennis’
signifies provisions of all sorts: ’est enim omne, quo rescuntur homines, penus’ (Cic. de Nat. Deor. ii. 27. 68). Here it means all sorts of imported provisions, preserves, &c. ’Pennis’ is of two declensions, the second and third. The MSS. here are in favour of ‘pennis’ (third), not ’penum.’

73. Vir bonus et sapiens] ’The vir-tuous and wise man can speak to Fortune as Dionysus did to Pentheus.’ The scene alluded to is that in Euripides’ play, Bacchae (489, sqq.):

ΠΕΝ. ἐίην σε δοῦναι δὲι σοφισμάτων κα-γών.

Δ. ἐιθ’ ἵτι παθεῖν ἤτι· τι με τὸ δεινὸν ἰρ.
γάςει;

Π. πρὸτον μὲν ἄβρον βαστρυχον τεμώ

αιβεν.

Δ. ἵφος ὁ πλάκαμος, τῷ ἃθεω β’ αὐτὸν
τρέφω.

Π. ἐπιτα ὑθρον τὸνδε παράδος εκ χεροῖν.
Rector Thebarum, quid me perferre patique
Indignum coges? " Adimam bona." " Nempe pecus, rem, " 75
Lectos, argentum: tollas licet." " In manicis et Compedibus saevo te sub custode tenebo."
" Ipse deus simul atque volam me solvet." Opinor Hoc sentit: " Moriar; mors ultima linea rerum est."

Δ. αὐτὸς μ᾽ ἁφαροῦ τόνῳ Διονύσου φορῶ. Π. εἰρκαίσθε τ᾽ ἐννοώ σῶμα σὸν φιλείζομεν. Δ. λύσει μ᾽ ὁ δαίμων αὐτὸς ὅταν ἐγὼ θέλω.

The two last verses are almost literally translated in vv. 77, 78. Penthues, king of Thebes, hearing that a young stranger has come to his country, giving himself out to be Dionysus, and has tempted all the women to go out and do honour to him, sends his servants to apprehend him. The god allows himself to be taken, and, when brought before the king, describes himself as the servant of Dionysus. Then follows a dialogue, of which the above forms part. The application is obvious. The good man can bid defiance to the reverses of Fortune, since at any time he wishes he can call death to his assistance,—a bad doctrine for good men. Cicero did not approve of it. He says, " vetat Pythagoras injussum imperatoris, id est, Dei, de præsidio et statione vitae decedere" (Cat. Maj. c. 20). The ancients had very loose notions on suicide.

79. mors ultima linea rerum est.] This refers to the 'álba linea' mentioned on Epp. 14. 9, which was the goal as well as starting point in the chariot races.

EPISTLE XVII.

Who Scaeva was there are no means of determining. He is said by the Scholiasts to have been an 'eques,' and they call him Lollius Scaeva from a confusion of this with the next Epistle. Scaeva was a cognomen of the Junii and Cassii, as Torquentius observes. There was one of this name a distinguished officer in Caesar's army (de Bell. Civ. iii. 53). But it is quite immaterial who this Scaeva was. He bears no part in the Epistle, which might have been addressed to any body of his age. Its professed purpose is to instruct a young man how to rise in the world by paying court to great people, which is declared to be an art of no small merit. The chief secret of this art is said to be a well-affected modesty, and a tact in letting your wants be rather felt than heard by your patron, and this is the only advice that is offered. The Epistle ends abruptly, and is a mere fragment.

Horace's argument for what we call tuft-hunting, which was the universal practice of his day, and grew with the growth of tyranny and the decline of the general liberty and the morals of the olden time, is that it was necessary, if a man would do good to himself and his family; that he who affected to despise it, like Diogenes the Cynic, was no more independent than he who practised it, but less so; while the other, like Aristippus, while he sought great people, and exerted himself manfully to gain them, might at the same time be indifferent to the fruits of success, being able to accommodate himself to any condition whatever: a poor apology for a degrading system. Horace had himself been a successful courtier, and now, after many years' intimacy with Maecenas, could talk of his independence, as in the seventh Epistle, and of emulating the indifference of Aristippus; but he must have seen as much as any man of the disappointments, pains, intrigues, jealousies, and crimes that wait upon the practice he recommends. He says it is true a man may live pretty well in obscurity and poverty; but the scope of the Epistle is to commend and to teach a different doctrine. The subject is taken up again in the next Epistle.

ARGUMENT.

Scaeva, you know how to take care of yourself, and how to treat the great people; still, though it be but the blind leading the blind, see if you can get a hint or two from your good friend.

If you wish for sleep by night and quiet by day go to quiet Ferentinum. Happiness is not confined to the rich: he too does well who lives and dies in retirement. But if you would benefit your friends and yourself, go as a poor to the rich man. If Aristippus could learn to dine upon herbs he would have no mind for the company of kings, said Diogenes. If my reprover knew how to keep company with kings, he would have no mind for herbs, said Aristippus. If I please myself, you please the people. My line is better than yours. I pay my duty to the king, and I ride and feed at his expense. You beg alms, and so become lower than the lowest, though you profess to want nothing at all. Nothing came amiss to Aristippus. He aimed high, but was content with what he had; but as for the Cynic, I should like to know how a change of life would have suited him. The one carried himself well in the most crowded places in purple or in rags; the other abhors fine clothes, and will die of cold rather than wear any but his old abulla. Well, give it him back, and let the fool live. Victories and triumphs are very fine things, no doubt; but to win the favour of the great is no mean merit. It is not every body who can go to Corinth. He who is afraid he shall not succeed sits and does nothing. Let him pass. But he who does succeed, is not he a man? Nay, if it be any where, here is the very thing we are looking for. The one shrinks from the burthen because it is too much for him, the other takes it on his shoulders and carries it through. If merit be not an empty name, surely he does well who leaves no stone unturned in pursuing his reward.

They who say nothing in the great man's presence about their own poverty will get more than they ask: there is a great difference between snatching and modestly receiving. And this is the secret of success. He who cries, 'I have a poor sister, an infirm mother, and my estate is worth nothing, and will not support us,' might just as well say at once, 'Give me bread.' Another chimes in with, 'Let me too have a slice in my turn.' If the blockhead could have held his tongue he might have got more meat and less squabbling for it. If a man going into the country with his great friend complains that the roads are so rough, and the cold and wet so bitter, that his box has been broken open and his money stolen, it is like the woman's trick who every now and then cries for a stolen necklace or other ornament, so that at last no one trusts her when she loses in reality: or the man who used to pretend he had broken his leg in order to get a ride, but when he broke his leg in earnest and called for help no one would listen to him.

Quamvis, Scaeva, satis per te tibi consulis, et scis
Quo tandem pacto deceat majoribus uti,
Disce, docendus adhuc, quae censet amiculus, ut si
Caecus iter monstrare velit; tamen adspice si quid

Et nos quod eures proprium fecisses loquamur. Si te grata quies et primam somnum in horam Delectat, si te pulvis strepitusque rotarum, Si laedit caupona, Ferentinum ire jubebo; Nam neque divitiis contingunt gaudia solis, Nec xixit male qui natus moriensque secellit. Si professe tuis pauloque benignius ipsum Te tractare voles, accedes siccus ad unctum. "Si pranderet olus patienter regibus uti Nollet Aristippus." "Si sciret regibus uti Fastidiret olus qui me notat." Utrius horum Verba probes et facta doce, vel junior audi Cur sit Aristippi potior sententia; namque Mordacem Cynicum sic eludebat, ut aiunt:

Kuinocl on the first of those passages) has οὐτε δὲ ὁ ἀτέχνος τὸν ἀτέχνον διώσκειν δύναται, ως οὐδὲ ὁ νυμλός τῶν τυφλῶν. Porphyriion quotes another proverb to the same effect: "Sus Minervam docet." 8. Ferentinum] This was a municipium on the Via Latina, about forty-six miles from Rome, in the country of the Hernici, not, as Torrentius and others say, of Etruria, which was a different place. It still retains its name Ferentino. It appears not to have been much frequented, and Horace recommends his friend to go there, if the object of his wishes is a quiet life, which he says is not without its recommendations.

10. moriensque secellit.] Horace uses 'fallere' as the Greeks used λαβώνειν (see C. iii. 16. 32, n.). It is only used absolutely here and in the next Epistle (v. 109), 'secretum iter et fallentis semita vitae.' Livy uses it without a substantive after it (xxvii. 33): "Speculator Carthaginensis qui per biennium sexellaret Romana reprehensur." Horace takes his expression from the Greek proverb λάθε βίωσας, which appears to have been used by the Epicureans and Cynics. Plutarch opposes the rule in a treatise of which the title is εἰ καλὸς εἰρήνα τὸ λάθε βίωσας. Erasmus quotes Ovid (Trist. iii. 4. 25):

"Crede mihi bene qui latuit, bene xixit, et intra Fortunam debet quisque manere suam." 12. siccus ad unctum.] This Comm. Cruq. explains: "pauper et tenuis ad opulentum et locupletem." So Forcellini explains 'siccus,' but he does not give any other examples of this sense. There is an expression in Theocritus which is obscure, but bears some likeness to this (Id. 1. 51), where a fox is represented as having a design upon a boy's breakfast:—

α.related πάντα δόλον τεύχονα τὸ παιδίον οὐ πρὶν ἀνήγῃν φατι, πρὶν ἤ νάριστον ἐπὶ ἔροισι καθ- ἔργα;

which means that the fox is resolved not to go away till he has left the boy without his breakfast; and ἐπὶ ἔροισι, 'on dry meat,' means no meat at all. So 'siccus' means one who cannot command a dinner, or can only command a dry one. The Cynics were called ἔροιοι from their abstinence, and ἔροιοι among the early Christians was a fast. 13. Si pranderet olus patienter] Diogenes Laert. (i. 68) relates that Aristippus one day was passing Diogenes, the Cynic, while he was washing some vegetables for his dinner, and he was accosted thus: εἰ παύσα παλαῖς προσφέρεσθαι, οἶκ ἂν τράφνων ἡλικίας ἐθράπτως, alluding to his having been the guest of Dionysius of Syracuse. The answer of Aristippus was: καὶ σύ, ἐπιρ γίνεστε ἀνδρόφοτοι οἵμιλλοι, οἶκ ἂν λάχανα ἐπιλυνεῖς. 16. qui me notat.] 'Notare' is used in a bad sense (see S. i. 6. 20, n.).

18. Mordacem Cynicum] The character of Diogenes is proverbial, and the stories that are told of him are too well known to require repetition. He was like his master Antisthenes in character, and adopted his views with a zeal that knew no discretion; so that the popular notion of a Cynic is derived, as in other cases, rather from the disciple than the founder of the school, whose contempt for sensual pleasures, and stern opposition to the self-indulgent spirit of his age, and especially of the Cyrenaic school (whatever defects of judgment he may have shown), place him very high in the history of Greek philosophy. The Cynics received their name from the place where Antisthenes taught, the Cynosarges, a gymnasiu at Athens.

19. Seurror ego ipse mihi,] This verb does not occur elsewhere. The participle is used in the next Epistle (v. 2). Aristippus is supposed to parry the blow ('eludere,' a metaphor taken from the gladiators) of Diogenes thus, by admitting, for the sake of argument, that he acted parasite to a king; yet it was for his own advantage; whereas the Cynic acted parasite to the populace for their amusement; he begged their dirty provisions, and gave them snarling jests in return; and by accepting their alms he acknowledged himself their inferior, and this though he professed to want nothing of them or any one else. Diogenes is said by his biographer and namesake to have been reduced to begging by poverty. It is more probable he was a beggar on principle, considering the possession of property to be an unphilosophical indulgence. 'Hoc' (v. 19) refers to the remotest object, as in S. ii. 2. 29, where see note. On 'equus me portet, alat rex,' the Scholiasts quote a Greek proverb: Πτως με φιλει, ἤπαλης με τρέψει. It occurs in the Παροιμίας of Diogenianus, a grammarian in the time of Hadrian, who compiled a lexicon, of which a collection of proverbs formed part. He says the words were first uttered by a soldier of Philip of Macedon to his mother, who entreated him to ask exemption from service. 'Officium' is commonly applied to attendance on great people. As to 'vilia rerum,' see C. iv. 12. 19, n. S. ii. 8. 83. Lambinus first introduced this reading from some of his MSS., which have been confirmed by many since. The Scholiasts Porphyrian and Comm. Cruq. had 'vilia: verum es,' and nearly all the old editions have that reading, which Torrentius also follows and Dacier. The only modern editor who does so is Fes, and he defends it on the authority of many MSS. and of the Scholiasts. I have no doubt the reading of the text is right. It is in Horace's way, as will be seen in the above places.

23. Omnis Aristippum decuit color] See Epp. i. 1. 13, n. 'Color' is 'color vitae' (S. ii. 1. 60), and corresponds to 'vitae via' below (v. 26). We use 'complexion' in the same double sense.

25. duplici panno.] The asceticism of Diogenes was his way of carrying out the principle of endurance, which was a chief feature in his teacher's system. A coarse 'abolla,' a garment thrown loosely over the person, served him for his dress, without tunic. He is said to have been the first to wear it double and to have slept in it, and those who followed him, adopting the same practice, were called ἔπλοιοματοι and ἄχτενωτες. Juvenal says the Stoics differed from the Cynics only in the use of the tunic (S. xiii. 121): 'Vel Stoicos dogmata legit A Cynicus tunica distans.'

30. Alter Miletii textam] The purple and wool of Miletus were held in great esteem by the Greeks. As to 'chlamys,' see Epp. i. 6. 40, n. It appears that there were several stories current among the ancients about the indifference of Aristippus to dress. Acron, on this passage, relates that Plato saw him, after being shipwrecked, clad in a coarse garment, and commended him, saying he was possessed of that knowledge which enabled him to make good use of small things as well as great. Plutarch (de Fort. Alex. i. 8), says, ‘Αριστιππον θεωμάζουσι τόν Σωκρατικόν, ἤτι καὶ τρίβωνι λιγῷ καὶ Μιλησία χαλαμύντι χρωμνόντι ἀναδεδεισμενὸν ἔτηρε τῷ εὐσήμνον. ‘Cane pejus et angui’ is a proverbial way of speaking. Erasmus quotes it, and explains ‘cane’ as ‘raboio cane.’ ‘Pejus’ occurs in the same connexion, C. iv. 9. 50, “Pejusque letu flagitium sit.”

36. Non cuivis homini] Oú παρτός ἀνδρός εἰς Κόρινθον ἔσθο ὁ πλοῦς. Erasmus says of this that it is “vetustum juxta ac venustum adagium de rebus arduis et aditu periculosus, quasque non sit cujuslibet hominis affectare;” and he adopts one of the explanations of Suidas (διὰ τὸ δισείσβολον εἶναι τόν πλοῦν), that it arose out of the difficulty of approaching the harbour of Corinth. On the other hand, Gallus (i. 8), relating from Sotion, the Peripatetic, a story of Demosthenes, the orator, and Lais, the courtezan, who was a native of Corinth, says that the proverb, which he calls “frequens apud Graecos adagium,” is supposed to have been derived from the exorbitance of this woman’s demands upon her lovers. Comm. Crudp. explains it in the same way, except that he couples with Lais other women of her class at Corinth. Acron explains a little differently, referring to the answer Aristippus gave respecting this same Lais, related on Epp. i. 1. 18. Porphyrian gives no explanation.

37. Serit qui timuit] Other examples of ‘sedere,’ in the sense of ‘cessare,’ ‘to be idle,’ will be found in Forcellini.

42. Experiens vir.] This means an active man who tries every means of success, of which sense examples will be found in Forcellini.

45. Ceput hoc erat, ] He means that modesty and the absence of importunity is the best way of succeeding with the great; not to be eager to ask, but to be modest, and take what is offered. ‘Erat’ seems to mean ‘this is the point I was coming to.’ But see C. i. 37. 4, n. Epp. i. 4. 6, n.

47. Nec vendibilis nec pascere firmus,] ‘Not saleable (because worth nothing) nor sufficient for our support.’ This is the only instance Forcellini quotes of ‘firmus’ with the infinitive mood. It is the construction found so frequently in the Odes. See C. i. 1. 16, n.

49. Dividuo findetur munere quadra.] ‘Dividuum’ is used in the sense of ‘divisum: ‘quadra,’ a fourth part, is put for any fragment. It is often used so by Martial. See Forcell. for several examples.
Sed tacitus pasci si posset corvus haberet

Plus dapis et rixae multo minus invidiaque.

Brundisium comes aut Surrentum ductus amoenum,

Qui queritur salebras et acerbum frigus et imbris,

Aut cistam effractam et subductam viatica plorat,

Nota refert meretricis acunima, saepe catellam,

Saepe periscelidem raptam sibi flentis, uti mox

Nulla fides damnis verisque doloribus adsit.

Nec semel irrisus triviis attollere curat

Fracto crure planum, licet illi plurima manet

Lacrima, per sanctum juratus dicat Osirim:

"Credite non ludo; crudeles, tollite claudum."

"Quaere peregrinum," vicinia rauca reclamat.

50. Sed tacitus pasci Erasmus says this is taken from a fable referred to by Apuleius in his book respecting the ðaímow of Socrates, in which a fox cheats a crow out of something good. How Horace’s crow is connected with that does not appear. A crow open-mouthed is his illustration of a greedy fellow, as “corvum de-ludet hiantem” (S. ii. 5. 56), and it means this here. If Horace had any fable in view, its purport and application are sufficiently plain. A crow cawing over the morsel luck or thieving has thrown in his way, and thereby attracting the attention and envy of his brethren, applies to many a knave who loses his ill-gotten gains through his own folly in parading them.

52. Brundisium comes aut Surrentum To Brundisium a man might go on business; to Surrentum (Sorrento) for the climate and scenery, which are still very healthy and beautiful. Surrentum was made a Roman colony about this time. We do not hear much of it as a place of resort, though from this passage we may infer that it was one of the pleasant spots on the Campanian coast to which the wealthy Romans went for change of air. Its wines were celebrated (see Epp. 15. 16, n.). In mentioning Brundisium, Horace may have been thinking of his journey with Maecenas.

54. viatica See Epp. ii. 2. 26, n.

55. catellam This is a diminutive form of ‘catena,’ and is used for a bracelet or necklace: ‘periscelia’ appears to be an anklet, such as women and young children of both sexes in the East wear universally. But other meanings have been given (see Dict. Ant.). ‘Nota acunima’ means ‘the hackneyed tricks.’

59. Fracto crure planum, The Romans adopted the Greek word παλαυος for a vagabond and impostor (see Forcell.). Acron says it was the name of an impostor who resorted to this trick in order to get a ride. As to ‘plurima,’ see C. i. 7, 8, n. Horace makes the man swear by the Egyptian Osiris, as if that were the most sacred of oaths. Among other new superstitions the worship of Isis had been lately introduced into Rome. Efforts were made from time to time to put it down, and Augustus forbade its being exercised in the city. But under later emperors it became established with the encouragement of the government, in conjunction with that of Serapis. Osiris was not worshipped separately, but shared perhaps the reverence paid to his wife.
EPISTLE XVIII.

Here we have some more advice to a young man beginning life, as to how he should win the favour of the great. The person addressed is young Lollius, respecting whom see the Introduction to Epp. 2 of this book, which is also addressed to him. Though a distinction is drawn between vulgar flattery and refined, and the first is condemned, which in this case could scarcely be necessary, it would be hard to imagine anything more degrading to a fine and independent mind than the arts by which this young man is taught to rise. It seems as if Horace thought there was danger of his being foolish enough to prefer his books or his recreations or intellectual privacy to the boisterous tastes or varying humours of a patron,—a folly of which he must by no means be guilty. He was of an ingenious disposition if there is any meaning in the first verse; but he was to school his tongue and his manners to a refined servility, and to consider this act a virtue. That Horace was himself tired of the life he recommends, we may infer from the closing verses. It would have been more manly if he had held up his experience in the way of warning to the young man that he should avoid these dangerous and dirty waters. But Horace's was not a vigorous mind, but amiable, and in the small ways of the world sagacious to perceive but not prompt to act.

The date is generally assumed to be A.U.C. 734, the year in which the standards were restored by the Parthians. This depends partly on the accuracy of the reading in v. 56, where see note.

ARGUMENT.

Unless I am mistaken in you, my frank Lollius, you are not the person to act the parasite under the garb of a friend. There is as much difference between the two as between a chaste matron and a harlot. But even a greater fault than this is an affectation of roughness which calls itself liberty and virtue. Real virtue is a mean between opposite vices. You shall see one at the rich man's table trembling at his every look, catching up and echoing his words like a school-boy or second-part actor; while another brawls for trifles as one who would not give up a point or have his bawling stopped, no, not if you'd give him his life over again.

(v. 21.) Great people have a horror of the man of pleasure, the gambler, the coxcomb, the covetous, though they may be ten times worse themselves; or the patron, if he sees one aping him, will, if he be kind, admonish him, saying, "I can afford to be a little foolish: you cannot." Eutrapelus, if he had a spite against any one, would give him some fine clothes; for he knew they would change the man's character entirely, that he would turn idle, profligate, spendthrift, and come to abject poverty in the end.

(v. 37.) You must never be inquisitive about your patron's secrets, or betray them; nor praise your tastes at the expense of his; nor take to your books when he wants to go out hunting. On such grounds the brothers Amphion and Zethus quarrelled; and as the one yielded to the other, so do you yield to your patron's kind commands: put away your books and go with him to the chase, and like him earn your dinner by your toil, as the old Romans did, especially now you are young and swift and strong, admired in the Campus, and experienced in war under our great commander. Besides you have no excuse, for you know what manly sports are, you who have practised sham fights at your father's place in the country. He who thinks your taste accords with his, will praise your amusements to the skies.
St bene te novi metues, liberrime Lolli, Scurrantis speciem praebere professus amicum. Ut matrona meretrici dispar erit atque Discolor, infido scurrae distabit amicus. Est huic diversum vitium prope majus, Asperitas agrestis et inconcinna gravisque, Quae se commendat tonsa cute, dentibus atris, Dum vult libertas dici mera veraque virtus. Virtus est medium vitiorum et utrinque reductum. Alter in obsequium plus aequo pronus et imi Derisor lecti sic nutum divitis horret, Sic iterat voces et verba cadentia tollit,

1. liberrime Lolli, See Introduction. On 'metues' see C. ii. 2. 7; and as to 'scurrantis' see last Ep., ver. 19. 'Discolor' Forcellini seems to understand literally, with reference to the difference of dress between the chaste matron and the prostitute (see S. i. 2. 63, n.). He had 'better have classed it' I think with the passage of Persius (v. 52), which he also quotes: "Mille hominum species et rerum discolor usus," where it means only 'different.' On 'prope' see C. iv. 14. 20; S. ii. 3. 32.

7. tonsa cute, With the hair cut short down to the very skin, which would show a want of regard to appearances.

10. imi Derisor lecti] See S. ii. 3. 20, n. 'Derisor' means a parasite whose business it was to keep the company amused with jokes, such as the man described in S. i. 4. 67, sq.:

"E quibus unus amet quavis adspergere cunctos, Praeter eum qui praebet aquam: post hunc quoque potus."

(v. 67.) Take care what you say of others, and to whom you say it. The inquisitive is a babbler; avoid him: he will repeat what you say, and once said it cannot be recalled. Cast not a longing eye on your patron's slaves. He may put you off with one as a present in satisfaction of your claims, or he may be churlish about it and annoy you. Take care whom you introduce, for you may be brought to shame by the faults of another. If you have ever found a man deceive you, get rid of him, and keep your influence for those who are falsely malignèd, for may not the same come upon yourself? Your house is in danger when your neighbour's is on fire, and you had better get it under in its beginnings.

(v. 86.) Those who have never tried it think attendance on the great a mighty pleasant thing. He who has is afraid of it. But as you embarked take these hints for your guidance. The light-hearted like not the solemn, nor the active the slothful, nor the slothful the active, nor the drinkers the sober. Put the cloud from your brow: the modest is liable to be counted reserved, and the silent sour. And withal study wise books and learn the secrets of a quiet life, and to examine your own condition; learn the sources of virtue, the reliefs of sorrow, the means of self-contentment, and innocent tranquillity.

(v. 104.) When I retire to refresh myself by my own cool stream, what, think you, are my reflections and my desires? That I may get no more than I have, that I may live for myself, with a good stock of books and a well-stored barn, and a mind calm and steady. Nay, but this I will make for myself; for the rest I will pray to Jove, for they are all that he can give or take away.

1. liberrime Lolli, See Introduction. On 'metues' see C. ii. 2. 7; and as to 'scurrantis' see last Ep., ver. 19. 'Discolor' Forcellini seems to understand literally, with reference to the difference of dress between the chaste matron and the prostitute (see S. i. 2. 63, n.). He had 'better have classed it' I think with the passage of Persius (v. 52), which he also quotes: "Mille hominum species et rerum discolor usus," where it means only 'different.' On 'prope' see C. iv. 14. 20; S. ii. 3. 32.

7. tonsa cute, With the hair cut short down to the very skin, which would show a want of regard to appearances.

10. imi Derisor lecti] See S. ii. 3. 20, n. 'Derisor' means a parasite whose business it was to keep the company amused with jokes, such as the man described in S. i. 4. 67, sq.:

"E quibus unus amet quavis adspergere cunctos, Praeter eum qui praebet aquam: post hunc quoque potus."
HORATHI FLACCI

Ut puerum saevo credas dictata magistro
Reddere vel partes minum tractare secundas.
Alter rixatur de lana saepe caprina, Propugnat nugis armatus: "Scilicet ut non Sit mihi prima fides, et vere quod placet ut non Acrier elatrem! Pretium aetas altera sordet." Ambiguitur quid enim? Castor sciat an Dolichos plus;
Brundisium Minuci melius via ducat an Appi.

13. dictata magistro] See S. i. 10. 75, n.
14. partes minum tractare secundas.]
'Secundas agere' is a phrase taken from the stage. On the Greek stage there were only three actors, who were called πρωταγωγιστίς, δευτεραγωγιστίς, τριταγωγιστίς respectively. (See A. P. 192, n.). In the Roman plays and 'mimes' there was no such specific distinction; but as on our own stage there is always one principal actor that takes the lead, while the rest act parts more or less subordinate, so it was with the Romans; and 'secundas agere,' though it sometimes applied to a particular actor if there were any more prominent than the rest, was applied to all except the chief, especially in the mimes, which con-isted chiefly of dumb show, and in which the inferior parts were all arranged, and the actors played, so as to support the principal character. In most cases one of the parts was that of a parasite. Torren-tius quotes the following story from Suetonius (Calig. 57), which illustrates this,
and shows that 'secundae' was applied to the inferior parts generally: "Cum in Lauroculo mimo, in quo actor proripiens se ruina sanguineum vomit, plures secundarum experimentum artis darent, cruro scena abundavit." Here the man who played the principal part is called simply 'actor.'
The subordinates were also called 'adju-tores.' (See S. i. 9. 46. n.) 15. de lana saepe caprina.] This is plainly equivalent to 'nothing at all.' The Greek proverb corresponding to this, and usually quoted in this place, is πατὶ ὧν αὐξὰνει χαλκὸς, founded upon a story told in court, according to the Scholiast on Aristophanes (Vesp. 131), by Demosthenes.
A man hired an ass, and in the heat of the day lay down in the shadow of the animal, whereupon the owner turned him out of his place, saying he had hired the ass, but not his shadow; and on this they went to law.
16. Scilicet ut non] 'Soothly, that I should not be believed before any body else, and boldly bark out what I know to be true! Why if you would give me my life over again I would not accept it on such conditions.'
19. Castor sciat an Dolichos plus;]
This is the same sort of gossip that Mac-cenas is represented as discussing with Horace (S. ii. 6. 44, sqq.). The Scholiasts say that these persons were players or, as others say, gladiators. Comm. Crug. has the name Dolichos, and Crugiwas was the first to adopt it on his Scholiast's authority and that of three MSS., which have never since been confirmed. Most of the modern editions have Dolichos. Bentley retains Docilis, the reading of Porphyron and all the old editions. Orelli says this name occurs in inscriptions as that of a freedman,
but he prefers the other. I feel no certainty about it. If Dolichos be right, the name is that of a Greek slave, derived from Doliché, a town of Thessaly.
20. Brundisium Minuci[ "The northern part of Samnium was traversed by a road which communicated with the Valerian, Latin, and Appian ways, and, after crossing through part of Apulia, fell into the Via Aquilia in Lucania. There is reason for supposing this to have been the Via Num-icia" (Cramer's Italy ii. 260). It would be difficult from this description to follow the road, and the writer's map does not help us. It is only once more mentioned by any classical writer (Cic. ad Att. ix. 6:
"Cohortesque sex quae Albae fuissent ad Curium via Minucia transisse"), and all
we learn from that is, that the road passed by Alba, which lay between the Via Latina and Via Appia, about half-way between Tusculum and Aricia. Continuing in that direction it would fall into the Via Latina at Teamum in Campania, a little above Capua, from which place the Via Appia was continued to Brundisium. If this were the line of the Via Minucia (it is impossible to say anything about it with certainty), it would be a more direct route than the Via Appia, but it was probably a worse road.
The MSS. and editions vary between the Quem damnosa Venus, quem praeeeps alea nudat,
Gloria quem supra vires et vestit et ungit,
Quem tenet argenti sitis importuna famesque,
Quem paupertatis pudor et fuga, dives amicus
Saepe decem vitis instructior odit et horret:
Aut si non odit regit, ac veluti pia mater
Plus quam se sapere et virtutibus esse priorem
Vult, et ait prope vera: "Meae (contendere noli)
Stultitiam patiuntur opes; tibi parvula res est:
Arta decet sanum comitem toga; desine mecum
Certare." Eutrapelus cuicunque nocere volebat Vestimenta dabat pretiosa: beatus enim jam
Cum pulchris tunicis sumet nova consilia et spes,
Dormiet in lucem, scorto postponet honestum
Officium, nummos alienos paseet, ad imum
Thrax erit aut olitoris aget mercede caballum.
Arcanum neque tu scrutaberis illius unquam,
Commissumque teges et vino tortus et ira;
Nee tua laudabis studia aut aliena reprendes,
Nee cum venari volet ille poëmata panges.
Gratia sic fratrum geminorum Amphionis atque names Numici and Minuci here and in the above passage of Cicero. The great majority are in favour of Minuci; and it is -enough to settle the question that the second syllable in Numicius is long, as we have seen in the sixth Epistle. There was a Porta Minutia leading out of Rome, the site of which is unknown; but it is probable that this road led from that gate, and that it was in the southern part of the city. I do not know upon what grounds Obharius affirms, with Orelli's approval, that it is certain this road led through the country of the Marsi and Sannites.

22. Gloria quem—vesti[ See S.i.6.23.n.
25. decem vitis instructior] 'Furnished with ten times as many defects.'

26. veluti pia mater] Like a fond mother who wishes her child to be wiser and better than herself, the patron advises her client.
30. Arta decet sanum comitem toga;]
The size and shape of the toga are referred to on Epod. iv. 8.
31. Eutrapelus] Aristotle defines ευτρα-pελα as πεταδευμιν ὑδρας, a refined impertinence (Rhet. ii. 12). It appears that for his wit this name was given to
P. Volumnius, an eques, and friend of
M. Antonius, to whom are addressed two of Cicero's letters (vii. 32, 33). See his life in the Dict. Biog., art. 'Eutrapelus.'
From the way Horace writes he must have been dead at this time.
34. honestum Officium,] Orelli refers to the last Epistle (v. 21), 'Officiam facio,' and explains 'honestum officium' by the proper respect due from the poor to the rich, the client to his patron, getting up early to attend his levee, and so forth. I do not agree with him. I think it means the calls of duty, in a better sense. See
Epp. ii. 2. 67.
36. Thrax erit] See S. ii. 6. 44. Horace says he will get into debt, and be reduced to hire himself as a gladiator, or drive a costermonger's hack. 'Ad imum,' is not elsewhere used as 'ad extremum,' but it means 'when he has got to the lowest point.' As to 'nummos alienos,' see Epp.
i. 2. 12, n.
33. vino tortus] This expression is repeate din A. P. 435:
'Reges dicuntur multis urgere cululis,
Et torquere meru quoem perspexisse laborant.'
41. Amphionis atque Zethi] These Zethi dissiluit, donec suspecta severo
Conticuit lyra. Fraternis cessisse putatur Moribus Amphiion: tu cede potentis amici
Lenibus imperis, quotiesque educet in agros
Aetolis onerata plagis jumenta canesque,
Surge et inhumanae senium depone Camenae,
Coenes ut pariter pulmenta laboribus empta;
Romanis sollemne viris opus, utile famae
Vitaeque et membris, praesertim cum valeas et Vel cursu superare canem vel viribus aprum
Possis. Adde virilia quod speciosius arma
Non est qui tractet: scis, quo clamore coronae
Proelia sustineas campestria; denique saevam
Militiam puer et Cantabrica bella tulisti
Sub duce qui templis Parthorum signa refigit
Nunc, et si quid abest Italis adjudicat arnis.
Ac, ne te retrahas et inexcusabilis absis,

brothers, the sons of Antiope by Zeus, were different in their dispositions, the one being given to music, and the other to country pursuits. Euripides and Pacuvius each wrote a play called Antiope, the former of which is referred to by Plato (Gorgias,
p. 485) in connexion with a dispute of these brothers. Zethus it appears had a contempt for Amphion’s lyre, and advised him roughly to throw it away, and take to arms, and to useful pursuits, like his own.
 Cicero alludes to Pacuvius’ play (de Orat.
 ii. 37): “Miro cur philosophiae sicut Zethus ille Pacuvianus bellum indixerim.” Propertius contrasts the brothers as “du-rum Zethum et lacerim Amphiona mollem” (ii. 15. 31); and the Scholiast on Hesiod (Theogonia 60) says, ‘Αμφιωο και Ζηθεος αδιφωτ μίν ἡσαν, ἤπερ δή γεγοναί ταῖς προαιροίς. See the fragments of Euripides’ play in Deindorf’s collection (Poet. Sc. Gr. p. 62, sqq.) for further notices of these brothers.
i. 6. Aetolian toils are toils fit for Meleager, the king of Aetolias, and the destroyer of the Calydonian boar; of whom, just returned from the hunt, there is a picture in the Museo Borbonico, discovered at Pompeli in the house that bears the name of Meleager. With ‘senium’ compare ‘se-nectus’ (Epod. xiii. 5).
48. pulmenta laboribus emptis:] Compare
S. ii. 2. 20: “tu pulmentaria quaere Sudando.” ’Pulmentum’ originally signified any thing eaten with ‘puls,’ porridge or gruel (a common dish with the early Romans) to give it a flavour. It came afterwards to signify any savoury dish.

54. Proelia sustineas campestria:] Compare A. P. 379: “Ludere qui nescit campestribus abstinent arnis.” The allusion of course is to the games on the Campus Martius.

55. Cantabrica bella] See Introduction, and C. ii. 6, Int.; iii. 6, Int.; iii. 8.

As to ‘Parthorum signa’ see Epp. 12. 27.
The following line is merely a flourish of flattery like this about the standards. Augustus had no intention of extending the Roman empire at this time, and had no occasion to do so if the Parthians were humbled, which they were not. No further conquest was attempted till A.D.C. 739, when some of the Alpine tribes were beaten by Drusus and Tiberius, and their country made into a province. (See C. iv. 4, Int.)
The great majority of MSS. have ‘refigit’ (v. 56). But all the old editions till Cruquius had ‘refixit,’ which is also supported by MS. authority. Bentley defends ‘refigit,’ and it appears in most modern texts.
The present tense is relied upon for fixing the date of the Epistle. See Introduction.
56. Ac, ne te retrahas] Horace adds another reason why he should not refuse to join the amusements of his patron, that he cannot say he has no turn for that sort of thing, for he is wont to amuse himself at home with such sports as sham fights,
Quamvis nil extra numerum fecisse modumque Curas, interdum nugaris rare paterno; Partitur lintres exercitus; Actia pugna Te duce per pueros hostilis more refertur; Adversarius est frater, lacus Hadria, donee Alterutrum velox Victoria fronde coronet. Consentire suis studiis qui crediderit te, Fautor utroque tuum laudabit pollice ludum. Protinus ut moneam, si quid monitoris eges tu, Quid de quoque viro et cui dicis saeppe videto. Percontatorem fugito, nam garrulus idem est, Nec retinent patulae comnissa fideliter aures, Et semel emissum volat irrevocabile verbum. Non ancilla tuum jeeur ulcerat ulla puerve Intra marmoreum venerandi limen amici, Ne dominus pueri pulchri caraeve puellae Munere te parvo beet aut incommodus angat.

though Horace does not mean to say he is given to excess and wasting his time on such matters. 'Extra numerum modumque' is literally 'out of time and tune.' Where the estates of the elder Lollius lay, or who was his other son, is not known. The two brothers, it appears, got up a representation of the battle of Actium on a pond perhaps in their father's grounds, and they made the slaves ('pueros') act the soldiers and sailors, while they took the principal characters themselves, the elder acting Augustus, and his brother M. Antonius.

64. velox Victoria fronde coronet.] Victoria is always represented as a young female with wings, and with a palm-branch or a wreath in her hand, or both, as in a medal of Galba in Osielius' Thes. Ixviii. 2. Orelli mentions one case in which she is represented without wings, but perhaps the figure has been mistaken. Gellius (vi. 6), discussing the use of 'praepetes' as an adjective for 'penne,' quotes from Mattius Illiad the line "Dum det vincenti praepe Victoria palmam." Victoria had a temple at the foot of the western slope of Mons Palatinus, on the site of the house erected by Valerius Poplicola. Livy (ii. 7) calls it "Vicaceptae acies," a name compounded of 'vinc-o' and 'pot-i-or.' Her statues were numerous. See in particular Livy (xxvi. 20).

66. Fautor utroque—pollice] In the fights of gladiators the people expressed their approbation by turning their thumbs down, and the reverse by upliftng them. When a gladiator had got his adversary down or disarmed him, he looked to the spectators for this signal, and according as the thumb was up or down he despatched or spared the man. I suppose he took his orders, or the mass of the spectators took their lead, from the personages who sat near the 'podium.' (Epp. i. 6. n.) Thus 'fautor utroque pollice' is a proverbial way of speaking, as Pliny says (xxviii. 2): 'Pollices eum faveamus premere etiam proverbio jubemur.' See Juvenal (iii. 36): "Munere nunc edunt et verso pollice vulgus Quem libet occidunt populariter;" on which passage Ruperti says the thumb was pointed to the breast as a sign that the fallen man was to be run through there.

68. Quid de quoque viro et cui] 'Quoque' is from 'quisque,' not, as Bentley takes it with Porphyrius, from 'quis,' with the conjunction. The Scholiast says: 'Tria dicit: quid dicas, de quo dicis, et cui dicis.' 'Percontator' is a gossip who is always asking questions in order to retain the answers, generally in a perverted form. His ears are always open to pick up remarks ('patulae'), and his tongue always active to repeat them.

72. Non ancilla tuum] See S. ii. 5. 91, n. as to the use of 'non' for 'ne.'

75. Munere te parvo beet] 'Lest he be Qualem commendes etiam atque etiam adspice, ne mox
Incutiant aliena tibi peccata pudorem.
Fallimur et quondam non dignum tradimus: ergo
Quem sua culpa premet deceptus omite tueri,
Ut penitus notum, si tentent criminia, serves 80 Tuterisque tuo fidentem praesidio; qui Dente Theonino cum circumoditum, equid
Ad te post paulo venienda pericula sentis?
Nam tua res agitum paries cum proximus ardet.
Et neglecta solent incendia sumere vires.
85
Dulcis inexpertis cultura potentis amici:
Expertus metuit. Tu dum tua navis in alto est
Hoc age, ne mutata retrorsum te ferat aura.
Oderunt hilarem tristes tristemque jocosī,
Sedatum celeres, agilem navumque remissi;
Potores bibuli media de nocte Falerni
Oderunt correcta negantem pocula, quamvis
Nocturnos jures te formidare vapores.
Deme supercilio nubem; plerumque modestus
Occupat obscuri speciem, taciturnus acerbi.
90 generous and make you happy with this trumpery present, or be cruel and refuse it you.' This seems to be the meaning; that is to say, the patron may take it into his head to gratify his dependant with a present of the slave he admires, and then think he has done enough for him, or he may refuse to make him the present, and this would give him pain.

78. quondam] See C. ii. 10. 17, n.
S. ii. 2. 82.
79. deceptus omite tueri.] 'When once you have found yourself deceived, do not take him under your protection, but reserve your influence for one you thoroughly know, that if need be you may be able to shelter him from calumny; for when the good are slandered what do you suppose may not happen to yourself?' The Scho-liasts say Theon was a man of malignant wit in Horace's time, and Comm. Cruq.
says he was a 'libertinus' who provoked his 'patronus,' and was turned out of his house with the present of a 'quadrans,' and told to go and buy a rope to hang himself.
This is all we know of him.
91. Potores bibuli media de nocte] This verse is omitted in several old MSS., including all the Parisian, except that two of the later ones have it as a correction. But most MSS. have it, and all the editions.
Orelli puts it in brackets, and Bentley susppects it to be an interpolation, but he substitutes 'liquidi' for 'bibuli,' and 'luce' for 'nocte,' if the verse is to stand. His emendation may be dispensed with, but the verse must remain till a better can be found,
for a subject is required for 'oderrunt.'
This, Orelli says, can easily be supplied from the context; but there is no reason to suppose Horace left the antithesis incomplete in this case when he has expressed it so particularly in the others. 'De media nocte' is 'after midnight,' as 'media de luce' in Epp. i. 14. 34, of which verse this is a repetition. Orelli's explanation, 'per mediae noctis tempus,' is not strictly correct.
(See S. ii. 8. 3, n.)
93. Nocturnos—vapores.] The majority of MSS. and the oldest editions have 'tepores,' which Bentley also edits. Most modern editors have, I think rightly, on the authority of some good MSS., though against the most esteemed, adopted 'va-pores,' which appears in Ascensius' edition of 1519 and most of the sixteenth century.
Either word must be taken to signify the feverish heats that come on after much drinking.
95. obscuri] 'Reserved.'
Inter cuncta leges et percontabere doctos,
Qua ratione queas traducere leniter aevum;
Num te semper inops agitet vexetque cupidio,
Num pavor et rerum mediocriter utilium spes;
Virtutem doctrina paret, naturane donet;
Quid minuat curas, quid te tibi reddat amicum;
Quid pure tranquillat, honos an dulce lucellum,
An secretum iter et fallentis semita vitae.

Me quoties reficat gelidus Digentia rivus,

98. Num te semper inops] The MSS. and editions vary here again. The readings are 'num,' 'non,' 'me,' and 'nec.' Bentley has 'me,' which is the reading of most of the editions of the sixteenth century, and of several MSS. of Lambrinus, Cruquius, Fea, and others. 'Non' is the reading of Ven. 1483, and others of that century; but it has no meaning, and I take it to be a corruption of 'num.' 'Ne' I imagine to be later than 'non' (which appears in Porphyrian's commentary), and a substitution for it, in order to make sense of the passage. 'Num' appears in all Orelli's and the Parisian MSS.

100. Virtutem doctrina paret.] Whether virtue is a science (σποτίμη) and capable of being taught (διδακτή) is discussed by Socrates in Plato's dialogue Menon. He held that virtue consists in the science of good; that to be virtuous we must know what is good, for we must do what is good because we know it to be good, or there is no virtue in doing it. He held that we have a moral sense by which good is perceived, but the moral sense, like other faculties, requires to be strengthened and assisted by instruction, and to that extent virtue is διδακτή. Practically this appears to have been the doctrine of Socrates. It is expressed in several places in the Memorabilia, as in 1. ii. c. 6, § 39: δι' ους δ' έν άνθρώποις αριταλ λέγονται, σκοπού-μένος ευρίσκει πάσας μαθήσις τι και μέλην αυξάνομαι. Comp. iii. 9. 1, and iv. 1. 3, sqq. Antisthenes and the Cynics held the same opinion, in the following out of which Socrates himself was led into some contradictions. The question was a common rhetorical theme in Horace's day: hence Cicero mentions it with other kindred topics in his treatise 'De Partitio Oratoriae,' c. 18: "ubi queritur quemadmodum quidque fiat; ne quonam pacto virtus paritur, naturane an ratione an usum?"

103. fallentis semita vitae.] See Epp. 17. 16, n., and compare Juvenal (x. 363): "semita certe Tranquillae per virtutem patet una vita."
Quem Mandela bibit, rugosus frigore pagus,
Quid sentire putas? quid credis, amice, precari?
Sit mihi quod nunc est, etiam minus; et mihi vivam
Quod superest aevi, si quid superesse volunt di;
Sit bona librorum et provisae frugis in annum
Copia, neu fluitem dubiae spe pendulus horae.
Sed satis est orare Jovem quae donat et auferat:
Det vitam, det opes, aequum mi animum ipse parabo.

It would appear that Horace had imitators among those who abused him; and if we are to understand him to mean what he says, there were those who took his convivial odes literally, and, coupling them with the example of the old Greek poets, conceived that the way to write verses was to propitiate Bacchus and drink a great deal of wine. But perhaps he only means that they took to writing in the same strain all about wine and driving dull care away, and so forth, which at second hand would be very poor stuff. Such servile imitators he speaks of with great disgust; and, while he exposes their shallowness, he accounts for their malevolence towards himself by the fact of his not having sought their company or hired their applause. He at the same time claims to have been the first to dress the lyric measures in the Latin language, while he defends himself for having adopted the metres of another by pointing to the examples of Sappho and Alcaeus, and takes credit for having avoided the virulence of Archilochus while he imitated his verse. This is introduced by the way, the chief purpose of the Epistle being to show the folly of his calumniators and the cause of their abuse.

There is no allusion to any of his poems but the Epodes and Odes; the publication of the latter probably brought out the imitations and the abuse referred to, and I think it probable that this Epistle was written at no great distance of time after that publication. Franke gives A.U.C. 734 for the date. I should be inclined for the above reason to put it a year or two earlier.

ARGUMENT.

Cratinus tells us, Maecenas, that no water drinker can write good verses. Ever since Liber took them into his choir the Muses have taken to drinking. Homer would not have praised good wine if he had not liked it; and as for father Ennius, he never began to sing till he was drenched. As soon as ever I issued my edict that the Forum was only fit for the sober, and that song was not for the serious, straightway all our poets began to drink night and day. But what, shall a man look stern and go bare-footed and with scanty toga, like Cato, and then think he is imitating Cato's virtues? Iar-bitas broke his heart with envy of Timagenes, and tried in vain to be elegant and eloquent as he.

(v. 17.) An example only to be followed in its defects is sure to mislead; and yet if I by any chance were to look pale, they would all be taking cummin to make them look so too. The servile herd! how their fuss stirs my bile and mirth by turns.

(v. 21.) I was the first to tread new ground, and he who has confidence in himself may always lead the swarm. I was the first to bring the iambic into Latium, imitating the measure but not the subjects and fierce spirit of Archilochus, even as Alcaeus and Sappho mingled his measures but not his temper with their own. I then was the first to make him known to my countrymen; and it is my delight that the good read and handle what I have written. But why do any read me greedily at home and only go abroad to abuse me? Because I do not condescend to canvass the critics and buy their approbation. This is what annoys them. And if I say, "I care not that my poor verses should be recited to crowded audiences;" "Oh! you mock us," say they,
"and are keeping your fine things for ears divine; for of course honey only comes from your hive: you are the only fine gentleman, in your own eyes." I am afraid to retort, so I only say, "I don't like your ground, and beg a postponement of the sport;" for such sport only leads to wrath, and wrath to fighting and bloodshed.

Prisco si credis, Maecenas docte, Cratino,
Nulla placere diu nec vivere carmina possunt
Quae scribuntur aque potoribus. Ut male sanos
Adscripsit Liber Satyris Faunisque poétas

1. Maecenas docte, Cratino.] He addresses Maecenas elsewhere as "doctus utrisque linguae" (C. iii. 8. 5). Cratinus, though he lived to a good old age, and kept his powers to the last, as we have seen
(S. i. 4. 1, n.), was a proverbial drunkard.
Aristophanes (Pax, 703) says he died of the shock caused by seeing a cask full of wine broken to pieces; on which the Scholiast says: οἱ φίλοιον ὁ Κρατίνος καὶ ἀυτὸς ἔν τῇ Πυτίνῃ λίγηι σαφῶ. This play was that which gained him the prize against Aristophanes the year before he died, when he was ninety-five years old. He kept up his jovial spirit therefore to the last. In Athenaeus (ii. 9, p. 140, Schw.) there is an epigram of Nicenactus:

οἶνος τοι χαριτώτε ρίλει ταχύς ἵππος ἀοκός

ΰέωρ δέ πινών οὔθεν ἀν τίκοι σοφῶν.

ταύρ' ἔλεγεν, Δόλωνε, καὶ ἐπιείκεν οὐχ ἐνός ἀοκό

Κρατίνος, ἀλλὰ παντὸς ἀδώδης πίθον.

4. Adscripsit Liber] 'Adscribere,' as Porphyrian remarks, is a military term;

therefore to 'adscripsit' he adds 'in legionem suam.' As to his attendants the Fauns, Pans, and Satyrs, see note on C. ii.
19. 4. The poets immediately under the protection of Dionysus were the lyric, the dithyramb having been performed first at the Dionysia. Compare C. i. 1. 31:

"Nympharumque loves cum Satyris chori Secernunt populo."

So the poet is called "ciles Bacchi" (Epp. ii. 2. 76). Liber, the Latin divinity, is here, as elsewhere, confounded with the Greek Bacchus or Dionysus, with whom he had only this in common, that he presided over vines. So in C. i. 16. 7 the maddening Dionysus is called Liber, and Alcaeus is said to have sung of 'Liberum et Musas Venereumque' (C. i. 32.
6). In C. iii. 21. 21, Liber is associated with the Graces who were the earliest attendants of Dionysus. (See Pind. Ol. xiii. 18.) In C. i. 12. 21 he is spoken of as 'proelii audax,' with reference to the Vina fere dulces oluerunt mane Camenae.
Laudibus arguitur vini vinosus Homerus;
Ennius ipse pater nunquam nisi potus ad arma
Prosiluit dicenda. "Forum putealque Libonis Mandabo siccis, adimam cantare severis;"
Hoc simul edixi non cessavere poëtae
Nocturno certare mero, putere diurno.
Quid, si quis vultu torvo ferus et pede nudo
Exignaeque togae simulet textore Catonem, Virtutemne repraesentet moresque Catonis?
Rupit Iarbitam Timagenis aemula lingua, says that from his childhood he showed in his voice and countenance, and also in his amusements, an immovable, unimpressive, and firm temper. He seldom laughed or even smiled; and, though not passionate, enough his anger was roused it was not easy to pacify him. He set himself against the fashions of the times in dress as in other things, and often went out of doors after the dinner without his shoes and tunic; and the fashion being to wear a 'lacerna' of bright colour, he chose to wear a dark one. (Cat. c. 1. 6.) He may have worn his toga of smaller dimensions than other people, from the same dislike to the usages of the day.—'Textore' is oddly used here, where we should expect 'textura.' The observation of Comm. Cruq., "Textor hic proprium nomen est inventoris exiguae togae,' is absurd.
15. Rupit Iarbitam Timagenis] It appears that the person here called Iarbitas was a Mauritanian by birth, and that his Roman name was Cordus or Codrus.
(Scotist quoted by Cruquius in his Supplement, and by Fea.) Timagenes was a native of Alexandria, where he was taken prisoner by A. Gabinius and sold as a slave.
He was sent to Rome and bought by Faustus, the son of Sula, who gave him his freedom. He afterwards taught rhetic, and got into favour with Augustus, but was so free with his tongue that he offended his patron, and was forbidden his house. He afterwards ingratiated himself with Asinius Pollio, who gave him a home in his house at Tusculum, where he died.
The Scholiasts agree in saying that Cordus, called Iarbitas (whether by Horace in joke or generally by his contemporaries), from Virgil's Numidian king Iarbas, endeavouring to imitate Timagenes, and failing broke his heart with envy. Porphyrius adds by way of exemplification, "se et wars of Bacchus with the giants and in India. In the ode celebrating the praises do Dionysus (ii. 19) we have "Evoe, parce Liber, Parce, gravi metuende thyro;' and below (Epp. ii. 1. 5) his apotheosis is spoken of (as also in C. iv. 8. 34), where there is the additional confusion that he is called by his essentially Latin title 'Liber pater.' It must be borne in mind therefore that,

though the poets confound these names,
Liber was a Latin divinity, while Dionysus was entirely Greek; and that when the orgies of the latter were introduced into Italy they were expelled again, the Liberalia, an innocent and cheerful festival, being substituted for the impure rites of the Dionysia.
5. Vina fere dulces] The ancients did not spare the reputation of their poets in this matter; for besides the fame of Cratinus mentioned above, Alcaeus, Anacreon, Aeschylus, Aristophanes, and many others,
have the credit of inducing freely in wine.
As to Homer, there is no foundation in his poetry for Horace's libel, which is simply absurd. David might as well be charged with excess because he spoke of wine with making glad the heart of man. Ennius said of himself that he only wrote when he had got the gout: "Nunquam poëtor nisi podager.'
6. 35, n. Horace speaks as if he had de-ivered an 'edictum' that the business of the Forum was only fit for the sober and dull, who had nothing to do with poetry;
whereupon all that would be thought poets took to drinking day and night. The old editions and a large number of MSS. have 'edictum.' Bentley restored 'edixi,' for which there is ample authority. 'Putere' is a stronger word for 'olerere,' used above, v. 5.
12. Quid, si quis vultu torvo] Cato of Utica is here referred to, of whom Plutarch

HORATHII FLACCI

5

10

15

646
Dum studet urbanus tenditque disertus haberit.
Decipt exemplar vitis imitabile; quodsi
Pallerem casu biberent exsanguem cuminum,
O imitatores, servum pecus, ut mihi saepe
Bilem, saepe jocum vestri movere tumultus!
Libera per vacuum posui vestigia princeps,
Non aliena meo pressi pede. Qui sibi fitid
Dux regit examen. Parios ego primus iambos
Ostendi Latio, numeros animosque seicutus
Archilochi, non res et agentia verba Lycamben.
Ac ne me foliis idea breviribus ornes
Quod timui mutare modos et carminis artem,
Temperat Archilochi Musam pede mascula Sappho,
Temperat Alcaeus, sed rebus et ordine dispar,
Nec socerum quaeit quem versibus oblinat atris,
Nec sponsae laqueum famoso carmine nectit.
Hunc ego non alio dictum prius ore Latinus

stomachum abruptit (?) dum Timagenem et dicendo et pascendo amicos conatur aequare." Weichert (Poet. Lat. Rel. pp. 390, sqq.) identifies Cordus with Virgil's Codrus (Ecl. v. 11): "aut Alconis habes laudes aut jurgia Codri;" and vii. 26: "invidis rumpantur aut ilia Codri." The story, as told by the Scholiasts, might easily be made out of the text; and there is not much reliance to be placed on their statements when such is the case.

18. biberent exsanguem cuminum.] The fruit of this plant, which is a pleasant con- diment, is described by Pliny (xx. 15) as giving a pallid hue to the complexion. Persius also speaks of "pallentis grana cumin" (S. v. 50). It is a plant of Eastern origin. We are familiar with it through the proverbial use of the name by our Lord in his denunciation of the Pharisees, who gave tithes of mint, anise, and cuminan, but neglected the weightier matters of the law. It was used to express lillteness or meanness in any shape. Horace says, if he happened to look pale by any chance, his imitators would eat cuminin seeds to make them look interesting and poetical like him.

23. Parios ego primus iambos] The iam- bics of Archilocho of Paros, who flourished in the first half of the seventh century n.c. (See A. P. 78.) As to his attacks upon Lycambes, see Epod. vi. 13, n. His daugh- ters, who were included in Archilocho's in- vectives, and one of whom was betrothed to the poet, are said like their father to have hanged themselves.

26. ne me foliis] "Ne minore corona me decores" (Comm. Cruq.). Horace says he is not to be blamed for imitating Archi- lochus in his measure and the structure of his verse, for Alcaeus and Sappho did the same; they tempered their Muse with the measure of Archilocho. The iambics of Archilocho are imitated by Horace in the Epodes. Other measures of his he has imitated in the Odes. It is not so easy to see from the fragments that remain of the three poets wherein Sappho and Alcaeus imitated Archilocho, who flourished more than half a century before them. There is little left of Archilocho but his iambics. A greater variety of metres is found in the fragments of the other two; but how far the different measures were invented or modified by them it is impossible to say. Alcaeus wrote verses in what is called the Sapphic metre, and Sappho in the Alcaic. The style of Sappho's fragments shows the reason why Horace calls her 'mascula.' There is a vigour about the language and illustrations which goes beyond the ordinary power of female passion, the delicacy of which nevertheless is not lost in the bold- ness of its expression. It is impossible not to see the working of intense feeling in some even of the shortest fragments. (See C. ii. 13. 24, n.)

32. Hunc ego non alio dictum] Com- pare C. iv. 9. 3:
Vulgavi fidicen; juvat immemorata ferentem
Ingenuis oculisque legi manibusque teneri.
Scire velis mea cur ingrätus opuscula lector
Laudet ametque doni, premat extra limen iniquus?
Non ego ventosae plebis suffragia venor
Impensis coenarum et tritae munere vestis;
Non ego nobilium scriptorum auditor et ultor
Grammaticas ambre tribus et pulpita dignor:
Hinc illae lacrimae. "Spissis indigna theatris

"Non ante vulgatas per artes Verba loquor socianda chordis;"

and 3. 23: "Romanae fidicen lyrae.” ‘Hunc’ Orelli refers to Alcaeus, comparing
C. iii. 30. 13:

"Princeps Aeolium carmen ad Italos Deduxisse modos.”

It may refer to Archilochus. I do not feel certain about it. Forcellini only mentions one other example of ‘immemoratus’ from Ausonius. ‘Ingenui’ Orelli thinks is opposed to ‘libertinis,’ of which class Horace’s chief detractors, the grammarians, were. (See below, v. 40, n.) But Horace may have had many friends who, like his father, were not ‘ingenui’ in this sense. (See S. i. 6. 6, n.) I think he means candid or uncorrupted.

35. ingratus] I suppose he means that the reader is ungrateful who gets gratification from his poems at home, and yet abuses them abroad; so that ‘ingratus’ in fact belongs to the second clause as well as ‘iniquus.’ The reason Horace gives is, that he does not go about seeking the good opinion of vulgar critics, giving them dinners and cast-off clothes, and so on, but keeps himself to the company of respectable authors, listening to their writings and getting them to listen to his own. The language is taken from the notion of canvassing for votes at an election.

36. Impensis coenarum] Persius has imitated this (S. i. 54):

‘—— Calidum scis ponere sumen:
Scis comitem horridulum trita donare lacernā.”

39. auditor et ultor] These words are reciprocal. The man who listens to a prose recitation has his revenge when he recites in return. Here it is meant in a good-humoured way. Juvenal’s first Satire begins “Semper ego auditor tantum? nunquamne reponam?” As to the practice of recitation among friends and in public, see C. ii. 1. Int., and S. i. 4. 73, n.

40. Grammaticas ambre tribus] Those who made a profession of literature were called ‘literati,’ ‘eruditi,’ or ‘grammatici.’ The last name was applied principally to those who kept schools or gave lectures, of whom there were a great many at this time at Rome. Inferior writers would give a good deal for their favourable opinion, which would help their books into demand among their scholars. Suetonius has given a short notice of the principal teachers, of whom he says the first was Crates of Mallos (a city of Cilicia), who was sent on an embassy to the senate by Attalus, king of Pergamum, between the second and third Punic wars. He broke his leg, and during the confines this accident caused he gave lectures, ἀκοντίας, which example was followed by others. At first, Suetonius says, they took the works of deceased writers and commented upon these. Afterwards they came to writing themselves and descending upon their own works, then upon those of their contemporaries. The name applied probably to all who kept schools, even for children, in which grammar (that is, literature either Greek or Roman, ancient or modern) was taught, as opposed to the teachers of rhetoric, music, &c. But there were others whose lectures were attended by youths who had left school and by grown up persons. Some of them, Suetonius says, made a great deal of money. Those that he mentions were with few exceptions freemen. (See above, v. 32, n.) Horace calls them ‘critici’ elsewhere (A. P. 78). ‘Pulpitum’ meant any raised platform from which speeches were delivered. Here it applies to that from which the teachers delivered their lectures.

41. Hinc illae lacrimae.] This became a conventional way of speaking after Terence (Andr. i. 1. 90): “Atat hoc illud est: Hinc illae lacrimae, haec illa est misericordia.” Cicero, who was very partial to Scripta pudet recitare et nugas addere pondus," Si dixi: "Rides," ait, "et Jovis auribus ista
Servas; fidis enim manare poëtica mella
Te solum, tibi pulcher." Ad haec ego naribus uti Formido, et luctantis acuto ne secer ungui,
"Displicet iste locus," clamor, "et diludia posco."
Ludus enim genuit trepidum certamen et iram,
Ira truces inimicitias et funebre bellum.

Terence, uses this phrase (pro Ceolio, c. 25):
"Hinc illae lacrimae nimirum, et haec causa est horum omnium scelerum et criminum,"
So Juvenal (i. 168): "Inde irae et lacrimae."

41. Spissis indigna theatris] 'Theatra' here means any audience before which recitations of this kind might take place, though the poetry of popular writers was recited in the theatres by 'mimi' and 'mimae.'

43. Jovis auribus] This is the same sort of expression as S. ii. 6. 52: "deos quoniam propius contingis." 'Manare' is not commonly used as a transitive verb. Forcellini gives two instances from Pliny. Juvenal (vi. 623) has "longam manantia labra salivam," and (xv. 136) 'cujus manantia fletum Ora puellares faciunt incerta capilli;' and Ovid (Met. vi. 311) 'ubi fixa caecumine montis Liqutur et lacrimas etiamnum mammora manant;' in all of which places the best MSS. seem to be in favour of the accusative, though many have the ablative. In this construction we find the like words, ' flere,' ' plueres,' ' stillare,' 'rorare,' &c. The expressions 'nugis,' 'poëtica melia,' 'tibi pulcher,' all seem to apply rather to the lyrical compositions than to the Satires. (See Introduction.)

45. naribus uti] See S. 6. 5, n., and Persius (i. 40): "nimis uncis Naribus indulges."

47. diludia posco.] This word occurs nowhere else. Acron explains it as "tempora quae gladiatoribus conceduntur ut intra dies quinque pugnet," an interval of five days allowed to gladiators between their contests. What should have suggested this limitation it is hard to say. But the word explains its own meaning. 'Iste locus' must mean the 'pulpita' or 'spissa theatra' above mentioned. It seems as if the speaker meant to gain time, and without declining the contest made objections to the ground, and asked for a postponement, the language of the arena or palaestra being kept up. The meaning in plain terms is that he does not wish to be brought into competition with others in the way of public recitations or criticism, because such matters, though they may begin in good temper, generally issue in strife and bad passions. 'Iste' is better than 'illo,' the reading of some MSS., which Torrentius prefers. It expresses 'that place which you propose' ("ubi ut carmina mea recitem vos vultis," Orelli).
EPISTLE XX.

With this composition addressed to his book (which can hardly be any other than this collection of Epistles) Horace sends it forth to take its chance in the world. He addresses it as a young and wanton maiden eager to escape from the retirement of her home and to rush into dangers she knows nothing of. He tells her it will be too late to repair her error when she discovers it; that she will be caressed for a time and then thrown away, and, when her youth and the freshness of her beauty are gone, she will end her days in miserable drudgery and obscurity. He concludes with a description of himself, his person, his character, and his age. It is assumed with much confidence by Franke that the Epistle was written on Horace’s birth-day, 8th December, A.U.C. 734, the year after that referred to at the end. I cannot discover on what grounds he rests that opinion, or why Horace writing on his forty-fifth birth-day should tell the world he was forty-four the year before. (See note on v. 28.) He was more likely to do so on any other day than that.

ARGUMENT.

My foolish book, thou art casting glances at the stalls: thou hastest the safeguards that should keep thee chaste, and wouldst flaunt in the public eye. Well, go whither thou wilt; but return there is none. ‘Ah! what have I done?’ thou wilt cry when they shall hurt thee, and thy lovers shall be weary and cast thee aside. If I am a true prophet thou shalt be loved while youth is thine, but when thou art old and worn they shall leave thee to decay, or send thee into exile far away. Then shall I laugh at thee as the man who thrust his obstinate beast upon the rocks; for who can save him that is resolved to perish? And thy toothless age shall come to teach the elements to babes. Or if ever the noon-day heat shall have brought thee listeners, thou wilt tell how I stretched my wings for a bolder flight, and won the applause of the great in the city and in the field; I, the humbly born, of mean aspect, grey before my time, fit but for sunny climes, of hasty spirit, but ever ready to forgive. And if perchance they ask the number of my days, thou wilt say that forty winters and four I did accomplish in that year when Lollius got to himself Lepidus for his colleague.

Vertumnun Janumque, liber, spectare videris,
Scilicet ut prostes Sosiorum pumice mundus.

1. Vertumnun Janumque] “Vertumnus Deus est praeseas vertendarum rerum, hoc est emendarum ac vendendarum, qui in vico thurario sacellum habuit” (Porph.) “Ante quorum templo erant loca in quibus cum caeteris rebus etiam libri venales erant. Per deos autem loca significat” (Acron). Martial says (i. 4):— “Argiletanas mavis habitare tabernas,
Cum tibi, parve liber, scrinia nostra vacent.”

The Vicus Thurarius, in which the Scho-
lists say Vertumnus had a temple, was part of the Vicus Tuscus (S. ii. 3. 228), and the Argiletum was a street leading out of that street. In the Argiletum Janus had a temple, and therefore it is possible that the shops Martial mentions may have been on or near the same site as that of the Sosii, who were Horace’s booksellers. See A. P. (345), “Hic meret aera liber Sosii.” The Scholiasts say they were brothers. The outside skin of the parchment-rolls were polished with pumice stone to make them look well.
Odisti claves et grata sigilla pudico;
quam ostendi genis et communia laudas,
Non ita nutritus. Fuge quo descendere gestis.
Non erit emisso reditus tibi. "Quid miser egi?
Quid volui?" dices ubi quis te laeserit; et scis
In breve te cogi cum plenus languet amator.
Quodsi non odio peccantis desipit augur,
Carus eris Romae donec te deserat aetas;
Contrectatus ubi manibus sordescere vulgi
Coeperis, aut tineas pases taciturnus inertas,
Aut fugies Uticam aut vinctus mitteris Ilerdam.
Ridebit monitor non exauditus, ut ille
Qui male parentem in rupes protrusit asellum
Iratus: quis enim invitum servare laboret?
Hoc quoque te manet, ut pueros elementa docentem
Occupet extremis in vicis balba senectus.
Cum tibi sol tepidus plures admovert aures,

3. Odisti claves] The 'capsae' or 'scrinia' (S. i. 4, 21, n.) were locked, or sealed, or both; and women and young persons were locked or sealed up in their chambers that they might not get into mischief, which restraint Horace says they liked if they were chaste. He professes to reproach his book for being tired of staying at home, and being shown only to his friends, and wanting to go out to be exposed like a prostitute for sale, to which purpose he had not trained it. There can be no doubt that what is here distinctly said of the Epistles is true of the other works of Horace, that they were shown to his friends, and circulated privately before they were collected and published.

7. ubi quis te laeserit?] The MSS. vary between 'quis' and 'quid.' Bentley prefers the latter. Comm. Curot writes, "postquam te aliquid reprehenderit." He therefore probably had 'quis,' which I prefer. 'In breve te cogi,' as applied to the book, means that it will be rolled up and put into a case, and not taken out again. The metaphorical language is kept up in the following words, in 'peccantis,' and in the notion of its being thrown aside when the freshness of youth shall have left it.

9. Quodsi non odio peccantis] 'But if the prophet is not blinded by his aversion to the offender,' that is, if I am not led by my aversion to your wantonness to prophesy too harshly of your fate. 'Aetas' is used for any time of life according to the context; but more frequently for old age than youth.

13. Aut fugies Uticam] You will be shipped off to Utica (in Libya), or to Ilerda (Lerida) in Spain, or any where else in the remote provinces, tied up as a bundle of goods ('vinctus'), and I shall laugh, for what is the use of trying to save such a wilful thing? as the driver said when his ass would go too near the edge of the precipice, and he drove him over in a passion. It is not known where this fable comes from. Compare A. P. (467), "Invitum qui servat, idem facit occidenti."

18. balba senectus.] This keeps up the image in v. 10. Horace says his book will be reduced in its old age to the poor people's schools in the back streets (see S. i. 10, 75, n.). His writings came very soon to take their place with Homer and Virgil in all the schools. See Juvenal (vii. 226):—

"Quot stabant pueri, cum totus decolor esset.
Flaccus, et haereret nigro fuligo Maroni."

19. Cum tibi sol tepidus] In the heat of the day, and before dinner in the baths, people read to themselves or one another. See Martial (iv. 8, 7), "Hora libellorum decima est, Eupheme, meorum." It is not easy to see the connexion of this line with what goes before. It is something of a contradiction. With 'Me libertino natum patre,' compare S. i. 6, 6, 46, 47.
Me, libertino natum patre et in tenui re,
Majores pennas nido extendisse loqueris,
Ut quantum generi demas virtutibus addas;
Me primis Urbis belli placuisse domique;
Corporis exigui, praecanum, solibus aptum,
Irasci celerem, tamen ut placabilis essem.

Forte meum si quis te percontabitur aevum.
Me quater undenos sciatimplevisse Decembres Collegam Lepidum quo duxit Lollius annos.

23. Me primis Urbis] This he considers no small praise, as he says Epp. i. 17. 35, "Principibus placuisse viris non ultima laus est;" and S. ii. 1. 75, "tamen me Cum magnis vixisse invita fateverit usque Invidia." He does not mind at this time referring to his old generals, Brutus and Cassius. The description he gives of himself corresponds with that we find in his biographer. See also Epp. i. 4. 15. C. ii. 11. 15. "Solibus aptum" means that he liked warm weather. See ii. 3. 10, n.

25. Collegam Lepidum] Horace was born on the 8th December A.U.C. 689, in the year of the consulship of L. Manlius Torquatus and L. Aurelius Cotta. He completed his 44th year therefore in December A.U.C. 733. In that year M. Lollius (to whom C. iv. 9 is addressed) was elected one of the consuls, and the other consulship was offered to Augustus, who was in Sicily on his way to Samos for his health. Augustus refused it, and after a great deal of intrigue and disturbance between Q. Aemilius Lepidus and L. Silanus, who were summoned by Augustus to answer to him for their conduct, Lepidus was elected. Orelli thinks this after-election is referred to in the word 'duxit,' as if Lollius, being first in the place, drew the other to him, which appears to me rather far-fetched. Horace is not likely to have spoken of him as the author of his colleague's election, whatever hand he may have had in securing it. Why Horace should be so particular in letting the world know his present age in the above year I cannot tell. He was in a communicative mood when he wrote, and tells us in a few words a good deal about himself. Porphyrius says, "Annos quatuor et quadraginta dicit, et simul ostendit et quo mense natus et quo anno aetatis suae hunc perscripsit." I do not see that any such intention can be ascertained from the text. But Franke agrees with the Scholiast (see Introduction).
Q. HORATII FLACCI

EPISTOLARUM

LIBER SECUNDUS.

EPISTLE I.

Among other anecdotes connected with Augustus, Suetonius, in his life of Horace, says, "Post Sermones quoque lectos, nullam sui mentionem habitam ita est questus: 'Irasci me tibi scito, quod non in plerisque ejusmodi scriptis mecum potissimum loquaris. An vereris ne apud posteros tibi infame sit, quod videaris familiaris nobis esse?' Expressitque elogium, cujus initium est, 'Cum tot sustines,' &c. Porphyrio, upon Epp. i. 20, init., has this note: "Ex his versibus et in principio sequentis libræ appareit Horatius hoc volumen quasi novissimum totius operis habuisse. Nam secundum epistolaram coactus aedicit;" and at the beginning of this Epistle he says: "Apparet hunc librum, ut supra diximus, hortatu Caesaris scriptum esse: cujus rei etiam Suetonius auctor est." This Scholiast's authority therefore was probably no other than that which we possess in the above memoir, which as early at least as his day was attributed to Suetonius. But there is no improbability in the story. A similar theory has been advanced in respect to the sixth Ode of the first book, addressed to Agrippa, which, like this Epistle, deprecates the task of attempting the praises of a great man. Assuming the truth of Suetonius' statement, we must place the date of this Epistle after the publication of the first book. It is generally supposed, with some probability, that the Secular Ode was in Horace's mind when he wrote v. 132, sq. If so, the Epistle was not written till after a. u. c. 737. Beyond this there are no data at all safe for fixing the time of composition.

Horace begins by excusing himself for not having written before (supposing the truth of the above story) by the great labours and anxieties of Augustus, on whose attention it was not for him to intrude. He goes on to commend the discrimination of the people, who, contrary to that usual practice by which great men are loaded with envy and abuse when alive and with honours only after they are dead, had recognized Augustus' divinity already. But having given the age that credit, he reproaches their judgment in respect to deceased and living authors, the former of whom they commended only because they were dead and gone, while the latter they abused through envy and spite. 'There is something in this complaint which corresponds with his censure of Lucilius and his admirers written many years before. But Lucilius does not appear in this poem, in which the dramatic writers are those more particularly noticed. It appears that Augustus was very partial to these himself, and Horace probably means indirectly to remonstrate with the emperor's taste in this matter, and to put in a plea for himself and his brethren, though that this was not necessary is plain from Augustus' generosity to Virgil and Varus, noticed in v. 235, and from the intimacy on the strength of which he was enabled to write to the great man at all in this strain. The parts of the Epistle do not hang together very closely, especially after the first ninety lines. They consist of compliments to Augustus; a remonstrance about the patronage bestowed on the old poets; a description of the rapid growth of art in Greece after the Persian war; a complaint that every body at Rome has taken to writing verses, whether they can or no; a commendation of poets as good and useful citizens and contributors to the national piety; a history of the growth of poetry in Italy; a comparison between tragedy and comedy, and a sneer at Plautus and another; an account of the troubles of dramatic authors through the caprices and bad taste of their audiences, which at that time is stated to have been especially depraved; an appeal to Augustus on behalf of the poets of the day; and a reproof to such poets as are unreasonable or officious, and attempt themes too exalted for them.

How much foundation there may have been for Horace's remarks about the comparative support given to the old writers and the new it is hard to say. There appears to be a little contradiction between this alleged neglect and the universal mania for scribbling which he describes; or else the profusion of bad verses may itself account for the preference of those who did not write, for the genius of former days. Horace has not a word to say for Plautus or for Terence, but rather sneers at the popular judgment of them. We may safely say therefore that this Epistle is worth nothing in point of criticism, and that it does not raise Horace very high as a guide to the tastes of others. It is possible an affectation of preference for the archaic in language may have prevailed in some quarters; but Horace's censure affects those who on sound principles of taste preferred the vigour of the old writers to the weakness of the new. In short, there is no discrimination in his statement of the case; in which therefore I do not find it easy to follow him.

There is much polish in the versification of this Epistle. The flattery with which it opens is cleverly written, and the verses towards the end, in which Horace copiously states the military successes of Augustus, are terse and elegant. His commendation of the poet is a fair tribute to his own profession. The description of the vulgar taste for spectacles is natural, and reminds us of our own times; and there is enough in the Epistle to account for the high estimation it is held in by the general reader.

ARGUMENT.

It would be unpardonable in me to detain you, O Caesar, absorbed as you are in the weightiest cares. Romulus and Liber, the sons of Leda and Hercules, those benefactors of mankind, received not while alive the honour due to their great deeds: they were envied then, but are worshipped now, for greatness scorches those below it; but when its light is removed, then it is admired. To you, on the other hand, we render our homage, even while you are with us, and acknowledge that your equal has not been, and never shall be.

(v. 18) But they who are herein so wise, are not wise in this, that they like nothing but what is gone. Such admirers are they of what is old that they declare the XII Tables of the laws, the old kings' treaties, the pontifical books, and the volumes of the ancient bards, to have been inspired by the Alban Muse. But if the same rule is to be applied to the Romans as to the Greeks, whose oldest poets no doubt are their best, then farewell to our senses. No doubt our painting, our music, our wrestling, are better than the Greeks!

(v. 34) But if time acts on poetry as it does on wine, what number of years are required to give it worth? Shall one who has been dead a hundred years be counted old or new? He is old and good. Well, take away a month or a year from the hundred. Still he may be counted old. Then I accept this admission, and take away one by one, like the hairs from the horse's tail, till at last he shall fall to the ground who estimates merit by a scale of years, and only admires what death has consecrated.

(v. 50.) Ennius is a sage, and bold, and another Homer, in the eyes of our critics. He cares nothing now for his dreams and his metempsychosis. Is not Naevius in our bands and in our memories? Such sanctity does age give to poetry. Men dispute about the merits of these old people. Pacuvius is called learned; Accius sublime; Afranius' toga would fit Menander; Plautus is rapid as Epicharmus; Caecilius beats all in severity; Terence in dramatic skill. These we learn; these we crowd the theatre to see. These are the only poets from Livius downwards.

(v. 63.) Sometimes the vulgar judgment is right, sometimes it is wrong. If it prefers these writers to all others it errs; if it admits that there is a good deal that is antiquated, much that is harsh, much that is slovenly in them, it is wise, and I agree with it, and Jove approves. I have no wish to see Livius and his poetry banished (I remember too well Orbilius and his cane); but that any one should think them perfection is to me surprising. If a single word starts up here and there better than the rest it carries off the whole. On the other hand I am indignant that any thing should be found fault with, not because it is bad but because it is new, and that not indulgence but honour should be demanded for the old. If I express a doubt about a play of Attâ's, all the old men cry out against my impudence for venturing to find fault with that which Aesopus and Roscius acted. But the real reason is that they consider nothing can be right but what satisfies them, or they cannot bear to throw away in their age what they got by heart as boys. But he who praises the songs of the Salii, which he understands no better than I do, does so not from love to them but out of envy to us. If Greece had always hated novelty as we do, what should we have had that is old? When she began to turn from war, and to degenerate with her new fortunes, she went from athletes to horses, from sculpture to painting, from music to tragedy, like a spoilt child. But it was to be expected when peace and prosperity came; every thing that delights is apt to pall.

(v. 103.) Once at Rome we used to see men rising early to expound the law to clients, or learning how to make money and to be thrifty. Now it is all changed, and every body is for writing poetry. I myself when I declare I shall write no more lie like a Parthian, and begin scribbling before sun-rise. No man undertakes to steer a ship who knows not how; none administer medicines but physicians, or handle tools but workmen; and yet, learned or unlearned, we all write poetry. This little error however has its advantages. The poet loves not money, fears not loss of property, cheats not his partner or his ward, lives plainly; and though he is of no use in war, he is of use at home, if you allow that small things may help the great. The poet forms the lips and chastens the minds of the young; he records great deeds, furnishes great examples, consoles the poor and sick. Where would be our choirs but for the Muse? How should we pray to the gods? The homely rustics of the olden time, after harvest, used to gather themselves together and offer sacrifice to Tellus and Faunus and their genius. Through them came in the Fescinnine verse, which then was innocent of offence, till the liberty was turned into licence, and the law stepped in to arrest it. When Greece became our prisoner she enslaved her captors, and brought in among us new arts, and drove out that rough old Saturnian measure, though even now there remain traces of the old rusticity. It was not till after the Punic wars that we began to turn our minds to the writings of Greece, and tried if we could translate their tragedies. We were successful, for we have a spirit lofty and bold and tragic enough, but our style needed correction.

(v. 168.) Comedy is supposed to have less labour than tragedy, because its subjects are common; but the fact is it has more difficulty because it has less indulgence. Don't you see how clever Plautus is in rakish youths, stingy fathers, tricksy bawds? How great is Dossennus in parasites, and how slip-shod he walks over the stage? All he cares for is to put money in his purse; while those who take to writing for fame rise and fall with the mere caprice of the spectator. Farewell the stage for me, if applause is to make me fat and the refusal of it lean. The boldest poet is sometimes disco-concerted when the mob in the middle of the play call for bears and boxers. And even the educated have turned to shows; for hours the curtain is down for the exhibition of processions and beasts, such as would make Democritus laugh, not at the scene but the spectators. As to the noise that goes on in the theatres, the forests of Garganum and the roaring of the sea are nothing to it. And what is it all about? Has the actor spoken? Not a word. They are applauding his fine clothes!

(v. 203.) But lest you should think I bestow but grudging praise on an art I cannot practise, I declare there is nothing that man is not capable of, in my opinion, who can move my soul with fiction and magician-like transport me from place to place.

(v. 214.) But I pray you bestow some patronage on those who write, not for spectators but for readers; so shall you worthily fill Apollo's library, and give us poets a spur of encouragement, though we do a great many wrong things I must admit; for instance, when we intrude upon you out of season; are offended at being told of a blemish; repeat our verses again and again without being asked; mourn that our difficulties are not appreciated; expect you to send for us instantly, and bid us write, and make our fortunes. But we ought to consider who is worthy to be entrusted with the recording of such virtues. Choeilus got gold from Alexander for his wretched verses; but such, like ink, only stain the deeds they profess to praise. Alexander judged better when he ordered that none should paint him but Apelles, or make his statue but Lysippus. But in the matter of poetry his taste was Boecitian. Virgil and Varius do no disgrace to your generosity; and no statue ever expressed the face of heroes more vividly than the poet's craft their souls. Much rather would I sing of your noble deeds; of conquered lands, and rivers, and lofty heights, and barbarian realms; of peace restored and Parthians terrified, if what I would I could. But I may not venture beyond my strength. Officiousness often stupidly torments the object of its love, especially when it is allied with verse. Men easily remember what gives them mirth, and for my part I have no mind for such oppressive attentions. I don't wish to have my features murdered in a bust of wax, or to be celebrated in clumsy verse, lest I be carried out along with my poet like a corpse on the poor man's bier, and consigned with him to his tomb in the grocer's shop.

Cum tot sustineas et tanta negotia solus,
Res Italas armis tuteris, moribus ornes,
Legibus emendes, in publica commoda peccem
Si longo sermone morer tua tempora, Caesar.
Romulus et Liber pater et cum Castore Pollux,
Post ingentia facta deorum in templa recepi,
Dum terras hominumque colunt genus, aspera bella Componunt, agros assignant, oppida condunt,
Ploravere suis non respondere favorem
Speratum meritis. Diram qui contudit hydram Notaque fatali portenta labore subegit,
Comperit invidiam superno fine domari.
Urit enim fulgore suo qui praegravat artes
Infra se positas; extinctus amabitur idem.
Praesenti tibi maturos largimur honores,

when the question of his name was debated some would have had him called Romulus as the second founder of the city, but that the judgment of Munatius Plancus prevailed and he was called Augustus. Dion Cassius (53.16) says he wanted very much to be called Romulus, but was afraid people would think he was aiming at being king,
and therefore took the name of Augustus.
Dion's stories of this sort are not always to be trusted, and this is no doubt untrue.
Augustus too had much sense to desire such a name as Romulus. The four here named were the favourite heroes of the Greeks, who attributed chiefly to their labours the civilization of the world, and to their care its pres-servation. The labours of Hercules are called 'fatales,' as Virgil describes them (Aen. viii.
291):

"--- ut duros mille labores Rege sub Eurystheo, fatis Junonis inique, Pertuliet."

31, sq.:

"Virtutem incoluere olimus, Sublatam ex oculis quaerimus invidi."

In Qu. Curtius' history of Alexander (viii.
18), the author, speaking of his flatterers, says: "Hi tum caelum illi aperiabant; Herculem et Patrem Liberum et cum Polluce Castorem novo numini cessuros esse jactabant;" and one of them named Cleo, a Sicilian: "merita percensuit, quibus uno modo referri gratia posset, si quem intelligerent Deum esse conferentur.—Nec Herculem quidem et Patrem Liberum prius dicatos Deos quam vicissent secum viventium invidiam." Either Curtius copied Horace or they had some book which they mutually imitated.

13. Urit enim fulgore suo] 'For that man scorches with his brightness who over-powers capacities inferior to his own;' that is, inferior minds are galled by the consciousness of their inferiority, and extinguished by his greatness. 'Artes' here means attainments of any kind, I suppose.

15. Praesenti tibi maturos] See note on C. iv. 5. 29, sqq. and C. iii. 5. 1, sqq.:

"Caelo tonantem credidimus Jovem
Regnare: praesens divus habebitur
Augustus."

Suetonius says of Augustus: "Templa quanvis sciret etiam proconsulibus decerni solere, in nullis tamen provincia nisi communi suo Romanoque nomine recepit. Nam in urbe quidem pertinacissime abstinuit hoc honore, atque etiam argentass status
olum sibi positas confavit omnes" (c. 52).
Among the coins represented in Patini's notes on Suetonius (Burmann's edition) is one of silver, which he calls "rarissimus maximi moduli nummus," and on the reverse of which is a temple with the inscription "ROM. ET AUG." The date is A.U.C.
735. (Compare the inscription with Clinton's
P. H. for that year.) From the words "com.
asi." (Communi Asiae) it may have been the temple at Pergamus alluded to by Tiberius in his speech to the senate when he declined a similar honour offered to him in Spain.
(Tan. Ann. iv. 37.) It is also mentioned by Dion Cass. (51. 20), together with one in Nicomedia (Bithynia). See also Ann.
iv. 55. But a temple in the provinces was an honour which, as Suetonius says, and as appears repeatedly from Cicero's letters, from coins, and other sources, the governors often enjoyed. Josephus mentions a temple of great beauty built in honour of Rome and Augustus by Herod the Great at Caessarea, with a colossal statue of Augustus as large as that of the Olympian Zeus after which it was modelled; and another of Rome like that of Here at Argos. This was built of course during his life; but Suetonius' testimony that he refused a temple at Rome
Jurandasque tuum per nomen ponimus aras,
Nil oriturum alias, nil ortum tale fatentes.
Sed tuus hic populus, sapiens et justus in uno,
Te nostris ducibus, te Grais anteferendo,
Cetera nequaquam simili ratione modoque
Aestimat, et nisi quae terris semota suisque
Temporibus defuncta videt, fastidit et odit;
Sic fautor veterum ut tabulas pescare vetantes
Quas bis quinque viri sanxerunt, foedera regum is confirmed in part by Tiberius (Ann. iv. 38): "Optimos quippe mortalium altissima capere. Sic Hercelem et Liberum apud Graecos, Quirinum apud nos deum numero additos. Melius Augustum qui speraverit." During his life he desired to be accounted the son of Apollo, and was represented on coins in the character of that god playing on a harp; and Acron (on Epp. i. 3. 17) says he set up a statue of himself in the library on the Palatine in the dress and likeness of Apollo. There is also a coin in Patini's collection representing him with Jove's 'fulmen.' But it may be assumed that he was not worshipped in the city till he was dead (when several temples were erected to him, and his worship was regularly established), and that the altars Horace speaks of were those which were raised in the provinces, like that below.

16. Jurandasque tuum per nomen] The oldest Blandinian MS, and a very few others have 'numen,' which Bentley defends in his usual manner. 'Nomen' is the reading of all editions before his, and of most since. He would also alter the text in Tac. (Anu.
i. 73), where it is said "Rubrio erimini dabatur violatum perjurio nomen Augusti." He also quotes an altar inscription (Gruter, p. 229): "Numini Augusti votum susceptum a plebe-Narbonensium in perpetuum," the date of which was A.U.C. 764, while Augustus was alive. Horace uses 'numen' in C. iv. 5. 35: "et Laribus tuum Miscibet numen;" and Ovid constantly uses it in the way of flattery. There can be no doubt Horace might have written 'numen' here, but I do not see why he should not have said 'nomen,' or why nearly all the copyists should have substituted the latter less likely word for the other, both in this place and that of Tacitus above. The person who swore by the altar laid his hand upon it and invoked the name of the divinity to whom it was consecrated. This act is represented on a gem in Gorlacus' collection, part ii.
63.

17. Nil oriturum alias] This is a repetition of C. iv. 2. 37:
"Quo nihil majus meliusve terris
Fata donavere bonique divi
Nec dabunt."

20. simili ratione modoque] This is the third time Horace uses this combination.
See S. ii. 266. 271.

23. Sic fautor veterum] Suefonius, commending the simplicity of Augustus' style of language (c. 86), adds: "Caecolos et antiquarios, ut diverso genere vitiosos, pari fastidio spreuit." Κακοφάλων signifies affectation of any kind (Quint. Inst. viii. 3). He would therefore, as Orelli says, be pleased with these remarks of Horace.

24. Quas bis quinque viri sanxerunt,] In A.U.C. 303, ten patricians were appointed, with absolute powers for one year, to draw up a code of laws, of which the greater part was finished in that year, and engraved upon ten tables of ivory or bronze. In the following year the decemvirate was renewed, with the difference that three plebeians were elected among them, and two more tables were added. These tables contained the fundamental principles of Roman law to the latest times. Cicero speaks with more respect than Horace does of the language in which they were written (de Rep. iv. 8): "Aemelior nec rerum solum, sed verborum etiam elegantiam." In his time, as observed before (S. i. 6. 77, n.), they were committed to memory by boys at school; but before his death the practice had ceased, probably because of the archaic forms employed. He says: "discebamus xii ut carmen necessarium;" showing that the word 'carmen' was used for any set form in prose or verse. (See C. i. 2. 28, n.) Elsewhere he recommends the XII Tables to those who are given to antiquarian studies: "Sive quum antiqua studia decentant plurima est et in omni jure civil et in tProgressum libratis et in xii tabulis antiqui-tatis effigies; quod et verborum priscave-Vel Gabiius vel cum rigidis aequata Sabinis, Pontificum libros, annosa volumina vatum, Dictiet Albano Musas in monte locutas.

tustas cognoscitur," &c. (de Orat. i. 43.) He calls them "legum fontes et capita," and says they contain more wisdom than whole libraries of philosophical works. As to 'sanxerunt,' see S. ii. i. 81, n. 24. foedera regum]. The cunning way in which Sex. Tarquinius got possession of Gabii for his father Tarquinius Superbus is related by Livy (i. 53, sq.). Dionysius Halicarn., (iv. 58) says he had read an inscription on a shield covered with the hide of an ox sacrificed on the occasion and hung up in the temple of Zeus Fidius at Rome, which inscription contained the terms of a treaty between Tarquinius and the people of Gabii (respecting which place see Epp. i. 11. 7, n.). The terms he says were favourable; the language was archaic, ἀπικι, γραμμασι, ἀρχαιος ἔφεγαρμυ. Niebuhr says the two stories are not compatible, and he does not believe Livy's. Gabii and Sabini are both governed by 'cum.' Compare C. iii. 25. 2: "quae nemora ant quos agor in specs." Niebuhr, speaking of the Sabellian race, says (i. 105, Eng. trans.): "The strictness of their morals and their cheerful contentedness were the peculiar glory of the Sabellian mountaineers, but especially of the Sabines and the four northern cantons, and they preserved it long after the virtues of ancient times had disappeared at Rome from the hearts and the demeanour of men. The Sabines were simple-hearted and honest." The contrast between them and the men of Rome in his own time is described by Horace in C. iii. 6. 37, sqq. See also Epod. ii. 41: "Sabina quals ant perusta solibus Perunicis uxor Apuli;"

and the description of his Sabine neighbours (S. i. 6.; Epp. i. 14. 3). The treaty Horace alludes to may be that between Romulus and Tatius, by which the two nations became one (Livy i. 13).

'Aequatus,' in this sense of treaties or agreements made on equal terms, does not occur elsewhere. 26. Pontificum libros.] These are mentioned by Cicero in the place quoted above. The College of Pontiffs had books containing the regulations by which they were guided, and all matters pertaining to their office, and the worship of the gods, the general supervision of which was their principal duty. The original books were, according to tradition, given to them by Numa at their first creation; but they were added to from time to time, and they must have been numerous when Horace wrote. Some parts were no doubt very antiquated in expression and ideas.

26. annosa volumina vatum,] Suetonius says of Augustus (c. 31) that after he became Pontifex Maximus, "quicquid fatidicorum librorum Graeci Latinique generis, nullis vel parum idoneis auctoribus vulgo ferebatur, supra duo millia contracta unique creavit; ac solos retinuit Sibyllinos: hos quoque decetum habito; conditidique dubios forulis auratis sub Palatini Apollinis basi." Augustus did not succeed to the above office till after the death of Lepidus in A.D.C. 741. Porphyry explains the 'volumina' as those 'veteris Martii ratis, aut Sibyllae.' The 'carmina' of Marcii, or the Marcii, were old writings in a prophetic strain and half metrical form, of which Livy has quoted two specimens (xxv. 12), but not apparently with all their archaisms complete. According to Suetoni us, Augustus burnt all books of this sort except the 'Sibyllini libri,' as they were called, which were written in Greek. But Servius (on Aen. vi. 72) says that along with these books were preserved the poems of Marcii. Other prophetic books were kept in the Capitol, such as 'the Etruscan prophecies of the nymph Bygoe; those of Albuna or Albunea of Tibur (C. i. 7, 12), and who knows how many others of the same sort? These were all books of fate, and every Etruscan city seems to have possessed such" (Niebuhr i. 507). Niebuhr (i. 259, n.) thinks that Horace may be alluding to the old historical lays from which the history of the Roman kings has been forged, as well as to prophetical books like those of the Marchi, which Niebuhr says, "in spite of his contemptuous glance at them, were extremely poetical. Of this," says he, "we may judge even from the passages preserved by Livy. We must not let Horace determine our opinion on these poems any more than on Plautus."

27. Dictiet Albano.] There is force in 'dictiet,' 'would persist in affirming,' that the Muses themselves had uttered them (not on Paranaus, but) on the Alban Mount; that the Muses had changed their habitation to dwell in Latium. Doering and some others think that by the Muses
Si quia Graecorum sunt antiquissima quaequae
Scripta vel optima Romani pensantur eadem
Scriptores trutina, non est quod multa loquamur:
Nil intra est oleam, nil extra est in nuce duri;
Venimus ad summum fortunae; pingimus atque
Psallimus et luctamur Achivis doctius unetis.
Si meliora dies ut vina poëmata reddit,
Scire velim chartis pretium quotus arroget annus.
Perfectos abhinc annos centum qui decidit inter
Viles atque novos? Excludat jurgia finis.
Est vetus atque probus centum qui perficit annos.
Quid, qui deperiiit minor uno mense vel anno,
Inter quos referendus erit? veteresne poëtas,
An quos et praesens et postera respuat aetas?
Iste quidem veteres inter ponetur honeste
Qui vel mense brevi vel toto est junior anno Utor permisso caudaeque pilos ut equinae
Paulatim vello et demo unum, demo et item unum, Dum cadat elusus ratione ruentis acervi

on the Alban Mount Horace means Egeria, who was counted a tenth Muse. But I think with Orelli he had no such meaning.
29. pensantur eadem Scriptores trutina.] See S. i. 3. 72, n.
31. Nil intra est oleam.] This may be a proverb. Its meaning it is not difficult to see. ‘If we are to believe that as the oldest poets of Greece (Homer at the head of them) are the best, therefore Roman poets must be judged by the same rule, there is no use in talking; we are to believe any absurdity, to disbelieve our eyes, and deny the most palpable truths; the olive is hard without and the nut is soft; we may congratulate ourselves; of course our painters, our musicians, our athletes, are better than those of Greece,’ which every one knows is not the case.
40, n. Horace uses ‘decidere’ (v. 36) in the same sense in C. iv. 7. 14.
45. caudaeque pilos ut equinae] When the soldiers of Sertorius insisted on attacking the enemy against his wish, and were beaten, he took the following means of showing them their error and the policy he chose to pursue. He put before them two horses, one old and infirm, the other young and fresh with a remarkably fine tail. A strong man stood by the old horse, a small man by the young one. They were desired to pull the hair out of the tails of the animals, and the strong man pulled at his with great force, while the little man proceeded to pull out the hairs of the other one by one. The weak man soon accomplished his work, while the strong man of course failed. (Plutarch, vit. Sert. c. 16.) Horace appears to refer to this story, which was probably well known. The application here is plain, though it has no very close analogy to the original.
46. demo et item] ‘Etiam’ is the reading of all the old editions and of some modern (Doering among others). Bentley, on the authority of several MSS., since confirmed by others, including two of the oldest Parisian, introduced ‘et item,’ as being less likely to have been invented than ‘etiam.’ He quotes Terence, Andria (i. 1.
49): ‘Sed postquam amans accessit preetium pollicens Unus et item alter;’ and Lucretius
(iv. 553):
‘Asperitas autem vocis fit ab asperitate Principiorum, et item levor levore crea-
tur.’
47. ratione ruentis acervi] This seems to be an allusion to what Cicero (de Divinat.
Qui redit in fastos et virtutem aestimat annis, Miraturque nihil nisi quod Libitina sacravit.

Ennius et sapiens et fortis et alter Homerus, Ut critici dicunt, leviter curare videtur Quo promissa cadant et somnia Pythagorea.

Naevius in manibus non est et mentibus haeret
Paene recens? Adeo sanctum est vetus omne poëma.

Ambiguitur quotiens uter utro sit prior, aufert
Pacuvius docti famam senis, Accius alii,

ii. 4) calls 'argumentatio acervalis,' from the Greek σωρίης (from σωρίς, 'acervus,' a heap), a logical term signifying a series of propositions linked together and depending each upon the one before it, till a conclusion is come to which connects the first proposition with the last; but it may go on for ever without any conclusion at all. Persius uses the same illustration (S. vi. 78, sqq.):

"Rem duplica. Feci. Jam triplex; jam mihi quarto;
Jam decies redit in rugam. Depunge ubi sistam.

Inventus, Chrysippus, tui finitor acervi."

The invention of the σωρίης is attributed to Chrysippus the Stoic.

48. Qui redit in fastos] The word 'fasti,' as applied to records, belonged properly to the sacred books or tables in which the 'fasti' and 'nfasti dies' were distinguished, that is, the Calendar. When these were made public (Livy ix. 40) calendars became common, and in these (which were usually engraved on tablets of stone) remarkable events were inserted, so that they became a source of historical information. There were also consular annals, or registers of the consuls and other chief magistrates, kept among the records of the state, and these were also called 'fasti,' or 'annales,' either of which words came, in consequence, to be used generally for historical registers of any kind, particularly by the poets. Horace applies it to the family genealogies of the Lamia family. (C. iii. 17. 4.) See also C. iv. 13. 15; 14. 4; and S. i. 3. 112, where it is applied in the most general way to the history of the world.

49. Libitina] See S. ii. 6. 19, n.

50. Ennius et sapiens] Ennius was born at Rudiae, in Calabria, B.C. 239. Besides his great historical epic poem called Annales, and plays, and satires, he wrote philosophical poems of which the titles of some and very slender fragments have been preserved. He followed the opinions of Pythagoras, and in the beginning of his epic poem he declared that the spirit of Homer had passed into his body, having meanwhile inhabited, among others, that of a peacock; whence Persius says (vi. 10):

"Cor jubet hoc Enni, postquam destertuit esse"

Maeonides, Quintus pavone ex Pythagoreo;"

which means that he had woke up from his dream of being Homer, and, having passed through the body of a peacock, he had become Quintus Ennius. This is what Horace alludes to in 'somnia Pythagorea.' He says however that Ennius need not mind what was thought of his professions and his dreams, since he was certainly worshipped as if he were a second Homer. As to 'critici' see Epp. 19. 40, n. Ennius is called 'fortis' not for his personal bravery (though he saw some service), but for the boldness of his style.

53. Naevius in manibus non est] Cu. Naevius was born about the middle of the third century B.C., and wrote plays and an epic poem on the first Punic war in which he served (Gell. xvii. 21). To the latter poem Virgil seems to have owed some of his ideas. Terence ranks him with Plautus and Ennius as one of his models; and, comparing these three with his own contemporaries, he says:

"Quorum aemulari exoptem negligentiam Potius quam istorum obscum diligen tiam." (Profl. Andria, 29, sq.)

Naevius was perhaps rather the oldest of the three.

54. Paene recens?], Bentley was the first to make this sentence interrogative. A few editors have declined to follow him (Fen, Doering, and others); but I think he is right. I can make no sense of the words otherwise. Cicero very often has 'non est' in interrogative sentences. 'Paene recens' means 'as if he were almost modern.'

56. Pacuvius docti famam senis] Pa-
Horatii

Dicitur Afrani toga convenisse Menandro, Plautus ad exemplar Siculi properare Epicharmi, maintained the doctrine of perpetual motion or flux, he mentions Πρωταγόρας τι καὶ Πρᾶκτερος καὶ Εὖμπιδόκεις καὶ τῶν ποιητῶν οἱ ἀκροὶ τῆς ποιήσεως ἑστίας, καθὼς μὲν Ἐπίχαρος τραγωδίας ἐν Οὐραμος (i. 152, Steph.). His writings were well known to Cicero, who speaks of him as "vafer ille Siculus Epicharmus" (ad Att. i. 19); "astutus nec insulsus homo" (Tusc. Disp. i. 8). Aristotle (Poet. c. 5) says that Epicharmus and Phormis were the first inventors of comedy. Bentley (Exps. of Phalaris, p. 199) takes the fact to be that the comedies of Epicharmus were the first that were written.

59. Vincere Caecilius gravitate.] This comic poet was born at Mediolanum (Milan). He was a slave, and while in that condition received the name of Statius ("Statius autem servile nomen fuit," Gell. iv. 20, where he is giving an account of Caecilius), and when he recovered his freedom he retained this name as a cognomen: "Sed postea versum est quasi in cognomentum appellatusque Caecilius Statius." He died A.D.C. 556, the year after Ennius. His contemporaries held him in high estimation. According to the text of Suetonius' life of Terence as it now stands, Caecilius was the person to whom Terence was directed by the Aediles to carry his Andria for his judgment. He found him at dinner, and because he was shabbily drest, he was directed to sit down on a stool and read what he had got. After he had read a few verses Caecilius was so struck with what he had heard, that he made the author come to table among the guests and finish his play. This anecdote shows Caecilius' position. Cicero places him, not without some hesitation, at the head of the comic poets (sup. v. 56, n.). Also in the canon, as it is called, of Volcacitus Sedigitus, a critic of or near the Augustan age, Caecilius is assigned the first place among the comic poets. But as he puts Terence in the sixth place, there is no dependance to be placed on his judgment. Varro says he was best in his plots, and that he moved the feelings. Cicero, though he puts him so high, speaks ill of his Latin (Brut. 74, quoted above, v. 56, and ad Att. vii. 3. 10). What is meant by 'gravitate' is as uncertain as 'properare' in the verse before.

59. Terentius arte.] The exact sense in which Horace meant this word is equally uncertain with the others; but I will give the judgment of a modern critic (Spence, Polymetis, p. 11, sq.) upon Terence, which I should think represents the opinion of his sensible contemporaries. It appears to me very just as far as it goes:—"We may see by that (the Eunuchus) and the rest of his plays which remain to us to what a degree of exactness and elegance the Roman comedy was arrived in his time. There is a beautiful simplicity which reigns through all his works. There is no searching after wit, and no ostentation of ornament in him. All his speakers seem to say just what they should say and no more. The story is always going on, and goes on just as it ought. This whole age, long before Terence and long after, is rather remarkable for strength than beauty in writing. The Roman language itself in his hands seems to be improved beyond what one could ever expect, and to be advanced almost a hundred years forwarder than the times he lived in." This he accounts for by his intercourse with Lælius and Scipio, by both of whom Terence was supposed to have been assisted in writing his plays: "ivet Terentii scripta ad Scipionem Africanum referantur, quae tamen sunt in hoc genere elegantissima" (Quintil. x. 1. 100). "Terentium cujus fabellae propter elegantiam sermonis putabantur a C. Laelio scribi" (Cic. ad Att. vii. 3). Donatus, in his life of Terence, quotes the authorities of Q. Memmius, the orator, and Nepos for the same fact; and he himself alludes to it as a matter cast in his teeth by his adversaries, but as one of which, if it were true, he should have more reason to be proud than ashamed. See Prologus to Adelph. and Heautont. But there is no patchwork in Terence's plays. No help he could have had from any one would account for the uniform elegance of language, pathos, good taste, wit, and humorous pictures of real life and nature, that appear throughout his writings. Afranius (in Suetonius' life, c. 5) says, "Terentio non similim dices quempiam." There are few like him now. His name was P. Terentius Afer. He was a slave in the family of one P. Terentius Lucanus, whose praenomen and gentile name he took on his manumission, retaining as a cognomen the name which he derived from the place of his birth, Carthage, if the accounts we have of his life be correct. The plays we have of his are all 'palliatæ' derived more or less from the Greek, chiefly of Menander.

60. arcto stipata theatro] The plays of Terence and all the earlier and more celebrated poets were performed at first either on scaffoldings erected in the Circus and afterwards taken down, or in temporary wooden theatres, usually on a very large scale; the notion being that a systematic encouragement of plays by the erection of permanent buildings was injurious to public morals. The first permanent stone theatre at Rome (for they had them in the country towns some time before) was built by Cn. Pompeius after the Mithridatic war outside the walls, near the Campus Martius, on the spot, as is supposed, now called Campo di Fiore (Cramer). It held 40,000 people. There are no remains of it. Augustus erected another near the Pons Fabricius, just outside the walls, to the memory of his nephew Marcellus (of which some remains are still visible), and by his desire a third was built in the Campus Martius by L. Cornelius Balbus. It is to these three, the only theatres of the time, that Ovid alludes (A. A. iii. 394), "Visite conspicuus terna theatra locis." See also Suetonius (vit. Aug. 45), "Per trina theatra virgis caesum relegaverit" (Stephanionem, an actor). For the particulars of a Roman theatre, see Dict. Ant.

62. Livi scriptorisl ab aevoc T. Livius Andronicus is spoken of by Quintilian as the first Roman poet, and without much respect:—"Quid erat futurum si nempe plus effectisset co quem sequeratur? Nihil in poësis supra Livium Andronicum, nihil in historiis supra Pontificum annales haberemus" (x. 2. 7). The date of his birth is uncertain, but he flourished in the middle of the third century B.C., and died A. U. C. 333, or thereabouts. His first play was represented the year before Ennius was born, A. U. C. 514, as Cicero says on the authority of Ennius (Brutus, c. 18). He also says this was the first play put upon the stage (all before had been extempore performances). He is said to have been born at Tarentum, which Niebuhr (iv. 260) says is "probably for no other reason but because he was confounded with Livius Macatus, who maintained himself at Tarentum" (Livy xxiv. 20; xxvii. 34). "Livius Andronicus translated the Odyssey, which, from its relation to Latium, had greater attractions for the Romans than the Iliad: he did not however translate the whole of the Odyssey, but made an abridgment of it in the national Italian rhythm, and not in a Greek metre. All that Livius wrote besides his Odyssey are tragedies which, like the Atellanae, were not performed in standing theatres, but on a kind of scaffolding in the Circus" (Niebuhr, l. c.). It has been affirmed that he also wrote comedies (see his life in Dict. Biog.); and Livy (xxvii. 37) mentions a hymn composed by him. He probably composed others. (I do not know on what authority Niebuhr says the Odyssey had greater attractions for the Romans than the Iliad. The reason he assigns is hardly sufficient.) "Livius Andronicus (Niebuhr adds) was the client of one Livius." It is generally supposed he was a freedman, having been taken prisoner at Tarentum (Cicero, l. c.). His dramas were all, as far as we know, 'palliatæ,' from the Greek. Cicero says they were not worth a second reading: "Nam et Odyssea Latina est sic tanquam opus aliquod Daedali, et Livianae fabulae non satis dignae quae iterum legantur." 66. dure—ignave] The first represents the harshness of the style, the second I suppose the dulness of the matter. There was a want of life he means about this old poetry; unless any one prefers understanding 'ignave,' carelessl y. Compare A. P. 445. 'Jove aequo' is the opposite of 'Jove non probante' (C. i. 2. 19).

70. plagasum mihi parvo Orbilium dicare:—Orbillus Pupillus was a native of Beneventum. He early lost his parents,
Oribilium dictare; sed emendata videri
Pulchraque et exactis minimum distantia miror;
Inter quae verbum emicuit si forte decorum, et
Si versus paulo concinnior unus et alter,
Injuste totum ducit venditique poëma.
Indignor quidquam reprehendi, non quia crasse
Compositum illepedieve putetur, sed quia nuper;
Nec veniam antiquis sed honorem et praemia posci.
Recte necne crocum floresque perambulet Attae who had given him a good education, and being left destitute, became an apportor to the magistrates in his native town. He afterwards served in the army, and then returned home and taught. In his fiftieth year A.D. 691 he came to Rome and set up a school, which brought him more fame than profit. He wrote a book on the ill-treatment that teachers experienced from the parents of their pupils. Perhaps they had reason to find fault with him; if Horace's epithet gives a right notion of his character.

He seems to have held the rod as the principle of school government; wherefore the following line was written on him by one Domitius Marus, "Si quos Orbilium ferula scuticaque ecceit." He lived in great poverty in a garret (see Ep. i. 91, n.) to nearly a hundred years of age, having long lost his memory. His townspeople were proud of him, and erected a marble statue to his memory. These particulars are from Swe-tonius' account of Orbilium in his treatise De Illustr. Grammaticis, c. 9. Orbilium was in his forty-eighth year when Horace was born. He was therefore not young when the poet went to his school. Perhaps Horace's judgment of Livius may have been influenced by his early recollections, and "what it then detested still abhorred," as a modern poet has said of Horace himself, "the drill'd dull lesson forced down word by word." Quintilian (Dial. de Orat.) complains that in his time the old writers were preferred to the new: "Vobis uti-que versantur ante oculos qui Lucilium pro Horatio et Lucretium pro Virgilio legunt," &c. Orelli thinks the boys learnt the Latin Odyssey to enable them to understand the Greek. If so Orbilium deserved an ap-clication of his own cane. He appears to have been one of the old school, and perhaps he thought that pleasant learning was not good for young minds; but Bentley, thinking it improbable a schoolmaster of repute would teach boys of noble birth such language as that of Livius, has changed Lavi into Laevi, with the support of one MS.
Laevius (if he existed at all) was a writer of small love verses and a contemporary of
Cicero's. He has therefore no place here.
As to 'dictare,' see S. i. 10. 75, n.
73. verbum emicuit] "Ex insperato
75. ducit venditique poëma.] The meaning of 'vendit' is the same as in Juvenal (vii. 135), "purpura vendit Causidicum, vendunt amethystina." It commends the whole poem. 'Ducit' seems to mean,
'brings it forward,' or 'carries the poem with it.' A great many interpretations have been given, and Bentley can find no sense in this word. He therefore, on the authority of one MS., which he calls "egregius codex," changes 'vendit' to 'venit,' and makes 'poëma,' the nominative to the verbs, and 'ducit' he interprets "decipit, fuco fallit, palpo percutit," "takes in purchasers," as "emptorem ducat hiantem"
(S. i. 2. 88).
79. crocum floresque perambulet Attae
Fabula] Attal was a writer of comedies ('togaæ'), of which a few fragments remain. He died A.D. 676. The title of this play which Horace alludes to, all the Scholiasts say was Matertera; and in respect to 'crocum floresque perambulet,' Comm. Cruq. says, "i.e. in scenam recepta sit quae floribus et croco spargitur." It is not clear that Horace had any particular play in mind, but it may have been an affectation of Attal's to have flowers scattered on the stage, on which it was usual to sprinkle a perfume extracted from the crocus. See among other places Propert.
(iv. i. 15) :
"Nec sinuosa cavo pendebant vela theatru; Pulpita sollennes non oluerre crocos," which verses are repeated almost word for word by Ovid (A. A. i. 103). This is what Martial alludes to in "Lubrica Corycio quavis sint pulpita nimbo" (ix. 39). The perfume was mixed with water and thrown up through pipes, so as to sprinkle not only the stage, but the spectators. The most famous crocus was that of Mount Corycus in Cilicia (see S. ii. 4. 68, n.).

82. Quae gravis Aesopus. [Claudius Aesopus, the tragic actor, was an intimate friend of Cicero's, and most of the distinguished men of that time. He was older than Cicero, though the date of his birth is not known, or that of his death. He was a freedman of some person belonging to the Clodia gens. Speaking of enunciation Quintilian applies the same epithet to Aesopus that Horace does: "Plus autem affectus habeant lentiora: ideoque Roscius citatio, Aesopus gravior fuit, quod ille comœdias hic tragœdias egit" (xi. 3. 111). Cicero makes Quintus compare Aesopus' delivery with his own, and speaks of him as showing "tantum arœdœm vultuæ atque motuum ut eum vis quædam abstraxisse a sensu mentis videretur" (de Div. i. 37). 'Gravis' is a good epithet for a tragic actor.

83. Quæ doctus Roscius egit.] Q. Roscius, the comic actor, was also an intimate friend of Cicero, who often speaks of him, and pleaded a case for him in a speech still in part extant. Cicero speaks of "Rosci gestus et venustas" (de Orat. i. 50), and illustrates the description of Quintilian given above, "Roscius citatio," by saying (de Legg. i. 4) that when he was getting old "numeros in cantu ceridit ipsaqua tardiores fecit tibias." His enunciation was rapid when he was young, but he was obliged to slacken it in his old age. The meaning of 'doctus' can only be explained of the study he gave to his profession, and the accurate knowledge he acquired of the principles of his art. He died about A.U.C. 692, and was enormously rich, like Aesopus, whose wealth has been referred to on S. ii. 3. 239.

84. Jam Saliiare Numæ carmen qui laudat, et illud Quod mecum ignorat solus vult scire videri.

Ingeniis non ille favet plauditque sepultis,
Nostra sed impugnat, nos nostraque lividus odit.
Quod si tam Graecis novitas invisa fuisset
Quam nobis, quid nunc esset vetus? aut quid haberet
Quod legeret tereretque viritim publicus usus?
Ut primum positis nugari Graecia bellis
EPISTOLARUM II. 1.

Coepit et in vitium fortuna labier aqua,
Nunc athletarum studiis, nunc arsit equorum,
Marmoris aut eboris fabros aut aerae amavit,
Suspendit picta vultum mentemque tabella,
Nunc tibicinibus, nunc est gavisa tragœdias;
Sub nutrice puella velut si luderet infans,
Quod cupide petitit mature plena reliquit.

Quid placet aut odio est quod non mutabile credas?
Hoc paces habuere bona ventique secundi.
Romae dulce diu fuit et sollemne reclusa
Mane domo vigilare, clienti promere jura, Cautos nominibus rectis expendere nummos, quickly became after the Persian War, and especially under the administration of Phericles and afterwards. It is only to Athens that Horace’s language will accurately apply. During the age of lyric poetry which preceded that war, she had not a poet of distinction. Her public buildings, destroyed by Xerxes, were replaced by others far more splendid a few years after the defeat of the Persians. Temples and theatres were erected at enormous cost, and ornamented by the genius of Pheidias and others (architects and sculptors) of great renown. The coincidence which, according to the general belief, associates the names of the three great tragedians with the date of Salamis, marks that day as the commencement of a new career of intellectual activity and social degeneracy on the part of the Athenians. With the progress of the drama came habits of idleness; with the possession of wealth rose the taste for litigation and habits of extravagance; with the thirst for knowledge came in the teaching of sophistry; and with political power arose the passions of the people and the influence of demagogues. Little more than a century saw the birth and extinction of this greatness. On this subject the reader may refer to Thirlwall’s Greece, vol. iii. 62, sq.; 70, sq.; iv. 256.

95. athletarum studiis.] The term ἀθλητηρίῳ (from ἀθλητής, the prizes of victory) was great trials of the Greeks only to those who contended in the great games (the Olympian, Isthmian, Nemean, and Pythian) for prizes in exercises of personal strength, as wrestling, running, boxing, leaping, throwing the quoit or javelin. The honour that was paid to successful ‘athletes’ was enormous. They were introduced at Rome about two centuries B.C., and under the emperors were a privileged class and formed a ‘collegium.’ (See Dict. Ant. arts. ‘Athlete,’ ‘Panthym,’ ‘Pentathym.’)

96. Marmoris aut eboris fabros aut aerae] All the great artists of this period, as Pheidias, Polycleitus, Myron, wrought in bronze as well as marble, and were scarcely less distinguished for engraving and chasing, than in the higher departments of art. The most celebrated works in ivory were the statues of Jupiter Olympius at Elis, and of Minerva in the Parthenon, executed by Pheidias. They were chryselephantine.

101. Quid placet aut odio est Horace’s argument against the favourites of the old poets is this: ‘If the Greeks had been as averse to what was new as some of us appear to be, where would have been the improvements that took place after the Persian wars?’ Peace and prosperity brought with it tastes and elegancies of a high order; and though, no doubt, there was fickleness in the pursuit of these things, this was to be expected, says he, and may be excused, seeing what human nature is.

104. Mane domo vigilare.] See S. i. 1.

105. Cautos nominibus rectis] ‘Expendere’ is equivalent to ‘expensum referre,’ which means to debit a person in one’s books with money lent (see S. ii. 3. 69, n.). ‘Cavere’ is the usual word for giving or taking security. ‘Nominibus rectis’ means good debtors. ‘Nominibus’ may depend upon ‘expendere,’ or ‘cautos,’ or both, for
HORATHII FLACCI

Majores audire, minori dicere, per quae
Crescere res posset, minui damnosa libido.
Mutavit mentem populus levis et calet uno
Scribendi studio; pueri patresque severi
Fronde comas vincti coenant et carmina dictant.

Ipse ego qui nullus me adfirmo scribere versus Invenior Parthiis mendacior, et prius orto
Sole vigil calaman et chartas et scrinia posco.
Navim agere ignarus navis timet; abrotonum aegro
Non audet nisi qui didicit dare; quod medicorum est

Promittunt medici; tractant fabrilia fabri:
Scribimus inducti doctique poëmata passim.
Hic error tamen et levis haec insana quantas
Virtutes habeat sic collige: vatis avarus
Non temere est animus; versus amat, hoc studet unum;

Detrimenta, fugas servorum, incendia ridet;
Non fraudem socio puero ineogitat ullam
Pupillo; vivit siliquis et pane secundo;

As to ‘calamus’ and ‘charta,’ see S. ii. 3. 2, 7, and for ‘scrinia’ see S. i. 4. 21, n.

114. abrotonum] This is the plant which we call southern-wood, and I understand it is used in our pharmacopoeia as a remedy for worms. Pliny (xxi. 21) describes its use for medical purposes.

117. inducti doctique] See C. i. 1. 29, n.

119. avarus Non temere est animus:] Ovid takes credit to poets for this same quality: ‘Nec nos ambitio, nec amor nos tangit habendi’ (A. A. iii. 541). ‘Non temere avarus’ seems to mean ‘not readily given to avarice.’ In S. ii. 2. 116 he says, ‘non temere ede luce profesta Quidquam praefer olus’ (see note); and in Epp. ii. 2. 13, ‘non temere a me Quivis ferret idem,’ where the sense is much the same as here.

122. Non fraudem socio pueroe] See C. iii. 24. 60, n., and as to ‘pupillo’ see Epp. i. 1. 21, n.

123. siliquis et pane secundo:] ‘Siliqua’ is the pod or husk of any leguminous vegetable: but it was applied particularly to a plant, the ‘siliqua Graeca,’ which is still found in Italy and Spain. The Italian name is ‘carruba,’ and the Spanish ‘algarroba.’ It produces long pods filled with a sweetish pulp. The name is derived from χαρουβία, which Forcellini says is derived from κυραθίων, a horn. ‘Panis secundus,’ or ‘secundarius,’ is bread made from inferior flour.
Militiae quamquam piger et malus, utilis urbi,
Si das hoc parvis quoque rebus magna juvari.
Os tenerum pueri balbumque poëta figurat,
Torquet ab obscenis jam nunc sermonibus aurem,
Mox etiam pectus præceptis format amicis,
Asperitatis et invidiae corrector et irae;
Recte facta refert, orientia tempora notis
Instruct exemplis, inopem solatur et aegrum.
Castis cum pueris ignara puella mariti
Discræt unde preces vatem ni Musa dedisset?
Poscit opem chorus et præsentiæ numina sentit,
Caelestes implorat aquas docta prece blandus,
Avertit morbos, metuenda pericula pellit,
Impetrat et pacem et locuptelem frugibus annum.
Carmine di superi placantur, carmine Manes.
Agricolae præsii, fortes parvoque beati,
Condita post frumenta levantes tempore festo
Corpus et ipsum animum spe finis dura ferentem,
Cum sociis operum, pueris et conjuge fida,
Tellurem porco, Silvanum laete piabant,

127. jam nunc] See C. iii. 6. 23, n. As to 'forrnó,' see C. iii. 24. 54; S. i. 4.
121. A. P. 307, and other places. For 'corrector,' see Epp. i. 15. 37. 'Orientia tempora' seems to mean the time of youth, as we say, the dawn of life. Orelli says it does not mean this, but each season of life as it begins.

132. Castis cum pueris] The Carmen Saeculare was sung by a choir, consisting of twenty-seven boys, and as many girls, of noble birth (see Introduction); and such choruses were usual on special occasions of that sort. The vestal virgins addressed their prayers to their goddess 'docta prece,'
the equivalent for which is 'carmine:'

"— prece qua fatigent
Virgines sanctae minus audientem
Carmina Vestam?" (C. i. 2. 26)

where 'prece' is opposed to 'carmina,' though the latter too were prayers, and perhaps in verse, but in a set form, 'doctae preces.'

138. carmine Manes.] The great annual festival at which the Manes, the souls of the departed, were worshipped, was the Lemuria, which was celebrated in May, on the 9th, 11th, and 13th days of the month.

They were also worshipped shortly after a funeral at the 'feriae denicales,' when the family of the deceased went through a purification. The Lares being also the spirits of the dead, differed only in name from the Manes, which were ordinarily inserted in sepulchral inscriptions, as the 'Dii Manes of the departed. The name is derived from a root signifying 'good,' for none but the good could become Manes. But Augustine (de Civ. Dei, ix. 11) quotes the authority of Plotinus (for whom it appears he should have said Apuleius de Socratis Daemone) for saying "animas hominum daemonas esse, et ex hominibus fieri Lares si boni
meriti sunt; Lemures si mali seu Larvas; Manes autem deos dici si incertum est
bonorum eos seu malorum esse meritorum."
This the name itself disproves. Their existence was a matter of some scepticism, as observed on C. i. 4. 16. Here the name seems to embrace all the infernal deities, as Dis, Proserpina, Tellus, the Furiae, &c.
143. Tellurem porco.] The temple of Tellus in the Carinae has been mentioned before, Epp. i. 7. 40. n. She was worshipped among the 'dii inferi' or Manes.
Her annual festival, the Fordicidia, was celebrated on the 15th of April. 'Forda'
HORATII FLACCI

Floribus et vino Genium memorem brevis aevi.
Fescennina per hunc inventa licentia morem
Versibus alternis opprobria rustica fudit,
Libertasque recurrentes accepta per annos
Lusit amabiliter, donec jam saevus apertam
In rabiem coepit verti jocus et per honestas
Ire domos impune minax. Doluere cruento
Dente læcessiti; fuit intactis quoque cura Condicione super communi; quin etiam lex

in the old language signified a cow. See Ovid (Fast. iv. 629, sqq.):
"Tertia post Veneris cum lux surrexerit Idus,
Pontifices forda sacra litate bove.
Forda ferens bos est fecundaque, dicta
fenendo:
Hinc etiam focus nomen habere putant.
Nunc gravidum pecus est; gravidae nunc
semine terrae;
Telluri plena victria plena datur."

But it appears that sacrifices were also offered after harvest, and that the victim was a hog, which was commonly offered to the Larés (C. iii. 23. 4, where the feminine is used. S. ii. 3. 165. C. iii. 17. 5. Epp. i. 16. 58).

143. Silvanum lacte piabant.] In Epod. ii. the offerings to Silvanus are fruits, and there he is spoken of as 'tutor finium.' In Tibullus (i. 5. 27) he is called 'deus agricola,' and the offerings are different for wine, corn, and flocks, all of which he protected.

"Ills deo sciet agricolae pro vitibus uavm, Pro segete spicas, pro grege ferre dæpem."

Juvenal (vi. 447) mentions a hog as an offering to this god, to whom women were not allowed to sacrifice, as appears from that passage. He is represented with a pruning hook in one hand, and a basket of fruit and a cypress bough in the other. The last is connected with a story of his killing a hind which belonged to Cypris-sus, who died of grief in consequence.

144. Genium memorem brevisæevi.] See Epp. i. 7. 34, n.

145. Fescennina per hunc inventa licentia] Bentley, on no authority but on the suggestion of Barthius, reads 'inventa.' All the MSS. have 'inventa.' There was a sort of rude jesting dialogue carried on in extempore verse at these rustic festivals, full of good-tempered raillery and coarse humour. These were called 'Fescennina carmina,' as is generally supposed from the town Fescennia or Fescennium, belonging to the Falisci (see Niebuhr, Rom. Hist. i. 136). Other etymologies have been given (see Forcell). From these verses others took their name, which were more licentious and scurrilous. Epithalamaia, usually of an obscene character, were called 'Fescennini versus' (see Catullus lxi, 126, in Nuptias Juliae et Manili:

"Neu diu taceat proax Fescennina locutio"),

and satires got the same name, but the sort of poetry with which it originated was harmless, as Horace says (compare Virgil, Georg. ii. 369, sqq.):

"Necon Ausonii, Troja gens missa, coloni
Versibus incomptis ludunt risuque soluto;
Oraque corticibus summum horrenda cavatis;
Et te, Bacche, vacant per carmina laeta,
&c."

Tibullus (ii. 1. 51, sqq.) refers to the songs of the rustics at harvest time:

"Agricola assiduo primum satiatus natro
Cantavit certo rustica verba pede;
Et satur arenti primum est modulatus
avena
'Carmen, ut ornatos dicret ante deos,
Agricola et minio suffusus, Bacche, rubenti
Primus inexperta duxit ab arte choros."

152. quin etiam lex Poenagne lata] See S. ii. 1. 60, n. 'Lata' properly belongs to 'lex;' when a penalty was inserted in the 'lex' it was 'lex sancta,' as stated in the note just referred to. The authority in respect to the XII Tables is Cicero (Repub. iv. 10): "Nostrae contra duodecim Tabulae cum perpaucae res capite sanxisset, in his bane quoque sanmelandam putaverunt, si quis occentavisset, sive carmen condidisset quod infamiam faceret, flagitiumve alteri:
praecellere, judicis enim magistratuum disceptationibus legitimis propositam vitam non poétarum ingenios habere debusens; nec probrum audire nisi ea lege ut respondere
Poenaque lata malo quae nollet carmine quemquam Describi; vertere modum, formidine fustis
Ad bene dicendum delectandumque redacti.
Gracia capta ferum victorem cupit et artes
Intulit agresti Latio; sic horridus ille Defluxit numeros Saturnius et grave virus

liceat et judicio defendere." This he says with particular reference to the license of the Greek. "Occentare est infame carmen nominata persona edere: contrarium canicum cantare" (Scholast on the above in August. de Civ. Del, ii. 9. Benedictine edition).

154. Describi:] This is used in the same sense in S. i. 4. 3: "Si quis erat dignus describi." 'Fustuarium' was a mode of putting to death by beating with sticks and stoning, usually but not only, as the passage shows, inflicted on soldiers. (See Dict. Ant.)

156. Graecia capta ferum victorem cepit] Ovid uses similar language (Fast. iii. 101):

"Nondum tradiderat victas victoribus artes Graecia, facundum, sed male forte genus" and Livy makes Cato say, speaking in favour of the Lex Oppia (xxxiv. 4): "Haec ego, quo melior laetorique in dies fortuna reipublicae est imperiumque crescit, et jam in Graeciam Asianque transcendimus omnibus libidinum illecebros repetita, et regias etiam atrectamus gazas, eo plus horreo ne illae magis res nos ceperint quam nos illas. Infesta mihi, crede, si qua ab Syracusis illata sunt haec urbi. Jam nimia multos audio Corinthi et Athenarum ornamenta landantes mirantes-que, et antefixa fictilia corum Romanorum ridentes." Compare also what Livy says (xxxv. 40) respecting the spoils imported by Marcellus from Syracuse, which city was taken A.U.C. 542, the seventh year of the second Punic war, after which Horace dates the study of Grecian literature at Rome. In A.U.C. 608, the last year of the third Punic war, Corinth was taken by Mummianus, and Southern Greece was formed into the Roman province of Achaia. Horace had probably both these periods in his mind, as well as the conquest of Southern Italy, in the towns of which were some of the finest works of Grecian art. Gellius (xxvii. 21) quotes two trochaic verses of Porcius Licinius, a poet whose age is unknown:

"Poenico bello secundo Musa pinnato gradu Intulit se bellicosam in Romuli gentem feram."

The reader will do well to refer to Spence's Polymetis (pp. 36, sqq. fol. edit.) for an account of the progress of the Romans in the appreciation of Greek literature and arts. A reference to the note on v. 62 will show that the first play copied from the Greek was not exhibited at Rome till after the first Punic war, which ended in A.U.C. 513.

158. Defluxit numeros Saturnius] The Saturnian verse, according to Niebuhr (i. 259, n.), continued in use down to the middle of the seventh century of the city. It consisted of a great variety of lyrical metres, which he says were carried to a high degree of perfection (but see his specimens below). According to this it survived Lucilius, and was not extinct when Cicero was born. Horace says traces of the old rudeness remained in his day, probably in the less polished 'mimes,' and in the 'Fescennina carmina,' which were not extinct. Niebuhr quotes the "lex horrendi carminis," given in Livy (i. 20) as a specimen of this measure:

"Dum vivri perundequin dominei
Si a duumviris provocavit,
Provocative certato:
Si vincent caput omen:
Infelic arbore restit suspando:
Véberato intra vel extra pomérium."

I have given the verses according to Niebuhr's arrangement and accentuation, but they appear to be quite arbitrary, and afford no trace of rhythm. It was with reference to the Saturnian verses that Ennius said:

"Scripsere alii rem
Versibus quos olim Fauni vatesque canebant,
Quam neque Musarum scopulos quisquam superarat,
Nec dicti studiosus erat."

This verse, Niebuhr says (ii. 592, n.), was always used in inscriptions; as that in which T. Quinctius, the dictator, recorded his capture of nine towns, A.U.C. 375 (Livy vi. 29), the earliest inscription on record. It has been thus restored:
Munditiae pepulere; sed in longum tamen aevum
Manserunt hodioque manent vestigia ruris.
Serus enim Graecis admovit acumina chartis,
Et post Punica bella quietus quærere coepit
Quid Sophocles et Thespis et Aeschylus utile ferrent.
Tentavit quoque rem, si digne vertere posset,
Et placuit sibi, natura sublimis et acer;
Nam spirat tragicum satís et felíciter audet,
Sed turpem putat inscitum metuitque lituram.
Creditur ex medio quia res arcessit habere
Sudoris minimum, sed habet comoedia tanto
Plus oneris quanto veniae minus. Adspice, Plautus Quo pacto partes tutetur amantis ephebi,

"Júppiter atque Divi omnès hoc dedérunt
Ut Titus Quinctius dictatór (Românius)
Oppida nóvem (diebús novem) cáperet."

To such specimens of Saturnine verse Horace's epithet is not misapplied; but I believe, with all deference to Niebuhr, that they afford no idea of the structure of the Saturnian verse. Any nation, with any pretension to poetry, would have something better than this.

161. Serus enim] 'Romanus' must be understood here.

163. Quid Sophocles et Thespis et Aeschylius] Thespis is here introduced as being the reputed founder of Greek tragedy. It is doubtful whether any of his plays were translated by or known to the Roman tragedians, of whom Horace has mentioned Livius, Ennius, Naevius, Pacuvius, and Accius. We know of no others earlier than Accius the last of these; and the number of tragedies by these writers, the titles of which have been preserved, is 119. As to Thespis, see A.P. 275, n.

167. metuitque lituram] That is, they were bold enough in their style, and had the spirit of tragedy in them, but they did not look sufficiently to the correction and polishing of their language; they admitted words which were out of taste, and thought too much care in composition beneath them. This is pretty much what he says of Lucilius (S. i. 10. 56, sqq.).

168. arcessit] See Epp. i. 5. 6, n.

'Ex medio' is from common life. Horace says comedy is supposed to be very easy, because the matter is common; but, in fact, it gives more trouble in proportion to the readiness with which it is criticised and faults are detected and condemned.

170. Plautus] Orelli thinks he sees in this place remarkable pleasantry ('singularem festivitatem a nullo adhuc animadversam'). Suetonius (vit. Aug. c. 88) says: "Augustus plane poëatum quoque non imperitus, delectabatur etiam comoedia veteri, et sape eam exhibuit publicis spectaculis." He thinks therefore Horace is poking the emperor upon this taste of his for the old comic writers. However this may be, it appears that Horace had no great opinion of Plautus, all whose greatness, he says, lay in the drawing of small parts. Niebuhr judges otherwise: he calls him one of the greatest poetical geniuses of antiquity. "He shows his great talent in his bold and free, though somewhat singular, manner of dealing with his characters. He takes Greek pieces with Greek 'dramatis personae,' and treats them with a perfect irony. The Greeks in his plays speak out, and are witty as Romans would be. What makes Plautus such a wonderful poet is, that on this slippery ground he always shows the most extraordinary skill in hitting the right point. His language is no less admirable than his poetical skill. If we compare his language with that of his predecessors, we find it greatly altered, enriched, and refined, which is a proof that the language was much cultivated at that time; for had this not been the case, it would certainly be very different from what it is in the comedies of Plautus" (v. iv. p. 261, sq.). The language of Plautus would be rough to the ears of Horace, and his jokes and allusions, drawn principally from the lower orders, or taken from the Greek and adapted to the common sort of people, did not interest him. Horace's taste was not of a very masculine order, and it is not difficult to understand his failing to appreciate Plautus.
Ut patris attenti, lenonis ut insidiosi;
Quantus sit Dossennus edacibus in parasitis,
Quam non adstricto percurrat pulpita socco;
Gestit enim nummum in loculos demittere, post hoc Securus cadat an recto stet fabula talo.
Quem tulit ad scenam ventoso Gloria curru
Examinat lentus spectator, sedulus inflat:
Sic leve, sic parvum est, animum quod laudis avarum
Subruit aut reficit. Valeat res ludiera si me
Palma negata macrum, donata reducit opimum.
Saepe etiam audacem fugat hoc terretque poëtam,
Quod numero plures, virtute et honore minores,
Indocti stolidique, et depugnare parati
Si discordet eques, media inter carmina poscunt
Aut ursum aut pugiles; his nam plebeula plaudit.

173. Quanto sit Dossennus] Because this person is not known from other quarters it is assumed by some that the name is not that of a writer, but of a character in a play of Plautus. This appears as a gloss in the margin of one of Orelli's MSS: "Dossennus: persona comica." Comm. Cruq., on the other hand, says he was a writer of Atellane plays. There can be little doubt, from the position of the name here, that it represents a comic writer of the day. Pliny (xiv. 13) mentions one Fabius Dossennus. The verses Pliny quotes are supposed not to have been his, but Plautus', and the man himself Orelli thinks was a grammarian or a jurisconsultus, not a poet. Seneca (Ep. 89. 5) quotes the epitaph of one Dossennus, which Estré and many others suppose to be the person that Horace mentions. But, however this may be, I have no doubt Dossennus here is a comic poet. Some MSS. and editions have Dorsennus.

174. percurrat pulpita socco:] The front part of the stage where the actors spoke was called 'pulpitum,' by the Greeks λόγιον. As to 'soccus' see S. i. 3. 127, n. It was worn by comic actors, as being a less dignified order of covering for the feet than the 'cothurnus.' A good representation of it will be found in the Dict. Ant. Other shoes worn in comedy were 'baxae' and 'crepidae,' for the same reason, each being a loose sort of slipper, and the latter not materially different, as observed before, from the 'soccus.' Horace means that Dossennus is careless in the composition of his plays, which he expresses by his running about the stage with loose slippers. His only care, he says, is to make money. The sediles, or any one who cared to put a new play upon the stage, paid for it. According to Suetonius, Terence got 3000 sesterces for his Eunuchus, which he says was a larger sum than had ever been given for a comedy before.

177. ventoso Gloria curru] See S. i. 6. 23, n.
185. Si discordet eques.] See S. i. 10. 76, n.
186. Aut ursum aut pugiles:] Augustus himself had a liking for boxers, as mentioned on Epp. i. 1. 49. The interruptions to the regular drama which Horace here mentions appear to have been of common occurrence. Terence complains that the representation of the Heyca was interrupted in this way (Pro. 25, sqq.). At that time the plays were represented on a temporary platform in the circus, where also gladiators and shows of wild beasts were exhibited (see Epp. i. 1. 6, n.). An amphitheatre for the purpose of wild-beast shows was built for the first time by Statilius Taurus in a. u. c. 720 in the Campus Martius (Suet. Aug. 29). The beasts were hunted by dogs or fought by men. But though the acting of plays was in Horace's time carried on in a theatre (v. 60, n.) erected for this special purpose, it appears the people insisted sometimes on having a bear-bait or a boxing match there to amuse them, in spite of the remonstrances of the equites in the front rows, who however, Horace says, were themselves taken too much with processions and shows that appealed more to the eye than to the ear.
Verum equitis quoque jam migravit ab aure voluptas
Omnis ad incertos oculos et gaudia vana,
Quattuor aut plures aulaea premuntur in horas,
Dum fugiunt equitum turmae peditumque eatervae;
Mox trahitur manibus regum fortuna retortis,
Esseda festinat, pilenta, petorrit, naves,
Captivum portatur ebur, captiva Corinthus.
Si foret in terris rideret Democritus, seu
Diversum confusa genus panthera camel,
Sive elephas albus vulgi converteret ora;

187. Verum equitis] Here Bentley, 'satis pro imperio' as Orelli says, and 'frustra clamantibus libraris,' as he says himself, substitutes 'equitis' for 'equiti' against all the MSS. Also on his own conjecture he substitutes 'ingratos' for 'incertos' in the next verse: 'ingratos vero oculos vocat quod cito voluptatis obliviscantur nullumque ex ea fructum percipiant aut reddant.' Other conjectures have been offered by other editors; but 'incertos,' the reading of the Scholiasts and all the MSS., is a good word. The eye is easily dazzled and deluded. The ear takes in what it receives and conveys it to the mind without error; and though Horace seems elsewhere to commend the eye as a means of instruction above the ear, the case is different. (See note on A. P. 160.) Cicero, writing to M. Marius (ad Fam. vii. 1), speaks with a good deal of contempt of the representations at the opening of the theatre of Cn. Pompeius, in which he says: 'Apparatus spectatio tollebat omnem hilaritatem.—Quid enim delectationis habent sexcenti muli in Clytemnestra? (a play of Attius) aut in Equo Trojano (a play of Livius) crataurum tria millia, aut armatura varia peditatus et equitatus in aliqua pugna? quae populaarem admirationem habuerunt, delectationem tibi nullam attulissent.' The supersession of the regular drama at our great national theatres, and the substitution of Wombwell for Shakspeare at Drury Lane, furnishes a parallel to the degeneracy Horace complains of.

188. aulaea premuntur] At the back of the stage was the 'scena,' or wall on which was painted some scene suitable to the performance. Before this 'scena' was a curtain, which was let down below the stage when the acting began, and raised when it was over. This curtain was called 'aulaeum.' The raising of the curtain at the end of the play is referred to in A. P. 154, sq.:

"Si plaurusis egc aulaea manentis et usque Sessuri donec cantor, Vos plaudite, dicat."

190. regum fortuna] This is equivalent to 'fortunati reges.' The expression is like those noticed at S. i. 2. 32; ii. 1. 72.

192. Esseda festinat.] The 'essedum,' was originally the name of a British or Gaulish war chariot, derived from a Celtic root. The name came to be applied to a travelling carriage on two wheels and drawn by two horses. The 'pilentum,' was a carriage used in processions, and appears to have been usually of a luxurious kind, with well-stuffed cushions, and used by women. It was also a travelling carriage. As to 'petorritum,' see S. i. 6. 104, n., and Epp. i. 11. 28, n.

193. captiva Corinthus.] The taking of Corinth may have been represented by spoils of Corinthian bronze. So Acron explains Corinthus by "vasa Corinthia."

194. Democritus.] See Epp. i. 12. 12, n. Democritus had the character of a laughing philosopher, one who turned things habitually into ridicule; the reason for which opinion is not easily traced in what we know of his writings and sentiments. Juvenal (x. 33) says, "Perpetuo risu pulmonem agitare solubat Democritus;" having just before compared him with the sad philosopher Heraclitus:

"—de sapientibus alter
Ridebat quoties de limine moverat unum Proteratalique pedem; fiebat contrarius
auctor."

196. Sive elephas albus] The king of Ava has for one of his many titles the Lord of the White Elephant; and it has been usual for the British government, when an elephant of this colour was caught in their territories, to send it with due ceremony as a present to his majesty. White elephants are merely lusus naturae: they are not a distinct species, as some have supposed.
Spectaret populum ludis attentius ipsis,
Ut sibi praebentem mimo spectacula plura;
Scriptores autem narrare putat asello
Fabellan surdo. Nam quae pervincere voces Evaluere sonum referunt quem nostra theatra?
Garkanum mugire putat nemus aut mare Tuscum,
Tanto cum strepitu ludi spectantur et artes
Divitiaque peregrinae, quibus oblivus actor
Cum stetit in scena concurrit dextera laeae.
Dixit adhuc aliquid? Nil sane. Quid placet 3 erg?
Lana Tarentino violas imitata veneno.
Ac ne forte putes me quae facere ipse recusem
Cum recte tractent alii laudare maligne:
Ille per extentum funem mihi posses videtur
Ire poëta, meum qui pectus inaniter angit,
Irritat, mulset, falsis terroribus implet,
Ut magus, et modo me Thebis, modo ponit Athenis.
Verum age et his qui se lectori credere malunt
Quam spectatoris fastidia ferre superbi
Curam redde brevem, si munus Apolline dignum

They have pink eyes, like other albinos, but do not differ from the brown animal in other respects. They are not common.

198. mimo] See S. i. 10. 6. n.
202. Garkanum mugire putas] See C. ii. 9. 7. "Next morning we took a pleasant ride into the heart of the mountains of (Gargano), through shady dells and noble woods,
which brought to our minds the venerable groves that in ancient times bent with the loud winds, sweeping along the rugged sides of Garkanus. There is still a respectable forest of ever-green and common oak, pitch-pine and hornbeam, chestnut and manna-ash; still

'—— Aquilonibus
Querceta Gargani laborant
Et folis viduantur orni.'"
(Swinburne i. 155.)

207. Lana Tarentino]. The different shades of the purple dye were obtained by different mixtures of the juice of the 'murex' with that of the 'purpura.' The violet colour was much in fashion at this time, without the scarlet peculiar to Tarentum,
'rubra Tarentina' (Pliny N. H. ix. 39. 63).
The Tarentines imitated all the foreign varieties. The Tyrian purple, which was of the colour of concealed blood,
was got by steeping the wool in pure unboiled juice of the 'purpura,' and then letting it lie and simmer with that of the 'murex.'
But these imitations never came up to the original dyes, and were easily detected.
(See Epp. i. 10. 26, n.)

208. quae facere ipse recusem] That is, what his nature refuses to do, what he has capacity for. Horace denies that he is disposed to detract from the merits of good dramatic poets; on the contrary, he considers that he who could succeed in exciting his feelings with fictitious griefs and fears, and transport him in imagination to distant places, could do any thing he chose to try, dance on a tight rope if he pleased, in which there is a little jocular irony perhaps.
Dancing on the tight rope was carried, it seems, to great perfection among the ancients. (See the engravings in Dict. Ant., art. 'Funambulus.') The Greek name for a rope-dancer was σκώνοβδραστῆς, and those who exhibited at Rome were usually Greeks.

216. Curam redde brevem.] From one
MS. (Trinity College) Bentley substitutes
'impende' for 'reddere,' the reading of all other MSS., and all but a few editions which have followed his own. 'Reddere' is 'to pay,' and 'curam redde brevem' is
'pay a slight, passing attention.' 'Munus Apolline dignum' means the library mentioned C. i. 31, Int.
Vis completere libris et vatibus addere calcar,
Ut studio majore petant Helicona virentem.
Multa quidem nobis facimus mala saepe poëtae,
(Ut vineta egomet caedam mea,) cum tibi librum
Sollicito damus aut fesso ; cum laedimur unum
Si quis amicorum est ausus reprehendere versum ;
Cum loca jam recitata revolvimus irrevocati ;
Cum lamentamur non apparere labores
Nostros et tenui deducta poëmata filo ;
Cum speramus eo rem venutam ut simul atque
Carmina rescieris nos fingere commodus ultimo
Acessoas, et egere vetes, et scribere cogas.
Sed tamen est operae pretium cognoscere, quales
Aedituus habeat belli spectata domique
Virtus, indigno non committenda poëtae.
Gratus Alexander regi Magno fuit ille
Choerilus, incultis qui versibus et male natis
Rettulit acceptos, regale nomisma, Philippos.
Sed veluti tractata notam labemque remittunt
Atramenta, fere scriptores carmine foedo
Splendida facta linunt. Idem rex ille poëma

220. Ut vineta egomet caedam mea,] The man who damages his own vines hurts himself more than any one else, and this is the meaning of the proverb.

223. revolvimus irrevocati,] The compounds of volvo are used for reading, from the shape of the books rolled up.
Revolvere' is to read again. 'Revocaurus' is what we barbarously call 'encored.' One of the ways therefore that he says authors get themselves into trouble is by reading over again and again passages they think very fine, but which their patron has not taken the trouble to ask for again.

225. deducta poëmata filo,] See S. i.
10. 44, n.

230. Aedituus,] As to the orthography of this word see the authorities quoted by Mr. Long on Cic. in Verrem. ii. 4. 44.
It means the keeper of a temple. Horace says it is worth while to see what kind of persons should be entrusted with the keeping of Augustus' fame, what poets should be allowed to tell of it.

233. Choerilus,] Choerilus of Iasos, according to Ateon, was 'poëta qui Alexander Magnum secutus bella ejusdem descriptit; cui Alexander dixisse furtur
malle se Thersitem Homerì esse quam hujus Achillem.' He adds: 'Choerilus Alexandri poëta depactus est cum eo ut si ver-sum bonum faceret auro numismate donaretur, si malum colapis feriretur; qui saepe male dicendo colapsis nectus est.' To these particulars Porphyrion adds: 'Hujus omnino septem versus laudabantur.' This poet has been confounded with a native of Samos, who was in the pay of Xerxes. He is mentioned again A. P. 357, where the above scholia occur. 'Male natis versibus' means verses made by a poet who was not born such, seeing that 'poëta nascitur non fit.' As to 'retilit acceptos' see note on
S. ii. 3. 69. 'Philippi' were gold coins with Philip's head on them, the Macedonian 'stater,' of which many specimens are in existence. Its value is reckoned at 1l. 3s. 6d.
of our money. (See Dict. Ant.)

236. Atramenta,] Pliny (xxxv. 6) gives an account of the way in which ink was made by the ancients. The Greeks called it μελαν, the Romans 'atramentum scriptor-ium' or 'librarium,' to distinguish it from shoemaker's dye, also called 'atramentum,' and a paint which had the same name. See Dict. Ant. Horace says it is a common thing for poets to defile great deeds with bad verses,
as the fingers are defiled when they handle ink.
239. ne quis se praeter Apellen Apelles flourished during the latter half of the fourth century B.C. at the court of Philip, and in the camp of Alexander. This story—that Alexander would not suffer himself to be painted by any but Apelles— is referred to by Cicero in his letter to Lucceus (ad Fam. v. 12): "Neque enim Alexander ille gratiae causa ab Apelle potissimum pingi et a Lysippco fingi volebat; sed quod illorum artem cum ipsis tum etiam sibi gloriae fore putabat." See also Pliny (vii. 38) and Plutarch (Alex. c. 4). His merits are described in the warmest terms by Pliny, and his reputation as a painter stood higher than any other of antiquity. His most celebrated painting was that of Aphrodite rising from the sea, which existed in the time of Augustus, and was placed by him in the temple of Julius Caesar.

Lysippus was a younger contemporary of Apelles, and a native of Sicyon. He wrought almost entirely in bronze, and was the author of the statue from which the Parnese Hercules was copied by Glycon. He made several statues of Alexander, whom he appears like Apelles to have followed into Asia. Plutarch (de Fort. et Virt. Alex. ii. 2) says ἦν δὲ καὶ 'Ἀπελλῆς ὁ ἵωγράφος καὶ Λυσίππος ὁ πλάστης καὶ Ἀλεξάνδρον ὤν δὲ μὴ ἤραψε τῶν εἰραυντιδρομῶν οὖν ἵναργυρος καὶ ιεραμένως ὤστε λήων, ὑπὲρ δὲ ὧν ἀλεξανδρόν ὁ μὲν Φιλίππων γίγανον ἀνίκητος ὁ δὲ Ἀπελλῶν ἀνίκητος. And of Lysippus he says: Λυσίππου δὲ τὸ πρῶτον ἀλεξάνδρον πλάσαντος ἀνω βλέποντα τῷ προσώπῳ πρὸς τὸν οὐρανόν (ὡςπερ αὐτὸς εἰσθαλθεὶ βλέπων ἀλεξανδρὸς ἰσήμερος παγεγιόντων τὸν τράχηλον) ἔπεγραψε τις οὐκ ἀπιθανός, αὐδασσοῦται δ᾽ ὁ ιοκευο κἀἄλκεο εἰς Δία λεισάτων γὰν υπὶ ἵματι, Ζεῦ, σὺ δ᾽ Ὀλυμπον ἱχε.

And he goes on to say that Alexander ordered that Lysippus alone should make his statues, because he was the only artist who represented his character, and while adhering to his features did not fail to bring out his virtues. The rest imitated his peculiar bend of the neck, and τῶν δημάτων τὴν δαίμονα καὶ ὑγρότητα (which means 1 suppose an extraordinary brightness and rapid glancing of the eyes), but did not present his manly and lion-like aspect (τὸ ἀργινωπὸν καὶ λεοντῶν), in which therefore Lysippus may be supposed to have been successful.

244. Boeotum in crasso Respecting the proverbial dullness and sensuality of the Boeotians, which Polybius said was unparalleled in Grecian history, see Thirlwall (Hist. Greece, i. 13), who attributes it, not to "the dampness and thickness of their atmosphere," but to "the profusion with which the ordinary gifts of nature were spread over the face of Boeotia, the abundant returns of its grain, the richness of its pastures, the materials of luxury furnished by its woods and waters." It is always hard to fix the causes of national character, especially after the lapse of centuries, and they are probably too much limited in this account of the Boeotians.

245. tua de se judicia atque Munera. Respecting Virgil and Varus, and the presents they are said to have received from Augustus, see S. i. 5. 40, n.

248. aënea signa. The word 'signum' applies generally to all carved or cast figures, while 'statua' applies only to full length figures (see Cic. in Verr. ii. 4. 7, Long's note).
Quam per vatis opus mores animique virorum
Clarorum apparent. Nec sermones ego mallem Repentes per humum quam res componere gestas,
Terrarumque situs et flumina dicere, et arces
Montibus impositas, et barbara regna, tuisque
Auspiciis totum confecta duella per orbem,
Claustraque custodem pacis cohibentia Janum,
Et formidatam Parthis te principe Romam,
Si quantum cuperem possem quoque; sed neque parvum
Carmen majestas recipit tua nec meus audet
Rem tentare pudor quam vires ferre recusent.
Sedulitas clausa suis consuetudine
Praecipe cum se numeris commendat et arte:
Discit enim citius meminitque libentius illud
Quod quis deridet, quam quod probat et veneratur.
Nil moror officium quod me gravat, ac neque flecto

251. Repentes per humum] This is expressed by 'pedestris.' See C. ii. 12. 9, n.
252. arcas Montibus impositas,] See C. iv. 14. 12, and 33, n. Suetonius (Aug. 21) says, "Domuit partim ductu, partim auspiciis suis Cantabrium, Aquitaniam, Pannoniam, Dalmatiam, cum Illyrico omni: item Raetiam et Vindelicos ac Salassos." The 'auspicium,' or power of taking the auspices, the emperors scarcely ever delegated to any one. The commanders of their armies were 'duces.' They had not 'imperium,' and therefore could not have 'auspicium.'

255. Claustraque custodem pacis cohinentia] That which is commonly called the Temple of Janus was a passage enclosed between two gates leading out of the city. A statue of Janus was placed there, and from this and the two gates the place was called Janus Gemini. It was built, according to tradition, by Numa (Livy i. 19). The gates were open in war and closed in peace, but according to Livy they were only shut once between the reign of Numa and the battle of Actium. Ovid makes the god explain the practice thus (Fast. i. 279):—

"Ut populo reduxit patet ad bella profecto
Tota patet dempta janua nostra sera.
Pace fores obdo, ne qua descendere possit:
Caesareoque diu nomine clausus ero."

Horace's explanation is that the gates were shut during peace to prevent its guardian from leaving the city. The first time the gates were shut during the republic was A.D. 519. By Augustus they were closed three times (see C. iv. 15. 9, n.) after the battle of Actium and taking of Alexandria A.D. 725, and after the Cantabrian war A.D. 729. The third occasion is not known; Casaubon (note on Suetonius, Aug. c. 22) says it was the year of Christ's birth, on the authority of Orosius, which is not to be trusted. They remained closed till the defeat of Varus A.D. 9, after which they were opened for nearly fifty years, being closed by Nero A.D. 58. They were immediately opened again, and not closed till A.D. 71 after the taking of Jerusalem. There is no other record of the closing of these gates till A.D. 353, when, according to Ammianus Marcellinus (l.b. xvi.), Constantius closed them after the defeat and death of Magnentius. The practice therefore remained under the Christian emperors.

256. Et formidatam Parthis] See Epp. i. 12. 27, n.
262. Discit enim citius] 'Quis' belongs both to 'discit' and to 'deridet.' Horace says men are more apt to remember what is ridiculous than that which is good and serious; and therefore it is not pleasant to have one's name associated with silly verses or an ugly wax image, such as the admirers of public men might think to honour them with. Busts of literary and other distinguished men were put up in the public libraries (see S. i. 4. 21, n.), and were probably multiplied for sale. They were sometimes made of wax, of which material were made the family busts preserved in the 'atria' of private houses.
In pejus vultu proponi cereus usquam,
Nec prave factis decorari versibus opto,
Ne rubeam pingui donatus munere, et una
Cum scriptore meo, caps a porrectus aperta,
Deferrar in vicum vendentem thus et odores
Et piper et quidquid chartis amicitur ineptis.

268. caps a porrectus aperta.] As to 'capsa,' see the note last referred to. Horace speaks of being stretched out in an open box as if he were a corpse being carried on a 'villis arca' (S. i. 8. 9, n.) to the common burial-ground, that is, to the grocer's shop. 'Vicum' may mean the 'Vicus Thurarius,' which was a part of the Vicus Tusceus mentioned S. ii. 3. 228. 'Porrectus' is used commonly for corpses. Catullus uses it absolutely for 'mortuo' (56. 6) : "Postquam ex porrecto facta marita sene." Most of the old editions have 'aperta,' 'covered,' and many MSS. have the same. That was the reading also of Porphyrian, and Bentley adopts it. Ascensius (1519) has 'aperta,' which has also good authority. 'Operta' would have no force as far as I can see. 'Aperta' keeps up the notion of a 'sandapila' or common bier on which the poor were carried out to burial. In plain language Horace says he might expect his panegyrist's verses to be carried to the grocer, and himself to be held up to ridicule with the author. Compare Catullus (95. 8) : "At Volusii annales—Et laxas scombris saepe dabunt tunicas;" and Persius (i. 43), "nec scombros metentia carmina nec thus."

EPISTLE II.

This Epistle is addressed to Julius Florus, to whom also the third of the first book was written. (See Introduction.) Its professed purpose is to excuse Horace for not having sent Florus any verses. He says he had warned him before he went that he should not be able to write; that he had grown lazy. He reminds him too that he had originally only written verses to bring himself into notice because he was poor, and now had not the same stimulus. Besides he was getting on in years, and people's tastes were so various, and the noises and engagements of the town so distracting, and the trouble of giving and receiving compliments so great, that he had abandoned poetry in disgust. It was better to study philosophy, in pursuance of which he reads himself a lecture of nearly a hundred lines, the substance of which is that he had better be content with what he has got by his profession, set to work to purge his mind, and leave jests and wantonness to younger men. It seems that Florus wanted him to write some more lyrics, 'carmina' (vv. 25. 59), for which he had no mind. Whether he had already published the fourth book of Odes is not certain, for there are no sure means of determining the date of the Epistle. But there is no appearance of its having been written about the same time with the other Epistle. As Kirchner says, there is no reason to suppose Horace would have kept a poem of so much merit locked up in his desk while he was putting forth the first book. Besides which Horace wrote to Florus on that journey, whereas here he supposes him to complain of his not having written either letter or verses. I am not sure that the first verse does not betray a later date, though it has led many into dating the two Epistles at the same time. Florus was evidently a young man when he went with Tiberius into Armenia. He might certainly even at that time have been called his 'fidelis amicus;' but the words seem to imply a longer and more matured friendship; and the epithet 'clarus,' which would have been mere flattery when Tiberius was twenty-two and had done nothing, would suit him very well after his successes against the Racti celebrated in C. iv. 14. In A.U.C. 743, Tiberius was sent by Augustus against the Dalmatians and Pannonians, and was absent from Rome four years, with the exception of a short interval, when he brought home the remains of his brother Drusus, A.U.C. 745. (Dion Cass. 54. 31; 55. 2.) Kirchner (Qu. Hor. p. 39) thinks that Florus accompanied him, and that this Epistle was written the year of their departure, and published the next year, when he supposes the letter to Augustus was written. This may be true, but Tiberius went with Augustus to Gaul A.U.C. 738, and Florus may have been with him then. The objection to that date is that Horace did certainly write verses about that time, of the kind Florus asked for; and though this is not conclusive, for he wrote with no great love for the task, on the whole I think a later date is more probable.
HORATII FLacci

Though there does not profess to be much substance in the Epistle, I think it the most agreeable of all. The stories in illustration are very well told; the description of the town and its annoyances has the force without the harshness of Juvenal; the vanity of authors is ridiculed in a happy and humorous way, and the advice given them is good; and though as usual the sermon at the end about money and philosophy is perhaps a little tedious, and not very convincing, as a whole the Epistle is written in a popular style, and the language and versification are easy and correct. It is always pleasant likewise to hear Horace speaking of himself, the events of his life, and the peculiarities of his character. This Epistle furnishes materials for a considerable part of his biography, and makes us acquainted with his poetical career in particular. It represents him as writing more from necessity than out of love to poetry, and it would not be difficult to trace the force of a pressure from without in many parts of his works.

ARGUMENT.

(v. 1.) Florus, if any one were to offer you a slave for sale, and say, 'Here is a handsome accomplished boy, you shall have him cheap: I have no wish to puff my property, and am not obliged to part with him; but I assure you you will find him a bargain: no dealer would give him you for the money, and there is no one but yourself I would give him to so cheap: but I must tell you he once shirked duty (as boys will), and hid himself in the staircase,—if you bought the boy you would do so with your eyes open and at your own risk. You could not prosecute the man if your slave ran away again.

(v. 20.) When you were going away I told you I was too lazy to answer your letters when you should write. What was the use of my doing so if now you are to reproach me as if I had broken my word?

(v. 26.) An officer of Lucullus' one night while he was asleep had all his money and equipments stolen. He became furious in consequence with himself as well as the enemy, and while his blood was up stormed and took one of the king's strongest places full of treasure, for which he was promoted and rewarded. About the same time the general wanted to get possession of a certain fortress, and calling the officer he says to him, 'Go, my brave friend, go where thy valour calls thee, and great shall be thy reward.' 'Nay,' replies the cunning man, 'send some one who has lost his purse.'

(v. 41.) It was my lot to begin my education at Rome, and to finish it at Athens. From thence I was hurried off to the disastrous wars, and when I got my discharge at Philippus, with my wings cropped, shorn of my inheritance, I was driven by my poverty to write verses. But now that I have enough, I should be mad past recovery if I did not count my case better than scribbling. Time is stealing every thing from me,—mirth, love, wine, and sport, and now it is taking poetry too. Besides people's tastes differ so much. You like song, another likes iambics, a third coarse satire. How can I please you all? Then again how can I write among all the distractions of the town? Here a man calls me to be his bail; there to quit my business and listen to his books; one man is sick on the Quirinal, another at the extremity of the Aventine, and I must see them both, a pretty good distance you must allow. 'Oh! but the streets are so broad and clear you can think as you go along.' Why there is every sort of obstruction, contractors with their mules and porters, cranes swinging stones and beams over your head, funerals, mad dogs, filthy swine; I should like you to make verses in such a scene as that. The poet loves retirement and the woods; the student who has been for years poring over his books is rather awkward in the world; how can I write verses while the waves and storms of the city are roaring about me?

(v. 87.) Besides, these poets do nothing but praise one another. 'A wonderful work! surely all the Muses had a hand in it!' How we hold up our heads and strut past the library which is one day to have a copy of our works! We contest it like two gladiators, and I come off an Alcaeus in his judgment, and he a Callimachus, may a Minnemus if he likes, in mine. I could bear a good deal when I was canvassing for applause; but now that I have retired I shut my ears to them all.

(v. 106.) Though the public may laugh at bad verses, their authors are well satisfied, and if you do not praise them they will praise themselves. But he who wants to write a real poem, must act his own censor and cut out what is bad, even if he keeps it still locked up at home. He will not fail to reproduce obsolete but expressive words as well as new; he will pour along like a rapid river, and enrich the land with the copious stream of his eloquence; pruning, smoothing, erasing, the result will seem as easy as sport, like the mime who twists his limbs in the dance.

(v. 126.) I had rather, says one, be looked upon as a fool, and be satisfied with my own performances, than be ever so learned and tormented to boot. He is like the gentleman at Argos, who used to fancy himself sitting in the theatre and clapping the performers. He was perfectly sane in other respects, and when his friends recovered him from this mania, he bitterly complained that they had taken away his pleasant illusion.

(v. 140.) But, after all, the best thing is to put away child's play and poetry, and take to philosophy. Therefore I reason with myself thus: 'If you had a fever in your veins you would speak to the physician. But if the more you have the more you want, will you keep that to yourself? If you found a particular remedy did you no good, you would avoid that remedy. Well, you heard men say that if a man had money he had wisdom: but if you find yourself no wiser now you are richer, will you stick to those advisers? If wealth could make a man wise and good, you would be ashamed if any were richer than yourself. If what a man pays for is his own, and there are some things which become ours by possession, then your neighbour's farm which supplies you with all you want is yours. What does it matter whether you paid for it yesterday or long ago? If a man buys land, all he gets from it is bought, though he calls it all his own, and puts up boundaries to mark it off, as if that could be one's own which may change hands in a moment. What is the use of villas and barns if heir succeeds heir as wave succeeds wave? What are broad pastures to us if death lays all low alike? As for jewels and all fine things, there are some who have, them not, but the wise man cares not to have them. Why one man prefers his ease to the riches of Herod, while his brother is slaving all day, their genius alone can tell, the companion of their birth, their life, and their death, never the same, now fair, now dark. I shall use my small means as I please, without fear of what my heir may say; yet I am not disposed to forget the difference between a cheerful liver and a profligate, a frugal man and a miser. It is one thing to squander, another to spend it liberally, to seek no more than you want, and to enjoy like the school-boys the short holiday that is left you.
Floret, bono clarioque fidelis amice Neroni,
Si quis forte velit puerum tibi vendere natum Tibure vel Gabii, et tectum sic agat: "Hic et Candidus et talos a vertice pulcher ad imos
Fiet eritque tuus nummorum millibus octo,
Verna ministeriiis ad nutus aptus heriles,
Litterulis Graecis imbutus, idoneus arti
Cuilibet; argilla quidvis imitaberis uda;
Quin etiam canet indoctum sed dulce bibenti:
Multa fidem promissa levant, ubi plenius aequo
Laudat venales qui vult extrudere merces.
Res urget me nulla; meo sum pauper in aere.

1. Floret, bono clarioque] See Introduction, and as to the character of Tiberius see Epp. i. 9. 4, n. His name was that of his father, Tiberius Claudius Nero, till his adoption by Augustus, A.D. 4, when he became Tib. Claudius Nero Caesar.

2. natum Tibure vel Gabii,] That is,
'any where you please.' "Poëtis certa imagine opus est;" the poets like to give reality to their illustrations by being specific. This is Dillenburger's remark, and I agree with him. Orelli thinks Italian towns are mentioned with reference to the fact of the slave being a 'verna' (Epod. ii. 63, n.).

As to Gabii, see Epp. i. 11. 7, n.

5. nummorum millibus octo,] About 631, sterling. Much larger sums were given for handsome slaves, and this boy's accomplish-ments, if they were real, would make him worth a good price. There would be reason therefore to suspect in such a case that the owner was anxious to get rid of him. (See S. ii. 7. 43, n.) The 'literati' were a separate class in the slave family, and were subdivided into 'anagnostae' or 'lectores' (who read to their masters, chiefly at their meals, or if their masters were authors they read their productions aloud for the benefit of the guests), and 'librarii' or 'scribae,' used for writing from dictation, taking care of the library, keeping accounts,
&c., and hence called 'pueri' or 'servi a studiis,' 'ab epistolis,' 'a bibliotheca,' 'notarii,' &c. There were also architects, sculptors, painters, engravers, and other artists, who all came under the same general head of 'literati.' The boy in this place might also be put among the 'cantores' or 'symphoniici,' the choir or band who sang and played to their master at meals. In short,
he was fit for any of the above employments according to his owner's estimate; which he professes to put in a modest way, for fear he should seem to be puffing his property, and so depreciate its value.

12. meo sum pauper in aere.] 'Aes alienum' is used for a debt, and 'aes pro-prium' 'suum,' &c. is therefore money not borrowed. Cicero opposes them (in Verr.
ii. 4. 6): 'At hominem video auctionem fascisse nullam; vendidisse praeter fructus suos nihil unquam; non modo in aere alieno nullo, sed in suis nummis multis esse et temper fussae.' "Aes alienum est quod nos aliius debemus; aes suum est quod alii nobis debent" (Dig. 50. 16. 213, quoted by Mr. Long on the foregoing passage).
The man here says he is not rich, but what he has is his own.
Nemo hoc manganum faceret tibi; non temere a me Quivis ferret idem. Semel hic cessavit et, ut fit, In sealis latuit metuens pendentis habenae.

Des nummos, excepta nihil te si fuga laedat:—
Ille ferat pretium poenae securus, opinor;
Prudens emisti vitiousum; dicta tibi est lex:
Insequeris tamen hunc et lite moraris iniqua?
Dixi me pilgrum proficiscenti tibi, dixi

Quid tum profeci mecum facientia jura
Si tamen attentas? Quereris super hoc etiam, quod

13. Nemo hoc manganum faceret tibi:]
He professes to deal as a friend. The 'mangones' were slave-dealers, a class in no favour but often very rich. The principal person in this line of business in Augustus' time was one Thoranus (Suet. Aug. c. 69). The name is derived from the Greek µαγγανες, µαγγανιος, to juggle, cheat. They were distinguished from 'mercatores,' being called 'venaliarii.' Hence in Plautus (Trin. ii. 2. 53, sq.) we have—

where 'venales' means 'servos.' (See Dig. 50, tit. 16, § 207, quoted in Dict. Ant., art. Servus.) The way of 'raising' slaves for the market and selling them differed but little from the practice in modern times.

14. Semel hic cessavit] He once was behind his time, and hid himself under or on the staircase for fear of a flogging. 'Cessator' and 'erro' were synonymous words. (See S. ii. 7. 100. 113, n.) The stairs may have been dark sometimes, and, as in most houses the principal accommodation was on the ground floor, it is probable that so much regard was not had to the lighting of the staircase as we pay now. Cicero, speaking of Clodius (pro Mil. c. 15), says: "cum se ille in scalarem lateris abdississet," Milo might have fairly put him to death; and again of the same person in another speech (Philipp. ii. 9) he says M. Antonius would have killed him, "nisi ille se in scalas tabernae librarie conjisset." It appears a whip was hung up in some conspicuous place in terremor. Comm. Cruq. says it hung in the middle of the house, and that slaves were tied to the stairs to be flogged.

15. Des nummos,] This line Orelli gives to Horace. I think it is the conclusion of the dealer's speech, but this is doubtful.

17. poenae securus,] Among the faults the seller of a slave was bound to tell was running away. (See passages from Cicero and the Digest quoted on S. ii. 3. 265.)

21. ne mea saevus Jurgarum] 'Mea' belongs to 'epistola,' and is a long way out of its place. 'Juro,' which Varro derives from 'jure ago,' is used as a forensic word by the law writers. It is intransitive. (See Forcell.) The reading of the best MSS. and the editions of the fifteenth century is 'redire.' Later editions, including Bentley, have 'veniret,' which also has MS. authority. Orelli, Dillenburger, Pottier, and some others of the latest editors, have gone back to the old reading. It is not easy to understand how 'redire' should have got into such MSS. as the four Blandianus, the Berne, and Parisian, if 'veniret' were the true reading. Nearly all Torrentius' MSS. had 'redire,' and he approves, but does not edit, that reading. His text and his notes are constantly at variance, and on this account he is often quoted as an authority for readings he does not approve. As his judgment was good, this is to be regretted. In this instance it is not easy to say which is the right word, but I prefer following the better order of MSS. Florus had written probably more than once, expositulating with him on his silence, and had got no answer.

24. Si tamen attentas?] This word Forcellini explains 'labefactare et convellere conaris;' and he quotes Dig. xii. 6, 23, § 1: 'Quam de sententia indubitata, Exspectata tibi non mittam carmina mendax.
Luculli miles collecta viatica multis
Aerumnis,lassus dum noctu stertit,ad assem
Perdiderat;post hoc vehemens lupus et sibi et hosti
Iratus pariter,jejunis dentibus acer,
Praesidium regale loco dejectit,ut aiunt,
Summe munito et multarum divite rerum.
Claris ob id factum donis ornatur honestis,
Accipit et bis dena super sestertia nummum.
Forte sub hoc tempus castellum evertere praetor
Nescio quod cupiens hortari coepit eundem
Verbis quae timido quoque possent addere mentem:
"I, bone, quo virtus tua te vocat, i pede fausto, Grandia laturus meritorum praemia.  Quid stas?"
Post haec ille catus quantumvis rusticus:  "Ibit, Ibit eo quo vis qui zonam perdidit," inquit.

quae nullo remedio attentari potest, transigitur."
— super hoc] It is doubtful whether this means 'besides this,' as in S. ii. 6. 3,
"Et paulum silvae super his" (see note),
or 'about this,' as 'Pallescat super his'
(A. P. 429). Orelli takes it the former way.
26. Luculli miles collecta viatica] As to Lucullus, see Epp. i. 6. 40, n. The soldier of whom this story is told Porphyrion calls Valerianus Servilius, and he makes him an officer of rank, 'praefectus,' perhaps one of those who had command of the auxiliary troops, though the title was not confined probably to these.
(See Caesar, B. G. i. 39, Long's note.) The office of 'praefectus castrorum,' which Orelli supposes Porphyrion to mean, is not mentioned so early as Lucullus. Whatever groundwork of truth there may be in it, Horace has evidently altered the story to suit his purpose. 'Viatica,' would include money as well as baggage and 'kit' as our soldiers call it. Cicero uses the word metaphorically for money (Cat. Maj. c. 18):
"Avaritia senilis quid sibi velit non telligo. Potest enim quidpiam esse absurdus quam quo minus viae restat co plus viatici quaequare?"
30. Praesidium regale] This would be a fortress in which Mithridates kept some part of his treasures.
33. bis dena super sestertia] The 'sestertium' was a sum equal to about 8. 17s.
of our money, twenty of which (160l. 13s.
4d.) would not be a large sum for an officer of rank. But he must be supposed, from his exploits, to have held some command.
34. Forte sub hoc tempus] 'Soon after this time' (see Epod. ii. 44, n. in respect to 'sub' with an accusative in phrases of time).
Lucullus had the title of 'proconsul' of Cilicia, though that was not yet constituted a provincia. (See Dict. Geog. art. 'Cilicia.')
But he is here called 'praetor.' He had been 'praetor urbanus,' but went into Asia at the expiration of his consulship, and therefore with the title of 'proconsul.'
A 'praetor' taking a province went with the title of 'propraetor,' as Brutus did into Macedonia. (See S. i. 7. 18.) 40. quia zonam perdidit.] The Romans worried a girdle when walking or actively occupied, to hold up the ends of their tunic.
Hence the expressions 'praecinctus,' 'succinctus,' for those who were hastening or engaged in active work. (See S. i. 4. 6, n.)
In this girdle ('zona' or 'cingulum') they often carried their money, as Vitellius when he fled for his life, 'zona se aureorum plena circumedit' (Suet. Vitell. c. 16). Hence
'zona' came to be used generally for a purse, as C. Gracchus in his speech delivered when he returned from his province of Sardinia boasts thus: 'Itaque, Qurites, quum Roman profectus sum zonas quis plenas argenti extuli eas ex provincia inanes etului' (Gell. xv. 12). The more common word 'crumena' was a bag, generally of leather, hung on the arm or round the neck (see Forcell.), or sometimes perhaps to the 'zona.'
Romae nutrirì mihi contigit, atque doceri
Iratus Graiis quantum nocuisset Achilles.
Adiecere bonae paulo plus artis Athenae,
Scilicet ut vellem curvo dignoscere rectum,
Atque inter silvas Academi quaerere verum.

Dura sed emovere loco me tempora grato,
Civilisque rudem belli tulit aestus in arma
Caesaris Augusti non responsura lacertis.
Unde simul primum me dimisere Philippis,
Decisis humilem pennis inopemque paterni
Et laris et fundi, panpertas impulit audax,
Ut versus facerem: sed quod non desit habentem
Quae poterunt unquam satis expurgare cicutaeq,
Ni melius dormire putem quam scribere versus?
Singula de nobis anni praedantur cunctis;
Eripuere jocos, venerem, convivia, ludum;
Tendunt extorquere poëmata; quid faciam vis?
Denique non omnes eadem mirantur amantique:
Carmine tu gaudes, hic delectatur iambis,
Ille Bionis sermonibus et sale nigro.
Tres mihi convivae prope dissentire videntur,
Poscentes vario multum diversa palato.
Quid dem? quid non dem? renuis tu quod jubet alter;
Quod petis id sane est invisum acidumque duobus.
Praeter caetera me Romane poëmata censes
Scribere posse inter tot curas totque labores?
Hic sponsum vocat, hic auditum scripta relictis
Omnibus officiis; cubat hic in colle Quirini, Hic extremito in Aventino, visendus uterque;

there is no knowing what poverty may have led him to accept for severe personal satires,
of which there are specimens in the Epodes, showing what he could do in that way. I have no doubt he suppressed much of his early poetry.

53. Quae poterunt unquam] The 'ci-cuta,' sâveîov, hemlock, was used as an antifebrile medicine (see Pliny, xxiii. 13.
95). Horace asks what amount of 'cicuta' would be sufficient to cool his veins if be were so feverishly bent upon writing, as to do so when he could live without it.
Persius employs the same idea (v. 144):

"Quid tibi vis? Calido sub pectore mascula bilis Intumuit, quam non extinxerit urna cicutaq."

60. Ille Bionis sermonibus] Bion was born on the Borysthenes, and was hence called Borysthenites. He flourished about the middle of the third century n.c. He studied philosophy at Athens, and after passing through various sects, he became at last a Peripatetic. Acron says of him in his note on this place: "Sunt autem dis-putationes Bionis philosophi, quibus sulttitiam arguit vulgi, cui paene consentiunt carmina Luciliana. Hic autem Bion, qui Sophistes cognominatus est, in libro quem edditt, mordacissimus salibus es quae apud poëtas sunt, laceravit, ut ne Homero quidem parceret." Some of his sayings are preserved in Diog. Laert. (iv. 47, sqq.), Cicero (Tusc. Quaest. iii. 26), and Seneca (de Tranq. An. vii. 2; xv. 3; de Benef.

vii. 7). Porphyrius writes nonsense when he says Bion was the father of Aristophanes,
As 'sal' is put for wit (S. i. 10. 3), 'sale nigro' means coarse wit, of which the saying quoted by Cicero (l.c.) is a specimen: "stultissimum regem (Agamenonem) in luete capillum sibi evelere, quasi calvito maeror levaretur." If Lucilius, as Acron says, imitated Bion, that is, borrowed some of his coarse wit, Horace probably was well acquainted with his sayings.

61. Tres mihi convivae] He treats his friends, all asking him for different sorts of verse, as guests at a dinner each liking different fare, so that he does not know what to give them. Gellius (xiii. 11) quotes a treatise of Varro's respecting the proper numbers, dress, and behaviour of guests at a dinner party, in which he says the number should begin with that of the Graces, and go up to that of the Muses; that is, there should never be less than three or more than nine.

67. Hic sponsum vocat] This is a repetition of S. ii. 6. 23: "Romae spon-sorem me rapiis."

68. cubat hic in colle Quirini] As to 'cubat,' see S. i. 9. 18, n. Mons Quirinalis was in the sixth, or most northern division of the city; Mons Aventinus in the opposite quarter, the thirteenth region.
Intervalla vides humane commoda. Verum

Purae sunt plateae, nihil ut meditantibus obstet.

Festinat calidus mulis gerulisque redemptor,
Torquet nunc lapidem, nunc ingens machina tignum,
Tristia robustis luctantur funera plaustris,
Hac rabiosa fuit canis, hac lutulenta ruit sus:

I nunc et versus tecum meditare canoros.

Scriptorum chorus omnis amat nemus et fugit urbem,
Rite cliens Bacchi sommo gaudentis et umbra:
Tu me inter strepitus nocturnos atque diurnos
Vis canere et contracta sequi vestigia vatum?

Ingenium sibi quod vacuas desumpsit Athenas,
Et studiis anno septem dedit insenuitque

70. Intervalla vides humane commoda.]
'A pretty convenient distance you see.' I cannot find that 'humane' is used in this ironical way elsewhere.

71. Purae sunt plateae.] This is a supposed answer, the rejoinder to which is in v. 72. 'Platea' is a less general name than 'vicus.' It applies only to the broader streets. The word being derived from the Greek παρεύσια, would properly have its penult long. It suits Horace to shorten it. As to the obstructions in the streets of Rome, the best of which were but narrow, see Ep. i. 6. 51, n.; and compare the reasons Ausonius gives for leaving the town, in his letter to his friend Paulus nearly 400 years after this, when the streets were very different from what they were in Horace's time:

'Nam populi coetus et compita sordida rixis
Fastidientes, cernimus
Angustas ferveia vias, et congrege vulgo
Nomen plateas perdere.

Turbida congestis referitur vocibus Echo,
Tene, ferei, du, da, cave:
Sus lutulenta fugit, rabidus canis impete saevro,
Et impares plaustro boves.
Nec prodest penetraba domus et operta subire;
Per tecta clamores meant.'

72. redemptor.] See C. ii. 18. 18, n.; iii. i. 35, n. 'Calidus' only strengthens 'festinat,' he is in hot haste: the substantives are in the ablative, 'cum' being omitted.

73. machina] Probably a pully raising a large stone or beam for the upper part of a building, and swinging it over the heads of the passengers. As to 'funera,' see S. i. 6. 43, n.

77. amat nemus] See C. i. 30, n.; iii. 52, n. Compare Juvenal (vii. 53, sqq.):
'Sed vatem egregium, cui non sit publica vena,'

Anxiate carens animus facit, omnis acerbi
Impatiens, cupidus silvarum, aptusque

Fontibus Aonidum.'

80. contracta sequi vestigia] The MSS. vary a good deal in respect to 'contracta.' Some of the best MSS. have 'contacta,' which Comm. Curoq. reading interprets 'hoc est vis me aliena dicere: nam contacta pro detritis et divulgatis dixit: et ita vis me scribere ut ad vates antiquos accedam proxime.' It is not easy to get all this out of 'contacta.' I think the other is the true reading; and that it means that the road to fame is not what we call a royal road; that the poets walk in a path narrowed by fixed rules; and that it requires thought and diligence to tread in their steps, as Propertius says (iv. 1. 14): 'Non datur ad Musas currere lata via.' Bentley, with no sort of authority, substitutes 'non tacta.'

81. vacuas desumpsit Athenas] See Epp. i. 7. 45, n. for 'vacuas.' Horace says the man who has retired to study, as he had done at Athens, and has shut himself up for several years, and got dull over his books and his meditations, cannot open his lips when he gets to Rome, and is only laughed at by the people for his sobriety. This is an odd defence for one who had written so much as he had done at Rome. It is meant for a joke. 'Septem annis' is not to be taken literally, as if Horace had been seven years at Athens, which is very improbable. He was only twenty-two when he joined Brutus, a. u. c. 711.
Libris et curis, statua taciturnius exit
Plerumque et risu populum quatit; hic ego rerum
Fluctibus in mediis et tempestatibus urbis
Verba lyrae motura sonum connectere digner?
Frater erat Romae consulti rhetor, ut alter
Alterius sermone meros audiret honores,
Gracchus ut hic illi, foret huic ut Mucius ille,
Qui minus argutos vexat furor iste poëtas?
Carmina compono, hic elegos. "Mira bile visu Caelatumque novem Musis opus!" Adspice primum, Quanto cum fastu, quanto molimine circum-
Spectemus vacam Romanis vatibus aedem!
Mox etiam, si forte vacas, sequere et procul audi,
Quid ferat et quare sibi nectat uterque coronam.
Caedimur et totidem plagis consumimus hostem

87. Frater erat Romae] Who these brothers were Horace does not tell us, and it does not matter. One a jurisconsultus (see S. i. 1. 9, n.) and the other a teacher of rhetoric. The lawyer said the rhetorician was a perfect Gracchus for eloquence, and he returned the compliment by declaring that his brother was a second Scaevola for legal learning. And this sort of mutual flattery goes on Horace says among poets, and he cannot keep pace with their passion for praise. Tiberius Gracchus and his brother Caesar, were both in Cicero’s opinion great orators. We need not therefore attempt to decide which Horace means us to understand here. Q. Mucius Scaevola the augur, son-in-law of C. Laelius, and an early instructor of Cicero (Lael. c. 1), was learned in the law; but his namesake and younger contemporary, the Pontifex Maximus, was more celebrated still. Cicero (de Orat. i. 30) calls him "homo omnium et disciplina juris civilis eruditissimus et ingeni prudentiaque acutissimus, et oratione maxime limatus atque subtilis, atque ut ego soleo dicere juris peritorum eloquentissin mus eloquentium juris peritissimus." This name therefore like that of Gracchus for oratory, stands for a consummate jurist.

88. meros audiret honores.] Compare (Epp. i. 7. 84) “vineta crepat meru.”

89. foret huic ut Mucius ille.] There does not appear to be any extant MS. with this reading. Fea mentions two editions of 1516 and 1520, by Giovanni Britannico which have it. Lamhins has it, and says nothing of the other reading (‘foret hic ut Mucius illi’), “ quem tamen vel duo vel nemo secutus est” (Bentley); “immo et extat in quadraginta editionibus Lambiniana recentioribus” (Cunningham Animaev. p. 77). But I cannot discover that any editions have it between Lambins and Bentley. Since Bentley nearly all editors have ‘huic ut Mucius ille.’ This is probably the true reading: at least the other is uncouth and unusual: but how this should have got into all the known MSS., and nearly every edition, I do not understand.

90. argutos] Compare iv. 6. 25: “Doctor argutae fidicen Thalise.” It means melodious, and is a sort of mock compliment.

92. Caedalumque novem Musis opus] It is likened to a perfect piece of carved work in which all the Muses had a hand. Bentley has invented ‘sacratum.’

93. quarto molimine] This expresses the pompous strut with which they pass the library of Apollo, in which they take it for granted a place is reserved for them. As ‘aedem,’ see S. i. 10. 36.

95. procu] This word signifies any distance, great or small. Here it means hard by, as in S. ii. 6. 105; Epp. i. 7. ‘Quid ferat’ means what each has to say.

97. Caedimur et totidem plagis] They carry on such a contest of mutual flattery, that they are like two gladiators, each trying to get the better of the other. ‘Sammites’ were a particular class of gladiators, so called because they wore the same arms as that people, particularly an oblong shield. See S. ii. 6. 44, n. ‘Ad lumina prima’ would be usually till the second course, when the lights were brought in. Among Lento Samnites ad lumina prima duello.
Disceo Alcaeus puncto illius; ille meo quis?
Quis nisi Callimachus? Si plus adposcere visus,
Fit Minnemus et optivo cognomine crescit.
Multa fero ut placem genus irritable vatun,
Cum scribo et supplex populi suffragia capto;
Idem, finitis studiiis et mente recepta,
Obtorem patulas impune legentibus aures.

Ridentur mala qui component carmina; verum
Gaudent scribentes et se venerantur, et ultro,
Si taceas, laudant quidquid scripsere beati.
At qui legitimum cupiet fecisse poëma
Cum tabulis animum censoris sumet honesti;
Audebit quaeque parum splendoris habebunt
Et sine pondere erunt et honore indigna ferentur
Verba movere loco, quamvis invita recedant
Et versentur adhuc intra penetralia Vestae.

Obscurata diu populo bonus eruet atque
Proferet in lucem speciosa vocabula rerum, the amusements that rich men had at their dinners were gladiators who fought with blunt weapons; and here the contest is said to be protracted ("lento") till the lights came in. It was a long trial of skill.

99. puncto illius;] 'In his judgment or by his vote.' When an election took place, there were certain persons called 'custodes' appointed to take the votes and prick off the number given for each candidate. From this process votes came to be called 'puncta.' See A. P. 343, n.

101. Fit Minnemus] See Epp. i. 6. 63, n. Horace seems to think him superior to Callimachus, who Quintilian on the other hand says "elegiae princeps habetur" (x. 1. 58). He was a grammarian and voluminous prosa writer as well as a poet, a native of Cyrene, and established at Alexandria in the reigns of the Ptolemies, Philadelphus and Euergetes, in the third century B.C.

— optivo] This word, signifying 'desired,' does not occur elsewhere. But it was applied in later times to those 'tutores' 'qui ex optione sumencetur,' which is explained on Epp. i. 1. 21.

105. impune legentibus] He says when he has done writing and recovered his senses (which was the same thing), he should stop his ears, and they might recite without fear of reprisals. Compare "nobilium scriptorum auditer et ulter," Epp. i. 19. 30, where see note.

110. Cum tabulis animum censoris] Dobree (Adv. 406) thinks this may be imitated from Demosthenes' advice to the

113. Verba movere loco,) The notion of the censor is kept up. See note on S. i. 6. 20.

114. Et versentur adhuc] This is a way of saying that the verses, though they may be expunged, still are kept in the author's desk, because he has a regard for them and cannot make up his mind to destroy them. Porphyrian explains 'pene-

116. speciosa vocabula rerum,) Expressive terms: words which make them-

319 a play is said to be 'speciosa locis,' that is 'plain in its points,' its common-places or sentiments clearly put.
Quae priscis memorata Catonibus atque Cethegis
Nunc situs informis premit et deserta vetustas;
Adsciscet nova quae genitor produxerit usus.
Vehemens et liquidus puroque simillimus amni
Fundet opes Latiumque beabit divite lingua;
Luxuriantia compescet, nimis aspera sano
Levabit cultu, virtute carentia tollet, Ludentis speciem dabit et torquabitur, ut qui Nunc Satyrum, nunc agrestem Cyclopa movetur.
Praetulerim scriptor delirus inersque videri,
Dum mea delectent mala me vel denique fallant,
Quam sapere et ringi. Fuit haud ignobilis Argis,

117. Catonibus atque Cethegis] As to the use of the plural number see note on
S. i. 7. 8. M. Porcius Cato Censorius was born about a. u. c. 520, and was therefore contemporary with Ennius, with whom he is associated A. P. 56 as successfully importing new words into the language.
Fragments remain of his treatise de Re
Rustica, embracing a variety of instructions on husbandry and subjects connected with domestic economy; and of his Origines,
an account of the early history of Italy.
There are also fragments of his orations, which Cicero appears to have studied (Brutus, c. 17). He had the highest opinion of Cato, and complains that he was not studied enough even in his day, adding "referatae sunt orationes et verbis et rebus illustri-bus—omnes oratoriae virtutes in eis reperi-centur. Jam vero Origines ejus quem florem aut quod lumen eloquentiae non habent?"
M. Cornelius Cethegus was older than Cato, since he was curule ædile when Cato was no more than twenty. His eloquence was such that Ennius called Cethegus "Suadae medulla, orator suaviloquenti ore" (Cic. Brut.
c. 15; Cat. Maj. c. 14; see Epp. i. 6. 36, n.).
But it does not appear that any of his orations were extant in Cicero's time, for he only mentions them on the authority of Ennius who had heard him speak. His reputation was sufficient at the time Horace wrote for him to name him twice as an authority on the language (see A. P. 50, n.).

119. quae genitor produxerit usus.] 'Usus'
' custom,' which has always been the parent of novelities in language.
Compare A. P. 70, sqq.:
"Multa renascentur quae iam cecidero,
cadentque
Quae nunc sunt in honore vocabula si
volet usus,

Quem penes arbitrium est et jus et norma loquendi."

120. Vehemens] The two first syllables are pronounced as one. Compare S. i. 5.
67: "Nihil deterius dominae jus esse."

123. virtute carentia tollet.] Dillenb., and Orelli interpret 'tollet' as 'extollet,' like Quintilian's "premère tumentia, hu-milia extollere" (x. 4. 1); and Cicero (de Orat. iii. 26): "Summa laus eloquentiae est amplificare rem ornando, quo valet non solum ad augendum aliud et tollendum altius dicendo, sed etiam ad extenuandum et abjiciendum." In these passages there could be no ambiguity in the word. In the text I think if Horace had meant what these commentators suppose, he would have expressed it more plainly. I believe the words mean 'he will remove what lacks merit.' He will work hard to produce a result which shall appear playful and easy, the turns being as easy as those of the
'minus,' who dances either the light measure of the nimble Satyr or the clumsy dance of the Cyclops (on which see S. i. 5.
63, n.). The words have some difficulty, but I believe this to be the meaning. The poet's art is to conceal his art, and to make that appear easy which has cost him a good deal of trouble.

126. Praetulerim scriptor] This is supposed to be the remark of one who would be a poet without the necessary trouble.
He would rather be pleased with his own bad verses, even though he might be deceiving himself, than be so learned and be perpetually vexed with himself. 'RINGERO,' is properly applied to the grinning of a dog when it snarls.

128. Fuit haud ignobilis Argis.] Sir
Henry Halford furnishes a parallel story (Essays, p. 61): "One case, that of the gen-
Qui se credebat miros audire tragoeodos,
In vacuo latus scissor plausorque theatro;
Caetera qui vitae servaret munia recto
More, bonus sane vicinus, amabilis hospes,
Comis in uxorem, posset qui ignoscere servis
Et signo laeso non insanire lagenae,
Posset qui rupem et puteum vitare patentem.
Hic ubi cognatorum opibus curisque refectus
Expulit elleboro morbum bilemque meraco
Et redit ad se se: "Pol me occidistis; amici,
Non servastis," ait, "cui sic extorta voluptas
Et demptus per vim mentis gratissimus error."
Nimirum verae numerosque modosque ediscere vitae.
Quocirca mecum loquor haec tacitusque recordor:
"Si tibi nulla sitim finiret copia lympheas,
Narrares medicis; quod quanto plura paras
Tanto plura cupis, nulline faterier audes?
Si vulnus tibi monstrata radice vel herba
Non fieret levius, fugeres radice vel herba
Proficiente nihil curarier. Audieras, cui
Rem di donarent illi decedere pravam
Stultitiam; et cum sis nihil sapientior ex quo
Plenior es, tamen uteris monitoribus isdem?
At si divitiae prudentem reddere possent,
Si cupidum timidumque minus te, nempe ruberes
Viveret in terris te si quis avarior uno.
Si proprium est quod quis libra mercatur et aere,

"Caetera qui vitae servaret" 131. Though he observed all the other duties of life.
"Et signo laeso" 134. The 'amphorae,' or 'lagenae' were sealed with the owner's seal when they were filled. Horace says that the man was not one who would get furious if he found the slaves had opened a 'lagenae' and drank the contents. See C. iii. 8. 11. 12.

135. puteum vitare patentem.] Wells were usually surrounded with a wall ('pulaeal') two or three feet high. See Dict. Ant.

136. cognatorum opibus] See S. ii. 3. 217, n., and as to 'elleborum' see v. 83 of that Satire. 'Meracus' is generally applied only to wine. Persius (iv. 16) also applies it to hellebore: 'Anticyras melior sorbere meracas.'

158. quod quis libra mercatur et aere,] The mode of sale 'per aes et libram' is described by Gaius (i. 119, quoted in the Quaedam, si credis consultis, mancipat usus;
Qui te pascit ager tuus est, et villicus Orbii,
Cum segetes occat tibi mox frumenta daturas,
Te dominum sentit. Das nummos, accipis uvam,
Pullos, ova, cadum temeti: nempem modo isto
Paulatim mercaris agrum fortasse trecentis
Aut etiam supra nummorum millibus emptum.
Quid refert vivas numerato nuper an olum?
Emptor Aricii quondam Veientis et arvi

Plautus (Capt. iii. 5. 3, sqq.), where Hegio calls Tyndarus—
"Sator sartorque scelerum et messor maxumus;"

and he answers:
"Non occatorem dicere audebas prius?
Nam semper occant prius quam sanriunt rustici."

'Sarrire' is 'to weed.'

163. cadum temeti: ] 'Temetum' is an old word, signifying 'wine.'

'Qui de vietu atque cultu populi Romani scripserunt mulieres Romae atque in Latino sanctam abstensiones egiisse, hoc est vino semper, quod temetum priscia lingua appellant, abstinentius dicunt." (Gell. x. 23). Hence Cicero says: 'carent temeto omnes mulieres,' though the word was probably not common in his day. Plautus uses it, and Juvenal. (See Foreell.)

164. trecentis — nummorum millibus] 'Three hundred sestertia.' Taking the value of the 'sestertium' at 0.17s. 1d., this sum would be 2636l. 5s. of our money.

165. Emptor Aricii quondam] The MSS. have different readings, 'quoniam,' 'quondam,' 'quoando,' 'cum jam,' of which the first appears to have most authority from MSS. All those of Cicquius, Torreutius, and Orelli, have 'quoniam;' and some of Fea's. The old editions, as far as I have seen, all have 'quondam' (Ven. 1483, 'condam'), and that is the reading generally received. 'Emptor quondam,' as Orelli says, is equivalent to 'is qui quondam emit.' As to Aricia see S. i. 5. 1, n. As to Veii, the town which was taken by Camillus had long ceased to exist. (See Lucan. viii. 392, quoted on Epp. i. 11. 6, and Propert. iv. 10. 27, sqq.) It had been replaced (whether on the same site or not is uncertain) by a new city, which when Horace wrote was almost in ruins, having suffered in the late civil wars. Julius Caesar divided its lands among his soldiers. In Emptum coenat olus, quamvis aliter putat; emptis
Sub noctem gelidum lignis calefactat aënum;
Sed vocat usque suum qua populus adsita certis
Limitibus vicina refugit jurgia; tamquam
Sit proprium quidquam, puncto quod mobilis horae
Nunc prece, nunc pretio, nunc vi, nunc morte suprema
Permutet dominos et cedat in altera iura.
Sic quia perpetuus nulli datur usus, et heres
Heredem alterius velut unda supervenit undam, Quid vici prosunt aut horrea? quidve Calabis

the year A.D. 1811, on the eastern side of a hill in the neighbourhood of the place now called Isola Farnese, eleven miles north of Rome, there were discovered by excavation the remains of this town, columns and indications of large buildings and temples, with marble statues of Augustus, Tiberius, Germanicus, and others, and several public and private inscriptions, from which Fea quotes "MVNICIPES. MVNICIP. AVGVSTI.
VEIEXTIS. INTRAMURANIS." From this it may be inferred that the restoration of the town was due to Augustus, and that it was a 'municiplum.'

170. qua populus adsita certis Limitibus]
'Usque' in this verse is an adverb of place, not of time. It means 'all the way up to where the poplar stands.' The Roman term 'limitatio' properly implied a religious ceremony by which in earlier times the augurs, in the times of the emperors officers called 'Agrimensores,' marked off lands assigned in perpetuity by the state to private persons. The process by which this 'limitatio' was effected is described by Niebuhr very elaborately in the twoappen-dixes to the second volume of his Roman History. "Every field which the republic separated from the common domain was marked out by boundaries. No separation could take place without such a demarcation; and wherever there were any traces of the latter, although particular estates within the region subjected to it might still be part of the domain, it was yet a certain proof that such a separation had taken place." "The principle of the Roman 'limitatio' was to draw lines toward the four quarters of the heavens parallel and crosswise, in order to effect a uniform division of the lots of land which were transferred from the public domain to private property, and to fix immutable boundaries for them. Hence these boundaries ('limites') were marked by a slip of land left for the purpose untouched by cultivation, as balks or ways, as their extremities were by a row of stones inscribed with numerals" (p. 624). Niebuhr conjectures "that a fundus assigned by the state was considered as one entire farm, as a whole the limits of which could not be changed." But though this should be true, and though each fundus as a whole might bear the name of the first grantee, "this did not preclude the division of estates nor even the sale of duodecimal parts of them; but the original boundaries circumscribed them as one integral whole, and all the parts were pledged for the conditions of the first assignment." "Hence the termini comportionales" (p. 633).

These are such 'termini' or conventional boundaries as Horace here refers to: a stone perhaps or an image of the god Terminus, with a tree or a clump planted near
it. But there were many different kinds of private boundaries. Cicero (pro Caequina,
c. 8) mentions a row of olives: "ejus fundi extremam partem oleae directo ordine definiunt." "Fines antem multos modis signabantur: terminis et arboribus notatis, et fossis, et viis, et rivis, et vepribus, et saepe
normalibus, et ut comperti aliquibus locis inter arva margineus tantum pulvinis, saepe etiam limitibus. Item petras notatas quaes in finibus sunt pro terminis habitatis" (quoted from Aggerinus Urbicus, a writer on Roman land-surveying, by Torrius, who also refers to Varro, de Re Rust. i. 15:
"Praeterea sine saeptis fines praelid sationis
notis arborum tutiores sunt, ne familiae rwenturn cum vicinis ac limites ex lilibus judicem quaerant"); and to Virgil (ECL. ix.
7): "nusque ad aquam et veteres, jam fracta cacurnina, fagos." The quotation from Varro explains 'vicina refugit jurgia,' where Bentley, with little authority, reads 'refigit:' "cum non unam aliqiuim litem sed plurative 'jurgia' dixerit," which is just what the aoristic use of the perfect tense expresses. See Dict. Ant. art. 'Agrimensoris.'

177. Quid vici prosunt] 'Vicus' (which Forcellini considers is derived from orog, with the digamma prefixed, but it may be Saltibus adjecti Lucani, si metit Orcus
Grandia cum parvis, non exorabilis auro?
Gemmias, marmor, ebur, Tyrhena sigilla, tabellas,
Argentum, vestes Gaetulo murice tinetas,
Sunt qui non habeant, est qui non curat habere.
Cur alter fratrum cessare et ludere et ungi
Praeferat Herodis palmetis pinguius, alter
Dives et importunus ad umbram lucis ab ortu
Silvestrem flammis et ferro mitiget agrum,
Scit Genius, natale comes qui temperat astrum,
Naturae deus humanae, mortalis in unum
Quodque caput, vultu mutabilis, albus et ater.
Utar et ex modico quantum res poscet acervo
Tollam, nec metuam quid de me judicet heres,
Quod non plura datis inveniret; et tamen idem
Seire volam quantum simplicem hilarisque nepotii
Discrepet et quantum discordet pacem avaro.
Distat enim spargas tua prodigus an neque sumptum
Invitus facias neque plura parare labores,
Ac potius, puer ut festis Quinquatribus olim,
a Latin word), is used for any collection of houses. 'Vicus urbanus' was a street in the city; 'vicus rusticus,' a village. Here it appears to mean a villa with the adjoining cottages. 'Vites' has been substituted by some, in answer to which Torrentius quotes Cicero (ad Att. i. 4): "Crassum divitias supero atque omnium vicos et prata contento."

— Calabris Saltibus adjecti Lucani,
'Saltus' expresses 'pastures,' wooded or otherwise, on hills or in valleys and plains. Those of Calabria were low and without wood; those of Lucania were among the hills. See Epp. i. 27, n.

180. Tyrhena sigilla,] Small images of the gods, of Etrurian workmanship, in bronze, which Niebuhr says (i. 133) "is the material of all the master-pieces that shed lustre on Etruscan art." He adds some further remarks on the subject of Etruscan art, which may be consulted.

181. Gaetulo murice,] See C. ii. 16, 35, n.
182. Sunt qui non habeant,] See C. i. 1. 3, n.

184. Herodis palmetis pinguius,] Herod the Great derived a large revenue from the woods of palm which abounded in Judaea. They were most thickly planted about Jericho and on the banks of the Jordan. The date-palm is that which most abounded there.

187. Scit Genius,] See Epp. i. 7. 94, n.
'Albus et ater' signifies 'cheerful and gloomy.'

190. Quod non plura datis] 'Because he finds that I have not left him more;' lit. 'because he finds not more than what I have left him;' in short, he gets less than he expected.

193. simplex hilarisque] 'A guileless cheerful man,' and so liberal. He says he is anxious to learn the difference between such a one and a prodigal, and between the thrifty and covetous, and of course to act the part of the former of the two in either case. 'Plura' means 'more than enough.'

197. festis Quinquatribus olim,] The Quinquatrigintas was a festival in honour of Minerva held on the 19th of March and four following days. Ovid describes it (Fast. iii. 380, sqq.), and says the name is taken from the duration of the feast. Other etymologies have been given (see Dict. Aut.). Ovid also says it was in honour of Minerva's birth-day. Boys had holidays during this festival, that they might pay their devotions to Minerva, the goddess of learning. Hence Juvenal, speaking of the eagerness with which people sought the reputation of eloquence, says (x. 114, sqq.):
"Eloquium et famam Demosthenis aut Ciceronis"
Exiguo gratoque fruaris tempore raptim.

Pauperies immunda domus procul absit: ego, utrum
Nave ferar magna an parva, ferar unus et idem.

Non aginur tumidis velis aquilone secundo;

Non tamen adversis aetatem ducimus austris,
Viribus, ingenio, specie, virtute, loco, re,
Extremi primorum, extremis usque priores.

Non es avarus: abi; quid, caetera jam simul isto
Cum vitio fugere? Caret tibi pectus inani Ambitione? Caret mortis formidine et ira?

Somnia, terrores magicos, miracula, sagas,
Nocturnos lemures portentaque Thessala rides?
Natales grate numeras? Ignoscis amicis?

Lenior et melior fis accedente senecta?

Quid te exempta levat spinis de pluribus una?

Vivere si recte nescisdecede peritis.

Lusisti satiis, edisti satiis atque bibisti:

Tempus abire tibi est, ne potum largius aequo

Rideat et pulset lasciva decentius actas."

Incipit optare, et totis Quinquatribus optat, Quisquis adhuc uno partam colit asse
Minervam;"

that is, the school-boy prays Minerva at the Quinquatria to make him eloquent. At that time it was usual for the boys to make a present to their masters of an as each.
(See S. l. 6. 75, n.) "Minerue munus quoq Grammaticis et Rhetor in sumptus domesticos aut in templi stipem aut sordidum convertet lacrum." (Hieronymus
Comm. on St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians; quoted by Burmann on Ovid, Fast. iii. 829). Tertullian (de Idololatria, Burn.
ib.) says it was usual for the masters to dedicate the first fee they got from new scholars to Minerva at the Quinquatria.

199. Pauperies immunda domus] The last word is omitted and an imperfect verse given in some MSS. It has no meaning here. The best MSS. vary, and the commentators seem agreed to give it up without being able to find out what Horace really wrote. (See note on C. iv. 6. 17.) Bentley repeats "procul" on the authority of one MS.

205. Non es avarus: abis.] 'You are no misser; go to; what, do all your faults vanish with that?' See Forcell. for a variety of uses of 'abis.'

209. Nocturnos lemures] The belief in ghosts was as common with the ancients as with the superstitious among ourselves. The spirits of the dead were worshipped as Manes, Lares, Lemures, and Larvae. Under the two former names were recognized the spirits of the good (see Epp. ii. 1. 138, n.); the other two represented cruel spirits coming up to terrify and torment the living.
"Dict quidem (Plotinus) ex hominibus fieri Lares, si boni meriti sunt; Lemures 11). A festival called Lemuria, or Remuria, said to have been established by Romulus to appease the spirit of his brother, was celebrated for three days in the month of May. There were various ceremonies observed for avoiding the influences of the Lemures. (See Ovid, Fast. v. 479, sqq., and Dict. Ant.) The Thessalians had the credit of extraordinary power in magic and drugs. (See C. i. 27. 21; Epod. v. 45.)

210. Natales grate numeras?] 'Are you happy when you count up your birthday;
that is, are you content to see yourself advancing in life and drawing near the end of it?' As to 'natales' see S. ii.
2. 60, n.; C. iv. 11. 8, n.

213. decede peritis.] 'If you do not know how to live properly, go off the stage and give place to those that do.'

216. lasciva decentius actas.] 'A time of life which may be wanton with less indecency; that is, youth, to which it is more natural.
Q. HORATII FLACCI

DE ARTE POETICA

LIBER.

There are no internal evidences, at all fit to be trusted, of the time when this poem was written or of the persons to whom it is addressed. They are three in number, a father and two sons. Porphyrius and Comm. Cruq. say that the father is L. Calpurnius Piso Caesoninus, who was Praefectus Urbi under Tiberius (Tac. Ann. vi 10). If this be so, as he was born in A. u. C. 705, and had at this time a son verging at least on manhood (for to no other would this sort of instruction be addressed; see v. 369), the poem must have been written very shortly before the death of Horace, A. u. C. 746. Orelli and Kirchner, and many others, take this view of the date. Estré, Franke, and many before them, put it earlier, and in that case a different Piso must be assumed. The person supposed by the advocates of an earlier date is Cn. Calpurnius Piso, who belonged to the party of Brutus and Cassius, and fought together with Horace at Philippi. He had a son who was consul A. u. C. 747, and if he was the youth referred to the Ars Poetica must have been written a good many years before. But the question is one it is impossible to decide, and nothing turns upon it for the understanding of the poem, which, like many others, might be addressed to any body; though I do not agree with those who suppose Horace had no particular persons in mind. The Piones above referred to are numbered 8, 22, 23, in the Dict. Biog.

As to the purpose of the poem I have tried to help the reader in judging for himself by a careful division of the Argument. It will be seen that the rules are miscellaneous, and have little or no method, and that the history of poetry which Horace gives is more fanciful than real. It is impossible to look upon it as a finished poem. We are carried from precept to history, and from one sort of poetry to another without warning; and though a general connexion may be traced between the principles of one kind and those of another, no pains are taken to separate the rules that belong to each. The rules and history of the Drama are chiefly dwelt upon, with what particular bearing upon Roman poetry it is not easy to see. Much that is said can have no reference to it at all, and could afford no instruction to a Roman. The observations on this subject are interrupted now and then by irrelevant observations, and on the whole there can be little doubt either that the Ars Poetica was published after Horace's death, out of fragments clumsily put together, or that he published it himself in this careless way from that habitual indolence which prevented his ever producing a complete work of any length, and which is seen in the abruptness with which several of his pieces are brought to a close. Attempts have been made to re-arrange the materials so as to form a perfect whole, but the means of doing so do not exist. The place now invariably assigned to the Ars Poetica was first given it by H. Stephens. In the MSS. and earlier editions it is inserted before the Satires. Some editors treat it as a third Epistle belonging to the second book. But it was looked upon as a separate treatise at least as early as Quintilian, who quotes the first verse expressly as that which Horace wrote “in prima parte libri de Arte Poetica” (viii. 3). The early grammarians all treat it in the same way and call it by the same name.

ARGUMENT.

Ridiculous as a monstrous picture, combining the head of a woman with a body made up of beast, fowl, and fish, is that poem of which the images are thrown together like a sick man’s dream, whose beginning and end have no connexion.

But poets and painters may take what liberties they please. Granted, within bounds; but not that they should breed monsters, or patch up their verses with tawdry images, out of place, like the painter who stuck in a cypress in his picture of a wreck. In short, whatever it is let it be simple and uniform.

(v. 24.) We poets are apt to be misled by some standard of our own. A man tries to be short and becomes obscure; to be smooth and becomes vapid; to be sublime and becomes turgid; to be humble and becomes creeping; to be varied and produces monsters. So in avoiding one error skill is needed lest we fall into its opposite.

(v. 32.) Neither would I be as that artist who could finish better than any one the small details of a statue, but could not compose a whole. Choose your subject according to your strength. So shall you find words and method, the merit of which is that it says everything at the right time, and chooses its topics with judgment.

(v. 46.) In the choice and introduction of words too care is required, so that old words may get new force from their connexion. You may use new words if necessary, provided you do not exceed, especially if they be taken from the Greek. Why should not we do it as well as the poets of old? Words drop in time, like the leaves of the forest: all things must perish: the greatest works of skill must decay, how much more must language? But old words will rise up again if fashion wills, for she is the mistress of speech.

(v. 73.) In the relation of martial deeds Homer led the way. Then elegy came with lamentation and with love, the author of which our critics have not determined. Archilochus was driven by rage to iambics, which the stage adopted. To the lyre they sang of gods and heroes, of fighters and horses, of love and wine.

(v. 86.) Now if I cannot maintain the distinctions of style, how can I be called a poet? Why should I not rather learn? Comedy is not to be expressed in tragic style, nor tragedy in comic, though comedy may sometimes raise her tone and tragedy lower hers. A poem must be not only fair to look at, but sweet and affecting, and must strike the chord of sympathy. And the language must be suited to the character. For there is that in our nature which adapts itself to every variety of circumstance, according as the tongue sets it before us. But if the language and character do not agree it only creates a laugh.

(v. 119.) Then again you must either follow tradition or let your fictions be consistent. Achilles must be the impetuous stern warrior, Medea the savage mother, and so on. Or if you venture on bringing forward a new character it must be consistent throughout.

(v. 128.) It is not easy to handle subjects which all may handle. One may more easily dramatize the fall of Troy than write a new story entirely. But a man may make common property his own if he does not confine himself to ordinary common-places, or follow his author too literally and tie himself down too much. And you must not begin ostentatiously, or the issue will be only ridiculous, like that of the mountain in labour. How simple is Homer’s beginning, “Tell of the man, O Muse,” &c. There is no smoke here coming after the flash, but the light grows upon us as we proceed in the shape of beautiful and marvellous tales: he carries us on rapidly to the end, omits what he cannot adorn, and so puts his fictions together that there is no inconsistency throughout.
(v. 153.) If you want your play to succeed you must study the characters of different ages: your child must be thoughtless and playful; your youth fond of many sports, open to temptation, intolerant of advice, improvident, aspiring, and fickle; your full-grown man must be cautious, looking for money and friends and advancement; while your old man is surrounded with troubles, avaricious, nervous, cold, procrastinating, slow of hope, sluggish, greedy of life, morose, querulous, commending the former days, a reprover of youth. For fear then of mixing up the different periods of life, we should fix attention upon the characteristics of each.

(v. 179.) The events must either pass upon the stage, or be told after they are over. What is seen makes more impression than what is heard; but still horrors and incredible marvels are not to be transacted on the stage. A play should be in five acts. No god should be brought in without necessity. No fourth person should be allowed to speak. The chorus should second the speakers, and should not sing what is irrelevant. It should favour and counsel the good, calm the passionate, commend temperance, justice, obedience to the laws, and peace; keep secrets, and offer prayers to the gods for mercy to the afflicted and vengeance on the tyrant.

(v. 202.) Once the flute was a plain instrument made for the use of the chorus, and not to fill great theatres, as now. But this simple music changed when conquest and luxury mixed up country and town. Then the flute-player strutted on the stage, and the lyre was tuned to solemn sounds, to passionate eloquence, or oracular strains.

(v. 220.) Soon after Tragedy came the Satyrical Drama, when fun and gravity were separated, and the spectators in the licence of the hour were treated with fresh jokes and novelties. But in these plays too there must be no inconsistencies, such as a god or hero coming down to tavern-slang or losing himself in fustian. Tragedy should move like a modest and stately matron among the Satyrs. For I would not banish tragic language altogether, so that Silenus the god should talk in the same strain as Davus the slave. I would adopt a familiar style, so that any one should think he could do it as well till he came to try. Fauns must neither talk like city beaux nor use low language, lest they offend the better sort, though the vulgar may applaud.

(v. 251.) A short syllable and a long make an iambus, the rapidity of which made the senarius pass for a trimeter. At first all the feet were iambics, till to give more steadiness to the verse spoudes were admitted in the uneven feet. Accius and Ennius nearly banished the iambic altogether. This is a blot in them, but it is not every one that can tell good versification from bad. Shall I presume upon this? or shall I write cautiously, as if every fault would be detected? Thus might I escape blame, but should win no praise.

(v. 268.) Take the Greeks for your models and study them. Why, your fathers used to admire both the rhythm and the wit of Plautus. Yes, stupidly enough, if we know the difference between coarseness and wit, and can scan a verse.

(v. 276.) Thespis is said to have invented Tragedy, travelling about with his waggon, and his actors smeared with wine lees. Then came Aeschylus with mask, robe, cothurnus, and stage, and taught them to speak grandly. After these the old comedy, which was highly approved, till licence was abused, and the law stepped in and silenced the chorus. Our poets have been bold enough sometimes to quit the Greek and celebrate home tales in tragedy and comedy, and if they were more diligent Latium would be as mighty in literature as in arms. Oh! my friends, have nothing to say to a poem which does not show marks of care and correction.

(v. 295.) Because genius is above art, and all poets, according to Democritus, are mad, many let their nails and beard grow, affecting madness. Fool that I am to get rid annually of my bile! I should otherwise be the first of poets. Never mind, I will serve as a grindstone for others, and teach them what a poet should be.

(v. 309.) Philosophy is the foundation of good writing. The books of Socrates and his disciples shall teach you the science and duties of life in all its relations, which he who learns knows how to suit his words to his characters. Also he should study real life, and get living words from this. And sometimes common-places strikingly put commend a play of no great merit more than empty verses and harmonious nonsense.

(v. 323.) The Greeks had genius and eloquence, and loved praise above every thing. Roman boys learn nothing but arithmetic and accounts, and how can we expect them ever to write poetry worth having?

(v. 333.) Poets wish either to profit or to please, or to join both these together. Therefore when you give advice be brief, that the mind may follow and retain your precepts. A full mind scorns superfluities. Also let your fiction be like truth. The elders will not listen to that which is immoral, while the younger will have nothing to do with severe poetry. He then is universally liked who mingle the profitable with the pleasant. His book sells, and his fame is carried into distant lands and times.

(v. 347.) Perfection however must not be expected, and allowance may be made for occasional blots; but he who repeatedly fails in spite of warning is a mere Choerilus to me. I am surprised and am inclined to smile if he has a verse or two that is good, just as I am grieved if Homer now and then nods.

(v. 361.) Poetry is like painting: there is some that bears close inspection, some must be seen at a distance; some bears hearing once, some to be repeated often.

(v. 366.) Mediocrity is tolerable in some things, but not in poetry: if that does not mount to the highest point it sinks to the lowest. Nevertheless, though they do not attempt other things for which they are not qualified, people venture upon poetry who know nothing about it. Of course! are they not freemen and virtuous and well-to-do in the world?

(v. 365.) You are too sensible for this; but if you ever do write, submit your productions to the judgment of your friends, and be in no hurry to publish them. Words once issued cannot be recalled.

(v. 391.) The first poets civilized mankind, so that Orpheus was said to move beasts and Amphion stones with the lyre. The philosophy of the olden time lay in framing institutions and laws, regulating society, building cities; and by promoting these the poets won their fame. Then came Homer and Tyrtaeus urging men to martial deeds; oracles were delivered in verse; and the duties of life were taught; and the favour of princes won; and the husbandman refreshed after his toil: so you need not be ashamed of the lyre.

(v. 408.) It is questioned whether poetry comes by nature or by teaching. I think both must be combined. He who would succeed in poetry must take great pains while young, and submit to teaching. Leave it then to others to say, 'I am a fine poet; I will not be left behind in the race, or acknowledge that I do not know what I never learnt.'

(v. 419.) The rich poet buys flattery. I should be surprised if such an one could distinguish between a true friend and a liar. If you have made a man a present, or are going to do so, do not invite him to hear your verses. He will be sure to applaud and weep, or laugh or dance with pretended pleasure. Flatterers are like the hired mourners at a funeral, who make more fuss than the friends. But as princes learn men's characters by plying them with wine, so do not you suffer yourself to be deceived. Quintilius would tell you plainly to alter this or that, and if you could not, to strike it out; or if you preferred retaining it he said no more, but left you in your self-conceit. So every honest man will point out defects of every kind, and never say 'why should I offend my friend in such trifles?' These trifles become serious matters after a man has been laughed at for them.

(v. 453.) A wise man will shun the rapt bard; and if in his fine frenzy he falls into a ditch nobody will take him out. 'Perhaps he went in on purpose,' I should cry, 'like Empedocles, who jumped into Aetna to prove himself a god. Why save one against his will? If you rescue him he will not become more rational.’ For what crime he is suffered to make verses no one can tell; but that he is as mad as a caged bear there is no doubt: he puts men to flight in all directions with his verses; or if he catches one poor wretch he clings to him like a leech till he has killed him.

Humano capiti cervicem pictor equinam
Jungere si velit, et varias inducere plumas
Undique collatis membris, ut turpiter atrum
Desinat in piscem mulier formosa superne,
Spectatum admissi risum teneatis, amici?
Credite, Pisones, isti tabulae fore librum
Persimilem cujus, velut aegri somnia, vanae
Fingentur species, ut nec pes nec caput uni
Reddatur formae. Pictoribus atque poëtis Quidlibet audendi semper fuit aqua potestas.
Scimus et hanc veniam petimusque damusque vicissim;
Sed non ut placidis coëant immitia, non ut
Serpentis avibus gementur, tigribus agni.
Inceptis gravibus plerumque et magna professis
Purpureus, late qui splendeat, unus et alter
Adsuitur pannus, cum lucus et ara Dianae
Et properantis aquae per amoenos ambitus agros,
Aut flumen Rhenum aut pluvius describitur arcus;
Sed nunc non erat his locus. Et fortasse cupressum
Scis simulare: quid hoc, si fractis enatat exspes
Navibus aere dato qui pingitur? Amphora coepti

1. Humano capiti] The picture supposed is monstrous enough; a woman’s head and a fish’s tail, with a horse’s neck, limbs from all manner of beasts, and feathers from all sorts of birds. This portentous medley (invented of course by himself, for we are not bound to suppose he had ever seen a pictorial monster of this kind), Horace considered a good illustration of some of the poetry of his day, in which figures and images were thrown together without order or purpose.

9. Pictoribus atque poëtis] This is a supposed reply, that painters and poets have always been privileged people, which Horace admits, but within certain limits. They must not outrage common sense, nor should they patch their verses with images which, however pretty, have nothing to do with the matter in hand.

18. flumen Rhenum] This is the same form as “Metamorph flumen” (C. iv. 4.33).

19. fortasse cupressum Scis simulare:] The Scholiasts all agree in saying this refers to a Greek proverb, μὴ τι καὶ κυπαρισσίου βίλας; the origin of which was an answer given by a bad painter to a shipwrecked sailor, who asked him for a picture of his wreck (see C. i. 5. 12, n.). The man considered himself clever at drawing a cypress, and asked the sailor if he should introduce him one in his picture.

1. Amphora coepit Institui:]] Of the ‘amphora,’ ‘diota,’ ‘cadus,’ ‘testa,’ ‘lagena’ (all which names represent the same kind of vessel for keeping wine, oil, honey, &c.), drawings will be found in the Dict. Ant. It was usually of clay, but sometimes of glass. ‘Urcus’ was the name for a jug of earthenware or glass, of which specimens of many different shapes have been found at Pompeli. As to the ‘rota figuralis’ and other matters connected with the art of pottery as practised by the ancients, all necessary information will be found in Dict. Ant. art. ‘Ficile.’
Institui; currente rota cur urceus exit?
Denique sit quidvis simplex dum taxat et unum.
Maxima pars vaturn, pater et juvenes patre digni,
Decipimur specie recti: brevis esse laboro,
Obscerus fio; sectantem levia nervi
Deficiunt animique; professus grandia turget;
Serpit humi tutus nimium timidusque procellae;
Qui variare cupit rem prodigialiter unam,
Delphinum silvis appingit, fluctibus aprum.
In vitium ducti culpae fuga si creat arte.
Aemilium circa ludum faber unus et ungues
Exprimet et molles imitasit aer capillos,
Infelix operis summa quia ponent totum
Nesciet. Hunc ego me, si quid componere eurem,
Non magis esse velim quam nasso vivere pravo,
Spectandum nigri oculis nigroque capillo.
Sumite materiam vestris qui scribitis aestam
Viribus et versate diu quid ferre recensent,
Quid valeant humeri. Cui lecta potenter erit res,
Nec facundia deseret hunc nec lucidus ordo.

24. pater et juvenes patre digni.] See Introduction. Horace passes on to say that there are those who are led into error by some standard of correctness that they have set themselves, some rule to which they adhere at all costs. One man thinks brevity the right thing, another smoothness of versification, another grandiloquence, another calcula, another vanity, and to avoid the opposites of these they run into the excess of them. For 'levia' Bentley reads 'lenia' from one MS., and finishes a long argument with "Quid ergo? satis jam opinor super-que fidem fecimus non 'levia' verum 'lenia' deinceps hic reponendum esse, si sapere tandem audebunt editores." Notwithstanding all which he afterwards changed his mind. 'Prodigialiter' ('monstrously') belongs to variare.

32. Aemilium circa ludum] This illustrates the case of those who can invent details, but cannot compose an entire poem.
Porphyrius says the 'Aemilius ludus,' near which this artist lived, was a gladiator's school, built by Aemilius Lepidus, but by which of those who bore that name is unknown. There were many celebrated persons so called. See Dict. Bioe. The school is said to have been in the eight region, in or near the Forum Romanum. The reading of nearly all the MSS. and all the editions till Bentley's and that of the Scholiasts was 'faber imus.' Acron makes 'Imus' the name of the 'aerarius,' while Porphyrius says
it means the farthest corner of the 'ludus,' which is inconsistent with 'circa.' 'Imus'
has no meaning, and Bentley has done well to restore ' unus' in the sense it bears in
S. i. 10. 42, "' unus vivorum Fundani;'
ii. 3. 24, "mercarie us Cum lucro noram;"
6. 57, "' unus Scilicet egregii mortalem altique silenti" (where see note). Bentley, Orelli, and Fea quote a few MSS. in favour of ' unus,' and the verse is quoted with that word by John of Salisbury in the preface to the sixth book of his Politerius. There can be no doubt it is the true reading.
'Imus' and 'unos' have been confounded in another place (S. i. 4. 87). In an uncial MS. VNV might easily be mistaken for IMVC.

33. Sumite materiam] The next consideration is the choice of a subject, which should be well weighed with reference to the powers of the writer ('potenter,' kai vaius).

42. Ordinis haec virtus] Having said that if a man chooses his subject well he will be at no loss to arrange his poem, Horace proceeds to explain what arrangement con-
Ut jam nunc dieat jam nunc debentia dici,
Pleraque differat et praesens in tempus omittat;
Hoc amet, hoc spernat promissi carminis auctor.

45. promissi carminis] A poem he is known to have in hand, and which the public are expecting.

46. tenuis cautusque serendis,] "Judicious and careful in planting his words," 'Tenus' signifies a nice discernment. The use of words is the next point noticed, skill in giving by its connexion new force to an old word, or in the introduction of new terms sometimes borrowed from the Greek, for the fashion of words is conventional and liable to change.

49. Indiciis] Acron says, "indicia rerum verba sunt, secundum philosophos." As to 'addita rerum' see C. iv. 12. 19, n., and add 'factis rerum' (S. ii. 8. 83), 'vilia rerum' (Epp. i. 17. 21). As to Cethegis see Epp. ii. 2. 117, n. 'Cinctutus' Forcellini explains as wearing the 'cinetus,' which he describes as a garment covering the person from the breast downwards, without sleeves, and worn instead of a tunic. Ovid speaks of the attendants on Pan as 'cinctutti' (Fast. v. 101): "Semicaper, coleris cinctuit, Faune, Lupercis." It appears therefore to mean one that is only girt about the lower part of his body, having the arms free from the encumbrance of the tunic sleeves. This is referred to in "extertiique manus vesana Cethegi" (Lucan ii. 543), and "Ipse (Cethegius) humero exertus gentili more parentum" (Silius viii. 585). The use of the tunic by the Romans was introduced with other indulgences from Greece and the Greek colonies, the ancients having worn only the toga.

54. Caecilio Plautoque] See Epp. ii. 1. 59. 170. As to 'Romanus' see C. iii. 6. 2, n. 'Virgilio Varioque,' S. i. 5. 40, n. (That they were alive at this time is quite an unnecessary assumption), 'Catonis et Enni,' Epp. ii. 2. 117, n.

55. Ego cur] The words which Horace appears to have used for the first time have been observed in the course of these notes. Some of those which do not appear in any other author are mentioned on C. iii. 11. 10. To these add 'detestatus' in the sense of 'detested' (C. i. 1. 25), 'emiror' (C. i. 5. 8), 'irruptus' (C. i. 13. 18), 'aeculeatum' (C. i. 22. 14), 'ambitiosus' for 'twining' (C. i. 36. 20), 'depugis' (S. i. 2. 93), 'uvescere' (S. ii. 6. 70), 'disconvenire' (Epp. i. 1. 99), 'dimidium' (Epp. i. 19. 47), 'impariter' (A. P. 79), 'delitigio' (A. P. 94), 'juvenari' (A. P. 246), 'socialiter' (A. P. 258), 'iambeus' (A. P. 253), 'abstare' (A. P. 362). The construction he here employs is unusual. 'Ego invidor' should, according to usage, be 'mihi invidetur,' as 'ego imperor' should be 'mihi imperatur' (Epp. i. 5. 21, where see note). The Greek constructions and phrases Horace uses are very numerous. See Index.

59. Signatum praesente nota producere] Bentley, from a very few MSS., and against his own as well as all the best and all the editions, edits 'producere' for 'producere,' which signifies to give currency to a word stamped, says Horace, with a modern mark,
Ut silvae foliis pronos mutantur in annos,
Prima cadunt: ita verborum vetus interit aetas,
Et juvenum ritu florent modo nata vigentque.
Debemur morti nos nostraque; sive receptus
Terra Neptunus classes aquilonibus arcet, Regis opus, sterilisve diu palus apta remis

a metaphor plainly taken from the coinage of the mint, respecting which see Dict. Ant., art. 'Moneta.' Bentley, without authority, substitutes 'numnum' for 'nomen.'

60. Ut silvae foliis] 'As woods in respect of their leaves at the close of the year are changed, yea they are the first to fall.' There is a little irregularity in the construction, but the meaning is clear. Bentley conjectures "Ut silvis folia privos," in which he defends the lengthening of the last syllable in 'folia' by the 'pr' that follows it, and for 'privos' in the sense of 'singulos' he quotes Lucretius (v. 275. 732). I prefer 'pronos,' and dissent entirely from 'folia.' The MSS. do not vary.

63. Debemur morti nos nostraque.] Horace probably remembered very well the verses of Simonides (Fr. 123, Bergk):

χαίρετι τις Θεόδωρος ἐπὶ θάνεν ἀλλος ἐπ' αὐτῷ χαίρει τε βανάτῳ πάντες φειλόμεθα.

— receptus Terra Neptunus ] The 'lacus Lucrinus' was separated from the bay of Baiae by a narrow causeway, the construction of which tradition attributed to Hercules ('Herculeo structa labore via,' Prop. iii. 18; "Herculem commendat iter," Silius xii. 118). Beyond the Lucrinus lay the Avernus lacus (lago d'Averno), a basin without any outlet, about a mile and a half in circumference, and fed by streams from Mons Gaurus (Monte Barbaro). The space between the two lakes was covered with wood. In the war with Sextus Pompeius, A.D.C. 717, Augustus, advised by Agrippa, to whom he had entrusted the task of reforming his fleet, opened a communication between the lakes, and between lacus Avernus and the sea, whereby he made a harbour in which he was able to practise his fleet. This he called after himself 'portus Julius.' "Portum Julianum apud Baiae inimusso in Lucrinum et Avernus lacum mari effect. In quo quum hieme tota exercitum Pompeium inter Mylas et Naucleum superavit" (Suet. Aug. 16). This is the work Virgil alludes to (Georg. ii. 161):

"An memorem portus Lucrinoque addita claustra

Atque indigamentum magnis stridoribus sequor,
Julia qua ponto longe sonat unda refuso,
Tyrrenhusque fretis immittitur aequus Avernis?"

The basin of the Lucrine lake has been filled up by the rising of a volcanic hill (Monte Nuovo), and is now a swamp. 'Regis opus' (like 'regiae moles,' C. ii. 15. 1) is a work worthy of a king.

65. sterilisve diu palus] The MSS. and editions vary between 'que' and 've.' But Horace does not mean to couple a number of illustrations together, but to take any one of them; whichever of these great works you please to take destruction surely awaits it. How much more shall mere words decay. The shortening of the last syllable is a 'licentia sumpta pudenter,' and not met with elsewhere. Quintilian (i. 7. 3) remarks on the quantity of this word: "Palus aliiu priore syllaba longa aline sequenti significat; et cum eadem litera nominativo casu brevis ablativo longa est, utrum sequamur plurumque hac nota monendi sumus." There is not much in this, except that it shows that later poets had followed Horace's licence. Bentley and others try to mend the passage to get rid of this irregularity, but they had better have left it as it stands. What work Horace here alludes to is very doubtfull. Comm. Cruq. says: "Pomptinas paludes Augustus exciccavit et habitabiles reddidit, injecto aggere lapidum ac terrae." Acron says the same: "Pomptinam paludem siccavit ut ad mare meatum habere cogeter ut post et arari posset." That Julius Caesar contemplated such a work we learn from Suetonius (Caes. 44), and Plutarch (Caes. 58). That Augustus may have contemplated it likewise, and made the canal mentioned on S. i. 5. 7, while that design was in his mind, is possible. The canal extended from Forum Appii to Terracina, which is said to have been the length of the marshes at that time. Horace appears to be speculating upon a work which, though often attempted, has never succeeded. For a history of these attempts see Penny Cyclopaedia (art. 'Pomtine Marshes').
Vicinas urbes alit et grave sentit aratrum,
Seu cursum mutavit iniquum frugibus amnis
Doctus iter melius, mortalia facta peribunt,
Nedum sermonum stet honos et gratia vivax.
Multa renascentur quae jam cecidere, cadentque
Quae nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus,
Quem penes arbitrium est et jus et norma loquendi.
Res gestae regumque ducumque et tristia bella
Quo scribi possent numero monstravit Homerus.
Versibus impariter junctis querimonia primum,

67. Seu cursum mutavit] The Scholiasts say this refers to the draining of the Velabrum (S. ii. 3. 229) by Agrippa. But Piso has shown this to be an error. The Velabrum was drained by Tarquinii Priscus, or whoever built the Cloaca Maxima (Livy i. 39), and was occupied by considerable buildings before the time of Augustus, among which was the temple of Fortuna Virilis, built by Lucullus. Suetonius tells us that Augustus
"ad coecendam inundationes alveum Tiberis laxavit, completum olim ruderibus et aedi-ficiorum prolapsionibus coarctatum" (c. 30).
To some such work as this Horace probably refers, in language a little exaggerated.

68. Doctus iter melius,] So it is said of the river in Epp. i. 14. 29: "rivus si decidit imber Multa mole docendus aprico parere prato."

69. Nedum sermonum stet honos] This construction Professor Key explains by putting the verb 'existimare' understood for the sake of brevity. (L. G. 1220.)

71. si volet usus,] See Epp. ii. 2. 119, n.
Horace uses the words in the next verse without reference to their technical distinction. The proper meaning of 'arbitrium,' as distinguished from 'judicium,' is given in the Dictionary of Antiquities (art. 'Judex,'
p. 530, a.). 'Jus,' in one of its senses, was a rule of law (Epp. i. 16. 41). 'Norma,' a carpenter's or mason's square, also described in the above Dictionary. The deciding, ordering, and shaping of words is all that Horace means.

75. Versibus impariter junctis queri-monia] 'Impariter' is not used elsewhere.
What Horace here calls 'querimonia' is θεράπων ἔννοιον ἀνακτος (Fr. 1. Bergk).
He lost first his reputation (by running away) and afterwards his life, in battle.
His elegiac verses were convivial as well as warlike. He also wrote elegies for the dead.
Asius of Samos was contemporary with the above, and these are no doubt the earliest writers in the elegiac form. It was therefore of Ionian origin, whichever of these poets first employed it. That question which was not settled in Horace's day is not likely to be settled now, 'et adhuc sub judice esset.' The next elegiac poet in order of time was Mimnermus, also an Ionian (concerning whom see Epp. i. 6. 65; ii.
2. 101, n.). His verses were chiefly of the erotic order, which is referred to in v. 76.
The political and gnomic elegies of Solon and Theognis (some of whose poems were convivial) come next, but Theognis more than half a century later than Solon; and contemporary with him, or a little older, was Xenophanes, the founder of the Eleatic school of philosophy, whose verses, as far as we know, were of the symposiac order without being very conducive to mirth.
The great master of threnetic poetry was Simonides of Ceos, the contemporary and rival of Aeschylus. "The elegy in the hands of different masters sometimes attained a softer and more pathetic, and sometimes a more manly and robust tone.
Nevertheless there is no reason for dividing the elegy into different kinds, such as the military, political, symposiac, erotic, threnetic, and gnomic; inasmuch as some of these characters are at times combined in the same poem. Thus the elegy was usually sung at the symposium, and in most cases its main subject is political, after which it assumes either an amatory, a plaintive, or a sententious tone. At the same time the elegy always retains its appropriate character from which it never departs" (Müller, Lit. of Greece, p. 125). This writer disputes the ordinary etymology of the word elegy (ἐλέγχος), though he takes Post etiam inclusa est voti sententia compos:
Quis tamen exiguos elegos emiserit auctor,
Grammatici certant et adhuc sub judice lis est.
Archilochum proprio rabies armavit iambo;
Hune socci cepere pedem grandesque cothurni,
Alternis aptum sermonibus et populares
Vincentem strepitus et natum rebus agendis.
Musa dedit fidibus divos puerosque deorum

it to mean a strain of lament. He considers the word to be of Asiatic origin, being borrowed by the Ionic poets of Asia Minor from their neighbours. The dates above assigned to these early poets are later than some have given them. I have followed Müller.

78. Grammatici certant] See Epp. i.
19. 40, n.

79. Archilochum proprio rabies] See Epp. i. 19. 23, n.; Epod. vi. 13. "It is vain to seek an etymology for the word Iambus:
the most probable supposition is that it originated in exclamations, ἀλλογυμνοί, expressive of joy. Similar in form are θρήσμος, the Bacchic festival procession;
ἐδύραμβος, a Bacchic hymn; and ἑθυμος, also a kind of Bacchic song" (Müller, p.
133). The word, according to this writer, "originally denoted nothing but the jest and banter used at the festivals of Demeter," of whose worship Paros, the birth-place of Archilochus, was next to Eleusis the principal seat. From these festivals therefore, the scenes of unrestrained railery and scurrilous jesting, Archilochus may be supposed to have conceived his iambics. The iambic trimeter is said to have been invented by him (Plutarch de Musica, c. 28), and likewise the trochaic tetrameter, and other measures particularly described by Müller. Of the two first he says: "These metres were in their way as elaborate productions of Greek taste and genius as the Parthenon or the statue of the Olympic Jupiter. Nor can there be any stronger proof of their perfection than that metres said to have been invented by Archilochus retained their currency through all ages of Greek poetry; and that although their application varied in many ways, no material improvement was made in their structure" (p. 136). The principal iambic writers who followed Archilochus were Simonides of Amorgus, a younger contemporary of Solon, and Hipponax of Ephesus
(n. c. 540).

80. Hune socci cepere pedem] In respect to 'soccus' and 'cothurnus,' as the characteristics of comedy and tragedy, see

Epp. ii. 1. 174, n. The metre most used in the dialogue of the earliest Greek tragedies was the trochaic tetrameter, which metre is used in many passages of the Persae of Aeschylus. But the iambic trimeter appears to have been used by Phrynichus. Aristotle (Poét. iv. 10) calls it μέλιστα λειτον τῶν μιτρων, and comparing it with the Epic he says (Rhet. iii. 3. 4): τῶν ἐξ ῥεθημῶν ὁ μύς ἤρως σεμνὸς καὶ λειτον καὶ ἀρμονίας ἐδύμας, ὁ δὲ λαμβὸς αὐτή ἰστῶν ἡ λείας ἡ τῶν πολλῶν ἐκ μεληστα πάντων
τῶν μιτρων λαμβία φηγογοντα λίγοντες.
Horace's 'natum rebus agenda' appears also to be an echo of Aristotle's πρακτικῶν in the following passage (Poét. 24. 10): τὸ λαμβίκον καὶ τετραμέτρον εὔμετα, τὸ μύν δοξησικόν, τὸ ἐκ πρακτικῶν. Πρακτικῶν means that the metre suits the language of action. By 'alternis sermonibus' Horace means dialogue generally; not those dialogues in which verse answers to verse, στιγμοβία. When he says that the iambic overcomes the noise of the theatre, it may be that he refers to the clear intonation which that metre admits of, or to its engaging the popular attention from its adaptation to the understandings of all.
As to the modifications of the iambic metre in the hands of the three principal tragedians, see Müller, Lit. Gr. v. i. p. 317. The same writer has some remarks on the adaptation of the iambic trimeter to comedy, the correctness of which may be disputed (v. i.
p. 13).

63. Musa dedit fidibus] On the con-exion of poetry with music and dancing,
and on Greek music in general, Müller's History of Greek Literature (i. 146, sqq.) may be consulted with advantage. The earliest stringed instrument was the tetrachord or four-stringed cithara, which was improved by Terpander, by the addition of three strings forming the heptachord.
Though the flute ('tibia') came very early into use as an accompaniment to lyric poetry, it has always retained the name it originally derived from the lyre. The description of Horace includes the choral lyric

Z Z
Et pugilem victorem et equum certamine primum
Et juvenum curas et libera vina referre.

Discriptas servare vices operumque colores
Cur ego si nequeo ignoroque poëta salutor?
Cur nescire pudens prave quam discere malo?
Versibus exponi tragicis res comicæ non vult;
Indignatur item privatis ac prope socco
Dignis carminibus narrari coena Thyestae.
Singula quaeque locum teneant sortita decenter.
Interdum tamen et vocem comoedia tollit,
Iratusque Chremes tumido deligitat ore;
Et tragicus plerumque dolet sermone pedestri
Telephus et Peleus, cum pauper et exsul uteque

do the Doric school, and the poetry of the Aeolic school. The former was adapted to a choir, the latter only to a single voice.
The former was so called because it was cultivated by the Dorians of the Peloponnesus and Sicily: the latter flourished among the Aeolians of Asia Minor, and particularly in the island of Lesbos. The one celebrated gods and heroes or renowned citizens, and was used at public festivals or at marriages and funerals: the other expressed individual thoughts and feelings. Alcaeus and Sappho are the chief representatives of the latter school; of the former Alcam and Stesichorus, Ibycus, Simonides, Bacchylides, and Pindar. Stesichorus and Ibycus were most celebrated for their poems on mythological subjects ('divos pueroque deorum'), while Simonides and Pindar were the greatest.
in πανικα, hymns in honour of the victors at public games ('et pugilem victorem et equum certamine primum'), while the poets of wine and passion ('juvenum curas et libera vina') were Alcaeus, Sappho, Simonides, and Bacchylides. Horace does not mention one class of lyric poems, the threnes or dirges for the dead, of which Simonides was the greatest master.

As to 'libera vina' see S. i. 4. 87, n.

36. Discriptas servare vices] I do not find that any MSS. have 'discriptas,' but I am much inclined to think that is the true reading; and considering, as I have said before, that 'discibo' is a genuine form, and that the MSS. are unsafe guides in regard to this word, I have adopted
'discriptas' in preference to 'descriptas.'
(See C. ii. 13. 23, and Epp. i. 10. 20, n.)
'Vices' are the parts (S. i. 10. 12, 'defen-dente vicem'), and with 'discriptas' it means the parts assigned to each class of poetry. 'Operum colores,' the colouring of poems, is easily understood.

83. pudens prave] 'Through a false shame,' 'pudor malus' (Epp. i. 16. 24).
90. privatis] 'The language of common daily life.'

91. coena Thyestae] See C. i. 6. 8, n.
92. decenter.] Bentley, upon very little authority and on bad reasoning, substitutes
'decentem' for 'decenter,' the reading of all the editions before him.

94. Iratusque Chremes] 'Chremes' is put generally for any father in a comedy.
There is nothing tragic or tumid in the language of Clitiphos's father in Terence's play (Heaut. v. 4), which is referred to by the commentators. The intensive compound of 'litigo' does not occur elsewhere. As to 'plerumque,' in the sense of 'interdum,' see
S. ii. 5. 55, n., and on 'pedestri' see C. ii.
12. 9, n.

96. Telephus et Peleus.] These persons were the subjects of many tragedies. Each of the three tragedians wrote upon them, as will be seen from the fragments in Dindorf's collection. 'Telephus,' abject condition, when he went to seek for one to cure him of his wound (see Epod. xvii. 6, n.), and Peleus, driven from Aegina, and wandering in quest of a purifier for the murder of his brother Phoecus, appear to have been the points in the history of these persons chiefly dwelt upon (see Diet. Myth.). Ariatophanes ridicule Euripides for the bombbast and beggary of Telephus in two places (Acham. 428, sqq.)—

ΔΑΚ. κακεύνος μὲν ἕν
χωλος, προσατίων στωμίλος, δεινὸς λιγειν.
Projicet ampullas et sesquipedalia verba,
Si curat cor spectantis tetigisse querulea.
Non satis est pulchra esse poëmata; dulcia sunto
Et quocunque volent animum auditoris agunto.
Ut ridentibus arrendit, ita flentibus adsunt
Humani vultus: si vis me flere dolendum est
Primum ipsi tibi: tunc tua me infortunia laedent,
Telephe vel Peleu; male si mandata loquesis
Aut dormitabo aut ridebo. Tristia maestum Vultum verba decent, iratum plena minarum,
Ludentem lasciva, severum seria dictu.
Format enim natura prius nos intus ad omnem
Fortunarum habitum; juvat aut impellit ad iram
Aut ad humum maerore gravi deducit et angit;
Post effert animi motus interprete lingua.
Si dicentis erunt fortunis abscona dicta
Romani tollent equites peditesque cachinnum.
Intererit multum divusne loquatur an heros,
The Blandinian are in favour of 'divus,' and all Orelli's, except that three have 'a' superscribed. I think 'divusus' is the true reading; and that 'Davus' arose out of v. 237: "Ut nihil intersit Davusne loquatur et audax Pythias," 'Deus' and 'hero' are brought together below (v. 227): "Ne quicunque deus, quicunque adhibebitur heros." Orelli aptly quotes a passage of Plutarch, from which it would seem as if this anti-thesis were in a measure proverbial (Comparatio Aristophanis et Menandri, i. 6): - ὅσπερ ἀπὸ κλῆρον ἀπονείμι τοῖς προσώποις τά προστυχώντα τῶν ὀνομάτων, καὶ ὅπως ἀν ειγαγούσις, εἰτε νόσοι εἰστιν, εἰτε πατήρ, εἰτε ἄγαρος, εἰτε θεός, εἰτε γραφός, εἰτε ἔρως, ὃ διαλεγόμενος.

116. matrona potenœ] This epithet seems to have the same meaning as its kindred word πόντα, so common in Homer and the Tragedians. The officious nurse has always been a favourite character on the stage. We find it in Aeschylus (Chocphorae), in Sophocles (Trachiniæ), and Euripides (Hippolytus). We are so sufficiently familiar with it in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. In Euripides' play and Shakspeare's they bear in one respect much the same character. An ἀκτόρος (mercator) is introduced in the Philoctetes of Sophocles, and the prologue of the Electra (Euripides) is spoken by an ἀντιστρφος (cultor agelli'). The Colchian may be put perhaps for any of the barbarous tribes on the shores of the Euxine, and the Assyrian for any of the Eastern nations. (See C. i. 2. 21, n., and C. ii. 11. 16, n.) The opposition between Thebes and Argos has reference partly perhaps to Aeschylus' play, Sept. c. Thebes, in which Polynes comes with an Argive army to get possession of the crown of Thebes, or to the Supplices of Euripides, which turns on the burial of the seven leaders who formed that expedition. But Hortace may have had in mind many other plays of which the scene lay either at Argos or Thebes, in connexion with Oedipus, the quarrel of his sons, the expedition of the Epigoni, &c.

120. Scriptor honoratum si forte reponis] 'Honoratus' (for which Bentley on his own conjecture substitutes 'Homerum' in one of his very long notes, — "meris argutiss," says Fea) is only an epithetornans, corresponding to Homer's κλυνε, &c. 'Reponis' means 'put upon the stage again.' The word is used in a different sense v. 190: 'Fabula quae posci vult et spectata reponi.'

122. nihil non arroget armis.] 'Let him claim every thing for arms,' that is, let him make arms his one appeal.

123. flebilis Ino.] There are several fragments remaining of a play by Euripides bearing the name of Ino, the daughter of Cadmus, and wife of Athamas, who threw herself into the sea with her son Melicertes, and went through various sorrows through the wrath of Here, and the rivalry of her husband's other wives, Nephele and The misto. She was worshipped after her death as Leucothea, or Matuta Mater.

124. Perfidus Ixion, Io vaga,] Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, each wrote a tragedy entitled '1xion,' of which fragments remain. He was king of the Lapithæ. Having treacherously murdered his father-in-law, Deioneus, he returned the goodness of Zeus, who purified him, by trying to seduce Hera, for which he received his well-known punishment, and is rightly called 'perfidus.' The wanderings of Io, the daughter of Inachus, king of Argos, in the form of a cow, whose passage across the strait that separates the Propontis from the Euxine gave it the name of Bosporus, are related in many ways. The most remarkable passage on this subject is contained in the Prometheus of Aeschylus, in a scene in which she is herself introduced.
Si quid inexpertum scenae committis et audes
Personam formare novam, servetur ad inum
Qualis ab incepto processerit, et sibi constet.
Difficile est proprie communia dicere; tuque
Rectius lliacum carmen deducis in actus,
Quam si proferres ignota dictaetque primus.
Publica materies privati juris erit, si
Non circa valem patulumque moraberis orbem,
Nec verbo verbum curabis reddere fidus
Interpres, nec desilies imitator in arctum
Unde pedem proferre pudor vetet aut operis lex.
Nee sic incipies ut scripior cyclicus olim:

128. Difficile est proprie communia dicere.

‘Communia’ means here what every body knows, or what is common property, as opposed to fictions of one’s own creating, and ‘proprie dicere’ is to tell it so as to make it one’s own. Horace seems to be using terms which have distinct legal significations without strict accuracy. ‘Proprie communia dicere’ seems to be the same as making that which is ‘publica materies’ ‘privati juria,’ which last is a legal term. ‘Communia’ is usual in the sense of partnership property, and is different from ‘publica;’ but here it seems to have the same meaning. Horace seems to have followed a Greek proverb, χαλιτών τά κοινά ἰδίωσαι. As to ‘deducis’ see S. i. 10. 44, n. Ruhnken on Timaeus (v. κύταγμα) points out that in Plato κατάγην means, has the same sense as ‘deducere filum,’ referring to Sophist. p. 152, ε, καὶ πρός γε τοῦτος ἐν ἑαυτῶν καὶ κατάγην καὶ κρικεῖν ἐπιστάμεθα.

132. vilam patulumque moraberis orbem.

With ‘orbis’ Orelli compares Aristotle (Rhet. i. 9. 33): τὸ δ’ ἐγκώμιον τῶν ἵρων ἰσίτιν τὰ δ’ κύκλῳ εἰς πίστιν, οἷον κύκλῳ καὶ παῦλῳ, in which he renders τὰ κύκλῳ by ‘loci communes.’ Aristotle only seems to mean those circumjacent or collateral arguments that go to build up the main argument of the encomium, to be derived from actions. What Horace plainly means is the hackneyed round of subjects, phrases, and illustrations, ground which any body may tread and many have trod already. ‘Patulus’ is opposed to ‘arctus;’ the latter means difficult narrow ground, in which it is not easy to move except by treading precisely in the steps of him whom you are following, in which difficulty or the plan of the work hampers your steps and prevents you from showing any originality.

136. ut scripior cyclicus olim.

A class of Epic poets arose some time after Homer, who, perhaps from the habit of reciting as rhapsodists the Iliad and Odyssey, were led to adopting subjects akin to Homer’s, and connecting their poems with his; and their design appearing to have been to form their poems and Homer’s into one cycle, embracing the whole history of the Trojan times, they came to be called by the grammarians Cyclic poets. Of these the oldest was Arctinius of Miletus, whose poem was a continuation of the Iliad, and nearly as long. It took up the history after the death of Hector, and related the arrival of the Amazons and Ethiopians to assist the Trojans, the death of Achilles by the hand of Paris, the contest of Ajax and Ulysses (told by Ovid, Met. xiii. 1, sqq.), the story of Laocoon and of the wooden horse, and the consequent sacking of Troy. Virgil was indebted to this poem for the greater part of the second book of the Aeneid. It was divided into two parts, of which the first was called Λιθιοτις, the second Τίλιον πύρα. The second Cyclic poet in order of time was Lesches, a Lesbian, and contemporary with Archilochus. His poem was known as the Μικρά Τιλάς. The poem opened with these two lines, which Horace may or may not have had in mind:

‘Τίλιον ἄειδο καὶ Δαρεάνην εὐπώλον,

∪ε πίρι τολά πάθον Δανοι θεράποντες

Άρης.

It appears to have embraced a number of different subjects, among others the story of Philoctetes told in Sophocles’ play. See Aristotle (Poet. 23), where also reference is made to another Cyclic poem called Κύπρια, from the birth place of the author Stasimus, which was intended as an introduction to the Iliad of Homer, and em-
"Fortunam Priami cantabo et nobile bellum."

Quid dignam tanto feret hic promissor hiatus?

Parturient montes, nascetur ridiculus mus.

Quanto rectius hic qui nil molitur inepte:

"Die mihi, Musa, virum capvae post tempora Trojae

Quo mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes."

Non fumum ex fulgere sed ex fumo dare lucem

Cognat, ut speciosa dehinc miracula promat,

'Antiphaten Scyllamque et cum Cyclope Charybdin.'

Nec reeditum Diomedis ab interitu Meleagri, braced the birth of Helen the daughter of Zeus and Nemesis (not Leda), the judgment of Paris, the abduction of Helen, the sacrifice of Iphigenia, and the events of the first nine years of the war. Of the other poems one was the Νόστοι by Agias of Troezen, on the return of the Grecian commanders from Troy, the wanderings of Menelaus, the murder of Agamemnon, and the revenge of Orestes. Another was the Τριγενονια of Eumammon of Cyrene, which continued the history of Ulysses till his death by the hand of his son Telegonus. The Thebais and Epigoni, relating the contests between Argos and Thebes, are also included in the Cyclic poems, but their authors are unknown. (See for more particulars Müller's Hist. of Gr. Lit. c. 6.) There was a later Epic poem called Thebais, the author of which was Antimachus of Claros, a contemporary of Plato. Porphyriov (on v. 146) calls him a Cyclic poet, from the subject of his poem, the extent of which was such, he says, that he had filled twenty-four volumes (that is, twenty-four books) before the armament arrived at Thebes (see note on the above verse). The poem notwithstanding seems to have been much admired.

139. [Parturient montes.] The reading of the old editions and many MSS., 'parturient,' is undoubtedly wrong. Verbs ending in 'urio' signify purpose or desire, and 'parturio' has the same relation to 'pario' that 'esurio' has to 'edo,' meaning the effort or desire to bring forth, the being in labour. Porphyriov quotes the proverb on which this and the fable that Phaedrus has imitated (iv. 22) of the mountain in labour, are founded: ὄμην ὄρος ἑτα μῦ ἀπίκετειν, which in Athenaeus (xiv. 6) is quoted a little differently: ὄμην ὄρος, ζεῦς δ' ἁλοβείτο, τὸ δ' ἐπίκειται μῦν.

141. [Dic mihi, Musa, virum] Odys.

i. 1, sq.:

Compare Epp. i. 2. 10, sq.

143. [Non fumum ex fulgere] Horace says of Homer that he does not begin with a flash which ends in smoke, but with him out of smoke comes a bright light; that is, out of a modest beginning the reader is led on to beauties and objects of interest; and he is carried rapidly forward instead of being detained over matters preliminary and irrelevant. It is obvious that 'fumo' in the second clause is out of place, and is only used to maintain a verbal antithesis; and the beauties selected ('speciosa miracula,' 'striking marvels') are not the most striking. Horace seems always to fall short of his subject when he speaks of Homer.

145. [Antiphaten Scyllamque] These are all stories from the Odyssey. Antiphates was king of the Laestrygones, a gigantic race in Sicily, who destroyed three of Ulysses' companions and destroyed his ships (x. 80, sqq.). The adventure with Polyphemus the Cyclops forms the leading event of the ninth book. The description of Scylla and Charybdis is contained in the twelfth book (xv. 85, sqq.).

146. Nec reeditum Diomedis. This was related in the Cyclic poem called Νόστοι above mentioned. Meleager, who was one of the Argonauts, and was still more famous for the destruction of the boar sent by Diana to vex the inhabitants of Calydon in Aetolia, was uncle to Diomed, being brother to Tydeus. The cause of his death is variously related. According to Homer he was cursed by his mother Althaea for the slaughter of her two brothers (II. ix. 567, sqq.), and her Erinnys pursued him to his Nec gemino bellum Trojanum orditur ab ovo; Semper ad eventum festinat et in medias res Non secus ac notas auditorem rapit, et quae Desperat tractata nitescere posse relinquit; Atque ita mentitur, sic veris falsa remiscet, Primo ne medium, medio ne discrepet imum. Tu quid ego et populus mecum desideret audi: Si plausoris eges aulae manentis et usque Sessuri donec cantor 'Vos plaudite' dicit, Aetatis cujusque notandi sunt tibi mores, Mobilibusque decor naturis dandus et annis. Reddere qui voces jam sit puér et pede certo Signat humum, gestit paribus colludere, et iram Colligit ac ponit temere, et mutatur in horas. Imberbus juvenis tandem custode remoto Gaudet equis canibusque et aprici gramine campi, Cereus in vitium fleti, monitoribus asper, Utilium tardus provisor, prodigus aeris, depth. But as this was before the Trojan war, and had nothing to do with it, to begin an account of Diomed's return with an account of his uncle's death would be absurd enough. It would seem as if some poet had been guilty of this absurdity. The Scholiasts say it was Antimachus. (See note on v. 136.)

147. gemino—ab ovo.] That is, from the birth of Helen, who was born from one of the eggs brought forth by Leda, while Castor and Pollux issued from the other. (See S. ii. 1. 26, "ovo prognatus codem."") This introductory matter was handled in the poem of Statius before mentioned, of which the following fragment has been preserved in Athenaeus (viii. 10):

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{toiei } & \text{ eis } \text{ metà } \text{ tropatn } \text{ 'Elevn } \text{ teie, } \text{ bauma } \text{ beroistin,} \\
\text{tun } & \text{ sere } \text{ kallicmos } \text{ Njmis } \text{ phontis } \text{ megiasa} \\
\text{Zovi, } & \text{ tev } \text{ basileis, teie } \text{ kateres } \text{ up } \text{ dagnikes.} \end{align*}
\]

148. in medias res] The ancients appear particularly to have remarked this quality of Homer's poems. See Quintil. vii. 10. 11: "ubi ab initidis incipienda, ubi more Homericoe medii vel ultimis?" 151. Aigue ita mentitur, sic veris] "'Ita,' 'so' (the oldest form of the nenter pronoun 'id'), differs from 'sic,' 'so,' as the logical 'i' or 'eo,' 'this,' differs from the demonstrative 'ho,' 'this.' 'Ita' therefore is the usual word with 'ut' following. But the poets (and sometimes even the prose writers) use 'sic' in the same construction, and in others in which 'ita' is more usual. See Key's L. G. 1451, and compare C. i. 3. 1, "Sic te Diva potens Cypris;' and Epp. i. 7. 69, "Sic ignovisse putato."

154. aulae manentis] See Epp. ii. 1. 189. In the next verse 'cantor' is used for the actor, as Cicero uses it (Pro Sest. c. 55): "Sedebat examinatus: et is qui antea cantorum convicio contiones celebrare suas solebat cantorum ipsum orationis ejiciens debat." He is speaking of Clodius, at whom as he sat in the theatre the actors pointed some words from the comedy that was being performed. (See Forcellini.) 'Vos plaudite' were the words with which a play usually concluded.

157. Mobilibusque decor naturis] Bentley, on very little authority, edits 'maturis.' Horace means that men's characters shift and change with the different stages of life, and that these changes must be attended to. He goes on to explain them in a clear and elegant manner.

161. custode remoto] This means the 'paedagogus,' as in S. i. 6. 31, where see note. This person's functions ceased when the boy assumed the 'toga virilis.' 'Campi,' as elsewhere, means the Campus Martius. The characteristics of youth and age here given are nearly the same as in Aristotle (Rhet. ii. 12, sq.). 'Sublimis cupidusque' means 'soaring and ambitious.'
Sublimis cupidusque et amata relinquire pernix.
Conversis studiis aetas animusque virilis
Quaerit opes et amicitias, inservit honori,
Commisisse cavet quod mox mutare laboret.
Multa senem circumveniunt incommoda, vel quod
Quaerit et inventis miser abstinet ac timet uti,
Vel quod res omnes timide gelideque ministrat,
Dilator, spe longa, iners, avidusque futuri,
Difficilis, querulus, laudator temporis acti
Se puero, castigator censorisque minorum.
Multa ferunt anni venientes commoda secum,
Multa recedentes adimunt. Ne forte seniles Mandentur juventi partes pueroque viriles,
Semper in adjunctis aevoque morabimur aptis.
Aut agitur res in scenis aut acta refertur.
Segnius irritant animos demissa per aurem,
Quam quae sunt oculis subjecta fidelibus, et quae
Ipse sibi tradit spectator: non tamen intus
Digna geri promes in scenam, multaque tolles
Ex oculis quae mox narret facundia praesens.

172. spe longus.] “Quia tardus est et difficilis ad sperandum, propter experientiam fallacias fortunae” (Forcellini).
The expression is peculiar, and other interpretations have been given, but I believe that this is the true one. So Dacier renders it, “longue à concevoir des espérances.” Bentley substitutes ‘lentus’ out of his own head. ‘Avidus futuri’ means I suppose ‘eager to live longer,’ or ‘greedy of life,’ but it is an odd expression.

175. Multa ferunt anni] See C. ii. 5, 14, n., and Epp. ii. 2. 55. The remark seems to be drawn forth by the dark picture of old age contained in the preceding verses.
It has not much otherwise to do with the subject.

178. adjunctis aevoque morabimur aptis.] Both ‘adjunctis’ and ‘aptis’ go with ‘aevus’, ‘we shall dwell upon which that attaches and is fitted to the age we have in hand.’

179. aut acta refertur.] The following remarks of Müller (Hist. Gr. Lit. i. 307) appear to be true:—“The actions to which no speech is attached, and which do not serve to develop thoughts and feelings, are imagined to pass behind or without the scene, and are only related on the stage.
Hence the importance of the parts of messengers and heralds in ancient tragedy.
The poet was not influenced only by the reason given by Horace (vv. 185, sqq.); there was also the far deeper general reason, that it is never the outward act with which the interest of ancient tragedy is most intimately bound up. The action is internal and spiritual; the reflections, resolutions, feelings, the mental or moral phenomena which can be expressed in speech, are developed on the stage. For outward action, which is generally mute or at all events cannot be adequately expressed by words, the Epic form, narration, is the only appropriate vehicle. Moreover, the costume of tragic actors was calculated for impressive declamation and not for action. The lengthened and stuffed out figures would have had an awkward, not to say a ludicrous effect in combat or other violent action. From the sublime to the ridiculous would have been but one step, which ancient tragedy carefully avoided risking.”

180. Segnius irritant animos] When Candanes propounds to exhibit his wife’s beauty to Gyges, Herodotus (i. 8) makes him say, ἃετα γὰρ τυχάναι ἄνθρωποι ἔντα αἰτετότερα όφθαλμοι, and Seneca (Epp. vi.) has a like saying, “Homines amplius oculis quam auribus credunt.”

184. facundia praesens.] An eye-witness who tells the spectators what he has seen, and does it in the flow of a long set speech. ‘Praesens’ means ‘before the audience.’
Ne pueros coram populo Medea trucidet,
Aut humana palam coquat extra nefarious Atreus,
Aut in avem Procne vertatur, Cadmus in anguem.
Quodecumque ostendis mihi sic incredulus odi.
Neve minor neu sit quinto productior actu
Fabula, quae posci vult et spectata reponi;
Nec deus intersit nisi dignus vindice nodus
Inciderit; nec quarta loqui persona laboret.
Actoris partes chorus officiumque virile

186. coquat extra nefarious Atreus.] See
C. i. 6, 8, n.; and as to Procne see C. iv.
12, 5, n. Short fragments of the Atreus of Sophocles and Cadmus of Euripides are extant. The story of Cadmus and his wife Harmonia changed into serpents is told by Ovid (Met. iv. 563, sqq.). Such barbarities and miraculous changes Horace says may answer in narration, but if represented on the stage are both incredible and disgusting.

In the tragedy, Medea, attributed to Seneca, the mother strangles her children on the stage, "notwithstanding the admonition of Horace, who probably had some similar example of the Roman theatre before his eyes, for a Greek would hardly have committed this error. The Roman tragedians must have had a particular rage for novelty and effect to seek them in such atrocities" (Schlegel, Dram. Lit. Lect. xv.). This author's estimate of the only Roman tragedies that remain is very low: they are "beyond description bombastic and frigid, unnatural both in character and action, revolting from their violation of propriety, and so destitute of theatrical effect, that they seem never to have been meant to leave the rhetorical schools for the stage."—"Every tragedical common-place is worried out to the last gasp; all is phrase, and even the most common remark is forced and stilted," &c.
This is exaggerated criticism, but Horace had probably a low opinion of the tragic writers of his own day, though he flatters Varins and Pollio. It is probable, as Schlegel says, Seneca's plays were never intended to be acted; but if so, his remarks above quoted are not quite consistent. See C. i.
6, 8, n.; ii. 1. 10, n.; S. i. 10, 42, n.

190. nec deus intersit] It was a reproach to the tragedians that τετειναν τι ἀτορωσιν, ἐπὶ τὰς μηχανὰς ἀποθείουσα θεοὺς ἀρνοτις (Plato, Craty. 1. 425, Steph.), and Aristotle (Poét. xv. 11) instances the conclusion of the Medea of Euripides. The gods were introduced on a platform above, which is the μηχανὴ referred to. Hence the proverb "Deus ex machina" for any summary way of winding up a plot, or ex-tricating oneself from a difficulty. Cicero uses the same illustration (de Nat. Deor. i.
20): "ut tragici poetae quum explicare argumenti exitium non potestis, confugitis ad deum." Forcellini explains 'vindice' by 'solutore, et quasi liberatore rei adeo involutae ut ope humana bonus exitus in-veniri non possit:" 'one brought in to unravel the knot, and deliver the people from an otherwise hopeless position.'

192. nec quarta loqui persona laboret.] Thespis first introduced a single actor on the stage, who perhaps told a story and served to relieve the chorus. Aeschylus introduced a second, and so brought regular dialogue into the drama. Sophocles added a third,
and this number was rarely if ever exceeded (see Epp. i. 11, 14, n., and Müller, Lit.
Gr. p. 304, sqq.). The Romans observed no such restriction, but it must always be the case, if more than three actors are on the stage at once, that some of them can have but little to say.

193. Actoris partes chorus] The chorus should sustain in its place and to the best of its power the part of an actor; that is, instead of singing what is irrelevant to the plot, it ought to carry on the action.
'Officiumque virile defendat' is a way of expressing, 'it must sustain a strenuous part,' or 'do its duty strenuously.' Horace uses the expression 'defendente vicem' in the same sense (S. i. 10, 12). Horace's rule was followed by Aeschylus and Sophocles, but not always by Euripides, with whom
"the choral songs have frequently little or no connexion with the fable, and there nothing better than a mere episodical ornament"
(Schlegel, Dram. Lit. Lect. v.). Aristotle (Poét. xviii. 19) says, τὸν χορὸν δὲ ἐὰν ἐτ ὑπολαβῇ τῶν ὑποκριτῶν, καὶ μόριον ἑιναι τὸν ἀλον, καὶ συναγωγίσαταυ μὴ ὄπερ
παρ' Εὐριπίδη ἀλλ' ὄπερ παρὰ Σοφοκλέω.
As respects Euripides these remarks are not always true. Some of the choruses in his extant plays are pertinent enough.
Defendat, neu quid medios intercinat actus
Quod non proposito conducat et haereat apte.
Ille bonis faveatque et consilietur amice,
Et regat iratos et amet peccare tinentes;
Ille dapes laudet mensae brevis, ille salubrem
Justitiam legesque et apertis otia portis;
Ille tegat commissa deosque precetur et oret,
Ut redate miseris, abeat fortuna superbus.
Tibia non ut nunc orichalco vincita tubaeque
Aemula, sed tenuis simplexque foramine pauco
Adspirare et adesse choris erat utilis atque
Nondum spissa nimis compiere sedilia flatu;
Quo sane populus numerabilis utpote parvus

197. amet peccare tinentes;] Nearly every MS. and edition, old and modern, has ‘peccare tinentes,’ and the commentators compare the words with Epp. i. 16. 52; “Oderunt peccare boni virtutis amore.” From one MS. of Pulmann, Bentley edited ‘pacare tinentes,’ and Orelli commends and adopts that reading. I see no reason for doing so. The office ascribed to the chorus by Horace is “a general expression of moral sympathy, exhortation, instruction, and warning,” which Schlegel considers the best description that has been given. He considers it “as a personified reflection on the action that is going on; the incorporation into the representation itself of the sentiments of the poet as the spokesman of the whole human race. The chorus is the ideal spectator. It mitigates the impression of a heart-rending or moving story, while it conveys to the actual spectator a lyrical and musical expression of his own emotions, and elevates him to the region of contemplation” (Dram. Lit. Lect. v.). In plain terms, the business of the chorus was to utter such reflections as any indifferent persons might conceive on the action before it, and to address those reflections to the characters represented, as one might address them to real persons under the same circumstances.

198. mensae brevis] Compare Epp. i. 14. 35, “coena brevis juvat;” and with “apertis otia portis,” compare C. iii. 5. 23, “portasque non clausas,” representing a picture of national security and peace. The chorus, to whom the principal persons communicated their intended crimes and deepest plots, were held to secrecy as a prime duty. Thus Medea coolly tells the chorus her intention to murder her children and her rival, and reckons upon their secrecy as a matter of course. Other instances are numerous.

202. Tibia non ut nunc orichalco vincita] The ‘tibia’ was an instrument originally made of a hollow reed (Pliny xvi. 36. 66), or a box-wood pipe (Ovid, Fast. vi. 697), or the shin-bone of some animal, from which the name is derived. Afterwards it was brought to greater perfection, and was made of ivory sometimes. It resembled the flageolet or clarionet. It was usual to play two ‘tibiae’ together, as observed on C. iv. 15, 30, where see note. Those in the British Museum have six holes. Probably in the days of Horace they had more. The metal which the ancients called ‘orichalum’ is unknown. It was not to be found even in Pliny’s time. The derivation from the Latin ‘aurum’ and the Greek χαλκός is etymologically absurd, and the quantity of the first syllable disproves it. The more probable derivation is from δρός and χαλκός, the meaning being ‘mountain-bronze.’ With this the parts of the ‘tibia,’ which took to pieces as our flutes do, were bound at the joinings. Bentley and others prefer ‘juncta,’ which is the reading of the oldest editions and some MSS. The best have ‘vincata.’ Horace says that in simpler days the ‘tibia’ served for an accompaniment to the chorus, but afterwards it came to drown it. In those days the population of the city was smaller, the theatres less crowded, and the audience more reverential and attentive. What times Horace alludes to is difficult to say. Orelli thinks his history of choral music is a fanciful account, fluctuating wonderfully between the practice of the Greeks, that of the Romans, and that which his own imagination has drawn; and this is perhaps the case.
Et frugi castus que verecundusque coibat.
Postquam coepit agros extendere victor et urbes,
Latin amplexi murus vinoque diurno
Placari Genius festis impune diebus,
Accessit numerisque modisque licentia major;
Indoctus quid enim saperet liberque laborum
Rusticus urbano confusus, turpis honesto?
Sic priscae motumque et luxuriem addidit arti
Tibicen traxitque vagus per pulpita vestem;
Sic etiam fidibus voces crevere severis,
Et tuli eloquium insolitum facundia praeceps,
Utiliumque sagax rerum et divina futuri
Sortilegis non discrepit sententia Delphis.
Carmine qui tragico vilem certavit ob hircum,

206. Postquam coepit agros] That is, "post Punica bella" (see Epp. ii. 1. 162, n.) if we take the Romans, and the Persian war if we suppose the Greeks to be meant. (See v. 93 of the same Epistle.) As to 'placari Genius' see Epp. ii. 1. 144, and i. 7. 94, n. Ven. 1483, and I believe all the editions of that century, and Ascensius (1519), and nearly all the MSS., have 'urbem,' which, it is well clear Horace is not referring to any one city, is the right reading. Bentley follows the Aldine and other editions of the sixteenth century, Lambinus, Cruiquius, and Torrentius, in reading 'urbem.'

211. numerisque modisque] This combination occurs above, Epp. ii. 2. 144. 'Liber laborum' is a poetical construction like 'operum solutis' (C. iii. 17. 16) and 'operum vacuo' (S. ii. 2. 110).

215. traxitque vagus per pulpita vestem.] The 'palla' worn by tragic actors had a train called 'syrmia,' from στρομή, because it swept the stage. This is how Horace alludes to. The Roman dress was probably not so splendid as the Greek, of which Müller observes that "it was a Bacchic festal costume. Almost all the actors in a tragedy wore long striped garments (χιτώνες τούθη-pς, στολαί) reaching to the ground, over which were thrown upper garments of purple or some other brilliant colour, with all sorts of gay trimmings and gold ornaments (λυμίτες καὶ χαλμῦδες. See Epp. i. 6. 40, n.). Even Hercules appeared in this rich and gaudy dress, to which his distinctive attributes, the club and the bow, were merely added (see below, v. 228). The choruses also vied with each other in the splendour of their dress and ornaments, as well as in the excellence of their singing and dancing" (Gr. Lit. c. 22). As to 'pulpita' see Epp. ii. 1. 174.

216. Sic etiam fidibus voces crevere severis] I am not sufficiently acquainted with music to explain the scales of the tetrachord or the improvements made by Terpander. (See above, v. 83, n.) But the reader who understands the subject may consult Müller's chapter on Greek Music, in his History of Greek Literature, c. xii. The sedate and serious Doric style would be expressed by 'fidibus severis;' but Horace is speaking generally, and probably from his own imagination, when he says that in the course of time the grave style of music to which the choruses were once sung gave way to a more vehement style, as the eloquence of the chorus grew more impetuous, and it began to speak in language obscure, prophetic, and oracular. There is no historical accuracy in this account, though in respect to the obscurity of some of the Greek choruses Horace wrote from what he knew of them.

220. Carmine qui tragico] Horace here passes on to the Satyric Drama of the Greeks. "The name of Tragedy (goat's song) was even by the ancients derived from the resemblance of the singers in their character of Satyrs to goats. Yet the slight resemblance in form between Satyrs and goats could hardly have given a name to this kind of poetry: it is far more probable that this species of dithyramb was originally performed at the burnt sacrifice of a goat" (Müller, p. 291). A goat was the prize contended for in the composition of the Mox etiam agrestes Satyros nudavit, et asper
Incolumi gravitate jocum tentavit, eo quod
Illecebris erat et grata novitate morandus
Spectator, functusque sacris et potus et exlex.
Verum ita risores, ita commendare dicaces
Conveniet Satyros, ita vertere seria ludo,
Ne quicunque deus, quicunque adhibebitur heros,
Regali conspectus in auro nuper et ostro,
Migret in obscuras humili sermone tabernas,
Aut dum vitat humum nubes et inania captet.
Effutire leves indigna Tragoedia versus,
Ut festis matrona moveri jussa diebus,
Intererit Satyris paulum pudibunda protervis.
Non ego inornata et dominantia nomina solum
Verbaque, Pisones, Satyrorum scriptor amabo;
Nec sic enitar tragico differe colori choral songs or dithyrambs to which the name τραγωδία first belonged. Bentley (Phal. p. 161) supposes the name to have been derived from the prize, but denies that it existed before the time of Thespis. (See below, v. 275, n.) The chorus appeared in the character of Satyrs as attendants on Dionysus, at whose festival they performed. Their subjects were originally confined to the adventures, serious and sportive, of that god, and therefore were a mixture of mirth and gravity. Choerilus, an older contemporary of Aeschylus, seems to have laid the foundation of an independent Satyric Drama, the entire separation of which from tragedy, as we now understand the word, was effected a few years later by Pratinas of Phlius in Argolis, about a.n. 500: thenceforward it was usual for the tragic poets to exhibit four plays at a time (tetralogies), of which the fourth was a Satyric Drama, such as the Cyclopes of Euripides. The following remarks will explain most of this passage:—

"The Satyric Drama was not a comedy, but a playful tragedy. Its subjects were taken from the same class of adventures of Bacchus and the heroes as tragedy; but they were so treated in connexion with rude objects of outward nature that the presence and participation of rustic petulant Satyrs seemed quite appropriate. Accordingly all scenes from free untamed nature, adventures of a striking character, where strange monsters or savage tyrants of mythology are overcome by valour or stratagem, belong to this class; and in such scenes as these the Satyrs could express various feelings of terror and delight, disgust and desire, with all the openness and unreserve which belong to their character. All mythical subjects and characters were not therefore suited to the Satyric Drama. The character best suited to it seems to have been the powerful hero Hercules, an eater and drinker and boon companion, who, when he is in good humour, allows himself to be amused by the petulant sports of Satyrs and other similar elves" [Müller, p. 294, sq.].

224. poHus et exlex.] This expresses the freedom which attended the Dionysiac festivals after the sacrifices were over.

228. auro nuper et ostro,] 'He who but now came forward in gold and purple (which ornaments gods and heroes wore, see above, v. 215, n.), let him not pass into low language as if he were a frequenter of taverns,'—which were commonly vaults under ground, and are therefore called 'obscurs.'

230. nubes et inania captet.] Compare Persius (v. 7): "Grande locu'tari nebulas Helicone legunto." As to the construction with 'indigna' in the next verse see C. iii. 21. 6, n. and Epp. i. 3. 35, n.

234. dominantia nomina solum Verbaque.] As to 'nomina verbaque' see S. i. 3. 103, n. 'Dominantia nomina' is an adaptation of the Greek κυρία βνάματα; that is, literal words as opposed to figurative. Horace says he shall not confine himself to those if he ever takes to writing Satyric Dramas. As to 'diffirez' with the dative see S. i. 4. 48, n.
Ut nihil intersit Davus ne loquatur et audax
Pythias emuncto lucrata Simone talentum,
An custos famulusque dei Silenus alumi.
Ex noto fictum carmen sequar, ut sibi quivis
Speret idem, sudet multum frustraque laboret
Ausus idem: tantum series juncturaque pollet,
Tantum de medio sumptis accedit honoris.
Silvis deducti caveant me judice Fauni,
Ne velut innati trivis ac paene forenses
Aut nimium teneris juvenentur versibus unquam,
Aut inmunda crepant ignominiosaque dicta;
Offenduntur enim quibus est equus et pater et res,
Nec, si quid fricti ciceris probat et nucis emptor,
Aequis accipiant animis donantve corona.
Syllaba longa brevi subjecta vocatur iambus,

238. Pythias emuncto] Comm. Crug. says this is the name of a slave girl who got money out of her master Simo as a portion for his daughter, in a play of Lucilius, for which Orelli thinks we should read Cecilius. As to 'emuncto' see S. i. 4. 8, n.

239. Silenus] This god is said to have educated Bacchus. He represented the 'crassa Minerva' of the ancients, 'wisdom under a rough exterior,' and it is in his graver character that Horace here views him. All ancient representations of Silenus exhibit him as a gross impersonation of sensuality and low fun, usually drunk and riding upon an ass, with Fauns dancing about him. Modern ideas have confounded him with Bacchus his foster-child.

240. Ex noto fictum carmen sequar.] 'Ex noto' (if I understand it right, but I am not sure) means 'in ordinary language,' such as any man thinks he could write, but not every man when he comes to try succeeds, for it is the connexion (see v. 48) and ordering of the words and incidents and illustrations that gives so much charm to common language. 'Ex noto' might mean that the subject must be familiar. The context to be sure is about words; but there is no depending on the context in this poem, the parts are so loosely put together (see Introduction).

244. Fauni.] See C. ii. 19. 4, n. Horace says that these rough beings introduced from the woods should not talk as if they had been born in the city and were loungers in the Forum, or languish in love verses like a mawkish youth; but neither should low language be put into their mouth, for this is sure to offend the refined part of the audience, even if the vulgar applaud it. 'Juvenor' is a word not found elsewhere: it is adapted from the Greek νιαυντικά. 'Forense' is used as Livy uses it (ix. 46): "Ex eo tempore (the censorship of Appius Claudius) in duas partes discessit civitas. Alius in- teger populusabant et cultor bonorum, alius forensis factio tenebat, donec Q. Fabius et P. Decius censores facti: et Fabius simul concordiae caussa simul ne humiliorum in manu comitia essent, omnem forensem turbam excretam in quattuor tribus con- jact, urbanasque eas appellavit.'

248. et pater] 'Those who had a father' means 'ingenui,' those who were born free and of lawful wedlock, since none others were 'in patria potestate.' As to 'cicer' see S. i. 6. 115, n.

251. Syllaba longa brevi] As to the 'iambus' see above, v. 79, sq. Horace here calls it 'pes citus,' a rapid foot, as elsewhere (C. i. 16. 24) he speaks of 'celeres iambos.' He says the rapidity of the foot caused the division of the verse into the form of a trimeter, whereas it was a 'sena- rius,' having six distinct iambic feet. The admission of a spondee in the odd feet, he says, was an after invention, in order to give more weight to the measure. What he means by 'non ita pridem' is not very clear. I suppose he means comparatively lately; but the verses of Archilochus had spondees in them. The history is not very accurate. Horace has himself imi- tated the pure iambic measure in the alternate verses of Epod. 16. 'In jura paterna recept' I suppose is to be rendered 'gave Pes citus; unde etiam trimetris accrescere jussit
Nomen iambeis, cum senos redderet ictus
Primus ad extremum similis sibi. Non ita pridem, Tardior ut paulo graviorque veniret ad aures,
Spondeos stables in jura paterna recepit
Commodus et patiens, non ut de sede secunda
Coderet aut quarta socialiter. Hic et in Acci Nobilibus trimetris apparett rarus, et Enni
In scenam missos cum magno pondere versus Aut opera celeris nimium curaque carentis
Aut ignoratae premit artis crimine turpi.
Non quivis videt immutata poëmata judex,
Et data Romanis venia est indigna poëtis.
Idcircone vager scribamque licenter? an omnes
Visuros peccata putem mea, tutus et intra Spem veniae cautus? Vitavi denique culpam,
Non laudem merui. Vos exemplaria Graeca
Nocturna versate manu, versate diurna.
At vestri proavi Plautinos et numeros et a share of its patrimony.' The meaning is clear enough from the context. The politeness of the 'iambus' in making way for the spondees, and giving up some of its just rights, but not disposed to be so accommodating as to give up the even places in the verse, seems rather a heavy joke. 'So-cialiter,' 'in a friendly way,' does not occur elsewhere.

255. Hic et in Acci See Epp. ii. 1. 50.
56. The 'iambus' Horace says is not commonly used in the verses of Accius and Ennius. Those of the former he calls noble trimeters, by which he means famed.
He was no great admirer of them himself.
The great weight he attributes to the verses of Ennius arose from the gravity of the measure, consisting, as v. 260 does, chiefly of spondees. But the absence of the 'iambus,' in the opinion of Horace, convicts him either of slovenly writing or of ignorance of his art. Bentley puts a full stop after 'Enni,' and changes 'missos' into 'missus,' making 'versus' the nominative case to 'premit.' But what is the object of the sentence he does not say. 'Hic'
governs 'premit' as it does 'apparet.'
'This,' that is, 'the absence of this.'

265. an omnes] This, and not 'at' or
'et,' is the reading of nearly all the MSS.
Horace says it is not every critic that can tell a rhythmical verse from an unrythmical, and so an indulgence they do not deserve is accorded to our poets. 'But am I on this account to take all manner of liberties?
Or, on the other hand, am I to suppose that every one will see my faults, and to be very careful lest I exceed the limits of forgiveness? Why if I do this I may have avoided a fault, but I shall have earned no praise.'

270. Plautinos et numeros et Laudavere sales.] See Epp. ii. 1. 170, n. Horace never has a good word to say for Plautus, and he here deprecates his art as well as his versification. Both no doubt wanted polish; and Horace does not scruple to insinuate (in the above place) that it was only through haste to get paid that he turned out his works so unfinished. But his style and his defects were incidental to the period and manner of his life: his simplicity and drollery were given him by nature. If Horace did not admire Plautus, more learned men did, and Varro was one of them, and Cicero another. He says: 'Duplex est ommnino iocandi genus: unum iliberalis, petulans, flagitiuos, obscenum; alterum elagans, urbanum, ingenioum, facetum;
quod genero non modo Plautus noster et Atticorum antiqua commodo, sed etiam phi-losophorum Socraticorum libris referti sunt'' (De Off. i. 29).
Laudavere sales: nimium patienter utrumque
Ne dicam stulte mirati, si modo ego et vos
Scimus inurbanum lepido seponere dicto
Legitimumque sonum digitis callemus et aure.

Ignotum tragicae genus invenisse Camenae
Dicitur et plausiris vexisse poëmata Thespis, Quae canerent agerentque peruncti faecibus ora.
Post hunc personae pallaeque repertor honestae
Aeschylus et modicis instravit pulpita tignis
Et docuit magnumque loqui nitique cothurno.

Successit vetus his comedia, non sine multa

275. Ignotum tragicae] Plutarch, in his life of Solon (c. 29), says that when Thespis was just introducing tragedy and drawing large audiences from the novelty of the thing, which was before the contests had been established, Solon being then old and fond of amusement, ἰδίατο τὸν θεσσαλικὸν ἀνθεν ὑποκρίνομεν ὑπὲρ ἦν τοῦ χαλκοῦ. His first representation was B.C. 535. The name τραγῳδία belonged, as observed above (on v. 220), to the dithyrambic songs of the Bacchic festivals, and these are of uncertain origin, but of great antiquity. The extent to which Thespis can be considered the author of tragedy is that he introduced an actor independent of the chorus, which sustained various parts under the disguise of a linen mask. (See v. 192, n.) This account therefore of the invention of tragedy at the vintage, the faces smeared with lees of wine, the waggon with which Thespis went round Attica, and so forth, may be rejected, says Müller, "since all these arise from a confusion between the origin of comedy and tragedy. Comedy originated at the rural Dionysia or the vintage festival. Aristophanes calls the comic poets of his own time leε-σινγες (τρωγοδόι), but he never gives this name to the tragic poets and actors. The waggon suits not the dithyramb, which was sung by a standing chorus, but a procession which occurred in the earliest form of comedy. Moreover in many festivals there was a custom of throwing out jests and scourrilus abuse from a waggon (σκέλας ἢ ἄμαξοι). It is only by completely avoiding this error (which rests on a very natural confusion) that it is possible to reconcile the earliest history of the drama with the best testimonies, especially that of Aristotle" (p. 291).

276. Post hunc personae pallaeque] Horace makes Aeschylus the inventor of the mask and tragic dress described above (v. 215, n.). But there can be no doubt that he who first put an actor upon the stage, if he, as most suppose, gave him various parts to sustain, must have employed masks suited to the different characters. There were symbolical masks for different ages and classes, and there were descriptive masks for different persons, representing peculiarities by which they would be known. Gellius (v. 7) derives the word from 'per-sono,' conceiving that they were contrived so as to assist the voice. But that etymology will not do, if it were only for the quantity of 'sono.' The derivation is unknown. "Masks," Müller says, "originated in the taste for mumming and disguises of all sorts prevalent at the Bacchic festivals. They not only concealed the individual features of well-known actors and enabled the spectators entirely to forget the performer in his part, but gave to his whole aspect that ideal character which the tragedy of antiquity demanded." Roscius first introduced masks on the Roman stage about A.D. 650. The garment Horace means by 'palla' has been described before. It was called ποσκλασιον or ἄνευν from its rich embroidery. For the proper meaning of 'palla' see S. i. 8. 23, n. As to 'pulpite' and 'cothurnus' see Epp. ii. 1. 174, n. Aeschylus may have made improvements in what is called among us the property of a theatre, but there is no reason to suppose that he invented any of the above things. 'Magnus loqui' is usually referred to the style of Aeschylus, his ῥήματα γεροφοαγή as Aristophanes calls them. From the connexion it seems rather to mean that he taught the actor how to articulate loudly. There is nothing about style here.

281. Successit vetus his comedia,] Horace takes no account of the earliest form of comedy from which its name is derived,
Laude; sed in vitium libertas excidit et vim
Dignam lege regi; lex est accepta chorusque
Turpiter obticuit sublato jure nocendi.
Nil intentatum nostri liquere poëtæ,
Nec minimum meruere decus vestigia Graeca
Ausi deserere et celebrare domestica facta,
Vel qui praetextas vel qui docuere togatas.
Nec virtute foret clarisve potentius arnis
Quam lingua Latium, si non offenderet unum
Quemque poëtarum limae labor et mora. Vos, o Pompilius sanguis, carmen reprehendite quod non Multa dies et multa litura coerceit atque
Perfectum decies non castigavit ad unguem.
Ingenium misera quia fortunatius arte
Credit et exclusit sanos Helicone poëtas
Democritus, bona pars non ungues ponere curat,
Non barbam, secreta petit loca, balnea vitat.
Nanciscetur enim pretium nomenque poëtæ,
Si tribus Anticyris caput insanabile nunquam

the song of the revellers (καματός) at the Dionysia; or of the labours of Susarion, who as early at least as Thespis, at Icaria,
a village in Attica, contended with a comic chorus for a prize. That which was before composed of jests and obscenities connected with the worship of Bacchus had now added to it personal ribaldry and political jokes, the former levelled at the spectators or against public men. Between Susarion and the period of the old comedy there were several distinguished writers, as Chionides, Magna, Epanhides, and others. The earliest writer of the old comedy was Cratinus. See S. i. 4. 1, n, on this subject.

286. Vel qui praetextae] ‘Fabulæ praetextae’ or ‘praetextatae’ were tragedies, as ‘togatae’ were comedies, with plots connected with Roman stories and manners.
(See Epp. ii. 1. 57, sqq.) The Greek tragedies to which ‘praetextae’ were opposed were called by the Romans ‘crepidatae.’ ‘Docere’ is used as the Greeks used διδάσχειν for exhibiting a play, because the poet
also trained the chorus as χοροδιδασκαλος.
The principal writers of tragedy and comedy are mentioned in the above Epistle and distinguished in the notes. To the writers of ‘togatae’ Acron here adds Actius Lamia, Antonius Rufus, Cn. Melissus Pomponius.

292. Pompilius sanguis.] The ‘ Calpurnia gens,’ to which the Pisones belonged,
Tonsori Licino commiserit. O ego laeves, Qui purgor bilem sub verni temporis horam! Non alius faceret meliora poëmata. Verum Nil tanti est. Ergo fungar vice cotis, acutum Reddere quae ferrum valet exsors ipsa secandi; Munus et officium nil scribens ipse docebo, Unde parentur opes, quid alat formetque poëtam; Quid deceat, quid non; quo virtus, quo serat error. Scribendi recte sapere est et principium et bons: Rem tibi Socraticae poterunt ostendere chartae, Verbaque provisam rem non invita sequentur. Qui didicit patriae quid debeat et quid amicis, Quo sit amare parens, quo frater amandus et hospes, Quod sit conscripti, quod judicis officium, quae Partes in bellum missi ducis, ille profecto Reddere personae scit convenientia cuique. Respicere exemplar vitae morumque jubebo

301. Tonsori Licino commiserit.] Comm. Cruq. has the following note: "Licino: nomen tonsoris famosi qui postea dicitur factus senator a Caesare quod odisset Pompeium, de quo hoc scriptum est epitaphium:

'Marmoreo tumulo Licinus jacet, at Cato nullo; Pompeius parvo: quis putet esse Deos?"
The name of this person is mentioned by Juvenal (S. i. 109; xiv. 306), Persius (ii. 36), Martial (viii. 3, 6, where his tomb is mentioned) so that the name was proverbial for a wealthy favourite. Suetonius (Aug. c. 67) and Dion Cassius (54. 21) both mention him; and the Scholiast on the above passage of Persius calls him "tonsorem ac libertum Angusti Caesaris." But he was a freedman of Julius Caesar, and must have been his barber if any body's. His history is also given by the Scholiast on Juvenal. As Caesar's Licinus was alive when Horace wrote, the probabilities are against his using his name in this place. The name was probably that of a well-known barber of the day. (See S. ii. 3. 16. 35, n.)

302. Qui purgor bilem.] The hellebore which the ancients used in cases of madness is a violent purgative, and they tried to act on the brain by relieving the stomach. Horace says he must be a fool, since madness is essential to poetry, for taking medicines to keep his stomach in order. This annual purgation was thought to take place best in spring, according to Celsus (ii. 13). It does not appear that any MSS. have "qui purgor," though that form might be expected here.

304. fungar vice colis.] As to 'vice' see above, v. 66, and S. i. 10. 12. Horace says if he only kept the bile from escaping he would beat them all at poetry. However, it does not matter, he goes on; he will act as the grindstone which whets the iron, though itself cannot cut. This is said to be a proverbial way of speaking, taken from a reply of Isocrates to one who asked him why he taught others to speak, but did not speak himself: ait άκοναι αύται μη τιμητιν οδηγαίται, τον έτι σιέπρον έξια και γημητικών πολεισαι. (See Socrates—chartae.)

310. Rem tibi Socraticae—chartae.] The writings of Socrates' disciples, such as Plato, Xenophon, Aeschines, Antisthenes, Aristippus, will supply matter for the true (dramatic) poet, by teaching him the science and duties of human life.

314. Quod sit conscripti.] After the expulsion of the kings, the senate having lost many of its number under the last of them, the vacancies were filled up from the 'equites,' who were called 'conscripser' senator. The others were 'patres;' and the whole body thus constituted was called collectively 'patres et conscripti,' or shortly 'patres conscripti.' Horace here uses ' conscriptus' as equivalent to 'senator.' It is no where else so used. As to 'judicis' see S. i. 4. 123, n.
Doctum imitatorem et vivas hinc ducere voces.
Interdum speciosa locis morataque recte
Fabula nullius veneris, sine pondere et arte,
Valdius oblectat populum meliusque moratur
Quam versus inopes rerum nugaeque canorae.
Graii ingenium, Graii dedit ore rotundo
Musa loqui, praeter laudem nullius avaris.
Romani pueri longis rationibus assem
Discunt in partes centum diducere. "Dicit
Filius Albini: Si de quincunce remota est
Uncia, quid superat? Poteras dixisse." "Triens." "Eu!
Rem poteris servare tuam. Redit uncia, quid fit?"
"Semis." At haec animos aerugo et cura peculi Cum semel imbuerit, speramus carmina fingi
Posse linenda cedro et levi servanda cupresso?
Aut prodesse volunt aut delectare poëtæ,
Aut simul et jucunda et idonea dicere vitae.
Quidquid praecipies esto brevis, ut cito dicta
Percipiant animi dociles teneantque fideles;
Omne supervacuum pleno de pectore manat.
Ficta voluptatis causa sint proxima veris,
Nee quodcumque volet poscat sibi fabula credi,

318. vivas hinc ducere voces.] Living words are those that represent nature to the life, or which convey a vivid sense to the understanding.

319. speciosa locis] Full of telling common-places, sentiments, examples, and so on.

323. Graii ingenium.] He says the Greeks had a natural taste for poetry, and cultivated it from an ambition to excel and thirst for praise, which Porphyrian illustrates by the example of Apelles, who took ten years to finish his famous picture of Venus rising from the sea (‘Αφροδίτη ἀναευρέων). But this comparison of the Greeks and Romans does not appear to be connected with the subject that goes before or the rules that follow from v. 333.

325. Romani pueri] See S. i. 6. 72.
77, n. The ‘as’ was divided into twelve parts, ‘unciae,’ of which the ‘quincunx’ contained five, and the ‘triens’ four, being one-third of the whole, whence the name.
The ‘semis’ contained six, being half an as.
Albinus, according to Comm. Cruq., was the name of an usurer. Bentley substitutes ‘dicas’ for ‘dictum’ without reason or authority. Horace is representing a scene in a boys’ school. "Master: Let the son of Albinus tell me: if you take an unca from a quincunx, how much remains? (The boy hesitates.) You used to know. Boy:

A triens. Master: Very well. You will know how to take care of your money.
Now add an unca: what is the sum?
Boy: A semis." Bentley also reads ‘poterat’ for ‘poterat.’ Some MSS. have that reading. He also punctuates thus: ‘poterat dixisse, triens?’ For ‘at haec’ Bentley reads ‘an.’ Orelli says truly there is more indignation in ‘at.’

332. linenda cedro] Books were smeared with oil of cedar to keep them from the insects. ‘Capsae cupressinae,’ ‘book-cases of cypress-wood,’ were costly, and would only be used for valuable books.

337. Omne supervacuum] Bentley suspends this verse and puts it in brackets: I cannot tell why. He thinks it tame and obscure. It is at any rate very true that when the mind is full it discards all super-fuous words when expressing its meaning:
it has no room for superfluities; as in a vessel that is full, if you pour more it runs over and escapes. As to ‘supervacuum’ see
C. ii. 20. 24, n.
Neu pransae Lamiae vivum puerum extrahat alvo.
Centuriae seniorum agitant expertia frugis,
Celsi practereun austera poëmata Ramnes:
Omne tulit punctum qui miseuit utile dulei,
Lectorem delectando pariterque monendo;
Hic meret aera liber Sosiis; hic et mare transit
Et longum noto scriptori prorogat aeum.
Sunt delicta tamen quibus ignovisse velimus;
Nam neque chorda sonum reddit quem vult manus et mens,
Poscentique gravem persaepe remittit acutum;
Nec semper feriet quodqueunque minabitur arcus.
Verum ubi plura nitent in carmine non ego paucis
Offendar maculis, quas aut incuria fudit
Aut humana parum cavit natura. Quid ergo est?
Ut scriptor si peccat idem librarius usque
Quamvis est monitus venia caret; ut citharoedus
Ridetur chorda qui semper oberrat eadem:
Sic mihi qui multum cessat fit Chorœilus ille,
Quem bis terve bonum cum risu miror; et idem
Indignor quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus;
(Verum operi longo fas est obrepere somnum.)
Ut pictura poësis: erit quae si propius stes
Te capiat magis, et quaedam si longius abstes.
Haec amat obscurum, volet haec sub luce videri,
Judicis argutum quae non formidat acumen;
Haec placuit semel, haec decies repetita placebit.
O major juvenum, quamvis et voce paterna
Fingeris ad rectum et per te sapis, hoc tibi dictum

340. Neu pransae Lamiae ] 'Lamiae' were hags, ogresses, who had the reputation of devouring children. (See Epp. i. 13. 10, n.)

341. Centuriae seniorum ] This language is taken from the 'classes' or 'centuriae' of Servius Tullius. Those who were more than forty-five were classed with the 'seniores.' The grave seniors like no poetry that has not something profitable and instructive in it. The Ramnes were the highest of the three centuries of equites which Romulus is said to have formed. They were patricians, and Horace calls them 'celsi,' 'proud.' The distinction of the original tribes had ceased to exist; and why the Ramnes are mentioned in opposition to the 'centuriae seniorum,' as young men to old, I do not know.

343. Omne tulit punctum ] 'He carries every vote.' See Epp. ii. 2. 99, n.; and as to the Sosii see Epp. i. 20. 2, n.

353. Quid ergo est? 'What are we to say then?' The expression occurs in Cicero sometimes, as in the speech pro P. Quintio, c. 18.

354. scripotor—librarius ] 'Scripotor' is the 'scriba.' See Epp. ii. 2. 5, n.

366. O major juvenum; Acron says his name was Lucius, which so far as it goes is against one of the theories mentioned in the Introduction. There were two sons, and both 'juvenes;' both must have taken the 'toga virilis.'
Tolle memor, certis medium et tolerabile rebus
Recte concedi. Consultus juris et actor
Causarum mediocris abest virtute diserti
Messallae nec scit quantum Cascellius Aulus,
Sed tamen in pretio est: mediocribus esse poëtis
Non homines, non di, non concessere columnae.
Ut gratas inter mensas symphonia discors
Et crassum unguentum et Sardo cum melle papaver
Offendunt, poterat duci quia coena sine istis:
Sic animis natum inventumque poëma juvandis,
Si paulum summo decessit vergit ad imum.
Ludere qui nescit campestribus abstinet armis,
Indoctusque pilae discive trochive quiescit,
Ne spissae risum tollant impune coronae:
Qui nescit versus tamen audet fingere. Quidni?
Liber et ingenuus, praesertim census equestrem
Summam nummorum vitioque remotus ab omni.
Tu nihil invita dices faciesve Minerva;
Id tibi judicium est, ea mens. Si quid tamen olim
Scripsoris in Maecii descendat judicis aures
Et patris et nostras, nonumque prematur in annum,
Membranis intus positis: delere licebit
Quod non edideris; nescit vox missa reverti.
Silvestres homines sacer interpresque deorum

369. Consul tus juris et actor Causar um]
See S. i. 1. 9, n. As to Messala see C. iii.
21. A. Cascellius was a jurisconsultus. The little that is known of him is given in the Dict. Biol. He must have been alive when this poem was written, but very old. The names are inverted. See C. ii. 2. 2, n.
373. non concessere columnae.] That is, the booksellers' stalls. See S. i. 4.
71, n.
375. Sardo cum melle] Sardinian and Corsican honeys appear to have been of inferior quality. See S. ii. 2. 15, n. It appears poppy-seeds roasted and mixed with honey were served in early times at the second course. (Pliny xix. 8. 53.) 9, n. 'Coronae' are the crowds of spectators standing round to watch the games.
383. census equestrem Summam] 'Census' is a participle. His property was not less than 400,000 sesterces. See Epod. iv.
15, n.; Epp. i. 1. 57, n.
385. Tu nihil invita—Minerva;] See
S. ii. 2. 3. The expression is proverbial.
Cicero explains it: 'invita ut aiunt Minerva;
id est adversante et repugnante natura'
(de Off. i. 31).
387. in Maecii descendat judicis aures]
As to Sp. Maecius Tarpa see S. i. 10. 38, n.
391. Silvestres homines] Horace goes on to ascribe the noblest results to the cultivation of true poetry; the civilization of mankind (represented under the legend of Orpheus taming wild beasts), the building of cities, the enactment of laws, and the ordering of society. 'The Thracian singer Orpheus is unquestionably the darkest point in the entire history of the early Grecian poetry, on account of the scantiness of the accounts respecting him which have been preserved in the more ancients writers—the lyric poets Ibycus and Pindar, the historians Hellenicus and Pherecydes, and the Athenian tragedians containing the first express testimonies of his name. This deficiency is ill supplied by the multitude of marvellous stories concerning him which occur in later Caedibus et victu foedo deterruit Orpheus, Dicitus ob hoc lenire ligres rabidosque leones; Dicitus et Amphion, Thebanae conditior arcis, Saxa movere sono testudinis et preee blanda. Ducere quo vellet. Fuit haec sapientia quondam, Publica privatis secernere, sacra profanis, Concubitu prohibere vago, dare jura maritis, Oppida moliri, leges incidere ligno: Sic honor et nomen divinis vatibus atque Carminibus venit. Post hos insignis Homerus Tyrtaeusque mares animos in Martia bella Versibus exacuit; dictae per carmina sortes; Et vitae monstrata via est; et gratia regum writers, and by the poems and fragments that are extant under the name of Orpheus. The name of Orpheus and the legends respecting him are intimately connected with the idea and the worship of a Dionysus dwelling in the infernal regions (Zagreis), and the foundation of this worship (which was connected with the Eleusian mysteries), together with the composition of hymns and songs for its initiations (παλαται), was the earliest function ascribed to him. Nevertheless, under the influence of various causes the fame of Orpheus grew so much that he was considered as the first minstrel of the heroic age, was made the companion of the Argonauts, and the marvels which music and poetry wrought on a rude and simple generation were chiefly described under his name” (Müller, Lit. Gr. i. 25, sq.). Compare C. i. 12, 7, sqq.

394. Amphion, Thebanae conditor arcis.] This legend is mentioned in C. iii. II. 2: “Movit Amphion lapides canendo.” It is not noticed by Homer, who only knew Cadmus as founder of Thebes. “To reconcile the conflicting pretensions of Zethus and Amphion with those of Cadmus as founders of Thebes, Pausanias supposes that the latter was the original settler of the hill of the Cadmeia, while the two former extended the settlement to the lower city (ix. 5. 1–3)” (Grote, Hist. Gr. vi. p. 359, n.). Plutarch (de Musica, c. 3) mentions that at Sicyon Amphion was looked upon as the first composer of poetry and harp-music.

397. Publica privatis—sacra profanis.] This is a fundamental division of things (‘res’) in the Roman law. See Gaius ii. § 1, &c. See also Dict. Ant. art. ‘Dominium.’
Pieriis tentata modis; ludusque repertus

Et longorum operum finis: ne forte pudori

Sit tibi Musa lyrae solvers et cantor Apollo.

Natura fieret laudabile carmen an arte

Quaesitum est: ego nec studium sine divite vena

Nec rude quid possit video ingenium; alterius sic

Altera poscit opem res et conjurat amice.

Qui studet optatam cursu contingere metam

Multa tulit fecitque puer, sudavit et alsit,

Abstinuit venere et vino; qui Pythia cantat

Tibicen didicit prius extimuitque magistrum.

Nec satis est dixisse: "Ego mira poëmata pango;

Occupet extremum scabies; mihi turpe relinqui est

Et quod non didici sane nescire fateri."

Ut praeco, ad merces turbam qui cogit emendas,

Assentatores jubet ad lucrum ire poëta

405. Pieriis tentata modis: The country of Pieria lay between Macedonia and Thessalia, north of the range of Olympus, and on the coast of the Sinus Thermaicus. This accounts for the Muses being both Pierian and Olympian. Müller (p. 27) says that the Pierians lived up to the time of the Doric and Aëolic migrations in Boootia and Phocis, near the mountain ranges of Helicon in the former and Parnassus in the latter. Whence he supposes that to the Pierians is to be traced the origin of Greek poetry, and that to this is to be attributed the association of the Muses with Helicon and Parnassus. He thus also accounts for the traditions which assigned the birth of poetry to bards of Thrace (v. 400, n.), a country of which the language was pronounced barbarous by the civilized Greeks: for "when the Pierians were pressed in their own territory by the early Macedonian princes, some of them crossed the Strymon into Thrace proper" (Herod. vii. 112). "It is however quite conceivable (Müller adds, and perhaps he had better have been content with this) that in early times, on account of their close vicinity, or because all the north was comprehended under one name, the Pierians might in Southern Greece have been called Thracians. These Pierians, from the intellectual relations which they maintained with the Greeks, appear to be a Grecian race; which supposition is also confirmed by the Greek names of their places, rivers, fountains, &c." Further observations will be found in the same work showing the probable connexion between these Pierians and the Epic poetry of Homer.

406. Et longorum operum finis: The rural Dionysia (v. 275, n.), called tά καρ' ἀγροὺς or tά μικρά, took place at the end of the year, in the month Ἑνετῶν, when the labours of the vintage were over.

408. Natura fieret laudabile: See v. 295, n.

413. Multa tulit fecitque puer: 'He takes great pains when he is young,' 'puer' being emphatic, as in C. i. 9. 16.

414. qui Pythia cantat Tibicen: At the Pythian games there was a musical contest in which flute-players and harp-players took part, the subject being the contest of Apollo with the serpent Python. The name given to this music was νόμος Πυθικός.

416. Nec satis est dixisse: All the editions till Bentley have 'nunc.' He edited 'nec' from two MSS., which have since been confirmed by others, and among them by Orelli's St. Gallen. I prefer 'nec,' though the Scholiasts certainly had 'nunc,' and that has most authority. Comm. Cruq. explains it "Satis est nostris poëtis ut dicant," which must be the meaning if 'nunc' is retained.

417. Occupet extremum scabies: The Scholiasts say this expression was used by boys in their races.

419. Ut praeco: See S. i. 6. 86, n.
Dives agris, dives positis in fenore nummis.
Si vero est unctum qui recte ponere possit
Et spondere levi pro paupere et eripere atris
Litibus implicitum, mirabor si sciet inter-Noscere mendacem verumque beatus amicum.
Tu seu donaris seu quid donare voles cui,
Nolito ad versus tibi factos ducere plenum
Laetitia; clamabit enim Pulchre! bene! recte!
Pallescet super his, etiam stillabit amicis
Ex oculis rorem, saliet, tundet pede terram.
Ut qui conducti plorant in funere dicunt
Et faciunt prope plura dolentibus ex animo, sic Derisor vero plus laudatore movetur.
Reges dicuntur multis urgere culullis
Et torquere mero quem perspexisse laborant,
An sit amicitia dignus: si carmina condes
Nunquam te fallant animi sub vulpe latentes.
Quintilio si quid recitares, "Corrige sodes
Hoc," aiebat, "et hoc:" melius te posse negares
Bis terque expertum frustra, delere jubebatis
Et male tornatos incudi reddere versus.
Si defendere delictum quam vertere malles,
Nullum ultra verbum aut operam insumebat inanem
Quin sine rivali teque et tua solus amares.
Vir bonus et prudens versus reprehendet inertes,
Culpabit duros, incomptis adlinet atrum

422. unctum qui recte ponere possit] 'Who can put a good dinner before one handsomely.' As to 'spondere' see S. ii. 6. 23, n. 'Levi paupere' is a poor man whose name has as little weight as his purse. 'Atris' is 'melancholy,' as "minnentur atrae Carmine curae" (C. iv. 11. 35). Bentley need not have changed it to 'artis,' though one or two MSS. support him. As to 'beatus' see C. i. 4. 14, n.

431. Ut qui conducti] See S. i. 6. 43, n.

434. culullis] This the Scholiasts (on C. i. 31. 11) say was the name of earthenware cups used by the pontifices and Vestal Virgins. It was afterwards used generally for drinking-cups. With 'torquere mero' compare Epp. i. 18. 38, "et vino tortus et ira."

437. animi sub vulpe latentes.] 'If you ever write poetry do not be taken in by flatterers, who have a bad heart under a cunning face.'

441. Et male tornatos incudi reddere] The metaphors of the turning lathe and the anvil are common enough for the composition of verses, as Bentley has shown. But alleging that the lathe and anvil have no business to be together, he proposes, in the longest of all his notes, and edits with no authority, 'ter natos,' referring to Epp. ii. 1. 233, "incultis qui versibus et male natis." The verse is much better in my opinion as it stands. The lathe was used by the ancients in the polishing and turning of metals as well as of wood and ivory, as Fea shows against Bentley, who affirms that such is not the case.
Traverso calamo signum, ambitiosa recidet
Ornamenta, parum claris lucem dare coget,
Arguet ambigue dictum, mutanda notabit,
Fiet Aristarchus; non dicit: "Cur ego amicum 450
Offendam in nugis?" Hae nugae seria ducent
In mala derisum semel exceptumque sinestre.
Ut mala quem sebies aut morbus regius urget
Aut fanaticus error et iracunda Diana,
Vesanum tetigisse timent fugiuntque poëtam 455
Qui sapiunt; agitant pueri incautique sequuntur.
Hic, dum sublimis versus ructatur et errat,
Si veluti merulis intentus decidit auceps
In puteum foveamve, licet, "Suecurrite," longum
Clamet, "Io cives!" non sit qui tollere curet.
Si curet quis opem ferre et demittere funem,
"Qui scis an prudens huc se projecerit atque Servari nolit?" dicam, Siculique poëtæ
Narrabo interitum. Deus immortalis haberi
Dum cupit Empedocles, ardentem frigidus Aetnam 465
Insiluit. Sit jus liecatque perire poëtis:
Invitum qui servat idem facit occidenti.

450. Fiet Aristarchus;] Aristarchus, whose name was proverbial among the ancients as a critic, was born in Samothracia about B.C. 730. He passed the greater part of his life at Alexandria under the patronage of Ptolemaeus Philopator, Epiphanes, and Philometer, the second of whom he educated.

453. morbus regius] This, which is otherwise called 'arquantus morbus,' 'aurugo,' and by the Greeks ἱκτερος, is the jaundice. Celsius says it is so called because the remedies resorted to were chiefly amusements and indulgences to keep up the spirits, such as none but the rich could afford. (See Pliny xxii, 24, § 53.) No disorder depresses the spirits more than jaundice. Here it is supposed to be infectious, which it is not.

454. Aut fanaticus error] 'Fanaticus' (from 'fanum') was properly applied to the priests of Bellona. See S. ii. 3. 223, n., and Juvenal iv. 123, 'fanaticus oestro Percussus, Bellona, tuo.' Juvenal also applies it to the priests of Cybele (ii. 112), 'crine senex fanaticus albo, Sacrum antistes.' The influence of the moon ('iracunda Diana') in producing mental derangement is one of the earliest fallacies in medicine. The Greeks called persons supposed to be so affected σελήνακοι.

455. tetigisse timent] 'The wise avoid him as if he were infectious; fools run after him like children after a crazy man in the streets.'

459. longum Clamet,] This is like Homer's μακρὸν ἄυστο (II. iii. 81).

464. Deus immortalis haberi] See Epp. i. 12. 20. There are various marvellous stories told of the death of Empedocles, suited to the character he bore in his life, of a magician, a controller of the elements, &c. "According to the most probable of these discrepant statements, being at last expelled his native city (Agrigentum), he retired to the Peloponnesus, and there brought his marvellous existence to a close. This story is from Timaeus, in whose history Empedocles is frequently mentioned. The statement of his death in Aetna can be traced back to Herachides Ponticus, a very insufficient authority, and who believed in it" (Ritter, Hist. Anc. Phil. i. 492).

467. Invitum qui servet] See Epp. i.
Nec semel hoc fecit, nec si retractus orit jam
Fiet homo et ponet famosae mortis amorem.
Nec satis apparebit versus factitet, utrum
Minxerit in patrios cineres, an triste bidental
Moverit incestus: certe furit ac velut ursus
Objectos caveae valuit si frangere clathros,
Indoctum doctumque fugat recitator acerbus;
Quem vero arripuit tenet occiditque legendo,
Non missura cutem nisi plena cruris hirudo.

20. 15, n. This is apparently a proverb.
Seneca has the same (Phoen. 100): “occidere est vetare cupientem mori.” The construction of ‘idem occidenti’ is Greek, ταύτω τῷ ἀποκτείνοντι. Orelli observes that this is the only spondaic hexameter in Horace.

469. Fiet homo] He keeps up the allusion to Empedocles, saying that the frenzied poet is as resolved to rush to his fate (that is, into verse) as the philosopher was, and if you save him he will not drop his pretension to inspiration.

470. Nec satis apparebit] The crime for which he has been thus sent mad does not appear; whether it be for fouling his father’s grave or setting foot upon polluted ground.
‘Bidental’ was a spot struck by lightning,
so called from the sacrifice offered upon it for expiation. (See Forcell.) I agree with Orelli in taking ‘moverit’ in the sense of ‘violaverit,’ as in “Dianae non movenda numina” (Epod. xvii. 3). Some take it to mean the removal of the mark placed on the spot.
INDEX

I. CARMINUM LYRICORUM.

Aeli vetusto nobilis ab Lamo, C. iii. 17.
Aequum memento rebus in arduis, C. ii. 3.
Albi, ne doleas plus nimio memori, C. i. 33.
Altera jam teritur bellis civilibus aetas, Epod. xvi.
Angustam amice pamperiem pati, C. iii. 2.
At, o deorum quidquid in caelo regit, Epod. v.
Bacchum in remotis carmina rupibus, C. ii. 19.
Beatus ille, qui procul negotiiis, Epod. ii.
Caelo supinas si tuleris manus, C. iii. 23.
Caelo Tonantem credidimus Jovem, C. iii. 5.
Cum tu, Lydia, Telephi, C. i. 13.
Cur me querelis esanimas tuis, C. ii. 17.
Dive, quem proles Niobea magnae, C. iv. 6.
Donarem pateras grataque commodus, C. iv. 8.
Donee gratus eram tibi, C. iii. 9.
Extremum Tanain si biberes, Lyce, C. iii. 10.
Festo Nympharum fugientum amator, C. iii. 18.
Frigore nives, redeunt jam gramina campis, C. iv. 7.
Herculis ritu modo dictus, o plebs, C. iii. 14.
Horrida tempestas caelum contraxit et imbris, Epod. xiii.
Ibis Liburnis inter alta navium, Epod. i.
Icci, beatis nunc Arabum invides, C. i. 29.
Ille et nefasto te posuit die, C. ii. 13.
Impios parrae recinentis omen, C. iii. 27.
Integer vitae scelerisque purus, C. i. 22.
Intermissa, Venus, diu, C. iv. 1.
Jam jam effaci do manus scientiae, Epod. xvii.
Jam pausa aratro jugera regiae, C. ii. 15.
Jam satris terris nivis atque dirae, C. i. 2.
Jam veris comites, quae mare temperant, C. iv. 12.
Justum et tenacem propositi virum, C. iii. 3.
Laudabunt aliis clarum Rhodon aut Mitylenae, C. i. 7.
Lupis et agnis quanta sortito obtigit, Epod. iv.
Lydia, dic, per omnes, C. i. 6.
Maeceenas atavis edite regibus, C. i. 1.
Mala soluta navis exit alite, Epod. x.
Martis caelis quid agam Kalendis, C. iii. 8.
Mater saeva Cupidinium, C. i. 19.
Mercuri, facunde nepos Atlantis, C. i. 10.
Mercuri,—nam te docilis magistro, C. iii. 11.
INDEX CARMINUM.

Miserarum est neque amoris dare ludum neque dulci, C. iii. 12.
Mollis inertia cur tantam diffuderit imis, Epod. xiv.
Montium custos nemorumque, Virgo, C. iii. 22.
Motum ex Metello consule civicum, C. ii. 1.
Musis amicus tristitiam et metus, C. i. 26.
Natis in usum laetitiae scyphis, C. i. 27.
Ne forte credas interitura, quaes, C. iv. 9.
Ne sit ancilae tibi amor pudori, C. ii. 4.
Nolis longa ferac bella Numantiae, C. ii. 12.
Nondum subacta ferre jugum valet, C. ii. 5.
Non eur neque aureum, C. ii. 18.
Non semper imares nubibus hispidos, C. ii. 9.
Non usitata nec tenui ferar, C. ii. 20.
Non vides, quanto moveas periculo, C. iii. 20.
Nox erat et caelo fulgebat Luna sereno, Epod. xv.
Nullam, Vare, sacra vitis prius severis arborum, C. i. 18.
Nullus argento color est avaris, C. ii. 2.
Nunc est bibendum, nunc pede libero, C. i. 37.
O crudelis adhuc et Veneris munerebus potens, C. iv. 10.
O diva, gratum quae regis Antium, C. i. 35.
O fons Bandusiae, splendidior vitro, C. iii. 13.
O matre pulchra filia pulchrior, C. i. 16.
O nata mecum consule Manlio, C. iii. 21.
O navis, referent in mare te novi, C. i. 14.
O saepe mecum tempus in ultimum, C. ii. 7.
O Venus, regina Cnidi Paphique, C. i. 30.
Odi profanum vulgus et arceo, C. iii. 1.
Otium divos rogat in patente, C. ii. 16.
Parcius junctas quatiunt fenestras, C. i. 25.
Parcus deorum cultor et infrequens, C. i. 34.
Parentis olim si quis impia manu, Epod. iii.
Pastor cum traheret per freta navibus, C. i. 15.
Persicos odi, puer, apparatus, C. i. 38.
Petti, nihil me sicut antea juvat, Epod. xi.
Phoebe silvarumque potens Diana, Carm. Sec.
Phoebus volentem proeliat me loqui, C. iv. 15.
Pindarum quisquis studet aemulari, C. iv. 2.
Poscimur. Si quid vacui sub umbra, C. i. 32.
Qualem ministrum fulminis alitem, C. iv. 4.
Quando repostum Caecubum ad festas dapes, Epod. ix.
Quantum distet ab Inacho, C. iii. 19.
Quem tu, Melpomene, semel, C. iv. 3.
Quem virum aut heroa lyra vel acri, C. i. 12.
Quid bellicosus Cantaber et Scythes, C. ii. 11.
Quidque deductum poscit Apollinem, C. i. 31.
Quid fles, Asterie, quem tibi candidi, C. iii. 7.
Quid immemores hospites vexas, canis, Epod. vi.
Quid tibi vis, mulier nigris dignissima barris, Epod. xii.
Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus, C. i. 24.
Quis multa gracilis te puer in rosa, C. i. 5.
Quo me, Bacche, rapis tu? C. iii. 25.
Quo, quo scelesti ruidis? aut cur dexteris, Epod. vii.
Rectius vives, Licini, neque altum, C. ii. 10.
Rogare longo putidam te seculo, Epod. viii.
Scriberis Vario fortis et hostium, C. i. 6.
Septimi, Gades aditure mecum et, C. ii. 6.
Sic te diva potens Cypri, C. i. 3.
Solvitur acris hiems grata vice veris et Favoni, C. i. 4.
Te maris et terrae numeroque carentis arenae, C. i. 28.
Tu ne quassesiris, scire nefas, quem mihi, quem tibi, C. i. 11.
Tyrrena regum progenies, tibi, C. iii. 29.
INDEX SATIRARUM ET EPISTOLARUM. 733

Ulla si juris tibi pejorati, C. ii. 8.
Uxor pauperis Ibyci, C. iii. 15.
Velox amoenum saepe Lucretili, C. i. 17.
Vides, ut alta stet nive candidum, C. i. 9.
Vile potabis modicum Sabinum, C. i. 20.
Vitas hinnuleo me similis, Chloë, C. i. 23.

II. SATIRARUM.

Ambubaia rum collegia, pharmacopoea, lib. i. 2.
Egressum magna me exceptit Aricia Roma, lib. i. 5.
Eupolis atque Cratinus Aristophanesque poetae, lib. i. 4.
Hoc erat in votis: modus agri non ita magnus, lib. ii. 6.
Hoc quoque, Tiresia, prater narrata petenti, lib. ii. 5.
Ibam forte via Sacra, sicut meus est mos, lib. i. 9.
Jandumum ausculto et cuipiens tibi dicere servus, lib. ii. 7.
Nempe incomposite dixi pede currere versus, lib. i. 10.
Non quia, Maecenas, Lydorum quidquid Etruscis, lib. i. 6.
Olim truncus eram ficulnum, infiile lignum, lib. i. 8.
Omnibus hoc vitium est cantoribus, inter amicos, lib. i. 3.
Proscripti Regis Rupili pus atque venerm, lib. i. 7.
Quae virtus et quanta, boni, sit vivere parvo, lib. ii. 2.
Qui fit, Maecenas, ut nemo, quam sibi sortem, lib. i. 1.
Sic raro scribis, ut toto non quater anno, lib. ii. 3.
Sunt, quibus in satira videor nimis acer et ultra, lib. ii. 1.
Unde et quo Catius? Non est mihi tempus aventi, lib. ii. 4.
Ut Nasidieni juvit te coena beati, lib. ii. 8.

III. EPISTOLARUM.

Albi, nostrorum sermonum candide judex, lib. i. 4.
Celso gaudere et bene rem gerere Albinovano, lib. i. 8.
Cum tot sustinces et tanta negotia solus, lib. ii. 1.
Flore, bono daroque fidelis amice Neroni, lib. ii. 2.
Fructibus Agrippae Siculis, quos colligis, Icui, lib. i. 12.
Humano capiti cervicem pictor equinam, A. P.
Juli Flore, quibus terrarum militet oris, lib. i. 3.
Ne perconteris, fundus meus, optimum Quincti, lib. i. 16.
Nil admirari prope res est una, Numici, lib. i. 6.
Prima dicte mihi, summa dicende Camena, lib. i. 1.
Prisco si credis, Maecenas docte, Cratino, lib. i. 19.
Quae sit hiems Veliae, quod caelum, Vala, Salerni, lib. i. 15.
Quamvis, Scæva, satis per te tibi consulis et scis, lib. i. 17.
Quid tibi visa Chios, Ballati, notaque Lesbos, lib. i. 11.
Quinque dies tibi pollicitus me rure futurum, lib. i. 7.
Septimius, Claudii, nimirum intelligit unus, lib. i. 9.
Si bene te novi, metues, liberemine Lolli, lib. i. 18.
Si potes Archias conviva recumbere lectis, lib. i. 5.
Trojani bellis scriptorem, maxime Lolli, lib. i. 2.
Urbis amatorum Fuscum salvere jubemus, lib. i. 10.
Ut proficiscat Bococi te saepe diuque, lib. i. 13.
Vertumnum Janumque, liber, spectare videris, lib. i. 20.
Vilice silvarum et mihi me reddentis agelli, lib. i. 14.
INDEX
NOMINUM PROPRIORUM.

(This Index is taken from the last Edition of Orelli.)

A.

Abydus et Sestus, Epp. i. 3. 4.
Academus, Epp. ii. 2. 45.
Achaeus (al. Attius), Sat. i. 10. 53; Epp. ii. 1. 56; Art. Poët. 255.
Achaemenes, C. ii. 12. 21.
Achaemenius, C. iii. 1. 44; Epod. xiii. 8.
Achaicus, C. i. 15. 35; C. iv. 3. 5.
Acheron, C. i. 3. 36; C. iii. 3. 16.
Acherontia, C. iii. 4. 14.
Achilles, C. i. 6. 6; C. i. 8. 14; C. ii. 4. 4; C. ii. 16. 29; C. iv. 6. 4; ibid. ver. 6; Epod. xiii. 12; Epod. xvii. 8; ibid. ver. 14; Sat. i. 7. 12; Sat. ii. 3. 193; Epp. i. 2. 12; Epp. ii. 2. 42; Art. Poët. 120.
Achivi, C. iii. 3. 27; C. iv. 6. 18; Sat. ii. 3. 194; Epp. i. 2. 14; Epp. ii. 1. 33.
Acrisius, C. iii. 16. 5.
Acrocerania, C. i. 3. 20.
Actius, Epp. i. 18. 61.
Adria, Vide Hadria.
Aescus, C. ii. 13. 22; C. iii. 10. 3; C. iv. 8. 25.
Aegaeum, C. ii. 16. 2; C. iii. 29. 63; Epp. i. 11. 16.
Aeolus (L) Lamia, vide Lamia, C. i. 26. 8; C. iii. 17. 1.
Aemilius (L) Paullus, Vide Paullus.
Aeneas, C. iv. 6. 23; C. iv. 7. 15; C. iv. 15. 32; Carm. Sec. 42; Sat. ii. 5. 63.
Aeolus, C. ii. 13. 24; C. iii. 30. 13; C. iv. 3. 12; C. iv. 9. 12.
Aeolus, C. i. 3. 3.
Aeschylius, Epp. ii. 1. 163; Art. Poët. 279.
Aesopus, Sat. ii. 3. 239; Epp. ii. 1. 82.
Aesula, C. iii. 29. 6.
Aethiops, C. iii. 6. 14.
Aetna, C. iii. 4. 76; Epod. xvii. 33; Art. Poët. 465.
Aetolus, Epp. i. 18. 46.
Afer, Afri, C. ii. 1. 26; C. ii. 16. 33; C. iii. 3. 47; C. iv. 4. 42; Epod. ii. 53; Sat. ii. 4. 58; Sat. ii. 8. 95.
Afranius, Epp. ii. 1. 57.

| Africa, C. ii. 18. 5; C. iii. 16. 31; C. iv. 8. 13; Sat. ii. 3. 87. |
| Africanus (Scipio Minor), Epod. ix. 25. |
| Africas, C. i. 1. 15; C. i. 3. 12; C. i. 14. 5; C. iii. 23. 5; C. iii. 29. 57; Epod. xvi. 22. |
| Agave, Sat. ii. 3. 303. |
| Agenor, C. iii. 27. 34. |
| Agrippa, C. i. 6. totum; Sat. ii. 3. 185; Epp. i. 6. 26; Epp. i. 12. 1; ibid. ver. 26. |
| Agrius, C. iv. 6. 25. |
| Ajax, C. i. 15. 19; C. ii. 4. 5; Sat. ii. 3. 167; ibid. ver. 193; ibid. ver. 201; ibid. ver. 211. |
| —— Ollie, Epod. x. 14. |
| Albanum vinum, C. iv. 11. 2; Sat. ii. 8. 16. |
| Albanus, C. iii. 23. 11; C. iv. 1. 19; Carm. Sec. 54; Sat. ii. 4. 72; Epp. i. 7. 10; Epp. ii. 1. 27. |
| Albinovanus Celsus, Epp. i. 8. tota. |
| Albinus, Art. Poët. 327. |
| Albinus, Sat. i. 4. 28; ibid. ver. 109. |
| —— Tibullus, C. i. 33. 1; ibid. ver. 2; Epp. i. 4. 1. (Vide totam Epistolam.) |
| Albunea, C. i. 7. 12. |
| Albutius, Sat. ii. 1. 48; Sat. ii. 2. 67. |
| Alcaeus, C. i. 32. 5; C. ii. 13. 27; C. iv. 9. 7; Epp. i. 19. 29; Epp. ii. 2. 99. |
| Alcides (Hercules), C. i. 12. 25. |
| Alcinous, Epp. i. 2. 28. |
| Alcon, Sat. ii. 6. 15. |
| Alexandrea, C. iv. 14. 35. |
| Alfenius, Sat. i. 3. 130. |
| Alfius, Epod. ii. 67. |
| Algidus, C. i. 21. 6; C. iii. 23. 9; C. iv. 4. 58; Carm. Sec. 69. |
| Allifanus, Sat. ii. 8. 39. |
| Allobroges, Epod. xvi. 6. |
| Alpes, C. iv. 4. 17; C. iv. 14. 12; Epod. i. 11; Sat. ii. 5. 41. |
| Alpinus (M. Furius Bibaculus), Sat. i. 10. 36. |
| Alyattes, C. iii. 16. 41. |
INDEX NOMINUM PROPRIORUM. 735

Amazonius, C. iv. 4. 20.
Amor, C. i. 18. 14.
——, C. ii. 11. 7; C. iii. 12. 4; C. iii. 27. 68.
Amphiaraus, C. iii. 16. 12.
Amphion, C. iii. 11. 2; Epp. i. 13. 41; ibid. ver. 44; Art. Poët. 394.
Amymantas, Epod. xii. 18.
Anacreon, C. iv. 9. 9; Epod. xiv. 10.
Anchises, C. iv. 13. 31; Carm. Sec. 50.
Ancyra (Marcus), C. iv. 7. 15; Epp. i. 6. 27.
Andromeda, C. iii. 29. 17.
Anilo, C. i. 7. 13.
Annibal. Vide Hannibal.
Antea sive Stenoboea, C. iii. 7. 13.
Antenor, Epp. i. 2. 9.
Anticyra, Sat. ii. 3. 63; ibid. ver. 166; Art. Poët. 300.
Antiochus, C. iii. 6. 36.
Antiphates, Art. Poët. 145.
Antium, C. i. 35 1.
Antonius (Tulus), C. iv. 2; ibid. ver. 26.
——, (M.), triumvir, Sat. i. 5. 33; Epod. ix. 29. —— Musa, Epp. i. 15. 3.
Anxur, Sat. i. 5. 26.
Anystus, Sat. ii. 4. 3.
Aphella, Sat. i. 5. 100.
Apelles, Epp. ii. 1. 230.
Apenninus, Epod. xvi. 29.
Appolinarius, C. iv. 2. 9.
Apollo, vide etiam Agyiens, Phoebus, C. i. 2. 32; C. i. 7. 3; ibid. ver. 28; C. i. 10. 12; C. i. 16. 6; C. i. 21. 2; ibid. ver. 10; C. i. 31. 1; C. ii. 10. 20; C. iii. 4. 64; C. iv. 6, totum; ibid. ver. 37; Carm. Sec. 34; Epod. xv. 9; Sat. i. 9. 78; Sat. ii. 5. 60; Epp. i. 3. 17; Epp. i. 16. 59; Epp. ii. 1. 216; Art. Poët. 407.
Appia via, Epod. iv. 14; Sat. i. 5. 6.
Appius, Sat. i. 5. 3; Epp. i. 6. 26; Epp. i. 18. 20.
——, Sat. i. 6. 20.
Aprillis, C. iv. 11. 16.
Apulia, C. iii. 4. 10; Epod. iii. 16; Sat. i. 5. 77.
Apulicus, C. iii. 24. 4.
Apulus, C. iii. 33. 7; C. iii. 4. 8; C. iii. 5. 9; C. iii. 16. 26; C. iv. 14. 26; Epod. ii. 42; Sat. ii. 1. 34; ibid. ver. 38.
Aquarius, Sat. i. 1. 36.
Aquilo, C. i. 3. 13; C. ii. 9. 6; C. iii. 10. 4; C. iii. 30. 3; Epod. x. 7; Epod. xii. 3; Sat. ii. 6. 25; Sat. ii. 8. 56; Art. Poët. 64.
Aquinas, Epp. i. 10. 27.
Arabes, C. i. 29. 1; C. i. 35. 40; C. ii. 12. 24; C. iii. 24. 2; Epp. i. 6. 6; Epp. i. 7. 36.
Arabuscula, Sat. i. 10. 77.
——, Sat. i. 11. 7; C. iii. 12. 4; C. iii. 27. 68.
Armillensis, Epod. v. 42.
Aristarchus Samothracius, Art. Poët. 450.
Aristippus, Sat. ii. 3. 100; Epp. i. 1. 18; Epp. i. 17. 14; ibid. ver. 29.
Aristius Fuscus, C. i. 22. 4; Sat. i. 9. 61; Sat. i. 10. 83; Epp. i. 10. 10, tota; ibid. ver. 1.
Aristophanes, Sat. i. 4. 1.
Armenius, C. ii. 9. 4; Epp. i. 12. 27.
Arrius (Q.), Sat. ii. 3. 86; ibid. ver. 243.
Asella Vinnieus, Epp. i. 13, tota.
Assur, Sat. i. 7. 19; ibid. ver. 24; Epp. i. 3. 5.
Asina, Epp. i. 13. 8.
Asinus Pollio, vide etiam Pollio, C. ii. 1, totum; Sat. i. 10. 42; ibid. ver. 85.
Assaracus, Epod. xiii. 13.
Assyrus, C. ii. 11. 16; C. iii. 4. 32; Art. Poët. 113.
Astitius, C. iii. 7. 1.
Atabulus, Sat. i. 5. 78.
Athenea, C. i. 7. 5; Sat. i. 1. 64; Sat. ii. 7. 13; Epp. ii. 1. 213; Epp. ii. 2. 43; ibid. ver. 81.
Atlancteus, C. i. 34. 11.
Atlanticus, C. i. 31. 14.
Atlas, C. i. 10. 1.
Atreus, Art. Poët. 166.
Atries et Atridae, C. i. 10. 13; C. ii. 4. 7; Sat. ii. 3. 187; ibid. ver. 203; Epp. i. 2. 12; Epp. i. 7. 43.
Atta (T. Quinctius), Epp. ii. 1. 79.
Attaicus, C. i. 1. 12; Epp. ii. 11. 5.
Attalus, C. ii. 13. 5.
Atticus, C. i. 3. 6; Sat. ii. 8. 13.
Attilius Regulus. Vide Regulus.
Auctumnus, C. iv. 7. 11; Epod. ii. 18; Sat. ii. 6. 19.
Aulus, Sat. ii. 4. 24.
——, Luscus, Sat. i. 5. 34.
Aulus, C. iii. 30. 10; C. iv. 9. 2; C. iv. 14. 25; Sat. i. 1. 58.
Caius (C. Liciinus), Sat. i. 10. 19.
Camena, C. i. 12. 39; C. ii. 16. 39; C. iii. 4. 21; C. iv. 6. 27; C. iv. 9. 8; Carm. Sec. 62; Sat. i. 10. 45; Epp. i. 1. 1; Epp. i. 18. 47; Epp. i. 19. 5; Art. Poët. 275.
Camillus (M. Furius), C. i. 12. 42; Epp. i. 1. 64.
Campanus, Sat. i. 5. 45; ibid. ver. 62; Sat. i. 6. 118; Sat. ii. 3. 144; Sat. ii. 8. 56.
Campus Martius, conf.Martius, C. iii. 11; C. iii. 7. 26; Sat. i. 1. 91; Sat. i. 6. 126; Sat. ii. 3. 55; Epp. i. 7. 59; Epp. i. 11. 4.
Canicula, C. i. 17. 17; C. iii. 13. 9.
Canidia (Gratidia), Epod. iii. 8; Epod. v. 15; ibid. ver. 48; Epod. xvii.; Sat. i. 8. 24; ibid. ver. 48; Sat. ii. 1. 48; Sat. ii. 8. 95.
Canis, sidus, Epp. i. 10. 16.
——, Sat. i. 2. 56.
Cantaber, C. ii. 6. 2; C. ii. 11. 1; C. iii. 8. 22; C. iv. 14. 41; Epp. i. 12. 26.
Cantabricus, Epp. i. 18. 55.
Canusinus, Sat. i. 10. 30.
Canusium, Sat. i. 5. 91; Sat. ii. 3. 168.
Capito Fonteius, Sat. i. 5. 32.
Capitolium Petillius, Sat. i. 4. 94. 96; Sat. i. 10. 26.
Capitolium, C. i. 37. 6; C. iii. 3. 42; C. iii. 24. 45; C. iii. 30. 8; C. iv. 3. 9.
Cappadox, Epp. i. 6. 30.
Capra, C. iii. 7. 6.
Capricornus, C. ii. 17. 20.
Capritus, Sat. i. 4. 66.
Capua, Epod. xvi. 5; Sat. i. 5. 47; Epp. i. 11. 11.
Carinae, Epp. i. 7. 48.
Carpathus, C. i. 35. 8; C. iv. 5. 10.
Carthago. Vide Karthago.
Caspius, C. ii. 9. 2.
Cassandra, C. ii. 4. 8.
Cassinus Etruscus, Sat. i. 10. 62.
—— Parmensis, Epp. i. 4. 3.
—— Severus, Epod. vi.
Castalia, C. iii. 4. 61.
Castor et Pollux, C. i. 3. 2; C. i. 12. 25; C. iv. 5. 35; C. iv. 8. 31; Epod. xvii. 42; ibid. ver. 43; Sat. ii. 1. 26; Epp. ii. 1. 5.
——, gladiator, Epp. i. 18. 19.
Catia, Sat. i. 2. 95.
Catienus, Sat. ii. 3. 61.
Catilus, C. i. 18. 2.
Catius, Sat. ii. 4. 1; ibid. ver. 88.
Cato Censorius, C. ii. 15. 11; C. iii. 21. 11; Sat. i. 2. 32; Epp. ii. 2. 117; Art. Poët. 56.
—— Uticensis, C. i. 12. 35; C. ii. 1. 24; Epp. i. 19. 13.
Catullus, Sat. i. 10. 19.
Caucasus, C. i. 22. 7; Epod. i. 12.
Caudium, Sat. i. 5. 51.
Cecropius, C. ii. 1. 12; C. iv. 12. 6.
Celsus Albimianus, Epp. i. 3. 15; Epp. i. 8.
Censorinus (C. Marcians), C. iv. 8.
Centaureus, C. i. 18. 8.
Centaurus, C. iv. 2. 15; Epod. xiii. 11.
Cepheus, C. iii. 29. 17.
Ceraunia. Vide Aceracerunia.
Cerberus, C. ii. 13. 34; C. ii. 19. 29; ibid. ver. 31; C. iii. 11. 17.
Ceres, C. iii. 2. 26; C. iii. 24. 13; C. iv. 5. 18; Carm. Sec. 30; Epod. xvi. 43; Sat. ii. 1. 214; Sat. ii. 8. 14.
Cerinthus, Sat. i. 2. 81.
Cervius, Sat. ii. 1. 47.
——— alius, vicinus Horatii, Sat. ii. 6. 77.
Cethegus, Epp. ii. 2. 117; Art. Poët. 50.
Ceus, C. i. 1. 38; C. iv. 9. 7.
Charon, C. ii. 18. 34.
Charybdis, C. i. 27. 19; Art. Poët. 145.
chia, C. iv. 13. 7.
Chimaera, C. i. 27. 24; C. ii. 17. 13; C. iv. 2. 16.
Chios, Epp. i. 11. 1; ibid. ver. 21.
Chiron, Epod. xiii. 11.
Chius, C. iii. 19. 5; Epod. ix. 34; Sat. i. 10. 24; Sat. ii. 3. 115; Sat. ii. 2. 15. 46.
Chloe, C. i. 23. 1; C. iii. 7. 10; C. iii. 9. 6; ibid. ver. 9; ibid. ver. 19; C. iii. 26. 12.
Chloris, C. ii. 5. 18.
—— alia (uxor panperis Ibyci), C. iii. 15. 8.
Choerluss, Epp. ii. 1. 233; Art. Poët. 337.
Chremes, persona comica, Epod. i. 33; Sat. i. 10. 40; Art. Poët. 94.
Chrysipus, Sat. i. 3. 127; Sat. ii. 3. 44; ibid. ver. 297; Epp. i. 2. 4.
Cibyraticus, Epp. i. 6. 33.
Cicirrus Messius, Sat. i. 5. 52.
Cicuta, Sat. ii. 3. 69; ibid. ver. 175.
Cilianus Maecenas. Vide Maecenas.
Cinara, C. iv. 1. 4; C. iv. 13. 21; ibid. ver. 22; Epp. i. 7. 28; Epp. i. 14. 33.
Circaeus, Epod. i. 30.
Circe, C. i. 17. 20; Epod. xvii. 17; Epp. i. 2. 23.
Circellii, Sat. ii. 4. 33.
Circus, Sat. i. 6. 113; Sat. ii. 3. 183.
Clavius (Appius), Sat. i. 6. 21.
——— Nero (Tiberius), C. iv. 14. 14; ibid. ver. 29; Epp. i. 3. 2; Epp. i. 8. 2; Epp. i. 9; Epp. i. 12. 26; Epp. ii 2. 1.
———, adject., C. iv. 4. 73.
Clazomenae, Sat. i. 7. 5.
E.

Echionius, C. iv. 4. 64.

Edoni, C. ii. 7. 27.

Egeria, Sat. i. 2. 126.

Egnatia. Vide Gnatia.

Elegi, Art. Poët. 77.

Euleus, C. iv. 2. 17.

Empedocles, Epp. i. 12. 20; Art. Poët. 465.

Enceladus, C. iii. 4. 56.

Enipus, Asteriae amator, C. iii. 7. 23.

Ennius, C. iv. 8. 20; Sat. i. 10. 54; Epp. i. 10. 7; Epp. ii. 1. 50; Art. Poët. 56; ibid. 259.

Eons, C. i. 35. 31; Epp. ii. 51.

Equus Taticus, Sat. i. 5. 87.

Ephebus, C. i. 7. 2.

Ephialtes. Vide Otus.

Epicharmus, Epp. ii. 1. 58.

Epicturos, Epp. i. 4. 16.

Epidaurus, Sat. i. 3. 27.

Erycina (Venus), C. i. 2. 33.

Erymanthus, C. i. 21. 7.

Esquiliae, Sat. i. 8. 14; Sat. ii. 6. 33.

Esquiulina, Epp. v. 100; Epp. xii. 58.

Etruscius, C. i. 2. 14; C. iii. 29. 36; Carm. Sec. 38; Epp. xvi. 4; ibid. ver. 40; Sat. i. 6. 1; Sat. i. 10. 61.

Euastructures, Sat. i. 3. 91.

Euis, C. iii. 23. 9.

Euis, C. i. 18. 9; C. ii. 11. 17.

Eumenides, C. ii. 13. 36.

Eupolos, Sat. i. 4. 1; Sat. ii. 3. 12.

Europe, C. iii. 3. 47.

heroina, C. iii. 27. 25; ibid. ver. 57.

Eurus. Vide ad C. i. 25. 20; C. i. 28. 23; C. ii. 16. 24; C. iii. 17. 11; C. iv. 4. 43; C. iv. 6. 10; Epp. x. 5; Epp. xvi. 54.

Euterpe, C. i. 3. 33.

Eutrapelus (P. Volumnius), Epp. i. 18. 31.

F.

Fabia tribus, Epp. i. 6. 52.

Fabius, Sat. i. 1. 14; Sat. i. 2. 134.

Fabricius, C. i. 12. 40.

adject., Sat. ii. 3. 36.

Falernus et Falernum, C. i. 20. 10; C. i.

27. 10; C. ii. 3. 8; C. ii. 6. 19; C. ii. 11. 19; C. iii. 1. 43; Epp. iv. 13; Sat. i. 10. 24; Sat. ii. 2. 15; Sat. ii. 3. 115; Sat. ii. 4. 19; ibid. ver. 24; ibid. ver. 55; Sat. ii. 9. 16; Epp. i. 14. 34; Epp. i. 18. 91.

Faunus (Quadriatus), Sat. i. 4. 21; Sat. i. 10. 69.

Fatum, C. ii. 17. 24.

Faunus et Fauni, C. i. 4. 11; C. i. 17. 2; C. ii. 17. 28; C. iii. 18. 1; Epp. i. 19. 4; Art. Poët. 244.

Fausta, Sat. i. 2. 64.

Faustitas, C. iv. 5. 18.

Favonius, C. i. 4. 1; C. iii. 7. 2.

F. Vide ad C. i. 5. 55.

Febris, C. i. 3. 30.

Ferentinus, Epp. ii. 17. 8.

Feronia, Sat. i. 5. 24.

Fescenninus, Epp. ii. 1. 145.

Fidenae, Epp. i. 11. 8.

Fides, C. i. 18. 16; C. i. 24. 7; C. i. 35. 21; C. iv. 5. 20; Carm. Sec. 57.

Flaccus, vide Horatius, Epp. xiv. 12; Sat. ii. 1. 18.

Flavius, Sat. i. 6. 72.

Florus, vide Julius Florus, Epp. i. 3. 1; Epp. ii. 2. 1.

Folia, saga, Epp. d. 42.

Foncius Capito, Sat. i. 5. 32.

Forentum, C. iii. 4. 16.

Formiae, C. iii. 17. 6; Sat. i. 5. 37.

Formianus, C. i. 20. 11.

Fors, C. i. 9. 14.

Fortuna, C. i. 34. 15; C. i. 35. 1; C. ii. 1. 3; C. iii. 29. 49; C. iv. 14. 37; Epp. iv. 6; Sat. ii. 2. 126; Sat. ii. 6. 49; Sat. ii. 8. 61; Epp. i. 1. 69; Epp. i. 11. 20.

Forum Apoll, Sat. i. 5. 3.

—- Romanum, Sat. i. 6. 114; Epp. i. 7. 48.

Fufudius, Sat. i. 2. 12.

Fufius, Sat. ii. 3. 60.

Fulvius, Sat. ii. 7. 96.

Fundarius (C.), Sat. i. 10. 42; Sat. ii. 8. 19.

Fundi, Sat. i. 5. 34.

Furiae, C. i. 29. 17; Sat. i. 8. 45; Sat. ii. 3. 135; ibid. ver. 141.

Furius, Sat. iii. 1. 49.

— Bibacus, Sat. i. 10. 36; Sat. ii. 5. 41.

Furnius, Sat. i. 10. 86.

Furor, Epp. v. 92.

Fuscus Aristius, vide Aristius Fuscus, C. i. 22. 4; Sat. i. 9. 61; Sat. i. 10. 83; Epp. i. 10, tota.

G.

Gabii, Epp. ii. 11. 7; Epp. ii. 15. 9; Epp. ii. 1. 25; Epp. ii. 2. 3.

Gabinius, C. ii. 5.
INDEX

Gades, C. ii. 2. 11; C. ii. 6. 1.
Gaetulus, C. i. 23. 10; C. ii. 20. 15; C. iii. 20. 2; Epp. ii. 2. 181.
Galaceus, C. ii. 6. 10.
Galatea, C. iii. 27. 14.
Galba, Sat. i. 2. 48.
Galli (populus), Epod. ix. 18; Sat. ii. 1. 14.
—— (Cybeæ sacerdotes), Sat. i. 2. 121.
Gallicus, C. i. 8. 6; C. iii. 16. 35.
Gallina, Sat. ii. 6. 44.
Gallonius, Sat. ii. 2. 47.
Ganymedes, C. iii. 20. 16; C. iv. 4. 4.
Gargilius, Epp. i. 6. 58.
Gargonius, Sat. i. 2. 27; Sat. i. 4. 92.
Geloni, C. ii. 9. 23; C. ii. 20. 19; C. iii. 4. 35.
Genitalis, Carm. Sec. 16.
Germania, C. iv. 5. 26; Epod. xvi. 7.
Getae, C. iii. 21. 11; C. iv. 15. 22.
Gigantes, vide Tellus, C. ii. 19. 22; C. iii. 4. 43.
Giganteus, C. iii. 1. 7.
Glauceus, Sat. i. 7. 17.
Gloria, Sat. i. 6. 23; Epp. i. 18. 22; Epp. ii. 1. 177.
Glycera, C. i. 19. 5; C. i. 30. 3; C. iii. 19. 28.
——, Tibulli amica, C. i. 33. 2.
Glycon, Epp. i. 1. 30.
Gnatia, Sat. i. 5. 97.
Gnidius et Gnidos. Vide Cnidius et Cnidos.
Gnosius, vide Cnosius, C. i. 15. 17.
Gorgonius. Vide Gargonius.
Graccus, Epp. ii. 2. 89.
Graccia, C. i. 15. 6; C. iv. 5. 35; Epp. i. 2. 7; Epp. ii. 1. 93; ibid. ver. 156.
Graccius, C. i. 20. 2; C. iii. 24. 57; Sat. i. 5. 3; Sat. i. 7. 32; Sat. i. 10. 20; ibid. ver. 31; ibid. ver. 35; ibid. ver. 66; Sat. ii. 3. 100; Epp. ii. 1. 28; ibid. ver. 90; ibid. ver. 161; Epp. ii. 2. 7; Art. Poët. 53; ibid. 268; ibid. 286.
Graius, C. ii. 4. 12; C. ii. 16. 38; C. iv. 8. 4; Epod. x. 12; Epp. ii. 1. 19; Epp. ii. 2. 42; Art. Poët. 323.
Gratiae, C. i. 4. 6; C. i. 30. 6; C. iii. 19. 16; C. iii. 21. 22; C. iv. 7. 5.
Grosphus Pompeius, C. ii. 16. 7; Epp. i. 12. 22.
Gyas, alii Gyges, C. ii. 17. 14; C. iii. 4. 69.
Gyges, C. ii. 5. 20; C. iii. 7. 5.

II.

Hadria, C. i. 3. 15; C. i. 33. 15; C. ii. 11.

——, adolescens, C. iii. 12. 6.

Hecate, Sat. i. 8. 33.
Hector, C. ii. 4. 10; C. iv. 9. 22; Epod. xvii. 12; Sat. i. 7. 12.
Hectorus, C. iii. 3. 28.
Helena, C. i. 3. 2; C. i. 15. 2; C. iii. 3. 20; ibid. ver. 25; C. iv. 9. 16; Epod. xiv. 13; Epod. xvii. 42; Sat. i. 3. 107.
Helicon, C. i. 12. 5; Epp. ii. 1. 218; Art. Poët. 296.
Heliorus, Sat. i. 5. 2.
Hellas, puella, Sat. ii. 3. 277.
Hercules, vide Alcides, C. iii. 3. 9; C. iii. 14. 1; C. iv. 4. 62; C. iv. 5. 36; C. iv. 8. 30; Epod. iii. 17; Epod. xvii. 31; Sat. ii. 6. 13; Epp. i. 1. 5; Epp. ii. 1. 10.
Herculeus, C. i. 3. 36; C. ii. 12. 6.
Hermogenes Tiggiliius, vide Tiggilius Hermogenes, Sat. i. 3. 129; Sat. i. 4. 72; Sat. i. 9. 25; Sat. i. 10. 16; ibid. ver. 80.
Herodes, Epp. ii. 2. 184.
Hesperia (Italia), C. iii. 6. 8; C. iv. 5. 38.
—— (Hispania), C. i. 36. 4.
Hesperius (de Italia), C. i. 28. 26; C. ii. 1. 32; C. ii. 17. 20; C. iv. 15. 16.
Hiber, C. ii. 20. 20.
Hibia, C. iv. 5. 28; C. iv. 15. 50.
—— (Asiana), Epod. v. 21.
Hibericus, Epod. iv. 3.
Hiburus, C. i. 29. 15; Sat. ii. 8. 46.
Hippolyte, C. iii. 7. 18.
Hirpinus, C. ii. 11. 2.
Hispanus, C. iii. 6. 31; C. iii. 8. 21; C. iii. 14. 3.
Homerus, C. iv. 9. 6; Sat. i. 10. 52; Epp. i. 2. 1; Epp. i. 19. 6; Epp. ii. 1. 50; Art. Poët. 74; ibid. 140; ibid. 350; ibid. 401.
Honos, deus, Carm. Sec. 57.
Hora, C. ii. 16. 32; C. iv. 7. 8.
Horatius, pater, Sat. i. 4. 105.
——, C. iv. 6. 44; Epod. xv. 12; Sat. ii. 1. 18; ibid. ver. 34; Sat. ii. 6. 37;
Iapetus, C. i. 3. 27.
Iapyx, C. i. 3. 4; C. iii. 27. 20.
Iarbita, Epp. i. 19. 15.
Iber. Vide Hiber.
Iberus. Vide Hiberus.
Ibycus. C. iii. 15. 1.
Icarium mare, C. iii. 7. 21.
Icarus. C. i. 1. 15.
Icarus. C. ii. 20. 13.
Icicius. C. i. 29. 1; Epp. i. 12. tota.
Ida. C. iii. 20. 16.
Idaeus. C. i. 15. 2.
Idomenes. C. iv. 9. 20.
Idus, C. iv. 11. 14; Epod. ii. 69.
Herda, Epp. i. 20. 13.
Ili s. Rea Silvia, Tiberis uxor, C. i. 2.
17; C. iii. 9. 8; C. iv. 8. 22; Sat. i. 2.
126.
IIiacus, C. i. 15. 36; Epp. i. 2. 16; Art.
Poeit. 129.
IIliones, vide Pergama, Troja, C. i. 10.
14; C. i. 15. 53; C. iii. 3. 18; ibid. ver.
37; C. iii. 19. 4; C. iv. 4. 53; C. iv. 9.
18; Epod. x. 13; Epod. xiv. 14.
IIiona, Sat. ii. 3. 61.
IIithyia, Carm. Sec. 14.
IIlius, Carm. Sec. 37; Epod. xvii. 11.
Illyricus, C. i. 28. 22.
Inachia, Epod. xi. 6; Epod. xii. 14. 15.
Inachus, C. ii. 3. 21; C. iii. 19. 1.
Indi, C. i. 12. 56; C. iv. 14. 42; Carm.
Sec. 56; Epp. i. 1. 45; Epp. i. 6. 6.
India, C. iii. 24. 2.
Indicus, C. i. 31. 6.
Ino, Art. Poeit. 123.
Io, Art. Poeit. 124.
Iolcus, Epod. v. 21.
Ionicus, C. iii. 6. 21; Epod. ii. 54.
Ionius, Epod. x. 19.
Iphigenia, Sat. ii. 3. 199.
Ister, C. iv. 14. 46.
Isthmius, C. iv. 3. 3.
Italia, vide Hesperia, C. i. 37. 16; C. iii. 5.
40; C. iv. 14. 44; Sat. i. 6. 35; Epp. i.
12. 29.

NOMINUM PROPRIORUM. 741

Italus, C. ii. 7. 4; C. ii. 13. 18; C. iii. 30.
13; C. iv. 4. 42; C. iv. 15. 13; Sat. i.
7. 32; Sat. ii. 6. 56; Epp. i. 18. 37;
Epp. ii. 1. 2.
Ithaca, Sat. ii. 5. 4; Epp. i. 7. 41.
Ithacensis, Epp. i. 6. 63.
Itya, C. iv. 12. 5.
Iulus Antonius, C. iv. 2. 2; ibid. ver. 26.
Ixion, C. iii. 11. 21; Art. Poeit. 124.

J.

Janus, C. iv. 15. 9; Sat. ii. 3. 18; Sat. ii.
6. 20; Epp. i. 1. 54; Epp. i. 16. 59;
Epp. i. 20. 1; Epp. ii. 1. 265.
Jason, Epod. iii. 10; ibid. ver. 12.
Jocus, C. i. 2. 34.
Juba, C. i. 22. 15.
Judaesus, Sat. i. 4. 143; Sat. i. 5. 100; Sat.
i. 9. 70.
Jugurtha, C. ii. 1. 28.
Jugurthinus, Epod. ix. 23.
Julius, Sat. i. 8. 39.
——— Caesar (vide Caesar), C. i. 2. 44.
——— Florus, Epp. i. 3. 1. Conf. Florus.
———, adject. C. i. 12. 47; C. iv. 15. 22.
Juno, C. i. 7. 6; C. ii. 1. 29; C. iii. 3. 18;
ibid. ver. 64; C. iii. 4. 59; Sat. i. 3.
11.
Juppiter, C. i. 1. 25; C. i. 2. 2; ibid. ver.
19; ibid. ver. 30; C. i. 3. 40; C. i. 10.
5; C. i. 11. 4; C. i. 12. 13; ibid. ver.
49; C. i. 16. 12; C. ii. 21. 4; C. ii. 22.
29; C. i. 24. 3; C. i. 28. 9; ibid. ver.
29; C. i. 32. 14; C. ii. 6. 18; C. ii. 7.
17; C. ii. 10. 16; C. ii. 17. 22; C. ii. 19.
21; C. iii. 1. 6—3; C. iii. 3. 6; ibid. ver.
64; C. iii. 4. 48; ibid. ver. 49; C. iii. 5.
1; ibid. ver. 12; C. iii. 10. 8; C. iii.
16. 6; C. iii. 25. 6; C. iii. 27. 73; C. iii.
29. 44; C. iv. 4. 4; ibid. ver. 74; C.
iv. 6. 22; C. iv. 8. 29; C. iv. 15. 6.
Carm. Sec. 32; ibid. 73; Epod. ii. 29;
Epod. v. 8; Epod. ix. 3; Epod. x. 18;
Epod. xiii. 2; Epod. xvi. 56; ibid. ver.
63; Epod. xvii. 69; Sat. i. 1. 20; Sat.
i. 2. 18; Sat. ii. 1. 43; Sat. ii. 3. 288;
ibid. ver. 291; Epp. i. 1. 106; Epp. i.
12. 3; Epp. i. 16. 29; Epp. i. 17. 34;
Epp. i. 18. 111; Epp. i. 19. 43; Epp. ii.
1. 68.
Justitia, C. i. 24. 6; C. ii. 17. 16.
Juventas, C. i. 30. 7.

K.

Kalendae, Epod. ii. 70; Sat. i. 3. 67.
Karthago, C. iii. 5. 39; C. iv. 4. 69; C. iv.
8. 17; Epod. vii. 5; Epod. ix. 25; Sat.
ii. 1. 66.
INDEX

Labeo (M. Antistius), Sat. i. 3. 82.
Laberus (D.), Sat. i. 10. 6.
Lacena, C. ii. 11. 23; C. iii. 3. 25; C. iv. 9. 16.
Lacedaemon, C. i. 7. 10.
Lacedaemonius, C. iii. 5. 56.
Lacon, C. ii. 6. 11; Epod. vi. 5.
Laconicus, C. ii. 18. 7.
Laelius, Sat. ii. 1. 65; ibid. ver. 72.
Laertiades (Ulixes), C. i. 15. 21; Sat. ii. 5. 59.
Laestrygonius, C. iii. 16. 34.
Leavis (P. Valerius), Sat. i. 6. 12; ibid. ver. 19.
Lalage, C. i. 22. 10; ibid. ver. 23.
———, Gabinii (?) amica, C. ii. 5. 16.
——— (L. Aelius), C. i. 26. 8; C. i. 36. 7; C. iii. 17. 1; ibid. ver. 22; Epp. i. 14. 6.
Lamus, C. iii. 17. 1.
Lauvus, C. iii. 27. 3.
Laomedon, C. iii. 3. 22.
Lapithae, C. i. 18. 8; C. ii. 12. 5.
Lares, C. iii. 23. 4; C. iv. 5. 34; Epod. ii. 66; Sat. i. 5. 60; Sat. ii. 3. 165; Sat. ii. 5. 14; Sat. ii. 6. 66.
Larissa, C. i. 7. 11.
Latine (Feriae), Epp. i. 7. 76.
Latine, Sat. i. 10. 27.
Latinus, C. i. 32. 3; C. ii. 1. 29; C. iv. 14. 7; C. iv. 15. 13; Epod. vii. 4; Sat. i. 10. 20; Epp. i. 3. 12; Epp. i. 19. 32; Epp. ii. 2. 148.
Latinum, C. i. 12. 53; C. i. 35. 10; C. iv. 4. 49; Carma. Sec. 66; Epp. i. 19. 24; Epp. ii. 1. 157; Epp. ii. 2. 121; Art. Poct. 290.
Latona, C. i. 21. 4; C. iii. 28. 12; C. iv. 6. 37.
Latous, C. i. 31. 18.
Laurens, Sat. ii. 4. 42.
Lavenna, Epp. i. 16. 60.
Lebedus, Epp. i. 11. 6; ibid. ver. 7.
Leda, C. i. 12. 25.
Lenaeus, vide Bacchus, C. iii. 25. 19.
Leo, C. iii. 29. 19; Epp. i. 10. 16.
Lepidus (Q. Aemilius), Epp. i. 20. 28.
Lepos, Sat. ii. 6. 72.
Lesbia, meretrix, Epod. xii. 17.
Lesbicus, C. i. 17. 21; C. i. 26. 11; C. i. 32. 5; C. iv. 6. 35; Epod. ix. 34.
Lesbos, Epp. i. 11. 1.
Lesbous, C. i. 1. 34.
Letheaeus, C. iv. 7. 27; Epod. xiv. 3.
Leucoeno, C. ii. 11, totum.
Liber, vide Bacchus, C. i. 12. 22; C. i. 16. 7; C. i. 18. 7; C. i. 32. 9; C. ii. 19. 7; C. iii. 8. 7; C. iii. 21. 21; C. iv. 8. 36; C. iv. 12. 14; C. iv. 15. 26; Sat. i. 4. 39; Epp. i. 19. 4; Epp. ii. 1. 5.
Libitina, C. iii. 30. 7; Sat. ii. 6. 19; Epp. ii. 1. 49.
Libo, Epp. i. 19. 8.
Libra, C. ii. 17. 17.
Liburnae, C. i. 37. 39; Epod. i. 1.
Libya, C. ii. 2. 10; Sat. ii. 3. 101.
Libyces, C. i. 1. 10; Epp. i. 10. 19.
Licentia, C. i. 19. 3.
Licinius Calvus. Vide Calvus.
——— (L. Murena), C. ii. 10.
Liciniius Art. Poct. 301.
Licynia, C. ii. 12. 13. 23.
Ligurinus, C. iv. 1. 33; C. iv. 10.
Liparacus, C. iii. 12. 6.
Liris, C. i. 31. 7; C. iii. 17. 8.
Livia, Augusti, C. iii. 14. 5.
Livius (Andronicus), Epp. ii. 1. 62; ibid. ver. 69.
Lollus (M.), C. iv. 9; Epp. i. 20. 28.
———, Epp. i. 2. 1; Epp. i. 18.
Longarenus, Sat. i. 2. 67.
Lucania, Sat. ii. 1. 38.
Lucanus, Epod. i. 28; Sat. ii. 1. 34; Sat. ii. 3. 234; Sat. ii. 8. 6; Epp. i. 15. 21; Epp. ii. 2. 178.
Luceria, C. iii. 15. 14.
Lucilius, Sat. i. 4. 6; ibid. ver. 57; Sat. i. 10; Sat. ii. 1. 17.
Lucina, Carm. Sec. 16; Epod. v. 6.
Lucretilis, C. i. 17. 1.
Lucrinus, C. ii. 15. 3; Epod. ii. 49; Sat. ii. 4. 32.
Lucullus, Epp. i. 6. 40; Epp. ii. 2. 26.
Luna, C. ii. 11. 10; C. ii. 16. 3; C. ii. 18. 16; C. iv. 2. 58; Carm. Sec. 36; Epod. xv. 1; Epod. xvi. 78.
Lucus (L. Cornelius Lentulus), Sat. ii. 1. 63.
Luscus Anuidius, Sat. i. 5. 34.
Lyaeus, vide Bacchus, C. i. 7. 22; C. iii. 21. 16; Epod. ix. 36.
Lyceaeus, mons, C. i. 17. 2.
Lycaembe, Epod. vi. 13; Epp. i. 19. 25.
Lyco, C. iii. 10. 1; C. iv. 15. 30; totum; ibid. ver. 2; ibid. ver. 21.
Lycia, C. iii. 4. 62.
Lycidas, C. i. 4. 19.
Lyciscus, Epod. xi. 24.
Lycius, C. i. 8. 16.
Lycoris, C. i. 33. 5.
Lycurgus, C. ii. 19. 16.
Lycus, puer, C. i. 32. 11.
Lyde, C. ii. 11. 22; C. iii. 11. 7; C. iii. 28. 3.
Lydi, Sat. i. 6. 1.
Lydia, C. i. 8. 1; C. i. 13. 1; C. i. 25; C. iii. 9. 7; ibid. ver. 20.
Lydus, C. iv. 15. 30.
Lymphae, Sat. i. 5. 97.
Lyceus, C. iii. 11. 37.
———, Sat. i. 2. 90; Epp. i. 1. 28.
Lysippus, Epp. ii. 1. 240.

M.

Macenas (C. Cilius), C. i. 1. 1; C. i. 20. 5; C. ii. 12. 11; C. ii. 17; C. ii. 20. 7; C. iii. 8; C. ii. 16. 20; C. iii. 29; C. iv. 11. 19; Epod. i.; Epod. iii.; Epod. ix.; Epod. xiv.; Sat. i. 1; Sat. i. 3. 64; Sat. i. 5. 27; ibid. ver. 31; ibid. ver. 48; Sat. i. 6; Sat. i. 9. 43; Sat. i. 10. 81; Sat. ii. 3. 312; Sat. ii. 6. 31; ibid. ver. 38; ibid. ver. 41; Sat. ii. 7. 33; Sat. ii. 8. 16; ibid. ver. 22; Epp. i. 1; Epp. i. 7; Epp. i. 19; ibid. ver. 1.

Maccius Tarpa (SP.), vide Tarpa, Sat. i. 10. 33; Art. Poët. 367.

Maenius, Sat. i. 1. 101; Sat. i. 3. 21; Epp. i. 15. 26.

Maconiun, C. i. 6. 20; C. iv. 9. 5.

Maevus, Epod. vi.; Epod. x. 2.

Magnesius, C. iii. 7. 18.

Maia, C. i. 2. 43; Sat. ii. 6. 5.

Maltinus, Sat. i. 2. 25.

Mamurrae, Sat. i. 5. 37.

Mandel, Epp. i. 13. 105.

Manes, C. i. 4. 10; Epod. v. 94; Sat. i. 8. 29; Epp. ii. 1. 130.

Manilius (L.). Vide Torquatus.

Marcellus, C. i. 12. 46.

Marcia, Reguli uxor, C. iii. 5. 41.

Mareoticum vinum, C. i. 37. 14.

Marica, C. iii. 17. 7.

Marius, Sat. ii. 3. 277.

Mars, vide etiam Mavors, C. i. 2. 36; C. i. 6. 13; C. i. 17. 23; C. i. 28. 17; C. ii. 14. 13; C. iii. 3. 10; ibid. ver. 33; C. iii. 5. 24; ibid. ver. 34; C. iv. 14. 9.

Marsaicus, Sat. i. 2. 85.

Marsus, C. i. 1. 28; C. i. 2. 39; C. ii. 20. 19; C. iii. 5. 9; C. iii. 14. 18; Epod. v. 76; Epod. xvi. 3; Epod. xvii. 29.

Marsya, Sat. i. 6. 120.

Martialis, C. i. 17. 9.

Martius Mensis, C. iii. 8. 1.

——, C. iii. 7. 26; C. iv. i. 39; C. iv. 14. 17; Art. Poët. 402.

Massagetae, C. i. 35. 49.

Massicum vinum, C. i. 1. 19; C. ii. 7. 21; C. iii. 21. 5; Sat. ii. 4. 51.

Matinus, C. i. 28. 3; C. iv. 2. 27; Epod. xvi. 28.

Matutinum Pater, Sat. ii. 6. 20.

Mauurus, C. i. 2. 39; C. i. 22. 2; C. ii. 6. 3; C. iii. 10. 18.

Mavors, C. iv. 8. 23.

Maximus (Paulus Fabius), C. iv. 1. 11; ibid. ver. 15.

Medea, Epod. iii. 10; Epod. v. 62; Epod. xvi. 58; Art. Poët. 123; ibid. 185.

Medum flumen, C. ii. 9. 21.

Medus, C. i. 2. 51; C. i. 27. 5; C. i. 29. 4; C. ii. 1. 31; C. ii. 16. 6; C. iii. 3. 44; C. iii. 5. 9; C. iii. 8. 19; C. iv. 14. 42; Carm. Sec. 54.

Megilla, C. i. 27. 11.

Meleager, Art. Poët. 146.

Melpomene, C. i. 24. 3; C. iii. 30. 16; C. iv. 3. 1.

Memon, Sat. i. 10. 36.

Memphis, C. iii. 26. 10.

Mena Volteius, Epp. i. 7. 55.

Menander, Sat. ii. 3. 11; Epp. ii. 1. 57.

Menas (Sex.), Epod. iv.

Menedemus Terellii, Sat. i. 2. 20.

Menelaus, Sat. ii. 3. 193; Epp. i. 7. 43.

Menenius, Sat. ii. 3. 267.

Mercurialis, C. ii. 17. 29; Sat. ii. 3. 25.

Mercurius, C. i. 2. 44; C. i. 10. 1; ibid. ver. 5; C. i. 24. 18; C. i. 30. 8; C. ii. 7. 13; C. iii. 11. 1; Sat. ii. 3. 68; Sat. ii. 6. 5; ibid. ver. 15.

Meriones, C. i. 6. 13; C. i. 15. 26.

Messalla Corvinus, C. iii. 21. 7; ibid. ver. 9; Sat. i. 6. 42; Sat. i. 10. 83; Art. Poët. 371. Conf. Poplicola.

Messius Cicirrus, Sat. i. 5. 52; ibid. ver. 54.

Metaurus, C. iv. 4. 38.

Metellus (Caecilia), Sat. ii. 3. 239.

Metellus Macedonicus, Sat. ii. 1. 67.

—— (Celer), C. ii. 1. 1.

Methymnaeus, Sat. ii. 8. 50.

Miletus, Epp. i. 17. 30.

Milonius, Sat. ii. 1. 24.

Mimas, C. iii. 4. 53.

Mimmermus, Epp. i. 6. 65; Epp. ii. 2. 101.

Minae, C. iii. 1. 37.

Minerva, vide Pallas, C. iii. 3. 23; C. iii. 12. 5; C. iv. 6. 13; Sat. ii. 2. 3; Art. Poët. 385.

Minos, C. i. 28. 9; C. iv. 7. 21.

Minturnae, Epp. i. 5. 5.

Minucius, Epp. i. 18. 20.

Misenium, Sat. ii. 4. 33.

Mitylene. Vide Mytilene.

Molossus (canis), Epod. v. 5; Sat. ii. 6. 114.

Monaes, C. iii. 6. 9.

Mors, C. i. 3. 17; C. i. 4. 13; Sat. ii. 1. 58.

Moschus, Epp. i. 5. 9.

Mucius (Scaevola), Epp. ii. 2. 89.

Mulvius, Sat. ii. 7. 36.

Munatius Plancus (M.), C. i. 7, totum; C. iii. 14. 28.

—— alius, Epp. i. 3. 31.

Murena (L. Licinius), C. ii. 10, totum; C. iii. 19. 11; Sat. i. 5. 38.

Musa, C. i. 6. 10; C. i. 17. 14; C. i. 26. 1; ibid. ver. 9; C. i. 32. 9; C. ii. 1. 9; ibid.
 INDEX

ver. 37; C. ii. 10. 19; C. ii. 12. 13; C. iii. 1. 3; C. iii. 3. 70; C. iii. 19. 13; C. iv. 8. 28; C. iv. 9. 21; Sat. i. 5. 53; Sat. ii. 3. 105; Sat. ii. 6. 17; Epp. i. 3. 13; Epp. i. 8. 2; Epp. i. 19. 28; Epp. ii. 1. 27; Epp. ii. 1. 133; Epp. ii. 1. 243; Epp. ii. 2. 92; Art. Poët. 83; ibid. 141; ibid. 324; ibid. 407.

—— Antonius, Epp. i. 15. 3.

Mutus, dives ignotus, Epp. i. 6. 22.

Mycenae, C. i. 7. 9.

Mygdonius, C. ii. 12. 22; C. iii. 16. 41.

Myrtale, C. i. 33. 14.

Myrtous, C. i. 1. 14.

Mysi, Epod. xvi. 10.

Mystes, C. ii. 9. 10.

Mytilene, C. i. 7. 1; Epp. i. 11. 17.

N.

Naevius, poëta, Epp. ii. 1. 53.

——, Sat. ii. 2. 63.

Naïades, C. iii. 25. 14.

Nasca, Sat. ii. 5. 57. 65. 67.

Nasidienus Rufus, Sat. ii. 8. 1; ibid. ver. 56. 84.

Natta, Sat. i. 6. 124.

Neaera, C. iii. 14. 21; Epod. xv. 11.

Neapolis, Epod. v. 43.

Nearchus, C. iii. 20. 6.

Necessitas, C. i. 35. 17; C. iii. 1. 14; C. iii. 24. 6.

Neobule, C. iii. 12.

Neptunus, Epod. ix. 7.

Neptunus, C. i. 5. 15; C. i. 28. 29; C. iii. 28. 2; ibid. ver. 10; Epod. vii. 3; Epod. xvii. 55; Epp. i. 11. 10; Art. Poët. 64.

Nereides, C. iii. 28. 10.

Nereis, Epod. xvii. 8.

Nereus, C. i. 15. 5.

Nerius, Sat. ii. 3. 69.

Nero. Vide Claudius.

Nerones, C. iv. 4. 29; ibid. ver. 37.

Nessus, Epod. xvii. 32.

Nestor, C. i. 15. 22; C. ii. 9. 13; Epp. i. 2. 11.

Nilus, C. iii. 3. 48; C. iv. 14. 46.

Niobeus, C. iv. 6. 1.

Niphates, C. ii. 9. 20.

Nireus, C. iii. 20. 15; Epod. xv. 22.

Noctiluca, C. iv. 6. 38.

Nomantanus, Sat. i. 1. 102; Sat. i. 8. 11; Sat. ii. 1. 22; Sat. ii. 3. 175; ibid. ver. 224; Sat. ii. 8. 23. 25; ibid. ver. 60.

Noricus, C. i. 16. 9; Epod. xvii. 71.

Nothus, C. iii. 15. 11.

Notus, C. i. 3. 14; C. i. 7. 16; C. i. 28. 21; C. iii. 7. 5; C. iv. 5. 9; Epod. ix. 31.

Novendialis, Epod. xvii. 48.

Novii, Sat. i. 6. 121.

Novius, Sat. i. 3. 21; Sat. i. 6. 40.

Nox, C. iii. 28. 16; Epod. v. 51; Sat. ii. 6. 101.

Numa, C. i. 2. 15; C. i. 12. 34; Epp. i. 6. 27; Epp. ii. 1. 86.

Numantia, C. ii. 12. 1.

Numicius, Epp. i. 6. 1.

Numida (Plotius), C. i. 36.

Numidae, C. iii. 11. 47.

Numonius Vala, Epp. i. 15, tota.

Nymphe, C. i. 1. 31; C. i. 4. 6; C. i. 30. 6; C. ii. 3. 14; C. ii. 19. 3; C. iii. 18. 1; C. iii. 27. 39; C. iv. 7. 5.

O.

Occidens, Epod. i. 13.

Oceanus, C. i. 3. 22; C. i. 35. 32; C. iv. 5. 40; C. iv. 14. 48; Epod. xvi. 41.

Octavia, C. iii. 14. 7.

Octavius, Sat. i. 10. 82.

Ofella, Sat. ii. 2. 2; ibid. ver. 53. 112. 133.

Olympia, Epp. i. 1. 50.

Olympicus pulvis (al. Olympia), C. i. 1. 3.

Olympus, C. i. 12. 58; C. iii. 4. 52.

Olimpus, Sat. ii. 3. 142.

Oppidus Aulus, Sat. ii. 3. 171.

—— Servius, Sat. ii. 3. 168.

—— Tiberius, Sat. ii. 3. 173.

Opuntius, C. i. 27. 10.

Orbilius, Epp. ii. 1. 71.

Orbius, Epp. ii. 2. 160.

Oricus, C. i. 28. 10; C. ii. 3. 24; C. ii. 18. 39; ibid. ver. 34; C. iii. 4. 75; C. iii. 11. 29; C. iii. 27. 50; C. iv. 2. 24; Sat. ii. 5. 49; Epp. ii. 2. 178.

Orestes, Sat. ii. 3. 133; ibid. ver. 137; Art. Poët. 124.

Oriculum vel Oricus, C. iii. 7. 5.

Orients, C. i. 12. 55.

Origo, Sat. i. 2. 55.

Orion, C. i. 28. 21; C. ii. 13. 39; C. iii. 4. 71; C. iii. 27. 18; Epod. x. 10; Epod. xv. 7.

Ornythus, C. iii. 9. 14.

Orpheus, C. i. 12. 8; C. i. 24. 13; Art. Poët. 392.

Oscus, Sat. i. 5. 54.

Osiris, Epp. i. 17. 60.

Otho (L. Roscius), Epod. iv. 16.

P.

Pacideianus, Sat. ii. 7. 97.

Pacorus, C. iii. 6. 9.

Pactolus, Epod. xv. 20.

Pactumeius, Epod. xvi. 50.

Pacuvius, Epp. ii. 1. 56.

Padus, Epod. xvi. 28.
NOMINUM PROPRIORUM.

Paeatus, Sat. i. 3. 45.

Palatina Bibliotheca, Epp. ii. i. 216; Epp. ii. 2. 94.

Palatinus, Carm. Sec. 65; Epp. i. 1. 17.

Palinurus, C. iii. 4. 28.

Pallas, vide Minerva, C. i. 6. 15; C. i. 7. 5; C. i. 12. 20; C. i. 15. 11; C. iii. 4. 57; Eppod. x. 13.

Pan, C. iv. 12. 11.

Panaceus, C. i. 29. 14.

Panthoides, C. i. 28. 10.

Pantilus, Sat. i. 10. 78.

Pantolabrus, Sat. i. 8. 11; Sat. ii. 1. 22.

Papphus, C. i. 30. 1; C. iii. 28. 14.

Parsae, C. ii. 3. 15; C. ii. 6. 9; C. ii. 16. 39; C. ii. 17. 10; Carm. Sec. 25; Eppod. xiii. 15.

Paris, C. i. 15. 1; C. iii. 3. 19; ibid. ver. 26; ibid. ver. 40; C. iv. 9. 13; Epp. i. 2. 6; ibid. ver. 10.

Parius, C. i. 19. 6; Epp. i. 19. 23.

Parmensis, vide Cassius, Epp. i. 4. 3.

Parrhasius, C. iv. 8. 6.

Parthi, conf. Medi, Persae, C. i. 12. 53; C. i. 19. 12; C. ii. 13. 18; C. iii. 2. 3; C. iv. 5. 25; C. iv. 15. 7; Eppod. vii. 9; Sat. ii. 1. 15; Sat. ii. 5. 62; Epp. i. 18. 56; Epp. ii. 1. 112; ibid. ver. 256.

Pateraeus, C. iii. 4. 64.

Paulus (L. Aemilius), C. i. 12. 38.

———, Sat. i. 6. 41.

——— (Fabius) Maximus, C. iv. 1. 10; ibid. ver. 15.

Pausiacus, Sat. ii. 7. 95.

Pax, dea, Carm. Sec. 57.

Pecunia, Epp. i. 6. 37.

Pedanus, Epp. i. 4. 2.

Pediation, Sat. i. 6. 39.

Pedius Poplicola (G.), vide Poplicola, Sat. i. 10. 28. 65.

Pegasus, C. i. 27. 24; C. iv. 11. 27.

Pelcus, C. iii. 7. 17; Art. Poét. 96; ibid. 104.

Pelides (Achilles), C. i. 6. 6; Epp. i. 2. 12.

Pelignus, C. iii. 19. 8; Eppod. xvii. 60.

Pelios, C. iii. 4. 52.

Pelops, C. i. 6. 3; C. ii. 28. 7; C. ii. 13. 37; Eppod. xvii. 65.

Penates, C. ii. 4. 15; C. iii. 23. 19; C. iii. 27. 49; Sat. ii. 3. 176; Epp. i. 7. 94.

Penelope, C. i. 17. 20; C. iii. 10. 11; Sat. ii. 5. 76. 81; Epp. i. 2. 28.

Pentheus, C. ii. 10. 14; Sat. ii. 3. 304; Epp. i. 16. 73.

Pergama, C. ii. 4. 12.

Perganeus, C. i. 15. 36.

Perillus Ciciuta, Sat. ii. 3. 69; ibid. ver. 75; ibid. ver. 175.

Persae (Parthi), C. i. 2. 22; C. i. 21. 15; C. iii. 5. 4; C. iii. 9. 4; C. iv. 15. 23.

Persicus, C. i. 33. 1.

Persius, Sat. i. 7. 2; ibid. ver. 4; ibid. ver. 19. 22.

Petillius Capitolinus, Sat. i. 4. 94; Sat. i. 10. 26.

Petrunius, Epp. i. 5. 5.

Pettius, Eppod. xi.

Pheaex, Epp. i. 13. 24.

Phaethon, C. iv. 11. 25.

Phalanthus, C. ii. 6. 12.

Phidyle, C. iii. 23. 2.

Philippi, C. ii. 7. 9; C. iii. 4. 26; Epp. ii. 12. 49.

Philippus, Macedonae rex, C. iii. 16. 14; Epp. ii. 1. 234.

——— (L. Marcus), Epp. i. 7. 46—90.

Philodemus, Sat. i. 2. 121.

Phocaei, Eppod. xvi. 17.

Phoceus, C. ii. 4. 2.

Phoebus, vide Apollo, C. i. 12. 24; C. i. 32. 13; C. iii. 3. 66; C. iii. 4. 4; C. iii. 21. 24; C. iv. 6. 26; ibid. ver. 28; ibid. ver. 29; C. iv. 15. 1; Carm. Sec. 1; ibid. 62; ibid. 75.

Phoenix, Europae pater, C. iii. 27. 34.

Pholoc, C. i. 33. 7. 9; C. ii. 5. 17; C. iii. 15. 7.

Phraates, C. ii. 2. 17; Epp. i. 12. 27.

Phryges, C. i. 15. 34.

Phrygia, C. ii. 12. 22.

Phrygicus, C. ii. 9. 16; C. iii. 1. 41; Eppod. ix. 6.

Phryne, Eppod. xiv. 16.

Phthisius, C. iv. 6. 4.

Phyllis, C. ii. 4. 14; C. iv. 11; ibid. ver. 31.

Piceus, Sat. ii. 3. 272; Sat. ii. 4. 70.

Pierius, C. iv. 3. 46; C. iv. 6. 20.

Pierius, C. iii. 4. 49; C. iii. 10. 15; Art. Poét. 405.

Pimpele, C. i. 26. 9.

Pindaricus, C. iv. 9. 6; Epp. i. 3. 10.

Pindaricus, C. iv. 2. 1; ibid. ver. 8; ibid. ver. 25.

Pindus, C. i. 12. 6.

Pirithous, C. iii. 4. 30; C. iv. 7. 28.

Pisone, Art. Poét. tota; ibid. 6; ibid. 235; ibid. 292; ibid. 306.

Pitholeon, Sat. ii. 10. 22.

Placidianus, Vide Pacideianus.

Plancus (L. Munatius), C. i. 7, totum; C. iii. 14. 23.

Plato, Sat. ii. 3. 11; Sat. ii. 4. 3.

Plautinus, Art. Poét. 270.

Plautus, Epp. ii. 1. 56; ibid. ver. 170; Art. Poét. 54.

Plotius Numida, C. i. 36. 3.

——— (Tucca), Sat. i. 5. 40; Sat. i. 10. 81.

Plutorius, C. i. 4. 17.
INDEX

Poena, C. iii. 2. 32; Conf. C. iv. 5. 24.
Poenus, C. i. 12. 38; C. ii. 2. 11; C. ii.
12. 3; C. ii. 13. 15; C. iii. 5. 34; C. iv.
4. 47.
Polemon, Sat. ii. 3. 254.
Pollio (C. Asinius), C. ii. 1; Sat. i. 10. 42;
ibid. ver. 85.
Pollux, C. iii. 3. 9; C. iii. 29. 64; Epod.
xvii. 43; Sat. ii. 1. 26; Epp. ii. 1. 5.
Polyhymnia, C. i. 1. 33.
Pompeius (Sex.), Epod. ix. 7.
——— Grophus, C. ii. 16, totum; Epp.
i. 12. 22.
——— Varus, C. ii. 7; ibid. ver. 5.
Pompilius, vide Numa, C. i. 12. 34.
Pomponius, Sat. i. 4. 52.
Ponticus, C. i. 14. 11.
Popicola (M. Valerius Popicola Messalla)
Corvins, Sat. i. 10. 28; ibid. ver. 85.
Porcius, parasitus Nasideni, Sat. ii. 8. 23.
Porphyrius, C. iii. 4. 54.
Porsena, Epod. xvi. 4.
Prænestæ, C. iii. 4. 23; Epp. i. 2. 2.
Prænestinus, Sat. i. 7. 28.
Priamides, Sat. i. 7. 12.
Priamus, C. i. 10. 14; C. i. 15. 8; C. iii. 3.
26; ibid. ver. 40; C. iv. 6. 15; Epod. xvii.
13; Sat. ii. 3. 195; Art. Poët. 137.
Priscus, Epod. ii. 21; Sat. i. 8. 2.
Procærus, Sat. ii. 7. 9.
Proculeius, C. ii. 2. 5.
Procon, C. iii. 29. 18.
Proctus, C. iii. 7. 13.
Prometheus, C. i. 3. 27; C. i. 16. 13; C. ii.
13. 37; C. ii. 18. 35; Epod. xvii. 67.
Proserpina, C. i. 28. 20; C. ii. 13. 21;
Epod. xvii. 2; Sat. ii. 3. 110.
Proteus, C. i. 2. 7; Sat. ii. 3. 71; Epp. i. 1.
90.
Publius. Vide Quintus.
Pudor, deus, Carm. Sec. 57.
Punicus, C. iii. 5. 18; C. iii. 6. 34; Epod.
ix. 27; Epp. ii. 1. 162.
Pupilius, Epp. i. 1. 67.
Pusilla, nomen, Sat. ii. 3. 216.
Puteal, Sat. ii. 6. 35; Epp. i. 19. 8.
Pylades, Sat. ii. 3. 139.
Pylius Nestor, C. i. 15. 22.
Pyrrha, C. i. 5. 3.
——— Deucalionis uxor, C. i. 2. 6.
Pyrrhus, rex, C. iii. 6. 35.
———, adolescens, C. iii. 20. 2.
Pythagoras, C. i. 28. 10 (conf. ibid. ver. 13);
Epod. xvi. 21; Sat. ii. 4. 3; Sat. ii. 6.
63.
Pythagoreus, Epp. ii. 1. 52.
Pythias, Art. Poët. 238.

Pythius, C. i. 16. 6; Art. Poët. 414.

Quinctilius Varus, C. i. 18; C. i. 24; Art.
Poët. 438.
Quincticius Hirpinus, C. ii. 11; Epp. i. 16.
——— Atta (T.), Epp. ii. 1. 79.
Quinquaturas, Epp. ii. 2. 197.
Quintus, Sat. ii. 5. 32.
Quirinus, C. i. 2. 46; C. iii. 3. 15; C. iv.
15. 9; Epod. xvi. 13; Sat. i. 10. 32;
Epp. ii. 2. 68.
Quiris, C. ii. 7. 3; Epp. i. 6. 7.
Quirites, C. i. 1. 7; C. iii. 3. 57; C. iv.
14. 1.

R.

Raetus, C. iv. 4. 17; C. iv. 14. 15; ibid.
ver. 18.
Rea Silvia, vide Ilia, C. iii. 3. 32.
Regulus, C. i. 12. 37; C. iii. 5. 13.
Remus, Epod. vii. 19.
Rex Rupilius. Vide Rupilius Rex.
Rhenus, Sat. i. 10. 37; Art. Poët. 18.
Rhodanus, C. ii. 20. 29.
Rhode (al. Chloē), C. iii. 19. 27.
Rhodus, Sat. i. 10. 22.
Rhodope, C. iii. 29. 12.
Rhodos, C. i. 7. 1; Epp. i. 11. 17; ibid. ver. 21.
Rhoeacus. Vide Rhoeetus.
Rhoeetus, C. ii. 19. 23; C. iii. 4. 55.
Roma, C. iii. 3. 38; ibid. ver. 44; C. iii.
5. 12; C. iii. 6. 14; C. iii. 29. 12; ibid. ver.
26; C. iv. 2. 41; C. iv. 3. 13; C. iv. 4.
37; C. iv. 14. 44; Carm. Sec. 11; ibid.
37; Epod. xvi. 2; Sat. ii. 5. 1; Sat.
i. 6. 76; Sat. ii. 1. 59; Sat. ii. 6. 23; Sat.
i. 7. 13; ibid. ver. 28; Epp. ii. 2. 2;
Epp. i. 7. 44; Epp. i. 8. 12; Epp. i. 11.
11; ibid. ver. 21; Epp. i. 14. 17; Epp.
i. 10. 16; Epp. i. 20. 10; Epp. ii. 1. 61;
ibid. ver. 103; ibid. ver. 256; Epp. ii.
2. 41; ibid. ver. 65; ibid. ver. 87.
Romanus, C. iii. 6. 2; C. iii. 9. 8; C. iv. 3.
23; C. iv. 4. 46; Carm. Sec. 66; Epod.
vi. 6; ibid. ver. 17; Epod. ix. 11; Sat.
i. 4. 65; Sat. i. 6. 48; Sat. ii. 1. 37;
Sat. ii. 2. 10; ibid. ver. 52; Sat. ii. 4.
10; Sat. ii. 7. 54; Epp. i. 1. 70; Epp.
i. 3. 9; Epp. i. 12. 28; Epp. ii. 18. 49;
Epp. ii. 1. 29; Epp. ii. 2. 94; Art. Poët.
54; ibid. 113; ibid. 264; ibid. 285;
ibid. 326.
Romulus, C. i. 12. 33; C. ii. 15. 10; C.
iii. 3. 31; C. iv. 8. 22; ibid. ver. 24;
Epp. ii. 1. 54.
———, adject., C. iv. 5. 1; Carm. Sec. 47.
S.

Sabaeæ, C. i. 29. 3.

Sabbata, Sat. i. 9. 69.

Sabelius, C. iii. 6. 38; Epp. viii. 26; Sat. i. 9. 29; Sat. ii. 1. 36; Epp. i. 16. 49.

Sabinius, C. i. 9. 7; C. i. 20. 1; C. ii. 22. 9; C. ii. 18. 14; C. iii. 1. 47; C. iii. 4. 22; Epod. iv. 41; Sat. ii. 7. 118; Epp. i. 7. 77; Epp. ii. 1. 25.

Horatii et Torquati amicus, Epp. i. 5. 27.

Sacra Via, Epod. iv. 7; Epod. vii. 8; Sat. i. 9. 1.

Sagana, Epp. v. 25; Sat. i. 8. 25; ibid. ver. 48.

Salaminius Teucer, C. i. 15. 23.

Salamin, C. i. 7. 21; ibid. ver. 29.

Salernum, Epp. i. 15. 1.

Salisius, C. i. 37. 2; Epp. ii. 1. 86.

Salitius, C. iii. 36. 12; C. iv. 1. 28.

Salustius Crispus (C.), C. ii. 2; totum; Sat. i. 2. 48.

Samius, Epod. xiv. 9.

Samnites, gladiatores, Epp. ii. 2. 98.

Samus, Epp. i. 11. 2; ibid. ver. 21.

Sappho, C. iii. 13. 25; C. iv. 9. 12; Epp. i. 19. 23.

Sardinia, C. i. 31. 4.

Sardis, Epp. ii. 11. 2.

Sardus, Sat. i. 3. 3; Art. Poët. 375.

Sarmantus, Sat. i. 5. 52.

Satureianus, Sat. i. 6. 59.

Saturnalia, Sat. ii. 3. 5.

Saturnius, Epp. ii. 1. 158.

Saturnus, C. i. 12. 50; C. ii. 12. 9; C. ii. 17. 23.

Satyri, C. i. 1. 31; C. ii. 19. 4; Epp. i. 19. 4; Epp. ii. 2. 125; Art. Poët. 221; ibid. 226; ibid. 233; ibid. 235.

Scaeva, Sat. ii. 1. 53.

— alius, Epp. i. 17, tota.

Scaurus, C. i. 12. 37; Sat. i. 3. 48.

Scaevus, Sat. i. 4. 112.

Scipio Africanus Major, C. iv. 8. 18.
INDEX

Stesichorus, C. iv. 9. 8; Epod. xvii. 44.
Sthenelus, C. i. 15. 24; C. iv. 9. 20.
Stoicus, Epod. viii. 19; Sat. ii. 3. 160;
ibid. ver. 300.
Stygus, C. ii. 20. 8; C. iv. 8. 25.
Styx, C. i. 34. 10.
Suadela, Epp. i. 6. 38.
Saburranus, Epod. v. 58.
Suleius, Sat. i. 4. 65.
Sulla, Sat. i. 2. 64.
Sulpicius Servius, Sat. i. 10. 86.
—, adj., C. iv. 12. 18.
Surrinthus, Sat. ii. 4. 55.
Surrenumt, Epp. i. 17. 52.
Sybaris, Lydiae amator, C. i. 8. 2.
Sygambri. Vide Sigambri.
Syrius, C. ii. 7. 8.
Syrites, C. i. 22. 5; C. ii. 6. 3; C. ii. 20. 15; Epod. ix. 31.
Syrus, servi nomen, Sat. i. 6. 38.
—, gladiator, Sat. ii. 6. 45.
—, adj., C. i. 31. 12.

T.

Taeunarius, C. i. 34. 10.
Tanaïs, C. iii. 4. 36; C. iii. 10. 1; C. iii. 29. 28; C. iv. 15. 24.
—, spado, Sat. i. 1. 105.
Tantalus, C. i. 28. 7; C. ii. 13. 37; C. iv. 18. 37; Epod. xvii. 66; Sat. i. 1. 68.
Tarentinuss, Epp. ii. 1. 207.
Tarentum, C. i. 28. 29; C. ii. 6. 11; C. iii. 5. 56; Sat. i. 6. 105; Sat. ii. 4. 34; Epp. i. 7. 45; Epp. i. 16. 11.
Tarpe (Sp. Maeaeus), Sat. i. 10. 38; Art. Poët. 337.
Tarquinius, C. i. 12. 35; Sat. i. 6. 13; Sat. i. 8. 15.
Tartrara, C. i. 28. 10.
Tartrarus, C. iii. 7. 17.
Taurus (T. Statliius), Epp. i. 5. 4.
Teanum, Epp. i. 1. 86.
Tecmessa, C. ii. 4. 6.
Teius, C. i. 17. 18; Epod. xiv. 10.
Telamon, C. i. 7. 21; C. ii. 4. 5.
Telegonus, C. iii. 29. 8.
Telemachus, Epp. i. 7. 40.
Telephus, heroes, Epod. xvii. 8; Art. Poët. 96; ibid. 164.
—, adolescens, C. i. 13. 1; C. iii. 19. 26; C. iv. 11. 21.
Tellus, C. ii. 12. 7; Carm. Sec. 29; Epp. ii. 1. 143.
Tempe, C. i. 7. 4; C. i. 21. 9; C. iii. 1. 24.
Tempestatas, Epod. x. 24.
Terentius, Sat. i. 2. 20; Sat. ii. 3. 202, sqq.; Epp. ii. 1. 59.
Teritates. Vide Tiridates.
Termini, Epod. ii. 59.
Terra, C. iii. 4. 73.

Teucer, C. i. 7. 21; ibid. ver. 27; C. i. 15. 24; Sat. ii. 3. 204.
Teucrus, C. iv. 6. 12.
Thaia, C. iv. 6. 28.
Thallarchus, C. i. 9. 8.
Thebae, C. i. 7. 3; C. iv. 4. 64; Sat. ii. 5. 84; Epp. i. 16. 74; Epp. ii. 1. 213; Art. Poët. 118.
Thebanus, C. i. 19. 2; Epp. i. 3. 13; Art. Poët. 394.
Theoninus, Epp. i. 18. 82.
Theseus, C. iv. 7. 27.
Theopis, Epp. ii. 1. 163; Art. Poët. 276.
Theseus, C. i. 7. 4; C. i. 10. 15; C. ii. 27. 21; C. ii. 4. 10; Epod. v. 45; Epp. ii. 2. 209.
Thenis, C. i. 8. 14; C. iv. 6. 6; Epod. xiii. 12; ibid. ver. 16.
Thrase, Epp. i. 3. 3; Epp. i. 16. 13.
Thrase, C. ii. 16. 5; C. iii. 25. 11.
Thracese, C. i. 27. 2; C. ii. 19. 16; Epod. v. 14.
Tiracios, C. i. 25. 11; C. iv. 12. 2.
Thrax (al. Threx), Sat. ii. 6. 44; Epp. i. 18. 36.
Threicius, C. i. 24. 13; C. i. 36. 14; Epod. xiii. 3.
Threess, C. iii. 9. 9.
Thurarius Vicus, Epp. ii. 1. 269.
Thurinus, C. iii. 9. 14; Sat. ii. 8. 20.
Thyestes, C. i. 16. 17; Art. Poët. 91.
Thyestes, Epod. v. 86.
Thylias, C. ii. 19. 9; C. iii. 15. 10.
Thynus, C. iii. 7. 3.
Thyoneus, C. i. 17. 23.
Tiberius, C. iii. 12. 7; Sat. ii. 2. 31; Epp. i. 11. 4.
Tiberis, C. i. 2. 13; ibid. ver. 17; ibid. ver. 19; C. i. 8. 8; C. i. 29. 12; C. ii. 3. 18; C. iii. 7. 28; Sat. i. ix. 18; Sat. ii. 1. 8; Sat. ii. 3. 292; Epp. i. 11. 19; Art. Poët. 67.
Tiberius Claudius Nero, vide etiam Nero, C. iv. 14. 14; ibid. ver. 15; ibid. ver. 29; Epp. i. 3. 2.
—, praenomen Oppidii, Sat. ii. 3. 173.
Tibullus Albius, C. i. 33; ibid. ver. 2; Epp. i. 4.
Tibur, C. i. 7. 21; C. i. 18. 2; C. ii. 6. 5; C. iii. 4. 23; C. iii. 29. 6; C. iv. 2. 31; C. iv. 3. 10; Epp. i. 7. 45; Epp. i. 8. 12; Epp. ii. 2. 3.
Tiburnus, C. i. 7. 13.
Tiburs, Sat. i. 6. 108; Sat. ii. 4. 70.
Tigellius (M.), Sat. i. 2. 3; Sat. i. 3. 3.
—, Hermogenes, Sat. i. 3. 129; Sat. i. 4. 72; Sat. i. 9. 26; Sat. i. 10. 16; ibid. ver. 80; ibid. ver. 90.
Tigris, C. iv. 14. 46.
Tullius (Cimber), Sat. i. 6. 24; ibid. ver. 107.
Timagenes, Epp. i. 19. 15.
Timor, C. iii. 1. 37.
Tiresias, Sat. ii. 5. 1; ibid. ver. 5; ibid. ver. 60.
Tiridates, C. i. 26. 5.
Tisiphone, Sat. i. 8. 34.
Titiäes, C. iii. 4. 43.
Tithonus, C. i. 28. 3; C. ii. 16. 30.
Titius, Epp. i. 3. 9. 10.
Tityos, C. ii. 14. 3; C. iii. 4. 77; C. iii. 11. 21; C. iv. 6. 2.
Torquatus (vel L. Manlius Torquatus vel C. Nonius Asprenas Torquatus), C. iv. 7; Epp. i. 5. 3.
——— (L. Manlius), Epod. xiii. 5.
Trauius, Sat. ii. 2. 99.
Trebatius Testa (C.), Sat. ii. 1. 4; ibid. ver. 78.
Trebonius, Sat. i. iv. 114.
Triquetrus, Sat. ii. 6. 55.
Triumphius, C. iv. 2. 49; Epod. ix. 21. 23.
Trivicum, Sat. i. 5. 79.
Troles, C. iv. 6. 15.
Troja, vide Ilion, Pergama, C. i. 8. 14; C. i. 10. 13; C. ii. 4. 12; C. iii. 3. 60; ibid. ver. 61; C. iv. 6. 3; C. iv. 15. 31; Carm. Sec. 41; Sat. ii. 3. 191; Sat. ii. 5. 18; Epp. i. 2. 19; Art. Poët. 141.
Trojanus, C. i. 23. 11; Epp. i. 2. 1; Art. Poët. 147.
Troicis, C. i. 6. 14; C. iii. 3. 32.
Troilus, C. ii. 9. 16.
Tullius (Servius), Sat. i. 6. 9.
Tullus (Hostilius), C. iv. 7. 15.
——— (L. Volcatus), C. iii. 8. 12.
Turbo, Sat. ii. 3. 310.
Turlius, Sat. ii. 1. 49.
Tusculum, C. iii. 29. 8; Epod. i. 29.
Tuscus, C. iii. 7. 28; C. iv. 4. 54; Sat. ii. 2. 33; Sat. ii. 3. 223; Epp. i. 2. 202; ibid. ver. 269.
Tydides, C. iii. 6. 16.; C. i. 15. 28.
Tyndaridae, C. iv. 8. 31; Sat. i. 1. 100.
Tyndaris, C. i. 16. 1. Conf. ibid. ver. 10.
Typhoeus, C. iii. 4. 53.
Tyrius, C. iii. 29. 60; Epod. xii. 21; Sat. ii. 4. 84; Epp. i. 6. 18.
Tyrrhenus, C. i. 11. 6; C. iii. 10. 12; C. iii. 24. 4; C. iii. 29. 1; C. iv. 15. 3; Epp. ii. 2. 180.

U.

Ulixes, C. i. 6. 7; C. i. 15. 21; Epod. xvi. 60; Epod. xvii. 16; Sat. ii. 3. 197; ibid. ver. 204; Sat. ii. 5. 3; ibid. ver. 59; ibid. ver. 100; Epp. i. 2. 18; ibid. ver. 19; Epp. i. 6. 63; Epp. i. 7. 40; Art. Poët. 141.
Ulubrae, Epp. i. 11. 30.
Umber, Sat. ii. 4. 40.

V.

Umbrenus, Sat. ii. 2. 133.
Umumidius, Sat. i. 1. 95.
Ustica, C. i. 17. 11.
Utica, Epp. i. 20. 13.
Sat. i. 5. 40 (conf. ibid. ver. 48); Sat. i. 6. 55; Sat. i. 10. 45; ibid. ver. 81; Epp. ii. 1. 247; Art. Poët. 55.
———, alius a poëta (?), C. iv. 12.
Virtus, C. ii. 2. 19; C. iii. 2. 17; Carm. Sec. 58; Epod. ix. 26.
Viscus (Vibius), Sat. i. 9. 22; Sat. i. 10. 83.
Viscus Thurinus, conviva Nasidieni, Sat. ii. 8. 20.
Visellius, Sat. i. 1. 105.
Volanerius, Sat. ii. 7. 16.
Volcanus, C. i. 4. 8; C. iii. 4. 59; Sat. i. 5. 74.
Volteius Mena, Epp. i. 7. 55; ibid. ver. 64. 91.

Voltur, C. iii. 4. 9.
Volumnus Eutrapelus, Epp. i. 18. 31.
Voranus, Sat. i. 8. 39.

X et Z.

Xanthias Phoecus, C. ii. 4, totum.
Xenocrates, Sat ii. 3. 257.
Zephyrus, C. iii. 1. 24; C. iv. 7. 9; Epp. i. 7. 13.
Zethus, Epp. i. 18. 42.
INDEX TO THE NOTES.

A.
Ab (after), 317.
Abacus, 398, 449.
Abdure, 150.
Abi, 695.
Abludere, 489.
Abnormis, 448.
AbUa, 633.
Absorbere, 482.
Abundare, 510.
Ac, 329, 432.
Acastas, 162.
Accusative, 258, 312, 357, 468, 512, 535, 574.
Acervus, 661.
Acetum, 410.
Achilles, 305.
Acinaces, 61.
Acipenser, 453.
Actiaci Ludi, 51.
Actium, 83, 269, 295.
Apollo of, 265.
Actors, 638, 713.
Acumen, 433, 635.
Acus, 479.
Aegaeus, 475.
Aeolus, 14.
Aequatiis, 659.
Aeque ut, (repeated), 650.
Aera, 399.
Aedepol, 593.
Aedes, 430.
Aedituus, 676.
Aemilia, 394.
Aeneus, 147, 477, 553.
Acus, 14.
Acquies, 659.
Aequiv ut, 203.
Aerugo, 372.
Alex, 489.
Alexander, 133, 301, 657.
Alexandria, 202.
Alis, 479.
Allegory, 37.
Alloquium, 305.
Almus, 150, 263.
Altar, 49.
Altus, 174, 233.
Alumnus, 186, 196.
Aluta, 394.
Amon, 112.
Amare, 57.
Amen, (to be wont), 181.
Amber, 503.
Ambition, 366, 396.
Ambuia, 337.
Ampulla, 625.
Amor, 349.
Anacreon, 45.
Ancilla, 247.
Anguis, 116.
Animosus, 408.
Annoles, 661.
Annona, 629.
Anum, in, 563, 607.
Ante, 162.
Antestari, 424.
Anticnes, 12.
Ador, 523.
Adorea, 299.
Adorem, 364.
Adscribere, 646.
Adversarium, 424.
Adversus, 479.
Advocatus, 326.
Alum, 150, 263.
Alta Semita, 413.
Alma, 49.
Amphiarans, 181.
Amphorae, 29, 92, 165, 541, 691, 700.
Ampulla, 567, 707.
Amynas, 296.
Aegaeus, 475.
Amelius, 81.
Anacreon, 45.
Aquila, 154.
Ampulla, 247.
Anqis, 116.
Ampulla, 408.
Annales, 661.
Annona, 629.
Annum, in, 563, 607.
Ante, 162.
Antestari, 424.
Antimachus, 710, 711.
Antisthenes, 633.
Antonius, M., 82, 154, 201, 296, 337, 375.
Artem, 328.
Apelles, 537, 722.
Aper, 286, 482.
Aper, 73, 75, 194.
Apothea, 82, 165, 503.
Apotheoses, 407.
INDEX

Apples, 485, 498.
Applorare, 301.
Apprecatus, 259.
Apprime, 134.
Aricum, in, 579.
April, 18, 247.
Aptare, 554.
Aqua coelestis, 170.
Ar (ad), 573.
Arbiter, 607.
Arbitrium, 704.
Arbustum, 409.
Area, 679.
Arce, 551, 595.
Arcassere, 573, 672.
Archipolus, 291, 704.
Archimedes, 64.
Arquatus morbus, 728.
Arctius, 709.
Arctus, 709.
Arctus, 204.
Art, 94, 168, 242, 301, 365.
Area, 4, 30, 329.
Aretalogus, 335.
Arctium, 2.
Argentarius, 409.
Argileatrum, 651.
Argutus, 618, 638.
Ariane, 132.
Aristophanes, 441.
Armenia, 565.
Arms of a Roman soldier, 115.

——— Love, 204.
Arrogare, 236, 708.
Ars, 238, 657, 603.
Art, works of, 306.
Artaxias, 565.
Artificial wants, 329.
Artists (Greek), 607.
Arvum, 535.
Arx, 8, 98, 516.
As, 722.
Assidere, 574.
Asius, 704.
Assyria, 109.
Astrae, 267.
Astrology, 31, 125.
Astydama, 162.
At, 284, 310, 339, 332, 330, 368, 400, 426, 452.
Atavus, 2.
Atellanae Fabulae, 383, 426.
Ater, 518, 726.
Athens, 407.
Athletae, 667.
Aticoti, 150.
Atlas, 75.
Atmosphere,.
Atque, 316, 408.
Atqui, 327, 444.

Atramentum, 676.
Atriensis, 450.
Atrium, 520.
Attagen, 278.
Attentus, 522, 593.
Atterere caudam, 133.
Attonitus, 189.
Attraction, 392, 588.
Auctor, 64, 371, 374, 453.
Auctorari, 530.
Audire, 517, 534, 589, 625.
Auditor et ulterior, 649.
Augur, 267.
Augusta Praetoria, 150.
Augustus:
The avenger of Caesar, 7.
His reforms, 7, 119, 197.
His triumphs, 12.
Receives that name, 142.
Conspiracies against, 147.
Assigns lands to his troops, 150, 513.
Restores temples, 158.
In Spain, 176, 232.
Goes to Gaul, 220, 230.
Kindness to Horace, 222.
War with Sex. Pompeius, 261.
Purposes of Pompeius, 728.
Generosity to Virgil and Varius, 382, 654, 677.
His health, 413, 613.
His contempt for libels, 436.
In Asia, 439.
Claims descent from Aeneas, 508.
His seal, 519.
Fond of observing boxers, 552, 673.
Cured by Musa, 563, 619.
Places Tigranes on the Armenian throne, 565.
His birthday, 572.
His recovery of the standards, 611.
His divinity, 657.
Burns prophetic books, 659.
Pontifex Maximus, 650.
His taste for the old comedy, 672.
Restores Vei, 693.
Aula, 129.
Aulaeum, 212, 542, 674, 711.
Aura, 103, 141.
Auricus, 21.
Auriga, 138.
Auspicium, 22, 26, 256, 678.
Automatis, 532.
Autumn, 118, 516, 572, 587, 625.

Avernerus lacus, 703.
Averere, 495.
Avertere, 495.
Aviaries, 138.
Avidus, 47, 152, 374, 712.

B.

Bacchanal, 202.
Bacchus, 34, 301, 309.
Bacchylides, 706, 717.
Balans, 212.
Balatro, 337.
Balbus, 652.
Ball-play, 405, 449, 520.
Balneator, 616.
Bandusia, 625.
Barathrum, 475.
Barbaria, 561.
Barbarus, 295.
Barbers, 120, 407, 590.
Barbitos, 6, 71.
Basica, 628.
Basis, 403.
Bathing, 405, 583, 620.
Baths, 359.
Batilum, 390.
Bavius, 291.
Beans, 521, 568.
Beards, 359, 464, 466.
Beats, 673.
Beasts, wild (shows of), 673.
Beatus, 727.
Bees, 221, 368.
Bellonarii, 728.
Bellusius, 256.
Bene est, 183, 515, 537.
Benigne, 588, 591.
Bibere, 135, 169, 259.
——— auribus, 116.
Bidental, 729.
Becormis, 265.
Biformis, 134.
Bilinguis, 429.
Birds, 483.
Brenises, 214.
Birthdays, 246, 695.
Bis terve, 266.
Botaner, 528.
Boletus, 492.
Bona, 357.
——— pars, 330.
Booksellers, 651.
Boundaries, 693.
Boxers, 552.
Boys, trick of, 629.
TO THE NOTES.
INDEX

Creta, 81, 454, 483.
Cretan wine, 81.
Cretici, 661.
Crocus, 498, 665.
Crow, 206.
Crumen, 624.
Crux, 354, 524.
Cubare, 44, 419, 486, 666.
Cubital, 484.
Cuckoo, 459.
Culpa, 456, 515.
Cultor agelli, 708.
Culullus, 727.
Cumerus, 330, 589.
Cuminum, 647.
Cumque, 71.
Cuneus, 78.
Cup-bearers, 67.
Cur, 12, 595.
Curare, 505.
—— comas, 556.
—— cutem, 562, 571.
Curatela, 557.
Curator, 330, 450.
Curriculum, 2.
Curitus, 401.
Curule magistracies, 3, 393, 395, 582.
Curvare, 495.
Curvum, 665.
Custodia, 550.
Custos, 364, 689, 711.
Cyathus, 189, 330.
Cybele, 344.
Cyclus, 18.
Cyclidus, 709.
Cycenus, 134.
Cynics, 632, 643.
Cyrenaics, 549.

D.

Dacent, 355.
Dama, 9.
Dannatus, 471.
Dameoles, 138.
Dancing, 113, 160.
Dare, and its compounds, 479, 537.
Dative, 4, 56, 61, 212, 218, 353, 368, 465, 467, 472, 507, 717, 867.
Day, distribution of, 590.
Days, lucky, 80.
De (after), 617, 642.
—— (medio die, &c.), 536.
—— (intensive), 327.

De, in composition, 21.
Death, 441.
Decempeda, 121.
Decemvirate, 658.
Decidere, 660.
Decidius Saxa, 150.
Declaration, 560.
Decumanus, 333.
Decere, 156.
Dedicare, 69.
Deducere, 439, 478, 676, 709.
Defendere, 427, 713.
Defingere, 436.
Defricare, 426.
Defundere, 453.
Deiotarus, 296.
Delassare, 327.
Delenire, 139.
Delirare, 610.
Delitigere, 706.
Delubrum, 158.
Demissus, 332.
Democritus, 577.
Denatare, 163.
Denormare, 515.
Densere, 65.
Deprensus, 122.
Derisor, 637.
Descendere, 193, 597.
Desertor, 335.
Designare, 574.
Designator, 587.
Destinare, 470.
Destituo, 145.
Detestus, 5.
Deversorium, 620.
Dexter, 206.
Dextro tempore, 440.
Delatores, 369.
Denarius, 529.
Di and de confounded, 4, 30, 115, 137, 155, 163, 251, 252, 322, 432, 441, 453, 573, 587, 600, 612.
Diana, 159, 194.
Diaria, 618.
Dice-box, 527.
Dicere, 101.
Dido, 454.
Diem frangere, 100.
Dies, 42, 304.
—— Jovis, 486.
—— nefasti, 114.
Diespiter, 75, 142.
Differre, 717.
Differre, 377, 563.
Diffundere, 444.
Diffingere, 79, 214.
Diffundere, 453, 573.
Digentia, 182, 624.
E.

E, in composition, 21.
Eagle, 226.
Ear-ring, 482.
Earth eneware, 403.
East, trade of the, 337, 577.
Ebrius, 83.
Echinus, 403, 542.
Echo, 33, 50.
Ephantides, 720.
Edicere, 646.
Edictum, 259, 453.
Edim, 279.
Education of Roman boys, 398, 399, 560, 722.
Egeria, 660.
Eggs, 347, 452, 491.
Ein, 327.
Elaborare, 137.
Elegy, 705.
Elephants, white, 674.
Eliminare, 575.
Ellision, 219.
Elmo, St., 14.
Eludere, 633.
Elutus, 492.
Elysium, 115, 117, 148.
Emancipare, 296.
Emansor, 435.
Emeter, 578.
Emicare, 665.
Emunctus, 363, 717.
En ego, 327.
Enclitics, 181.
Enclosures, 193.
Enius, 144.
Ennus, 239.
Ephippium, 618.
Epicureanism, 145, 182, 356, 480.
Epithets, 8, 141, 133, 254.
Epulum, 471.
Eques, 283, 673.
Equestrian fortune, 724.
Equei albi, 407.
Equitare, 229.
Equites, 244, 529, 553.
—— seat in theatre, 395.
—— petitesque, 707.
Equus, 221.
—— Tuticus, 386.
Ergo, 274.
Erinyes, 416.
Err, 535, 683.
Error, 463.
Eruca, 542.
Eruere, 365.
Esquiae, 212, 245.
Essedum, 674.
Est (ξιοτι), 317, 512.
—— (παρὶοτι), 516.

3 c 2

ESTE, 468.
Et item, 660.
Etiesia fabra, 249.
Etiam, 471.
Etrurians, 391.
Eugammon, 710.
Euris, 202.
Eumolpus, 725.
Euripides, his choruses, 713.
Evagari, 258.
Evening, description of, 161.
Evolvere, 356.
Ex noto, 717.
Exactus, 195.
Excipere, 554.
Excubare, 252.
Excubiae, 180.
Exercere, 367.
Excutere, 168.
Exeretus, 313.
Exercitor, 63.
Exigere, 177, 495.
Exilis, 19.
Eximere, 177.
Exlex, 716.
Expallere, 567.
Expediency, 356.
Expedio, 53.
Expeditus, 286.
Expender, 667.
Experiens, 634.
Expertus, in, 226.
Explicare, 243, 485.
Exponere, 449.
Exsuccus, 206.
Exsultium, 171.
Exterior, 504.
Exstundere, 450.

F.

Fabula, 613.
Fabulosus, 148.
Facere (παραστάτη), 333.
Facetus, 430, 583.
Facundia, 712.
Fallere, 162, 279, Ε32, 643.
Familia, 67.
Fanaticus, 728.
Far, 384.
Farn, Horace's, 624.
Fartor, 481, 581, 589.
Fas, 131.
Fasces, 582.
Facsiolae, 494.
Fasti, 184, 252, 661.
Fastidium, 601.
Fasts, 487.
Fatum, 264.
Faunalia, 186.
INDEX

Faunus, 131.
Favere linguis, 137.
Faxim, 466.
Fear, coupled with desire, 629.
Fearing, verbs of, 443.
Fecundus, 575.
Felix, 386.
Fera, 267.
Ferculum, 523.
Fere, 577.
Feriae Latinae, 592.
Fern, 351.
Ferre, 598.
— pedem, 113.
Ferula, 357.
Festinare (trans.), 564.
Festucar, 531.
Fictile, 700.
Fide, 356.
Fidens, 151.
Fides, 56, 78, 580.
Figere, 179.
Figs, 456.
Fig-tree, 411.
Filum, 676.
Findere, 4.
Fingere, 159.
Fingers, names of, 540.
Fingo, 222.
Finis, 129, 318.
Firmus, 634.
First-fruits, 504.
Fish, 451.
— costly, 496.
Fistula, 190.
Flagellum, 357.
Flectere, 163, 213.
Floralia, 477.
Flowers, 574.
Focale, 484.
Focus, 276, 573, 615.
Podicare, 562.
Podera Regum, 659.
Folia Delia, 224.
Fomenta, 302, 563.
Fonte Bello, 625.
— Ratino, 625.
Fordicidia, 669.
Fore (abl.), 342.
Forehead, 72, 583.
Forensis, 717.
Foress, 524.
Forma, 472.
Formare, 200, 373, 669.
Formae, 183, 381.
Formido, 577.
Formidolosus, 287.
Fornix, 616.
Fors, 29, 325.
Forsit, 396.
Fortasse, 401.
Fortes et boni, 228.
Fortis, 439, 456, 579.
Fortiter, 621.
Fortitudo, 121.
Fortuna, 11, 76.
Fortunae fulxus, 529.
Fortunare, 907.
Fortune-tellers, 31, 337, 403.
Forum, 481, 520, 627.
Fossor, 187.
Fraus, 132, 265.
Friendship, 522, 599.
— Pythagoras' definition of, 124.
Fritillus, 476.
Frog, fable of, 483.
Fronte, in, 413.
Frontibus adversis, 333.
Fugi, 509, 526, 625, 627.
Frumentatio, 471.
Frustra, 175, 163.
Fucus, 601.
Fuga, 239.
Fugitivus, 535, 598.
Fulgur, fulmen, 107.
Fullo, 454.
Fulminare, 144.
Fumarium, 165.
Fumum et cinerem, 622.
Fumus, 710.
Funalis equus, 170.
Funambulus, 675.
Functum laboribus, 130.
Fundatus, 622.
Fundus, 135, 563, 512.
Funeral expenses, 512.
Funerals, 396, 471, 687, 727.
Funeratus, 163.
Fungi, 492.
Funis, 692.
Furca, 531.
— expellere, 600.
Furcifer, 528.
Furiosi, 480.
Furnus, 367, 606.
Furo, 290, 480.
Furtum, 357, 475.
Furvus, 24, 115, 144, 196, 374.
Future, 50, 168, 354.
Gabinius, 95.
Galatia, 296.
Gallus, 147.
Gambling, 201.
Ganymede, 191, 226.
Garum, 497, 542.
Gaul, 439.
Gaussape, 537.
Geminus, 3.
Genitive, 67, 74, 81, 154,
162, 168, 185, 189, 193,
216, 230, 235, 243, 250,
255, 331, 340, 372, 390,
444, 451, 462, 465, 522,
544, 633, 674.
Gens (sine gente), 504.
Genus, 504.
Genus, 16, 392.
Georgies, 301, 323, 430.
Ghost, 695.
Giants' wars, 151.
Girdle, 377.
Gladiators, 470, 519, 530,
533, 547, 633, 641, 673, 688.
Glomus, 613.
Gloria, 266, 309, 639, 673.
Gluttony, 447, 583.
Graces, 68.
Gracius, his scholia, 11.
Grammarians, 363, 649, 705.
Grandis, 305.
Grassor, 511.
Gravis, 241, 266.
— (senectus), 325.
Gravitas, 663.
Grex, 597.
Gustus, 347, 450.
Guttus, 403.
Gyges, 125.
Gyrus interior, 518.

H.

Habet, 313.
Habilis, 190.
Habitable orae, 253.
Haerere (construction), 71.
Hair, 96, 245, 302, 309.
Hanging, 209.
Hares, 496.
Harpastum, 449.
Harvest songs, 670.
Healer, Apollo the, 267.
Heart, 552.
Heavenly bodies, motion of, 518.
Hellebore, 479, 691, 721.
Heptachord, 28, 705, 715.
Hercules, 26, 237.
Here, 536.
Heredipetae, 501.
Heres ex asse, solus, 507.
— ex quadrante, 507, 512.
— secundus, 507.
Hiatus, 65, 134, 392, 334.
Hic (more remote), 451, 452.
— (of the present day), 350, 353.
Imbellis, 590.
Imi sensus, 307.
Immeritus, 153.
Immersabilis, 561.
Immetatus, 198.
Immo, 349, 472.
Immolare, 19.
Immorsus, 497.
Immunis, 196, 251, 617.
Impar, 302.
Impares (Musae), 189.
Impariter, 704.
Impellere, 333.
Impello, 163.
Impenso, 483.
Imperfect, 61, 82, 349, 571, 634.
— subjunctive, 10, 178.
Imperiosus, 532.
Imperium, 573, 678.
Impermissus, 160.
Imperator, 575.
Impavidus, 160, 690.
Importuna, 412, 583.
Impoten, 122, 215.
Imprensus, 484.
Improbus, 168, 201, 349, 510, 518.
Imum, ad, 630.
In, 301, 342.
— medias res, 711.
— spem, 271.
Inaedus, 302.
Inanis, 344.
Inaudax, 191.
Incendia, 239.
Incenerare, 498.
Incestus, 142.
Incident, 617.
Incitaga, 403.
Incita, 169.
Incolumis, 474, 607.
Inconsitus, 574.
Increbesce, 511.
Increpare, 257, 317.
Incubare, 515.
Incumbo, 17.
Indecoro, 228.
Indi, 35.
India, 53.
Indicative, 126, 180, 439 (bis).
Indignus, 456, 563.
Indolus, 228.
Inemori, 268.
Ineptus, 352.
Infabre, 465.
Infamia, 476.
Infans, 506.
Infans, 506.
Infinivit, 3, 5, 22, 45, 76, 163,
193, 209, 301, 313, 364, 365,
522, 532, 566, 588, 588, 626.
Inflexions, Greek, 40, 48.
Ingenium, 193.
Ingenius, 181, 391, 648, 717.
Inluius, 336.
Ingratus, 338.
Inhospitalis, 271.
Inimicar, 259.
Injuria, 445.
Ink, 676.
Inns, 376.
Inops, 5, 113.
Insania, 490.
Insanity, case of, 472.
Insistere, 312.
Insolabiliter, 615.
Insolens, 21.
Insolentia, 322.
Instii, 340.
Institor, 161.
Insulae divites, 240.
Intactus, 292.
Intaminatus, 141.
Integer, 152.
Inter, 561.
— (repeated), 408.
Interest, 338.
Interim, 275.
Interire, 120.
Interimnatus, 287.
Interpellare, 405.
Interpolation, 234.
Intestabilis, 476.
Intonus, 277.
Intusium, 340, 566.
Intra, 452, 542.
Inuitus, 541.
Isa, 21, 635.
Ita, 456, 515, 711.
Iterare, 132.
Ivy, 6.
J.
Jactari, 473.
Jaculor, 122.
Jamb, 316.
— nunc, 18, 168, 669.
Janus, 103.
Jews, 337, 374, 423, 486.
Jocus, 11, 584.
Jubeo plorare, 435.
Judaca Castra, 256.
— Restituta, 256.
Judex, 244, 441, 449, 721.
Judices Selecti, 373.
Jugglers, 337.
Jugis, 515.
Julia gens, 260, 508.
Julius Caesar, 7, 143, 395.
— his will, 507.
— portus, 703.
Junio, 164.
Jupiter (air), 304.
INDEX

Jura paterna, 717.
Jurare in verba, 309.
Jurgare, 603.
Jurisconsultus, 326.
Jus, 326, 626, 704.
— in, vocare, 400, 424, 505.
— (sac), 497.
— pejeratum, 102.
— privatum, 709.
— respondendi, 326.
Justice, 356.
Justitia, 144.
Juvenari, 154.
Juventus, 68.

K.
Kalendae, 278, 355.

L.
Labienus, 154, 158.
Laborare, 356.
Laboriosus, 317.
Labrum, 370.
Lacerna, 125, 829.
Lacrinosa, 553.
Lactaca, 497.
Lacunar, 485.
Lacus, 367.
— Nemoresis, 376.
Laedere, 209, 309.
Laevius, 665.
Laevus tempore, 491.
Laevus, 206.
Laganus, 403.
Lagenia, 541, 691.
Lagois, 451.
Laqueatus, 122.
Lais, 634.
Lama, 613.
Lamia, 411, 722.
Lana caprina, 638.
Lanapinna, 494.
Language, 356.
Languidus, 103.
Lapathus, 278, 493.
Lapidosus panis, 386.
Lapillus, 599.
Lapidus albus, 403.
Lar, 68, 548, 695.
Lares, 695.
Larvae, 695.
Latrans stomachus, 450.
Latranus (trans.), 446, 564.
Latrocinium, 357.
Latus, 456, 479.
— clavus, 390, 394.
— Latus (laevum), 562.
— tegere, claudere, 504.
Laudare, 302.
— (μακρους), 325
Laurus, 216.
Lautis manibus, 486.
Lavere, 93, 174.
Lays, historical, 659.
Leaden pipes, 600.
Lectica, 480.
Lectus, 192, 371, 572.
— genialis, 555.
— adversus, 555.
— summus, medius, 539.
Legacy-hunting, 500.
Legatus, 256.
Legere, 357.
Leges Sumptuariae, 119, 120.
Legio, 391, 394.
Lemures, 695.
Lemuria, 695, 695.
Lemures, 203.
Lentulus, 106, 164.
Lentus, 309, 454, 689.
Lesches, 709.
Lethargicus, 465.
Levius (adv.), 527.
Lex, 231, 326, 629.
— Aurelia, 373.
— Cornelia, 445.
— de Sicariis et Venericiis, 574.
— Hortensia, 626.
— Julia, 10.
— de adulteriaris, 341.
— de maritandi ordinibus, 264.
— et Papa Poppaea, 264.
— Plaetoria, 339.
— Roscia, 263.
— Servilia, 373.
Libare, 521.
Libellus, 369, 435, 551.
Liber, 302 (bis), 462.
— (adj.), 637.
Libera, 142.
— vina, 706.
Liberalia, 47, 130.
Libertas, 391, 591.
Libertus, 386, 391.
Libra, 354.
Libraries, public, 365.
Librarianus, 723.
Librum, 534, 598.
Licebit, 310, 453.
Liconza, 463.
Licere, 392.
Liceri, 392.
Lictor, 587.
Ligurire, 354.
Limitatio, 693.
Limus, 507.
Lingua utraque, 164.
Lippus, 335, 379.
Liquefacti, 385.
Liquidum (aqua), 330.
Liquids, 149.
Lis, 421, 472.
Literati, 682.
Littus, 129.
Litura, 672.
Livia, 176.
Locare, 129, 336.
Loculus, 336.
Locus, 722.
Loligo, 372.
Lollius, 220.
Longe longeque, 392.
Longum clamare, 728.
Lubricus, 46.
Luces, 253.
Luctet, 583.
Lucina, 164.
Lucrines, 120, 555, 703.
Lucrum, 29.
Lucus, 579.
Ludi, 433.
— literarii, 309.
— — Seculares, 261.
— — Tarentini, 261.
Ludicra, 577.
Ludus, 547.
Lumina prima, 688.
Luna, 189, 394.
— nascens, 196.
Lunae celeres, 236.
Lunatics, 728.
Lupinus, 338.
Lupus, 278, 452.
Luridus, 152, 252.
Lustrum, 397.
Lutulentus, 363.
Luxury, 416.
Lymphae, 338.
Lynceus, 173.
Lynx, 117.
Lyre, 51.
Lyric, Dorian, 706.
— — Aeolian, 706.
Lyricus, 6.

M.
Macellum, 481, 621.
Machina, 687.
Macte, 340.
Mader, 193.
Maecenas 339.
—— — his house, 411.
Maenads, 203.
Maenia columna, 263.
Mensa, 495.
Mecer, 691.
Mercator, 70, 200, 328, 459, 708.
Mercenarius, 515, 592.
Meric, 456.
Mericury, 11, 51, 516.
Merestrix, 342.
Merus, 593, 683.
Merv, 251.
Metal, 602.
Metals, 160.
Metator, 456.
Metempsychosis, 601.
Metiri, 262, 298.
Mexit, 135.
Metuere, 509, 637.
Metsus deorum, 487.
Meditari, 271, 564.
Military tribunes, 394.
Milita, 218, 449.
Milla, 329, 402, 478.
Mimae, 337, 522.
Mimi, 426, 522, 649, 675, 690.
Mina, 533.
Minari, 595, 611.
Minerval, 399, 695.
Minimo provocare, 364.
Minturnae, 331.
Mirari, 20, 463, 531, 577, 611.
Mirrors, 245.
Miser, 465.
Mistus, 403.
Modo, 65, 349, 427, 435.
Modus, 815.
Mola salsa, 479.
Molinen, 688.
Mollities, 435.
Momentum, 326, 599.
Monanoma, 690.
Monuments, 413.
Moon, influences of, 493.
Morari, 208, 403.
Morbus Regius, 728.
Mordax, 632.
Mondere, 519.
Mores, 200, 231.
Mos, 626.
Move, 163, 393.
Moveri (trans.), 690.
Mulleus, 394, 452.
Mulsum, 348, 450.
Multum, 87, 474, 511.
Multus, 409.
Mundia, 20.
Mundus, 33, 454.
— (adj.), 571.
Munen (P. Rupilius), 406.
Munere fungi, 596.
Munus, 64.
Muraena, 542.
Murena, 39.
Murex, 123, 494, 601, 675, 694.
Moria, 407, 542.
Murheus, 178.
Murteta, 620.
Murus, 147.
Musa, Antonius, 563, 605, 613.
Muses, 33.
Mushroom, 492.
Music, Greek, 715.
Musicians, street, 337.
Mustum, 493.
Mutare, 44, 272, 298, 554.
Mutus piscis, 224.
Myrtus, 120.
Mysteries, 187, 142.
Mythology, confusion of, 152.

N.

Nam, 404, 466, 554.
Name (inative), 353.
Names, fictitious, 110, 342.
— , inverted, 90, 620.
— plural, 555.
— plural for sing., 34.
— proper, in the plur., 407.

Nardum, 305.
Nardus, 250.
Nares, 650.
Nasus aduncus, 391.
Nauta, 63, 328.
Navigium, 586.
Ne, 94, 201, 357, 477.
— (enclitie), 361, 428, 487, 604.
— forte, 445.
Ne—, 421.
Nebula, 179.
Nebulo, 334.
Nec, 22, 36, 173, 456.
Nec—et, 338.
Nedum, 704.
Nefastus, 574.
Negative and positive sentences, 325.
Negotia, 579.
Negotiator, 406, 579.
Nempe, 426.
Nemus, 169.
Nenia, 318, 553.
Nequem, 471.
Neque, 163.
Nerva, 379.
Nervi, 438.
Nescio an, 470.
Nescius, 22, 141.
INDEX

Nessus, 280.
Neuter adjectives, 112.
——— plural, 220.
Nightingales, 433.
Nigri ignes, 251.
Nil est, 463.
Nimium, 596.
Nitere, 458.
Nives capitis, 252.
Nobilis, 393.
Nodosus, 551.
Nodus, 194.
Nomen, 192, 200, 221, 9, 625, 668.
——— and numen con-
Nomenclator, 540, 581.
Nomina verbaque, 716.
——— dominantia, 716.
Non, 369, 390, 479, 601.
——— for ne, 36, 371, 642.
—— secus—ut, 202.
Nones, 278.
Norma, 704.
Noster, 668.
Notarius, 399.
Novus, 278.
Ocellati, 476.
Oceas, 482.
Octavia, 375.
Octonis, 398.
Odore, 20.
Offensus, 310.
Officiosus, 587.
Officium, 633, 639.
Ohe jam, 511.
Olympic Games, 2.
Omnasus, 506.
Onyx, 250.
Opacus, 151.
Opella, 597.
Ope, 566.
Operari, 177.
Operosus, 139, 222.
Opetus, 102.
Opprimere, 492.
Optio, 649.
Optivus, 689.
Ora, in, 567.
Orator, 326, 568.
Orbes, 449.
Orbillus, 556.
Orbis, 709.
Orbus, 223.
Orca, 498.
Orcus, 115.
Orichalcum, 714.
Orients, 207, 609.
Orontes, 132.
Orpheus, 135.
Oryza, 475.
Oasines aves, 206.
Ostium, 576.
Ostrea, 450.
Ownership, 692.
Oysters, 692.
Oysters, 692.
P. and D. interchanged, 644.
Pacuvius, 468.
Pacifugus, 399, 711.
Paene, 661.
Paenula, 607.
Paetus, 351.
Palam, 302.
Palazzo (Bandsia), 174.
Palilia, 17, 246.
Palinode, 42, 319.
Palla, 340, 414, 715, 719.
Pallere (trans.), 207.
Paliiate, 662.
Palmetum, 604.
Paludamentum, 298.
Palus, 703.
Pamphus, 725.
Pampinus, 203.
Pan, 131.
Panis secundus, 668.
Pannus, 633.
Pantheon, 578.
Pantomimi, 160.
Pappusy, 462.
Par, 310.
——— impar, 483.
——— (subst.), 409.
Parallelogram, 532.
Parasite, 384, 440, 449, 638.
Parcne, 124.
Paris, 41.
Paroehus, 332, 541.
Parra, 206.
Parthians, 10, 48, 58, 104, 113, 140, 146, 147, 154, 232, 439, 611.
Partiarus, 456.
Participle in —ens, 8, 122.
Particulum, 455.
Parvus animus, 339.
Passer (piscis), 540.
Passive of neuter and depon-Patruus, 174, 456, 471.
Patulus, 494, 641, 709.
Patruum, 421.
Pauper, 216, 452, 609.
Paupertas, 5.
Pavements, 499, 599.
Pax, 78.
Peau, 451, 493.
Peccare timentes, 714.
Pecten, 494.
Pectore, sine, 570.
Peculium, 531.
Pecunia, 580.
Pecus, 625.
Pede (trans.), 430.
Pede, 516, 706.
Pedissequi, 418.
Pejus, 634.
Pellax, 163.
Pellere, 470, 523.
O.
Peloria, 494.
Penates, 114.
Penetralia, 114.
—Vestae, 689.
Penus, 629.
Pepper, 498, 617.
Per as et libram, 691.
— and pro, 166.
Percontator, 641.
Perculus, 300.
Percusius, 300.
Perdocet, 552.
Perdutor, 509.
Perfect, 2, 227, 571.
Perferre patique, 621.
Pergamum, 605.
Periculo, 270.
Periscelis, 633.
Peristylum, 600.
Peritus, 135.
Perjurare, 473.
Perjury, lovers', 102, 309.
Pernix, 276.
Perpeti, 16.
Perpetuum carmen, 25.
Perseus, 135.
Persequi, 40, 148, 112.
Persius, 235.
Persona, 719.
Perusia, 292, 311, 375.
Pervidere, 349.
Peteire, 137.
Petrifacium, 401, 519, 674.
Pexus, 556.
Phaeacius, 562.
Phaedrius, Plato's, 116.
Phalangae, 18.
Phalaris, bull of, 564.
Pharmacopoeia, 337.
Philip, 181.
Philomela, 249.
Phiacula, 551.
Ficus, 206.
Fieris, 924.
Eila, 308, 382, 724.
Filamentum, 674.
Fileus, 614.
Phrases, 58, 164.
Pindar, 706.
Pinna marina, 494.
Phinotheres, 494.
Piscinaris, 120.
Pituita, 454, 557.
Placentam, 540.
Placentae? 313.
Plagiae, 276, 503, 640.
Plagosus, 604.
Planus, 625.
Plate, 449.
Platae, 637.
Platonic year, 262.

Plaudite, 711.
Plebeiscra, 626.
Plleys, 176, 526, 553.
Pleous annus, 166.
Plorumque, 507, 706.
Pluma, 244.
Plumbetus, 516.
Plures, 375, 694.
Plurimus, 25, 635.
Podium, 548.
Poem, definition of, 363.
Poena, 142.
Poet, attributes of, 363.
Poets, Greek, charged with drunkenness, 646.
Pol, 503.
Pollex, 641.
Pollio, 375.
Polycorus, 463.
Polybus, 351.
Pompeius Sex., 38, 281, 292, 205.
Pompitne Marshes, 377, 703.
Pondera, 582.
Ponere; 178, 238, 344, 451, 491.
—— in mensa, 491, 609.
—— nomen, 347.
Pontifex Maximus, 216.
Pontifices, 119.
——, their books, 659.
Pontius (C.), 293.
Pontus, 39.
Popellus, 592.
Popina, 497, 529, 616.
Poplar, 26, 92.
Porrectus, 169.
Porro, 560.
Porticus, 574, 466, 554, 578.
—— Philippi, 430.
Possum, 172.
Pos, 194.
Postgenitus, 199.
Potens, 14, 21, 216, 263, 708.
Potenter, 701.
Potes nam, 319.
Prisor, 135.
Pottery, 700.
Praecanus, 652.
Praectus, 377.
Praeco, 400, 453, 591, 726.
Praecordia, 279.
Praedium, 615.
Praefecture, 360.
Praegustator, 524.
Praelusio, 547.
Præmia, 597.
Præpetes aves, 206.
Præsens, 77, 452, 553.
Præteritus, 393.
Prætextae, 720.
Prætor, 408.

Praevaricari, 352.
Praevertere, 351.
Praedantium, 376.
Pratinas, 716.
Pravus, 455, 531.
Prayer, 195, 269, 518, 628, 571, 628, 669.
Premere, 69.
Preposition, 202, 659.
Preitious, 160.
Price, 119.
Princeps, 12.
Priscus, 183, 193.
Privatus, 706.
Privus, 504.
Pro (prob.)!, 154.
Processions, 177.
Proene, 249.
Procul, 523, 688.
Proculeius, 89, 90.
Procurator, 505, 575, 609.
——— peni, 450.
Prodigi, 480.
Prodigaliter, 701.
Producere, 264.
Proferre, 293.
Prohibere, 551.
Promittere, 463.
Promulus, 347, 450, 537.
Promus, 450, 575.
Pronoun, personal, 6, 185, 222, 329.
———, possessive, 195, 271, 365.
Prope, 255, 355, 466, 577, 637.
Propellere, 336.
Properare, 566, 662.
Propraetor, 684.
Propric, 709.
Proprius, 515.
Propugnacula, 270.
Prosa, 112.
Proritus, 609.
Proximus, 33.
Prudens, 471.
Ptisanarium, 475.
Publica, 554.
Publius Syrus, 427.
Padens prave, 706.
Pudor, 56.
——— malus, 625.
Puellæ, 103, 177, 247.
Pulle (Musae), 126.
Puer, 177, 207, 289, 332, 474, 726.
Pueri a studiis, 435.
Pulcher, 707.
Pulcher esse, 539.
Pullus, 351, 414.
Pulmentaria, 450.
Pulmentum, 640.
INDEX

Pulvere, sine, 552.
Pumex, 651.
Punctuation, abuse of, 271, 276.
Punctum, 326, 689, 723.
Punic, 548.
Pythagoras, 375.
Qua, 454.
Quadrans, 352.
Quadrare, 589.
Quadrira, 697.
Quaerere et uti, 591.
Quales, 174.
Quamvis, 61.
Quandocunque (aliquando), 420.
Quandoque, 71.
Quanquam, 64.
Quatenus, 15, 675.
Quedam, 129, 138.
Quedum, 278.
Quod, 474.
Quaerimonia, 704.
Quid, 129.
— agis? 567.
— eum, 325, 473.
— ergo est? 723.
— quaevis? 598.
Quidquid deorum, 285.
Quin, 116, 291, 327.
Quincunx, 722.
Quindicimviri, 261, 268.
Quinquatru, 694.
Quinque dies, 587.
Quinqueveir, 508.
Quintessence, 37.
Quivis, 439.
Quo, 394, 574.
— ne, 441.
Quoad, 471.
Quod, 329, 593.
— si, 6, 56, 306.

Quodam, 107, 455, 642.
Quorsum, 463, 479, 483.
Quota (hora), 189.
Quotations, 312.
Quotu, 575.
R.
Ramos, 723.
Rapina, 357, 475.
Rapit, 439.
Rapula, 452.
Rasa, 617.
Ratio, 325.
Ratione modoque, 653.
Raven, 206.
Ravus, 206, 313.
Re-, in composition, 70.
Recitation, 360, 370, 649, 689.
Recuctus, 506.
Rectus, 243.
Reddere, 15, 675.
Redigere, 278.
Redonare, 100, 145.
Reducere, 422.
Referre acceptum, 469, 476.
—— expensum, 463.
Refert, 329.
Refringere, 145.
Refulgere, 126.
Regero, 409.
Regnare (trans.), 216.
Relative, 253, 328, 466.
Remigium, 504.
Remittere, 109.
Remixtus, 259.
Remiguer, 169.
Renedere, 159, 278.
Renodare, 302.
Repotia, 453.
Reptare, 570.
Repuls, 141, 551.
Rerum prudentia, 243.
Res, 421, 615, 725.
Rescrivere, 470.
Resignare, 214.
Resolvare, 472, 676.
Respicer, 11, 557.
Respondere, 478, 569, 635.
Responsare, 492, 532, 534, 553.
Responsum, 266, 326.
Retexere, 462.
Retia, 276.
Reticulum, 329.
Revictus, 228.
Rex, 19, 30, 118, 343, 357, 452, 533, 589.
—— (active), 384.
Saltus, 694.
Salmesburiae, 570.
Salutare, 401.
Salutatio, 581.
Sandapula, 412, 679.
Sanes, 591.
Sanus, 400.

Rheda, 519.
Rhetor, 376.
Rhetoric, 560.
Rhombus, 452.
Rimosus, 520.
Ringe, 690.
Ring-finger, 527.
Rings, 519, 529.
Ripa, 129, 203, 221.
Rips confounded with rivas, 275.
Rite, 263.
Rivus Fortunae, 609.
Robur, 115.
Romanus (sing.), 158, 296, 702.
Romulus (adj.), 231.
Romulus’ tomb, 313.
Rostra, 526.
Rotundare, 550.
Ruber, 506.
Rubero, 109.
Rudis, 547.
Ruer, 505.
Rufus, 147, 220.
Rugosus, 644.
Rumore secundo, 598.
Rutupiae, 277.
S.
S, corresponds to Greek aspirate, 196.
Sabbata, 423.
Sabine farm, Horace’s, 269.
Sacces, 496.
Sacer, 476.
Sacerdos Musarum, 137.
Saddles, 618.
Saeulum, 104.
Saevus, 35.
Sagum Punicum, 296.
Salassi, 16, 150.
Saleus Bassus, 370.
Saliens coaeae, 89, 179.
Sali, 81.
Salinum, 122, 349.
Sallustius, 29, 90.
Salt cake, 196.
Saltare, 522.
—— (active), 384.
Saltus, 694.
Salubres silvae, 570.
Salutare, 401.
Salutatio, 581.
Sandapula, 412, 679.
Sanes, 591.
Sanus, 400.
TO THE NOTES.

763

Sapiens, 193, 439.
Sapientia, 74.
Sappho, 706.
Sarmatians, 402.
Satis superque, 272, 317.
Saturnalia, 201, 463, 526.
Satyricon, 715.
Savium, 260.
Savo, 302.
Scabies, 277, 726.
Scaredus, 450.
Scaurus, 352.
Schola, 370.
Sedecet, 510, 596.
Seindere, 4.
Scipio, 143, 230, 297.
Scre, 209.
Scobs, 499.
Scops, 499.
Scopas, 265.
Scriba, 380, 508, 519, 595.
Scribere, 469.
Scriinium, 365, 652, 668.
Scripitor, 723.
Scrua, 592.
Scurred, 440, 481.
Scurror, 635, 637.
Scutica, 357.
Scythians, 49, 51, 77.
Seal-rings, 519.
Secare, 427.
Secrecy, 141.
Secundus agere, ferre, 421.
Secundus, 53, 544.
Securitas publica, 78.
Sed, 441.
— (after digression), 327.
Sedem, reducecere in, 305.
Sedere, 634.
Sedula nutritia, 708.
Seirius, 175.
Self-control, 577.
Self-defence, 441.
Sella curulis, 582.
Semel, 264.
Semele, 190.
Semis, 722.
Semita vitae, 643.
Senatores, 244.
Senatus-consult, 626.
Senectus, 305.
Senex, 440, 662.
Seniores, 723.
Sernium, 640.
Sense, verbs of, 169.
Septimius, 62.
Sepulchres, 413.
Serio studiorum, 423.
Sermo, 367, 402.
Serpent, 267, 350.
Sertorius, 311, 660.
Serus, 172.
Serva, 467.
Servus, 629.
Sesquipedalia, 707.
Sestertium, 593, 664, 692.
Sestos, 566.
Settling days, 278.
Sextarius, 331.
Sextilis, 587.
Sheep, 98.
Shops, 590.
Shrines, 63.
Si, 214, 510, 518, 587.
Sibylline books, 261, 659.
Sic, 14, 456, 487, 510, 592, 711.
— habet, 422.
— temere, 109.
Siccus, 632.
Sicilians, 150.
Sicenn, 533.
Sidus, 130, 280, 309.
Sigilla, 694.
Signum, 491, 519, 640, 677.
Silanus, 301.
Siliqua, 668.
Silvanus, 194.
Simius, 427.
— Simonides, 89, 491, 706.
— of Amorgus, 705.
Simplex, 353.
Simul, 29, 174.
Sincerus, 352.
Singular number, 56.
Sinistrorsum, 236.
Situs, 215.
Sive omitted, 15, 23, 149, 209.
Slaves, 350, 450, 521, 529, 535, 629, 682.
— cruelty to, 415.
— names of, 395.
— number of, 348, 403.
— sale of, 436.
Smith's Dissertation on St. Paul's Voyage, 39.
Succus, 201, 358, 673, 705.
Social War, 178.
Socialiter, 718.
Socrates, 116, 450, 491, 643.
Solar, 95.
Soldiers' discharge, 325.
Solum, 125.
Solea, 358, 614.
Soleas possesse, 543.
— demere, 543.
Solidus dies, 5.
Solidanac, 497.
Solon, 704, 719, 725.
Solvus, 155.
Solvus, 53.
Sonare, 318, 396.
Sonaturus, 368.
Songs at meals, 260, 346.
Sophocles, 460.
Sors, 29, 262, 325.
Sortitio, 262.
Spain, 147, 160.
Spartans, 20.
Spartum, 262.
Spatari, 477.
Spe longus, 712.
Spears, 439.
Speciosus, 689, 710, 722.
Specus, 262.
Spence's Polymetis, 663, 671.
Sphere, 532.
Sphinx, 519.
Spina, 402.
Spinare, 224.
Splendidas, 237, 474.
Spondere, 686, 726.
Sponsor, 517, 627.
Sportula, 128.
Spring, 249.
Sporus, 504.
Squilla, 497, 542.
Stage dress, 120.
Stagna, 120.
Stairs, 683.
Standards, 26.
Stare, 28, 43.
Statius, 709, 711.
Stateran, 676.
Station, 354.
Status, his Propempticion, 13.
Statuo, 677.
Status, 667.
Stella, 213, 309.
Stesichorus, 43, 319, 706.
— his fable, 601.
Sthenoboea, 162.
Stilum vertere, 433.
Stipadores, 359.
Stipendium, 316.
Stirps, 213.
Stoics, 182, 335, 356, 357, 467, 548, 557, 599, 633.
Stola, 340.
Stones, precious, 252.
Storks, 453, 544.
Strabo, 351.
Stragula vestis, 472, 523.
Streets, 582, 687.
Strenua inertia, 607.
Strigil, 534.
Stringere, 338, 511.
Striving, verbs of, 4.
Structor, 524.
Studio, 371.
Stuprum, 366, 577.
Styx, 118.
Suadela, 590.
Suaviter, 418, 595.
Sub, 277, 441, 452, 528, 684.
— in composition, 16.
— with acc., 439.
— corona 629.
Subjunctive, 329, 330, 513, 520, 523, 529.
Sublimis, 711.
Submittere, 496.
Subscription, 435.
Substitutus, 507.
Substringere, 611.
Subsuta, 340.
Subtemen, 305.
Subcucula, 556.
Succinctus, 377, 414, 524, 537.
Succus (sapor), 491.
Suesco, 372.
Suetus (trisyll.), 413.
Suvi, 198.
Suicide, 630.
Sulla, 312.
Sumen, 622.
Sumere, 566.
Summa, 237.
Summam, ad, 557.
Summovere, 122, 129, 421.
Summum (rīxōg), 522.
Suovetaurilia, 628.
Sunt qui, 2, 137, 365, 438, 577.
Supellex, 573.
Super, 47, 297, 515, 531, 684.
Superne, 134.
Supernus, 272.
Supervacuus, 135, 619, 722.
Supinari nasum, 529.
Supinus, 195.
S uppeterere, 600.
Surenas, 158.
Susarion, 719.
Suspendere naso, 391.
Suttees, 600.
Suus, 298.
Swimming, 439.
Symposiarch, 456, 521.
Syncope, 30, 252, 344, 385, 424, 476, 509, 531, 596.
Syria, 109, 337.
Syriax, 190.
Syrmia, 715.

Taëda, 229.
Talentum, 481, 533, 580.
Tali, 527.
Talus, 476.
Tamen, 26, 327.
Tantum, 453.
Tantus, 464.
Taras, 53.
Tartarus, 115.
Tauriformis, 255.
Tears, 15.
Telegeon, 272.
Temere, 457, 668.
Temetum, 632.
Temperare, 199.
Temples, 121, 158, 456.
Tenax, 275.
Tendere, 438.
Teneas tuis te, 489.
Tenere, 627.
Tentare, 162, 332, 475.
Tentator, 152.
Temenus, 125, 701.
Tenus, 551.
Ter, 65, 118, 551.
Tercia, 673.
Tetricia, 110, 279, 306.
Teres, 6, 302, 535.
Tereus, 250.
Tegere, 451.
Terminations, 317, 508, 566.
Terminus, 129.
Tero, 283.
Terracina, 37.
Tesca, 616.
Testa, 29, 192.
Testudo, 224.
Tetrachord, 348, 706.
Tetrakterion, trochaic, 705.
Tetrarcha, 349.
Texts, 647.
Thamyris, 725.
Thamypis, 88.
Theatres, 664, 673, 674.
Theatrum, 569.
Theognis, 704.
Theomnestus, 685.
Themopilia, 497.
Theopis, 713.
Thoranius, 683.
Thunder, 75.
Thunus, 506.
Thus, 617.
Thynnus, 498.
Tiberius, 120, 176, 225, 240.
—- his character, 596.
Tibia, 190, 260, 295, 617, 705, 714.
Tibullus, 72.
Tibur, 97.
Tigranes, 565.
Timere, 365.

Timor Deorum, 487.
Tiro, 330.
Tirocinium fori, 339.
Titius, 220.
Titulus, 392.
Togam componere, 470.
Togatae, 662, 720.
Tollere, 3, 149, 364, 506.
Toral, 493, 575.
Tormentum, 193.
Torquer, 533, 577.
Torquere vino, 639.
Torre, 385.
—- iecur, 218.
Torture, 345.
Torus, 499.
Trabs, 127.
Trachas, 379.
Tractare, 114.
Tragere, 421, 596.
Tragedians, Roman, 672.
Tragedy, Greek, 712, 715.
—— Roman, 713.
Tralhere, 223.
Traho, 307.
Trajectus, 465.
Trepidare, 109, 247, 600.
Trepidus, 140.
Tres Tabernae, 377.
Tribes, 582.
Tributum, 444.
Trictium, 371.
Tries, 722.
Trifurnis, 195.
Trigo, 405.
Trilinguis, 133.
Tritus, 187.
Tiremni, 139.
Tristis, 427.
Triumph, 292, 318.
Triumphal procession, 222.
Triumphus, 144.
Triumphus, 223, 297.
Trivium capite, 283.
Trivia, 195.
Tros, 143.
Truchus, 201, 449, 724.
Trojan, 508.
Trucidare, 610.
Truculentus, 352.
Trullus, 474.
Trutina, 366.
Tu, 518, 529, 564.
Tuba, 5.
Tuft-hunting, 630, 636.
Tumultus, 177.
Tuina, 340.
Tunicatus, 591.
Turbo, 316.
Turdus, 503, 622.
TO THE NOTES.
INDEX TO THE NOTES.

GREEK PHRASES, WORDS, AND CONSTRUCTIONS.

PAGE

2. Sunt qui.
5. Infinitive after adjective.
6. Doctus = sôphos (for a poet).
12. Patiens vocari.
16. Iapeti genus (son).
17. Hercules labor (Hercules).
18. Urere (to light up).
20. Mirari (to love).
22. Duplex (crafty).
25. Percutere (to cause wonder).
39. Debere ludibrium.
52. Integer vitae scelerisque purus.
61. Immame quantum.
83. Impotens.
85. Allaborare.
87. Cruores.
83. Ordinare (to compose a book).
90. Notus animi.
92. Amant (aro vont).
95. Circa (concerned about).
101. Udus (supple).
104. Desine quereclarum.
109. Sic temere.
112. Sermo pedester (prose).
116. Mirantur dicere.
117. Laborum decipitur.
118. Damnatus laboris.
122. Patriono exsil.
150. De tenero ungui.
166. Cyathos amid.
172. Potere = ἦλθαν.
182. Fallit beatior.
186. Operum solutis.

PAGE

191. Major (potius).
218. Comissabere in domum.
230. Acuta belli.
235. Prosperam frugum.
243. Abstenus pecuniae.
244. Pluma (the down on a boy’s cheek).
250. Amara curarum.
254. Spectandus—quantis.
274. Gaudet decerpens.
300. Expedit urere.
313. Habet suadere.
327. Si quis Deus.
421. Huac hominem.
422. Sic habet.
428. Seri studiorum.
459. Quivis = ὁ τέχνων.
442. Ut perceat (a wish).
450. Hierat.
454. Aiunt.
462. Vini somnique benignus.
463. Minari (to promise).
465. Morbi purgatum.
466. Pasceere babam.
473. Dis inimice.
485. Penes te es?
516. Quod adest.
530. Unum mortalem.
532. Invidit avenae.
531. Minor.
567. Amplulatur.
592. Dicenda tacenda.
622. Hic ego sum.
632. Natus moriensque felfellit.
726. Idem facit occidenti.
PROVERBIAL SAYINGS.

(AUTHORS IMITATED BY HORACE.

(The examples are not all free from doubt, as will be seen by reference to the notes.)

Aeschylus, 10, 15 (bis), 53.
Alcaeus, 28, 30, 37, 46, 82, 173.
Alcman, 68, 148, 217.
Anacreon, 49, 54, 59, 60, 68, 263, 304.
Apollonius, 18.
Archilochus, 1.
Aristophanes, 273.
Bacchylides, 40, 123, 127.
Callimachus, 142, 344.
Catullus, 97.
Euripides, 20, 49, 75, 123, 140, 142, 152,
156, 203, 228, 237, 523, 629.
Homer, 11 (bis), 17, 22, 25, 41, 101, 118,
140, 146, 149, 151, 189, 207, 208, 230,
233, 255, 311, 315, 476, 503, sqq., 561,
562, 589, 728.

Hesiod, 75, 140, 232, 311.
Ibycus, 217.
Lucretius, 60, 64, 119, 500.
Phocylides, 232.
Findar, 1, 31, 32, 34, 76, 79, 215, 224, 311.
Sappho, 6, 54, 68.
Simonides, 140, 141, 144, 237, 703.
Solon, 609.
Sophocles, 15, 16, 25, 43, 208 (bis), 233,
252, 422, 477, 520, 578.
Stesichorus, 42.
Terence, 484.
Theocritus, 45, 60, 107, 218, 510.
Tyrtaeus, 140.

AUTHORS WHO APPEAR TO HAVE IMITATED HORACE.

Ansonius, 75, 532.
Gregory of Nazianzus, 74.
Ovid, 19, 91, 102, 194.
Persius, 19, 126, 197, 484, 485, 515, 532, 649.
Petrarch, 54.
Propertius, 111.
Seneca, 76.
Statius, 13, 277.
Tacitus, 75.)
ERRATA.

TEXT.

Page 39, ver. 3, for none read none
— 60, ver. 8, for annis, read annis.
— 270, ver. 5, for si superstite read sit superstite

COMMENTARY.

Page 37, line 11 from bottom, for θαλάττων read θαλάττιον
— 44, Arg., line 1, for Lucretile read Lucretius
— 52, Int., line 10, for Horace read Fuscus
— Int., line 14, for 722 read 720
— 59, Int., line 24, for in 724 read not later than 724
— 60, quotation from Δακ., for Σκυθικῆ, πόσιν read Σκυθικῆ πόσιν
— 65, ver. 14, n., for actor read auctor
— 69, ver. 9, n., for less terse read less obtuse (redundant)
— 80, ver. 8, n., twice, for tutors read teachers
— 110, Int., line 11, for alternation read alternative — 112, ver. 14, n., for fulgent ut lucere read lucent ut fulgere
— 143, Arg., line 7, for his hated read my hated
— 169, ver. 5, n., for woods read winds
— 170, ver. 10, n., for quotation from Ausonius, for funus read funis
— 187, ver. 16, n., for quotation from Sir J. Davies, for dactyl read dactyly
— 192, Int., line 1, for L. Valerius read M. Valerius
— 212, ver. 10, n., for Equilin hill read Esquiliae
— 284, Int., line 15, for Esquiline hill read Esquiliae
— 214, ver. 43, n., for diffingit read diffinget
— 255, ver. 25, n., for apply to the Eridanus read apply to the Aufidus
— 283, ver. 15, n., for income read property
— 293, ver. 8, n., for Campus Maximus read Campus Martius
— 318, ver. 36, n., for name read mean
— 321, ver. 64, n., for Barbarini read Barberini
— 326, ver. 7, n., 'Horae momento,' to the end, belongs to the next note
— 347, Arg., line 28, for your found read our founder
— 353, ver. 57, n., for interpretation read interpolation
— 362, ver. 1, n., for n. c. 453 read b. c. 423
— 366, ver. 28, n., for brass read bronze
— 384, ver. 65, n., for et read ut et
— 411, Int., line 17, for Gratidia read Candinia
— 430, ver. 42, n., for political read poetical
— 444, ver. 68, n., for the quotation from Cicero is from de Nat. Deor. i. 23.
— 510, ver. 80, n., for Horace's read Homer's
— 533, ver. 10, n., for Santorius read Santorin

The following corrections are required in the references:—

Page 115, ver. 16, n., for C. viii. 22 read C. iii. 8. 22
— 121, ver. 14, n., for S. i. 2. 114 read S. ii. 2. 114
— 241, ver. 1, n., for S. i. 2. 80 read S. ii. 1. 80
— 269, line 6 from bottom, for 26 read 26.
— 627, n., line 6 from top, for S. 9. n. read S. 9. 36, n.
— 333, ver. 57, n., for verse 147 of this Satire read S. ii. 3. 147
— 433, ver. 75, for Ovid says (ex Pont. i. 2. 126) read Horace says (Epp. ii. 1. 126)
— 439, ver. 14, n., last line, for C. i. 1. 39 read C. i. 2. 39
— 440, ver. 22, n., for 101 read 11
— 442, ver. 47, n., to S. ii. 6 add 77.
— 452, ver. 36, n., for 27 read 29.
— 456, ver. 95, for 87 read 88.
— 457, ver. 123, n., to S. ii. 6 add 69.

The following note referred to at C. ii. 16. 17 is omitted at C. i. 2. 3: "Horace uses 'jaculati' three times, and always with an accusative. Other writers use it absolutely. Comp. C. ii. 16. 17; iii. 12. 9."

GILBERT & RIVINGTON, Printers, St. John's Square, London.
A SELECTION OF WORKS, PUBLISHED BY
WHITTAKER AND CO., AVE MARIA LANE.

ANTHON'S VIRGIL. Adapted for the Use of English Schools, by the Rev. F. Metcalfe. With Notes at the end. 12mo. cloth £ 0 7 6

BAIRD'S Classical Manual. 12mo. cloth 0 4 0

BELLINGER'S French Conversations. New edition. 12mo. cloth 0 2 6

BELL'S Life of Mary, Queen of Scots. 8vo. sewed 0 3 6

BIBLIOTHECA CLASSICA.
AESCHYLUS. With a Commentary, by F. A. Paley, M.A. 0 18 0

CICERO'S ORATIONS. With a Commentary, by G. Long, M.A. 4 vols. 8vo. cloth 3 4 0

* * * The volumes are sold separately.

DEMOSTHENES. With a Commentary, by the Rev. R. Whiston. Vol. I. 8vo. cloth 0 16 0

EURIPIDES. With a Commentary, by F. A. Paley, M.A. Vol. I. 8vo. cloth 0 16 0

Vol. II. 8vo. cloth 0 16 0

HORACE. With a Commentary, by the Rev. A. J. Macleane. 8vo. cloth 0 18 0

HERODOTUS. With English Notes, &c., by the Rev. J. W. Blakesley, B.D. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth 1 12 0

JUVENAL and PERSIUS. With a Commentary, by the Rev. A. J. Macleane. 8vo. cloth 0 14 0

TERENCE. With a Commentary, by the Rev. St. John Parry. 8vo. cloth 0 18 0

VIRGIL. With a Commentary, by John Conington, M.A. Vol. I. 8vo. cloth 0 12 0

* * * Other volumes will shortly be published.

BOYER and DELETANVILLE'S Complete French Dictionary. New edition. 8vo. bound 0 12 0

BOYES'S (Rev. J. F.) English Repetitions in Prose and Verse. 12mo. cloth 0 3 6

BROWNING'S History of the Huguenots. 8vo. sewed 0 6 0

BUTTMANN'S (Dr. P.) Intermediate, or Larger Greek Grammar. New edit., by Dr. Charles Supp. 8vo. cloth 0 12 0

BYTHNER'S Lyre of David. By the Rev. T. Dee, A.B. New edition, by N. L. Benmohel, A.M. 8vo. cloth 1 4 0

CÆSAR de Bello Gallico. With English Notes, &c., by George Long, M.A. 12mo. cloth 0 5 6

CAMPAN'S (Madame) Conversations in French and English. New edition. 12mo. cloth 0 3 6

12mo. cloth in German and English 0 4 0

CARRICK'S Life of Sir William Wallace. 8vo. sewed 0 3 0
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Author/Editor</th>
<th>Format</th>
<th>Price</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>WHITTAKER'S LIST</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CHIEPMELL'S (Rev. Dr. H. Le M.) Course of History.</td>
<td>First</td>
<td>12mo. cloth</td>
<td>£ 5 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Second Series.</td>
<td></td>
<td>2 vols.</td>
<td>12 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Questions on the First Series.</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo. sewed</td>
<td>1 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CICERO'S Minor Works.</td>
<td>Do Officiis, &amp;c. &amp;c.</td>
<td></td>
<td>4 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>With English Notes, by W. C. Taylor, LL.D.</td>
<td></td>
<td>New edit.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CICERO de Amicitia, de Senectute, &amp;c.</td>
<td>With Notes, &amp;c.,</td>
<td></td>
<td>4 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>COMSTOCK'S System of Natural Philosophy.</td>
<td>New edition, by Lees.</td>
<td></td>
<td>3 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DESCARRIERE, Histoire de France.</td>
<td>Par C. J. Delille,</td>
<td>12mo. bound</td>
<td>7 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DRAKENBORCH'S LIVY.</td>
<td>With CREVIER'S Notes, &amp;c.</td>
<td>3 vols.</td>
<td>11 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EURIPIDES (Porson's).</td>
<td>New edition, with Notes from</td>
<td></td>
<td>10 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SCHAFFER and others.</td>
<td>The four Plays separate.</td>
<td>8vo. sewed</td>
<td>2 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FLUGEL'S German and English, and English and German Dictionary.</td>
<td>With numerous alterations and</td>
<td></td>
<td>4 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GRADUS ad PARNASSUM.</td>
<td>Pyper.</td>
<td>12mo. cloth</td>
<td>7 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GREEK TESTAMENT (The).</td>
<td>With Notes, &amp;c.,</td>
<td></td>
<td>7 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>by the REV. J. F. MACMICHAEL, B.A.</td>
<td>Abridged.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HAMEL'S New Universal French Grammar.</td>
<td>New edition.</td>
<td>12mo. bound</td>
<td>4 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French Exercises.</td>
<td>New edition.</td>
<td>12mo. bound</td>
<td>4 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Key to ditto, by GROS.</td>
<td>New edition.</td>
<td>12mo. bound</td>
<td>3 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French Grammar and Exercises. by LAMBERT.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HOBLYN'S Dictionary of Medical Terms.</td>
<td>New edit. sm. 8vo.</td>
<td></td>
<td>12 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scientific Terms.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HORACE.</td>
<td>With English Notes, by the Rev.</td>
<td></td>
<td>10 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abridged from the edition in the Bibliotheca Classica.</td>
<td>A. J. MACLEAN, M.A.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HOSE'S Elements of Euclid.</td>
<td>With New and Improved Diagrams</td>
<td></td>
<td>4 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>KEIGHTLEY'S History of India.</td>
<td>8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>8 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>KEITH'S Practical Arithmetic.</td>
<td>New edition, by MAYNARD.</td>
<td>12mo. bound</td>
<td>4 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>KOCH'S History of Europe.</td>
<td>8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>6 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LARCHER'S Notes to Herodotus.</td>
<td>By Cooley.</td>
<td>2 vols.</td>
<td>8 0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LEVIZAC'S French Dictionary.</td>
<td>New edit. 12mo. bound.</td>
<td></td>
<td>6 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Format</td>
<td>Price</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------------</td>
<td>---------</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIBRARY OF MEDICINE. Edited by Dr. Tweedie:—</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Practical Medicine. 5 vols. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 10 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dr. Rigby's Midwifery. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 10 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cruvelhier's Anatomy. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 18 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIVY. With English Notes, by Dr. Stocker. Vol. I. in two parts.</td>
<td>8vo. boards</td>
<td>1 4 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. II. in two parts. 8vo. boards</td>
<td></td>
<td>1 4 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LONG'S (George, M.A.) Atlas of Classical Geography. With copious</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 12 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grammar Index, &amp;c. 8vo. half-bound</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIBRARY OF MEDICINE. Edited by Dr. Tweedie:—</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Practical Medicine. 5 vols. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 10 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dr. Rigby's Midwifery. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 10 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cruvelhier's Anatomy. 2 vols. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 18 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LIVY. With English Notes, by Dr. Stocker. Vol. I. in two parts.</td>
<td>8vo. boards</td>
<td>1 4 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vol. II. in two parts. 8vo. boards</td>
<td></td>
<td>1 4 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LONG'S (George, M.A.) Atlas of Classical Geography. With copious</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 12 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grammar Index, &amp;c. 8vo. half-bound</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M O O R E S Dictionary of Quotations. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 12 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M O R R I S O N S (Charles) Introduction to Book-keeping.</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 8 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N I B L O C K S Latin-English and English-Latin Dictionary.</td>
<td>square</td>
<td>0 9 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N U G E N T S French and English Dictionary. square, bound</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 7 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N U G E N T S French and English Dictionary. Pearl 18mo. bound</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 4 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>O L L E N D O R F F S (Dr. H. G.) French Method. Seventh edition.</td>
<td>8vo. cloth</td>
<td>0 12 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Key to ditto, by Dr. Ollendorff. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 7 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Part II. Fourth edition 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 12 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Key to ditto (both parts). 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 7 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Italian Method. Third edition. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 12 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Key to ditto, by Dr. Ollendorff. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 7 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spanish Method. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 12 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Key to ditto, by Dr. Ollendorff. 8vo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 7 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OVID'S FASTI. With English Notes, &amp;c., by F. A. Paley, M.A.</td>
<td>12mo. cloth</td>
<td>0 5 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WH I T T A K E R S I M P R O V E D E D I T I O N S O F</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PINNOCK'S History of England. Forty-sixth edition. 12mo. bound roan</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 6 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rome. Thirty-third edition. 12mo. bound roan</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 5 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greece. Twenty-ninth edition. 12mo. bound roan</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 5 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arithmetical Tables. 18mo. sewed. New edition</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 6 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CIPHERING BOOK. No. 1. Foolscap 4to. sewed. New edition</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 1 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New edition</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Key to Ciphering Books. 12mo. bound</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 3 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Child's First Book. 18mo. sewed</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 3 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Explanatory English Reader. 12mo. bound</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 0 3</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to the Explanatory English Reader.</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 4 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12mo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>English Spelling Book. New edition. 12mo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 3 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exercises in False Spelling. 18mo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 1 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>First Spelling Book. 18mo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 1 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Juvenile Reader. 12mo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 1 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mentorian Primer. 18mo. half-bound</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 0 6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(W. H.) First Latin Grammar. Ollendorff's</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 3 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>system.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title</td>
<td>Author/Series</td>
<td>Edition</td>
<td>Binding/Format</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>-------------------------------</td>
<td>---------</td>
<td>----------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PINNOCK'S Catechisms of the Arts and Sciences</td>
<td></td>
<td>12 vols.</td>
<td>18mo. cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PLATO'S APOLOGY. With Latin Version, by STANFORD</td>
<td></td>
<td>8vo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PLATT'S Literary and Scientific Class Book</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>bound</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PINNOCK'S Catechisms of the Arts and Sciences</td>
<td></td>
<td>12 vols.</td>
<td>8vo. cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PLATO'S APOLOGY. With Latin Version, by STANFORD</td>
<td></td>
<td>8vo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PLATO'S APOLOGY. With Latin Version, by STANFORD</td>
<td></td>
<td>8vo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SOPHOCLES (Mitchell's)</td>
<td></td>
<td>2 vols.</td>
<td>8vo. cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TAYLOR'S (Dr. W. C.) History of France and Normandy</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>bound</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TAYLOR'S History of the Overthrow of the Roman Empire</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THEATRE of the GREEKS. By DONALDSON</td>
<td></td>
<td>8vo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TYTLER'S Elements of Universal History, with Continuation</td>
<td></td>
<td>8vo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VALPY'S GRADUS, Latin and English.</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>bound</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greek Testament, for Schools. New edition.</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>bound</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SALLUST: New edition. With English Notes, by HICKIE</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SALLUST: New edition. With English Notes, by HICKIE</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CORNELIUS NEPOS. New edition.</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HICKIE. 12mo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schrevelius's Greek and English Lexicon. New edition, by Dr. MAJOR</td>
<td></td>
<td>8vo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VENERONI'S Italian Grammar</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>bound</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WALKER'S DICTIONARY. Remodelled by SMART</td>
<td></td>
<td>8vo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WALKINGAME'S Tutor's Assistant. By FRASER</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WEBER'S Outlines of Universal History. Translated by Dr. M. BEHR</td>
<td></td>
<td>8vo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WOODBRIDGES Rudiments of Geography. Third edition.</td>
<td></td>
<td>18mo.</td>
<td>bound</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WHITTAKER'S (Rev. G.) Florilegium Poeticum.</td>
<td></td>
<td>18mo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WHITTAKER'S (Rev. G.) Florilegium Poeticum.</td>
<td></td>
<td>12mo.</td>
<td>cloth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XENOPHON'S Anabasis. With Notes, &amp;c., by the Rev. J. F. MACMICHAEL, B.A. Fourth edition. 12mo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 5 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XENOPHON'S Cyropaedia. With English Notes, by the Rev. G. M. GORHAM, M.A. 12mo. cloth</td>
<td></td>
<td>0 6 0</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>